verse 5 "to fulfil all righteousness" This oft misunderstood phrase is of profound importance. What does it really mean? The phrase implies that Jesus had to be baptized in order to be considered completely righteous. But, wasn't he absolutely righteous already? Was he not already spotlessly free from sin? Can one improve on that? The "usual" or "conventional" explanation for Jesus's having to be baptized is that baptism is a commandment, and Jesus was complying with that commandment in spite of his "not really needing to be baptized." He was simply setting a good example for us.

Actually, there was nothing arbitrary in Jesus's desire for baptism. He was not simply seeking baptism as an outward and unnecessary sign of his obedience. He was not seeking merely to set a good example. The ordinance of baptism was, for him, just as essential as it is for you and me. It is vital to remember that righteousness is not simply the absence of sin or wickedness. It is not simply the avoidance of sins of commission. It is also the active seeking of the mind and will of God and the anxious and willing conformity to that will once it is procured. It is the process of introspection and discerning those ways in which our character and behavior fall short of the Lord's example. It is the spiritual growth granted us by the Spirit of the Holy Ghost when we make sufficient effort to amend our behavior and attitudes—when we repent. When John the Baptist expressed reluctance to baptize Jesus, the Savior responded, "Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness" (Matthew 3:15). It is clear that neither the Baptist nor Christ could have been considered completely righteous had not the baptism occurred. Even the Son of God, "according to the flesh," was required to humble himself and witness before the Father. Though the Son had committed no sin, the Father obviously expected him to make additional progress while here in mortality toward acquiring the mind and character of the Father. This progress would occur line upon line, precept upon precept in the same process of sanctification in which we are commanded to participate. Baptism, with its three separate parts, is an integral part of spiritual progress. Spiritual growth here on earth—even that of Jesus during his mortal ministry—is enhanced and accelerated by the ordinance of baptism. Indeed, we may say that baptism is the ordinance by which we are blessed to grow spiritually.

So, righteousness includes the proactive seeking after spiritual growth. In contrast, at the time of Christ's mortal ministry "righteousness" was understood to mean merely conforming to the obligations and covenants that God had spelled out in the Mosaic law. A "righteous man," under Mosaic law, showed unswerving and exacting faithfulness in keeping his religious obligations—in not violating the complex and challenging rules and regulations spelled out in the Mosaic law.

Today we also must avoid those sins of commission, that is breaking the laws of the gospel. But in addition, we must actively strive to become more like the Savior, to acquire those attributes which he possesses. If we do not, then we are guilty of sins of omission. We fail to make those sufficient strides in our spiritual progress that the Lord expects of us. The mortal Christ was the perfect embodiment of righteousness. We must earn our exaltation in exactly the same way Jesus obtained his. As baptism was required of Christ that he might be an heir of salvation, so it is required of all who seek that blessing. Jesus was baptized because the baptism of water is required for entrance into the kingdom of God and also that he might qualify himself to fully participate in the process of spiritual growth (again, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 18, Baptism, the Ordinance that Brings Spiritual Growth). Through the ordinances of baptism of water, baptism of the Spirit, and baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost his painful mortal experiences including his agony in Gethsemane and on the cross yielded maximal spiritual growth even for him.

Did Christ really "fulfill all righteousness" by being baptized (emphasis added), or were there other ordinances or covenants with which he complied? Was it necessary, for example, for Jesus to have hands laid upon his head and receive the gift of the Holy Ghost or the priesthood? Did he comply with the temple ordinances of the day? Of course, he willingly sought the privilege of obeying and conforming himself to all of these saving ordinances.

“how much more need have we, being unholy, to be baptized, yea, even by water!” Note how the importance of this question is underscored by its ending with an exclamation point rather than a question mark. It seems likely that Nephi’s intent here is not really to ask a question. Rather he is making a vitally important statement.

verses 6-8 Notice the verb tenses in these verses (“the Lamb of God did fulfil all righteousness;” “he was holy;” “after he was baptized with water the Holy Ghost descended upon him in the form of a dove”). Nephi uses the past tense to describe events yet in the future. This is a common form of verb usage among Hebrew prophets and is often referred to as the “prophetic perfect” tense.

6 And now, I would ask of you, my beloved brethren, wherein the Lamb of God did fulfil all righteousness in being baptized by water?

7 Know ye not that he was holy? But notwithstanding he being holy, he showeth unto the children of men that, according to the flesh he humbleth himself before the Father, and witnesseth unto the Father that he would be obedient unto him in keeping his commandments.

verse 7 “he humbleth himself before the Father, and witnesseth unto the Father that he would be obedient unto him in keeping his commandments” Nephi explains that the reason why a sinless Jesus would need baptism is not for the remission of sins but to publicly witness the making of his covenant to be obedient to the Father.

The Book of Mormon teaches that Christ is separate and distinct from the Father and that the Son is subservient to his Father. See also 3 Nephi 11:11; 11:32; 26:2. Also, during Christ’s personal ministry among the Nephites he demonstrated his separateness from the Father and his deference to him as he prayed to the Father on their behalf (see 3 Nephi 17:15-18; 19:19-34).

One may assume, without the teachings contained in the Book of Mormon, that the act of baptism, on its own, can provide the believer with a remission of sins. However, the teachings of the Book of Mormon indicate that baptism is one part of an organic whole that includes faith, repentance, baptism, the reception of the Holy Ghost, and enduring to the end. The text makes clear that baptism without repentance or the purifying effect of the Holy Ghost is not enough to wash away sins. As Noel Reynolds noted: “A surprising implication of this Book of Mormon language is that the covenant the convert signals at baptism is actually made before baptism and is the central element of repentance. Genuine repentance always includes a deliberate commitment by the penitent person to turn to Christ and walk in his path—taking his name upon oneself and keeping his commandments. Baptism and repentance are thus linked together: baptism completes repentance” (Noel B. Reynolds, “Understanding Christian Baptism through the Book of Mormon,” BYU Studies Quarterly 51, no. 2 (2012): 5).

The Book of Mormon introduces the idea that baptism is the sign that we give to God that we are committed to following Christ and keeping His commandments. Thus, in the sacrament prayers inaugurated by Jesus himself and preserved by the Book of Mormon, we renew our baptismal covenants and witness anew our willingness to keep the commandments that have been given to us (3 Nephi 18:7, 10; Moroni 4-5). The remission of sins comes not simply by being washed in water but by reception of the gift and power of the Holy Ghost, as recognition by God of our repentance and willingness to enter a covenant relationship with him. Because the covenant we make at baptism is essential to our salvation, the clarity that the Book of Mormon brings to the subject is both urgent for all people to understand and also as a display of God's mercy and generosity toward all who have faith, repentance, and humble themselves before Jesus, their Lord.

8 Wherefore, after he was baptized with water the Holy Ghost descended upon him in the form of a dove.

verse 8 “in the form of a dove” This phrase leads to an incorrect impression. Joseph Smith taught that the Holy Ghost does not change himself to the form of a dove. Rather the dove appeared after Jesus's baptism as a sign that the Holy Ghost was present. Joseph explained: “The sign of the dove was instituted before the creation of the world, a witness for the Holy Ghost, and the devil cannot come [accompanied by] the sign of the dove” (TPJS, 275-76).

9 And again, it showeth unto the children of men the straitness of the path, and the narrowness of the gate, by which they should enter, he having set the example before them.

verse 9 “It” refers to the Spirit of God. “He” refers to the Savior. “Having set” is yet another example of the prophetic perfect verb tense.

“the straitness of the path, and the narrowness of the gate” Is a straight path the same as a strait one? Certainly not! A straight path is one without deviation. A strait path is one that is strict, narrow, and rigorous. In these verses, Nephi is emphasizing the strictness of the path; that is, all who would be exalted must comply judiciously with the ordinances of the gospel. Nephi is also emphasizing the narrowness of the gate. The gate consists of repentance and baptism. For a discussion of why the word straitness (rather than straightness) is appropriate here, see the supplemental article Strait and Straight in the Book of Mormon.

verses 10-15 An interesting feature of these verses is that Nephi quotes alternatively both the Father and the Son leading to the conclusion that he probably had previously had an audience with both of them. A similar experience was had by Enoch (see Moses 7:50, 53, 59).

10 And he said unto the children of men: Follow thou me. Wherefore, my beloved brethren, can we follow Jesus save we shall be willing to keep the commandments of the Father?

11 And the Father said: Repent ye, repent ye, and be baptized in the name of my Beloved Son.

verse 11 The principle of repentance is a vital tenet of the doctrine of Christ, and it is mentioned four times in 2 Nephi 31 (see also verses 13, 14, 17). In this chapter, Nephi does not define repentance, however. What exactly is repentance? We know that it is essential for each of us to repent to allow the atoning influence of Jesus Christ to intervene on our behalf and cleanse us of our sins. We know that those who repent enjoy a newness of life and an increase in light, while those who refuse to repent lose light (see D&C 93:39). But what is the essence of repentance? See the commentary above on repentance. Again, it is change. The change wrought during repentance must be very real and must take place in our hearts, in our minds, and in our actions or behavior. The changes of repentance must lead us in the direction of eventually living the whole law, obeying the law more conscientiously.

Is there any difference between the terms obedience and repentance? Are the two synonymous? We use the word repentance when we wish to emphasize what? The word repentance implies change. The individual who has not been obeying but then begins to obey has repented. As also mentioned above, the process of true repentance also includes making amends or recompense for the effects of previous sins.

12 And also, the voice of the Son came unto me, saying: He that is baptized in my name, to him will the Father give the Holy Ghost, like unto me; wherefore, follow me, and do the things which ye have seen me do.

verse 12 “He that is baptized in my name, to him will the Father give the Holy Ghost” This verse refers to the gift of the Holy Ghost. Did the Nephites have the Melchizedek priesthood which provides the authority to bestow the gift of the Holy Ghost? They did. See the commentary for verse 18 below.

13 Wherefore, my beloved brethren, I know that if ye shall follow the Son, with full purpose of heart, acting no hypocrisy and no deception before God, but with real intent, repenting of your sins, witnessing unto the Father that ye are willing to take upon you the name of Christ, by baptism—yea, by following your Lord and your Savior down into the water, according to his word, behold, then shall ye receive the Holy Ghost; yea, then cometh the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost; and then can ye speak with the tongue of angels, and shout praises unto the Holy One of Israel.

verse 13 “with full purpose of heart, acting no hypocrisy and no deception before God, but with real intent” Here is an important principle of the “doctrine of Christ.” It seems clear that to qualify to receive communication from the Holy Ghost and thus from the Lord, a man must be free of hypocrisy. What is hypocrisy? If a man represents himself, or at least implies by his words or his actions that he has attributes he does not possess, he is a hypocrite. It would seem that if a man is free of hypocrisy, then we would say of him, He possesses “real intent” (Moroni 10:4); he has “nothing wavering” (James 1:6); a “sincere or honest heart (D&C 8:1).”

Parenthetically, we must be cautious not to judge a man as being a hypocrite. If a man’s outward actions and speech seem to represent him as being more righteous than he really is, then perhaps his outward actions simply represent his deliberate efforts to grow spiritually. Perchance he is “experimenting upon the words” of Christ in an attempt to acquire genuine gifts of the Spirit.

“then cometh the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost” In order to have a chance at exaltation, it is necessary to experience the complete or total ordinance of baptism. This complete ordinance consists of three parts. They are: the baptism of water, the baptism of the Spirit (receiving the gift of the Holy Ghost), and the “baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost.” See a summary of these three parts above.

Notice that in the phrase “and then cometh the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost” (emphasis added) the baptism of fire follows genuine repentance and baptism by water. It also follows the ordinance of bestowal of the gift of the Holy Ghost. Hence, the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost is the third part of the ordinance of baptism and follows the first two parts in sequence.

“then can ye speak with the tongue of angels, and shout praises unto the Holy One of Israel” After the sanctifying influences of the Holy Ghost have completed their work, an individual can “speak with the tongue of angels, and shout praises unto the Holy One of Israel.” It is likely that this phrasing suggests that the Holy Ghost simply enables an individual to speak, like the angels, the words of Christ.

This phrase may also have reference, at least in part, to the phenomenon of “speaking in tongues” or the “gift of tongues.” We know that speaking in tongues and the interpretation of tongues are two of the gifts of the Spirit, two evidences of the true Church and signs that the Lord is working with his people. But what are those gifts? What does it mean to speak in tongues? An example of speaking in tongues is found in the second chapter of Acts in the New Testament. On the day of Pentecost—some fifty days after Passover and a day that was traditionally observed as the occasion when Moses had received the law from God on Sinai—the Holy Ghost was poured out upon the disciples in a manner they had never known before. Luke records in verses 1 through 6: “And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting.” Both the Hebrew word ruakh and the Greek word pneuma may be translated as “wind, breath, or spirit.” The “rushing mighty wind” that was felt by the early saints thus symbolized a mighty outpouring of the Holy Spirit. “And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them.” That is, the people witnessed “tongues of fire that separated and came to rest on each of them” (New International Version) or “flames like tongues of fire distributed among them” (Revised English Bible). “And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance. And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven. Now when this was noised abroad, the multitude came together, and were confounded, because that every man heard them speak in his own language.” The word confounded in this passage means confused or bewildered.

This monumental event in the history of the Christian Church made it possible for the gospel to be preached by simple men to people of other tongues. So, speaking a foreign but known tongue is a manifestation of the gift of tongues. We have numerous examples of this phenomenon in the history of the Church—times when either the speakers or the listeners were actuated by the Spirit of the Lord, when a foreign language was spoken or understood, and thus when communication and edification followed. This happens regularly with our full-time missionaries. By hard work and consistent effort and practice—and, most importantly, through a rich endowment of the Holy Ghost—elders and sisters are enabled to acquire language skills in a miraculously short period of time. They recognize and understand and feel things that would normally require many years to master. It is an everyday occurrence that staggers the learned and the wise of the world.

A second manifestation of tongues is when persons speak the pure Adamic language. We are told in modern revelation that our first parents were taught by God to read and write in a language that was “pure and undefiled” (Moses 6:6). The Adamic language continued among the children of men until the time of the Tower of Babel, at which time the speech of the people (except for the Jaredites, who took this sacred tongue with them to America) was confounded (Genesis 11:1-9; Ether 1:33-37; Smith, Way to Perfection, 67-69). The Adamic tongue was a powerful language that communicated not only words and ideas but also the power of God. “And so great was the faith of Enoch that he led the people of God, and their enemies came to battle against them; and he spake the word of the Lord, and the earth trembled, and the mountains fled, even according to his command; and the rivers of water were turned out of their course; and the roar of the lions was heard out of the wilderness; and all nations feared greatly, so powerful was the word of Enoch, and so great was the power of the language which God had given him” (Moses 7:13). Moroni seems in awe of the power of this language, as contained in the writings of the brother of Jared: “And thou hast made us [the Nephites] that we could write but little, because of the awkwardness of our hands. Behold, thou hast not made us mighty in writing like unto the brother of Jared, for thou madest him that the things which he wrote were mighty even as thou art, unto the overpowering of man to read them” (Ether 12:24).

At the time of the dedication of the Kirtland Temple, and on many other occasions, Latter-day Saint men and women have enjoyed the gift of tongues. Because most of us, like Ammon, often “cannot say the smallest part which [we] feel” (Alma 26:16), speaking in the language of God, by virtue of a spiritual outpouring, seems to allow people to speak and rejoice and exult in the things of righteousness, to express their praise to God from the depth of their souls, and otherwise to give voice to that which is unutterable.

It is presumably this manifestation of the gift of tongues that many outside the true church seek to acquire or imitate. Many Pentecostals hold it as a tenet of their faith that one is not truly born again until he or she speaks in tongues. The prophet Joseph Smith, like Paul, his apostolic colleague, said that the gift of tongues is in some ways the least of the spiritual gifts but the one most sought after (see 1 Corinthians 14:8-32; TPJS, 246). Because Satan is so eager to deceive those who seek excessively for the gift of tongues (Ibid., 25, 162, 195), the Prophet declared that anything taught in tongues was not to be received as doctrine (Ibid., 229). “Tongues were given,” he explained, “for the purpose of preaching among those whose language is not understood; as on the day of Pentecost, etc., and it is not necessary for tongues to be taught to the Church particularly, for any man that has the Holy Ghost, can speak of the things of God in his own tongue as well as to speak in another; for faith comes not by signs, but by hearing [and clearly understanding] the word of God” (Ibid., 148-49).

That statement of the prophet Joseph Smith leads us to the third manifestation of tongues and the one to which Nephi referred. “Do ye not remember,” Nephi inquired, “that I said unto you that after ye had received the Holy Ghost ye could speak with the tongue of angels? And now, how could ye speak with the tongue of angels save it were by the Holy Ghost? Angels speak by the power of the Holy Ghost; wherefore, they speak the words of Christ” (2 Nephi 32:2-3). The message is simple, straightforward, and deeply profound. Men and women who have been born of the Spirit, who are becoming new creatures alive in Christ, enjoy the gift and influence of the Holy Ghost. When they teach or preach, they do so by that same power. The result is that they convey not merely their own will and desires but the mind and will of Christ. Stated more simply, prophets speak with the tongue of angels in the sense that they speak with the power and persuasion of the Holy Spirit. They speak what angels would speak. They deliver what Christ wants delivered. It is as though angels have come and delivered the message, or, more powerfully, as though our blessed Redeemer himself has been present and has spoken to his people.

14 But, behold, my beloved brethren, thus came the voice of the Son unto me, saying: After ye have repented of your sins, and witnessed unto the Father that ye are willing to keep my commandments, by the baptism of water, and have received the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost, and can speak with a new tongue, yea, even with the tongue of angels, and after this should deny me, it would have been better for you that ye had not known me.

verse 14 This verse and others suggest that repentance ought to begin to occur before baptism (see also verse 11 above). Certainly repentance is an ongoing process that continues throughout one's life. Then, what is the level of repentance that must occur prior to baptism? Apparently, there is an obligatory initial basic change of heart, turning away from the world and from transgression and toward the Lord. Such an initial fundamental change is to precede baptism. Then after baptism there must be a continual changing until we have overcome all sin and can abide the whole law.

“and after this should deny me, it would have been better for you that ye had not known me” What do you suppose the Lord meant by this most provocative statement? It is similar to a statement by Jesus to his apostles made during his final Passover meal: “Woe unto that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! It had been good for that man if he had not been born” (Matthew 26:24). Taken at its face, this verse seems to say that all those who have received the “baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost” “and can speak with a new tongue, yea, even with the tongue of angels” have reached a state of spiritual development so lofty that if they should deny Christ, they would be consigned to outer darkness.

Certainly, the only individuals in the eternities for whom it might have been better had they not known Christ would be the sons of Perdition who will live forever with Satan and his angels. All other people will be blessed by Christ and his gospel to receive a degree of glory. Perhaps we ought to be cautious about taking this verse too literally. In this verse we are exposed to one extreme of the post-mortal possibilities, that is perdition or outer darkness. Certainly, not all of those who have been exposed to the sanctifying influence of the Holy Ghost, the “baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost,” are capable of committing the sin against the Holy Ghost and being consigned to that awful fate.

As we progress toward godhood during this mortal sojourn, we enter into a succession of covenants with the Lord. The first formal covenant is that of baptism. We promise loyalty, dedication, obedience, and in return he promises us much more. With each covenant we make, we accept an obligation to keep that covenant. The consequences of breaking a covenant become ever more serious as we progress. Perhaps it may be said of each covenant that if we were to break it, it would have been better for us in the eternities if we had never made the covenant in the first place.

Another meaning may be implied here. It is true that those who are converted to the gospel then fall away and become more hardened and bitter against the truth than if they had never heard the gospel. The cause of this proclivity for bitterness is not entirely clear. It is perhaps due to the fact that no one ever falls away from the truth without an element of ambiguity that often leads to an almost subconscious fear of the eternal consequences. It would seem that this tortured individual gets some relief by railing actively against the Church and the gospel, particularly is he comforted by campaigning against the Church in the company of others who are also railing against the Church. Misery does, indeed, love company.

15 And I heard a voice from the Father, saying: Yea, the words of my Beloved are true and faithful. He that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved.

verse 15 “the words of my Beloved are true and faithful” We don’t usually think of words as being “faithful.” People are faithful but not things. The word faithful may also be used as meaning “true and [capable of being] trusted” (Easton’s Bible Dictionary).

16 And now, my beloved brethren, I know by this that unless a man shall endure to the end, in following the example of the Son of the living God, he cannot be saved.

verses 15-16 For a discussion of the important concept of enduring to the end, see the commentary for verse 20.

“Son of the living God” The Old Testament contains scores of names and titles of deity, including Shepherd, Savior, Redeemer, Lord, God, Rock, Almighty, Branch, Creator of Israel, Deliverer, Everlasting Father, God of Abraham, God of Isaac, God of Jacob, Shield, Jehovah, Lawgiver, Light, Ruler, Stone, Star, Prince of Peace, Servant. Such divine epithets are found in every Old Testament book except Esther. Parenthetically, the word epithet has two quite different meanings. The first is “a characterizing word or phrase used in place of the name of a person or thing.” An epithet is also “a word or phrase used invectively as a term of abuse or contempt” (Random House Webster’s College Dictionary). Obviously, here the former meaning applies. According to Book of Mormon scholar Susan Easton Black, the Book of Mormon contains 101 epithets for Christ (“Names of Christ in the Book of Mormon,” Ensign, July 1978, 60-61). In all, the 101 names or titles of Christ appear 3,925 times in the Book of Mormon’s 6,607 verses. Black’s tabulation shows that, on average, a name or title of Christ appears once every 1.7 verses. The frequent occurrence and variety of deific names and titles in the Book of Mormon distinguish the book from religious works created in the nineteenth century and place it squarely within the tradition of ancient religious texts.

17 Wherefore, do the things which I have told you I have seen that your Lord and your Redeemer should do; for, for this cause have they been shown unto me, that ye might know the gate by which ye should enter. For the gate by which ye should enter is repentance and baptism by water; and then cometh a remission of your sins by fire and by the Holy Ghost.

verse 17 “the things . . . that your Lord and your Redeemer should do” Nephi is writing. He is the speaker in this verse. Is it not presumptuous for Nephi to write that there are things which the Lord “should do”? This verse serves to emphasize that the law applied to the mortal Jesus Christ in much the same way it applies to each of us.

“baptism by water” This expression serves to emphasize that there is more than one kind of baptism—more than one part of the ordinance of baptism.

“For the gate by which ye should enter is repentance and baptism by water; and then cometh a remission of your sins by fire and by the Holy Ghost.”

Note here that a man’s sins are not remitted or “washed away” by baptism. Rather they are remitted or burned out of his soul by the Spirit of God in response to that man’s striving to repent. The reader is referred to the discussion of the three parts of the ordinance of baptism mentioned above.

18 And then are ye in this strait and narrow path which leads to eternal life; yea, ye have entered in by the gate; ye have done according to the commandments of the Father and the Son; and ye have received the Holy Ghost, which witnesses of the Father and the Son, unto the fulfilling of the promise which he hath made, that if ye entered in by the way ye should receive.

verse 18 “strait and narrow path which leads to eternal life” We have stressed previously that “strait” does not mean “straight.” Strait means narrow, exacting, and difficult. While some may object to the use of the word strait here, and in the following verse, rather than straight, there is significant justification for its use as discussed in the supplemental article Strait and Straight in the Book of Mormon.

“ye have received the Holy Ghost” “It is clear that the Nephites held the higher priesthood which we now call the Melchizedek priesthood. This provided them the authority to confer the Holy Ghost following a proper baptism” (Joseph Fielding Smith, Answers to Gospel Questions, 5 volumes, Salt Lake City: Deseret Book, 1957-66, 1:123). A sure testimony of the Father and of the Son can only come by revelation from God through the Holy Ghost.

“unto the fulfilling of the promise which he hath made” This phrase refers back to the promise made by the Savior in verse 12: Those that repent and enter in through the gate of baptism will receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

verses 17-18 After you have studied the commentary on the concept of “baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost” in verse 13 and in the chapter, Baptism, the Ordinance by Which We Grow Spiritually, you might be thinking that there can be no other more advanced principle of salvation to master. Think again! These materials explain that repentance and baptism and the remission of our sins by fire and by the Holy Ghost are only the beginning of a process. Obedience to these principles merely takes us through the “gate” and sets us on the “strait and narrow path which leads to eternal life.” In subsequent verses, Nephi will tell us what else we must do.

19 And now, my beloved brethren, after ye have gotten into this strait and narrow path, I would ask if all is done? Behold, I say unto you, Nay; for ye have not come thus far save it were by the word of Christ with unshaken faith in him, relying wholly upon the merits of him who is mighty to save.

verse 19 Here Nephi tells us more about the “strait and narrow path.” The credit for getting us through the gate and onto the strait and narrow path belongs to Christ, not us. Once on the path, this verse implies, we must demonstrate our own independence and obedience.

“for ye have not come thus far save it were by the word of Christ with unshaken faith in him” You might, as you survey the summary of the tenets of the “doctrine of Christ” in the introductory comments for this chapter, wonder if the principle of faith has been slighted. Actually, the necessity of faith is found in several of the tenets of the doctrine of Christ. Manifesting a sincere heart-felt desire to return to God’s presence is a manifestation of faith (deliberate and revealed faith). We evidence our faith as we seek understanding, as we repent, and as we accept baptism.

“relying wholly upon the merits of him who is mighty to save” This phrase implies that man lacks sufficient merit of his own to entitle him to return to the presence of the Lord. He must depend completely upon the grace of God. Man is a beggar at the throne of grace (Mosiah 4:20). For a review of the concepts of the law of justice and grace, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 19, The Essence of the Lord’s Atonement.

20 Wherefore, ye must press forward with a steadfastness in Christ, having a perfect brightness of hope, and a love of God and of all men. Wherefore, if ye shall press forward, feasting upon the word of Christ, and endure to the end, behold, thus saith the Father: Ye shall have eternal life.

verse 20 “ye must press forward with a steadfastness in Christ” To be steadfast is to be firm of mind or purpose; fixed in principle. We must demonstrate that our change of heart is permanent, that our commitment to obey is stronger than the enticements of the world and the devil, and we must do this day after day, year after year, through thick and thin, through good times and bad.

“having a perfect brightness of hope, and a love of God and of all men” This phrase refers to two important gifts of the Spirit, hope and charity.

“having a perfect brightness of hope” “Brightness” connotes vividness and precision. Hope is not only the longing for righteousness and the yearning to return to the presence of God (Bruce R. McConkie, Mormon Doctrine, 365). It is also a gradually growing assurance—received over time as an incremental gift of the Spirit—that one is going to receive celestial glory. The hungering to return to our celestial home is the product of the change of heart that results from the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost. This desire for heaven is eventually added upon or affirmed by the Holy Spirit who bestows the gift of hope—again, that quiet assurance that one is indeed on the return path to the celestial home (see the discussion of the gift of hope in “Two Little-Appreciated Gifts of the Spirit” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 10, Deliberate Faith and Revealed Faith and in “The Fruits of Faith” in volume 1, chapter 11, Other Notes on Faith. Still further discussion of this topic is found in “The Rest of the Lord—the Gift of Hope” in volume 1, chapter 17, Justification and Sanctification).

Like all other gifts of the Spirit, the gift of hope is given incrementally, line upon line, until eventually we may reach a “perfect brightness of hope” when we are quietly and humbly assured in our heart that we have earned the ultimate eternal reward.

“a love of God and of all men” Charity, or the pure love of Christ, may be defined as the longing for the exaltation of another individual as intensely as you long for the blessing of exaltation for yourself. As we seek to serve others and are purged of our imperfections by the Holy Ghost, this charity naturally follows (see a discussion of Charity in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 6, Charity as Empathy, and chapter 7, Charity as a Revealed Sense of Others).

“feasting upon the word of Christ” While we are on the strait and narrow path, what shall we do? The words of Christ hold the secret. Where do we find the words of Christ? They are contained in the scriptures, in the words and writings of inspired servants of the Lord, and in personal revelation to which each of us is entitled (2 Nephi 32:5). The words of Christ can only be truly understood through the ministrations and promptings of the Holy Ghost. And what does it mean to “feast”? The word speaks for itself.

“endure to the end” Endure to the end of what? In context, it is clear that we must endure to the end of the path that leads to eternal life. And how long is this path? We do not reach the end of it until we are able to abide the whole law. “For he who is not able to abide the law of a celestial kingdom cannot abide a celestial glory” (D&C 88:22). But is it not true that most everyone leaves this mortal life with some deficiencies? Many depart early, before they have had much opportunity to strive along the path to spiritual progress. Are those things we have left undone in mortality taken care of by some sudden dispensing of virtue in the next life? That is unlikely. Most of us will still have some distance to travel, even after death, to reach the end of the path that leads to eternal life. I suspect that it will not be required of us to be able to abide the whole law in order to be judged worthy to enter Paradise. The key will likely be making significant progress along the road toward perfection—which progress is judged sufficient by the Lord. The key to endurance, then, is to maintain a determination to never stop progressing. We must never stop searching our soul for those commandments that are still causing us to stumble or for those commandments we are ignoring.

“thus saith the Father: Ye shall have eternal life” Joseph Smith enriched the concepts in verse 20 as follows:

After a person has faith in Christ, repents of his sins, and is baptized for the remission of his sins and receives the Holy Ghost, (by the laying on of hands), which is the first Comforter, then let him continue to humble himself before God, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, and living by every word of God, and the Lord will soon say unto him, Son, thou shalt be exalted. When the Lord has thoroughly proved him and finds that the man is determined to serve him at all hazards, then the man will find his calling and his election made sure, then it will be his privilege to receive the other Comforter, which the Lord hath promised the saints” (TPJS, 150; see also D&C 98:11-15; 101:1-4; and 136:31).

The sublime denouement of our sojourn on the path of life is having one’s calling and election made sure, which means that a righteous man may be ultimately crowned with the knowledge “that he is sealed up unto eternal life” (D&C 131:5). Apparently, this message is sometimes communicated by the “Second Comforter” who is Jesus Christ himself. For a discussion of the concept of having one’s calling and election made sure, see the commentary for Helaman 10:4-7. See also the reference in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine mentioned above.

Now what is this other Comforter? It is no more nor less than the Lord Jesus Christ himself; and this is the sum and substance of the whole matter; that when any man obtains this last Comforter, he will have the personage of Jesus Christ to attend him, or appear unto him from time to time, and even he will manifest the Father unto him, and they will take up their abode with him, and the visions of the heavens will be opened unto him, and the Lord will teach him face to face, and he may have a perfect knowledge of the mysteries of the kingdom of God; and this is the state and place the ancient saints arrived at when they had such glorious visions—Isaiah, Ezekiel, John upon the Isle of Patmos, St. Paul in the three heavens, and all the saints who held communion with the general assembly and Church of the Firstborn” (TPJS, 150-51).

Joseph here teaches that when an individual receives the Second Comforter, he may be blessed with the ministrations of both the Father and the Son. It was mentioned above in the commentary for verses 10-15 that Nephi seems to have been taught face to face by both the Father and the Son. We may logically conclude that Nephi had his calling and election made sure. In this dispensation, the saints have been encouraged to seek for this great blessing.

Brother Larry E. Dahl has written a word of caution:

The doctrine is true; the promise is sure. Perhaps, however, a word of caution needs to be added. There is the danger of focusing so intently on the final summit that we do not pay sufficient attention to more immediate, and for the moment, more important matters. Like the Jews of old, we could look “beyond the mark,” thus impairing our spiritual vision, and stumble from the strait and narrow path (Jacob 4:14). A great lesson can be learned from the experience of Alma, recorded in Mosiah 26. The Lord covenanted that Alma would have eternal life even though Alma was not directly seeking that blessing. There is no indication in the record that he was even thinking about it. As the chief high priest (president) of the Church, Alma was deeply concerned about many of the rising generation who did not believe. Their hearts were hardened, they wouldn’t pray, and they wouldn’t be baptized. He pleaded with the Lord for guidance as to “what he should do concerning this matter, for he feared that he should do wrong in the sight of God” (verse 13). He “poured out his whole soul to God” (verse 14). And the voice of the Lord came to him in response to his pleading. But before telling Alma how to deal with his problem, the Lord blessed him for his faith and devotion, and said, “Thou art my servant; and I covenant with thee that thou shalt have eternal life” (verse 20). Truly, “he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it” (Matthew 10:39) (“The Doctrine of Christ” in The Book of Mormon: Second Nephi, The Doctrinal Structure, 373-74).

21 And now, behold, my beloved brethren, this is the way; and there is none other way nor name given under heaven whereby man can be saved in the kingdom of God. And now, behold, this is the doctrine of Christ, and the only and true doctrine of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, which is one God, without end. Amen.

verse 21 “this is the doctrine of Christ” For a discussion of the concept of the “doctrine of Christ,” see the introductory comments for this chapter.

“the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, which is one God” There are some statements about the godhead in the Book of Mormon that might initially seem confusing. As here, these statements refer to the separate members of the godhead being “one God” or “one Eternal God” (see also Mosiah 15:5; Alma 11:44; Mormon 7:7). It would seem that the nature of the relationship of the three members of the godhead to one another leads to these statements. The three are so closely aligned and allied that they function as a single unit. Their powers, their influences, their intentions, their goals, their responses are indistinguishable and identical. The three, indeed, function as one God. There may be additional reasons why the three are one God that we are not yet given to understand. Note that their oneness is emphasized by the singular verb is—“which is one God, without end.”

There may also be a historical reason why the Book of Mormon repeatedly teaches that the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost are one God. This reason may have had its beginnings at the death of the righteous King Hezekiah of Judah. He was succeeded by his son, Manasseh who was twelve years old when he began to reign. He ruled Judah for fifty-five years and was certainly one of the most decadent and wicked leaders ever to reign over Judah. He built altars for the pagan God Baal, worshiped the “astral Deities” Mercury, Venus, and Mars, built altars to the pagan Gods in the temple of God, practiced the adulterous fertility rites, shed the innocent blood of many in Judah, and encouraged the practice of infant immolation. He even submitted his own son to the fire as a sacrifice to the gods. During his nightmarish reign, any righteous prophet of God had to go into hiding to avoid being murdered (2 Kings 21:1-16). Manasseh was succeeded by his equally wicked son Amon who was assassinated after only a two-year reign.

Amon was succeeded by his son Josiah who became “good King Josiah,” and was one of the most righteous kings to lead Judah. He reigned some thirty-one years and presided over a major religious reform. He restored the prophets to their proper place of leadership, tore down the pagan altars, and rebuilt the temple and returned the worship therein to its proper form. During the reign of Josiah, an interesting thing happened. The high priest Hilkiah found, in the temple as it was being restored, a manuscript largely containing the writings of Moses called “the book of the law.” When this manuscript was read to King Josiah, he was overwhelmed and frightened to the point of tearing his clothes (2 Kings 22:11). The book contained stern warnings to Israel issued by the Lord, and its teachings became the very basis and theme of the religious reform advocated by Josiah. He called all the elders of Judah together and had the book read to them. He then made a personal covenant to uphold all the teachings and commandments contained in the book, and all of Judah’s elders made the same covenant.

What was this book that so frightened the good King Josiah? It was the book whose name means “second law,” referring to the “second law of Moses.” It is the book Deuteronomy. What year was it found, and what year did the major religious reform of Josiah take place? About 621 BC. Was the Prophet Lehi around in 621 BC? Of course he was. And was he supportive of the religious reforms instituted by Josiah? Not only would he have been supportive, but he would have been actively helping with the reform.

So, what has all this to do with the godhead doctrine as contained in the Book of Mormon? Just this: The most prominent theme contained in Deuteronomy is that found in Deuteronomy 6:4, the so called “Shema”—Judah’s creed or confession of faith: “Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God is one Lord” (emphasis added). This doctrine was particularly pertinent at the time of Josiah’s reform since his immediate predecessors had immersed Judah in the idolatrous worship of many gods. Under the influence of the newly discovered book of Deuteronomy, Judah was absolutely committed to the doctrine of “one [true] God” in contrast to many false gods. Lehi and his family would certainly have also been completely committed to this doctrine, and they would have taught it as the gospel truth to their descendants.

Incidentally, it is interesting to note one additional main theme of the Book of Deuteronomy, the so called “Deuteronomic reform.” In effect, this was, “If ye keep my commandments, ye shall prosper in the land. If ye do not, ye shall be destroyed—literally wiped off the face of the earth.” This may have been the message that so frightened King Josiah and caused him to tear his clothes. Have you ever heard that theme? It is repeated many times in the Book of Mormon. It is the so-called promise—curse of the Book of Mormon.

The literature of the Book of Mormon fits the setting from which it comes.

2 Nephi 31 may have served the Nephite dispensation in much the same way that Joseph Smith’s first vision has served this last dispensation. That is by providing the highest possible authority for its central claims.

2 Nephi Chapter 32

Scripture Mastery

2 Nephi 32:3 Angels speak by the power of the Holy Ghost; wherefore, they speak the words of Christ. Wherefore, I said unto you, feast upon the words of Christ; for behold, the words of Christ will tell you all things what ye should do.

2 Nephi 32:5 For behold, again I say unto you that if ye will enter in by the way, and receive the Holy Ghost, it will show unto you all things what ye should do.

2 Nephi 32:8-9 And now, my beloved brethren, if ye would hearken unto the Spirit which teacheth a man to pray ye would know that ye must pray; for the evil spirit teacheth not a man to pray, but teacheth him that he must not pray. Ye must pray always, and not faint; that he will consecrate thy performance unto thee, that thy performance may be for the welfare of thy soul.

1 And now, behold, my beloved brethren, I suppose that ye ponder somewhat in your hearts concerning that which ye should do after ye have entered in by the way. But, behold, why do ye ponder these things in your hearts?

verse 1 Nephi is still addressing his “beloved brethren” who are his people (2 Nephi 25:2-3) living with him in the land of Nephi.

“ye ponder somewhat in your hearts concerning that which ye should do after ye have entered in by the way” Nephi intends: “You are wondering what you should do next, after you have passed through the gait that leads to the strait and narrow path.”

“why do ye ponder these things in your hearts” Nephi felt that by now the answer should be obvious to his people. In verses 2 through 6 he will re-emphasize the profound truth that all spiritual knowledge and direction comes through the ministrations of the Holy Ghost. Man cannot negotiate successfully the path of life without direction from the Spirit himself.

2 Do ye not remember that I said unto you that after ye had received the Holy Ghost ye could speak with the tongue of angels? And now, how could ye speak with the tongue of angels save it were by the Holy Ghost?

verse 2 Here Nephi implies that he has observed some inspired teaching being done by his people. He offers this observation as evidence of the Holy Ghost’s presence.

Those who “speak with the tongue of angels” speak as do those in the exalted presence of God speak. They speak as do those angels who belong to the heavenly council of God speak. They speak and sing praises to God.

3 Angels speak by the power of the Holy Ghost; wherefore, they speak the words of Christ. Wherefore, I said unto you, feast upon the words of Christ; for behold, the words of Christ will tell you all things what ye should do.

verses 2-3 “Angels . . . speak the words of Christ.” Through the influence of the Holy Ghost, angels, who are nothing more nor less than people who have passed through this mortal phase and are on special assignment, are able to do and say the same things that Christ would do and say under any given circumstances. This blessing of the Holy Ghost applies entirely also to mortal men and women. The power and authority of angels does not exceed in the slightest that of the Lord’s mortal servants.

verse 3 “feast upon the words of Christ” To “feast” upon the words of Christ is to have the daily guidance of the Holy Ghost. Nephi will also teach in verse 5 below that the Holy Ghost will “show unto you all things what ye should do.” Thus, feasting upon the words of Christ is primarily to do all things the Holy Ghost inspires you to do. This feasting comprehends all the activities of our lives, and is not restricted to our time spent studying the scriptures, though a secondary meaning of this expression is to proactively, diligently, and enthusiastically study the scriptures or to vigorously search out the Lord’s servants and hearken unto their words.

4 Wherefore, now after I have spoken these words, if ye cannot understand them it will be because ye ask not, neither do ye knock; wherefore, ye are not brought into the light, but must perish in the dark.

verse 4 “if ye cannot understand them” “Them” refers to the words of which Nephi had just spoken.

“ye are not brought into the light” What does it mean to be “brought into the light”? A careful reading of this verse suggests that we cannot “come,” of our own volition, into the light. Rather we have to be “brought” in by some person or power outside ourselves. This person and power is the Holy Ghost. Even the plainest teachings that man can receive regarding the principle of the “doctrine of Christ,” the words of Christ, cannot, by themselves, make him understand this vital doctrine or “bring him into the light.” The Spirit of the Lord must participate.

An important prerequisite step to being brought into the light is to “knock.” What does it mean to knock? It means to proactively, prayerfully, and with earnest effort seek understanding. In other verses in this chapter this prerequisite step is referred to as: “search knowledge [and] understanding” (verse 7), and “feast upon the words of Christ” (verse 3).

5 For behold, again I say unto you that if ye will enter in by the way, and receive the Holy Ghost, it will show unto you all things what ye should do.

verse 5 After the baptism of water and the baptism of the Spirit (receiving the gift of the Holy Ghost), we “enter in by the way,” and we set our foot on life’s strait and narrow path where we depend heavily on the Spirit of the Lord to provide us direction.

“it will show unto you all things what ye should do” Here the Holy Ghost is referred to by the impersonal pronoun “it.” This seemingly uncongenial habit has arisen because we often refer to the Holy Ghost by referring to his influence rather than to the man himself.

This particular phrase refers to an important function of the Holy Ghost that we often fail to recognize. As we grow spiritually, each individual does so in his or her own particular and unique way and sequence. One might well ask the question of the Lord, “In my spiritual growth, what specific area should I be working on now or next?” Here in this phrase we learn that one of the important functions of the Holy Ghost is to reveal to us or prompt us concerning the very area or item we should be concentrating on at the moment. Ideally, as we partake weekly of the sacrament, it would be this specific item we would choose as the subject of our covenanting with the Lord for the upcoming period of time.

6 Behold, this is the doctrine of Christ, and there will be no more doctrine given until after he shall manifest himself unto you in the flesh. And when he shall manifest himself unto you in the flesh, the things which he shall say unto you shall ye observe to do.

verse 6 “this is the doctrine of Christ” A reasonable summary of the “doctrine of Christ” is found in the introductory commentary for 2 Nephi 31. This verse suggests that perhaps this doctrine is incompletely summarized here in 2 Nephi, and that further light will be shed on this doctrine after the Lord’s post-resurrection visit to the Nephites. It is certain that more specific light will be given to the earth when the fulness of the gospel is restored to the earth, but this fact does not invalidate the incomparable value of the principles of the doctrine of Christ discussed herein. Do we have available to us today a complete definition of the doctrine of Christ? The restoration of the gospel in its fulness in this dispensation has brought us a more complete understanding of the Lord’s plan of salvation and the precious ordinances of the temple. Perhaps the understanding afforded us in this final dispensation is more complete than it has ever been in the history of our earth.

7 And now I, Nephi, cannot say more; the Spirit stoppeth mine utterance, and I am left to mourn because of the unbelief, and the wickedness, and the ignorance, and the stiffneckedness of men; for they will not search knowledge, nor understand great knowledge, when it is given unto them in plainness, even as plain as word can be.

verse 7 Apparently Nephi could have taught more! He could have provided us with more important doctrines, but the Lord did not allow him. And what was the limiting factor? Why did he not teach more? He was obviously restrained by the Spirit. But why? We can only speculate. Perhaps he was constrained by the fact that those whom he was teaching (1) did not seek diligently for new understanding; (2) did not strive to understand what he had already taught; and (3) did not qualify for the ministration of the Spirit of God to enable them to understand what they had already heard preached in plainness.

The following verse suggests that Nephi's hearers also were not praying diligently and sincerely. What about us today? Are we sufficiently diligent in our study of the scriptures? Have we mastered those truths we have been given, and do we yearn for new knowledge? Are we regularly importuning the Lord to know what we "should do?"

8 And now, my beloved brethren, I perceive that ye ponder still in your hearts; and it grieveth me that I must speak concerning this thing. For if ye would hearken unto the Spirit which teacheth a man to pray ye would know that ye must pray; for the evil spirit teacheth not a man to pray, but teacheth him that he must not pray.

verse 8 "I perceive that ye ponder still in your hearts" Nephi apparently perceives that some of those listening to him are puzzled by his sayings. They lack the spiritual sensitivity to understand.

"it grieveth me that I must speak concerning this thing" Nephi speaks as though the subject of prayer is so basic that he fears offending his hearers by counseling them on the subject.

"the Spirit . . . teacheth a man to pray" The Lord has taught us in the Doctrine and Covenants that if a man is properly influenced by the Holy Ghost, he will receive whatsoever he asks for in prayer (see D&C 46:30). The reason for this bold promise lies in the fact that such a man is taught the things for which he should pray by the Holy Spirit (see D&C 50:30; 3 Nephi 19:24).

"the evil spirit teacheth not a man to pray" Prayer may be defined as yearning for spiritual directions and spiritual intervention. What can be more devastating to the devil's cause than this. For his purposes to be fulfilled, the devil only need separate a man from his God.

9 But behold, I say unto you that ye must pray always, and not faint; that ye must not perform any thing unto the Lord save in the first place ye shall pray unto the Father in the name of Christ, that he will consecrate thy performance unto thee, that thy performance may be for the welfare of thy soul.

verse 9 One definition of the verb “to faint” is to lose one’s courage, resolve, hope, or will.

“he will consecrate thy performance unto thee” The prayerful individual who is striving to be obedient will be justified and sanctified by the Spirit under the direction of the Lord. The individual will grow spiritually in response to his righteous “performance.” See Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 17, Justification and Sanctification.

One truly exciting implication of this verse is that the Spirit is available to us continually if we can only stay in tune.

2 Nephi Chapter 33

Scripture Mastery

2 Nephi 33:3 But I, Nephi, have written what I have written, and I esteem it as of great worth, and especially unto my people. For I pray continually for them by day, and mine eyes water my pillow by night, because of them; and I cry unto my God in faith, and I know that he will hear my cry.

This chapter may be considered to be Nephi's farewell. At the conclusion of a lifetime of faithful service, the great prophet Nephi bade farewell to his people in the land of Nephi and to all who would, in the future, read his words.

If we had available to us Nephi's writings upon the large plates of Nephi, perhaps we might have learned more about Nephi's ministry. From the record we do have, translated from the small plates of Nephi, we have learned little of that ministry. Only in 2 Nephi 5 did we read something of Nephi's actions as leader of his people. There we read that he maintained the records, made weapons for their defense, built a temple, and taught his people to be industrious. Mostly we have read of the Lord's dealings with Nephi's family including the rift that occurred therein. Also, we have read a major discourse that Nephi's brother Jacob delivered to the Nephites (2 Nephi 6-10), several chapters of Isaiah's writings (2 Nephi 12-24), Nephi's commentary on those Isaiah materials (2 Nephi 25-26), and Nephi's prophecies of the latter days (2 Nephi 27-30).

1 And now I, Nephi, cannot write all the things which were taught among my people; neither am I mighty in writing, like unto speaking; for when a man speaketh by the power of the Holy Ghost the power of the Holy Ghost carrieth it unto the hearts of the children of men.

verse 1 "I, Nephi, cannot write all the things which were taught among my people" Perhaps there are several reasons why Nephi could not write more. At least we can speculate that there was a lack of time. Also, the Lord exercised some constraining influences over him (2 Nephi 32:7). It seems clear that Nephi knew more than he wrote.

"neither am I mighty in writing, like unto speaking" Nephi indicates that he considered himself able to speak more powerfully than he could write. Apparently, he did not feel the same power of the Spirit when he wrote as when he spoke. We must consider Nephi something of an authority on the Spirit of God. After all he spoke with him face to face (1 Nephi 11:11).

"when a man speaketh by the power of the Holy Ghost the Power of the Holy Ghost carrieth it unto the hearts of the children of men" We are reminded of a powerful principle of gospel teaching. If an individual is to teach the gospel effectively, that individual must be worthy of, desirous of, and in possession of the Spirit of the Holy Ghost. The teacher will be aware of the Holy Ghost's presence, as the Holy Ghost will actually bear witness to the teacher of the principles he teaches—as he is teaching! By this means the teacher will know that the Holy Ghost is with him and that the Holy Ghost will attempt to bear witness to the hearer as well. The missionary, for example, who remembers this principle and always seeks for the attending Spirit of the Holy Ghost will provide for his investigator the best possible chance of being ministered to by the Spirit of the Holy Ghost.

2 But behold, there are many that harden their hearts against the Holy Spirit, that it hath no place in them; wherefore, they cast many things away which are written and esteem them as things of naught.

verse 2 In this verse and in the remaining verses in this chapter, Nephi continues to speak of his people. He is addressing his own contemporaries, their posterity, and us in this final dispensation..

“they cast many things away which are written and esteem them as things of naught” One example of those referred to in this verse might be those who will reject the Book of Mormon in this latter-day dispensation. Perhaps the “plainness” of the Book of Mormon’s message is partly responsible for its widespread rejection. It has ever been that truth spoken plainly tends to divide people. Either people will accept and love the truth or they will “harden their hearts against the Holy Spirit” and “cast many things away which are written and esteem them as things of naught.” See the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

Is it not ironic that some who reject the Book of Mormon today do so in the name of loyalty to the Bible?!

3 But I, Nephi, have written what I have written, and I esteem it as of great worth, and especially unto my people. For I pray continually for them by day, and mine eyes water my pillow by night, because of them; and I cry unto my God in faith, and I know that he will hear my cry.

verse 3 To esteem something is to regard it or set a value on it, whether low or high. Can there be any doubt that Nephi prayed earnestly? Nephi truly possessed that gift or character trait referred to as charity or “the pure love of Christ” which will be discussed further in the commentary for verse 7 below.

4 And I know that the Lord God will consecrate my prayers for the gain of my people. And the words which I have written in weakness will be made strong unto them; for it persuadeth them to do good; it maketh known unto them of their fathers; and it speaketh of Jesus, and persuadeth them to believe in him, and to endure to the end, which is life eternal.

verse 4 “the Lord God will consecrate my prayers for the gain of my people” The Lord will accept my prayers and accordingly bless my people.

“the words which I have written in weakness will be made strong unto them” Nephi has previously admitted his “weakness” (see 1 Nephi 19:6). This admission is made in a spirit of true humility and modesty. In verse 1 he mentioned that he perceived that he was not “mighty in writing.” We must conclude that he genuinely regarded his ability to write as somewhat inadequate. This perception notwithstanding, he knew that he was communicating sound principles of truth, and that the Spirit of the Lord would testify of the truth of these principles to the honest reader of his words in the future.

“it persuadeth them to do good; it maketh known unto them of their father; and it speaketh of Jesus, and persuadeth them to believe in him.” What is the antecedent of “it”? That antecedent is found earlier in this same verse and also in verse 3. Can you spot it? “It” is “the words which I have written,” or, in verse 3, “what I have written.” In other words, “it” refers to the writings of Nephi.

“life eternal” This is the same expression as “eternal life” which means far more than living forever. It implies living eternally in the celestial presence of God.

“persuadeth them to believe in him, and to endure to the end, which is life eternal” This phrase is an excellent example of merismus, the Hebrew rhetorical device of invoking the entire gospel, or doctrine of Christ, by mentioning only a few of its parts. See the commentary on merismus in the introductory commentary for 2 Nephi 31. Here Nephi mentions only two features of the gospel: “to believe in him” and “to endure to the end.”

5 And it speaketh harshly against sin, according to the plainness of the truth; wherefore, no man will be angry at the words which I have written save he shall be of the spirit of the devil.

verse 5 Here is the “it” again. As in the previous verse, “it” refers to the writings of Nephi. In a broader sense, we might regard “it” as referring to the entire Book of Mormon.

We have mentioned previously the fact that eternal truths, plainly presented, tend to polarize people into two camps. If the people are in tune with the Spirit, they will embrace the truth. If they are not, they will reject the truth as being foolish, naive, unsophisticated, or otherwise nonsensical. This rejection, however, seems always accompanied by a subtle and deep-seated element of ambivalence, disquiet, and discomfiture. “The guilty taketh the truth to be hard, for it cutteth them to the very center” (1 Nephi 16:2). The Book of Mormon itself is just such a “plain” truth. It is either the word of God, or it isn’t. It is either true, or it is a lie. There is no gray area.

“he shall be of the spirit of the devil” Perhaps the devil gets too much credit here. People need only be captivated by things of the world rather than eternal things to render them inclined to reject eternal truths. Mortality itself—combined with our natural-man selves—offers abundant opportunities to become distracted from our eternal destiny. The mortal experience was designed by God for man as a test. Many become lost here in mortality while seeking after material possessions, power, popularity, pleasures, and other things of the world. While it certainly pleases Satan to see us led astray, he probably doesn't have to try very hard since the world itself and our natural-self response to it are sufficient distractions for many.

6 I glory in plainness; I glory in truth; I glory in my Jesus, for he hath redeemed my soul from hell.

verse 6 Here the verb “glory” means that Nephi delights in considering and expressing sacred spiritual truths.

“I glory in my Jesus” Note that Nephi ends his record with his testimony of Jesus Christ. Knowing he was writing his final words, Nephi sought to leave his people—and future generations—a final witness of Christ. That Nephi chose to reiterate his witness of Christ here is an indication to the reader that he highly valued his relationship with the Lord and desired that his testimony should be taken seriously.

Nephi's knowledge of the Redeemer came from a variety of sources. First, he knew of the Messiah through the words of his prophet-father. Lehi had spoken “plainly of the coming of a Messiah, and also the redemption of the world” (1 Nephi 1:19). Lehi had foreseen the very time when the Messiah would come and foretold of his baptism, ministry, death, and resurrection (1 Nephi 10:4–12). Lehi expressed his final testimony, at the beginning of 2 Nephi, in the same words used by Nephi at the end of 2 Nephi: “Behold, the Lord hath redeemed my soul from hell” (2 Nephi 1:15).

Second, Nephi also learned of the Messiah from the writings found on the plates of brass. Prophets such as Zenock, Neum, and Zenos had each prophesied of the Messiah, and Nephi learned from their words (1 Nephi 19:10–12) how the Son would overcome death and bring to pass redemption and eternal life (Helaman 8:13–20). Nephi particularly revered the prophet Isaiah and felt personally connected to the Redeemer (1 Nephi 11:27; 2 Nephi 30:12–15) through Isaiah's Messianic prophecies. He extensively quoted from Isaiah and used his prophecies as a springboard for his own (John W. Welch, “Getting Through Isaiah with the Help of the Nephite Prophetic View,” in Isaiah in the Book of Mormon, ed. Donald W. Parry and John W. Welch, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1998, 28–30).

Finally, but most importantly, Nephi had his own, personal spiritual experiences which taught him of the Savior. He saw Jesus's miraculous birth, life, ministry, and death in an angel-guided vision (1 Nephi 11). Nephi had seen his Redeemer (2 Nephi 11:2), and he spoke fondly of the time in which he had “seen his day” (2 Nephi 25:13; cf. verses 12–14). Later, quite plausibly in a clear and open manifestation (The word “plain” or “plainness” had many meanings in Webster's 1828 American Dictionary of the American Language, including open, clear, without disguise or affectation, honest, sincere, not obscure, easily seen or discovered.) in the holy of holies of his temple (In the holy of holies of the temple in ancient Israel, the Son was “manifested in the royal high priests” of the temple. “Several texts do describe how the king was ‘born’ as son of God, or ‘raised up’ in the holy of holies,” revealing among other things how the Father and the Son were “distinguished before the advent of Christianity.” Margaret Barker, Temple Theology, London: SPCK, 2004, 56), Nephi heard the voices of both the Father and the Son testify of the Son and His doctrine (2 Nephi 31:11–15).

Elder Jeffrey R. Holland wrote, “Nephi offered beauty and power in his concluding testimony. It is a grand climax to a written record and a perfect epitaph to a faithful life” (Jeffrey R. Holland, Christ and the New Covenant: The Messianic Message of the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 1997, 57).

“he hath redeemed my soul from hell” It would seem that Nephi’s calling and election had been made sure.

7 I have charity for my people, and great faith in Christ that I shall meet many souls spotless at his judgment-seat.

verse 7 In this verse and the two which follow, Nephi expresses his love for three different groups of people. These include his own people (verse 7), the Jews (verse 8), and the Gentiles (verse 9).

“I have charity for my people” Some students of the Book of Mormon have complained of a subtle problem in their relationship with the prophet Nephi. To some, he seems almost too good to be true. He seems to be so pure and so steady and so noble that some have been a little discouraged in trying to follow his example or to identify with him. It is vital that we disabuse ourselves of this false idea. Certainly he was human with weaknesses, but it is apparent that he was a guileless, humble, remarkable individual who was exactly what he appears to be. It is clear that over his lifetime Nephi had developed a profound love for his fellow man. Charity may be defined as “the highest, noblest, strongest kind of love, not merely affection; but the pure love of Christ. It is never used to denote alms or deeds or benevolence, although it may be a prompting motive” (Bible Dictionary, 632). Perhaps an even more apt definition of charity is this: If a person yearns for the exaltation and temporal welfare of another individual as earnestly as he yearns for his own exaltation and temporal welfare, then he has charity for that individual. It would seem that this Christ-like love is the natural result of a life centered in Christ and his service.

In this verse, Nephi expresses his charity for “my people.” These certainly included those who lived with him in the land of Nephi and likely their posterity.

8 I have charity for the Jew—I say Jew, because I mean them from whence I came.

verse 8 “I have charity for the Jew . . . them from whence I came” Was Nephi of Jewish descent? We know that father Lehi and his son Nephi were descendants of Joseph through Manasseh. Thus, Nephi was a “Jew” only in that he was a Jewish national—he hailed from the land of Judah. Actually, Nephi made reference to this unique definition of a “Jew” in other places in the text. To Nephi, Jews are those descended from the inhabitants of the kingdom of Judah at the time Lehi left Jerusalem, even though those individuals might have descended from ancestors from Israelite tribes other than Judah (see 2 Nephi 25:6,14-15; 30:4).

9 I also have charity for the Gentiles. But behold, for none of these can I hope except they shall be reconciled unto Christ, and enter into the narrow gate, and walk in the strait path which leads to life, and continue in the path until the end of the day of probation.

verse 9 Notice that even though Nephi expresses his charity for the Gentiles, he qualifies his hope for them somewhat. He expresses his misgivings about the chances that the Gentiles will eventually be exalted. But what is a Gentile? Here, a Gentile is any individual who is not a Jewish national. In essence, the label Gentile encompasses all non-Israelites.

It seems likely that Nephi’s reservations about the Gentiles grew out of those things he had been taught through revelation. Regarding the seed of his father or his own seed, Nephi had learned that “they shall be remembered again among the house of Israel; they shall be grafted in, being a natural branch of the olive-tree, in the true olive-tree” (1 Nephi 15:16; see also 2 Nephi 26:15-16; 29:2). Nephi was also familiar with the promises that had been made to the Jews: “It shall come to pass that the Jews which are scattered also shall begin to believe in Christ; and they shall begin to gather in upon the face of the land; and as many as shall believe in Christ shall also become a delightsome people” (2 Nephi 30:7). Nephi knew that the prophesied promises made to the Gentiles were less hopeful. For example, Nephi had learned that when the Gentiles would receive the writings in the Book of Mormon, they would respond by saying, “We have got a Bible, and there cannot be any more Bible” (2 Nephi 29:3). Nephi had also written: “The Gentiles are lifted up in the pride of their eyes, and have stumbled, because of the greatness of their stumbling block” (2 Nephi 26:20).

Reading his “warnings” to the Gentiles might be a bit confusing since the requirements he outlines for them apply equally to those of the house of Israel. We realize today that the division between “Jew” and “Gentile” is of little spiritual significance, since anyone of gentile heritage who accepts the gospel becomes a member of the house of Israel by “adoption.” Also, any descendant of the house of Israel who rejects the gospel loses any “preferential” status which they might have had.

“strait path which leads to life” For a discussion of why the word strait (rather than straight) is appropriate here, see the supplemental article Strait and Straight in the Book of Mormon.

10 And now, my beloved brethren, and also Jew, and all ye ends of the earth, hearken unto these words and believe in Christ; and if ye believe not in these words believe in Christ. And if ye shall believe in Christ ye will believe in these words, for they are the words of Christ, and he hath given them unto me; and they teach all men that they should do good.

verse 10 Here Nephi begins his final warning to the world which will continue through verse 15. That the Book of Mormon is a powerful witness for Christ, there can be no doubt. As mentioned previously, Susan Easton Black has pointed out that Christ is mentioned in the Book of Mormon an average of every 1.7 verses. The book’s avowed purpose is to teach that “Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God” (title page of the Book of Mormon).

Nephi’s promise here is an interesting one. The honest seeker after truth, who does not believe in the Book of Mormon (“these words”), is promised that if he will believe sincerely in Christ (and, of course, remain open to the ministrations of the Holy Spirit), he will come to believe in the Book of Mormon since the Book of Mormon contains the words of Christ. The Spirit ever stands ready to testify of Christ’s teachings.

“they teach all men that they should do good” What does it mean to “do good”? It means to become like Christ, to emulate his example, to think as he thinks and do as he does. He is the epitome of good. In this context, see D&C 6:34.

11 And if they are not the words of Christ, judge ye—for Christ will show unto you, with power and great glory, that they are his words, at the last day; and you and I shall stand face to face before his bar; and ye shall know that I have been commanded of him to write these things, notwithstanding my weakness.

verse 11 Here we have a promise of a great final testimony Christ will bear to the truth of the Book of Mormon. Apparently, it will be a testimony for all to hear, born “with power and great glory.” Then all will know that the Book of Mormon contains the words of Christ.

12 And I pray the Father in the name of Christ that many of us, if not all, may be saved in his kingdom at that great and last day.

verse 12 A prophet has the power to condemn those who will not hear, but that is not his desire or his purpose. Rather his purpose is to lift and to save.

13 And now, my beloved brethren, all those who are of the house of Israel, and all ye ends of the earth, I speak unto you as the voice of one crying from the dust: Farewell until that great day shall come.

verse 13 “I speak unto you as the voice of one crying from the dust” The expression “crying from the dust” is used with three different meanings:

1. The prophet-writers of the Book of Mormon use the expression to mean that their individual messages and testimonies will be read and taught long after they had died and their physical bodies returned to the dust or buried in a grave. This meaning seems most applicable here (see also 2 Nephi 3:19-21; 26:16; 27:13; Mormon 9:30; Moroni 10:27; Isaiah 29:4).

2. The phrase is used by Moroni to refer to the pleas of departed saints, which cry out for fulfillment of the Lord’s promises or for vengeance or justice upon the wicked (Mormon 8:21-24; Ether 8:23-25; cf. 2 Nephi 28:10; 3 Nephi 9:11).

3. The concept of truth coming forth from the earth also applies to the Book of Mormon itself, as a record sealed up and hid in the ground but brought forth from the earth by the Lord in modern times (Mormon 8:16, 26; cf. Moses 7:62).

“until that great day shall come” What specific day is being spoken of here? It is that time “at the last day,” at the Lord’s second coming, when all of those who believe in him will be vindicated—when every knee will bow and every tongue confess that he is the Christ.

14 And you that will not partake of the goodness of God, and respect the words of the Jews, and also my words, and the words which shall proceed forth out of the mouth of the Lamb of God, behold, I bid you an everlasting farewell, for these words shall condemn you at the last day.

verse 14 Nephi is speaking. He warns his readers that they will not reach the kingdom of heaven if they will not (1) “respect the words of the Jews” (believe the words of the Jewish prophets contained in the Old Testament and Book of Mormon); (2) believe “also my words” (believe in the Book of Mormon); and (3) accept “the words which shall proceed forth out of the mouth of the Lamb of God” (teachings of Christ as will be recorded in the New Testament).

15 For what I seal on earth, shall be brought against you at the judgment bar; for thus hath the Lord commanded me, and I must obey. Amen.

verse 15 Nephi did write his record with priesthood sealing authority and with the ratification of the Holy Ghost. He knew that he had been commanded to write, and he had obeyed. He was a special witness of the Savior. With full understanding of his role, Nephi had the authority to seal his writings with this final warning and promise.

The Book of Jacob

The Brother of Nephi

Jacob was the elder of two sons born to Sariah and Lehi in the wilderness (1 Nephi 18:7, 19). He and his younger brother Joseph apparently were born some time during the eight years Lehi's family traveled in the wilderness between Jerusalem and the land Bountiful. It seems likely that Jacob and Joseph were born during the early part of the wilderness journey since they later were said to have a recollection of the hardships suffered in the wilderness (2 Nephi 2:1-2). Thus, when Jacob's family arrived in the promised land he was probably between three and seven years old. At the time Nephi delivered the plates into his hands in 544 BC, he was probably somewhere between fifty and fifty-four years of age.

What do we know about Jacob? We know him only by the material found in the Book of Mormon text. His own writings consist of thirteen pages in 2 Nephi (chapters 6-10) and the eighteen pages of the book of Jacob. There are also some eleven additional references to him by other Book of Mormon prophets (1 Nephi 18:7; 18:19; 2 Nephi 2:1-4; 5:6; 5:26; 11:1; 11:3; 31:1; Enos 1:1-3; Alma 3:6; Words of Mormon 1:3). We read, for example, that his early childhood years were not easy. Because of the unrighteous behavior of his eldest brothers, Laman and Lemuel, he "suffered afflictions and much sorrow" (2 Nephi 2:1). His father Lehi, with prophetic insight, gave us a telling glance of Jacob's eternal character when he said, "thou knowest the greatness of God; and he shall consecrate thine afflictions for thy gain" (2 Nephi 2:2). He was undoubtedly named after Jacob, father of the twelve tribes of Israel.

Among the prophets who have lived upon the earth, Jacob may be considered among the greatest. He possessed a combination of gifts that made him so. These included spirituality, intellectual capacity, judgment, and literary ability including the capacity to speak plainly. He is responsible for some of the plainest doctrinal teachings found in the Book of Mormon. Examples include his discussion of the scattering and gathering of Israel (2 Nephi 6:8-15; 9:1-2; 10:1-22; Jacob 5); his explanation of the fall of Adam and the atonement of Christ (2 Nephi 9); and his warnings against the sins of materialism, pride, and unchastity (Jacob 2).

When Nephi was forced to flee from Lehi's family's original settlement in the New World—"the place of the fathers' first inheritance" (Alma 22:28)—Jacob chose to travel with him to the land of Nephi or the "place Nephi" (2 Nephi 5:5-8). A careful reading of 2 Nephi 5:6 suggests that Jacob and his younger brother Joseph were probably not married at this time. We know that Jacob did eventually marry and have a family including a righteous son Enos (Jacob 7:27; Enos 1:1-3).

Once in the land of Nephi, Jacob and his younger brother were ordained to the priesthood and given responsibilities to teach and lead the Nephites in ecclesiastical matters (2 Nephi 5:26). Nephi reported that Jacob was blessed to actually see the Lord Jesus Christ (2 Nephi 11:3).

John S. Tanner in his article, “Literary Reflections on Jacob and His Descendants” (The Book of Mormon: Jacob Through Words of Mormon, To Learn with Joy, 259-61) has contrasted the styles of Nephi and Jacob. Nephi is inclined to “delight” or “glory” in plainness (2 Nephi 31:3; 33:6). He does not equivocate, rather he frankly rebukes or forgives his brothers (1 Nephi 7:21). Jacob, by contrast, is more timid, more reluctant to condemn, anxious lest he offend, vulnerable, intimate, humble, and tender. Jacob does not seem to have been hardened by his tribulations in the wilderness. Rather he was refined and rendered more sensitive to the sufferings of others (see, for example, Jacob 2:3, 6, 7, 9). In writing, he employed an intimate and unique vocabulary. Brother Tanner has pointed out that two-thirds of the use of the words “grieve” and “tender” in the Book of Mormon are attributed to Jacob, as are his solitary use of such intimately expressive words as “delicate,” “contempt,” “lonesome,” “sobbing,” “dread,” and “wound,” the latter used only in reference to emotions and not bodily injury.

The book of Jacob consists of three main sections. These are:

1. Jacob 1-3. These chapters contain a long sermon by Jacob in which he warns against the sins of materialism, pride, and immorality. This section concludes with the words: “These plates are called the plates of Jacob, and they were made by the hand of Nephi. And I make an end of speaking these words” (Jacob 3:14).

2. Jacob 4-6. This segment includes the allegory of Zenos. Apparently, Jacob intended that these writings would conclude his contribution to the small plates of Nephi. At the conclusion of chapter 6, Jacob delivers his farewell to his people until they meet at the “pleasing bar of God” (Jacob 6:13).

3. Jacob 7. This section was apparently an afterthought written “some years” (verse 1) later than were the first six chapters. It is Jacob’s account of Sherem, the antichrist.

Chapter Outline of Jacob

A brief outline of the book of Jacob, worth committing to memory, is as follows:

Jacob 2 Jacob denounces pride and unchastity and denounces the unauthorized practice of plural marriage.

Jacob 5 Zenos’s Allegory of the Tame and Wild Olive Trees.

Jacob 7 The antichrist Sherem

The words of his preaching unto his brethren. He confoundeth a man who seeketh to overthrow the doctrine of Christ. A few words concerning the history of the people of Nephi.

This headnote, superscription or colophon was not a late addition to the Book of Mormon but was part of The Book of Jacob on the small plates of Nephi.

Scripture Mastery

Jacob 1:8 Wherefore, we would to God that we could persuade all men not to rebel against God, to provoke him to anger, but that all men would believe in Christ, and view his death, and suffer his cross and bear the shame of the world.

Jacob 1:19 And we did magnify our office unto the Lord . . . answering the sins of the people upon our own heads if we did not teach them the word of God with all diligence.

Chapter 1 may be outlined as follows: Nephi's instructions regarding the small plates (verses 1-8); the appointment of the beloved Nephi's successor (verses 9-12); the segregation of the people into tribes (verses 13-14); the spiritual deterioration of Jacob's people (verses 15-16); the beginning of Jacob's temple sermon (verses 17-19); Jacob's temple sermon extends through Jacob 3:14.

verses 1-4 These verses contain the important commandment Nephi gave to his brother Jacob. It was this commandment, that was passed on to each of the authors of the small plates of Nephi, that imbued each of them with a binding obligation to write a "few . . . things" on "these plates," the small plates of Nephi. These "few . . . things" were to be those subjects the writers considered most precious. They were commanded not to emphasize the historical happenings. These authors of the small plates, other than Nephi and Jacob, included Enos, Jarom, Omni, Amaron, Chemish, Abinadom, and Amaleki.

1 For behold, it came to pass that fifty and five years had passed away from the time that Lehi left Jerusalem; wherefore, Nephi gave me, Jacob, a commandment concerning the small plates, upon which these things are engraven.

verse 1 Before Jacob, his older brother Nephi had been both the spiritual and secular leader of his people, the people of Nephi. Before Nephi's death, he separated the responsibilities of the church and spiritual leadership from those of the secular government. We learn in this verse that Nephi gave to Jacob the small plates of Nephi. Presumably Jacob was also appointed to succeed Nephi as the spiritual leader. Nephi conferred the responsibility of the civil government upon another man who would later become known among the people as "second Nephi" (see verse 11). Some have speculated that this secular leader may have been a son of the prophet Nephi.

“fifty and five years had passed away from the time that Lehi left Jerusalem” During the entire Book of Mormon period, the Nephites reckoned their dates by three different events (see 3 Nephi 2:5-8). These were:

1. Lehi’s leaving Jerusalem (e.g., Jacob 1:1; Enos 1:25; Mosiah 6:4; 29:46). This year was some time between the first year of the reign of Zedekiah (597 BC) and the final attack on Jerusalem by Babylon (586 BC). The year was most likely 587 BC (see the commentaries for 1 Nephi 7:14 and 1 Nephi 19:4). The Nephites continued to use this system to record more than five hundred years of Nephite history, from 1 Nephi through the book of Mosiah, up to the time that Mosiah instituted the reign of the judges.

2. The commencement of the reign of the judges which was about 91 BC—sometimes alternatively referred to as the year Mosiah died (Mosiah 29:44-46). This practice will begin in Mosiah 29 and will be used for about one hundred years, in the books of Alma and Helaman and in the beginning of 3 Nephi (Mosiah 29:44; Alma 1:1; 3 Nephi 1:1, 26; 2:5-8).

3. The year that the signs of Christ’s birth were given (3 Nephi 1:15; 2:7-8). This system will be used from 3 Nephi through the book of Moroni. It was in the 385th year after the birth of Jesus that Mormon led his people in battle at Cumorah (Mormon 6:5), and it was after the 420th year that Moroni closed the Book of Mormon (Moroni 10:1).

2 And he gave me, Jacob, a commandment that I should write upon these plates a few of the things which I consider to be most precious; that I should not touch, save it were lightly, concerning the history of this people which are called the people of Nephi.

verse 2 Because of this verse, the small plates of Nephi are said to contain only a “light touch” of history.

“this people . . . the people of Nephi” This phrase refers to those individuals who followed Nephi from the coastal “land of their fathers’ first inheritance” to the land of Nephi and to their descendants (see 2 Nephi 5).

3 For he said that the history of his people should be engraven upon his other plates, and that I should preserve these plates and hand them down unto my seed, from generation to generation.

verse 3 Make certain that you understand and remember clearly the difference between the small plates of Nephi and the large plates of Nephi. If you need a review, please read again the supplemental article, Those Confusing Book of Mormon Plates.

“his other plates” These are the so-called large plates of Nephi, those plates that contained more of a historical record of the people. The large plates were, later abridged by the prophet Mormon, and that record came into the hands of the prophet Joseph in the form of a set of plates we now refer to as the plates of Mormon.

“these plates” This phrase refers to the small plates of Nephi. These were delivered into the hands of Joseph Smith in exactly the form in which they were recorded. We are now reading the translation of these unabridged plates. The translation of these small plates comprises the first twenty-five percent of the Book of Mormon—1 Nephi through Omni, including the Words of Mormon—and it contains more of a spiritual, rather than historical, emphasis.

4 And if there were preaching which was sacred, or revelation which was great, or prophesying, that I should engraven the heads of them upon these plates, and touch upon them as much as it were possible, for Christ’s sake, and for the sake of our people.

verse 4 “the heads of them” This expression refers to the chief or most precious topics or themes of the “preachings,” revelations,” and “prophesyings” of the authors of the small plates of Nephi (John A. Tvedtnes, “The Hebrew Background of the Book of Mormon” in Rediscovering the Book of Mormon, 90).

“for Christ’s sake, and for the sake of our people” In what sense is this collection of scripture preserved “for Christ’s sake”? Since it is the work of Christ “to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man” (Moses 1:39), then Christ’s purposes are furthered by man’s learning the eternal principles found herein.

5 For because of faith and great anxiety, it truly had been made manifest unto us concerning our people, what things should happen unto them.

verse 5 The plural pronouns “us” and “our” in this verse and in the following verses refer to Jacob and his brother Nephi.

“because of faith and great anxiety” Because of their great faith and because of the concern Nephi and his brother Jacob had for their people, these two prophets were favored with revelation concerning the fate of their people. Here is another reminder that receiving revelation is not a passive activity. To be effective a prophet must passionately and actively seek the favor and direction of the Lord.

6 And we also had many revelations, and the spirit of much prophecy; wherefore, we knew of Christ and his kingdom, which should come.

verse 6 “the spirit of much prophecy” The phrase “spirit of prophecy” refers to a susceptibility to the promptings of the Holy Ghost, which susceptibility is earned by righteous obedience to gospel principles. It is not possible to have and maintain a durable testimony of Jesus Christ without ministrations, actually revelations, from the Lord through the Holy Ghost.

7 Wherefore we labored diligently among our people, that we might persuade them to come unto Christ, and partake of the goodness of God, that they might enter into his rest, lest by any means he should swear in his wrath they should not enter in, as in the provocation in the days of temptation while the children of Israel were in the wilderness.

verse 7 “enter into his rest” For a discussion of the “rest” of the Lord, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 21:10.

“the provocation in the days of temptation” Jacob here refers to the incident described in Numbers 13-14 in which the Lord was provoked to anger by the rebelliousness and spiritual blindness of the Israelites in the wilderness, and he forbade the adult males from entering the promised land. In an analogous way, it is possible that each of us, through disobedience might be forbidden to enter the Lord’s eternal rest (cf. Hebrews 3:8).

The story of the provocation in the days of temptation in the wilderness is well told by the author Pearl S. Buck in her book The Story Bible, Volume One, the Old Testament. I will reproduce part of that story here out of my love, born in my youth, for the story:

The cloud over the tabernacle rose up and drifted through the wilderness to a place very close to the southern border of Canaan. Here at Kadesh, as the site was called, the children of Israel stopped to water their cattle and make plans for their final march. While they pitched their tents and settled into camp, Moses sought counsel from the Lord. “Send out men to search the land of Canaan, which I am giving to the children of Israel,” said the Lord. “Choose one man from every tribe, each one a ruler among his people.” So, Moses by the commandment of the Lord chose twelve men, all of them headmen of the various tribes, and instructed them to spy out the land of Canaan to see what lay ahead. Joshua, of the tribe of Ephraim and already Moses’s chief military leader, was to lead the scouting expedition; and Caleb, a valiant young captain of the tribe of Judah, would act as his second-in-command. “Go up into the mountains of the south,” said Moses, “and see what the land is like. Find out what kind of people live there; whether they are weak or strong, or few or many. Make note of the cities that they live in, whether they are tents or strongholds. See if the land itself is good or bad, rich or poor; and whether it has wood or not. Go now, and be of good courage. Bring back some of the fruit of the land so that we all may see.” This was the time for the first ripe grapes, and therefore there should be no difficulty in bringing back some sample of the riches of Canaan. So, the twelve spies went on their way. From the heights of Hebron, once so well-known to Abraham, they viewed the valleys below. There, they saw, were small, pleasant villages and great walled cities, and fields that were carpets of fresh young corn.

The spies went down from the mountains and went carefully through the land. The soil was rich and prosperous, and trees grew up the slopes toward the hilltops. Sheep grazed in green, well-watered pastures; people lived in well-fortified towns. And those people looked very strong and vigorous, especially those of the tribe of Anak.

Joshua led his scouts through the land for forty days, until they had seen hills, plains, valleys, and the coast, and they knew they had indeed come upon a fertile land. They also knew that it was already occupied by various tribes, each of which no doubt intended to keep occupying it. They went on, and they came to a gently flowing brook with lush vineyards on either side. From a great vine, they cut a branch bearing one huge cluster of grapes, and so marvelous was this cluster that two men had to carry it between them hung upon a staff. The place they called Eshcol, meaning "cluster," because of the grapes they had found. They found ripe pomegranates, too, and figs; and saw all manner of flocks and herds and fruits of the field. Many of the fruits and crops were the same as they had known in Egypt, and there were even some that they had never seen before.

After the forty days, they returned to their camp at Kadesh in the Wilderness of Paran, taking with them the huge cluster of grapes, the pomegranates, the figs, and many a tale of the wonders they had seen. They reported at once to Moses and to Aaron, and all the children of Israel crowded around to listen. "We went into the land to which you sent us," Joshua began. "It surely is flowing with milk and honey, and this is the fruit of it." He showed the people what his spies had brought back, and they delighted in the sight. "But the people are strong who live in that land," said another of the spies, "and the cities are walled and very great. And moreover, we saw the children of Anak there. The Amalekites live in the south, and the Hittites and other strong tribes live in the mountains, and the Canaanites live by the sea. Altogether there are many powerful and warlike people in that land." Nine other spies nodded agreement as he spoke, and added their own words of alarm about the dangers of the land.

Their listeners murmured unhappily. Caleb silenced them and turned to Moses. "It is a good land, well worth having. Let us go up at once and take possession," he said boldly. "We are well able to overcome it." But all the other spies who had been with him, except Joshua, shook their heads in gloom and said: "No, we cannot go against those people. They are much stronger than we. We shall have no chance at all." And the spies gave an evil report to the children of Israel about the lovely land which they had searched. The more they talked, the less they said about its riches and the more they said about its dangers. What they had seen, they exaggerated; and what they had not seen, they imagined. "There are giants in that land!" they said. "All the people that we saw in it are men of a great stature, but especially the sons of Anak who are descended from the giants. Beside them we were no more than grasshoppers; and to them we were no more than grasshoppers that they could easily crush beneath their feet." The children of Israel were terrified, and deeply disappointed. All this way through the wilderness, only to come to a land they dare not enter! There was weeping in the camp that night; and a murmuring against Moses and Aaron. "Would God that we had died in the land of Egypt!" they cried out to their leaders. "Or that we had died in the wilderness! Why has the Lord brought us to this land? Are we to fall by the sword of these giants in Canaan, and have our wives and children taken as prisoners? Would it not be better for us to return to Egypt?"

The suggestion caught fire and ran through the camp. They said to one another, "Let us choose a captain for ourselves, and let us return to Egypt. Moses shall not lead us any longer, for see where he has brought us." The sounds of their rebellion came to their leaders' ears. Both Moses and Aaron fell on their faces in front of all the people, praying God that the children of Israel should overcome their cowardice. And to the people themselves Moses cried out: "Why can you not obey and trust the God who has helped you so many times before when you have thought that all was lost?" Joshua and Caleb tore their clothes in great dismay. Out of all the twelve spies, they were the only two who tried to reason with the people; for they were brave men, and they had faith in God. "It is a good land, and a fertile one!" they said. "It truly flows with milk and honey. Why do you have doubts when you know that if the Lord is pleased with us, he will lead us there and give it to us? It is promised to us! Only you must not rebel against the Lord, not be afraid of the people of this land. We can crush them easily, for they have no defense when the Lord is with us. Fear them not!"

But the Israelites were too afraid to listen to words of reason, and their fear showed itself in anger against Caleb and Joshua. They reached for stones to fling at them, and would have stoned not only the two brave spies but Moses and Aaron as well if a strange and wonderful distraction had not suddenly occurred. The glory of the Lord appeared in the form of a brightly glowing light from the tabernacle, in front of all the children of Israel. And the voice of the Lord came from the brightness. "Moses! How long will these people provoke and disobey me? How long will it be before they believe in me, after all the signs I have shown them? I will send a plague to wipe them out; I will disinherit them. Of you, and you alone, shall I make a great and mighty nation." But Moses pleaded for them, as he had done countless times before. "Do not destroy them, Lord, I beg you; not after having brought them all this way and becoming famed as the Lord who leads by cloud and fire and talks to his people face to face. If you should kill them here, then the nations which have heard of your fame will say that you were not able to bring your people into the land you promised them, and that you therefore destroyed them in the wilderness. You are long-suffering, O Lord, and of great mercy. Pardon, I pray you, the wickedness of the people in accordance with the greatness of your mercy, as you have forgiven them since leaving Egypt even until now." The Lord listened, and relented; but not altogether. "I will pardon them, as you ask," he said. "They shall not be destroyed, nor will I disinherit them. But because all these men, who have seen my glory and my miracles which I did in Egypt and in the wilderness, have not listened to my voice and have tempted me now ten times, they shall none of them see the land which I promised to their fathers. Tell them this: 'Not one of you who is twenty years or older, and has murmured against me, shall ever go into that land. Only Joshua and Caleb, who have been faithful to me, shall be allowed to live in Canaan.

And the little ones, whom you feared would be made prisoners, shall grow up to inherit the land which you have despised. But as for the rest of you, you shall stay in the wilderness and wander there until you die. And your children shall wander in the wilderness for forty years, one year for each of the days in which you searched the land, until they are grown and you are gone.”

“as in the provocation in the days of temptation while the children of Israel were in the wilderness” I again quote this phrase to make yet another point. This phrase is taken from Psalm 95:8 which contains the phrase, “as in the provocation, and as in the day of temptation in the wilderness.” Actually, the authors of the Book of Mormon frequently used the Psalms in their writing. But Jacob was particularly inclined to do so. Some other examples of Jacob’s use of the Psalms include:

- Jacob 4:10 “in great mercy, over all his works”

Psalm 145:8–9 “of great mercy . . . and his tender mercies are over all his works.”

- Jacob 4:15-17 “they will reject the stone upon which they might build . . . how is it possible that these, after having rejected the sure foundation, can ever build upon it, that it may become the head of their corner?”

Psalm 118:22 “The stone which the builders refused is become the head stone of the corner.”

- Jacob 6:6 “Yea, today, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts”

Psalm 95:7-8 “Today if ye will hear his voice, harden not your heart”

What compelled Jacob to use quotations from Psalms so frequently? The book of Psalms is often referred to as the hymnbook of the ancient Israelite temple. Nephi had consecrated Jacob as a temple priest and teacher (2 Nephi 5:26), and thus Jacob would have known and used psalms in his administration of temple rites and ordinances. Psalms 95, 118, and 145 are known especially for their use in ancient Israelite temple worship and later Jewish ritual. As chief priest of the Nephites, Jacob would have been frequently required to sing these psalms to the temple patrons. It is therefore no surprise that Jacob employed language from the Psalms in his writing.

8 Wherefore, we would to God that we could persuade all men not to rebel against God, to provoke him to anger, but that all men would believe in Christ, and view his death, and suffer his cross and bear the shame of the world; wherefore, I, Jacob, take it upon me to fulfil the commandment of my brother Nephi.

verse 8 “we would to God” This phrase implies a fervent wish and might be alternatively translated, “we desire, as God is our witness.”

“view his death, and suffer his cross” To “view” Christ’s death is to accept and learn of his atoning sacrifice, and to “suffer his cross” means to determine to righteously endure the temptations and vicissitudes of mortality. It was the Lord’s intent that his atoning sacrifice would “bring all men unto him.” This could only occur if the people would learn about and ponder his atonement. Then in a sense of gratitude, “a broken heart and a contrite spirit” the people would come to Christ.

To “bear the shame of the world” is to endure the inevitable ridicule of worldly people while clinging to eternal principles of truth.

“to fulfil the commandment of my brother Nephi” This commandment is found in verses 1 through 4 of this chapter.

9 Now Nephi began to be old, and he saw that he must soon die; wherefore, he anointed a man to be a king and a ruler over his people now, according to the reigns of the kings.

verse 9 “he anointed a man to be a king and a ruler over his people” In Hebrew culture, a man was not elected nor was he simply unceremoniously designated to be king. Rather he was anointed in a ritual that symbolized the outpouring of the Spirit, and in which the king covenanted to lead his people in righteousness (Stephen D. Ricks, “The Coronation of Kings,” a FARMS reprint, July 1989).

“he anointed a man to be a king and a ruler over his people now, according to the reigns of the kings” We will read in the commentary for verses 13 and 14 of this chapter that all of the Book of Mormon peoples at this time in their history could be classified by a few different systems of labeling. This particular phrase seems to define the Nephites as those who were reigned over at the moment (“now”) by Nephi.

One subtle point worth noting is that here in the first chapter of the book of Jacob, especially in Jacob 1:11, Jacob provides us with a description of the “reigns of the kings” over his people. We may thus assume that after Jacob was given the small plates of Nephi, he did not start writing immediately. He had been commanded to write upon these plates only those things that were “most precious.” This commandment required that Jacob wait for a while before writing upon the plates, since it required the advantage of a backward glance in order to make comparisons and judgments regarding what was most precious and therefore should be written.

10 The people having loved Nephi exceedingly, he having been a great protector for them, having wielded the sword of Laban in their defence, and having labored in all his days for their welfare—verse 10 “having wielded the sword of Laban in their defence” We may presume, though we are without a specific account, that Nephi personally participated in battles against the Lamanites. Perhaps we might be able to read an account of these battles if we had access to those 116 pages of manuscript that were lost by Martin Harris. The sword of Laban was more than just another weapon. It apparently became an important symbol to the Nephite nation. It was symbolic of the arm or power of the Lord. It implied a promise that the Lord would strengthen and bless the Nephites as he had their fathers. The significance of this symbol still lingers even today.

Brigham Young related an interesting account of Joseph and Oliver's returning the Book of Mormon plates to the Hill Cumorah. Brigham attributes this account to Oliver Cowdery. It does not fit with the anatomy of the New York Hill Cumorah, and it is difficult to know whether or not Oliver was reporting a literal experience. "They laid the plates on a table; it was a large table that stood in the room. Under this table there was a pile of plates as much as two feet high, and there were altogether in this room more plates than probably many wagon loads; they were piled up in the corners and along the walls. The first time they went there the sword of Laban hung upon the wall; but when they went again it had been taken down and laid upon the table across the gold plates; it was unsheathed and on it was written these words: 'This sword will never be sheathed again until the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our God and his Christ'" (JD, 19:38).

The battles referred to in this verse and in verse 14 occurred in the land of Nephi and were likely initiated by the Lamanites who resented and hated the Nephites and desired to destroy their records and traditions. Ultimately the Lamanites will prevail in these battles and force the Nephites to leave the land of Nephi in about 210 BC.

A preferred spelling of "defence" today, at least in the United States, is defense.

11 Wherefore, the people were desirous to retain in remembrance his name. And whoso should reign in his stead were called by the people, second Nephi, third Nephi, and so forth, according to the reigns of the kings; and thus they were called by the people, let them be of whatever name they would.

verse 11 "let them be of whatever name they would" Regardless of their given name, once they assumed the office of king they were given the title and called "Nephi." It is interesting to note that in many ancient cultures including Israel, Egypt, and Mesopotamia, a king received a new name or throne name when he was crowned king. Perhaps this new name was given to the king as part of his coronation rite (Stephen D. Ricks, "King, Coronation, and Covenant in Mosiah 1-6" in Rediscovering the Book of Mormon, 214-15).

12 And it came to pass that Nephi died.

verse 12 Nephi was probably about seventy years old when he delivered the small plates to Jacob (see 1 Nephi 2:16). We cannot be sure how long it was between his delivering the plates and his death.

13 Now the people which were not Lamanites were Nephites; nevertheless, they were called Nephites, Jacobites, Josephites, Zoramites, Lamanites, Lemuelites, and Ishmaelites.

verse 13 It should be noted that throughout the Book of Mormon, the people are consistently divided into seven tribes (see also 3 Nephi 7:2; 4 Nephi 1:37-38; Mormon

1:8-9). Prior to his death, the prophet Lehi called his family together and first spoke to several of his sons collectively (2 Nephi 1:1-29). He then divided the family into seven groups and spoke to them individually. First, he spoke to Zoram (2 Nephi 1:30-32); second to Jacob (2 Nephi 2); third to Joseph (2 Nephi 3); fourth to the children of Laman (2 Nephi 4:3-7); fifth to the children of Lemuel (2 Nephi 4:8-9); sixth to the sons of Ishmael (2 Nephi 4:10), and seventh to Nephi and Sam together (2 Nephi 4:11). Thus, Lehi seemed to establish the precedent of these seven groups which will endure as distinct groups throughout the Book of Mormon record. It is interesting and notable that there are no “Samites” in the Book of Mormon. In a way, Lehi was acting here like Jacob of old. Both Jacob and Lehi pronounced their blessings to “all [their] household,” who had gathered around them shortly before they died. The aim was to organize a household of God in a new land of promise. Both organized their posterity into tribal groups in the patriarchal tradition of ancient Israel. This placed Lehi in a patriarchal role, and indeed the Nephites remembered Lehi as “Father Lehi” just as the Israelites speak of Abraham as “Father Abraham.”

The tendency for the people to be joined by strong family ties persists throughout the Book of Mormon. Different forms of government will come and go, but the family structure will persist. For example, in the dark days of political collapse just prior to Christ’s advent, there still remained “much family,” and the tribal structure took the place of the failed government (3 Nephi 7:2-4).

The division of the people into seven groups will remain an important feature of their culture. Alma will eventually establish “seven churches in the land of Zarahemla” (Mosiah 25:23). It is interesting to note that in Mesoamerican (Mayan) tradition there were “seven caves” or seven lineages from which the inhabitants of Mesoamerica were to have sprung (An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, John L. Sorenson, 313). It would be presumptuous, however to imagine a connection between these seven lineages and the Nephite/Lamanite tribes . . . or would it?

For a more thorough review of the various Book of Mormon peoples, see the supplemental article, Peoples of the Book of Mormon.

“Ishmaelites” These are the descendants of Ishmael. Just as the sons of Ishmael joined with Laman and Lemuel in rebellion (1 Nephi 7:6; 18:9), so their descendants remained united with the Lamanites. They are only occasionally distinguished from the Lamanites (Jacob 1:13-14; Alma 43:13; 47:35; Mormon 1:8-9).

14 But I, Jacob, shall not hereafter distinguish them by these names, but I shall call them Lamanites that seek to destroy the people of Nephi, and those who are friendly to Nephi I shall call Nephites, or the people of Nephi, according to the reigns of the kings.

verse 14 Here Jacob points out that while the labels “Nephite” and “Lamanite” are the names of specific tribes, as pointed out in the commentary for verse 13, these same labels might also be used in a less specific way. In this latter sense, all of the Book of Mormon people may be divided into two general groups: (1) the adherents of Nephi and his teachings—the Nephites, and (2) those who seek to destroy these Nephites—the Lamanites.

“the people of Nephi, according to the reigns of the kings” One definition of “Nephite” consists in those people who were ruled by and gave allegiance to the “Nephis”—those kings who succeeded the prophet Nephi. Generally, throughout the remainder of the Book of Mormon, this same sociopolitical definition of “Nephites” and “Lamanites” will hold true. A people’s label will depend upon their political allegiance and not their ethnic origins.

15 And now it came to pass that the people of Nephi, under the reign of the second king, began to grow hard in their hearts, and indulge themselves somewhat in wicked practices, such as like unto David of old desiring many wives and concubines, and also Solomon, his son.

verse 15 “under the reign of the second king” This probably refers to Nephi’s successor, the king referred to as second Nephi.

The suggestion has been made by Daniel H. Ludlow that Nephi’s political successor was perhaps Jacob (A Companion to Your Study of the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City: Deseret Book, 1976, 156). This, however seems unlikely, as in this verse and in verse 9 above, Jacob refers to Nephi’s royal political successor in the third person. We previously mentioned the suggestion that Nephi’s successor may have been one of his sons. We are obviously not given to know just who he was.

“like unto David of old desiring many wives and concubines, and also Solomon” We learn from modern revelation that both David and his son Solomon had many wives and concubines, and that they were justified in doing so, since these marital partners were given them by the Lord (D&C 132:38-39). Yet, as this verse suggests, both David and Solomon were apparently guilty of some measure of abuse of this principle of polygamy. We are all familiar with the story of David’s sin of adultery with Bathsheba, the wife of Uriah, and with his arranging for Uriah’s death in battle (2 Samuel 11).

This verse presents the student of the Book of Mormon with an interesting problem. It has been estimated that the Nephites, when they split with Laman and Lemuel perhaps some forty years previously, numbered about twenty-four (eleven adults and thirteen children). This group, as you will recall, included Nephi, Zoram, Sam, Jacob, Joseph, and their families, and also Nephi’s “sisters.” Using a reasonable figure for birth rates and factoring in deaths, the adult population at the time of Jacob 1 unlikely exceeded thirty-five males and thirty-five females. With such limited numbers as these, the preference of some of the Nephites for “many wives and concubines” would be puzzling and would seem to require a larger female population. Also, who were the “concubines”? Concubines were usually women of a lower social order than the prevalent one who were kept and supported by a man in addition to his wives. Dr. John L. Sorenson has suggested that this verse provides some evidence that the Nephites must have combined with some other people on their arrival in the New World, likely some which were indigenous to the area (“When Lehi’s party Arrived in the Land, Did They Find Others There?” in the Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, volume 1, number 1 [Fall 1992], 1-34). There are other evidences in the Book of Mormon text that the members of Lehi’s party joined with and intermarried with other peoples whom Dr. Sorenson refers to as “others.” We will mention them in context.

16 Yea, and they also began to search much gold and silver, and began to be lifted up somewhat in pride.

verse 16 “search much gold and silver” We will learn in Jacob 2:12 that many of the people began to “search for gold, and for silver.” Presumably this means that they began to worship mammon (riches) rather than God.

17 Wherefore I, Jacob, gave unto them these words as I taught them in the temple, having first obtained mine errand from the Lord.

verse 17 “errand from the Lord” What charming terminology for a calling from the Lord! This is the only instance of the use of this phrase in the entire Book of Mormon. Jacob’s “errand” apparently is to rebuke, warn, and teach the Nephites concerning pride and unchastity (Jacob 2-3), an errand given him through revelation (Jacob 2:11).

18 For I, Jacob, and my brother Joseph had been consecrated priests and teachers of this people, by the hand of Nephi.

19 And we did magnify our office unto the Lord, taking upon us the responsibility, answering the sins of the people upon our own heads if we did not teach them the word of God with all diligence; wherefore, by laboring with our might their blood might not come upon our garments; otherwise their blood would come upon our garments, and we would not be found spotless at the last day.

verse 19 “we did magnify our office unto the Lord” Jacob and his brother Joseph “magnified” their callings in the priesthood. To magnify is to “make it great” or make it greatly effective, so that no one in our (Jacob and Joseph’s) stewardship can shift responsibility for their sins from their own choices to our negligence. Conversely, failing to magnify our calling is to neglect one’s duty, so that blame for the sins of others is due in part to one’s own negligence (see Jacob 1:19). To magnify a calling or an office in the Church is to accept pro-actively all of the responsibilities of the calling and to perform the duties of the calling enthusiastically and completely.

Elder Delbert L. Stapley explained that “to magnify is to honor, to exalt and glorify, and cause to be held in greater esteem or respect. It also means to increase the importance of, to enlarge and make greater” (“Honoring the Priesthood,” Improvement Era, May 1957, 60:423-25).

This verse implies a rather sobering admonition to missionaries: They must teach an individual the word of God with “all diligence” in order to avoid sharing the responsibility of that individual’s sins. Jacob had stated previously, “The God of Israel did witness that I shook your iniquities from my soul, and that I stand with brightness before him, and am rid of your blood” (2 Nephi 9:44). This verse is also consistent with Ezekiel’s teachings that a watchman who fails to sound the alarm will be held accountable for the destruction of his people (Ezekiel 3:17-21; 33:1-9). A similar and perhaps even more sobering warning was given to parents by the Lord (D&C 68:25).

Scripture Mastery

Jacob 2 Jacob denounces pride and unchastity and condemns the unauthorized practice of plural marriage.

Jacob 2:18-19 Before ye seek for riches, seek ye for the kingdom of God.

Jacob 2:27-30 (compare D&C 49:16) Jacob's teaching on polygamy: If I will, saith the Lord of Hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people.

1 The words which Jacob, the brother of Nephi, spake unto the people of Nephi, after the death of Nephi:

2 Now, my beloved brethren, I, Jacob, according to the responsibility which I am under to God, to magnify mine office with soberness, and that I might rid my garments of your sins, I come up into the temple this day that I might declare unto you the word of God.

verses 1-2 After his brother Nephi's death, Jacob went up to the temple in the land of Nephi to deliver an important discourse. There are three other temple discourses in the Book of Mormon. Jacob delivered another two-day sermon at the temple in the Land of Nephi prior to Nephi's death about fifteen years before the occasion of this present sermon (2 Nephi 6-10). King Benjamin will teach the people in the temple in the land of Zarahemla (Mosiah 2-5). And the resurrected Jesus Christ will deliver two discourses to the people at the temple in the land Bountiful (3 Nephi 12-14).

In the verses that follow, Jacob's discourse will cover three topics: wealth, pride, and chastity.

Since Jacob was probably not the king of the people, this temple sermon was specifically directed against the political and social elite, and not simply against the people at large.

verse 2 For a discussion of the phrases: "magnify mine office" and "rid my garments of your sins" see the commentary for Jacob 1:19.

verses 3-11 Previously the people of Nephi had been generally obedient to the words of God which Nephi, Jacob, and Joseph had diligently taught them. Now, however, the Spirit has prompted Jacob to discern a growing tendency toward grievous sins arising in the thoughts and hearts of his people. Jacob has received a divine charge to speak frankly to his people, but in these verses, he reflects his apprehension that the candor of his reprimand will be disappointing or even offensive to some of his people. He worries that those with tender feelings and "delicate minds" who have come to the temple to hear a message of comfort and inspiration will be offended by his call to repentance. This sensitivity and timidity are typical of the prophet Jacob.

3 And ye yourselves know that I have hitherto been diligent in the office of my calling; but I this day am weighed down with much more desire and anxiety for the welfare of your souls than I have hitherto been.

4 For behold, as yet, ye have been obedient unto the word of the Lord, which I have given unto you.

verse 4 “as yet” This might be interpreted as “to this point” or “previously.”

5 But behold, hearken ye unto me, and know that by the help of the all-powerful Creator of heaven and earth I can tell you concerning your thoughts, how that ye are beginning to labor in sin, which sin appeareth very abominable unto me, yea, and abominable unto God.

verse 5 “labor in sin” This phrase implies that Jacob’s people were not guilty of mere inadvertent and minor sins. Rather they had become obsessed and preoccupied with serious sins.

6 Yea, it grieveth my soul and causeth me to shrink with shame before the presence of my Maker, that I must testify unto you concerning the wickedness of your hearts.

verse 6 This verse is vintage Jacob—intimate and vulnerable (see also verse 3). His words paint the unmistakable picture of one who is sensitive, apprehensive, and passionate. He is obviously pained at having to preach a harsh message.

“shrink with shame before the presence of my Maker” Jacob feels that because of his people’s grievous sins he is no longer able to function as an advocate for his people before the throne of God.

7 And also it grieveth me that I must use so much boldness of speech concerning you, before your wives and your children, many of whose feelings are exceedingly tender and chaste and delicate before God, which thing is pleasing unto God;

8 And it supposeth me that they have come up hither to hear the pleasing word of God, yea, the word which healeth the wounded soul.

verse 8 What is the “pleasing word of God”? Surely this must include the doctrines of salvation, the exciting mysteries of the kingdom, and the lofty promises of the life that is to come. These are the parts of the doctrine that are edifying, exciting, and pleasant to hear. The wives and children have come to hear an inspiring and edifying message. But instead, Jacob is constrained to deliver a stern rebuke and warning.

9 Wherefore, it burdeneth my soul that I should be constrained, because of the strict commandment which I have received from God, to admonish you according to your crimes, to enlarge the wounds of those who are already wounded, instead of consoling and healing their wounds; and those who have not been wounded, instead of feasting upon the pleasing word of God have daggers placed to pierce their souls and wound their delicate minds.

verse 9 “Crimes” are sins.

“to enlarge the wounds of those who are already wounded” To whom is Jacob referring here? Who has been “wounded” by sin? The sinner? The sinners loved ones? Certainly both, but the context here suggests that Jacob may have mainly the loved ones of the sinner in mind. He is troubled that his stern admonitions directed at the sinners will further injure those in the crowd who have already been injured by the thoughtless and sinful deeds of those sinners.

“those who have not been wounded” These are apparently people who are not guilty of sin themselves and who do not have loved ones who are guilty of grievous sin. These are the “pure in heart” and those with a “broken heart” spoken of in the following verse. They have come to the temple to hear a positive and sweet message of hope. Instead they will hear Jacob’s candid call to repentance which will be traumatic for them; Jacob fears that he may “pierce their souls” with “daggers” and “wound their delicate minds.”

10 But, notwithstanding the greatness of the task, I must do according to the strict commands of God, and tell you concerning your wickedness and abominations, in the presence of the pure in heart, and the broken heart, and under the glance of the piercing eye of the Almighty God.

verse 10 The word “greatness” here means difficulty. The phrase “broken heart” is a variation of the phrase “broken heart and contrite spirit.” For a discussion of this phrase, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 2:7. See also “The Solution to Pride—A Broken Heart and Contrite Spirit” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 5, The “Natural Self” and the “Spiritual Self.”

In commanding Jacob to deliver this sermon, the Lord apparently delivered Jacob a “strict command” the intent of which could not be mistaken.

The word “abominations” is found some seventy-five times in the Book of Mormon text (see also verse 31 of this chapter). It is a broad term and covers every thought, deed, and attitude that is offensive to God who “cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance” (Alma 45:16; D&C 1:31). All abominations are a reflection of the carnal mind and, therefore, of ungodliness.

“in the presence of the pure in heart, and the broken heart” Those present at the temple that day included, in addition to those guilty of grievous sin, some sweet and innocent souls. The phrase “and the broken heart” may refer to the fact these innocents possess the spiritual gift of “a broken heart and contrite spirit.”

“and under the glance of the piercing eye of the Almighty God” Jacob expects that those sinners whom he admonishes will be brought low by the spirit of God’s justice.

11 Wherefore, I must tell you the truth according to the plainness of the word of God. For behold, as I inquired of the Lord, thus came the word unto me, saying: Jacob, get thou up into the temple on the morrow, and declare the word which I shall give thee unto this people.

12 And now behold, my brethren, this is the word which I declare unto you, that many of you have begun to search for gold, and for silver, and for all manner of precious ores, in the which this land, which is a land of promise unto you and to your seed, doth abound most plentifully.

verse 12 At this point, Jacob turns his attention to the general topic of pride. As we read the scriptures, we are inclined to read words or phrases and apply to them only the secular definitions which we carry in our minds. It is important to keep in mind that several words may have a simple secular definition, and, at the same time, represent a concept which has a much richer scriptural or spiritual meaning. A simple example might be eternal life. In a secular context, this phrase simply means living forever. However, we know that eternal life is a rich spiritual concept which means living forever in the presence of God and progressing toward a sublime fulness of all that God has and is. Another example of a word with both a simple secular meaning and a richer spiritual meaning is pride. In a secular context, pride as a negative quality is an exaggerated opinion of oneself—haughtiness and arrogance. Its scriptural or spiritual meaning, however, is different. Here, pride is a fixation upon, an abiding desire for, and an inappropriate seeking after, things of the world. It is also an inclination to seek after these things in a competitive and contentious way. For a more complete discussion of the sin of pride, see the commentary for Helaman 3:1 and “Pride” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 5, The “Natural Self” and the “Spiritual Self.”

Is Jacob warning here against the evils of prospecting for and mining precious metals? It is more likely that his reference to gold, silver, and precious ores is more metaphorical; that he had in mind the sins of pride and, more specifically perhaps, materialism—placing mammon, or things of the world, before things of the Spirit.

13 And the hand of providence hath smiled upon you most pleasingly, that you have obtained many riches; and because some of you have obtained more abundantly than that of your brethren ye are lifted up in the pride of your hearts, and wear stiff necks and high heads because of the costliness of your apparel, and persecute your brethren because ye suppose that ye are better than they.

verse 13 Materialism is an important sub-topic of pride. We tend to assume that material wealth is a sign of virtue, that it comes only to those who possess the qualities of intelligence, thrift, and industry. We may reason that those who have material wealth deserve it because of their hard work, and conversely, the poor are similarly deserving of their circumstances. This is dangerous and flawed logic. The Lord is the “hand of providence” that distributes material wealth to us mortals. By design, he does so unevenly. Let us not forget the role of industry and work in acquiring the things of the world that are needed. Nevertheless, even if we assume a good work ethic and initiative, to some he gives abundantly, and to others he gives but little. He may or may not dispense these temporal blessings to those whom the world might regard as “deserving.” Sometimes also, material things may go to those who seem to deserve them least. Those upon whom he bestows abundantly will be watched by the Lord. Will they share of their abundance with those who are less blessed (see D&C 56:16; 107:18)? Or will they use their wealth to proudly adorn themselves with expensive clothing and other trappings to prove to the world that they are people of status and position and they are better than those with less intelligence and industry? Will an individual’s material blessings become, for him, a basis for judging others? Will they “wear stiff necks” that will not bow before God and acknowledge his hand in their material blessings. Will they carry “high heads” in their haughty pride? Those who receive from the Lord little in the way of material wealth will also be observed by the Lord. Will they accept their lot and strive to learn humility, thrift, and industry, or will they fret and chafe and covet the possessions of others? Will they adopt a good work ethic and strive to obtain sufficient for their basic needs?

“costliness of your apparel” Costly apparel includes expensive attire and costly ornaments (jewelry). It has oft been decried by prophets as being prototypical of excessive pride. It is the universal wont of those whose hearts are set too much upon worldly riches (e.g., Alma 1:6, 32; 5:53; 4 Nephi 1:24; Alma 31:28). It would appear that avoiding costly apparel is one key to avoiding the negative effects of prosperity.

14 And now, my brethren, do ye suppose that God justifieth you in this thing? Behold, I say unto you, Nay. But he condemneth you, and if ye persist in these things his judgments must speedily come unto you.

verse 14 We are aware of a recurring theme found in the pages of the Book of Mormon. It is the prosperity–pride–destruction cycle. Whenever a group chooses to keep the commandments of God, the Lord blesses them, and they prosper. Often the people, in the midst of their prosperity, lose sight of the source of their blessings, and they attribute the virtue to themselves. Wealth becomes an end rather than a means. Acquiring it becomes more important than how it is acquired. Soon there emerge class distinctions, caste systems, and persecution of the poor. The Lord is disappointed and causes his prophets to warn the people. The wealthy and prosperous disregard the warnings. After all, the prophets seem to the wealthy to be merely spokesmen for the poor who are coveting their possessions. The Lord then withdraws his blessings, and allows the destruction of the people by outside and inside forces. These forces include war, bondage, or natural calamity. There is then a return to humility and repentance by the people because of their miserable and lowly circumstances, which brings again the blessings of the Lord, including prosperity. And the cycle is repeated. Two complete and yet succinct descriptions of the cycle of prosperity and destruction are offered in Helaman 11 and in 4 Nephi.

15 O that he would show you that he can pierce you, and with one glance of his eye he can smite you to the dust!

verse 15 Jacob's meaning seems to be: "Oh that God would demonstrate his awful power for you so that you might be reminded to repent before he is compelled to actually smite you!"

16 O that he would rid you from this iniquity and abomination. And, O that ye would listen unto the word of his commands, and let not this pride of your hearts destroy your souls!

verse 16 How does pride destroy one's soul? One of mortality's prime deterrents to maintaining a spiritual, eternal perspective is pride. It keeps a man's head turned toward things of the world and away from eternal issues. President Ezra Taft Benson observed, "Pride does not look up to God and care about what is right. Instead it looks sideways to man and argues who is right. . . . To the proud, the applause of the world rings in their ears; to the humble, the applause of heaven warms their hearts" (CR, April 1986, 6). 17 Think of your brethren like unto yourselves, and be familiar with all and free with your substance, that they may be rich like unto you.

verse 17 "Think of your brethren like unto yourselves" Here is a restatement of the golden rule. We may regard the golden rule as the golden rule of charity. A practical, yet meaningful, definition of charity is this: When you come to yearn for the temporal welfare and spiritual welfare of another as much as you yearn for the temporal and spiritual welfare of yourself, then you have charity.

"be familiar with all" Here is a command to become aware of the circumstances and needs of those around us.

"that they might be rich like unto you" A simple statement of Chauncy C. Riddle's is worth pondering: "In any mortal situation, a righteous person who has the strength to do so will be voluntarily producing physical goods and services for the society in which he dwells. He will consume only what is necessary of these self-gained benefits, and will voluntarily share the surplus with others who are in need of his surplus” (The Book of Mormon: Jacob Through Words of Mormon, To Learn with Joy, Religious Studies Center, BYU, 225-26). The Lord himself said, “If any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment” (D&C 104:18).

18 But before ye seek for riches, seek ye for the kingdom of God.

verse 18 We should not pass this verse without asking ourselves, “What, in actual fact, is my priority? What is my treasure?” If you wish to ponder this verse for a few moments, you might also review the story of Jesus’s encountering the rich young man, and ponder those verses as well (Luke 18:18-30; Mark 10:17-26). Riches are not intrinsically evil. The central issue is the priority we place on them.

While you are pondering, consider this question: If we truly live the gospel of Jesus Christ, must we be willing to be poor? Certainly, the Lord generally blesses the industrious and hard-working individual with sufficient material possessions. Yet, should not each of us possess an innate willingness to give up those possessions in favor of our spiritual growth?

19 And after ye have obtained a hope in Christ ye shall obtain riches, if ye seek them; and ye will seek them for the intent to do good—to clothe the naked, and to feed the hungry, and to liberate the captive, and administer relief to the sick and the afflicted.

verse 19 “after ye have obtained a hope in Christ” As Jacob speaks of obtaining “a hope in Christ” (see also Jacob 4:6). He seems to intend more than just seeking for the secular quality of hope. He is speaking of the assurance that comes after one has consecrated one’s life to the Lord and to his kingdom—that spiritual witness that you are “on track” for exaltation. Obtaining a “hope in Christ” implies a particular spiritual level or special relationship with the Lord. The person with hope maintains that quiet and humble assurance that he will one day live in the celestial heaven with the Father and the Son. See further discussion of this important spiritual gift in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine. See particularly “Two Little-Appreciated Gifts of the Spirit” in chapter 10, Deliberate Faith and Revealed Faith and in “The Fruits of Faith” in chapter 11, Other Notes on Faith. Still further discussion of this topic is found in “The Rest of the Lord—the Gift of Hope” in chapter 17, Justification and Sanctification.

It would seem that after one has obtained the gift of hope, then it follows naturally that he will feel compelled to continue on to obtain an even greater gift, that of charity. He will come to possess the pure love of Christ for his fellow men. He will yearn for their exaltation every bit as much as he yearns for his own. Again, in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, see “The Fruits of Faith” in volume 1, chapter 11, Other Notes on Faith.

This verse implies that the Lord may bless certain such righteous individuals, if they so desire, with material wealth providing it is their intent to use the wealth for righteous purposes.

It turns out that pride is the great impediment to our developing charity. Responsiveness to the Spirit instills in man a constant need to repent and strive and improve, whereas worldly pride stifles this need for spiritual improvement. Pride also pits the proud man against his brothers and sisters. He is in competition with them rather than praying for their success. Even those in the Church may often be found guilty of this pride. Another reflection by Chauncy C. Riddle is food for thought:

Why do some of us resist [our development of love for our neighbors]? Is it not because we somehow see ourselves as being sufficient as we are? Do we not believe in our hearts that we are already good enough, that the Savior may indeed have to forgive us of a few things, but his love and generosity will easily take care of those things and we will then be ushered ceremoniously into the blessings of the great beyond? Such a belief is what the scriptures call pride. It is the belief that we are good, though perhaps our deeds are not. This is the belief that the old us does not need to die and become a new creature, but only our garments need to be cleansed. In pride, we see ourselves as eternal creatures who may need to be forgiven and lifted up by Jesus Christ, but who do not need to be essentially changed by him. We do not need that new and pure heart which only he can give to us.

My understanding of the gospel of Jesus Christ is that no mortals are just and righteous enough of themselves to go to the same kingdom as Jesus Christ unless they are remade in the image of Christ, heart and mind, body and soul. For without that pure heart, that charity, we are nothing (Moroni 7:44), and can, of ourselves, do no good thing (John 15:1-5). We must cease to exist as the old selfish persons we were and take upon ourselves new hearts and new minds.

Then in the humility of being salvaged from damnation by the Savior’s love, we will never again consider that we are better than anyone else. Then we will know that we stand only in the grace of Christ, and will never be found looking down on anyone, including the worst sinner and Satan and his angels. We will then know our true place and being in the universe, and will say of the sinner, “There, but for the grace of God, go I.”

Pride is the root of our evil, the source of our selfishness, the great barrier to our salvation. It is the pride of our hearts from which we need to be saved more than from anything else. Once we are saved from that, then all good things can be added to us. Then we will see as we are seen, know as we are known, and we will be familiar and free with our substance, treating all men as brothers. Then indeed we will have heaven on earth” (The Book of Mormon: Jacob Through Words of Mormon, To Learn with Joy, Religious Studies Center, BYU, 231-33).

“to clothe the naked” This might apply to those without clothing to cover their bodies or perhaps also to those who might be naked emotionally such as the sick or the bereaved.

“to liberate the captive” There many “jailors” in the world including ignorance, undue or unrighteous dominion, sin, and drugs, to name a few.

20 And now, my brethren, I have spoken unto you concerning pride; and those of you which have afflicted your neighbor, and persecuted him because ye were proud in your hearts, of the things which God hath given you, what say ye of it?

verse 20 “those of you which have afflicted your neighbor, and persecuted him because ye were proud in your hearts” Again, Nephi emphasizes that pride is essentially competitive in nature. The proud man seeks to better himself at the expense of his neighbor, thus injuring his neighbor.

“what say ye of it?” Jacob asks for the people to judge themselves—to either exonerate or condemn themselves out of their own mouths. They may confess their sins and forsake them or they may murmur their rebellious position and persist in evil.

21 Do ye not suppose that such things are abominable unto him who created all flesh? And the one being is as precious in his sight as the other. And all flesh is of the dust; and for the selfsame end hath he created them, that they should keep his commandments and glorify him forever.

verse 21 “all flesh is of the dust” All men are equally subject to the corrupting influences of mortality and to the vicissitudes of life. Also, no man has claim on superior origins. We all share the same heavenly father.

22 And now I make an end of speaking unto you concerning this pride. And were it not that I must speak unto you concerning a grosser crime, my heart would rejoice exceedingly because of you.

verse 22 Here Jacob shifts his attention from the sin of pride to the sin of immorality. Is there a relationship between the two? Indeed so—an intimate one, in fact. The inappropriate seeking after the lusts of the flesh is an important sub-topic of pride.

23 But the word of God burdens me because of your grosser crimes. For behold, thus saith the Lord: This people begin to wax in iniquity; they understand not the scriptures, for they seek to excuse themselves in committing whoredoms, because of the things which were written concerning David, and Solomon his son.

verse 23 “whoredoms” This word is found twenty-seven times in the Book of Mormon text. It is the general Book of Mormon term for unchastity in all of its forms. Here it likely refers to adultery and fornication. These are the “grosser crimes” spoken of in this verse and in the previous verse.

Apparently, some of the Nephites who were guilty of sexual sin in Jacob’s day were using the scriptural account of David and Solomon found in the plates of brass to excuse their lascivious behavior. By what logic, though certainly it is specious logic, were they doing this? Doubtless they were saying, “David and Solomon had multiple wives and concubines, why shouldn’t we?” The truth about David and Solomon is that they did practice plural marriage, and their wives were given to them by the Lord. However, both took wives beyond those sanctioned by the Lord. In doing so, they were guilty of being unchaste.

24 Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord.

verse 24 The term “concubine” may refer to one of two things. At times, she is simply a woman kept for lewd purposes. More commonly a concubine is a lawful wife of a lower social standing than her husband’s other wives. Usually they were captive slaves or foreigners who had legitimacy but not full honor. Sarah’s handmaid Hagar, the plural wife of Abraham, would be an example of the latter. We know that Abraham’s taking Hagar the concubine to wife was approved by the Lord since Abraham did only that which he was commanded (D&C 132:37). The children of concubines enjoyed no rights of inheritance.

Concubinage reflected the realities of the ancient world. It was a lesser law for a lesser time. In viewing those times, the issue is not what was ideally right or wrong, fair or unfair, but what was workable. If concubinage was a relative evil, it was the lesser of evils; better a concubine than a woman alone, or a harlot. That the Lord justified his servants in having concubines, and he did, is no proof that he viewed the practice as more than a necessary, albeit unfortunate aspect of an imperfect order of things (Rodney Turner, The Book of Mormon: Jacob Through Words of Mormon, To Learn With Joy, 280-81).

“which thing was abominable before me” What is antecedent here of the phrase “which thing”? What exactly is the Lord condemning here? Is it the practice of plural marriage? We know that it is not the practice of plural marriage. From time to time in the past God has called upon his people to enter into the practice of plural marriage. Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Moses were examples of righteous men who were commanded by the Lord to take more than one wife (D&C 132:37-39). What is it, then, that is being denounced as being “abominable” before the Lord? Surely it is the unauthorized marriages entered into by both David and Solomon. We have already considered the matter of David and Bathsheba in the commentary for Jacob 1:15 (see also 2 Samuel 11). Solomon's marriage to "strange women" who "turned away his heart after other Gods" was displeasing to the Lord and certainly unauthorized (1 Kings 11).

25 Wherefore, thus saith the Lord, I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem, by the power of mine arm, that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph.

verse 25 "thus saith the Lord" Beginning in this verse and extending through verse 33, we are apparently reading a direct quote from the Lord. Where might Jacob have obtained this quote? It is possible that it was received as a revelation directly to him. There is some evidence, however, to suggest that Jacob may have been quoting from a revelation received by his father Lehi and recorded on the record of Lehi. In the following chapter, Jacob will observe that the Lamanites "have not forgotten the commandment of the Lord, which was given unto our father—that they should have save it were one wife, and concubines they should have none" (Jacob 3:5; see also Jacob 2:34).

"I have led this people forth . . . that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph" The Lord desires that this people remain free from sexual sin.

26 Wherefore, I the Lord God will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old.

verse 26 What action or characteristic of "them of old" is so displeasing to the Lord? Is it their practice of the principle of plural marriage? No. Rather it is the tendency toward sexual immorality found among them.

27 Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none;

verse 27 It was the Lord's intent that the principle of plural marriage not be practiced among the Book of Mormon peoples. Why was this so? We can only speculate. Perhaps it was because of the historical tendency for the principle to be abused. Also, the practical basis for polygamous marriages did not exist among the Book of Mormon peoples. They did not practice slavery, nor did they take female captives and marry some of them as had their Israelite ancestors (Numbers 31:9; Deuteronomy 21:11). Actually, at one point in time the same command was given to the Latter-day Saints in this dispensation: One man shall have one wife and one woman shall have one husband unless otherwise commanded (D&C 49:16). It is likely that some of the Nephites of Jacob's day were trying to justify forbidden practices by appealing to the scriptural precedents wherein the Lord had previously authorized the taking of plural wives and concubines. It has always been that the Lord's people are bound by the commandments given them through the prophet of their own day, not those of an earlier time.

“hearken to the word of the Lord” In his book, Prophecy in Early Christianity and the Ancient Mediterranean World, biblical scholar David E. Aune sets forth the various formulaic expressions that characterize prophetic speech in the Old Testament (see Donald W. Parry, “Thus Saith the Lord: Prophetic Language in Samuel’s Speech,” JBMS 1/1 [1992]:181-83). These expressions serve to formally introduce vital, sacred utterances and to announce that the Lord is the source behind them. The Book of Mormon prophets used the same formulas in their prophetic discourse. This particular expression, “hearken to [hear] the word of the Lord,” is called the proclamation formula and is an emphatic summons to hear God’s word (e.g., 1 Kings 22:19; Amos 7:16; Isaiah 49:1). Other instances of use in the Book of Mormon include 3 Nephi 30:1 and Helaman 13:21.

28 For I, the Lord God, delight in the chastity of women. And whoredoms are an abomination before me; thus saith the Lord of Hosts.

verse 28 “whoredoms are an abomination before me” Here the Lord is not equating the principle of plural marriage with “whoredoms,” nor is he declaring that all previous plural marriages have been an “abomination” in his sight. He is denouncing the abuse of the principle, not the principle itself.

As an interesting aside, some have pointed to Jacob 2 as evidence that there may have been a major city populated with non-Nephites near the city of Nephi. Where, for example, did these Nephites get all these plural wives and concubines? The Nephites hadn’t been in the Americas long enough to have a surplus of women who were of marriageable age. Nephite men were committing whoredoms, and Jacob chastised them. Just where did all these women come from? Such a major city may have been populated before Nephi and his followers ever traveled inland. Or, it has also been speculated that some Lamanites may have later joined forces with the Nephite inhabitants of the city of Nephi, and that this city became a major Lamanite (as well as Nephite) population center. Thus, there could have been a Nephite city of Nephi (later called the city of Lehi-Nephi) and a Lamanite city of Nephi. Perhaps the Lamanite city of Nephi was even the major Lamanite population center in the land.

29 Wherefore, this people shall keep my commandments, saith the Lord of Hosts, or cursed be the land for their sakes.

verse 29 Here again is one of the tenets of the promised land concept. If the inhabitants of the promised land abide the commandments, they will prosper. If they do not, they will be swept off the land. This principle will be aptly summarized by Moroni centuries later: “And now, we can behold the decrees of God concerning this land, that it is a land of promise; and whatsoever nation shall possess it shall serve God or they shall be swept off when the fulness of his wrath shall come upon them. And the fulness of his wrath cometh upon them when they are ripened in iniquity” (Ether 2:9). The Lord’s warning in this case particularly applies to the people’s remaining free of sexual sin.

30 For if I will, saith the Lord of Hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people; otherwise they shall hearken unto these things.

verse 30 The phrase “raise up seed unto me” refers to the Lord’s command, given from time to time, to practice the principle of plural marriage. There is yet another implication contained in this phrase. It is that the practice of plural marriage may result in more offspring if all of the women in a population are allowed to marry and bear children. The Lord says, If I decide that my people should practice plural marriage, then I will so command them. Otherwise they should hearken unto the commandments given in previous verses to take only one wife. It is obvious from this verse that Jacob knew the restriction placed upon the Nephites was neither universal nor absolute.

This verse teaches an important principle of marriage throughout the history of the world. Monogamy is the rule, and polygamy is the exception. Unless God commands otherwise, a man should have but one wife. The Nephites were also aware from the scriptural accounts of the Old Testament prophets that God occasionally called upon his people to practice plural marriage, and thus “raise up seed unto” him. In this dispensation, Joseph Smith said, “I have constantly said no man shall have but one wife at a time, unless the Lord directs otherwise” (TPJS, 324). It is clear that at one time in this final dispensation the Lord did direct otherwise. As Latter-day Saint researcher Brian Hales commented, “The Nephite prophet Jacob reiterates a commandment given to his father Lehi establishing monogamy as the rule and polygamy as only a divinely commanded exception” (Brian C. Hales, Joseph Smith’s Polygamy: History and Theology, 3 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2013, 3:193).

Early Nephite polygyny may be better understood by situating it in a pre-Columbian Mesoamerican context. Brant A. Gardner, who did graduate work in Mesoamerican ethnohistory, noted that in the ancient Maya’s patriarchal society—as in many civilizations—a higher social and economic status could be signified by a man’s material possession or the number of his wives (and often both). Brother Gardner wrote: “The Mesoamerican picture of developing social distinctions is precisely the type of threat that the early Nephite community is facing [at this time]. There is pressure for social hierarchies and that pressure is related to multiple wives” and the accumulation of wealth through trade and diplomatic relations. Gardner also conjectured that “Nephite polygyny involved elite men’s arranging diplomatic marriages to assure commercial or political alliances,” a practice known from ancient Mesoamerica and ancient Israel (Brant Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 2:498; Traditions of

That Jacob speaks ill of these biblical polygamists but not righteous men such as Abraham and Jacob, who also married multiple wives (Genesis 16:1–3; 29–30), would seem to indicate that the “whoredom” that Jacob condemned wasn’t plural marriage itself, but rather women being exploited for social and material benefit in relationships unapproved by God.

Further, biblical scholar Michael Coogan has written, “Polygyny [in the ancient world] had a payoff: it increased the number of offspring, who were valuable in their own right as sources of labor. It also was a status symbol, showing that a man or his family had the assets to come up with bride-prices for and to support several wives” (See the commentary on biblical polygamy by Michael D. Coogan, God and Sex: What the Bible Really Says, New York, N. Y.: Twelve, 2010, 79). Jacob did not authorize this among the Nephites, and gave prophetic guidance to the men of his community on how to overcome these abusive practices.

31 For behold, I, the Lord, have seen the sorrow, and heard the mourning of the daughters of my people in the land of Jerusalem, yea, and in all the lands of my people, because of the wickedness and abominations of their husbands.

verse 31 There ought to be a spirit of chastity in every marriage. This spirit of chastity concerns more than just sexual matters. It implies a husband’s commitment to the physical and emotional well-being of his wife. When a husband renders the wife a mere object by any implication of his own, then the spirit of chastity departs.

32 And I will not suffer, saith the Lord of Hosts, that the cries of the fair daughters of this people, which I have led out of the land of Jerusalem, shall come up unto me against the men of my people, saith the Lord of Hosts.

33 For they shall not lead away captive the daughters of my people because of their tenderness, save I shall visit them with a sore curse, even unto destruction; for they shall not commit whoredoms, like unto them of old, saith the Lord of Hosts.

verses 32-33 “I will not suffer” means I will not allow. I will not permit. I will forbid or hinder. The Lord warns that he will not tolerate rampant sexual sin among the Book of Mormon peoples. If it should occur, he will respond by cursing and destroying them.

verse 33 “They” are the wicked husbands whose wives are susceptible to lives of tyranny and captivity, because of the wives’ “tenderness” and submissiveness, should their husbands prove unfaithful and unrepentant. Note that the Lord’s emphasis here is chastity on the part of the husband and not the wife. Perhaps in that day, moral sin among women was not as common as it is today.

34 And now behold, my brethren, ye know that these commandments were given to our father, Lehi; wherefore, ye have known them before; and ye have come unto great condemnation; for ye have done these things which ye ought not to have done.

verse 34 Here is another reference to a revelation and commandment given by the Lord to Lehi and quoted by Jacob in verses 25 through 33 of this chapter. Jacob accuses his fellow Nephites of already having violated this commandment with which they were all familiar—to “have save it were one wife, and concubines they should have none, and there should not be whoredoms committed among them” (Jacob 3:5). As mentioned above, it is likely that, while Jacob’s teachings on marriage did come from the Lord, they were probably received by father Lehi. Jacob probably obtained them from the record of Lehi and simply quoted them from that record (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:17).

35 Behold, ye have done greater iniquities than the Lamanites, our brethren. Ye have broken the hearts of your tender wives, and lost the confidence of your children, because of your bad examples before them; and the sobbings of their hearts ascend up to God against you. And because of the strictness of the word of God, which cometh down against you, many hearts died, pierced with deep wounds.

verse 35 “many hearts died, pierced with deep wounds” As the judgments of God are meted out to those sinners who warrant them, their loved ones become two-fold losers. First these loved ones are deeply hurt by the infidelity and disloyalty of the sinner. Their hearts are further pierced as they helplessly watch the Lord’s promised cursings and destructions which are wrought upon the sinner according to “the strictness of the word of God.” When hearts are pierced and die, love may actually depart from relationships.

1 But behold, I, Jacob, would speak unto you that are pure in heart. Look unto God with firmness of mind, and pray unto him with exceeding faith, and he will console you in your afflictions, and he will plead your cause, and send down justice upon those who seek your destruction.

verse 1 Jacob is addressing those whose “hearts [have] died” (Jacob 2:35)—those who have been hurt by a loved one’s sexual sin.

“Firmness of mind” implies consistency, patience, and steadfastness.

“he will console you in your afflictions” No one of us will escape serious afflictions and vicissitudes in mortality. These may come in the form of serious illness, bereavement, divorce, problems in our relationships with others, and a host of other problems. In these times, it is not justice we seek, rather we long for peace, comfort, and hope. How blessed we are to have access to the Comforter who can, if we seek diligently, infuse quiet peace to our souls.

“he will plead your cause” Take a moment to consider D&C 45:3-5: “Listen to him who is the advocate with the Father, who is pleading your cause before him—saying; Father, behold the sufferings and death of him who did no sin, in whom thou wast well pleased; behold the blood of thy Son which was shed, the blood of him whom thou gavest that thyself might be glorified; wherefore, Father, spare these my brethren that believe on my name, that they may come unto me and have everlasting life.”

Here the Savior is pleading the cause of mortals before the Father. One verse of scripture teaches plainly that the Father has left all judgment to his Son (see John 5:22). It would seem that Jesus’s pleading here is a mark of veneration, deference, and respect. But it is also a manifestation of his matchless love, his grace.

“send down justice” There is nothing whimsical in God’s judgments. He is a God of perfect justice, though his timetable and methods may differ from our intuitive preconceptions.

2 O all ye that are pure in heart, lift up your heads and receive the pleasing word of God, and feast upon his love; for ye may, if your minds are firm, forever.

verse 2 The idea of “the pleasing word of God” has been discussed previously. See the commentary for Jacob 2:8. This concept likely includes the doctrines of salvation, the exciting mysteries of the kingdom, and the lofty promises of the life that is yet to come.

“for ye may . . . forever” Apparently, the intent of this counsel to the pure in heart is that if they persist in purity they may feast upon God’s love forever in his celestial presence.

verses 3-9 It is probably a mistake to think of the Lamanites as a benighted, hardened, indolent, and by nature a ferocious people. Certainly, many among them were basically good, loving, gentle, and morally upright. Why then do we tend to form a contrary opinion about them as we read the Book of Mormon? Why do we intuitively regard them as an evil and loathsome people who are almost without redeeming qualities? What are the characteristics of this people that cause us to think so negatively about them?

To understand the answer to these questions, it is vital to understand the so-called “founding myth” of the Lamanites. The Lamanites had deeply rooted in their culture a tradition of hatred of the Nephites. This profound legacy of hatred began at the time of Laman, Lemuel, Lehi, and Nephi, and was passed along from father to son.

From the Lamanites’ point of view, this basic founding myth probably was told something like this: Our Father Lehi and our younger brother Nephi stole from us everything we ever wanted and deserved. We wanted to remain at home in Jerusalem, among our friends, and enjoy our cherished possessions. We didn’t want to leave and embark on the rather ill-defined mission that our father Lehi had decided upon. Lehi and Nephi were oppressive and uncaring. They would not listen to us. They made us go with them. They virtually robbed us of our homes, and told us lies about some far away promised land. They would not allow us to decide for ourselves. They unjustly robbed us of the right to govern ourselves. When we arrived at the great ocean, they commanded us to help build a boat. We did not want to build a boat because we were frightened to try to cross the great water on a small boat. Again, we were forced, not only to help with the building but also to embark on this seemingly hopeless journey. Once on the boat, we tried to forget our fears by organizing a little lighthearted revelry. Nephi thought that this would offend the Lord and would not allow it! Again, he tried to rule over us. We believed that Nephi was leading us to some wilderness where he might dominate us and subject us to his will and pleasure. Just as Nephi tried to take away our freedoms and govern us against our will, so will all Nephites do the same to us. The only way we can stop them from doing this is to use force against them—to smite and kill them. It is our only hope for happiness!

This Lamanite tradition of hatred for the Nephites is often referred to in the Book of Mormon as the “tradition of their fathers” or “the iniquity of their fathers.” It dominated the relations between the two peoples throughout the Book of Mormon story. Lamanite children were doubtless indoctrinated with it from an early uncritical age. It was firmly imbedded in their very bones, and it dominated their feelings and thoughts about the Nephite peoples. It virtually represented the national identity of the Lamanites, and with it the Lamanite leaders could stir their people up to anger (see Alma 43:7). It fueled the nearly continuous wars the Lamanites made against the Nephites. As the Nephites experienced the expression of this tradition of hatred, they generally came to perceive the Lamanites as ferocious and hard. The Lamanites acted as if they felt nothing but hatred for the Nephites.

For an interesting exposition of this tradition of hatred uttered by a Lamanite king, read the letter written to Captain Moroni by Ammoron in 63 BC (Alma 54:15-24). Indeed, understanding the genesis of this heritage of hatred may even give us a measure of sympathy and understanding for the Lamanite people.

It is important to keep in mind that the Book of Mormon was written by Nephite authors who perceived the Lamanites generally as hateful, vicious, and dangerous. It is natural that the reader will be persuaded to believe the authors' biases. Thus, most of us who read the Book of Mormon will also come to regard the Lamanites as wicked and violent. In fairness, we ought to try to keep in mind the authors' prejudices.

3 But, wo, wo, unto you that are not pure in heart, that are filthy this day before God; for except ye repent the land is cursed for your sakes; and the Lamanites, which are not filthy like unto you, nevertheless they are cursed with a sore cursing, shall scourge you even unto destruction.

verse 3 “they . . . shall scourge you even unto destruction” This prophecy was to find fulfillment just after 210 BC. In that year Mosiah will lead a righteous remnant of Nephites out of the land of Nephi northward to the land of Zarahemla (see Omni 1:12-13). Presumably this migration preceded captivity or destruction by the Lamanites of the less righteous Nephites who remained behind. Thus, we can see and understand that this fall of the first Nephite civilization occurred at least in part because of pride and immorality.

“they are cursed with a sore cursing” It is necessary to remind ourselves repeatedly that the sore cursing placed upon the Lamanites was not their dark skin. Rather, it was the fact that they were denied the gospel and the priesthood. The dark skin was not evil or wicked or even a negative characteristic except that it served as a (rather arbitrary) marker for those upon whom the curse was placed.

4 And the time speedily cometh, that except ye repent they shall possess the land of your inheritance, and the Lord God will lead away the righteous out from among you.

verse 4 “will lead away the righteous out from among you” See the commentary on the previous verse for the fulfillment of this prophecy. The land of Nephi, where the Nephites now live, will become the center of the Lamanite culture and remain so throughout the Book of Mormon following the “expulsion” of the Nephites in 210 BC.

5 Behold, the Lamanites your brethren, whom ye hate because of their filthiness and the cursing which hath come upon their skins, are more righteous than you;

for they have not forgotten the commandment of the Lord, which was given unto our father—that they should have save it were one wife, and concubines they should have none, and there should not be whoredoms committed among them.

verse 5 “the commandment of the Lord, which was given unto our father”

The Lord had given a commandment to father Lehi prohibiting the practice of plural marriage (Jacob 2:27, 34). It is interesting to note that the printer’s manuscript of this verse had the word “father” as it is here—in the singular. However, all subsequent editions, until this present edition, have mistakenly rendered this word in the plural—“fathers.” This latter mistaken use suggested to some that Jacob attributed a restriction on plural marriage to earlier Israelite fathers, whereas historical evidence of any such legal restriction in Hebrew tradition is lacking (Reexploring the Book of Mormon, edited by John W. Welch, Deseret Book Company and FARMS, 79).

Jacob’s commendation of the Lamanites is in sharp contrast to the whoredoms he accuses the Nephites of committing (Jacob 2:23). Spiritually benighted though they were, the early Lamanites had one important, redeeming virtue: fidelity in marriage. It is, of course, unlikely that all of the Lamanites observed the law of chastity, but it appears that sexual immorality was not one of their dominant sins. It is food for thought that even though the Nephites had the gospel, the church, and prophets to guide them, in this matter they were considered less righteous than the Lamanites who had none of these advantages.

6 And now, this commandment they observe to keep; wherefore, because of this observance, in keeping this commandment, the Lord God will not destroy them, but will be merciful unto them; and one day they shall become a blessed people.

7 Behold, their husbands love their wives, and their wives love their husbands; and their husbands and their wives love their children; and their unbelief and their hatred towards you is because of the iniquity of their fathers; wherefore, how much better are you than they, in the sight of your great Creator?

verses 6-7 Other Book of Mormon prophets will yet prophesy concerning the ultimate fate of the Lamanite people (Alma 9:16-17; Helaman 7:24; 15:11- 12). The essence of these prophecies is that the Lamanites are not fully to blame for their state of spiritual ignorance. The “traditions of their fathers” had played a major role in preventing their access to the Gospel of Jesus Christ—see the commentary for verses 3-9 of this chapter. Accordingly, the Lord will be merciful to them (see also D&C 68:25; 93:39).

8 O my brethren, I fear that unless ye shall repent of your sins that their skins will be whiter than yours, when ye shall be brought with them before the throne of God.

verse 8 Again, the color of the skin was designated as an arbitrary marker of spiritual status among the Book of Mormon peoples. The statement here that the skin of the Lamanites will be “whiter than yours” is a metaphor implying that the Lamanites will be more righteous than the Nephites.

9 Wherefore, a commandment I give unto you, which is the word of God, that ye revile no more against them because of the darkness of their skins; neither shall ye revile against them because of their filthiness; but ye shall remember your own filthiness, and remember that their filthiness came because of their fathers.

verse 9 What does it mean to “revile” against another person? It may mean to abuse, both physically and verbally, or to despise. Jesus said: “And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother’s eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how wilt thou say to thy brother: Let me pull the mote out of thine eye—and behold, a beam is in thine own eye?” (see Matthew 7:1-5).

10 Wherefore, ye shall remember your children, how that ye have grieved their hearts because of the example that ye have set before them; and also, remember that ye may, because of your filthiness, bring your children unto destruction, and their sins be heaped upon your heads at the last day.

verse 10 Can parents really “bring [their] children unto destruction”? Jacob has just explained how the Lamanites are “cursed with a sore cursing”—they have lost the priesthood because of decisions and actions of their fathers, Laman and Lemuel. They have had to live in relative spiritual ignorance. Nevertheless, since the subsequent generations of Lamanites were not responsible for this sore cursing, they will be judged more leniently. If they are true to the limited light they do receive, then they shall receive their eternal reward. Every man is judged according to the circumstances he encounters and the light he receives. It would be unfair to judge a man on any other basis.

In this verse, Jacob reminds the unrighteous Nephites of the profound effects their actions may have upon their children. While it is true that a child will not be punished for the sins of his parents, it is also true that a parent’s negative example may lead a child away from eternal things and toward worldly things. A child is inclined to look to his parents as an example. If that child finds a pattern of rebellion and disobedience, then he may be inclined toward the same pattern in his life. Such a child will be judged by the merciful and all-knowing Lord, and the circumstances of each child will certainly be a factor in the Lord’s judgment. Some will, of course, still be judged unworthy of a celestial inheritance. A parent who sets a poor example may bear the responsibility for some his child’s sins, since a truly righteous parental example might have a redemptive spiritual effect on a child inclined to seek after things of the world.

11 O my brethren, hearken unto my words; arouse the faculties of your souls; shake yourselves that ye may awake from the slumber of death; and loose yourselves from the pains of hell that ye may not become angels to the devil, to be cast into that lake of fire and brimstone which is the second death.

verse 11 “arouse the faculties of your souls, shake yourselves that ye may awake from the slumber of death” Jacob attempts to awaken his brethren from their spiritual apathy. Nephi warned that Satan will win over some by lulling them into a sense of apathy, a “slumber of death”: “And others will he pacify, and lull them away into carnal security, that they will say: All is well in Zion; yea, Zion prospereth, all is well—and thus the devil cheateth their souls, and leadeth them away carefully down to hell” (2 Nephi 28:20-22).

“loose yourselves from the pains of hell that ye may not become angels to the devil” Again, here is a reminder that the doctrine of the post-mortal existence taught in the Book of Mormon is a simplified version that includes only eternal life with God or eternal life with Satan as a son of perdition. There is no mention of degrees of salvation.

“lake of fire and brimstone” This expression, of course, does not describe the literal fate of anyone. Rather, it is a figurative or symbolic expression that is discussed more fully in the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:19.

“second death” This term is used several times in the Book of Mormon. Here its meaning is clear—it refers to that place of eternal damnation where Satan and his sons live, so-called outer darkness (see also Alma 12:16,32; 13:30; and Helaman 14:18-19). More commonly, however, the term “second death” is used to refer to the spiritual death or that separation from God which may be suffered by mortals due to their sins (see the commentary for Alma 12:16).

12 And now I, Jacob, spake many more things unto the people of Nephi, warning them against fornication and lasciviousness, and every kind of sin, telling them the awful consequences of them.

verse 12 “warning them against fornication and lasciviousness” Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines lasciviousness as, “Looseness; irregular indulgence of animal desires; wantonness; lustfulness.”

13 And a hundredth part of the proceedings of this people, which now began to be numerous, cannot be written upon these plates; but many of their proceedings are written upon the larger plates, and their wars, and their contentions, and the reigns of their kings.

verse 13 “a hundredth part of the proceedings of this people . . . cannot be written upon these plates” It is possible that Jacob gets into trouble with his double negative, and that his meaning is the opposite of what he intends to say. That would be so if his intended meaning is that only a hundredth part of the proceedings can be written on these plates. Perhaps, however, he intends to say that there is not room on these plates for even a hundreth part of the proceedings of this people.

“These plates” are the small plates of Nephi. The “larger plates” are the large plates of Nephi. See the supplemental article, Those Confusing Book of Mormon Plates.

14 These plates are called the plates of Jacob, and they were made by the hand of Nephi. And I make an end of speaking these words.

verse 14 It is interesting to note that at the time of Jacob, Jacob renamed the small plates of Nephi after himself. Perhaps the same was true of the other prophet engravers of the small plates of Nephi. When Enos had possession of the small plates of Nephi and was writing upon them, perhaps they were called the plates of Enos.

This detail may help explain an apparent discrepancy that people have wondered about in the accounts of the lost 116 pages. As early as the summer of 1828, the Lord called the lost portion “an abridgment of the account of Nephi” (D&C 10:44). The preface to the 1830 edition, however, referred to this portion as the “an account abridged from the plates of Lehi” (Joseph Smith, preface, The Book of Mormon: An Account Written by the Hand of Mormon, Upon Plates Taken from the Plates of Nephi, Palmyra, NY: E. B. Grandin, 1830).

The Book of Mormon text never mentions Lehi’s making any plates. S. Kent Brown, former professor of ancient scripture at BYU, argued that Lehi’s record was a diary-like account kept on perishable materials (S. Kent Brown, “Nephi’s Use of Lehi’s Record,” in Rediscovering the Book of Mormon: Insights You May Have Missed Before, ed. John L. Sorenson and Melvin J. Thorne, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1991, 4–5; also see John L. Sorenson, “Mormon’s Sources,” Journal of Book of Mormon and Other Restoration Scripture 20, no. 2, 2011: 5). Nephi says that he “did engraven the record of [his] father” onto his own plates (1 Nephi 19:1). This portion of the large plates could reasonably be called both “the account of Nephi” (because Nephi made the plates and diligently engraved them) and also “the plates of Lehi” (because Lehi was the ultimate author of that part of the underlying record).

David E. Sloan proposed that Jacob 3:14 should be understood as providing textual evidence for this practice: “Although Nephi made the small plates of Nephi, the portion of the small plates that contained the record of Jacob was referred to as the “plates of Jacob.” In the same way, although Nephi made the large plates of Nephi and wrote on them, the portion of the large plates upon which he copied the record of Lehi was referred to as the “plates of Lehi.” Therefore, Mormon’s abridgment of Lehi’s record found on the large plates could accurately be described as “an account abridged from the plates of Lehi, by the hand of Mormon” (David E. Sloan, “Notes and Communications—The Book of Lehi and the Plates of Lehi,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 6, no. 2, 1997: 270–271).

This verse marks the end of the first section of the book of Jacob. An outline of the book is provided in the introductory commentary.

Scripture Mastery

Jacob 4:4 All the holy prophets knew of Christ.

Jacob 4:10 Seek not to counsel the Lord, but to take counsel from his hand.

Jacob 4:13 The Spirit speaketh of things as they really are, and of things as they really will be.

Jacob 4 is a rich doctrinal chapter. It contains doctrines that were revolutionary at the time of the publication of the Book of Mormon. These include: (1) the fact that all true prophets back to the time of Adam knew of and prophesied of the birth of Christ; (2) the doctrine that the redemptive effects of Christ's atonement extend back to the days of Adam; (3) the announcement that the prophets worshiped God the Father in the name of Jesus Christ; (4) the important concept that the law of Moses including its rituals were symbolic of Jesus Christ and his atoning sacrifice, just as was the story of Abraham's offering of Isaac as a sacrifice; (5) a warning to religious zealots not to look beyond the mark as did the Jews at the time of Christ; and (6) the concept that the Jews will one day acknowledge Christ as the Messiah.

verses 1-3 A careful study of these verses leads to an interesting conclusion. As we read through the Book of Mormon we may intuitively conclude that what a prophet engraved upon the plates was all the writing he did. These verses suggest that Jacob, and likely all of the other Book of Mormon prophets, also wrote on other materials, probably leather or paper. We might logically conclude that what a prophet finally engraved, with "difficulty," upon the plates was a well-edited final version of his writings.

1 Now behold, it came to pass that I, Jacob, having ministered much unto my people in word, (and I cannot write but a little of my words, because of the difficulty of engraving our words upon plates) and we know that the things which we write upon plates must remain;

verse 1 "we know that the things which we write upon plates must remain"
Jacob's use of "we" here and in the verses which follow refers to himself and his brother Nephi. Note his reference to himself and his brother in the previous verse: "These plates are called the plates of Jacob, and they were made by the hand of Nephi." See also verse 4 of this chapter.

2 But whatsoever things we write upon anything save it be upon plates must perish and vanish away; but we can write a few words upon plates, which will give our children, and also our beloved brethren, a small degree of knowledge concerning us, or concerning their fathers—

3 Now in this thing we do rejoice; and we labor diligently to engraven these words upon plates, hoping that our beloved brethren and our children will receive them with thankful hearts, and look upon them that they may learn with joy and not with sorrow, neither with contempt, concerning their first parents.

verse 3 “that they may learn with joy and not with sorrow, neither with contempt, concerning their first parents” Part of the magic of delving into our own family histories is to learn that our ancestors were much like we are today. They were real people who had concerns and feelings of hope and fear similar to our own. Without effort on our part to learn of them we may regard them with little feeling. They may seem to be parents or ancestors who didn’t know us and had little regard for us. Once we do come to know them, however, we realize they were concerned for us and certainly will love us as family once we are reunited with them.

“concerning their first parents” Some may interpret this phrase as a reference to Adam and Eve. However, the context suggests that Jacob is referring to Lehi and Ishmael and their families who migrated to the New World.

4 For, for this intent have we written these things, that they may know that we knew of Christ, and we had a hope of his glory many hundred years before his coming; and not only we ourselves had a hope of his glory, but also all the holy prophets which were before us.

verse 4 “for this intent have we written these things, that they may know that we knew of Christ” Jacob and his brother Nephi have written the materials on the small plates so their “beloved brethren and [their] children” (their descendants) will know that they knew of Christ.

Make certain that you do not take this verse for granted! It is almost a revolutionary verse, yet it has become a fundamental gospel principle. Generally speaking, biblical scholars today do not believe that it was possible for an Old Testament prophet to receive any specific revealed information about an event which was to occur hundreds of years in the future. The word Christ is not even mentioned in modern translations of the Old Testament. Secular scholars feel that the prophets and people of the Old Testament did not even know of Christ, and certainly the Old Testament in its present form is not clear on this topic. This and other verses in the Book of Mormon, however, teach that the prophets did know—“all the holy prophets” knew of Jesus Christ. The Old Testament prophets had revealed to them specific information about the coming of the Savior centuries hence, and they taught these glorious truths to their people (see also Moses 6:51-68; 7:55; 8:24; JST, Genesis 15:11-12; Jacob 7:11; Mosiah 13:33; 3 Nephi 20:24; Helaman 8:17-19; John 8:56; Acts 3:21; 10:43).

For a summary of the Book of Mormon passages that contain specific prophetic information about the future birth, life, ministry, and crucifixion of the Savior see the commentary for Mosiah 15:5-7.

Keep in mind that when Jesus Christ walked the earth and taught the gospel, and when Peter and Paul went out preaching, they used the scriptures which at that time consisted of only the Old Testament. They obviously had no New Testament from which to teach. The Apostle John quotes Jesus as saying, relative to the scriptures of his day, “They are they which testify of me” (John 5:39). Jesus, in teaching the disciples on the road to Emmaus following his resurrection, said to them, “Then he said unto them, O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken: Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory? And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself” (Luke 24:25-27). The version of the Old Testament to which we have access today is not the same as they used. Many “plain and precious things” have been removed from our present-day Bible.

“a hope of his glory” This phrase suggests more than the fact of the prophets’ knowing beforehand of his coming into mortality. It suggests that the prophets had a hope of partaking of the same glory as Christ—that is, they had a hope of exaltation (see also Moroni 9:25). This same idea will be expressed somewhat differently in verse 11 of this chapter: “a good hope of glory in him.” See also the commentary for Jacob 4:6.

5 Behold, they believed in Christ and worshiped the Father in his name, and also we worship the Father in his name. And for this intent we keep the law of Moses, it pointing our souls to him; and for this cause it is sanctified unto us for righteousness, even as it was accounted unto Abraham in the wilderness to be obedient unto the commands of God in offering up his son Isaac, which is a similitude of God and his Only Begotten Son.

verse 5 Note how clearly this verse differentiates between God the Father and God the Son. Some have suggested that the Book of Mormon is trinitarian in nature—that it teaches of only one God. These critics have not carefully read the Book of Mormon text.

“they believed in Christ and worshiped the Father in his name” The “they” in this phrase refers back to the phrase “all the holy prophets” in verse 4. Just as we today worship the Father in the name of the Son, so did all the ancient prophets. This is the order of heaven (see also Moses 1: 17; 5:8; 8:24).

“it pointing our souls to him” This is a remarkable verse. “It” refers to the law of Moses. Jacob here gives us vital information about the relationship between the law of Moses and Jesus Christ, and also about the story of the Lord’s command for Abraham to sacrifice Isaac in Genesis 22. The purpose of the law of Moses was to point to the coming of Christ (see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 16, The Law of Moses). Genesis 22 tells the story of Abraham's being "tempted" or tested by the Lord when Abraham was commanded to sacrifice his son Isaac. The whole story, we are taught by Jacob, is a similitude or type of God the Father's offering his son Jesus Christ as a sacrifice. Thus, in this story, which we now see as metaphorical, Abraham corresponds to God the Father and Isaac is likened to Jesus Christ.

Let us now look briefly at this story in Genesis 22:1-18 with this new insight: Isaac had a miraculous birth. Recall that God had to intervene since Isaac's mother Sarah was barren. Notice that in these verses in Genesis, Isaac is referred to as Abraham's only son (see verses 2, 12, and 16). We know of course that Isaac wasn't, in actual fact, Abraham's only son since Ishmael had previously been born to Abraham and Hagar. Isaac was, however the only son in the patriarchal or covenant line. Isaac is referred to in verse 2 as the son "whom thou lovest," the beloved son. Notice in verse 8 that "God will provide himself a lamb." The wood to be used in the sacrificial procedure was carried on the backs of both Isaac and Jesus Christ (the patibulum or horizontal cross piece—see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 14, Crucifixion). The location of Isaac's near sacrifice was on one of the hills of the region called Moriah. Jesus was sacrificed on another of the hills in the region of Moriah, the hill Golgotha. Both Isaac and Jesus were in their early thirties when these analogous events occurred. Thus, we should regard this wonderful story in Genesis as a witness of Jesus Christ. The sacrificial rituals of the law of Moses wherein the "unspotted lamb" was sacrificed by the Levite priests is similarly analogous with Christ's own sacrifice (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 11:4). Yet, it is remarkable how few can see and understand this concept which seems so obvious to us.

"for this cause it is sanctified unto us for righteousness" "It" here refers to the law of Moses. In Old Testament times, those who lived in faithful conformity to the law of Moses could be sanctified—brought to a testimony of Jesus Christ—and prepared to receive a celestial reward.

6 Wherefore, we search the prophets, and we have many revelations and the spirit of prophecy; and having all these witnesses we obtain a hope, and our faith becometh unshaken, insomuch that we truly can command in the name of Jesus and the very trees obey us, or the mountains, or the waves of the sea.

verse 6 "we obtain a hope, and our faith becometh unshaken" Jacob seems to intend a unique and rich meaning when he speaks of "obtaining a hope in Christ" (see also the commentary for Jacob 2:19). He seems to intend more than simply possessing hope in a secular sense. He is referring to our ability to obtain the assurance that we have reached a particular spiritual level or special relationship with the Lord. The process by which this special spiritual plateau is reached is mentioned in this verse. It consists of diligently searching the scriptures and of seeking and striving for a witness of the Spirit. For a discussion of the gift of hope, see “Two Little-Appreciated Gifts of the Spirit” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 10, Deliberate Faith and Revealed Faith. See also “The Fruits of Faith” in volume 1, chapter 11, Other Notes on Faith.

“we truly can command in the name of Jesus and the very trees obey us, or the mountains, or the waves of the sea” Those who achieve this lofty level in their spiritual progress will have the power to perform miracles.

Here is a reminder that the plants and the so-called inanimate things of the earth all contain intelligences and spirits and have the right to choose (agency) and the ability to hear, understand, and obey.

7 Nevertheless, the Lord God showeth us our weakness that we may know that it is by his grace, and his great condescensions unto the children of men, that we have power to do these things.

verse 7 It would seem to be the very nature of mortality that during this earthly experience, each of us will be humbled and caused to realize our weakness before God. The Savior will later say to Moroni, “If men come unto me, I will show unto them their weakness. I give unto men weakness that they may be humble” (Ether 12:27).

“it is by his grace, and his great condescensions unto the children of men” The concepts of grace and the condescension of God have been discussed previously. The condescension of God is a sacred and profound concept which we should know and hold dear. It is discussed in the commentary for 1 Nephi 11:16. Grace refers to that love extended to us by the Savior evidenced by his willingness to offer us our exaltation even though we have not merited that exaltation by any act of our own. We are absolutely powerless to save ourselves and are utterly dependent on this grace. To Moroni, the Savior also said, “My grace is sufficient for all men that humble themselves before me; for if they humble themselves before me, and have faith in me, then will I make weak things become strong unto them” (Ether 12:27).

“that we have power to do these things” One tends to see “the very trees obey us, or the mountains, or the waves of the sea” as the antecedent for “these things.” Actually, the exaltation of man is a better antecedent for “these things,” as that which comes by virtue of the Lord’s “grace” and “his great condescensions” is salvation or exaltation.

8 Behold, great and marvelous are the works of the Lord. How unsearchable are the depths of the mysteries of him; and it is impossible that man should find out all his ways. And no man knoweth of his ways save it be revealed unto him; wherefore, brethren, despise not the revelations of God.

verse 8 “mysteries of him” For a discussion of the two definitions of the concept of the “mysteries of God” see the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:1. It should be emphasized that the sophistication of man is miniscule compared to the works and mysteries of God. There are many mysteries or unknowns concerning the laws of God that will remain so—they will remain mysteries—during our mortal experience. Apparently, there are points of doctrine for which we will have to await an explanation until a later stage in our progression. Those worldly sophisticates who consider a faith in God as unsophisticated and naive will certainly appear ridiculous and foolish when the veil is removed, and we are all granted an eternal perspective.

“no man knoweth of his ways save it be revealed unto him” This is a profound truth which is discussed in the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:28. Spiritual truths cannot be learned through the natural senses, rather they may only be learned spirit to spirit, by revelation from the Holy Ghost. It is impossible to be exalted in the celestial kingdom without learning some spiritual truths. One cannot truly know that Jesus is the Christ, for example, except one has this knowledge revealed by the Holy Ghost. Spiritual truths are revealed only to those who strive and seek to obey the commandments of God, whereas secular truths can be learned without regard to moral status. The Apostle Paul taught that it is impossible for the natural man to know spiritual truths: “But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know [them], because they are spiritually discerned” (1 Corinthians 2:14).

There is another important concept that is pertinent here. What does it really mean to “learn” spiritual truths? Does it mean simply to come to a mental comprehension and a willingness to give intellectual assent? For example, when we learn the doctrine of the Godhead, do we merely understand clearly that God the Father and God the Son are separate beings with tangible bodies of flesh and bone and that the Spirit of God is yet a third being with a body of spirit matter? Obviously, the concept of learning spiritual truths is richer than that. When we learn spiritual truths, they are witnessed to our heart by the Spirit of God. A basic change is wrought in us when we receive truths by personal revelation. We become different people—more spiritually refined, indeed, more like God. For us, Jesus Christ is the source of all spiritual truth, and when we learn any spiritual truth, we take upon ourselves an increment of his attributes. We become more like him. When we learn the concept of the Godhead, for example, and when that concept is witnessed to our soul by the Holy Ghost, we don’t just know the physical characteristics and distinctions of those in the Godhead. We also know that, at our spirit birth, we took upon ourselves the very appearance of our Father in heaven. We know we are his literal offspring. We know we have the potential to become like him—to be all that he is and have all that he has.

“despise not the revelations of God” This phrase utilizes an interesting figure of speech that is characteristic of biblical writings called “antenantiosis” (“FARMS Update,” July 1991, number 77). Jacob could have said, “Esteem highly the revelations of God.” Instead he made the statement as a negated opposite. This is antenantiosis.

In this figure of speech “an expression is stated in terms of its negated opposite. The result is to [emphasize] the positive to a very high degree.” Here Jacob “is not merely saying not to despise the revelations; he is actually urging the righteous to hold the revelations of God in the highest esteem!” Other examples include the promise, “if ye do this, and endure to the end, ye will in nowise be cast out” (Mormon 9:29). Moroni is actually promising that the faithful who endure will be blessed beyond measure. When Mosiah says, “It is not expedient that such abominations should come upon you” (Mosiah 29:24), he is not merely saying that the people should not commit or allow such abominations, he is forcefully admonishing the people to prevent them. When Amulek warns that “he [the devil] rewardeth you no good thing” (Alma 34:39), he does not mean just the lack of a good reward, but the surety of tremendously evil results—torment, captivity, and damnation. Other Book of Mormon uses of antenantiosis appear in Mosiah 2:9; 19:17; Alma 12:14; 30:21; 34:39; 46:30; 50:27; and 3 Nephi 5:1; 6:18; 7:18.

9 For behold, by the power of his word man came upon the face of the earth, which earth was created by the power of his word. Wherefore, if God being able to speak and the world was, and to speak and man was created, O then, why not able to command the earth, or the workmanship of his hands upon the face of it, according to his will and pleasure?

verse 9 This verse may be summarized by saying, “When the very Creator of man and of earth speaks, we are well-advised to listen.”

Did Jacob believe that the creator of the earth was the Father or the Son? It is clear that the pronoun “his” in the expression “his word” refers to “the Lord” in the previous verse. We will learn in verses 10 and 11 below that “the Lord” is the Father. Thus, it would appear that “the Lord” is described as being the creator of the earth. Today we understand that the creator of the earth and the Lord God of the Old Testament were both Jesus Christ himself. Did the prophet Jacob clearly understand this? It is clear that Jacob understood the godhood and the relationship between the Father and the Son as evidenced by verse 5 of this chapter. Yet this verse leads us to believe that in Jacob’s mind “the Lord” or the Father was the Creator.

10 Wherefore, brethren, seek not to counsel the Lord, but to take counsel from his hand. For behold, ye yourselves know that he counseleth in wisdom, and in justice, and in great mercy, over all his works.

verse 10 A powerful verse, well worth remembering.

11 Wherefore, beloved brethren, be reconciled unto him through the atonement of Christ, his Only Begotten Son, and ye may obtain a resurrection, according to the power of the resurrection which is in Christ, and be presented as the first-fruits of Christ unto God, having faith, and obtained a good hope of glory in him before he manifesteth himself in the flesh.

verse 11 It is fascinating to learn of the very specific doctrines Jacob knew and was able to teach the Nephites concerning the atonement and resurrection even centuries before Christ's mortal ministry.

“be reconciled unto him” For a review of the concept of justification or reconciliation see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 17, Justification and Sanctification. To be reconciled means to be restored to favor. Every man loses favor with God by committing sin. A man is said to be “reconciled to God” or “justified” when all penalties are removed, and he is brought into perfect harmony with God to the point where he can be exalted. The following statement is absolute: No man can be exalted in the celestial kingdom without being reconciled to God.

“the power of the resurrection which is in Christ” Jesus possesses the “power of the resurrection” at least in part because of his ordeal in Gethsemane and on the cross.

“and be presented as the first-fruits of Christ unto God” For a discussion of the concept of first-fruits and its variations, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 2:9. In this instance, the “first-fruits of Christ,” of course, are those who are resurrected with celestial bodies who will inherit that degree of glory. Here, this resurrection is referred to simply as “resurrection.” Today we refer to this resurrection as the “the morning of the first resurrection.” It was a custom in ancient Israel for the head of the family to go into the field before harvest time and mark the best of the fruit crop even before it was ripe. These were the “first fruits.” This portion was then dedicated or set apart to be later offered to the Lord at the temple.

This verse might read a little better if the word “having” were inserted between “and” and “obtained.”

The concept of “a good hope of glory in him” seems to be the same as that of “obtaining a hope in Christ” discussed in the commentary for Jacob 2:19, Jacob 4:4, and Jacob 4:6.

12 And now, beloved, marvel not that I tell you these things; for why not speak of the atonement of Christ, and attain to a perfect knowledge of him, as to attain to the knowledge of a resurrection and the world to come?

verse 12 “why not speak of the atonement of Christ” Here Jacob asks a question which is thought by many to introduce the sweeping prophecy contained in Jacob 5—Zenos's allegory of the tame and wild olive trees. In asking the question, “why not speak,” Jacob seems to be asking, “Why should we not now consider in more detail the atonement of Jesus Christ?” In the allegory in Jacob 5, one of the central themes is the reuniting or the “at-one-ment” of scattered Israel. Here is a vital point regarding the concept of the atonement that we have not discussed previously. The concept of the atonement refers not only to the egregious sacrifice of suffering Christ was required to make in Gethsemane and on the cross, but also to the Savior's ongoing labors to bring his children back into oneness with him and with each other. The word atonement does not derive from Greek or Latin roots, but is pure English. It arose from the attempts of the earliest translators of the English versions of the Bible to find a word that described reconciliation with Christ—literally, at-one-ment. The Savior yearns for this state of oneness with his children (see also the great intercessory prayers in John 17 and in 3 Nephi 19). In an important way, the whole plan of salvation centers in our learning to be one with Christ as he is one with the Father.

“attain to a perfect knowledge of him” Jacob never defines exactly what he means by “a perfect knowledge” of Christ. In the context of this verse, it may well be that a perfect knowledge is acquired by seeing the Savior in person. At the very least, it speaks of a special and intimate relationship with the Savior—a oneness that implies complete conversion. This intimate oneness is available to each of us as sequential and incremental gifts of the Spirit. It results from our diligent and persistent obedience to the Lord's commands. It comes to us, when we demonstrate ourselves worthy, by personal revelation. We may refer to this special and intimate relationship as “a testimony of Jesus Christ.”

Whatever the meaning of this phrase, it is clear in this verse that attaining “a perfect knowledge of him” leads also to one's acquiring a testimony of one's own eventual “resurrection and the world to come”—indeed, the gift of hope.

13 Behold, my brethren, he that prophesieth, let him prophesy to the understanding of men; for the Spirit speaketh the truth and lieth not. Wherefore, it speaketh of things as they really are, and of things as they really will be; wherefore, these things are manifested unto us plainly, for the salvation of our souls. But behold, we are not witnesses alone in these things; for God also spake them unto prophets of old.

verse 13 “he that prophesieth, let him prophesy to the understanding of men” Here Jacob, in order to teach an important principle, speaks hypothetically to all prophets who would prophesy in the name of the Lord. His point is that only when prophets speak by the influence of the Holy Ghost do they truly speak the truth and are they understood by those who also possess the Holy Ghost who is also called the Spirit of prophecy and the Spirit of truth.

“it speaketh of things as they really are, and of things as they really will be” Who is “it”? “It” is the influence of the Spirit of God. And what is truth? Here Jacob plainly defines truth and tells us how we can learn it. He explains that truth is reality, learned through the Spirit. This is compatible with a definition of truth given by the Lord in latter-day scripture: “knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come” (D&C 93:24).

“These things” are spiritual truths available to all mortals who seek them in righteousness.

Extensive and specific spiritual truths have been revealed to prophets since Adam. See the commentary for verse 4.

14 But behold, the Jews were a stiffnecked people; and they despised the words of plainness, and killed the prophets, and sought for things that they could not understand. Wherefore, because of their blindness, which blindness came by looking beyond the mark, they must needs fall; for God hath taken away his plainness from them, and delivered unto them many things which they cannot understand, because they desired it. And because they desired it God hath done it, that they may stumble.

verse 14 “the Jews were a stiffnecked people” One interesting aspect of this verse is that it is written entirely in the past tense. Does Jacob have reference to the Jews before the time of Lehi’s departure from Jerusalem? A careful consideration of the verse suggests that it refers to a time yet in the future from Jacob’s day. The most important application of the verse seems, at least in part, to be the Jews’ response to the Savior’s mortal ministry, an event more than five centuries in Jacob’s future! Is it appropriate then for the verse to be written in the past tense? It is appropriate. This is another example of “prophetic perfect” tense often found in prophetic writings. An event yet in the future is referred to as if it had already occurred.

“they despised the words of plainness” When declared outright, gospel truths sound uncomplicated and even simplistic. To people of worldly sophistication who lack the Spirit, they often seem embarrassingly simplistic, even silly and naive. The sophisticated Pharisaic and Sadducean Jews are just such an example of this worldly sophistication. They despised plainness, sought complexity, and hence God took away the plainness. Only those in tune with the Spirit see things in their true light—as they really are. Satan has always worked to corrupt our minds and lead us away “from the simplicity that is in Christ” (2 Corinthians 11:3).

“they . . . killed the prophets” There are a few scriptural examples of the Jews’ killing the Lord’s prophets, including the beheading of John the Baptist (Mark 6:25), the stoning of Stephen (Acts 7:59), and the martyrdom of James the brother of John (Acts 12:2).

“sought for things that they could not understand” They spent their energies in speculative and theoretical matters rather than in learning and pondering fundamental spiritual truths.

“blindness which came by looking beyond the mark” The word “mark” means target or main objective, something to aim at. The prophet would have understood this meaning of mark, as the word was generally used as “target” in nineteenth century English. Today, the word mark has evolved away from this meaning. Incidentally, the meaning of the word target has also evolved in the past. At the time of the translation of the King James Version of the Bible, the word target meant shield (see, for example, see 1 Samuel 17:6). Indeed, Christ is the mark. Jesus said of himself, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me" (John 14:6).

The Jews were unique in their apostasy. They did not apostatize out of passivity and indifference. Rather, from a need for worldly intellectual gratification, they looked beyond the simplicity of the gospel of Jesus Christ and created a complex monster of apostate ritualistic man-made gospel rules. Elder Neal A. Maxwell taught, "My fellow men, it matters so very much how we regard and view Jesus Christ. Some seek to substitute Caesars for Christ. Others are blinded because they are 'looking beyond the mark' when the mark is Christ" (CR, April 3, 1976).

Brother Daniel H. Ludlow taught:

In trying to explain why the Jewish people did not accept the Savior when he came, Jacob said it was because of the blindness of the Jews "which blindness came by looking beyond the mark." Although the meaning of this idiomatic expression is not absolutely clear, some Book of Mormon scholars have suggested that the Jewish people were "looking beyond the mark" insofar as they expected the Savior to do at his first coming those things which it was prophesied he should do at his second coming. Thus, when the Savior did not lead the Jewish people to victory over their enemies during his earthly existence, he was largely rejected by the Jews. Jacob, however, prophesies that in the last days the Jews will once again build upon the sure foundation of Jesus Christ (A Companion to Your Study of the Book of Mormon, 160).

"God hath taken away his plainness from them, and delivered unto them many things which they cannot understand, because they desired it" Because the Jews rejected the light they were given, God has withdrawn the light and left them to flounder along in their contrived and complex apostate system of gospel laws. They deliberately sought to distance themselves from God and render him incomprehensible. They sought to create a God they could not understand. And therein they find stimulating intellectual excitement.

15 And now I, Jacob, am led on by the Spirit unto prophesying; for I perceive by the workings of the Spirit which is in me, that by the stumbling of the Jews they will reject the stone upon which they might build and have safe foundation.

verse 15 "I, Jacob, am led on by the Spirit unto prophesying" Jacob is preparing to deliver the sweeping allegory written by Zenos which prophesies of the fate of the house of Israel. In these final verses of chapter 4, Jacob will begin to lay a foundation for this great allegory.

“The stone” in this and the following verse is Jesus Christ, “the only sure foundation upon which the Jews can build.” Apparently, there was a Jewish tradition that during the reconstruction of the temple under Solomon’s direction, the builders mistakenly rejected an ideal cornerstone. Hence, we encounter the use, in the Old and New Testaments, of the analogy of Christ as the chief cornerstone.

16 But behold, according to the scriptures, this stone shall become the great, and the last, and the only sure foundation, upon which the Jews can build.

verse 16 Jesus himself will become the chief cornerstone of the house of Judah and reign as king of the Jews and king of all the earth.

17 And now, my beloved, how is it possible that these, after having rejected the sure foundation, can ever build upon it, that it may become the head of their corner?

verse 17 Jacob now asks a question which also serves to introduce the chapter that follows, Jacob 5. He asks, “How is it possible that the Jews, after having rejected Christ during his mortal ministry, will ever become subject to him and look to him as their king?”

18 Behold, my beloved brethren, I will unfold this mystery unto you; if I do not, by any means, get shaken from my firmness in the Spirit, and stumble because of my over anxiety for you.

verse 18 What is this “mystery” which will be unfolded unto us? More about that in the following chapter.

Jacob knows that the doctrine he will now expound (in chapter 5) is vastly important, and he expresses some concern that he may not be able to do it justice.

Jacob 5 Zenos's allegory of the tame and wild olive trees

Jacob 5:71-72 The Lord of the vineyard said: This is the last time that I shall nourish my vineyard; for the end is nigh at hand.

Jacob 5 is the longest and probably the most complex chapter in the Book of Mormon. Here Jacob records, onto his record, a lengthy quote taken from the brass plates (see commentary for 1 Nephi 5:16). This is the allegory of the olive tree which is an allegory concerned with the scattering and gathering of Israel. This allegory was written onto the brass plates by the prophet Zenos.

Who was Zenos? Zenos was an ancient Israelite prophet whose writings are not found in the biblical texts to which we have access. Elder Bruce R. McConkie said, "I do not think I overstate the matter when I say that next to Isaiah himself . . . there was not a greater prophet in all Israel than Zenos. And our knowledge of his inspired writings is limited to the quotations and paraphrasing summaries found in the Book of Mormon" (The Joseph Smith Translation: The Restoration of Plain and Precious Things, editors Monte S. Nyman and Robert L. Millet, 17).

We actually know little about the prophet Zenos. He did obviously write his record before 600 BC. He perhaps lived in the northern kingdom of Israel some time before the Assyrian captivity of the ten tribes between 732 and 722 BC. Alternatively, he may have lived in Judah before the major rift in Israel at the death of Solomon in 931 BC. He probably descended from ancient Joseph and thus he was a kinsman of the Nephites. Apparently, he was eventually martyred for his beliefs (Helaman 8:19). Nephi quoted from Zenos (1 Nephi 19, 22), and Alma used his words in speaking to the Zoramites on the subjects of worship and prayer (Alma 33:3-11).

The quotations of Zenos' prophecies throughout the Book of Mormon demonstrate that the writings of Zenos were popular among the Nephites (see, for example, 1 Nephi 19:10, 16; Jacob 5:1; 6:1; Alma 33:3, 13, 15; 34:7; Helaman 8:19; 15:11; 3 Nephi 10:16). His words were likely present on the plates of brass that the family of Lehi possessed, although they are not found in the Old Testament today.

"How, one wonders, could an important prophet like Zenos, if he ever existed, have simply dropped out of sight without leaving a trace of himself in the Bible or anywhere else?" (Hugh Nibley, Since Cumorah, second edition; Salt Lake City and Provo, Ut.: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1981, 286). This was the late BYU professor Hugh Nibley's question in 1967 regarding the lack of direct reference to Zenos outside of the Book of Mormon. Nibley's response to this mystery was to attempt to connect Zenos to a similarly-named figure found in some ancient Jewish religious texts.

This was a great prophet-leader named Cenez. In some versions of the text, the name Cenez is spelled Zenec or Zenez (variants of the name Cenez). Cenez was the first judge over Israel. Hugh Nibley determined that by comparing the words and deeds of Cenez in a text called Biblical Antiquities to Zenos in the Book of Mormon, some interesting parallels might emerge. However, after careful analysis, John W. Welch concluded that a direct identification between Cenez and Zenos is not likely.

What is more probable is that there was an earlier ancient source than the surviving story of Cenez which inspired the vineyard imagery found in the Book of Mormon. Interestingly, David Rolph Seely and John Welch go on to argue for the existence of a common ancient source standing behind the olive tree / vineyard imagery that is found in many places in the Old Testament (“Zenos and the Texts of the Old Testament,” in The Allegory of the Olive Tree: The Olive, the Bible, and Jacob 5, ed. Stephen D. Ricks and John W. Welch, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1994, 322–346). They note that in the Old Testament one can find the symbol of the olive tree, or vine (the two are sometimes used synonymously), used to describe Israel with either positive or negative connotations. Passages such as Exodus 15:17, 2 Samuel 7:10, Psalms 1:3; 52:8, Hosea 14:4–8, and Isaiah 4:2 focus primarily on the positive aspects of the Lord planting, taking care of, and blessing the tree. Others, such as Psalm 52:5; 80:15–16, Isaiah 5:1–7; 17:9–11; and Jeremiah 11:14–17 feature the uprooting, burning, destruction, and cursing of the tree. Both dimensions, of course, are found in Zenos’s extended allegory.

Seely and Welch thus conclude that it is reasonable to postulate the existence of a fuller account of the olive tree allegory that predates most or all of these diverse and more partial uses.

Although the evidence does not allow a firm conclusion with respect to the dating of the allegory of Zenos, the positive and negative dimensions of the Old Testament image of the olive tree are difficult to reconcile in these texts without assuming that a single paradigm (such as the allegory of Zenos) existed in ancient Israel utilizing both of these dimensions. Jacob 5 provides the full paradigm unifying the many scattered references in the Old Testament to the olive tree as an image for the house of Israel and illuminating what that image would likely have meant to an ancient Israelite audience (Seely and Welch, “Zenos,” 343). For other examples of the olive tree’s being used in biblical metaphors to represent the house of Israel, see Isaiah 5:1–7, Exodus 15:17, Numbers 24:6, 2 Samuel 7:10, Psalm 80:8, Hosea 14:6, Jeremiah 11:16; 23:41, and Romans 11:8-24.

Other ancient prophets existed whose writings do not currently appear in today’s Bibles or in any other authentically surviving source. Many of these are mentioned in the text of the Bible itself, including the books of Shemaiah the prophet (2 Chronicles 12:15), Iddo the prophet (2 Chronicles 13:22), Jehu (2 Chronicles 20:34), and others.

Similarly, there are ancient prophetic writings that are lost and may never be uncovered.

The Allegory of the Olive Tree is a valuable piece of prophetic writing that was of great worth to the Nephite people. Although we do not have direct evidence for a prophet Zenos from texts outside of the Book of Mormon, it is possible to see the significant influence of his writings on Book of Mormon authors and potentially on other biblical authors as well.

The Allegory of the Olive Tree serves as both a warning and a call to action for members of the Church today. It warns everyone in the household of faith against the dangers of apostasy. It graphically communicates the doctrine that the Lord will one day judge all mankind and separate the righteous from the wicked. It also informs all people that this is a great day of opportunity in which the servants of the Lord are called, for the last time, to labor with all diligence in the vineyard. This is the day for members of scattered Israel, even from the most remote parts of the world, to be reunited through God's servant and thereby enjoy the blessings promised in God's covenants with His beloved children.

The fact that the remarkable writings of Zenos are contained in the Book of Mormon and that they present teachings as grand as the Allegory of the Olive Tree is a strong indication of the inspired origins of the Book of Mormon and that it truly restores to the world many "plain and precious" things that have long been lost.

The concepts of scattering and gathering. It would be appropriate to review the concepts of scattering and gathering of Israel before continuing your study of this chapter. For that review, please see the introductory comments for 1 Nephi 20.

Figures of speech. A common literary form used by many of the prophets in ancient Israel is the metaphor. It is a literary device in which a comparison is drawn between two unlike or unrelated objects. For example, "the curtain of night descended" or "all the world's a stage" or "thy neck is an iron sinew, and thy brow brass" (1 Nephi 20:4). Even the word "stiffneckedness" is itself a metaphor.

Perhaps this is a good time to briefly mention the other figures of speech found in the Book of Mormon. Figures of speech are a non-literal means of expressing ideas through images or changes in standard word order. They help to bring abstract concepts to life and enrich expressions in memorable ways. Examples found in the Book of Mormon include:

1. We have already mentioned the metaphor which is comparing unlike objects or terms.

2. A simile is a comparison between two objects showing an aspect of similarity through the use of "like" or "as." For example, "And from this time forth did the Nephites gain no power over the Lamanites, but began to be swept off by them even as a dew before the sun" (Mormon 4:18). Or, the Nephites "are led about by Satan, even as chaff is driven before the wind, or as a vessel is tossed about upon the waves, without sail or anchor, or without anything wherewith to steer her” (Mormon 5:18).

3. A personification is treating inanimate things as persons, such as, “And her gates shall lament and mourn” (2 Nephi 13:26).

4. An allegory is a form of extended metaphor in which the literal level refers to another level of meaning: “I will liken thee, O house of Israel, like unto a tame olive-tree” (Jacob 5:3).

5. An allusion is an indirect reference to historical events: “Let us be strong like unto Moses; for he truly spake unto the waters of the Red Sea and they divided hither and thither, and our fathers came through, out of captivity, on dry ground” (1 Nephi 4:2).

6. A simile curse uses simile to warn and set limits: “Even as this scalp has fallen to the earth, which is the scalp of your chief, so shall ye fall to the earth except ye will deliver up your weapons of war and depart with a covenant of peace” (Alma 44:14).

7. Rhetorical figures of speech are a departure from the customary uses of language. These may be divided into:

a. Apostrophe is addressing someone not present: “Holy, holy God; we believe that thou art God” (Alma 31:15).

b. Repetition is just what it says: “Yea, let all thy doings be unto the Lord . . . yea, let all thy thoughts be directed unto the Lord; yea, let the affections of thy heart be placed upon the Lord forever” (Alma 37:36).

c. Antithesis: “Inasmuch as they shall keep my commandments they shall prosper in the land. But . . . inasmuch as they will not keep my commandments they shall be cut off from the presence of the Lord” (Alma 50:20).

d. Parallelism (including chiasmic parallelism)—see the supplemental article, The Hebrew Language and the Book of Mormon.

e. Hyperbole is exaggeration: “O that I were an angel . . . that I might go forth and speak with the trump of God, with a voice to shake the earth” (Alma 29:1-3).

f. A paradox is something apparently contradictory but true: “If they humble themselves before me, and have faith in me, then will I make weak things become strong unto them” (Ether 12:27).

g. Metonymy is the use of the name of one thing in place of something related: “That I might rid my garments of your sins” (Jacob 2:2).

h. Synecdoche (sin ek' da kee) is the use of part to signify the whole or the use of the whole to signify a part: “Many hearts died” (Jacob 2:35).

Why did the Lord choose the metaphor of an olive tree to dramatize the destiny of his chosen people? Consider these possibilities: An olive tree almost never dies. It may be pruned and worked with over many generations. Before the fruit is fully satisfactory to the keeper of the vineyard, it is often necessary to apply many cuttings and trimmings and graftings and replantings. So it has been with the house of Israel. The Lord’s chosen people have often required chastening and pruning. The Lord, like the dedicated gardener, has refused to allow his chosen people to perish. He prunes and cuts and coaxes and grafts and pleads. Grafting is a common horticultural practice whereby a branch or bud of one plant is attached to and allowed to grow from the root stock of a compatible plant variety. This process allows the desired qualities (usually the fruit) of the top of one plant to grow from a plant with desirable root qualities.

The olive tree is an apt metaphor in other ways as well. It was certainly an integral part of ancient biblical culture. Olive oil was an important dietary commodity. In addition, it was burned for lighting, used as a solvent for various spices and incenses, and used in religious rites such as anointing the sick. Because of the olive tree's unique and admirable characteristics, it has long been a universal symbol of life, hope, and peace. It is tough and durable and lives long. It can readily be transplanted. With a little encouragement, it survives in stony soil. It is evergreen, a beautiful sight offering shade and rest. Its fruit produces soothing oil. The olive leaf brought back by the dove of peace showed Noah that life could again exist on earth (Genesis 8:11).

The botanical features of Jacob 5. The botanical features of Jacob 5 have long been of interest particularly to those interested in that scientific discipline. It is felt that the science of horticulture as it applied to olive trees was well established in ancient times. The botanical principles mentioned or implied in Jacob 5 have been generally held to be correct with some few exceptions ("Botanical Comparisons in the Allegory of the Olive Tree," in The Book of Mormon: Jacob Through Words of Mormon, To Learn with Joy, 87-102). In the commentary for this chapter some specifics of these principles will be mentioned. Joseph Smith likely had little or no knowledge of olive trees in New York in 1829, as they do not grow in the northeastern United States. As we consider the few botanical aspects of olive trees, you might repeatedly ask yourself, "Could Joseph Smith have written this from his own background, knowledge, and experience?"

For example, a botanical practice used by those cultivating olive trees that is central to the Jacob 5 allegory is grafting, a technique for propagating olives which involves taking branches from one tree and inserting them into another. Wilford M. Hess, a professor of botany at BYU, explained, "the olive tree is among the easiest of trees to propagate, and it is very easily grafted. This principle is still extensively used today" (Wilford M. Hess, Daniel J. Fairbanks, John W. Welch, and Jonathan K. Diggs, "Botanical Aspects of Olive Culture Relevant to Jacob 5," in The Allegory of the Olive Tree: The Olive, the Bible, and Jacob 5, ed. Stephen D. Ricks and John W. Welch, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1994, 93).

Jacob 5 describes a variety of different grafting scenarios. Crucial to the allegory is the grafting of branches from a wild olive tree into the roots of the tame but decaying tree with the hope of reviving the Master's favored tree (Jacob 5:7–10, 17, 34). Hess and his collaborators included this as one of three more unusual practices described in the Zenos's story (Ibid., 507). Yet it is neither impossible nor unprecedented. They explained: "Although it would also have been unusual for an olive grower to graft wild branches onto a tame tree, circumstances exist when it makes good sense to do so. Due to the vigor and disease resistance of certain wild species, grafting wild stock onto a tame tree can strengthen and revitalize a distressed plant (Ibid.). Consider, in this light, the servant's words in Jacob 5:34: "Behold, because thou didst graft in the branches of the wild olive tree they have nourished the roots, that they are alive and they have not perished," and hence the master could see the tree was "good." Brother Hess and co-authors further explained: "Zenos's allegory portrays the Lord of the vineyard as somewhat exasperated, trying all available options to revive his old, beloved tree, including the extraordinary step of experimenting to see if any good might come by grafting wild stock onto the branches of the natural tree. Although doing this would have been an unconventional, perhaps even desperate measure, the Lord will spare no effort to obtain again the desired fruit from his choice plant (Ibid., 507).

Many other elements in the allegory also draw meaningfully on a real life understanding of the delicate task of raising over many years and generations valuable crops of high quality olives. These elements include transplanting tender young branches, balancing the growth of the branches with the roots, nourishing, digging about, burning prunings and weeds, preventing decay and withering away, and laboring in teams at harvest time (Ibid., 484-562).

Regarding the botanical aspects of Jacob 5, Brother Hugh Nibley has written:

Jacob's (or rather Zenos's) treatise on ancient olive culture (Jacob 5) is accurate in every detail: Olive trees do have to be pruned and cultivated diligently; the top branches are indeed the first to wither, and the new shoots do come right out of the trunk . . . the ancient way of strengthening the old trees (especially in Greece) was to graft in the shoots of the oleaster or wild olive; also, shoots from valuable old trees were transplanted to keep the stock alive after the parent tree should perish; to a surprising degree the olive prefers poor and rocky ground, whereas rich soil produces inferior fruit; too much grafting produces a nondescript and cluttered yield of fruit; the top branches if allowed to grow as in Spain or France, while producing a good shade tree, will indeed sap the strength of the tree and give a poor crop; fertilizing with dung is very important, in spite of the preference for rocky ground, and has been practiced since ancient times; the thing to be most guarded against is bitterness in the fruit. All these points, taken from a treatise on ancient olive culture, are duly, though quite casually, noted in Zenos's Parable of the Olive Tree (Since Cumorah, 238-39; see also Nibley, Prophetic Book of Mormon, 250).

Some have wondered at the use of the term "vineyard" for the place where olive trees are planted. Wouldn't "orchard" be more appropriate? It seems clear that the Hebrew word from which "vineyard" was translated means just that—a place where grapes are grown. It is also interesting to note, however, that the vineyard in biblical times was considered a garden where many other things were grown including corn (Deuteronomy 23:24-25), olive trees (Amos 4:9), fruit trees (Nehemiah 9:25), herbs (1

The relationship between Jacob 4 and Jacob 5. Some have wondered just why Jacob decided to share the allegory of the olive tree here in Jacob 5. It would seem that the answer to this question lies in Jacob chapter 4 which should be seen as an introduction to Jacob chapter 5. This latter chapter is obviously taken from materials written by the prophet Zenos. Ancient Israelite prophets often used the teachings of other prophets in their teachings. Let us take a closer look at the "introductory" characteristics of Jacob chapter 4.

In Jacob 4, Jacob shares a lengthy discussion on what he and his colleagues "knew of Christ" (Jacob 4:4). Jacob then turned from speaking of "the atonement of Christ, [the] Only Begotten Son" (Jacob 4:11) to the idea that the Jews would "stumble" and "reject the stone upon which they might build and have safe foundation" (Jacob 4:15). It is apparent that Jacob was drawing these ideas from at least three different sources on the brass plates: Psalm 118:22; Isaiah 8:14–15; and Isaiah 28:16—in the following manner: "And now I, Jacob, am led on by the Spirit unto prophesying . . . that by the stumbling of the Jews [Isaiah 8:14] they will reject the stone [Psalm 118:22] upon which they might build [Psalm 118:22] and have safe foundation [Isaiah 28:16]. But behold, according to the scriptures, this stone shall become the great, and the last, and the only sure foundation [Isaiah 28:16], upon which the Jews can build [Psalm 118:22]. And now, my beloved, how is it possible that these, after having rejected [Psalm 118:22] the sure foundation [Isaiah 28:16], can ever build upon it, that it may become the head of their corner? [Psalm 118:22] (Jacob 4:15–17)."

The context of Psalm 118 and both Isaiah passages have two main things in common: (1) a temple setting, featuring the building of the temple (with the foundation, cornerstone, etc.), and (2) the involvement of the Messiah. In light of this fact, one can see that Jacob was likely making a beautiful and powerful play on words. The Hebrew word used for "son" in this passage is "ben," while the Hebrew word for "stone" is the similar-sounding "eben."

When Jacob refers to the stone of the stumbling, he is simultaneously referring to the Son of God, Jesus Christ. Furthermore, Jacob identified Christ with the imagery of the cornerstone of the foundation of the temple. Together, the passages speak of the Jews' rejecting the "sure foundation" (Christ) of their spiritual temple and stumbling because of their rebellion but later accepting Christ as "the head of their corner."

Jacob finished this segment of his teachings with the following question for his people: "And now, my beloved, how is it possible that these [the Jews], after having rejected the sure foundation [Christ], can ever build upon it, that it may become the head of their corner?" (Jacob 4:17). This question leads directly into Jacob's attempt to "unfold this mystery" unto his people (Jacob 4:18) by sharing the prophet Zenos' allegory of the olive tree. Jacob 5 provides the answer to Jacob's question in Jacob

4:17). In Jacob 5, Jacob goes to great lengths to teach his people the revealed knowledge that he possessed regarding Jesus Christ's atoning mission.

The 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon did not contain a chapter break between Jacob 4 and 5. Without that chapter break, readers can plainly see how Jacob's discussion of the atonement and the rejection of the Son / stone (ben / eben) leads seamlessly and fittingly to his recitation of the Allegory of the Olive Tree. This allegory illustrates how the Lord of the vineyard tenderly cared for his decaying "tame" olive tree (representing the house of Israel). The Lord of the vineyard labored with his servants to remove all the bad fruit. Thereafter, the natural fruit became good again (a symbol of restoration or salvation for the House of Israel).

The meanings of Jacob 5's metaphors. We read scripture to enhance our understanding of the Lord and his purposes. Unfortunately, in Jacob 5, there is danger of becoming lost in its metaphorical aspects. It is difficult to understand this chapter without help, yet it is vital that we do come to understand it. It is in our dispensation that many of the Lord's promises to his covenant people will be fulfilled.

Fundamental to understanding Zenos's allegory is learning the meaning of the individual specific metaphors it contains. The following interpretation is provided with the help of Monte S. Nyman's book An Ensign to All People, 21-36, and an article by Kent P. Jackson, "Nourished by the Good Word of God" found in Studies in Scripture, Volume Seven, 1 Nephi to Alma 29, 190-94. These meanings are:

1. natural or tame olive tree: the house of Israel, the Lord's covenant people
2. wild olive tree: the Gentiles or non-Israelites. Later in the parable, "wild branches" are apostate Israel or the influences of the world which caused their apostasy.
3. the vineyard: the world
4. the man, master, or lord of the vineyard: the Lord Jesus Christ. An alternate meaning for the lord of the vineyard is God the Father with the servant being Jesus Christ.
5. the servant: a prophet, or prophets
6. branches: various groups of people, both Israelite and non-Israelite, both righteous and unrighteous
7. grafting natural branches into the wild trees: branches of Israel scattered among the Gentiles
8. transplanting the branches: scattering of groups throughout the world or restoring them to their original position
9. grafting: the process of spiritual rebirth wherein one is connected to the healing influence of the roots of the tame olive tree; whereupon one acquires the same inclination to accept the truth as is possessed by those of the blood of Israel. See the meaning of the "roots of the tame olive tree" below.

10. pruning: The opposite of grafting—that is, the cutting off of evil individuals from spiritual instructions and influences.

11. grafting wild branches into the natural tree: the accepting of Gentiles by adoption into the house of Israel. After Christ's mortal ministry, this process occurred as Gentiles accepted the gospel of Jesus Christ, were baptized, and entered his church.

12. the roots of the tame olive tree: the intrinsic goodness of those of the house of Israel—their natural inclination to accept the truth, which inclination was earned over time in the pre-existence. We will also learn of other meanings for roots in the commentary which follows.

13. decaying branches: wickedness and apostasy

14. digging, pruning, nourishing, fertilizing, and cultivating: the Lord's merciful efforts and those of his earthly servants (the prophets) to save his chosen people, the house of Israel

15. casting the branches into the fire: the judgment of God

16. fruit of the tree: the souls of men or their works

17. natural fruit: the lives or works of those of the house of Israel

18. wild fruit: unrighteous people and their evil works

19. young and tender branches: righteous subgroups of Israel who are willing to accept and live the gospel

The Lord's atonement and Jacob 5. Another interpretive note is important before we begin our study of Jacob 5. In an important way, this chapter concerns itself with the atonement. Not so much with the Savior's sufferings in Gethsemane and on the cross, but more with another part of his atonement—his additional efforts to help man achieve the overcoming of their spiritual death and to reunite with him, the so-called "at-one-ment." Please review the commentary in Jacob 4:12 for the phrase "why not speak of the atonement of Christ." To properly understand Jacob 5, it is important to understand the intensity of the divine desire behind the process of atonement. Here is the "mystery" of Jacob 5 spoken of in Jacob 4:18. At the deepest level of meaning, the olive tree is symbolic of the Savior himself and his work is to gather mankind to himself. While the Lord Jesus is the agent of this gathering, the medium of the at-one-ment is the Holy Ghost (M. Catherine Thomas, "Jacob's Allegory: The Mystery of Christ," a FARMS reprint).

It is interesting to note the close correlation between the tree of life in Nephi's vision (1 Nephi 11-15) and the olive tree in Jacob 5. Both are ultimately symbolic of the Lord himself. The olive tree and the tree of life in Nephi's vision are the same tree, and the merging of the two trees enhances the message of at-one-ment between man and Christ. Nephi taught that the covenant people will receive "nourishment from the true vine" when they are grafted "into the true olive-tree" (1 Nephi 15:15-16). Jacob 5 concerns itself with the reuniting of each individual (Israelite and Gentile) with Christ. We will read repeatedly the phrase "preserve them unto myself." We will also read of the ceaseless activity of “nourishing,” “digging,” and “pruning” as the Lord seeks to bring men into his presence.

One of the vital insights we may draw from Jacob 5 is that the atonement operates at every level of man’s existence. “It urges people to gather geographically into Zions. It promotes generosity and consecration of goods. It prompts people to resonate emotionally and to synergize spiritually. The Lord says, ‘I say unto you, be one; and if ye are not one ye are not mine’ (D&C 38:27)” (Ibid.).

It is important to emphasize the most essential point Jacob had in mind when he included this allegory in his writings: God loves the house of Israel and looks after his chosen people no matter where they are scattered. We have mentioned previously that one of Jacob’s favorite themes, perhaps from his own experience living in exile, was the preservation of scattered Israel, the idea that God would never abandon his chosen people. He seemed to take special comfort in the promises made to that people. He obviously acknowledged that he and his people were among those of scattered Israel. It has been suggested that Jacob 5 ought to take its place beside the parable of the prodigal son, as both are poignant reminders of God’s love and long suffering.

Now, keeping the above metaphors and symbolisms in mind, let us attempt to interpret the allegory.

1 Behold, my brethren, do ye not remember to have read the words of the prophet Zenos, which he spake unto the house of Israel, saying:

verse 1 The first person in this verse is the prophet Jacob. Beginning in verse 2, however, the prophet Zenos becomes the first person. The parable actually begins with verse 2.

“do ye not remember to have read the words of the prophet Zenos” Today this might be rendered, “do you not remember reading the words of the prophet Zenos?” Obviously, this allegory of Zenos’s was available to the Nephites and is something with which they should already have been familiar.

2 Harken, O ye house of Israel, and hear the words of me, a prophet of the Lord.

3 For behold, thus saith the Lord, I will liken thee, O house of Israel, like unto a tame olive-tree, which a man took and nourished in his vineyard; and it grew, and waxed old, and began to decay.

verse 3 The “tame olive tree” is the house of Israel. The “man” is the master of the vineyard, Jesus Christ. The man “nourished” his covenant people Israel by making all of the blessings of his gospel available to them. This was done “in his vineyard” which is the world.

“it grew, and waxed old, and began to decay” After its beginning with father Abraham in about 2000 BC, the house of Israel began to fall into apostasy. After entering the promised land of Palestine (about 1220 BC) many of the Israelites eventually fell into apostasy. The period of time referred to is likely that between the foundation of the house of Israel in 2000 BC and about 1000 BC just before the Israelite prophets were dispatched to the earth. On the other hand, some have suggested that this period of apostasy might have occurred while Israel was detained in Egypt or even while they were wandering in the wilderness. A word of warning is appropriate here. It may not always be possible to apply Zenos's allegory to one specific time period. Some verses might even have a general application to the house of Israel in future dispensations. An attempt will be made, however, in this commentary to provide plausible temporal correlates.

The botanical concept of the "tame" or domesticated olive tree is a sound one. Though the olive tree is an ancient plant, it has changed little through time. The species which produces fruit eaten by man has two botanical varieties; one is cultivated or domestic (tame), and the other is wild. Both of these forms were present in ancient times. From examination of archaeological records, it is evident that domestication of the olive tree took a very long time. Domestication resulted from selection of desirable genetic characteristics, and these genetically variant plants were less hearty and relied more upon man for maximal production. In some instances, highly domesticated plants failed to survive if not tended and nurtured by men. On the other hand, non-domesticated (wild) plants are well-adapted genetically to survive without man's intervention. The extra care required for the domestic trees was worthwhile, since they produced better and more plentiful olives (Hess, 91).

verses 4-14 This is the period of nurturing extending from the beginning of the period of Israelite prophets about 1000 BC to the completion of the first great scattering of all Israel shortly after 600 BC.

4 And it came to pass that the master of the vineyard went forth, and he saw that his olive-tree began to decay; and he said: I will prune it, and dig about it, and nourish it, that perhaps it may shoot forth young and tender branches, and it perish not.

verse 4 "And it came to pass" This phrase is found frequently in Jacob 5. It seems to be used here by Zenos as a constant reminder of the passage of time.

"The master . . . saw that his olive-tree began to decay" Apostasy occurred among the Israelites.

"I will prune it, and dig about it, and nourish it" I will send my prophets to preach, teach and warn.

"It may shoot forth young and tender branches, and it perish not" Some subgroups of Israel may repent and prove to be the salvation of all Israel.

5 And it came to pass that he pruned it, and digged about it, and nourished it according to his word.

verses 4-5 The earliest of the prophets sent to warn Israel was Samuel who preached in the eleventh century BC. He was followed by the likes of Elijah, Elisha, and Jeremiah.

We cannot pass the concept of “pruning” without recalling Hugh B. Brown’s little parable of the currant bush. As we are pruned in life by the divine will, we often suffer pain as we are usually subjected to refining influences which we would elect to avoid if given our choice. Hugh B. Brown wrote:

Do not cry . . . what I have done to you was necessary . . . you were not intended for what you sought to be . . . if I had allowed you to continue . . . you would have failed in the purpose for which I planted you and my plans for you would have been defeated. You must not weep; some day when you are richly laden with experience you will say, “He was a wise gardener. He knew the purpose of my earth life . . . I thank him now for what I thought was cruel. Help me, dear God, to endure the pruning, and to grow as you would have me grow; to take my allotted place in life and ever more to say, Thy will not mine be done” (“The Gardener and the Currant Bush” in Eternal Quest, 243).

The pruning of olive trees maintains the proper amount of foliage and permits sufficient light to strike the branches, thus maximizing fruit production. Without pruning fruit production suffers, as the trees become too bushy. It is also well known that pruning encourages the development of “young and tender branches” (Hess, 93).

6 And it came to pass that after many days it began to put forth somewhat a little, young and tender branches; but behold, the main top thereof began to perish.

verse 6 Some Israelites accepted the prophets’ warnings—the “young and tender branches”—but only a few. And those accepted the warnings only “somewhat a little.”

“the main top thereof began to perish” The teachers, rulers, and priests did not accept the prophets. Two rulers who became infamous apostates were Jeroboam and Manasseh. Jeroboam was the military leader under King Solomon who broke with Judah and became the first king of the northern Kingdom of Israel. He introduced idol worship to his people. Manasseh was a king of the southern kingdom under whose evil leadership the spiritual state of Judah declined to new lows.

verses 7-10 Here the lord of the vineyard outlines a plan for saving the tame olive tree, consisting of three steps: (1) destroying the apostate parts of Israel—mainly the upper classes, (2) grafting non-Israelites into Israel, and (3) relocating the righteous subgroups of Israel away from Jerusalem so they might survive elsewhere.

7 And it came to pass that the master of the vineyard saw it, and he said unto his servant: It grieveth me that I should lose this tree; wherefore, go and pluck the branches from a wild olive-tree, and bring them hither unto me; and we will pluck off those main branches which are beginning to wither away, and we will cast them into the fire that they may be burned.

verse 7 “the master of the vineyard saw it” The Lord saw the apostasy of Israel, so he gave instructions to his “servant” or prophet.

“It grieveth me that I should lose this tree” This phrase is repeated eight times in Zenos’s allegory. It is a poignant celebration of the Lord’s long-suffering love.

“go and pluck the branches from a wild olive-tree, and bring them hither unto me” These Gentiles will be discussed in the commentary for verse 9.

“we will pluck off those main branches which are beginning to wither away, and we will cast them into the fire that they may be burned” In order to preserve the righteous element of Israel (“this tree”), the Lord allowed Gentile nations to purge Israel. The northern kingdom, the kingdom of Israel, was destroyed and scattered by the Assyrians between 734 and 720 BC. The Babylonians routed the southern kingdom, the kingdom of Judah, between 605 and 586 BC. And the Romans destroyed Jerusalem and killed, captured, or scattered all of Israel in AD 70. The Lord thus allowed the great Gentile nations (Assyria, Babylonia, and Rome)—the branches from a wild olive tree—to mete out his judgment upon Israel.

As in the days of Zenos, it is not only possible but even standard practice to graft branches from one olive tree to another. Archaeological records show that this practice goes back to very ancient times (Hess, 89).

This verse implies that the Lord’s servants, the prophets, had some role in encouraging the Gentile destruction of parts of Israel. It is more likely that they simply warned Israel, and when their warnings went unheeded, they pronounced the judgments of God upon Israel (“cast them into the fire that they may be burned”).

It is well known that an untended olive vineyard can decay as limbs become infested with parasitic and saprophytic microorganisms and insects. Thus, the burning of infested limbs is desirable to prevent the spread of pestilence. Burning also keeps the ground open and unencumbered (Hess, 92).

8 And behold, saith the Lord of the vineyard, I take away many of these young and tender branches, and I will graft them whithersoever I will; and it mattereth not that if it so be that the root of this tree will perish, I may preserve the fruit thereof unto myself; wherefore, I will take these young and tender branches, and I will graft them whithersoever I will.

verses 8, 13-14 “I take away many of these young and tender branches, and I will graft them whithersoever I will” The leading away of the family of Lehi fits nicely into this category, and there may have been other righteous groups as well. We obviously know nothing of the latter, however. Perhaps even a righteous remnant of the scattered ten tribes was led away and preserved.

If the foliage of an otherwise healthy olive tree is removed or even reduced, the roots may perish. In contrast when branches are grafted, the new foliage can carry on photosynthesis and supply the necessary carbohydrates to nourish the roots (Hess, 94).

“I will graft them” Grafting is the process of allowing a spiritual rebirth by moving righteous Israelites to a safer location where they can live the law of Moses

“if it so be that the root of this tree will perish” The metaphor of the “root” or “roots” in Zeno’s allegory is used with various meanings. Here its meaning seems to be the established hierarchy or aristocracy of Israel—the teachers, rulers, and priests. Though these should perish spiritually, the Lord will preserve unto himself those willing to live the law of Moses by relocating them.

verses 9-12 The Lord instructs his prophets to accept righteous Gentiles into the house of Israel by adoption, in place of those unrighteous elements that have been plucked off from the metaphorical olive tree and then burned. This “burning” may refer to the specific destruction of parts of Israel mentioned in the commentary for verse 7.

Gentiles will eventually be combined with remnants of Israel to form the early Christian church (from about AD 30 to AD 100).

9 Take thou the branches of the wild olive-tree, and graft them in, in the stead thereof; and these which I have plucked off I will cast into the fire and burn them, that they may not cumber the ground of my vineyard.

verse 9 The word “cumber” here means the same as encumber—to interfere with, obstruct. One of the definitions of cumber in Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language is, “To trouble; to be troublesome to; to cause trouble or obstruction in, as anything useless” (see an alternate meaning for the word cumber in the commentary for Jacob 5:39).

10 And it came to pass that the servant of the Lord of the vineyard did according to the word of the Lord of the vineyard, and grafted in the branches of the wild olive-tree.

verses 9-10 “Take thou the branches of the wild olive-tree, and graft them in” After the destruction of the northern kingdom, Assyria moved some Assyrians into Palestine in place of the deported northern kingdom. These intermarried with the Israelites left behind by the Assyrians. Also, some of the Jews intermarried with their Babylonian captors. Some of the descendants of these mixed-racial marriages were likely those who would accept the gospel after the Lord’s ascension.

11 And the Lord of the vineyard caused that it should be digged about, and pruned, and nourished, saying unto his servant: It grieveth me that I should lose this tree; wherefore, that perhaps I might preserve the roots thereof that they perish not, that I might preserve them unto myself, I have done this thing.

12 Wherefore, go thy way; watch the tree, and nourish it, according to my words.

verses 11-12 The Lord reminds his prophets to watch after Israel. The lord of the vineyard expresses his hope that some of the Israelites will remain true to the potential spiritual receptivity they earned in the pre-existence.

verses 13-14 These verses refer to the fact that Israel will be scattered to the four corners of the earth, and they raise an interesting question. We have previously concluded that the scattering of the Lord's chosen people occurs because of apostasy, and we have assumed that the scattering occurs as a form of punishment for disobedience. Apparently, however, a people is occasionally scattered to isolate them from a wicked governing hierarchy and thus preserve their spiritual integrity.

13 And these will I place in the nethermost part of my vineyard, whithersoever I will, it mattereth not unto thee; and I do it that I may preserve unto myself the natural branches of the tree; and also, that I may lay up fruit thereof against the season, unto myself; for it grieveth me that I should lose this tree and the fruit thereof.

verse 13 "And these will I place in the nethermost part of my vineyard" This phrase refers to the "young and tender branches" in verse 8. Webster's 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines nethermost as, "lowest." These are the few remaining righteous Israelites whom the lord of the vineyard is scattering in order to preserve their righteousness.

"that I may lay up fruit thereof against the season, unto myself" This phrase conveys the idea that the Lord knows that "winter" is coming and he must place in storage a supply of food. The Lord acknowledges the coming universal apostasy, and he wants to "lay up" as many souls of men unto himself before the coming dry spell.

"for it grieveth me that I should lose this tree and the fruit thereof" The lord of the vineyard has resigned himself to the loss of the people of the main body of Israel.

14 And it came to pass that the Lord of the vineyard went his way, and hid the natural branches of the tame olive-tree in the nethermost parts of the vineyard, some in one and some in another, according to his will and pleasure.

verse 14 "hid the natural branches of the tame olive-tree in the nethermost parts of the vineyard" In a manner of speaking the Lehitites were "hid" or hidden from the rest of the world.

verses 15-28 These verses cover the period of time from the Savior's birth to about AD 100 when the priesthood was taken from the earth and revelation ceased.

15 And it came to pass that a long time passed away, and the Lord of the vineyard said unto his servant: Come, let us go down into the vineyard, that we may labor in the vineyard.

verse 15 "a long time passed away" A few centuries have passed.

verses 16-18 The early Christian church flourished in righteousness partly because of the adoption of Gentiles into the house of Israel through baptism into the church. Many faithful saints brought forth righteous works between AD 30 and AD 100. Doubtless many of these Gentiles were the descendants of the former intermarriages between Israelites and their conquerors, the Assyrians and Babylonians.

16 And it came to pass that the Lord of the vineyard, and also the servant, went down into the vineyard to labor. And it came to pass that the servant said unto his master: Behold, look here; behold the tree.

17 And it came to pass that the Lord of the vineyard looked and beheld the tree in the which the wild olive branches had been grafted; and it had sprung forth and begun to bear fruit. And he beheld that it was good; and the fruit thereof was like unto the natural fruit.

verse 17 "the fruit thereof was like unto the natural fruit" The spiritual quality of the people, especially those Gentiles who had been adopted into the house of Israel—their lives and works—was equal to that of the Lord's chosen.

Botanists have struggled with one aspect of Zenos's allegory—the idea that a wild or non-domesticated branch which is grafted into a domesticated or tame tree might bear tame fruit. It is known that a wild olive branch grafted onto a tame tree will remain wild and will produce only wild or small-seeded, bitter fruit of low quality. That branch will never have the genetic potential of the branches from domesticated trees. It is likely that Zenos had in mind another true botanical principle—that a wild plant properly tended will produce better fruit than a domestic plant which is neglected (Hess, 94-95).

18 And he said unto the servant: Behold, the branches of the wild tree have taken hold of the moisture of the root thereof, that the root thereof hath brought forth much strength; and because of the much strength of the root thereof the wild branches have brought forth tame fruit. Now, if we had not grafted in these branches, the tree thereof would have perished. And now, behold, I shall lay up much fruit, which the tree thereof hath brought forth; and the fruit thereof I shall lay up against the season, unto mine own self.

verse 18 “the branches of the wild tree have taken hold of the moisture of the root thereof” The branches of the wild tree have taken hold of the moisture of the root of the tame olive-tree. In other words, the Gentiles have developed a true proclivity for righteousness as is possessed by those of the house of Israel.

“the wild branches have brought forth tame fruit” The Gentiles have become righteous and have manifest good works.

Without the conversion and adoption of Gentiles into the house of Israel, Israel would have spiritually perished.

“and the fruit thereof I shall lay up against the season, unto mine own self” Perhaps this is a prophecy of the great apostasy of the early Christian church which is to come.

verses 19-28 The Lord goes forth to inspect the “fruits” of the scattered remnants of Israel. At least three groups were identified and found to be bearing good fruit. It is difficult to know the identity of the first two groups. Perhaps they are existing groups from the northern kingdom and from the scattered Jews. The third group seems to be the Lehtes.

19 And it came to pass that the Lord of the vineyard said unto the servant: Come, let us go to the nethermost part of the vineyard, and behold if the natural branches of the tree have not brought forth much fruit also, that I may lay up of the fruit thereof against the season, unto mine own self.

verse 19 “that I may lay up of the fruit thereof against the season” Again, a prophecy suggesting the coming major apostasy.

20 And it came to pass that they went forth whither the master had hid the natural branches of the tree, and he said unto the servant: Behold these; and he beheld the first that it had brought forth much fruit; and he beheld also that it was good. And he said unto the servant: Take of the fruit thereof, and lay it up against the season, that I may preserve it unto mine own self; for behold, said he, this long time have I nourished it, and it hath brought forth much fruit.

21 And it came to pass that the servant said unto his master: How comest thou hither to plant this tree, or this branch of the tree? For behold, it was the poorest spot in all the land of thy vineyard.

22 And the Lord of the vineyard said unto him: Counsel me not; I knew that it was a poor spot of ground; wherefore, I said unto thee, I have nourished it this long time, and thou beholdest that it hath brought forth much fruit.

23 And it came to pass that the Lord of the vineyard said unto his servant: Look hither; behold I have planted another branch of the tree also; and thou knowest that this spot of ground was poorer than the first. But, behold the tree. I have nourished it this long time, and it hath brought forth much fruit; therefore, gather it, and lay it up against the season, that I may preserve it unto mine own self.

verses 21-23 We can only speculate as to the identity of the two righteous branches of Israel planted on “poor” land. Perhaps these were a few from among the ten tribes, taken captive into Assyria, and also a few from among the Jews who had languished in Babylon.

24 And it came to pass that the Lord of the vineyard said again unto his servant: Look hither, and behold another branch also, which I have planted; behold that I have nourished it also, and it hath brought forth fruit.

25 And he said unto the servant: Look hither and behold the last. Behold, this have I planted in a good spot of ground; and I have nourished it this long time, and only a part of the tree hath brought forth tame fruit, and the other part of the tree hath brought forth wild fruit; behold, I have nourished this tree like unto the others.

verse 25 This third natural branch planted in “a good spot of ground” is likely Lehi’s descendants in the western hemisphere. Among them were both faithful and unfaithful individuals. Only part of this tree has brought forth good works. This is likely a reference to the believers (generally the Nephites) and the non-believers (the Lamanites) among the Lehites.

26 And it came to pass that the Lord of the vineyard said unto the servant: Pluck off the branches that have not brought forth good fruit, and cast them into the fire.

27 But behold, the servant said unto him: Let us prune it, and dig about it, and nourish it a little longer, that perhaps it may bring forth good fruit unto thee, that thou canst lay it up against the season.

verses 26-27 Prophets were sent to Lehi’s descendants to persuade them to repent. There were perhaps times when the Lord would have destroyed the non-believers among the Lehites had it not been for the prophets who served as mediators for their people before the throne of God. This is a vital function of prophets (see also JST, Exodus 32:9-11, 14, 30-33).

28 And it came to pass that the Lord of the vineyard and the servant of the Lord of the vineyard did nourish all the fruit of the vineyard.

verse 28 The Lord agrees to stay his hand and not destroy the unrighteous among the descendants of Lehi. Instead the Lord and his prophets patiently continue to minister to both the believers and non-believers.

verses 29-49 These verses are concerned with the period of time near the end of the dark ages, that period of great apostasy, but before the restoration of the gospel in 1830.

29 And it came to pass that a long time had passed away, and the Lord of the vineyard said unto his servant: Come, let us go down into the vineyard, that we may labor again in the vineyard. For behold, the time draweth near, and the end soon cometh; wherefore, I must lay up fruit against the season, unto mine own self.

verse 29 “a long time had passed away” The priesthood was taken from the earth and revelation ceased about AD 100. Spiritual darkness prevailed. This period of the so-called dark ages was to last until the sixteenth century when spiritual light again began to pour forth upon the earth. It seems certain that the Lord inspired the great leaders of the reformation such as Martin Luther, Huldreich Zwingli, John Calvin, and John Knox. In some mysterious way, the reformation prepared the earth for the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ which began in AD 1820 with Joseph Smith’s first vision. This verse probably refers to a time prior to Joseph Smith’s ministry when the Lord and his prophet servant, as they inspected the fruit of the vineyard, found “none of it which is good” (verse 32).

“For behold, the time draweth near, and the end soon cometh” Reference is made to the time of the Lord’s second coming in glory and the destruction of the wicked—the “end of the world.”

“I must lay up fruit against the season, unto mine own self.” This refers to the Lord’s searching for and nurturing righteous individuals. Hopefully the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints will prove to be the Lord’s most significant resource as he seeks to “lay up fruit [to himself] against the season.” The season “against” which he is seeking to lay up fruit is the period of destruction of the wicked just prior to his second coming.

verses 30-32 The Lord and his prophet servant find virtual complete apostasy. The house of Israel is in near total disarray.

30 And it came to pass that the Lord of the vineyard and the servant went down into the vineyard; and they came to the tree whose natural branches had been broken off, and the wild branches had been grafted in; and behold all sorts of fruit did cumber the tree.

verse 30 As the Lord and his servant came to inspect the spiritual status of Israel, the Lord’s chosen people, what did they find?

“they came to the tree whose natural branches had been broken off” The people of Israel were scattered to the corners of the earth.

“wild branches had been grafted in; and behold all sorts of fruit did cumber the tree” The “wild branches” and various “fruit” here seems less likely to refer to non-Israelites who have been adopted into the house of Israel because during this period there is no cohesive righteous body of Israel extant. It is more likely that this phrase refers to the extraneous and apostate doctrinal ideas, philosophies, and means of worship that “cumber the tree.” One of the definitions of cumber in Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language is, “to load, or crowd.”

31 And it came to pass that the Lord of the vineyard did taste of the fruit, every sort according to its number. And the Lord of the vineyard said: Behold, this long time have we nourished this tree, and I have laid up unto myself against the season much fruit.

verse 31 This verse implies that the lord of the vineyard was patient and long-suffering as he examined the apostate souls and their doctrines. It is interesting to ponder the patience, persistence, and forbearance with which the Lord has nurtured intransigent Israel since the days of father Jacob. Perhaps those of us who are having to nurture a wayward and rebellious child should take note.

32 But behold, this time it hath brought forth much fruit, and there is none of it which is good. And behold, there are all kinds of bad fruit; and it profiteth me nothing, notwithstanding all our labor; and now it grieveth me that I should lose this tree.

verse 32 “there is none of it which is good” We should certainly recognize and acknowledge the righteous individuals and worthwhile teachings found in most of the world’s churches. At the time of the restoration of the gospel, the churches near Joseph Smith’s home taught many sound Christian principles. Yet as institutions they find themselves condemned in this verse. Here, all churches save for the Lord’s authorized church, are referred to as “bad fruit” which “profiteth [the Lord] nothing.”

“and now it grieveth me that I should lose this tree” Here is a hint that the Lord gave some thought to completely destroying his chosen people.

33 And the Lord of the vineyard said unto the servant: What shall we do unto the tree, that I may preserve again good fruit thereof unto mine own self?

verse 33 Certainly this is a rhetorical question. The Lord intends that the gospel be restored in its fulness.

34 And the servant said unto his master: Behold, because thou didst graft in the branches of the wild olive-tree they have nourished the roots, that they are alive and they have not perished; wherefore thou beholdest that they are yet good.

verse 34 The servant makes the observation that the roots of the tree are still potentially salvageable, though in a dilapidated condition. There are still people with the blood of Israel on the earth who have a particular proclivity for believing eternal truths. In the commentary for verses 17 and 18 above, it was pointed out that in one period of the church's existence, probably between AD 30 and AD 100, the church was saved from extinction by an infusion of strength from the Gentile world. This infusion came in the form of Gentiles' accepting the gospel and joining the church—grafting in the branches of the wild olive-tree.

35 And it came to pass that the Lord of the vineyard said unto his servant: The tree profiteth me nothing, and the roots thereof profit me nothing so long as it shall bring forth evil fruit.

verse 35 A person's inheritance or his spiritual inclinations at birth mean little if there is no associated righteous performance. The apostle Paul warned, "For they are not all Israel, which are of Israel" (Romans 9:6).

36 Nevertheless, I know that the roots are good, and for mine own purpose I have preserved them; and because of their much strength they have hitherto brought forth, from the wild branches, good fruit.

verse 36 "the roots are good" The "roots" are symbolic of Israel's intrinsic inclination for obedience and acceptance of truth. Those born into the lineage of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are those who earned, during their preexistent lives, the gift and capacity to yearn for eternal things and to recognize truth. Tragically, many Israelites prove disloyal to their royal ancestry.

"because of their much strength they have hitherto brought forth . . . good fruit" The natural heavenly endowment that Israelites possess often has manifest itself in the world's history. To illustrate, we might point to a few specific events such as the great reformation, the colonization of America, the establishing of the constitution of the United States of America, and the willingness and spirit to fight for freedom in the Revolutionary War and in other wars.

37 But behold, the wild branches have grown and have overrun the roots thereof; and because that the wild branches have overcome the roots thereof it hath brought forth much evil fruit; and because that it hath brought forth so much evil fruit thou beholdest that it beginneth to perish; and it will soon become ripened, that it may be cast into the fire, except we should do something for it to preserve it.

verse 37 The influences of the Gentile world have not always been supportive of the gospel message and cause. Humanistic philosophies have at times overwhelmed the Church of God and driven it “into the wilderness” (D&C 86:3).

The pronoun “it” in this verse refers to “the tree” in verse 35—in other words to Israel.

It is well known among those who grow olive trees that when good branches are allowed to become too thick, the developing fruit will be of poor quality. The amount of root needs to be balanced with the amount of foliage (Hess, 93).

verses 38-40 The lord of the vineyard and his servant will now inspect those three young and tender branches that the Lord had hidden in the nethermost part of his vineyard (see verses 13-14).

38 And it came to pass that the Lord of the vineyard said unto his servant: Let us go down into the nethermost parts of the vineyard, and behold if the natural branches have also brought forth evil fruit.

39 And it came to pass that they went down into the nethermost parts of the vineyard. And it came to pass that they beheld that the fruit of the natural branches had become corrupt also; yea, the first and the second and also the last; and they had all become corrupt.

verses 38-39 All three branches of Israel planted in or scattered to the “nethermost parts” of the vineyard were found by the Lord to be corrupt. What peoples comprise these groups? We have previously speculated that those in the first two groups are a few among the ten lost tribes and among the scattered Jews. The third or “last” group seems to be the Lehites.

40 And the wild fruit of the last had overcome that part of the tree which brought forth good fruit, even that the branch had withered away and died.

verse 40 The unrighteous influences among Lehi’s descendants had destroyed all righteousness (between AD 200 and AD 421).

verses 41-47 The lord of the vineyard realizes that the apostasy is complete and universal. Between AD 421 and AD 1820, there was complete and worldwide apostasy. Thus, we know that all of scattered Israel, including the lost ten tribes, had apostatized from the truth. These verses form a section that might be referred to as the Lord’s dismay or the Lord’s quandary. He asks, “What could I have done more?”

41 And it came to pass that the Lord of the vineyard wept, and said unto the servant: What could I have done more for my vineyard?

verse 41 This verse is a remarkable witness of God’s love.

42 Behold, I knew that all the fruit of the vineyard, save it were these, had become corrupted. And now these which have once brought forth good fruit have also become corrupted; and now all the trees of my vineyard are good for nothing save it be to be hewn down and cast into the fire.

verse 42 “These” refers to the “natural branches” of scattered Israelites in verses 38 and 39.

In their current state of apostasy all Israel is good for nothing save it be subjecting them to the judgments of God.

43 And behold this last, whose branch hath withered away, I did plant in a good spot of ground; yea, even that which was choice unto me above all other parts of the land of my vineyard.

verse 43 Lehi’s descendants were separated from the rest of the world and “planted” in a chosen land, choice above all others.

44 And thou beheldest that I also cut down that which cumbered this spot of ground, that I might plant this tree in the stead thereof.

verse 44 “that which cumbered this spot of ground” This phrase may refer to the Jaredites who were “cut down” so that “this tree” (Lehi’s descendants) might be planted.

45 And thou beheldest that a part thereof brought forth good fruit, and a part thereof brought forth wild fruit; and because I plucked not the branches thereof and cast them into the fire, behold, they have overcome the good branch that it hath withered away.

verse 45 The Lehites brought forth both righteous and unrighteous works. Because the Lord did not destroy the unrighteous influences among the Lehites, evil finally overcame righteousness, and the entire nation was overcome by sin (AD 200 to AD 421).

46 And now, behold, notwithstanding all the care which we have taken of my vineyard, the trees thereof have become corrupted, that they bring forth no good fruit; and these I had hoped to preserve, to have laid up fruit thereof against the season, unto mine own self. But, behold, they have become like unto the wild olive-tree, and they are of no worth but to be hewn down and cast into the fire; and it grieveth me that I should lose them.

verse 46 In spite of the Lord’s efforts, evil influences prevailed and complete apostasy has resulted (AD 421 to AD 1820).

“and these I had hoped to preserve” One editorial note of some interest is that this phrase in the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon was rendered, “and these I had hope to preserve.” In his editing for the second edition of the Book of Mormon (1837, Kirtland), Joseph Smith made this change. In doing so he reinterpreted the original main verb had and the direct object noun hope as a past perfect verb phrase (had hoped). In doing so he created an exception to the pattern found consistently throughout the rest of the Book of Mormon text. Elsewhere in the book there are seventeen examples of the main verb have taking the noun hope as a direct object. See, for example, Jacob 7:5 and Mormon 6:4.

47 But what could I have done more in my vineyard? Have I slackened mine hand, that I have not nourished it? Nay, I have nourished it, and I have digged about it, and I have pruned it, and I have dunged it; and I have stretched forth mine hand almost all the day long, and the end draweth nigh. And it grieveth me that I should hew down all the trees of my vineyard, and cast them into the fire that they should be burned. Who is it that has corrupted my vineyard?

verse 47 There is no part of the vineyard (the earth) where the nourishing influence of the Lord is not felt. He is a just and impartial God. The Lord concludes this verse by asking, “What influences are responsible for this universal apostasy”? The servant will answer in the following verse.

It is still common practice to use dung, including human dung, to fertilize olive trees, although commercial fertilizers are becoming more common in industrialized nations (Hess, 92).

48 And it came to pass that the servant said unto his master: Is it not the loftiness of thy vineyard—have not the branches thereof overcome the roots which are good? And because the branches have overcome the roots thereof, behold they grew faster than the strength of the roots, taking strength unto themselves. Behold, I say, is not this the cause that the trees of thy vineyard have become corrupted?

verse 48 Here the servant senses that the master is sufficiently distressed that he is about to decide to destroy the entire vineyard, roots and all. This implies a destruction of the whole earth. In an attempt to get the master to change his mind, the servant suggests that the roots are still good—the blood of Israel still maintains its propensity for righteousness. But the “loftiness” of the vineyard, that is its pride or worldliness, has overcome the tendency for good. The meaning of the word “loftiness” is further evidenced in 2 Nephi 12:11: “And it shall come to pass that the lofty looks of man shall be humbled, and the haughtiness of men shall be bowed down.” This pride or loftiness with its intellectualism has the tendency to gain momentum in and of itself, thus threatening to overcome the roots or fundamental truths in the church. The servant emphasizes that a good potential remains, and he implies that the situation may be remedied. The roots of Israel represent the proclivity for righteousness referred to in the commentary on the phrase “the roots are good” in verse 36. The branches represent the responses of individual Israelites to the mortal experience including the temptations of the world. Those born into the lineage of Abraham did not come by this privilege by chance. They earned their royal heritage by their performance in the premortal world. Yet tragically in mortality this hard-won proclivity for eternal truths can be overcome by other mortal influences. When the branches become corrupt, they may overwhelm the native inclination for goodness—the roots. This causes the entire tree to become corrupt.

In mortality it is possible for any man to forsake his spiritual gifts and lose them even though they may represent centuries of striving and obedience in the preexistence. All he has to do is become preoccupied with the pulls of the world such as a desire for popularity, material possessions, power, and an over-reliance on self.

verses 49-54 In these verses the Lord is initially inclined to give up on the vineyard and completely destroy it, even its roots. At the bidding of the servant, however, the Lord makes a decision to “spare it a little longer.”

49 And it came to pass that the Lord of the vineyard said unto the servant: Let us go to and hew down the trees of the vineyard and cast them into the fire, that they shall not cumber the ground of my vineyard, for I have done all. What could I have done more for my vineyard?

verse 49 This is not the first time God had threatened to destroy all the inhabitants of the earth (see Genesis 6:7) or all his chosen people (see Exodus 32:9-11).

50 But, behold, the servant said unto the Lord of the vineyard: Spare it a little longer.

verses 51-74 These verses describe the final gathering of Israel in our dispensation beginning in 1830.

51 And the Lord said: Yea, I will spare it a little longer, for it grieveth me that I should lose the trees of my vineyard.

verses 49-51 Here again we see the influence of the prophet’s pleading for his people and causing the Lord to stay his hand. The Lord decides that the time of complete destruction of the wicked is not yet. As in the parable of the wheat and the tares, the Lord determines not to destroy the world yet, lest chances for future righteousness be destroyed with the wicked (see D&C 86:4-7). One is reminded here of the incident in Genesis 18:23-32 wherein Abraham pleads with the Lord to spare Sodom and Gomorrah.

52 Wherefore, let us take of the branches of these which I have planted in the nethermost parts of my vineyard, and let us graft them into the tree from whence they came; and let us pluck from the tree those branches whose fruit is most bitter, and graft in the natural branches of the tree in the stead thereof.

verse 52 “let us take of the branches of these which I have planted in the nethermost parts of my vineyard, and let us graft them into the tree from whence they came” Once the Lord decides to spare the earth a little longer, he determines what must be done. Scattered Israel (“the branches of these which I have planted in the nethermost parts of my vineyard”) must be gathered (“let us graft them into the tree from whence they came”). The scattered remnants of Israel from throughout the world will be gathered into the Lord’s latter-day Church in this final dispensation (AD 1830 to the onset of the Millennium). During this period the Church will be maintained in a righteous state, purged of all evil influences and constantly infused with righteous obedient Israelites (“let us pluck from the tree those branches whose fruit is most bitter, and graft in the natural branches of the tree in the stead thereof.”)

53 And this will I do that the tree may not perish, that, perhaps, I may preserve unto myself the roots thereof for mine own purpose.

verse 53 The word “perhaps” here should give us pause. We cannot merely assume that the Church today will succeed in its latter-day mission of gathering Israel. We must strive mightily.

“mine own purposes” We should be reminded that the purposes of God include more than gathering his chosen people Israel. The latter-day gathering will establish the mechanism whereby all mankind may be gathered in to the house of Israel some by adoption, and then nourished spiritually so that they might be gathered to him in the celestial kingdom.

54 And, behold, the roots of the natural branches of the tree which I planted whithersoever I would are yet alive; wherefore, that I may preserve them also for mine own purpose, I will take of the branches of this tree, and I will graft them in unto them. Yea, I will graft in unto them the branches of their mother tree, that I may preserve the roots also unto mine own self, that when they shall be sufficiently strong perhaps they may bring forth good fruit unto me, and I may yet have glory in the fruit of my vineyard.

verse 54 “the roots of the natural branches of the tree which I planted whithersoever I would are yet alive” The Lord affirms that wherever scattered Israelites are found, their propensity to receive eternal truths is still alive.

This interesting verse teaches yet another principle. Israel will not all be physically gathered to one place. The Lord will arrange for missionaries to come out from the central gathering of Israel to strengthen the outlying remnants, and the latter will flourish where they are. Note that he says, “I will take of the branches of this tree [the central gathering], and I will graft them [the nurturing influences of the center of gathering] in unto them [the outlying remnants of Israel].” This will hopefully result in strengthening of the outlying branches and eventually bring to pass the exaltation and eternal life of souls—“glory in the fruit of my vineyard.”

In this latter day, the “mother tree” is The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints or the fulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ. The Church will have self-sufficient branches throughout the world.

55 And it came to pass that they took from the natural tree which had become wild, and grafted in unto the natural trees, which also had become wild.

verse 55 “They” are the servants of the Lord. The “natural tree which had become wild” is the central church which had formerly been apostate but is now newly restored. The “natural trees, which also had become wild” are the outlying remnants of Israel which had also recently been apostate.

56 And they also took of the natural trees which had become wild, and grafted into their mother tree.

verses 55-56 During the final gathering of Israel there will pass infusions of spiritual strength and the message of the gospel both from the central gathering to outlying remnants of Israel (verse 55), and from the outlying remnants back to the central gathering place (verse 56). These influences will be communicated via the Lord’s servants, his missionaries and priesthood leaders.

verses 57-59 These verses refer to our own dispensation. During this period, the Lord will be long suffering. Only the “most bitter,” the most wicked, are to be expelled from the Lord’s latter-day Church. These are the individuals whose sins are so egregious that they must be expelled to protect the righteous.

These verses refer to the principle the Lord taught in his parable of the wheat and the tares (Matthew 13:24-30, 36-43; D&C 86). Let us briefly review this principle. A tare is a noxious weed, known today as darnel. It could be sown in a wheat field by an enemy of the farmer and prove to be most troublesome because it cannot be distinguished from the wheat among which it is growing until it ripens and its seed turns yellow. Hence, the farmer must allow both the wheat and the tares to grow together until the harvest. After harvesting farmers assigned their wives and children the tedious task of pulling out the tare kernels one by one from the good grain. If tares are ground into meal, they spoil the flour and may cause dizziness or nausea when eaten. The bundled tares are burned or fed to the chickens. The application of this principle to the final dispensation is obvious. The Lord will be long-suffering and will allow the wicked to exist among the righteous until the final cleansing of the earth prior to the Lord's second coming. This he will do to avoid destruction of some righteous during a wholesale destruction of the wicked.

57 And the Lord of the vineyard said unto the servant: Pluck not the wild branches from the trees, save it be those which are most bitter; and in them ye shall graft according to that which I have said.

verse 57 “and in them ye shall graft according to that which I have said” In place of the pruned wild branches, the servants of the Lord are commanded to “graft in the natural branches of the tree in the stead thereof” (verse 52). In other words infuse spiritual strength into the mother church by continuing to gather repentant scattered Israel.

58 And we will nourish again the trees of the vineyard, and we will trim up the branches thereof; and we will pluck from the trees those branches which are ripened, that must perish, and cast them into the fire.

verse 58 “we will nourish again the trees of the vineyard” We will give Israel one more chance.

“those branches which are ripened” These are individuals who have ripened in iniquity.

59 And this I do that, perhaps, the roots thereof may take strength because of their goodness; and because of the change of the branches, that the good may overcome the evil.

verse 59 “And this I do that, perhaps, the roots thereof may take strength because of their goodness” The Lord prunes the wild branches and adds natural branches hoping to strengthen his Church by “their goodness.” Reference has been made previously (see the commentary for verse 48) to the natural goodness of those who carry the blood of Israel in their veins. They have an affinity for spiritual truths which was earned by diligence in the preexistence. This affinity, however, may be overcome or lost because of the distractions of worldly influences.

Paul Y. Hoskisson has observed:

The allegory makes it clear that the grafting and pruning process, the gathering of Israel and the trying of the nations of the earth, will continue simultaneously until the Millennium. This means that as the Saints accept and assimilate additional nourishment from their scriptural sources, the Lord will require a higher level of performance. Thus, the allegory foresees in the grafting and pruning process a reversal of what President Benson has called the Samuel principle. According to this principle, “within certain bounds [God] grants unto men according to their desires.” The principle received its name from the story in 1 Samuel 8 where the people of Israel demanded, contrary to the wishes of God and his prophet Samuel, that God give them a king. God granted them their desire to their own eventual sorrow.

The reverse of the Samuel principle during the Restoration can be illustrated by the Word of Wisdom. As the Saints assimilated and lived the Word of Wisdom, God saw fit to require a stricter application of it, until today it is often used as a measure of a member’s commitment to the kingdom (The Allegory of the Olive Tree, edited by Stephen D. Ricks and John W. Welch, 90-91).

verses 60-62 These verses, which refer to the missionary effort of this final dispensation, are reminiscent of the Lord’s call to arms issued to latter-day missionaries and found in D&C 4:4 and D&C 33: “For behold the field is white already to harvest; and it is the eleventh hour, and the last time that I shall call laborers into my vineyard” (D&C 33:3). The missionary program of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is the final major effort of the Lord to gather Israel.

It should be emphasized that Ephraim is the birthright tribe (Jeremiah 31:9) and is responsible for redeeming the three branches which were planted in the nethermost parts of the vineyard—the Lehites, the Jews, and the ten lost tribes, as well as all others who qualify themselves for adoption into the house of Israel. In other words, the present-day Church of Jesus Christ is responsible for bearing the message of the restoration of the gospel to the entire world and for gathering scattered Israel.

60 And because that I have preserved the natural branches and the roots thereof, and that I have grafted in the natural branches again into their mother tree, and have preserved the roots of their mother tree, that, perhaps, the trees of my vineyard may bring forth again good fruit and that I may have joy again in the fruit of my vineyard, and, perhaps, that I may rejoice exceedingly that I have preserved the roots and the branches of the first fruit—verse 60 “I have preserved the roots and the branches of the first fruit” The concept of “first fruits” has been commented upon previously. These are those who will be resurrected with celestial bodies who will inherit that degree of glory. It was a custom in ancient Israel for the head of the family to go into the field before harvest time and mark the best of the fruit crop even before it was ripe—that showing the most promise. These were the “first fruits.” This portion was then dedicated or set apart to be later offered as a sacrifice to the Lord at the temple.

61 Wherefore, go to, and call servants, that we may labor diligently with our might in the vineyard, that we may prepare the way, that I may bring forth again the natural fruit, which natural fruit is good and the most precious above all other fruit.

verse 61 The Lord instructs the servant, his prophet, to call other servants—missionaries—to assist in the final gathering of Israel.

The Lord's exhortation "go to" means, in the common vernacular, "Go get 'em."

"that we may prepare the way" The earth is being groomed for the Lord's second coming. The Lord said to Joseph Smith: "I have sent mine everlasting covenant into the world, to be a light to the world, and to be a standard for my people, and for the Gentiles to seek to it, and to be a messenger before my face to prepare the way before me" (D&C 45:9).

What is this "natural fruit" which is "the most precious above all other fruit"? These are the potentially retrievable souls that may be gathered to Christ and eventually exalted by his atoning power.

62 Wherefore, let us go to and labor with our might this last time, for behold the end draweth nigh, and this is for the last time that I shall prune my vineyard.

63 Graft in the branches; begin at the last that they may be first, and that the first may be last, and dig about the trees, both old and young, the first and the last; and the last and the first, that all may be nourished once again for the last time.

verse 63 "begin at the last that they may be first" The last group scattered, the Lehites, will be the first to be grafted back. The second group to be grafted back will be the ten lost tribes, and the last branch will be the Jews.

64 Wherefore, dig about them, and prune them, and dung them once more, for the last time, for the end draweth nigh. And if it be so that these last grafts shall grow, and bring forth the natural fruit, then shall ye prepare the way for them, that they may grow.

verse 64 "if it be so that these last grafts shall grow . . . then shall ye prepare the way for them, that they may grow" This almost sounds like a warning to the Jews and other apostate Israelites. If they will accept the gospel, then they will be blessed with further light. The initial step is their responsibility.

verses 65-69 The servants will clear away the branches which bring forth bitter fruit, but not all at once, so the roots will still have strength. They will maintain equal root and top growth enabling the roots to remain viable while the good branches overcome the bad. Thus, the branches of the natural tree will be grafted again into the natural tree, and the bad will be eventually and finally cast away into the fire.

65 And as they begin to grow ye shall clear away the branches which bring forth bitter fruit, according to the strength of the good and the size thereof; and ye shall not clear away the bad thereof all at once, lest the roots thereof should be too strong for the graft, and the graft thereof shall perish, and I lose the trees of my vineyard.

66 For it grieveth me that I should lose the trees of my vineyard; wherefore ye shall clear away the bad according as the good shall grow, that the root and the top may be equal in strength, until the good shall overcome the bad, and the bad be hewn down and cast into the fire, that they cumber not the ground of my vineyard; and thus will I sweep away the bad out of my vineyard.

verses 65-66 “as they begin to grow ye shall clear away the branches which bring forth bitter fruit” Keep in mind that the Lord has been tolerating the presence in his latter-day Church of those peoples who may not be fully committed. Their presence has been tolerated so that the Church may continue to function and remain viable. The day is coming, however, when only the most committed will be allowed to stay, and the others will be “cleared away.” “They” in verse 65 refers to those scattered Israelites which have been gathered in, including the Lehites, the Gentiles, and the Jews.

As these new grafts gain in strength so that they become spiritually mature and self-sustaining, then the less committed “dead wood” in the Church can be pruned without threatening the stability of the Church.

“Lest the roots thereof should be too strong for the graft” Here the term “roots” seems to refer to the lofty doctrinal truths in the church. These set a standard for the members. If the standard is too high for the new members then the fledgling members will fall away, and the integrity of the church may be threatened. Allowing old members to remain even though their living up to the doctrinal standard is less than ideal may mean stability for the church organization while the new members are growing into mature and self- sustaining leaders.

67 And the branches of the natural tree will I graft in again into the natural tree;

verse 67 Nonetheless, the previously apostate Israelite groups, the branches of the natural tree, such as the Jews and the ten tribes, will eventually be successfully grafted back into the mother tree.

68 And the branches of the natural tree will I graft into the natural branches of the tree; and thus will I bring them together again, that they shall bring forth the natural fruit, and they shall be one.

verse 68 The previously apostate Israelite groups will join with those previously apostate who have already been grafted in, and eventually all Israel “shall be one.”

69 And the bad shall be cast away, yea, even out of all the land of my vineyard; for behold, only this once will I prune my vineyard.

verse 69 This verse may refer to that final destruction of the wicked which will precede the Lord's second coming. But keep in mind that "the bad" may also refer to the luke-warm members of the Church whose presence in the Church has been previously tolerated as an expediency.

70 And it came to pass that the Lord of the vineyard sent his servant; and the servant went and did as the Lord had commanded him, and brought other servants; and they were few.

verse 70 The Lord's "servant" here might be the prophet Joseph Smith. The "other servants" are the priesthood leaders and missionaries who will do the work of gathering. Their combined numbers will be relatively "few" compared to the masses who must be reached.

71 And the Lord of the vineyard said unto them: Go to, and labor in the vineyard, with your might. For behold, this is the last time that I shall nourish my vineyard; for the end is nigh at hand, and the season speedily cometh; and if ye labor with your might with me ye shall have joy in the fruit which I shall lay up unto myself against the time which will soon come.

verse 71 Here is the Lord's charge to the latter-day missionaries. The feeling is one of urgency, for "the end is nigh at hand." The Lord's exhortation to "go to" is explained in the commentary for verse 61.

"if ye labor with your might with me ye shall have joy in the fruit which I shall lay up unto myself" Here we have a coming together of a very ancient scripture with its modern-day counterpart: "And if it so be that you should labor all your days in crying repentance unto this people, and bring, save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father! And now, if your joy will be great with one soul that you have brought unto me into the kingdom of my Father, how great will be your joy if you should bring many souls unto me!" (D&C 18:15-16).

72 And it came to pass that the servants did go and labor with their might; and the Lord of the vineyard labored also with them; and they did obey the commandments of the Lord of the vineyard in all things.

verse 72 The fact that the Lord labors with his missionaries should be a fact of great comfort to all who labor. President Harold B. Lee, in closing a general conference of the Church, said: "There has come to me in these last few days a deepening and reassuring faith. I can't leave this conference without saying to you that I have a conviction that the Master hasn't been absent from us on these occasions. This is his Church. Where else would he rather be than right here at the headquarters of his Church? He isn't an absentee master; he is concerned about us. He wants us to follow where he leads" (CR, October 1972, 176).

verses 73-76 It is prophesied that The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints will prosper in righteousness, will establish Zion, and will be found worthy to stand in the Lord's presence when he comes again.

73 And there began to be the natural fruit again in the vineyard; and the natural branches began to grow and thrive exceedingly; and the wild branches began to be plucked off and to be cast away; and they did keep the root and the top thereof equal, according to the strength thereof.

verse 73 “they did keep the root and the top thereof equal” The growth of the church must be orderly. This orderly growth is required so that a large sudden infusion of one cultural group may not overcome the roots, that is—the basic integrity of the doctrine of the church.

74 And thus they labored, with all diligence, according to the commandments of the Lord of the vineyard, even until the bad had been cast away out of the vineyard, and the Lord had preserved unto himself that the trees had become again the natural fruit; and they became like unto one body; and the fruits were equal; and the Lord of the vineyard had preserved unto himself the natural fruit, which was most precious unto him from the beginning.

verse 74 “they became like unto one body” The previously divided and variously apostate groups of Israelites will begin to join together in the Lord's church. Also the Gentiles will be grafted into the “mother tree” and the whole will form “one body.” Here, again, is the ultimate goal of the Savior—to see his people gathered to him and to each other; to enjoy the atonement or at-one-ment which awaits all who will accept him.

“the natural fruit, which was most precious unto him from the beginning” Those in the house of Israel have been particularly precious to the Lord not only since the mortal existence of the patriarchs Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, but even from premortal times when they distinguished themselves by righteous conformity to the laws of God.

verses 75-76 This is the period of the Millennium.

75 And it came to pass that when the Lord of the vineyard saw that his fruit was good, and that his vineyard was no more corrupt, he called up his servants, and said unto them: Behold, for this last time have we nourished my vineyard; and thou beholdest that I have done according to my will; and I have preserved the natural fruit, that it is good, even like as it was in the beginning. And blessed art thou; for because ye have been diligent in laboring with me in my vineyard, and have kept my commandments, and have brought unto me again the natural fruit, that my vineyard is no more corrupted, and the bad is cast away, behold ye shall have joy with me because of the fruit of my vineyard.

76 For behold, for a long time will I lay up of the fruit of my vineyard unto mine own self against the season, which speedily cometh; and for the last time have I nourished my vineyard, and pruned it, and dug about it, and dunged it; wherefore I will lay up unto mine own self of the fruit, for a long time, according to that which I have spoken.

verse 76 “for a long time will I lay up of the fruit of my vineyard unto mine own self against the season” This “long time” likely refers to the Millennium.

“against the season, which speedily cometh” Here is already a reference to that ominous time at the end of the Millennium when Satan and his forces shall again be unleashed.

77 And when the time cometh that evil fruit shall again come into my vineyard, then will I cause the good and the bad to be gathered; and the good will I preserve unto myself, and the bad will I cast away into its own place. And then cometh the season and the end; and my vineyard will I cause to be burned with fire.

verse 77 This verse has reference to the end of the Millennium when Satan will again gain an influence in the hearts of men. The Lord will gather the good to himself, and Satan and his adherents will come up to do battle. This will obviously be an emotional event in the world’s history.

John the Revelator wrote: “And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea” (Revelation 20:7-8). In modern revelation we read: “And then [Satan] shall be loosed for a little season, that he may gather together his armies. And Michael, the seventh angel, even the archangel, shall gather together his armies, even the hosts of heaven. And the devil shall gather together his armies; even the hosts of hell, and shall come up to battle against Michael and his armies. And then cometh the battle of the great God; and the devil and his armies shall be cast away into their own place, that they shall not have power over the saints any more at all” (D&C 88:111-114).

The wicked will be banished to their “own place” to suffer eternal condemnation, and, finally, the earth will be burned to prepare it for celestial glory. This is the final “end of the earth.” The world’s first “end” (the “end of the world”) occurred when the telestial earth was purged to prepare it for its terrestrial phase, the Millennium. After each of the earth’s “ends,” the scriptures teach that “there shall be a new heaven and a new earth” (D&C 29:23).

Speaking of this final end of the earth, Elder Bruce R. McConkie wrote: “There was a new earth and new heavens when the Millennium commenced. This is a second new heaven and new earth; it is the celestial earth and its heaven. The language in each instance is similar, but the meaning is different. In one instance the new earth is the paradisiacal [millennial] earth; in this case, it is the celestial globe” (Millennial Messiah, 696).

The end of the world should not be confused with the end of the earth. The former occurs when Christ comes in his glory, the latter follows his millennial reign (JS-M 1:4, 55; D&C 29:22-23). The latter will occur as the earth is changed to a celestial sphere by the glory of God.

Chapter 6 is Jacob's brief commentary on the previous chapter. Jacob emphasizes certain points of Zenos's prophetic allegory.

1 And now, behold, my brethren, as I said unto you that I would prophesy, behold, this is my prophecy—that the things which this prophet Zenos spake, concerning the house of Israel, in the which he likened them unto a tame olive-tree, must surely come to pass.

verse 1 “this is my prophecy” Undoubtedly Jacob had studied, pondered, and prayed about Zenos's allegory. This verse provides evidence that the Holy Ghost had borne witness to Jacob of its truth. Zenos's prophecy had become Jacob's prophecy.

2 And the day that he shall set his hand again the second time to recover his people, is the day, yea, even the last time, that the servants of the Lord shall go forth in his power, to nourish and prune his vineyard; and after that the end soon cometh.

verse 2 “he shall set his hand again the second time to recover his people” This phrase refers to the second gathering of Israel. The first took place when Moses led the Israelites out of bondage in Egypt. Or, perhaps the first gathering occurred following the Babylonian captivity. The second gathering is now in progress as Israel gathers to the gospel and to the stakes of Zion. Thus, the verse refers to the latter days—to this final dispensation.

3 And how blessed are they who have labored diligently in his vineyard; and how cursed are they who shall be cast out into their own place! And the world shall be burned with fire.

verse 3 “how blessed are they who have labored diligently in his vineyard” These are they who have participated in the divine activity of at-one-ment (see the commentary for Jacob 4:12).

We have learned that there will be two cleansings of the earth. The first will occur prior to the Lord's second coming and will lead to the terrestrialization of the earth as it is prepared for the millennial thousand years. This event is referred to as the end of the world. The second occurs at the end of the thousand years and prepares the earth to become the celestial kingdom. This event is referred to as the end of the earth. In this verse it seems likely that the former reference pertains. At this cleansing it is likely the world of spirits, specifically the spirit prison, will receive a huge influx.

4 And how merciful is our God unto us, for he remembereth the house of Israel, both roots and branches; and he stretches forth his hands unto them all the day long; and they are a stiffnecked and a gainsaying people; but as many as will not harden their hearts shall be saved in the kingdom of God.

verse 4 “the house of Israel, both roots and branches” One might interpret “roots” and “branches” in various ways such as the blood of Israel for “roots” and the various divisions or tribes of Israel for “branches.” However, one might choose to define these two terms, it seems clear that the phrase “both roots and branches” refers to the whole of the house of Israel.

“a stiffnecked and a gainsaying people” This seems an apt description of historical Israel. “Stiffnecked,” of course, means stubborn or bullheaded. To “gainsay” is to contradict, deny, or oppose.

“as many as will not harden their hearts shall be saved in the kingdom of God” See the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

5 Wherefore, my beloved brethren, I beseech of you in words of soberness that ye would repent, and come with full purpose of heart, and cleave unto God as he cleaveth unto you. And while his arm of mercy is extended towards you in the light of the day, harden not your hearts.

verse 5 “cleave unto God” Here is another way of expressing the concept of at-one-ment (see the commentary for Jacob 4:12).

“arm of mercy” This phrase is unique to the Book of Mormon and is not found in the Old Testament. It is found two additional times in the Book of Mormon (Mosiah 29:20 and 3 Nephi 9:14). It, of course, implies the idea that the Lord is offering forgiveness to all those who repent. In fact, he is mercifully offering to each of us more than we actually merit.

“in the light of the day” This phrase simply means while the opportunity is presenting itself. The converse was expressed by Amulek: “there cometh a night of darkness wherein there can be no labor performed” (Alma 34:33).

6 Yea, today, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts; for why will ye die?

verse 6 We might rephrase this verse: If you have any inclination to accept his gospel, then do so now. Why take the chance of being separated from him eternally?

Again, see the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

7 For behold, after ye have been nourished by the good word of God all the day long, will ye bring forth evil fruit, that ye must be hewn down and cast into the fire?

verse 7 “after ye have been nourished by the good word of God all the day long” This phrase refers to the many spiritual resources that have ever been available to those of the house of Israel including scripture, prophets, and the promptings of the Spirit.

8 Behold, will ye reject these words? Will ye reject the words of the prophets; and will ye reject all the words which have been spoken concerning Christ, after so many have spoken concerning him; and deny the good word of Christ, and the power of God, and the gift of the Holy Ghost, and quench the Holy Spirit, and make a mock of the great plan of redemption, which hath been laid for you?

verse 8 “all the words which have been spoken concerning Christ” Here, again, is a reference to the important fact that all of the prophets since father Adam have preached and prophesied explicitly of Christ’s birth and ministry (“the good word of Christ”)—a fact long since lost to the world because of vital alterations and deletions from the scriptural record (see Jacob 4:4; see also Luke 24:25-27).

“deny . . . the power of God, and the gift of the Holy Ghost” If you study 1 Nephi 10:17 carefully, you may logically conclude that Jacob here in this verse is referring to denying the gift of revelation. Jacob is actually borrowing his brother’s terminology—see 2 Nephi 28:26.

“quench the Holy Spirit Scripturally, the word “quench” means to snuff out or douse the light or fire of (see also 2 Samuel 21:17; Jeremiah 4:4; 21:12; Ephesians 6:16; 1 Thessalonians 5:19). Thus, to quench the Holy Spirit is to ignore his promptings and to contend against his teachings.

“the great plan of redemption” This is the plan of salvation which is God’s plan to redeem us from our two major predicaments here in mortality—physical and spiritual death. See the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:6.

9 Know ye not that if ye will do these things, that the power of the redemption and the resurrection, which is in Christ, will bring you to stand with shame and awful guilt before the bar of God?

verse 9 “if ye will do these things” If you reject Jesus Christ.

“the power of the redemption and the resurrection, which is in Christ” This phrase refers to Christ’s power and authority, earned in Gethsemane and on the cross, to judge mankind. This judgment may be one of blessing and exaltation or one of condemnation.

10 And according to the power of justice, for justice cannot be denied, ye must go away into that lake of fire and brimstone, whose flames are unquenchable, and

verse 10 “lake of fire and brimstone” This expression, of course, does not describe the literal fate of anyone. Rather, it is a figurative or symbolic expression that is discussed more fully in the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:16. In scripture this expression is used to refer to the torment of those in the spirit prison and also those who become sons of perdition. Joseph Smith explained the meaning of this symbolism as he spoke of the spirit prison: “A man is his own tormenter and his own condemner. . . . The torment of disappointment in the mind of man is as exquisite as a lake burning with fire and brimstone” (TPJS, 357). “The great misery of departed spirits in the world of spirits . . . is to know that they come short of the glory that others enjoy and that they might have enjoyed themselves” (Ibid., 310-11).

11 O then, my beloved brethren, repent ye, and enter in at the strait gate, and continue in the way which is narrow, until ye shall obtain eternal life.

verse 11 By this time it is not likely necessary to mention that “strait” does not mean straight. Rather it means narrow, demanding, rigorous, difficult to negotiate (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 8:20). For a discussion of why the word strait is appropriate here (rather than straight), see the supplemental article Strait and Straight in the Book of Mormon.

12 O be wise; what can I say more?

13 Finally, I bid you farewell, until I shall meet you before the pleasing bar of God, which bar striketh the wicked with awful dread and fear. Amen.

verse 13 “until I shall meet you before the pleasing bar of God” Here and in Moroni 10:34, the prophets Jacob and Moroni refer to meeting us when we appear before “the pleasing bar” of God to be judged. Dr. Royal Skousen has reported that Christian Gellinek (who studied law at the University of Gottingen in Germany) believes that the textually difficult reading “the pleasing bar of God” can be readily resolved if we replace the word pleasing with pleading—in other words, Jacob and Moroni will meet us before “the pleading bar of God” (FARMS Update, no. 172, volume 24, 2004). Phonetically, the words pleading and pleasing are nearly identical. Dr. Royal Skousen suggests that what seems to have happened is that Oliver Cowdery, being completely unfamiliar with the legal term pleading bar, twice substituted the more familiar word pleasing for pleading, even though pleasing does not make much sense. The term pleading bar appears to have been used in the English courts of earlier times. Literature from the early 1600s from England does contain this term. This term is now archaic in England. The legal language now used in England refers to the defendant as “in the dock” (no longer “standing at the pleading bar”).

The farewell in this verse could only be written by Jacob, of all the Book of Mormon authors. Jacob's tone here is very different from that of his brother's powerful farewell. Where Jacob ends quietly and on a minor key of distress, Nephi concluded with timpani rolls and cymbal clashes: "I glory in plainness; I glory in truth; I glory in my Jesus." Nephi was all confidence. Nephi's words challenge us to be righteous, as he had his older brothers: "You and I shall stand face to face before his bar." His final statement restated his lifelong commitment to absolute obedience; it could serve as an epitaph: "For thus hath the Lord commanded me, and I must obey" (2 Nephi 33:6-7, 11, 15). Jacob's farewell is moving, but in a very different way. He felt assured of personal salvation, and he looked forward to meeting the reader at the "pleasing" judgment bar of God (Jacob 6:13). But his farewell seems much less optimistic about the salvation of others.

It seems that Jacob intended that his farewell in this verse would be the end of his writings. His comments on Sherem the antichrist in the next chapter were apparently something of an afterthought written "some years" later.

Jacob 7 The Antichrist Sherem comes among the Nephites and leads many away from the coming Christ. He demanded of Jacob a sign, and consequently he was struck down. Several days later he died by not before calling together the Nephites and denying his previous erroneous teachings.

This chapter consists largely of Jacob's report of his experience with the antichrist Sherem. As we consider this account, we will take special note of Sherem's strategy for leading the Nephites astray, so that we might fortify ourselves against the apostate philosophies of our own day. Writing about the Book of Mormon, President Ezra Taft Benson taught: "The Book of Mormon exposes the enemies of Christ. It confounds false doctrines and lays down contention (see 2 Nephi 3:12). It fortifies the humble followers of Christ against the evil designs, strategies, and doctrines of the devil in our day. The types of apostates in the Book of Mormon are similar to those we have today. God, with his infinite foreknowledge, so molded the Book of Mormon that we might become aware of the error and know how to combat false educational, political, religious, and philosophical concepts of our time" (A Witness and a Warning. Salt Lake City: Deseret Book, 1988, 3).

1 And now it came to pass after some years had passed away, there came a man among the people of Nephi, whose name was Sherem.

verse 1 Sherem is unlike some of the infamous apostates we will encounter later in the Book of Mormon (Nehor, Zeezrom, and Korihor—see a discussion on these three in the commentary for Alma 1:2). Sherem is not an atheist or opposed to religion. Rather he is a purist who wishes to continue living the law of Moses but resists the idea of a Messiah. He accuses Jacob of leading people away into apostasy, blasphemy, and false prophesy. And for that he is ultimately punished.

2 And it came to pass that he began to preach among the people, and to declare unto them that there should be no Christ. And he preached many things which were flattering unto the people; and this he did that he might overthrow the doctrine of Christ.

verse 2 Sherem denies the reality of and the necessity for Jesus Christ. His implications are that there will be no Messiah, no Christ, and no man has the ability to prophesy of future things. We will later learn that typically the antichrist even denies man's fallen condition, and thus he also denies the fact that man has any need to be liberated from anything. Typically, today's antichrists espouse the philosophy of humanism, the idea that man, not God, is the center of the universe. According to this school of thought, there is no higher law to which man is accountable. Thus, humanism emphasizes the self-sufficiency of man, his agency, and his unencumbered right to self-determination. A humanist is inaccessible to promptings of the Spirit. He feels he is alone in the universe and therefore feels he must get by as best he can on his own. Only those influences in his world which he can perceive with his physical senses are meaningful to him. He might well be considered a “good man” and a noble man and even a distinguished man. He often possesses the virtues of the world such as “common sense,” integrity, education, and material success. He is an advocate, often a vocal and active advocate, for personal freedoms. He would be likely to advocate the woman’s right of choice relative to the issue of abortion, and he would find nothing wrong with sex between two consenting adults. He would not oppose secular laws, so long as they did not compromise personal freedoms. He is “naturalistic” and would be inclined to be skeptical and even cynical about any idea of a divine being or any life beyond this mortal one. He might claim that a “sign” would be necessary, one which he might perceive with his senses, before he could believe. However, because he lacks responsiveness to the promptings of the Spirit, no sign could ever really convert him. No spiritual truth is actually within his reach.

“he preached many things which were flattering unto the people” What does it mean in this context to flatter? To flatter is to make people feel comfortable and encouraged when circumstances are neither comfortable nor encouraging, and to make them feel that all is well when, in fact—spiritually speaking—all is not well. To flatter also means to raise false hopes and expectations. In the context of this verse, it is likely Sherem attempted to make the people feel comfortable in their sins.

The “doctrine of Christ” is the gospel. The very essence of the doctrine of Christ is: Deliverance from death and hell and eternal torment is available through the atonement of Jesus Christ. For a discussion of the doctrine of Christ, see the introductory commentary for 2 Nephi 31.

3 And he labored diligently that he might lead away the hearts of the people, insomuch that he did lead away many hearts; and he knowing that I, Jacob, had faith in Christ who should come, he sought much opportunity that he might come unto me.

verse 3 “And he labored diligently that he might lead away the hearts of the people” Why was Sherem so aggressive in promulgating his humanistic philosophy? Why did he not simply hold to his own beliefs and leave other people to theirs? Perhaps the answer is found in verse 14 where Jacob is inspired to know that Sherem once possessed a testimony of the Savior. A verse in the book of Alma is helpful here: “And thus we can plainly discern, that after a people have been once enlightened by the Spirit of God, and have had great knowledge of things pertaining to righteousness, and then have fallen away into sin and transgression, they become more hardened, and thus their state becomes worse than though they had never known these things” (Alma 24:30). It would seem that the apostate is often driven to justify himself. He must prove—mostly to himself—that there is nothing beyond this natural world. It is obvious he possesses a subtle fear he may be wrong; and that there is in fact a God. And God is aware of him. Indeed, this fear may become an obsession. He may appear unable to rest until he convinces others—and thereby himself—that he is right.

“he sought much opportunity that he might come unto me” It is obvious that Sherem was not shy in trying to promulgate his beliefs. He wanted to go right to “the top”—to the prophet himself with his message.

4 And he was learned, that he had a perfect knowledge of the language of the people; wherefore, he could use much flattery, and much power of speech, according to the power of the devil.

verse 4 In modern day terminology, Sherem was articulate, attractive, charismatic, and he appealed powerfully to the people. Typically, antichrists are worldly-wise, polished, glib, and clever at manipulating human behavior. We thus see an example of the principle that virtually all of the gifts of God are subject to perversion. Sherem, and indeed all antichrists, strive to make their adherents feel comfortable and at home in their carnality.

5 And he had hope to shake me from the faith, notwithstanding the many revelations and the many things which I had seen concerning these things; for I truly had seen angels, and they had ministered unto me. And also, I had heard the voice of the Lord speaking unto me in very word, from time to time; wherefore, I could not be shaken.

verse 5 Remember that Jacob also had actually seen the Savior (2 Nephi 2:3-4).

6 And it came to pass that he came unto me, and on this wise did he speak unto me, saying: Brother Jacob, I have sought much opportunity that I might speak unto you; for I have heard and also know that thou goest about much, preaching that which ye call the gospel, or the doctrine of Christ.

verse 6 Sherem confronted directly and boldly the Lord’s prophet. Sherem addresses Jacob as “Brother Jacob” in an ingratiating attempt to flatter and befriend him. This presumptuousness seems characteristic of Satan and his adherents; recall that the Lord himself was confronted personally by the devil.

“Brother Jacob, I have sought much opportunity that I might speak unto you; for I have heard and also know that thou goest about much, preaching” It is estimated that the adult male population descended from the original Nephite group could not have exceeded fifty by this time. This number of men is only enough to populate one modest size village. In light of this, does it not strike you as unusual that Sherem would not have had more interaction with Jacob who was the head priest and religious teacher of the Nephites? Why did he have to seek “much opportunity” to speak to Jacob in such a tiny settlement? Also, where would Jacob have to go on his preaching travels to which Sherem refers if only a modest size settlement was involved? Is it possible that Sherem was a Lamanite? It seems unlikely that one from the enemies’ camp would be allowed to wander into the Nephite settlement and preach at will to the people there. One solution is that the number of Nephites was much larger than we can estimate, perhaps because the descendants of Lehi joined with some other peoples which they encountered in the land on their arrival (John L. Sorenson, “When Lehi’s Party Arrived in the Land, Did They Find Others There?” in the Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, volume 1, number 1 [Fall 1992], 1-34). John L. Sorenson wrote: “Archaeology, linguistics, and related areas of study have established beyond doubt that a variety of peoples inhabited virtually every place in the Western Hemisphere a long time ago. The presence of almost 1,500 different languages belonging to dozens of major groupings which were found in the Americas when the Europeans arrived can be explained only by supposing that speakers of the ancestral tongues had been in America for thousands of years. The notion that ‘the [Mesoamerican] Indians’ constituted a single ethnic entity is a totally outdated one which neither scholars nor lay people can justifiably believe nowadays. Abundant facts are completely contrary to the idea. The most that is possible is that in some limited territory in a part of America, Lehi’s people and those who came with Mulek had their chance to establish their own niches where they could control their own fate. . . It seems unavoidable that other peoples were in the land, somewhere, when Nephi’s boat landed on the shore of the ‘west sea,’ and quite certainly some of them were survivors from the Jaredite people.”

The “doctrine of Christ” is the gospel. See the commentary for verse 2 of this chapter.

7 And ye have led away much of this people that they pervert the right way of God, and keep not the law of Moses which is the right way; and convert the law of Moses into the worship of a being which ye say shall come many hundred years hence. And now behold, I, Sherem, declare unto you that this is blasphemy; for no man knoweth of such things; for he cannot tell of things to come. And after this manner did Sherem contend against me.

verse 7 It interesting to note that the accusations of Sherem are essentially the same as those that will be leveled by two other antichrists who will come later in the Book of Mormon, Nehor (Alma 1) and Korihor (Alma 30).

“I, Sherem, declare unto you that this is blasphemy; for no man knoweth of such things” Blasphemy is of two types: (1) speaking or acting offensively to or about the divine, and (2) claiming the attributes or prerogatives of Deity. Here Sherem wrongly accuses Jacob of the second type.

“for no man knoweth of such things; for he cannot tell of things to come”

An extreme naturalistic view of reality is typical of the antichrist. That is, they rely exclusively upon human sensory perception and human reason to discern truth. Naturalistic thoughts and preachings often contain much in the way of truth. It does not and cannot include spiritual truths, as humanists are quite unresponsive to the Spirit's promptings. And the natural man cannot accept spiritual truths (1 Corinthians 2:14). Sherem, as is typical of all doubters, assumes that since he has not experienced Christ, then there is no Christ, and no one else has experienced him either.

Among the Nephites, the Mosaic law was in force (2 Nephi 5:10; Jarom 1:5). John W. Welch has pointed out that Sherem's allegations against Jacob were not merely random criticisms but rather well-constructed accusations based on the provisions of the law of Moses (FARMS Update, no. 74, January 1991). Sherem believed that the law of Moses was wholly sufficient. If proven to be correct, these charges might have justified Jacob's being indicted and even executed. Sherem's "capital-offense" complaints against Jacob might be summarized as follows (John W. Welch, The Legal Cases in the Book of Mormon, Provo, UT: Brigham Young University Press and the Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2008, 117): (1) causing public apostasy ("Ye have led away much of this people that they pervert the right way of God, and keep not the law of Moses"). This, according to Deuteronomy 13:1-18 was a sin punishable by death. (2) blasphemy ("I, Sherem, declare unto you that this is blasphemy"). This is another capital offense (Exodus 20:7; Leviticus 24:10-16). (3) false prophecy ("no man knoweth of such things; for he cannot tell of things to come"). Deuteronomy 18:20 requires that a man shall be put to death if he speaks "in the name of other gods."

It is likely that Sherem was to some degree sincere in his criticism and committed to his views since he was putting his own life on the line by making these accusations. The ancient punishment for a false accuser was to suffer that which "he had thought to have done unto his brother" (Deuteronomy 19:19). That is, he would suffer the same penalty that the individual whom he was falsely accusing would suffer if the victim of his accusation would suffer if he had been guilty of those things of which he was falsely accused.

8 But behold, the Lord God poured in his Spirit into my soul, insomuch that I did confound him in all his words.

verse 8 The Lord blessed Jacob with spiritual discernment and insight, and he was able to "confound" Sherem. To confound is to bewilder, confuse, throw into a state of disorder, stupefy (Webster).

9 And I said unto him: Deniest thou the Christ who shall come? And he said: If there should be a Christ, I would not deny him; but I know that there is no Christ, neither has been, nor ever will be.

verse 9 “If there should be a Christ, I would not deny him” Sherem is saying, “If there were a Christ here and now for me to see and touch and hear, then I would believe.” Do you suppose Sherem would have accepted Christ had Sherem lived at the time of Christ’s mortal ministry? It is likely he would not have accepted Christ.

“I know that there is no Christ” Here again we see evidence of Sherem’s naturalistic bent: “Since I have not experienced him, then he does not exist.”

10 And I said unto him: Believest thou the scriptures? And he said, Yea.

verse 10 Keep in mind that it is not possible to obtain a testimony of Jesus from the scriptures or from any other source without being receptive to the promptings of the Holy Spirit. Sherem’s “belief” in the scriptures was obviously based solely on an intellectual understanding.

11 And I said unto him: Then ye do not understand them; for they truly testify of Christ. Behold, I say unto you that none of the prophets have written, nor prophesied, save they have spoken concerning this Christ.

verse 11 An individual can truly “understand” the scriptures only if he is responsive to the promptings of the Spirit of God. To understand the scriptures in this way is to truly feel the eternal significance of them.

Read this important verse again, and let its vital message sink in. See the commentary for Jacob 4:4. All of the prophets since Adam knew and preached of the coming of Jesus Christ.

12 And this is not all—it has been made manifest unto me, for I have heard and seen; and it also has been made manifest unto me by the power of the Holy Ghost; wherefore, I know if there should be no atonement made all mankind must be lost.

verse 12 “I have heard and seen” Jacob’s father, Lehi, said of his son Jacob, “Thou hast beheld in thy youth his glory; wherefore, thou art blessed even as they unto whom he shall minister in the flesh” (2 Nephi 2:4).

“if there should be no atonement made all mankind must be lost” Here is a reiteration of the important concept that without Christ’s atonement, all mankind would become sons of perdition (see 2 Nephi 9:8 and its commentary).

13 And it came to pass that he said unto me: Show me a sign by this power of the Holy Ghost, in the which ye know so much.

verse 13 Antichrists are typically sign seekers. The gift of faith does not come to an individual until after a trial of that faith. The prophet Moroni wrote: “Dispute not because ye see not, for ye receive no witness until after the trial of your faith” (Ether 12:6). A person receives no “witness” or confirmation of his faith until after his faith is tried. How does this “trial” occur? The trial comes in the “experimenting upon [the] words” of God—the deliberate acting upon his words hoping to obtain the gifts of faith. The trial of the faith is in the “experimenting.” When the Spirit judges that sufficient effort has been expended—including diligently working, pondering, praying, and persisting—then the gifts of faith will be granted. For a comprehensive discussion of the concept of faith, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1 chapter 9, Revealed Faith, chapter 10, Deliberate Faith and Revealed Faith, and chapter 11, Other notes on Faith.

A person might say, “Before I pay my tithing, I must know for sure that it is a true principle.” The Lord’s way is just the opposite. His way is to first act in faith and deliberately pay your tithing. Then over time your faith in the law of tithing will be granted as a revealed spiritual gift.

An individual who demands outward evidence of the power of God as a condition for his believing is seeking to circumvent the process by which faith is universally developed. He wants proof without paying the price. As with an adulterer, he wants the benefits, superficial and transient though they may be, without accepting any responsibility—pleasure without obligation. This is exactly the opposite of the Lord’s way. Thus, it is “a wicked and adulterous generation [that] seeketh after a sign” (Matthew 16:4). Joseph Smith affirmed this principle, saying it “is eternal, undeviating, and firm as the pillars of heaven; for whenever you see a man seeking after a sign, you may set it down that he is an adulterous man” (TPJS, 157). Though the sexual sin of adultery is warned against abundantly in scripture, adultery is referred to by the Lord, at times, in quite another context. In scripture, the Lord often characterized himself as the bridegroom or husband while his people or the church are symbolized as the bride or wife. When the symbol of the adulterous wife is used, it may refer to the unfaithful breaker of covenants, one who chases after other gods leaving behind the true Lord and Master. Hence, a “wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign” (Matthew 16:4).

Almost all heavenly signs are given as a reward for great faith to further strengthen those who manifest that faith (D&C 63:11). The doubting sign seeker is only rarely afforded the opportunity to witness a miracle. In these unusual instances the sign usually takes the form of a divine judgment upon the doubter (Alma 30:48-56).

14 And I said unto him: What am I that I should tempt God to show unto thee a sign in the thing which thou knowest to be true? Yet thou wilt deny it, because thou art of the devil. Nevertheless, not my will be done; but if God shall smite thee, let that be a sign unto thee that he has power, both in heaven and in earth; and also, that Christ shall come. And thy will, O Lord, be done, and not mine.

verse 14 This is a remarkable and difficult verse. Jacob discerns that Sherem is requesting a sign for something he already knows is true. It seems likely that he had previously received a witness of the truth of the gospel and of Jesus Christ. Without continued re-enforcement of one's testimony by ministrations of the Spirit, a testimony will deteriorate and soon disappear. Therefore, it seems unlikely that Sherem at this particular time still possessed a testimony of the Savior.

15 And it came to pass that when I, Jacob, had spoken these words, the power of the Lord came upon him, insomuch that he fell to the earth. And it came to pass that he was nourished for the space of many days.

verse 15 "he was nourished for the space of many days" This may mean that since Sherem was unable to care for himself, his physical needs were provided for. It might also mean something quite different. Study the use of the word "nourished" in Jacob 6:7. Perhaps Sherem's spiritual needs were addressed as well.

verses 16-19 In this incapacitated state, it is obvious that Sherem still had use of his mental faculties. Why would a man who is about to die confess his sins? See the commentary for Alma 1:15.

16 And it came to pass that he said unto the people: Gather together on the morrow, for I shall die; wherefore, I desire to speak unto the people before I shall die.

17 And it came to pass that on the morrow the multitude were gathered together; and he spake plainly unto them and denied the things which he had taught them, and confessed the Christ, and the power of the Holy Ghost, and the ministering of angels.

18 And he spake plainly unto them, that he had been deceived by the power of the devil. And he spake of hell, and of eternity, and of eternal punishment.

verse 18 "he had been deceived by the power of the devil" Sherem was now apparently speaking the truth. He had been deceived. Those who teach doctrines which appeal to the carnal and materialistic within us, in due time, come to believe and practice their own teachings.

19 And he said: I fear lest I have committed the unpardonable sin, for I have lied unto God; for I denied the Christ, and said that I believed the scriptures; and they truly testify of him. And because I have thus lied unto God I greatly fear lest my case shall be awful; but I confess unto God.

verse 19 Sherem is desperate and fearful and is attempting a “death-bed” repentance. It seems highly unlikely that Sherem had committed or even was capable of committing the unpardonable sin. In order to commit such a sin, one must reach a rather lofty state of spiritual development and then turn altogether therefrom. Sherem had not likely reached this requisite spiritual state. In addition, even though his death-bed repentance was not optimal, it is obvious that he was at least inclined toward some form of repentance, a characteristic which is foreign to those who will become sons of perdition (TPJS, 358).

Some critics of the Book of Mormon have seen a doctrinal anachronism here (see a discussion of anachronisms in the Book of Mormon in the commentary for 1 Nephi 16:18). They see the mention of the unpardonable sin (see also Alma 39:6; cf. 2 Nephi 31:14) as anachronistic because the doctrine of an unpardonable sin is not taught in the Bible until New Testament times, well after Lehi and his family left Jerusalem (e.g., Matthew 12:31; Mark 3:29; Luke 12:10; cf. Hebrews 10:26; 1 John 5:16-17). In response, it should be noted that the unpardonable sin is defined as “deny[ing] the Holy Ghost when it once has had a place in you” (Alma 39:6). It is evident from the text of the Book of Mormon that the descendants of Lehi knew of and received the witness of the Holy Ghost (e.g., 1 Nephi 10:17-19, 22; 2 Nephi 31:13, 18; Jacob 6:8; Alma 9:21). They thus had knowledge sufficient to commit such a sin and to be warned against committing it.

20 And it came to pass that when he had said these words he could say no more, and he gave up the ghost.

verse 20 Sherem was not tried and found guilty in a court of law. He was not executed, even though his false accusations against Jacob rendered him guilty of a capital offense. John W. Welch wrote that Sherem: “had proved himself to be a false accuser and, in effect, a false witness. Having initiated a false complaint against Jacob and having testified that he believed in the scriptures while denying the Messiah, Sherem became subject to the provisions of Deuteronomy 19:16–21, which require the unflinching punishment of all who “rise up against any man to testify against him that which is wrong” (v. 16) (The Legal Cases in the Book of Mormon, Provo, UT: Brigham Young University Press and the Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2008, 13). It seems likely he suffered the wrath of God.

21 And when the multitude had witnessed that he spake these things as he was about to give up the ghost, they were astonished exceedingly; insomuch that the power of God came down upon them, and they were overcome that they fell to the earth.

verse 21 The “power of God” in this context is the Holy Spirit.

22 Now, this thing was pleasing unto me, Jacob, for I had requested it of my Father who was in heaven; for he had heard my cry and answered my prayer.

verse 22 “this thing was pleasing unto me” Jacob refers to the spiritual renewal of his people not the pitiful fate of Sherem.

23 And it came to pass that peace and the love of God was restored again among the people; and they searched the scriptures, and hearkened no more to the words of this wicked man.

verse 23 You might read this verse and say, “Of course the people didn’t hearken any more to Sherem’s words, he was dead!” However, he could well have left behind written records that were still circulating, and adherents to his worldly philosophies who were still inclined to proselyte.

Jacob has now completed his account of Sherem. He concludes this chapter by reflecting on the sorry plight of the Lamanites, expressing his desire that his son Enos inherit the small plates, and saying goodbye to his readers.

24 And it came to pass that many means were devised to reclaim and restore the Lamanites to the knowledge of the truth; but it all was vain, for they delighted in wars and bloodshed, and they had an eternal hatred against us, their brethren. And they sought by the power of their arms to destroy us continually.

verse 24 This verse is particularly poignant and sad. The reader should keep in mind that Jacob grew up in a house divided. He saw a family feud evolve into a more or less permanent state of war. Consider what it meant to be Laman and Lemuel’s brother. The Lamanites were not distant, faceless, nameless enemies. They were kinsmen—brothers, nephews, and cousins whose names and families he knew. Here, Jacob seems to suggest that he feels some personal responsibility for failing to “reclaim and restore” his brethren the Lamanites.

25 Wherefore, the people of Nephi did fortify against them with their arms, and with all their might, trusting in the God and rock of their salvation; wherefore, they became as yet, conquerors of their enemies.

verse 25 The expression “as yet” in this verse carries with it an ominous implication. To this point the Nephites had held their own against the Lamanites. Jacob suggests that he holds a suspicion that the Lamanites might eventually overrun the Nephites.

26 And it came to pass that I, Jacob, began to be old; and the record of this people being kept on the other plates of Nephi, wherefore, I conclude this record, declaring that I have written according to the best of my knowledge, by saying that the time passed away with us, and also our lives passed away like as it were unto us a dream, we being a lonesome and a solemn people, wanderers, cast out from Jerusalem, born in tribulation, in a wilderness, and hated of our brethren, which caused wars and contentions; wherefore, we did mourn out our days.

verse 26 The “other plates of Nephi” are the large plates of Nephi. “This record” refers to the small plates of Nephi.

“the time passed away with us, and also our lives passed away like as it were unto us a dream . . . wherefore, we did mourn out our days” This melancholy and poignant verse speaks powerfully of the hardships that had occurred in Jacob’s life. Jacob also may have had in mind the transient nature of this mortal life. A verse with similar meaning is 1 Chronicles 29:15: “For we are strangers before thee, and sojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on the earth are as a shadow.” When viewed in hindsight this mortal probation is fleeting and over almost in an instant.

27 And I, Jacob, saw that I must soon go down to my grave; wherefore, I said unto my son Enos: Take these plates. And I told him the things which my brother Nephi had commanded me, and he promised obedience unto the commands. And I make an end of my writing upon these plates, which writing has been small; and to the reader I bid farewell, hoping that many of my brethren may read my words. Brethren, adieu.

verse 27 “I told him the things which my brother Nephi had commanded me” In 1984, John W. Welch observed that after Jacob, some of the keepers of the small plates “do not appear eager to write, nor do they seem to have much to say.” While it is popular to see them as lazy or negligent, Welch continued, “It is interesting, however, that they manifest a strong sense of duty about writing what little they do” (John W. Welch, “The Father’s Command to Keep Records in the Small Plates of Nephi,” FARMS Preliminary Report, September 1984, 1). Jacob 1:1–4 documents the mandate Nephi gave to his brother Jacob, and Jacob states that he passed this same commandment on to his son Enos (Jacob 7:27).

Brother Welch delineates seven obligations that can be found in Nephi’s instructions in Jacob 1:1–4:

1. A record is to be kept on the small plates by way of commandment (Jacob 1:1–2).
2. The record must be personally written (Jacob 1:2).
3. The record must be preserved (Jacob 1:3).
4. The record must be handed down within the lineage of Jacob from generation to generation (Jacob 1:3).
5. The record should include: (a) a few things which the writer considered most precious; (b) sacred preaching; and (c) great revelation or prophesying (Jacob 1:4). Welch stressed the important caveat, “The record keeper was only expected to record these things ‘if there were’ such things to be found in his lifetime” (Welch, “The Father’s Command,” 3).

6. The record was only to lightly cover the history of the people of Nephi (Jacob 1:2).

7. The words on the record were meant, “as much as it were possible for Christ’s sake, and for the sake of our people” (Jacob 1:4) (See Welch, “The Father’s Command,” 2–3. Welch actually outlines 8 criteria, but his #5 is not clearly stated in Nephi’s commission but seems implicit in #4, and therefore redundant. For these reasons, it has been omitted here).

The writings of Jacob and each of his descendants can be expressly evaluated on these criteria. The results are summarized in the following table:

Criteria	Jacob	Enos	Jarom	Omni	Amaron	Chemish	Abinadom	Amaleki

While not every author satisfies every criterion, given the brevity of their writings they actually do an impressive job covering the basics of Nephi's directive. Each of these writers makes a point of writing in the first person: "I, Jarom" (Jarom 1:1), "I, Omni" (Omni 1:1), or "I, Amaron" (Omni 1:4), thus discharging the personal obligation Nephi gave to Jacob and his successors, as Jacob reported: "that I should write" (Jacob 1:2). Likewise, Chemish and others comment that they will write only a "few things" (Jacob 4:2; Jarom 1:1; Omni 1:4, 9, 22), as Nephi had also explicitly instructed ("few," Jacob 1:2).

Even when these authors know of no new revelations, they typically certify that "I know of no revelation save that which has been written, neither prophecy; wherefore, that which is sufficient is written" (Omni 1:11; see also Jarom 1:2; Omni 1:25). In addition, a careful reading of the vocabulary multiple of the small plates authors used reveals that even in their brief comments, they consciously "echo the instructions of Nephi in many respects" (Welch, "The Father's Command," 10). Welch concluded, "the textual evidence is persuasive that the command of Nephi was followed by Jacob and his descendants as they wrote the books of Jacob, Enos, Jarom, and Omni" (Welch, "The Father's Command," 12).

Recognizing the faithful adherence of Jacob, Enos, Jarom, Omni, Amaron, Chemish, Abinadom and Amaleki to Nephi's instructions provides a different perspective on these often-overlooked Book of Mormon authors. "Although these writers," explained Welch, "are most often thought of simply for their terseness and lack of substance, modern readers should not overlook the fact that their brevity was dictated in large part by the small size of the plates and by the specific limitations of Nephi's command" (Welch, "The Father's Command," 12).

Using Nephi's command as a template, modern readers can appreciate these small entries for their scribal attention to duty and detail. Although Nephi's instructions to Jacob are soon forgotten by most people reading the Book of Mormon today, and probably passed just quickly through Joseph Smith's consciousness as he labored over the task of rendering the text into English, Nephi's mandate was not forgotten by Jacob and his seven successors.

Their diligent adherence to Nephi's instructions explains why these small books follow a particular pattern in a manner that is worthy of admiration: "Modern readers should not underrate the consistent and subtle way in which the record shows that this command was dutifully obeyed to the end of this line of Jacob's lineage" (Welch, "The Father's Command," 12, "also" silently omitted). While the temptation is to breeze through these brief entries on the small plates, careful reading and thinking about these often-neglected voices rewards patient readers.

“which writing has been small” Jacob probably intended by this phrase that his writings were not as lengthy as those of his older brother Nephi.

“Brethren, adieu” Some have poked fun at the Church because of the way in which Joseph translated Jacob’s farewell. Why would Joseph have used the French word for “goodbye”? After all, Jacob was writing over four centuries before Christ, and the French language didn’t even come into existence until the eighth century AD.

Until recently, we have understood Joseph’s use of the word “adieu” to be simply an example of the “loose control” the Lord maintained over the process of translation of parts of the Book of Mormon. That is, at times the Lord gave the prophet Joseph an idea and allowed him to express that idea in his own words. We have previously maintained, “Well, Joseph did live in northern New York state, and just above him to the north, the French Canadians lived. “Adieu” was simply a part of his vocabulary.

We now know that this explanation is incorrect.

We know that the Lord did not exercise “loose control” over any part of the translation of the Book of Mormon. As he translated, Joseph was enabled to see and read every word. While the Lord did not cause the text of the Book of Mormon to be translated and recorded perfectly (“iron clad control”) because of errors in Oliver Cowdery’s hearing and recording the text and in Oliver’s failure to include in his manuscript any punctuation, the Lord did maintain what we now call “tight control,” so that Joseph did not include any of his own wording. If you are not clear on the details of the process of translation of the Book of Mormon, please review “The Process of Translation of the Book of Mormon” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, Appendix A.

And what of the word “adieu” in Jacob 5:27? We now know that “adieu” was a part of the specific English language version in which Joseph received the text of the Book of Mormon. That language was Early Modern English—the same language in which Shakespeare wrote and the same language spoken in England and America between AD 1500 and 1700. Please see the exciting article “Early English and the Translation of the Book of Mormon” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, appendix B.

Enos Chapter 1

Enos 1:4 Enos's prolonged prayer. I cried unto him in mighty prayer and supplication for mine own soul; and all the day long did I cry unto him; yea, and when the night came I did still raise my voice high that it reached the heavens.

The book of Enos is the first of four small books which consist of only one chapter each. Together, the first three of these books (Enos, Jarom, and Omni) cover some three hundred and fifty years of history. The book of Enos begins with the death of Enos's father, Jacob, about 500 BC, and the book of Omni ends as Amaleki turned over the small plates of Nephi to King Benjamin about 145 BC. These three books conclude the writings on the small plates of Nephi. The fourth book, the Words of Mormon, forms the connection between the small plates of Nephi and Mormon's abridgment of the large plates of Nephi.

These four books contain the writings of some eight authors (Enos, Jarom, Omni, Amaron, Chemish, Abinadom, Amaleki, and Mormon) which is over one third of the twenty-three authors whose writings make up the entire Book of Mormon. These twenty-three authors are: Nephi, Jacob, Enos, Jarom, Omni, Amaron, Chemish, Abinadom, Amaleki, Benjamin, Mosiah, Alma, Helaman, Shiblon (Alma 63:1, 11, 17), Helaman, Helaman, Nephi, Nephi, Amos, Amos (4 Nephi 1:21), Ammaron, Mormon, and Moroni.

The remainder of the small plates (through the book of Omni) now become increasingly focused on the history of Jacob's family rather than on the history of the whole Nephite group. The record is primarily genealogical. From Jacob on, the plates were no longer kept by the rulers (see Jacob 1:9). Jacob and his descendants were not kings. From all we know, they did not play a leading role in political or military matters. They occupied no significant position in the government. They are written from a perspective outside the community's official life (see, for example, verse 24 of this chapter). Jacob's family line also eventually passes out of the prophetic line as well. Only Jacob himself clearly held a position of religious authority equivalent to that of high priest (see Jacob 1:17- 19). His son Enos and grandson Jarom describe themselves as only one among many prophets (see verses 19, 22; Jarom 1:4). Jarom may not have done any public teaching or preaching at all. Although he referred to "my prophesying" and "my revelations," he spoke in the third person of "the prophets, and the priests, and the teachers [who] labor diligently, exhorting . . . the people to diligence; teaching the law of Moses" (Jarom 1:11)—as if he were not one of them. Also, he wrote, "Our kings and our leaders were mighty men in the faith of the Lord; and they taught the people the ways of the Lord” (Jarom 1:7), sounding like a bystander outside the loop of government power and official church responsibility. Omni fought for the Nephites, but there is no evidence that he did so as a military leader or that he had any religious calling. Far from it, he confessed he was a “wicked man” (Omni 1:2). The same is true of Jacob’s other descendants who contributed to the book of Omni. Abinadom admitted that he knew “of no revelation save that which has been written” (Omni 1:11). Amaleki said that the people “were led by many preachings and prophesyings” (Omni 1:13). The impersonal, passive phrasing implies that he did not himself act as one of the prophets or preachers.

This lack of either government or religious authority among Jacob’s descendants does not mean that the Nephites had fallen into a complete dark age. Although they were not prophets themselves, these writers tell us prophets still lived among them. Enos even spoke of “exceedingly many” unnamed prophets (Enos 1:22). Jarom told of men “who [had] many revelations . . . mighty men in the faith of the Lord” (Jarom 1:4, 7). Amaron spoke of the Lord’s sparing the righteous portion of the Nephites during his day, proving there was a righteous remnant (see Omni 1:7). And Amaleki wrote of “many preachings and prophesyings” (Omni 1:13).

If we remember that this is a family record, we will be less likely to overgeneralize about the apostasy of the whole Nephite civilization. Perhaps there were great prophets mentioned in Mormon’s lost abridgment (the book of Lehi). We do not know, since this record, on the small plates of Nephi, comes from Jacob’s descendants who fell from prominence and perhaps from grace. Precisely because the plates are a family chronicle, their spiritual quality varies sharply with that of the family. This is the only place in scripture where a self-professed “wicked man” (Omni) wrote scripture. Later descendants of Jacob were merely ordinary men who happened to belong to an extraordinary lineage. They became scriptural authors only because they happened to have charge of the plates and each obviously felt a solemn obligation to make at least a nominal addition to them—to maintain the genealogical record—and then pass them along. Each evidenced a genuine reverence for the small plates of Nephi.

Enos was the son of the prophet Jacob. Jacob and his descendants were custodians of the small plates of Nephi for almost four centuries, from 544 BC to 145 BC. It is interesting to note that these small plates were not passed on through Nephi’s posterity, the “royal line,” but rather were kept in the possession of the progeny of his younger brother Jacob. From here to the end of the book of Omni the text takes on the flavor of a family chronicle created to preserve the family genealogy. Its authors were not necessarily the most righteous or the most qualified to write, rather they wrote because they were descendants of Jacob. Some of the authors seem to see their roles as primarily recorders of genealogies. These authors were also not necessarily prophets or presiding ecclesiastical officers.

It is clear that Enos lived in a day of much war between the Nephites and Lamanites. Also, it was a day of much sin even among his brethren the Nephites.

1 Behold, it came to pass that I, Enos, knowing my father that he was a just man—for he taught me in his language, and also in the nurture and admonition of the Lord—and blessed be the name of my God for it—verse 1 Note that Enos begins his record with a eulogy of his father, Jacob. Enos refers to his father as a “just man.” The word “just” means far more than simply fair and impartial. In the scriptures, several men are referred to as being “just.” Some examples include Noah (Genesis 6:9), Jesus (Matthew 27:19- 24), Joseph, the husband of Mary (Matthew 1:19), Joseph of Arimathaea (Luke 23:50), Simeon, who was promised before his death he would see the Christ (Luke 2:25), John the Baptist (Mark 6:20), and Cornelius the centurion (Acts 10:22). “Just” is a rich word which means faithful in keeping one’s covenants, righteous, justified according to the law.

“he taught me in his language” Enos refers here to the language in which the Book of Mormon plates were engraved. This is basically the Hebrew language written using a “reformed” cursive style of Egyptian-style hieroglyphics. If you have not yet read the supplemental article, The Language of the Book of Mormon, you might want to do so now. Mastering this language system was undoubtedly a difficult challenge and consisted of more than just having to learn the Hebrew language. One also had to learn the reformed Egyptian style for writing it.

Enos gives his father Jacob credit for teaching him this language system. Other Book of Mormon prophets have expressed or will express gratitude to their fathers for the same privilege (1 Nephi 1:2; Mosiah 1:2).

“also in the nurture and admonition of the Lord” Jacob had nurtured and admonished him in the things of God. It is interesting that the phrase “nurture and admonition” is found in no other place in the Book of Mormon. In all of the scriptures, it is found in but one other place, Ephesians 6:4.

“blessed be the name of my God for it” Enos’s heart is filled with gratitude to his father Jacob for teaching him to write and for instructing him in spiritual matters.

2 And I will tell you of the wrestle which I had before God, before I received a remission of my sins.

verse 2 “I, Enos . . . will tell you of the wrestle which I had before God” Occasionally in the Book of Mormon text we find a peculiar form of expression in which the author makes a statement that certifies he is the author and usually tells what is to come in the following verses. Alternatively, he explains at the end of a section what has just been said. Examples include: “I [Nephi] make a record of my proceedings in my days (1 Nephi 1:1),” and “And now I, Mormon, make a record of the things which I have both seen and heard, and call it the Book of Mormon (Mormon 1:1).” These have been pointed out by Dr. Hugh Nibley who refers to them as “colophons” (Lehi in the Desert, in The Collected Works of Hugh Nibley [Salt Lake City, Utah: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1988], 5:17-19). See the discussion of colophons in the introductory commentary for the First Book of Nephi. The word “colophon” is usually used to refer to the distinctive mark or emblem of a publisher found on a book’s title page. Earlier in church history these have been regarded by critics of the book as awkward oddities which were likely due to Joseph Smith’s ignorance. Dr. Nibley has pointed out, however, that they appear in several ancient documents and should probably be regarded as evidence of the book’s authenticity.

The word “wrestle” in this verse should serve to remind us that real spiritual progress requires genuine effort and is not a passive process. As Alma tried to convince the Lord to bless the recalcitrant people of Ammonihah he “labored much in the spirit, wrestling with God in mighty prayer” (Alma 8:10). In your daily prayers, do you exert yourself and strive earnestly to make yourself heard and to obtain an answer, or are you more passive? I’m afraid that most of our daily prayers do not include much “wrestling.” Apparently Enos needed to labor intensely to place himself in position to receive a remission of his sins and communicate with God. Achieving and maintaining a relationship with God and with our Savior is clearly not a passive process. If we are not continually “wrestling,” then we are invariably drifting away from them.

verses 3-4 We learn a couple of valuable lessons from Enos about receiving answers to prayers. He sought for a place that afforded him solitude, and then he took advantage of that privacy to meditate and to pray. Here was a righteous man whose motives for wanting an answer to prayer were pure—he simply wanted to experience the joy which he had been taught by his father was available to those who accept the gospel of Jesus Christ. Yet the answer to his guileless prayer did not come until after he had prayed all day and into the night. Then the Lord’s voice did come to him, and he enjoyed marvelous spiritual blessings as a result.

3 Behold, I went to hunt beasts in the forests; and the words which I had often heard my father speak concerning eternal life, and the joy of the saints, sunk deep into my heart.

verse 3 “the words which I had often heard my father speak concerning eternal life, and the joy of the saints, sunk deep into my heart” Here is a poignant reminder for all parents that the lessons they teach by example and by spoken words will not be in vain (see also Alma 36:16-18). We learn that Jacob spoke often of the gospel in his home. Gospel messages taught and testimonies borne in the home often appear to have no immediate impact on a child. Yet, apparently, the message is not lost to that child.

The phrase “sunk deep into my heart” suggests that the Holy Ghost had a role in convincing Enos of the truth of the “words concerning eternal life” spoken by his father and of the “joy of the saints.”

4 And my soul hungered; and I kneeled down before my Maker, and I cried unto him in mighty prayer and supplication for mine own soul; and all the day long did I cry unto him; yea, and when the night came I did still raise my voice high that it reached the heavens.

5 And there came a voice unto me, saying: Enos, thy sins are forgiven thee, and thou shalt be blessed.

verse 5 This voice was not necessarily an audible one. It may have been simply an impression of the Spirit made in the mind and heart of Enos (see verse 10).

6 And I, Enos, knew that God could not lie; wherefore, my guilt was swept away.

verse 6 “I, Enos, knew that God could not lie” The Spirit of the Holy Ghost not only delivers information, but he also communicates a confirmation of the truthfulness of his message. Additionally, he conveys comfort and peace to the receiver.

7 And I said: Lord, how is it done?

verse 7 Enos asks the Lord, “How didst thou do that? How didst thou simply sweep away all my guilt?”

8 And he said unto me: Because of thy faith in Christ, whom thou hast never before heard nor seen. And many years pass away before he shall manifest himself in the flesh; wherefore, go to, thy faith hath made thee whole.

verse 8 Here is the key to having your sins forgiven. It is to have faith in Jesus Christ. The specific and essential elements in having your sins remitted are: (1) a humble admission that you are a sinner, (2) the belief that Jesus Christ can help you, and (3) a determined effort to seek Jesus and receive the desired blessing. There is nothing generic or non-specific about this last step. It includes the determined effort to resist one's natural self and obey the Lord's commandments.

Enos is “whole” in that he is free from sin and in touch with the Spirit.

9 Now, it came to pass that when I had heard these words I began to feel a desire for the welfare of my brethren, the Nephites; wherefore, I did pour out my whole soul unto God for them.

verse 9 An important concept is illustrated by this verse. Conversion results in a love for one's fellow man and a desire to do good works for them. See also Mosiah 28:3 which reports the responses of Alma the Younger and the four sons of Mosiah to their conversion.

There is actually a more complete “sequence” that naturally flows following an individual’s conversion. This chain of events is evident in the book of Enos and other places in the Book of Mormon. It consists of (1) receiving the gospel and having it confirmed in one’s heart by the Holy Ghost (Enos 1:1-3; Mosiah 4:1; Mosiah 27 11:16; Alma 36:5); (2) a desire to repent of one’s sins (Enos 1:4-8; Mosiah 4:2; Alma 36:16); (3) being filled with joy (Mosiah 4:3; Alma 36:20); (4) a desire to share the message of the gospel and the resultant joy (Enos 1:9-26; Mosiah 4:13-18; 6:3; Mosiah 27:32, 36);

10 And while I was thus struggling in the spirit, behold, the voice of the Lord came into my mind again, saying: I will visit thy brethren according to their diligence in keeping my commandments. I have given unto them this land, and it is a holy land; and I curse it not save it be for the cause of iniquity; wherefore, I will visit thy brethren according as I have said; and their transgressions will I bring down with sorrow upon their own heads.

verse 10 “while I was thus struggling in the spirit” Again we see evidence of vigorous and active, rather than passive, prayers being offered up by Enos.

“the voice of the Lord came into my mind” This is the most common type of revelation experience. It need not be an audible voice but rather a feeling and an impression. Scripturally, this is referred to as the “still small voice” (1 Nephi 17:45).

“I will visit thy brethren according to their diligence in keeping my commandments” Two modern scriptures come to mind: “If you keep not my commandments, the love of the Father shall not continue with you, therefore you shall walk in darkness” (D&C 95:12). And, “There is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated—and when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated” (D&C 130:20-21).

“I have given unto them this land, and it is a holy land” In what sense is the land of the Book of Mormon a “holy land”? It is a land consecrated by the Lord for the fulfilling of his purposes. If we broaden this “land” to include the entire western hemisphere, then consider the purposes the Lord has in store for it. It is the place of the restoration of the gospel, the translation and dissemination of the Book of Mormon, the fountain of the gospel to be poured over the earth in the latter days, and it is the site of the New Jerusalem.

11 And after I, Enos, had heard these words, my faith began to be unshaken in the Lord; and I prayed unto him with many long strugglings for my brethren, the Lamanites.

verse 11 “my faith began to be unshaken in the Lord” Some may prefer the word “unshakable” here. It seems clear that there occurs a progressive strengthening of faith as one seeks and is allowed communication with the Spirit.

“many long strugglings” Enos has certainly taught us that there is no “free lunch” in spiritual communication.

12 And it came to pass that after I had prayed and labored with all diligence, the Lord said unto me: I will grant unto thee according to thy desires, because of thy faith.

verse 12 “I will grant unto thee according to thy desires” Surely this denotes an advanced stage of spiritual progress. Enos is granted by the Lord a promise that he will receive according to his desires, reflecting the Lord’s comfort and confidence in that which he will desire and request.

13 And now behold, this was the desire which I desired of him—that if it should so be, that my people, the Nephites, should fall into transgression, and by any means be destroyed, and the Lamanites should not be destroyed, that the Lord God would preserve a record of my people, the Nephites; even if it so be by the power of his holy arm, that it might be brought forth at some future day unto the Lamanites, that, perhaps, they might be brought unto salvation—verse 13 “if it should so be, that my people, the Nephites, should fall into transgression, and by any means be destroyed, and the Lamanites should not be destroyed” Enos was not just idly speculating here, nor was he necessarily expressing what he had learned in personal revelation. He obviously possessed and had studied the small plates of Nephi. He had probably read many times the account of Nephi’s vision and knew the prophecies contained therein pertaining to the future of the Nephites and Lamanites (1 Nephi 12; see also 1 Nephi 15:5).

In his fervent desiring, Enos was fulfilling one of Nephi’s prophecies concerning the Lamanites and the Book of Mormon. Referring to a time after the complete apostasy of the Lamanites, Nephi said: “The words of the righteous shall be written, and the prayers of the faithful shall be heard, and all those who have dwindled in unbelief shall not be forgotten” (2 Nephi 26:15).

The “record of my people the Nephites” is obviously the Book of Mormon.

14 For at the present our strugglings were vain in restoring them to the true faith. And they swore in their wrath that, if it were possible, they would destroy our records and us, and also all the traditions of our fathers.

verse 14 “the traditions of our fathers” Reference is made here to the Nephites’ “traditions of [their] fathers.” Among these “traditions” would be the belief that father Lehi was brought out of Jerusalem, led through the wilderness, and brought to a choice and promised land, all by the hand of God. This land could be possessed only by those who kept the “commandments of God” which included the law of Moses (Alma 9:8-14). The Nephite “traditions” included the concept that the birthright was bestowed by Lehi upon Nephi rather than upon his eldest son, Laman. Also, contained in these traditions was a belief in the gospel or doctrine of Jesus Christ including a belief in his future mortal advent, atonement, and resurrection (Mosiah 25:12).

We have also learned that the Lamanites maintained a set of traditions of their fathers as well. These included the idea that father Lehi exercised unrighteous dominion over his family in leading them out of Jerusalem in the first place. Later Nephi treated them unfairly in the wilderness and while crossing the sea. The Lamanites believed that the right to govern, the birthright, rightfully belonged to Laman and not to Nephi (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 16:37). They felt that when Nephi moved out of the land of their first inheritance, the place of their initial settlement in the New World, and took with him the records of the people and the plates of Laban, he had robbed the Lamanites of what was rightfully theirs (see also Mosiah 10:12-17).

15 Wherefore, I knowing that the Lord God was able to preserve our records, I cried unto him continually, for he had said unto me: Whatsoever thing ye shall ask in faith, believing that ye shall receive in the name of Christ, ye shall receive it.

verse 15 “Whatsoever thing ye shall ask in faith, believing that ye shall receive in the name of Christ, ye shall receive it.” Does this statement express an unconditional truth, or is the promise conditional? Certainly, Enos had labored diligently to earn this promise from the Lord (see verse 12). Sometimes the Lord does include conditions when he gives this promise to a person or to a group. He includes the idea that it is based upon the premise that the individual or group ask for only those things which are right or righteous. An example is 3 Nephi 18:20 wherein the resurrected Lord offers a conditional promise to the Nephite multitude gathered at the temple in Bountiful. On other occasions, as here, he gives the promise without condition to those whom he trusts to ask for only that which is right. An example of the latter is that promise given to his twelve Nephite disciples in 3 Nephi 27:28: “And now I go unto the Father. And verily I say unto you, whatsoever things ye shall ask the Father in my name shall be given unto you.” Generally, we might regard it as an unconditional statement of spiritual truth, as we can assume that when an individual acts in faith, he is deliberately obeying a true principle.

16 And I had faith, and I did cry unto God that he would preserve the records; and he covenanted with me that he would bring them forth unto the Lamanites in his own due time.

17 And I, Enos, knew it would be according to the covenant which he had made; wherefore my soul did rest.

verses 16-17 These are critically important verses. One is reminded of the statement in James 5:16: “The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.”

In this last dispensation the Lord confirmed to Joseph Smith that the plates had been preserved at least in part for the conversion of the errant Lamanites: “And for this very purpose are these plates preserved, which contain these records—that the promises of the Lord might be fulfilled, which he made to his people; And that the Lamanites might . . . know the promises of the Lord, and that they may believe the gospel and rely upon the merits of Jesus Christ, and be glorified through faith in his name, and that through their repentance they might be saved” (D&C 3:19-20).

18 And the Lord said unto me: Thy fathers have also required of me this thing; and it shall be done unto them according to their faith; for their faith was like unto thine.

verse 18 Apparently, some of Enos’s ancestors, perhaps his father Jacob or his uncle Nephi, also pled with the Lord to preserve the Book of Mormon record that it might eventually come forth to aid in the salvation of the remnant of the disbelieving Lamanites. It is interesting, however, that we have no scriptural record of these entreaties Enos’s ancestors made of the Lord. In this dispensation, the Lord referred to these requests made by the ancient Nephites (D&C 10:46-48).

19 And now it came to pass that I, Enos, went about among the people of Nephi, prophesying of things to come, and testifying of the things which I had heard and seen.

verse 19 It seems likely that although Enos was diligent in teaching and testifying to his “stiffnecked” people, he did not experience dramatic success among them. Yet, we will learn in verse 27 that his joy was full and his satisfaction complete.

20 And I bear record that the people of Nephi did seek diligently to restore the Lamanites unto the true faith in God. But our labors were vain; their hatred was fixed, and they were led by their evil nature that they became wild, and ferocious, and a blood-thirsty people, full of idolatry and filthiness; feeding upon beasts of prey; dwelling in tents, and wandering about in the wilderness with a short skin girdle about their loins and their heads shaven; and their skill was in the bow, and in the cimeter, and the ax. And many of them did eat nothing save it was raw meat; and they were continually seeking to destroy us.

verse 20 Enos paints a graphic picture of the degenerate secular and spiritual culture of the Lamanites.

“the Lamanites . . . became wild, and ferocious, and a blood-thirsty people, full of idolatry and filthiness” Millet and McConkie, writing in their book, Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, ask and then answer an interesting question:

Why do those given up to wickedness, those who have rejected the true and living God, practice idolatry? Why don't they just forsake worship in all forms, denouncing the very idea of a God? Why are simulated forms of true religion so frequently found among those who have spurned purity, righteousness, and obedience? Why must true religion be opposed by false religion? Why is religious ceremony so important to the irreligious?

Perhaps the universality of idolatry is an evidence that the desire to worship is innate to the soul. We think of no instances, however, in which the practice of idolatry is anything more than a manifestation of the desire on the part of its practitioners to recreate God in their own image and likeness. To create one's own god is to have control over the demands and appetites of that god. It is said that religion is the system in which man serves a higher will, while magic is a system whereby man attempts to control higher powers. Such is the distinction that exists between true religion and idolatry (volume 2—Jacob through Mosiah, 102-03).

We usually define idolatry as the sinful practice of making and worshipping graven images, or idols made of wood, stone, or metal. In a broader sense, however, idolatry is idolizing, worshipping, or making more important anything other than God. Hence, the love or worship of such things as money, costly apparel, power, or worldly pleasures, is also a form of idolatry. Even idleness is considered a form of idolatrous behavior (Alma 1:32).

“cimeter” Cimeters will be mentioned several more times in the Book of Mormon. Did such things as cimeters—swords with curved blades—exist as early as the sixth century BC? A recent research paper by William Hamblin on warfare in the Book of Mormon documents the existence of such weapons from the ancient Near East, Egypt, and Mesoamerica dating to before Book of Mormon times (“Hand Held Weapons in the Book of Mormon,” a FARMS reprint).

21 And it came to pass that the people of Nephi did till the land, and raise all manner of grain, and of fruit, and flocks of herds, and flocks of all manner of cattle of every kind, and goats, and wild goats, and also many horses.

verse 21 Please review the material on domestic animals in the Book of Mormon found in the commentary for 1 Nephi 18:25.

“also many horses” The mention of horses among domesticated animals kept by Book of Mormon peoples has raised questions in some people's minds due to the prevailing view that horses were not found in the Americas during pre-Columbian times. Horses are mentioned on a few occasions in the Book of Mormon (the last mention is around the time of Christ):

- Horses are mentioned once, in Moroni's retelling of the record of Ether, as one of the animals that were "useful unto man" among Jaredites during the reign of Emer (Ether 9:19).

- Nephi mentions wild horses among animals found on arrival in the Promised Land (1 Nephi 18:25).

- Enos says that in his time, the Nephites raised "many horses" (Enos 1:21), but how and why they were used is not mentioned.

- King Lamoni had horses which Ammon and other servants prepared for a royal procession (Alma 18:9–10,12; 20:6).

- Horses were included among the livestock and provisions the Nephites took when they left Zarahemla and withdrew for seven years into a more secure site as a defensive tactic against the Gadianton Robbers (3 Nephi 3:22; 4:4; 6:1). Horses are also mentioned in 2 Nephi 12:7; 15:28; 3 Nephi 21:14, but all three of these are quotations of biblical scripture (Isaiah 2:7; 5:28; Micah 5:10).

In this small handful of references, no text ever says that horses were ridden or used in battle. They are sometimes mentioned with chariots, but are never actually described as pulling them. It is difficult to determine exactly what kind of role they played in the daily life of Book of Mormon peoples except to say that they were "useful."

In 3 Nephi 4:4, horses are mentioned as being among the provisions "reserved for themselves . . . that they might subsist for the space of seven years." The word "subsist" may imply that horses in that desperate time were used for food. Fortunately, the Nephites were successful in their defensive strategy and were eventually able to return to their own lands, "every man, with his family, his flocks and herds, his horses and his cattle, and all things whatsoever did belong unto them" (3 Nephi 6:1). These limited details seem to allow Brant Gardner's observation, "The Book of Mormon 'horse' never fulfills the functions we expect of a horse" (Brant A. Gardner, The Traditions of the Father: The Book of Mormon as History, Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2015, 291. See the similar observations made by John L. Sorenson, Mormon's Codex: An Ancient American Book, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2013, 315).

Readers can interpret the presence of horses in the Book of Mormon in a variety of different ways:

1. Horses in The Archaeological Record Perhaps the most straightforward approach is to assume that horses, which subsequently became extinct, were available in the area in which the Nephites and Lamanites lived. It is not unusual for primary source documents to mention things which archaeologists cannot prove. In fact, it is expected that authentic documents will give us new information about the past (Stephen D. Ricks, review of Lehi in the Deseret, The Collected Works of Hugh Nibley: Volume 5, by Hugh Nibley, Review of Books on the Book of Mormon, 2, 1990: 139–140).

Some evidence may indicate the presence of horses in America in pre-Columbian times. Dr. Wade Miller, an internationally respected geologist and paleontologist, ran Carbon-14 tests on several horse specimens found at archaeological sites throughout the Americas. Preliminary results have returned various dates from about 6000 BC to AD 1400 (Wade E. Miller, Science and the Book of Mormon: Cureloms, Cumoms, Horses & More, Laguna Niguel, CA: KCT & Associates, 2010, 82). Daniel Johnson has collected and summarized the evidence for horses in ancient America. His data analyzes the anomalous dating of horse bones, art works, and the variety and distribution of horses in early post-Columbian times (Daniel Johnson, “Hard’ Evidence of Ancient American Horses,” BYU Studies Quarterly 54, no. 3, 2015: 149–179. Also see the short note, “Once More: The Horse,” in Reexploring the Book of Mormon: A Decade of New Research, ed. John W. Welch, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1992, 98–100).

2. Nephi could have borrowed the word "horse" Another approach to this question suggests that the word “horse” in the Book of Mormon is being used to refer to a different animal. Throughout history, when immigrants and travelers have encountered new, unfamiliar species, they have often applied labels from their own language which originally referred to different animals (Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: An Analytical and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, Utah: Greg Kofford Books, 2007–2008, 1:324–326). In many cases, the borrowed term has become the common name. For example, the Greeks coined the name hippopotamus, which literally means “river horse.” The American bison is still colloquially called buffalo—which technically refers to a different species—a practice that started with the French trappers who first explored the American West. The terms elk and robin were also applied to American animals by Europeans, even though they are used in reference to totally different species in the Old World.

Relevant to the issue of horses in the Book of Mormon is the linguistic confusion that the horse caused when the Spanish first arrived. Different Maya and Aztec groups applied their labels for deer or tapir to the Spaniards’ horses, lacking a better word (See John L. Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1985, 296; Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex, 313, 318–319; Neal Rappleye, “Tzimins are not Really Tzimins—They’re Horses,” at Studio et Quoque Fide, June 23, 2015, accessed March 5, 2016). Perhaps Book of Mormon peoples made the same connection in reverse, applying their Old-World term for “horse” to some other species.

3. "Horse" Could Be a Result of Translation It is also possible that “horse” is a “translator anachronism.” Brant Gardner explains, “We need look no further than the King James translation of the Bible for examples of anachronisms that occur only in translation and not in the text being translated.” One prominent example is the mention of candles, which were not invented in biblical times, though the term is used in reference to oil lamps. “Thus, the word candle is an anachronism, but only in the translation” (Gardner, The Traditions of the Father, 292).

Why horses are mentioned in the Book of Mormon is unstated. How they were used, when, and by whom, is left unsaid. Indeed, needing to say that they were useful on some occasions seems to imply something remarkable or unusual, otherwise the point would not need to be mentioned. In fact, in many cultures and on various topographies, horses are not useful, being hard to tame and costly to maintain.

While there is no definitive answer to why horses are mentioned in the Book of Mormon, each of these prospects creates room for further exploration, wondering, understanding, and especially faith. Each possible explanation also teaches important lessons about archaeology and ancient writings that need to be taken into account when considering information, insights, questions, and curiosities about the Book of Mormon.

1. Be patient with the archaeological record. First, it is best to be patient with the archaeological record. There is still much work to be done, and lots to be learned about life in pre-Columbian America. The vast majority of Mesoamerican ruins remain untouched underneath thick jungle growth (Mark Alan Wright, “The Cultural Tapestry of Mesoamerica,” Journal of the Book of Mormon and Other Restoration Scripture 22, no. 2, 2013, 6: “Literally thousands of archaeological sites dot the Mesoamerican landscape, the vast majority of which we know virtually nothing about, other than their locations. In the Maya area alone are approximately six thousand known sites, of which fewer than fifty have undergone systematic archaeological excavation. . . . Archaeologists estimate that less than 1 percent of ancient Mesoamerican ruins have been uncovered and studied, leaving much yet to learn.”), and other areas in the Americas have received even less attention. Also, the preservation of animal bones is very poor in the humid jungles of Mesoamerica (Amber M. VanDerwarker, Farming, Hunting, and Fishing in the Olmec World (Austin, TX: University of Texas Press, 2006), 117; Miller, Science and the Book of Mormon, 28–29). Since the Book of Mormon text mentions horses rarely, the likelihood of finding bones or other remains of their horses becomes even more remote.

Still, several items mentioned in the Book of Mormon once considered anachronistic have since been verified (For several examples, see “Howlers Index,” at Ether’s Cave, (accessed March 7, 2016). Also see Kevin Christensen, “Hindsight on a Book of Mormon Historicity Critique,” FARMS Review 22, no. 2 (2010): 155–194; John E. Clark, “Archaeological Trends and the Book of Mormon Origins,” in The Worlds of Joseph Smith: A Bicentennial Conference at the Library of Congress, ed. John W. Welch (Provo, UT: BYU Press, 2006), 93–95). This is why John E. Clark, a Latter-day Saint and prominent Mesoamerican archaeologist, declared: “the Book of Mormon looks better with age” (Clark, “Archaeological Trends,” 94. Clark also explained: “These deficiencies of negative evidence persist, for the most part, but they should not distract from the scores of other unusual items mentioned in the book which have been confirmed through archaeology—nor from the possibility that missing evidence may someday be found,” p. 95). Such findings should urge caution against making final judgments based on absence of evidence.

2. Book of Mormon Peoples, Unsurprisingly, Acted Like Real People Second, Book of Mormon peoples should be expected to act and behave just as real people have throughout history. It is likely that, on arrival, Nephi had the same problem as many others have historically when encountering new species in the Promised Land. Hence, anthropologist and Book of Mormon scholar John L. Sorenson explained, “the Lehites would have followed [common naming practices] . . . in adapting their Hebrew nomenclature to apply to the new fauna they encountered” (Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex, 319. Also, “after their arrival they reported the presence of native fauna to which they applied the names of Near Eastern animals that looked similar,” 35).

3. A Divine Translation Should Be a Real Translation Finally, even a divine translation should be treated as a real translation, with all the complications that are attendant to rendering a text into a new language. Having carefully studied the translation of the Book of Mormon, Brant A. Gardner offers this important caution: “the very fact that we have the Book of Mormon in translation requires that we look at anachronisms in the text carefully. . . . In the vast majority of the cases, it is reasonable that we are seeing a translation anachronism rather than a historical anachronism” (Brant A. Gardner, “Anachronisms in the Book of Mormon,” in A Reason for Faith: Navigating LDS Doctrine and Church History, ed. Laura Harris Hales, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, 2016, 41. For his full analysis of the translation, see Brant A. Gardner, The Gift and Power: Translating the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2011). Ultimately, any translation, but especially a divine translation, may purposefully and beneficially invite its readers to wonder about many things, thus encouraging them to further study while allowing them to exercise faith when confronting questions.

verses 20-21 The Book of Mormon portrays prosperous agriculture as a consequence of righteousness and associates famine, plundering, and subsistence on wild beasts with wickedness. Note here that the Lamanites were “wild, and ferocious, and a blood-thirsty people . . . feeding upon beasts of prey; dwelling in tents, and wandering about in the wilderness.” In several instances in the Book of Mormon, the wicked will obtain their subsistence by plundering the agricultural production of the righteous (Mosiah 9:14; 10:2-4, 21; 11:15-17; 21:17-21; Alma 17:25-28, 39; 3 Nephi 4:2-6, 18-20, 24). Famine will not be uncommon, and more than once the Lord will use famine to humble his people (Mosiah 12:4-7; Helaman 11:4-17; 12:2-3; Ether 9:28-35).

22 And there were exceedingly many prophets among us. And the people were a stiffnecked people, hard to understand.

verse 22 When the Lord contemplates the destruction of a people, it seems to be his pattern to send “many prophets” among them to make certain they are abundantly warned. Nephi reported on the condition of Jerusalem shortly before its destruction by the Babylonians in 587 BC: “And in that same year there came many prophets, prophesying unto the people that they must repent, or the great city Jerusalem must be destroyed” (1 Nephi 1:4).

“hard to understand” Even the Nephites were not always inclined to understand spiritual things. We would word this differently—something like: The prophets had difficulty making them (the Nephites) understand.

23 And there was nothing save it was exceeding harshness, preaching and prophesying of wars, and contentions, and destructions, and continually reminding them of death, and the duration of eternity, and the judgments and the power of God, and all these things—stirring them up continually to keep them in the fear of the Lord. I say there was nothing short of these things, and exceedingly great plainness of speech, would keep them from going down speedily to destruction. And after this manner do I write concerning them.

verse 23 It would seem that the Lord may vary his approach depending on his audience and their inclination to understand. To some a soft and gentle approach is sufficient. To others, such as the Nephites at the time of Enos, a rougher, more direct “hell, fire, and damnation” type of approach was necessary.

“And after this manner do I write concerning them.” Enos places his “signature” upon his writings concerning his people. It is as though Enos were concluding this section of his writings by saying, “And that’s the way it was in my day.”

25 And it came to pass that I began to be old, and an hundred and seventy and nine years had passed away from the time that our father Lehi left Jerusalem.

verse 25 It is interesting to speculate regarding the age of the prophet Enos at the time of his death. We have previously speculated that Nephi was about seventy or seventy-one years old when he delivered the small plates to his brother Jacob in 544 BC (see 1 Nephi 2:16). Jacob was probably about fifty-four years of age when he received the plates from Nephi (see the introductory discussion for Jacob 1) and probably about ninety-eight years old when he delivered the plates to his son Enos. Presumably Jacob died shortly thereafter. Enos gave up the plates and died somewhere around 420 BC which was eighty years after receiving the plates. We don’t know Enos’s age at the time he received the plates, but judging from his father Jacob’s age, Enos might well have been twenty to forty or more years of age. Thus, at Enos's death shortly after 420 BC, he might well have been over one hundred years old.

26 And I saw that I must soon go down to my grave, having been wrought upon by the power of God that I must preach and prophesy unto this people, and declare the word according to the truth which is in Christ. And I have declared it in all my days, and have rejoiced in it above that of the world.

verse 26 “have rejoiced in it above that of the world” Apparently Enos came to know that the joy provided by the Spirit as a reward for righteousness far exceeds that resulting from satisfying any worldly craving. We learn yet another great lesson from Enos. His mission was not particularly fruitful in his own day. He apparently saw little in the way of immediate effects of his preaching and prophesying. Yet he was blessed to experience joy and satisfaction from his efforts, and, as we will learn in the following verse, he was visited by the Second Comforter.

27 And I soon go to the place of my rest, which is with my Redeemer; for I know that in him I shall rest. And I rejoice in the day when my mortal shall put on immortality, and shall stand before him; then shall I see his face with pleasure, and he will say unto me: Come unto me, ye blessed, there is a place prepared for you in the mansions of my Father. Amen.

verse 27 “I soon go to the place of my rest” For a discussion of the concept of the rest of the Lord, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 21:10. Here Enos likely intends the state of paradise where righteous men may go immediately after death and where they may rest from the cares of the world. What does this really mean? Will they spend a lot of time resting? Likely they will be free of major cares or uncertainties having to do their eternal future, but it is likely they will have little time to actually rest.

Does this verse betray any arrogance on the part of Enos? Is he assuming too much? Certainly not. Here he is simply expressing his testimony that he would one day return to live with his Redeemer. That testimony is received by a righteous man as a gift of the Spirit and may be referred to as the gift of hope (See further discussion of this important spiritual gift in “Two Little-Appreciated Gifts of the Spirit” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, chapter 10, Deliberate Faith and Revealed Faith and in “The Fruits of Faith” in volume 1, chapter 11, Other Notes on Faith. Still further discussion of this topic is found in “The Rest of the Lord—the Gift of Hope” in volume 1, chapter 17, Justification and Sanctification). It is likely that Enos's calling and election had been made sure. For a discussion of the concept of having one's calling and election made sure, see the commentary for Helaman 10:4-7 and also Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 16, Calling and Election Made Sure.

Jarom was the son of Enos. It is likely that the small plates of Nephi were delivered to Jarom by his father Enos in about 420 BC (see Enos 1:25-26).

Jarom Chapter 1

1 Now behold, I, Jarom, write a few words according to the commandment of my father, Enos, that our genealogy may be kept.

verse 1 “I, Jarom, write a few words according to the commandment of my father, Enos” We begin to learn something of Jarom. It is apparent that he was a man of few words. Certainly, he was not given to much writing. We will learn that Jarom had in his possession the small plates of Nephi for almost sixty years, and these fifteen verses are all we have to show for those years.

For commentary on the Hebrew derivation of his name, see the supplemental article, Names in the Book of Mormon.

“that our genealogy may be kept” Beginning with Jarom, the authors of the small plates seem to regard their purpose as, at least in part, genealogical. It is interesting that this purpose was never mentioned by Nephi or Jacob. Most of these authors did not regard themselves as qualified to speak as God’s mouthpiece, but were comfortable with simply keeping a genealogy.

Since the time of Adam there has existed among believers the tradition of keeping a journal, referred to in scripture as a “book of remembrance” (Moses 6:4-6, 46; Malachi 3:16-17; 3 Nephi 24:16). Jarom implies here that the same tradition existed in his family line as well.

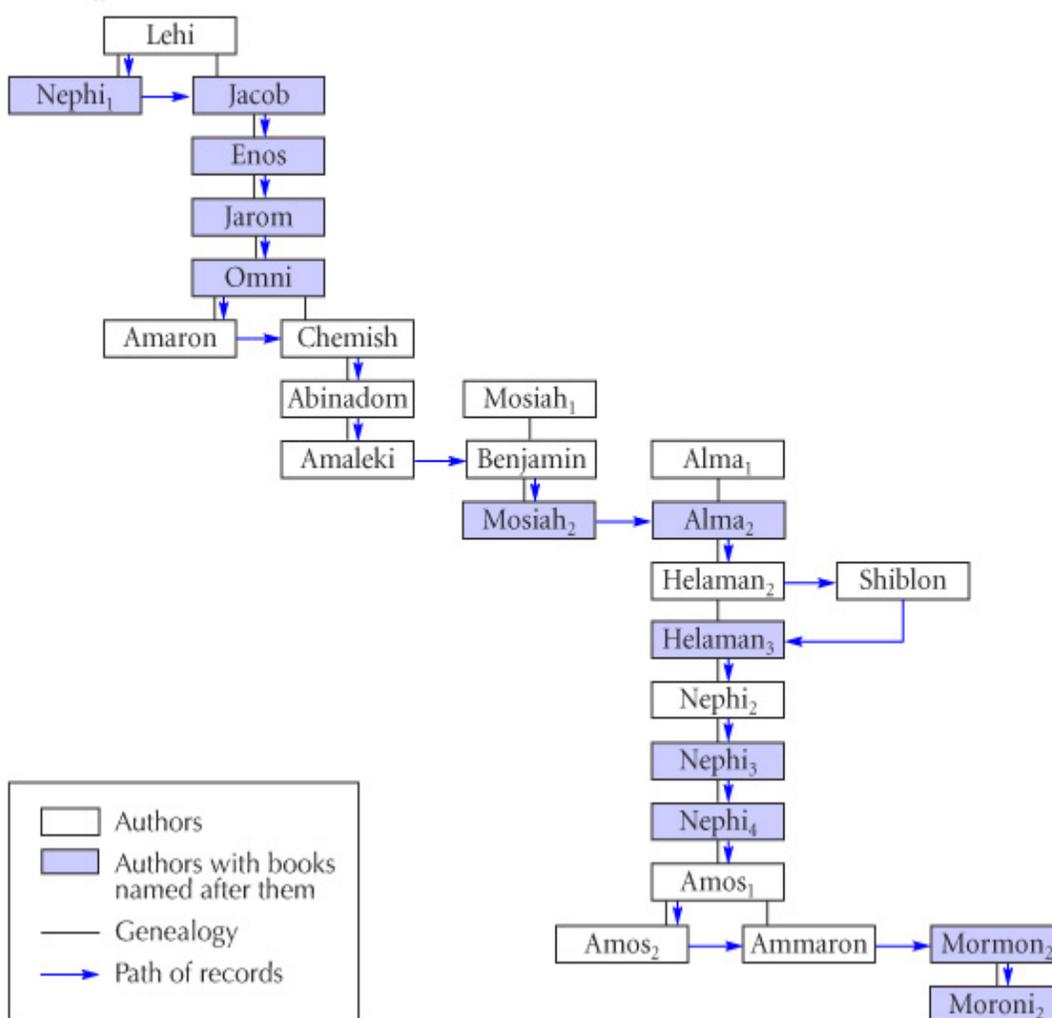

John L. Sorenson has noted that in Mesoamerica, “lineage histories” were kept by priest-scholars, served as symbols of power for the ruling elite, and contained the group’s origin story (which provided legitimacy to the elite lineages) (John L. Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book, 1985, 51). The Book of Mormon served these same functions in Nephite society (John L. Sorenson, “The Book of Mormon as a Mesoamerican Codex,” Newsletter and Proceedings of the SEHA 139, December 1976: 198-218). Sorenson believed, “The Book of Mormon makes clear that it is such a lineage history” (Sorenson, Ancient American Setting, 51).

Lineage continued to be important throughout the Book of Mormon, as evidenced by Mormon’s own declaration of Lehiite descent (3 Nephi 5:20). Understanding the Book of Mormon as a lineage history has important implications. As Sorenson noted, “The ‘history’ kept by a lineage is not, of course, a comprehensive account of everything taking place in the area.” Its concern is more limited to the things deemed important to a particular lineage group and impacting them most. Sorenson summarized: “All this information boils down to the fact that the Book of Mormon is a partial record of events, emphasizing what happened to one group of people, put in their own “ethnocentric terms”—their belief in the inherent superiority of their own distinct group—in the midst of other peoples each with its own version of events (Sorenson, Ancient American Setting, 55).

The Book of Mormon itself seems to reflect the reality of competing lineages with alternative histories (Sorenson, “The Book of Mormon as a Mesoamerican Record,” 420–422).

Who Kept the Records in the Book of Mormon?

While Book of Mormon writers took pride in the noble mortal lineage, they taught that the most important lineage was the divine lineage of Christ. The people become "the children of Christ" and are thereby "made free" (Mosiah 5:7-8); Christ's seed are those who listen to and follow the prophets, thus becoming "heirs of the kingdom of God" (Mosiah 15:11). This divine genealogy was not limited to the royal or priestly families, but was extended to all who would come unto Christ. This remains true today, as those who covenant to follow the Savior, according to Elder Dallin H. Oaks, "In spiritual and figurative terms . . . become the sons and daughters of Christ, heirs to his kingdom" (Elder Dallin H. Oaks, "Taking upon Us the Name of Jesus Christ," April 1985 General Conference Address, online at lds.org).

2 And as these plates are small, and as these things are written for the intent of the benefit of our brethren the Lamanites, wherefore, it must needs be that I write a little; but I shall not write the things of my prophesying, nor of my revelations. For what could I write more than my fathers have written? For have not they revealed the plan of salvation? I say unto you, Yea; and this sufficeth me.

verse 2 "as these plates are small" Jarom is simply commenting that there is but little room left to write on the small plates of Nephi. Keep in mind that the words "large" and "small," when used in the Book of Mormon text to modify "plates," do not refer to the size of each single plate in the set. Rather they refer to the number of plates in the set and hence to the space available for written material. Today we would speak of a book that has few pages as a "short" book. A book with many pages is a "long" book. Thus, the set of large plates of Nephi will eventually be a long book, and the set of small plates of Nephi is now, and will continue to be, a short book.

"these things are written for the intent of the benefit of our brethren the Lamanites" It is clear that one of the major purposes the Lord had in mind for the Book of Mormon was to testify to the apostate remnant of the Lamanites in the latter days (see Enos 1:16-17, D&C 3:19-20).

"it must needs be that I write a little" Jarom writes this phrase with the spirit of not wanting to shirk his duty to his errant brethren the Lamanites.

Jarom then says in effect, "But I won't write much. Anyway, it would be difficult for me to add to what has already been written by my ancestors Nephi, Jacob, and Enos."

"plan of salvation" We have previously discussed this interesting term in the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:6. For the reader's convenience I will reproduce that discussion here. Man has always had a deep need to discern some design, purpose, pattern, or plan regarding his existence. This has been referred to as man's "architectonic" need. That our God is a God of order and has a well-defined plan for the redemption of his children is clear from other references in the Book of Mormon. The “plan of salvation” is also mentioned in the Book of Mormon in Alma 24:14 and Alma 42:5. This plan is referred to by several other names in the Book of Mormon including: “the way of deliverance of our God” (2 Nephi 9:11), “the plan of our God” (2 Nephi 9:13), the “eternal plan of deliverance” (2 Nephi 11:5), “the great plan of redemption” (Jacob 6:8), “the plan of redemption” (Alma 12:25), the “plan of happiness” (Alma 42:8), the “plan of mercy” (Alma 42:15), and the “merciful plan of the great Creator” (2 Nephi 9:6).

It is interesting to note that nowhere in the Bible is it even mentioned that God has a plan for the salvation of his children. We know, however, that Old and New Testament authors knew about the plan of salvation. We read, for example, in the books of Abraham and Moses in the Pearl of Great Price about the pre-earth life and the Grand Council that we attended there. In these books, these concepts are mentioned but briefly. Evidently, they were assumed to be common knowledge among those for whom these books were originally written. Peter’s reference to Christ’s visit to the spirit world also illustrates this point. He obviously did not intend to give a discourse on the subject. Rather, his reference to spirit prison was only used in making another point (1 Peter 3:19).

3 Behold, it is expedient that much should be done among this people, because of the hardness of their hearts, and the deafness of their ears, and the blindness of their minds, and the stiffness of their necks; nevertheless, God is exceedingly merciful unto them, and has not as yet swept them off from the face of the land.

verse 3 Jarom provides us a description of “this people.” Who are they? He likely is referring to his own people, the Nephites. This description was probably written shortly after Jarom received the small plates of Nephi from his father Enos in about 420 BC. It is interesting to contrast his description of the Nephites in this verse with that in verse 5, written some twenty years later. Apparently, significant spiritual improvement had taken place. Keep in mind that this spiritual improvement is not likely due to the efforts of Jarom. The progeny of Jacob, by this time, were outside of the circle of prophets and priesthood leaders among the people.

Spiritual blindness, or insensitivity to the Spirit of God, is referred to in the Book of Mormon using several different phrases. Jarom uses several of them in this verse: “hardness of their hearts,” “deafness of their ears,” “blindness of their minds,” and “stiffness of their necks.” Others include “blind the eyes,” “stiffnecked,” “despise the words of plainness,” and “looking beyond the mark.” See the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

“God . . . has not as yet swept them off from the face of the land” Jarom’s use of the conjunction “as yet” suggests that he may have had a revealed premonition of the eventual annihilation of the Nephite people.

4 And there are many among us who have many revelations, for they are not all stiffnecked. And as many as are not stiffnecked and have faith, have communion with the Holy Spirit, which maketh manifest unto the children of men, according to their faith.

verse 4 Jarom is still referring to his own people, the Nephites, and he assures us that there are righteous people and prophets among his people, though they do not come from the line of Jacob.

This is an important verse which explains a vital principle. Simply stated, the faithful do not only have the right to receive inspiration, rather they will receive revelations or “communion with the Holy Spirit.” Without this communion, a person cannot know of the divinity of Jesus Christ or of the truth of his gospel.

5 And now, behold, two hundred years had passed away, and the people of Nephi had waxed strong in the land. They observed to keep the law of Moses and the sabbath day holy unto the Lord. And they profaned not; neither did they blaspheme. And the laws of the land were exceedingly strict.

verse 5 “two hundred years had passed away” This phrase is based on the time Lehi and his family departed Jerusalem. There will eventually be three separate Nephite methods of chronological reckoning. See the commentary for 3 Nephi 1:1.

It seems likely that Jarom’s writings were entered onto the small plates of Nephi in three installments. The first includes verses 1 through 4 and was probably engraved shortly after Jarom received the small plates of Nephi from his father Enos. The second begins here in verse 5 and extends through verse 12. This entry was made some twenty years after Jarom was given possession of the plates. The final brief entry includes verses 13 through 15 and was made thirty-eight years later or some fifty-eight years after Jarom became custodian of the plates.

“They observed to keep the law of Moses and the sabbath day holy unto the Lord.” Obviously, the spiritual state of the Nephites has improved since Jarom’s first entry (verses 1-4) onto the small plates of Nephi.

On Sina,i the Lord gave to Moses the commandment, “Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy” (Exodus 20:8). Many have erroneously assumed that the law of Sabbath day observance originated with the law of Moses. Keeping the seventh day holy is actually a vital principle of the fulness of gospel (Genesis 2:2-3; D&C 59:9-14).

“they profaned not; neither did they blaspheme” To profane is to violate anything sacred or treat it with abuse, irreverence, or contempt; to show disrespect for sacred things. Similarly, to blaspheme is to speak disrespectfully of sacred things.

6 And they were scattered upon much of the face of the land, and the Lamanites also. And they were exceedingly more numerous than were they of the Nephites; and they loved murder and would drink the blood of beasts.

verse 6 It is noteworthy that the Lamanites, at this point in history, were “exceedingly more numerous” than the Nephites. Why is it that after some 175 years of separation of the two groups, the Lamanites, who were living generally less civilized lives than the Nephites, would far outnumber the Nephites? One would expect the opposite. After all, the Nephites had buildings, good agricultural tools, and adequate weapons for defense. One possible explanation is that Laman, Lemuel, and the sons of Ishmael, after Nephi’s departure from the land of their first inheritance, joined ranks and intermarried with the indigenous peoples in the area (see the supplemental article, Book of Mormon Myths). This might also explain a natural acquisition of the mark of the dark skin that became a sign of the Lamanites’ apostasy. The fact that the dark skin was the result of intermarriage may well explain why skin color was so important to the Nephites. Like their Israelite ancestors, the Nephites preferred to maintain tribal purity by avoiding marriage outside their culture.

7 And it came to pass that they came many times against us, the Nephites, to battle. But our kings and our leaders were mighty men in the faith of the Lord; and they taught the people the ways of the Lord; wherefore, we withstood the Lamanites and swept them away out of our lands, and began to fortify our cities, or whatsoever place of our inheritance.

verse 7 “Our kings and our leaders were mighty men in the faith of the Lord” Obviously there was a noble tradition of kings and other leaders established among the Nephites. When Jarom uses the term “leaders” here, does he refer to the secular leaders or the religious leaders of his people? It is likely that he is referring to the leaders of the Church of Jesus Christ that had been established among them. It is also apparent that Jarom himself was not one of the major secular or religious leaders, since he is speaking of them in the third person. A careful reading of the next verse suggests he may have been a soldier or artisan.

8 And we multiplied exceedingly, and spread upon the face of the land, and became exceedingly rich in gold, and in silver, and in precious things, and in fine workmanship of wood, in buildings, and in machinery, and also in iron and copper, and brass and steel, making all manner of tools of every kind to till the ground, and weapons of war—yea, the sharp pointed arrow, and the quiver, and the dart, and the javelin, and all preparations for war.

verse 8 In times past, critics of the Book of Mormon have enjoyed pointing out that archaeologists have felt that metals were not used in Mesoamerica until AD 900. Now we know that metals were used in Mesoamerica in Book of Mormon times (“A

9 And thus being prepared to meet the Lamanites, they did not prosper against us. But the word of the Lord was verified, which he spake unto our fathers, saying that: Inasmuch as ye will keep my commandments ye shall prosper in the land.

verse 9 “the word of the Lord was verified, which he spake unto our fathers, saying that: Inasmuch as ye will keep my commandments ye shall prosper in the land” This classic Book of Mormon doctrine was first spoken by father Lehi (2 Nephi 1:20) and will be reiterated yet again (Omni 1:6).

10 And it came to pass that the prophets of the Lord did threaten the people of Nephi, according to the word of God, that if they did not keep the commandments, but should fall into transgression, they should be destroyed from off the face of the land.

verse 10 Again, we find the same pattern commented upon in Enos 1:22. When the Lord contemplates the destruction of a people, he sends “many prophets,” or, in this verse, “prophets” among the people to make certain they are abundantly warned. We are left with no information whatever as to the identity of these prophets. Wouldn’t it be fascinating to read the account of this period of time from the large plates of Nephi, the book of Lehi?

11 Wherefore, the prophets, and the priests, and the teachers, did labor diligently, exhorting with all long-suffering the people to diligence; teaching the law of Moses, and the intent for which it was given; persuading them to look forward unto the Messiah, and believe in him to come as though he already was. And after this manner did they teach them.

verse 11 “prophets, and the priests, and the teachers” Here is a listing of the offices in the church of that day. There is no evidence that they had the Aaronic priesthood. Thus, we may assume that these are offices in the Melchizedek priesthood.

“believe in him to come as though he already was” This is a poignant phrase. Though the advent of Christ was yet hundreds of years away, the prophets and other religious leaders were urging the people to believe in Jesus Christ as though he had already come. It is sobering to remind ourselves that today, we have the advantage of believing in Jesus Christ at a time when we have access to scriptural records that he did indeed come!

12 And it came to pass that by so doing they kept them from being destroyed upon the face of the land; for they did prick their hearts with the word, continually stirring them up unto repentance.

verse 12 “prick their hearts with the word” This terminology suggests that the people were frightened by the “threats” of the prophets, priests, and teachers, and dared not disobey the law of Moses. Perhaps having one’s heart “pricked” by the Spirit is a lesser stage of conversion. Later on, more complete conversion may occur as one’s heart is “touched” or “moved.”

13 And it came to pass that two hundred and thirty and eight years had passed away after the manner of wars, and contentions, and dissensions, for the space of much of the time.

verse 13 As pointed out previously, Jarom probably received the small plates of Nephi about 420 BC or one hundred and seventy-nine years after Lehi’s family left Jerusalem. Thus it would seem that Jarom’s “ministry” extended about fifty-nine or so years.

14 And I, Jarom, do not write more, for the plates are small. But behold, my brethren, ye can go to the other plates of Nephi; for behold, upon them the records of our wars are engraven, according to the writings of the kings, or those which they caused to be written.

verse 14 “for the plates are small” There is not much room left on these small plates of Nephi.

“the other plates of Nephi” These are the large plates of Nephi which are held in the possession of the secular leader or king of the land.

15 And I deliver these plates into the hands of my son Omni, that they may be kept according to the commandments of my fathers.

verse 15 This transfer of plates from father to son probably occurred in about 361 BC.

The Book of Omni

The custodians and authors of the small plates of Nephi during this period were Omni the son of Jarom, Omni's son Amaron, Amaron's brother Chemish, Abinadom the son of Chemish, and Amaleki the son of Abinadom.

Chapter Outline of Omni

A brief outline of the book of Mosiah, worth committing to memory, is as follows:

Omni 1 Mosiah leads the Nephites out of the land of Nephi to the land of Zarahemla.

Omni Chapter 1

Scripture Mastery

Omni 1 Mosiah leads the Nephites out of the land of Nephi to the land of Zarahemla.

1 Behold, it came to pass that I, Omni, being commanded by my father, Jarom, that I should write somewhat upon these plates, to preserve our genealogy—verse 1 Omni was the son of Jarom. He was custodian of the small plates of Nephi for forty-four years from about 361 BC to 317 BC. He apparently regarded himself less a prophet and more a warrior. He spent most of his life defending the people of Nephi from the Lamanites.

It is interesting that Omni's motivation in writing upon the small plates of Nephi is the same as that of his father Jarom (see Jarom 1:1). He desired to continue the family journal or "book of remembrance."

2 Wherefore, in my days, I would that ye should know that I fought much with the sword to preserve my people, the Nephites, from falling into the hands of their enemies, the Lamanites. But behold, I of myself am a wicked man, and I have not kept the statutes and the commandments of the Lord as I ought to have done.

verse 2 "I of myself am a wicked man" While it is not for us to judge the candor or modesty in Omni's confession, we can observe that he probably did not possess the Spirit of the Holy Ghost since his three-verse entry into the Book of Mormon contains nothing of a spiritual nature.

Perhaps if we learn a lesson from him, it would be because of his honest and unblinking self-honesty (see also Abinadom's candor in verses 10-11).

3 And it came to pass that two hundred and seventy and six years had passed away, and we had many seasons of peace; and we had many seasons of serious war and bloodshed. Yea, and in fine, two hundred and eighty and two years had passed away, and I had kept these plates according to the commandments of my fathers; and I conferred them upon my son Amaron. And I make an end.

verse 3 This verse likely consists of two entries made six years apart.

The expression “in fine” may be interpreted as “finally” or “in conclusion” or “in summary.”

verses 4-5 We will learn that Amaron’s entire five-verse entry onto the plates was probably made on the day he delivered the plates to his brother Chemish. Amaron was custodian of the plates from 317 BC to 279 BC.

4 And now I, Amaron, write the things whatsoever I write, which are few, in the book of my father.

verses 5-7 We learn in these verses that the Lord’s promise in Jarom 1:9 (see the commentary for that verse) is two-edged. The positive “edge” or version is found in Jarom 1:9: If the people keep the commandments, they will prosper in the land. The negative version is found in these verses: If they do not keep the commandments, they will not only fail to prosper, but the Lord will also allow their destruction by their enemies.

5 Behold, it came to pass that three hundred and twenty years had passed away, and the more wicked part of the Nephites were destroyed.

6 For the Lord would not suffer, after he had led them out of the land of Jerusalem and kept and preserved them from falling into the hands of their enemies, yea, he would not suffer that the words should not be verified, which he spake unto our fathers, saying that: Inasmuch as ye will not keep my commandments ye shall not prosper in the land.

verse 6 We have previously discussed this covenant of the Lord with the Book of Mormon people: “Inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments, ye shall prosper in the land” (1 Nephi 2:20). This verse contains the corollary to that promise of the Lord: “Inasmuch as ye will not keep my commandments ye shall not prosper in the land” (italics added).

7 Wherefore, the Lord did visit them in great judgment; nevertheless, he did spare the righteous that they should not perish, but did deliver them out of the hands of their enemies.

8 And it came to pass that I did deliver the plates unto my brother Chemish.

9 Now I, Chemish, write what few things I write, in the same book with my brother; for behold, I saw the last which he wrote, that he wrote it with his own hand; and he wrote it in the day that he delivered them unto me. And after this manner we keep the records, for it is according to the commandments of our fathers. And I make an end.

verse 9 Chemish has the distinction of having written only a single verse onto the small plates of Nephi. He wrote into the record less than any other of the Book of Mormon's authors.

Chemish and his son Abinadom will have possession of the plates for about sixty-nine years from 279 BC to about 210 BC.

For commentary on the Hebrew name of the name Chemish, see the supplemental article, Names in the Book of Mormon.

10 Behold, I, Abinadom, am the son of Chemish. Behold, it came to pass that I saw much war and contention between my people, the Nephites, and the Lamanites; and I, with my own sword, have taken the lives of many of the Lamanites in the defence of my brethren.

11 And behold, the record of this people is engraven upon plates which is had by the kings, according to the generations; and I know of no revelation save that which has been written, neither prophecy; wherefore, that which is sufficient is written. And I make an end.

verse 11 “plates which is had by the kings” These are, of course, the large plates of Nephi. The plural verb are might be better here, though one might argue that the singular verb is refers to “the record of this people.”

“according to the generations” Each king in succession has written or had written in turn the history of his reign onto the large plates of Nephi.

Abinadom mentions that he knows of no “new” revelations or prophecies beyond those which have been recorded previously on the small plates of Nephi. It seems likely that Abinadom was not spiritually positioned so as to receive revelations from the Lord. He seems content with the idea that no new revelations are needed.

12 Behold, I am Amaleki, the son of Abinadom. Behold, I will speak unto you somewhat concerning Mosiah, who was made king over the land of Zarahemla; for behold, he being warned of the Lord that he should flee out of the land of Nephi, and as many as would hearken unto the voice of the Lord should also depart out of the land with him, into the wilderness—verse 12 Perhaps the book of Omni should have been called the book of Amaleki, since this childless record keeper wrote over half of its thirty verses. Amaleki's contribution to the Book of Mormon is substantial. In nineteen verses, he will introduce three entirely new groups of people in the book. These include the Mulekites, the Jaredites, and the Zeniffites. More about these later.

The Mosiah in this verse is often referred to as “Mosiah I” to distinguish him from his grandson, Mosiah, the son of King Benjamin. The latter Mosiah is similarly, but infrequently, referred to as “Mosiah II.” Little is known of the elder Mosiah’s genealogy. We may be inclined to assume that he was a descendant of Nephi, but there is no good evidence to indicate that the Nephite kingship necessarily passed down from father to son among Nephi’s descendants. Amaleki, of course, is a descendant of Jacob.

Much of Amaleki’s writings are concerned with the dramatic and important historical events that occurred during his lifetime. At this point please read the Narrative Historical Summary of the book of Omni. It is likely that Amaleki took possession of the plates some time before 210 BC. He will eventually deliver them up to King Benjamin in about 130 BC. The date of Mosiah’s departure from the land of Nephi is not known but has been suggested to be about 210 BC.

“Mosiah [was] warned of the Lord that he should flee out of the land of Nephi” This excursion was not likely undertaken electively by Mosiah and his people. Apparently, there was immediate danger, likely imposed by the Lamanites, which threatened them. The Nephites in the land of Nephi at this time were likely being “scourged” by the Lamanites because of the Nephites’ disobedience (see Jacob 3:3-4).

John W. Welch has done some interesting research on the Hebrew word Mosia (pronounced moe-shee-ah). This work is reported in the article, “What Was a ‘Mosiah’?” in Reexploring the Book of Mormon (Deseret Book Company and FARMS, 105-07). He suggests that Mosia is a Hebrew title which is found in the Hebrew versions of the Old Testament in several places (Deuteronomy 22:27; 28:29; Judges 12:3; Psalm 18:41; and Isaiah 5:29), but the word was never transliterated into the English by the King James translators. The word, therefore, does not appear in the English versions of the Old Testament and could not have been known to Joseph Smith. An examination of all occurrences of this term in the Hebrew Bible suggests an individual with the following traits: (1) The Mosia is a victorious hero appointed by God. (2) He liberates a chosen people from oppression, controversy, and injustice after they cry out for help. (3) Their deliverance is usually accomplished by means of a nonviolent escape or negotiation. (4) The immediate result of the coming of a mosia was an escape from injustice and a return to a state of justice where each man possesses his rightful property.

We will learn that King Mosiah I was a God-appointed hero, a savior and rescuer, who delivered the chosen people of Nephi from danger by leading them in an escape from the land of Nephi. It is unknown whether he was called Mosiah before he functioned as a mosia of his people or whether he gained this well-earned title afterward, perhaps as a royal title.

“and as many as would hearken unto the voice of the Lord should also depart out of the land with him” It is likely that a significant number of Nephites, perhaps even a majority, chose not to travel with Mosiah, but rather remain behind in the city of Nephi.

The word “wilderness” is found three times in this verse and in the verse that follows. All three refer to the narrow strip of wilderness which divided the land of Nephi from the land of Zarahemla. See the illustration Hypothetical Map of the Book of Mormon Lands. See also Notes on the Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands.

13 And it came to pass that he did according as the Lord had commanded him. And they departed out of the land into the wilderness, as many as would hearken unto the voice of the Lord; and they were led by many preachings and prophesyings. And they were admonished continually by the word of God; and they were led by the power of his arm, through the wilderness until they came down into the land which is called the land of Zarahemla.

verse 13 “they were led by many preachings and prophesyings” This contingent of Nephites led by Mosiah were apparently a spiritually literate people who possessed a knowledge of the gospel of Jesus Christ as taught previously by Nephi.

“they were admonished continually by the word of God” One of the meanings of the word admonish, from Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language is, “to instruct or direct.” For alternate meanings of this same word, see the commentary for Mosiah 26:6.

“they came down into the land which is called the land of Zarahemla” The word “down” suggests that Zarahemla was at a lower elevation than the land of Nephi. We know that the direction from the land of Nephi to the land of Zarahemla is roughly north.

The name Zarahemla likely derives from a Hebrew word meaning “seed of compassion” or “child of grace, pity, or compassion” (see John A. Tvedtnes, Ensign [October 1986], 65). Perhaps the Mulekite leader was given this name because his ancestor had been rescued when the other sons of King Zedekiah were slain during the Babylonian conquest of Jerusalem.

14 And they discovered a people, who were called the people of Zarahemla. Now, there was great rejoicing among the people of Zarahemla; and also Zarahemla did rejoice exceedingly, because the Lord had sent the people of Mosiah with the plates of brass which contained the record of the Jews.

verse 14 This is the first mention of the people of Zarahemla. We commonly, of course, refer to them as Mulekites. The terms Mulekite or Mulekites is not used even once in the Book of Mormon, however. We will not actually read the name Mulek, from whom many of them descended, until Mosiah 25:2. Mulek was a son of King Zedekiah of Judah. His name is clearly of Hebrew origin. Mulek means “little king” or simply “king” (see the commentary for Mosiah 25:2 for more information on the name Mulek).

Is Mulek ever mentioned in the Bible? For a review of Jerusalem at the time of King Zedekiah and for an exciting explanation of why there is good reason to believe that Mulek might be, in fact, mentioned in the Bible, see the supplemental article, Jerusalem at the Time of Lehi.

The people of Zarahemla were a culturally and spiritually degenerate people. Their Hebrew language had been badly corrupted, and they had neither scriptures nor prophets to guide them. Thus, they formed quite a contrast with the people led by Mosiah.

“Zarahemla did rejoice exceedingly” Their leader was a man named Zarahemla. It is likely that the people of Zarahemla had relatively recently arrived in the area where Mosiah found them, as no ancestral name other than Zarahemla was applied to the land. Zarahemla could have had a father or grandfathers with the same name, however. The people of Zarahemla may have represented only a small segment of the descendants of Mulek and those who came with him. Nowhere is Zarahemla referred to as a king of his people. Perhaps he was something like a “chief” over this limited group of people.

15 Behold, it came to pass that Mosiah discovered that the people of Zarahemla came out from Jerusalem at the time that Zedekiah, king of Judah, was carried away captive into Babylon.

16 And they journeyed in the wilderness, and were brought by the hand of the Lord across the great waters, into the land where Mosiah discovered them; and they had dwelt there from that time forth.

verse 16 “they journeyed in the wilderness, and were brought by the hand of the Lord across the great waters” Their journey in the wilderness may have taken them from Jerusalem to a sea port. A port in Egypt seems most likely since Egypt was an ally of Mulek’s father, and the ports of Israel and Phoenicia at the time were controlled by Babylon. The “hand of the Lord” might well have been the Phoenicians who were the premier sailors of that era and frequented Egyptian ports (John L. Sorenson, “The ‘Mulekites’,” BYU Studies volume 30, number 3, 1990, 8-9).

The Book of Mormon text does not suggest the route the Mulekites took to the New World. However, it is likely they went west through the Mediterranean and then across the Atlantic Ocean. We may well wonder why any ancient Phoenician seaman would have dared to make this journey into the unknown. Likely a good sum of money was involved, and there is considerable evidence for other ancient ocean crossings. Also, the prevailing winds and currents from the strait of Gibraltar would have taken them to the Caribbean (Ibid., 9-10). It is likely that the sailing crew that brought them to the New World would not have been able to return since the return journey is not facilitated by the prevailing winds and currents. Thus, the crew may well have settled with them and were numbered among the Mulekites.

The evidence for the Mulekites’ landing on the gulf coast of Mesoamerica is compelling: “First, the immigrant group’s discovery of the last Jaredite survivor could only have been near the east sea (Ether 9:3 puts the position of the final battleground near that sea). Second, the city of Mulek was located only a few miles from the east sea (Alma 51:26), and we may suppose that this was where the newcomers settled first (compare Alma 8:7). Third, the River Sidon probably enters the east sea no great distance from this city of Mulek, suggesting a plausible route along which the ancestors of Zarahemla and his people ‘came . . . up into the south wilderness’ (Alma 22:31) to their city on the upper river where the Nephites later found them” (Ibid., 10.) See the map Book of Mormon Lands, a Proposed Setting.

The Mulekites had probably landed in the New World by 575 BC.

In addition to the Jaredites, the Lehites, and the Mulekites, recent archaeological evidences have suggested that many others came as well, although how, when, and where they came from remains obscure. Since 1975 archeologists have reported ancient inscriptions in west European or North African writing systems from remote locations throughout much of the United States and Canada. These discoveries were initially received by the archaeological community with much skepticism, but in recent years their skepticism has begun to disintegrate. In 1996 John L. Sorenson and Martin H. Raish re-published an updated exhaustive Bibliography, Pre-Columbian Contact with the Americas across the Oceans, (FARMS, Provo, Utah) initially published in 1990.

17 And at the time that Mosiah discovered them, they had become exceedingly numerous. Nevertheless, they had had many wars and serious contentions, and had fallen by the sword from time to time; and their language had become corrupted; and they had brought no records with them; and they denied the being of their Creator; and Mosiah, nor the people of Mosiah, could understand them.

verse 17 “they had become exceedingly numerous” Dr. John L. Sorenson has seen this expression as evidence that the Mulekites combined with “others” on their arrival in the New World. “From the thumbnail sketch of their history in Omni we cannot tell much, but their becoming ‘exceedingly numerous’ under such difficult pioneer circumstances sounds unlikely on the grounds of natural increase alone.” Speaking of the Mulekites’ journey to the New World, Dr. Sorenson said, “It is likely that there would not have been women aboard for most or all of the crew. For those men to reproduce, as is implied in the expression ‘exceedingly numerous,’ they would have had to find and take ‘native’ or ‘other’ women” (“When Lehi’s Party Arrived in the Land, Did They Find Others There?” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, vol. 1, no. 1, 17).

“they had had many wars and serious contentions” One wonders whether the Mulekites had fought among themselves or whether they encountered hostile indigenous peoples in the area in which they settled.

“their language had become corrupted” While the Jews in Mulek’s party would have spoken mainly Hebrew, it is possible that there was a diversity of languages among the crew. This may have been a factor in the corruption of their language.

Another factor may well have been the Mulekites' intermarrying with and otherwise joining with the indigenous people that were here at the time of their coming ashore (see the commentary for verse 21 which suggests there may have been Jaredite survivors among others). Thus, their languages may have become blended.

18 But it came to pass that Mosiah caused that they should be taught in his language. And it came to pass that after they were taught in the language of Mosiah, Zarahemla gave a genealogy of his fathers, according to his memory; and they are written, but not in these plates.

verse 18 What language did the Nephites speak at the time of Mosiah? What was “the language of Mosiah”? In the first centuries after Lehi’s landing, the Nephites and probably the Mulekites likely maintained their Hebrew speech. However, when Mosiah’s group of refugees left the land of Nephi and came upon the land of Zarahemla, some 390 years had passed, and it was about 210 BC. Sufficient time had passed that their languages had diverged, and the two groups spoke distinct languages. They were unable to understand each other. It seems likely that “the language of Mosiah” was Hebrew or some derivation thereof. There are some intriguing questions for which we do not have the answers. For example, were all of the Mulekites taught Mosiah’s form of Hebrew or only their leader Zarahemla? It does seem a bit unlikely that all of the Mulekites learned Hebrew. Perhaps there was sufficient intercourse among the more common peoples that some universal hybrid form of language—a so-called “lingua franca”—developed. It is interesting that Benjamin, a generation later, was able to speak to all his people so that they understood.

Once they were able to communicate, Zarahemla gave from memory a genealogy of his fathers to Mosiah. We learn in Mosiah 25:2 that Zarahemla descended from Zedekiah through Mulek (see also Helaman 8:21).

Zarahemla’s genealogy was written down, but not on the small plates of Nephi. Where was it written down? Probably on the large plates of Nephi. We know that this group of Nephite migrants did have with them the large plates of Nephi as well as the small plates of Nephi since both sets were later delivered to Mosiah’s son, King Benjamin. We know that the prophet Amaleki took with him the small plates of Nephi, but how did they obtain the large plates of Nephi? They were held in the possession of the Nephite king in the land of Nephi. Presumably Mosiah obtained them. But how did he obtain them? Was he the secular king of the Nephites before the group left the land of Nephi? The text is not clear on this point. It does seem likely that Mosiah was senior descendant of Nephi and thus the king of the Nephites in the land of Nephi.

19 And it came to pass that the people of Zarahemla, and of Mosiah, did unite together; and Mosiah was appointed to be their king.

verse 19 Even though Zarahemla was leader of his people, it seems likely that either the Mulekites did not have a tradition of strong leadership or perhaps Zarahemla was not an especially strong leader. This might explain how easily Zarahemla and the Mulekites acquiesced to Mosiah's leadership. The people of Zarahemla and Mosiah were willing to confirm Mosiah as their king. They did not vote him into office.

It is certainly plausible that all of the people who descended from those who brought Mulek to the New World were not bonded together into a single ethnic group. They may have become quite scattered. Perhaps this is why there is no name such as "Mulekite" ever given to them in the Book of Mormon text. The group led by Zarahemla and discovered by Mosiah may have been just one of several factions.

The political amalgamation described in this verse did not actually result in a complete cultural integration of the two groups. We will find evidences in the remaining Book of Mormon text that the two groups were usually counted separately (see, for example, Mosiah 25:4; Helaman 8:21). By 4 Nephi 1:37-38, however, when the total of all Book of Mormon peoples are divided into seven tribes, there is no mention of the Zarahemlaites. Presumably by then they had become so fused with Nephite society, that they were not identifiable as a separate group.

The willingness of those Zarahemlaites in the land of Zarahemla to accept Mosiah as their king suggests that this was more than a political alliance. Their accepting Mosiah's rule suggests that they accept the religion of the Nephites as well.

20 And it came to pass in the days of Mosiah, there was a large stone brought unto him with engravings on it; and he did interpret the engravings by the gift and power of God.

verse 20 "a large stone brought unto him with engravings on it" When the people of Zarahemla met the elder Mosiah, they showed him a "large stone ... with engravings on it" which Mosiah was able to interpret "by the gift and power of God." The stone "gave an account of one Coriantumr, and the slain of his people," and also "spake a few words concerning his [Coriantumr's] fathers" and related the origin of the Jaredites "from the tower" (Omni 1:20–22).

Coriantumr, as we will learn later, was the leader of one of two great armies of Jaredites that had fought for years resulting in the annihilation of the warriors in both the Jaredite armies. He had eventually killed the leader of the other army, Shim. Though he was wounded in the process, he became the sole survivor of the Jaredite armies.

Today, the large carved stones, called stelae, of the Maya and other Mesoamerican cultures are well known (the plural form is pronounced stē'las or stē'lī and the singular form stē'la). Brant A. Gardner explained, "Mesoamerica is unique in the Western Hemisphere for its writing systems. . . Part of that tradition includes inscriptions on stelae, or large stones" (Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007–2008, 3:64), These were called lakam-tuun by the Maya, which literally meant “large stone,” just as it is in Omni 1:20 (Kerry M. Hull, “War Banners: A Mesoamerican Context for the Title of Liberty,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 24, 2015: 108–109).

Comparing and contrasting the content on stelae with other writing media in the Mesoamerican area, John L. Sorenson explained: “The other large class of documents of which we know consisted of inscribed stones. Those too typically were written in double columns. Again, some human figure or a more complex historical or mythological scene would be presented. Sometimes it was the texts that were primary, and the art secondary, and at other times, the reverse (John L. Sorenson, “The Book of Mormon as a Mesoamerican Codex,” in Book of Mormon Authorship Revisited: The Evidence for Ancient Origins, ed. Noel B. Reynolds, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1996, 413).

Most stelae or stelae were meant to memorialize the king and his accomplishments (Mary Miller and Karl Taube, An Illustrated Dictionary of The Gods and Symbols of Ancient Mexico and the Maya, New York, NY: Thames and Hudson, 1993, 157: “Mesoamerican peoples erected prismatic stone slabs called stelae to celebrate the regimes and ritual passages of the ruling elite, and usually of the supreme ruler himself.”). Mesoamerican art historians Maline D. Werness-Rude and Kaylee R. Spencer said, “Stelae most often depict the visages of a king,” and that “stelae must be seen . . . as historical records of past activities.” They added, “Inscriptions carved on the sides and often the backs of the sculptures specifically anchor the ruler’s actions within time and space (Maline D. Werness-Rude and Kaylee R. Spencer, “Imagery, Architecture, and Activity in the Maya World: An Introduction,” in Maya Imagery, Architecture, and Activity: Space and Spatial Analysis in Art History, ed. Maline D. Werness-Rude and Kaylee R. Spencer, Albuquerque, NM: University of New Mexico Press, 2015, 46. Also note their rendering of lakam tuun as “big stone” on p. 45).

The origin of this practice began with the Olmec, a culture in Mesoamerica contemporary with the Jaredites (Miller and Taube, An Illustrated Dictionary of The Gods and Symbols of Ancient Mexico and the Maya, 157: “The impetus to erect stelae first came in the Middle Formative, 900–300 BC, among the Olmec, when efforts to record history also developed. Stelae at La Venta depict historical rulers attired in regalia that symbolized and reinforce the office and power of an early king”). By 400 BC stelae typically focused on a king or ruler, depicting him as a warrior, providing a record of his actions, and listing off the ruler’s ancestors (Robert J. Sharer and Loa P. Traxler, The Ancient Maya, 6th edition, Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press, 2006, 182–183). These details are broadly consistent with the brief description given in Omni 1:20–22 (Gardner, Second Witness 3:65: “The brief explanation of the events depicted on the stela all have counterparts on the various stelae from the later Classic period, AD 250–800, among the Maya, though the correspondence is not precise. The presence of ancestors attest to the main figure's right of rulership. Based on known stelae dealing with kings and history, it is certain that Coriantumr would have been the central figure of that stela.”).

The monumental inscriptions of Mesoamerica were not widely known in the United States until after Stephens and Catherwood published their findings in 1841 (For a history of the discovery of Mesoamerican ruins and civilization, see David Drew, The Lost Chronicles of the Maya Kings, Berkeley and Los Angeles, CA: University of California Press, 1999, 18–110, mentions of discovered stela can be found on p. 33). The excitement in and around Nauvoo over their findings in 1842 indicates that Joseph Smith and early Latter-day Saints were most likely unaware of things like stone inscriptions found in the Americas previously.

Even as awareness of Mesoamerican stelae grew, the inscriptions remained undecipherable, and as such the understanding of their contents was limited. Before the 1960s, most scholars believed that Mesoamerican monuments had no historical content whatsoever, but exclusively depicted and described gods and myths (Daniel Johnson, Jared Cooper, and Derek Glasser, An LDS Guide to Mesoamerica, Springville, UT: Cedar Fort, 2008, 55–59). Yet the Book of Mormon described a “large stone” engraved with the history of a king, his battles, his ancestors, and the origins of his ruling lineage.

Today, it is easy to take for granted the evidence for large stone monuments from Mesoamerica and assume it is of little or no significance for the Book of Mormon. Such an attitude, however, fails to appreciate how unknown the practice was in Joseph Smith's own time and the fact that it took 130–160 years for linguists and epigraphers to catch up with Amaleki's description in Omni 1:20–22 (It was the 1960s—130+ years after the Book of Mormon was published—when Tatiana Proskouriakoff first published evidence that many stelae commemorated historical events and the accomplishments of kings, rather than simply relate mythic tales of the gods. Then it was in the 1990s—160+ years after the Book of Mormon was published—that David Stuart noted the meaning of lakam-tuun as “large stone”).

The more scholars learn about Mesoamerican stelae, the more comfortably Coriantumr's stela fits the description. This is one instance where archaeology now strongly supports the Book of Mormon, whereas it did not seem to before. Realizing this underscores the importance of patience when it comes to comparing a text like the Book of Mormon to the archaeological record.

21 And they gave an account of one Coriantumr, and the slain of his people. And Coriantumr was discovered by the people of Zarahemla; and he dwelt with them for the space of nine moons.

verse 21 “They” refers to “the engravings” in the previous verse. The discovery of Coriantumr by the Mulekites was prophesied earlier by the prophet Ether (Ether 11:20-21; 13:20-22).

Let us not make the mistake of thinking that Coriantumr was the last living Jaredite. “In Book of Mormon terms, it is extremely unlikely that the entire Jaredite population without exception showed up to be exterminated at the hill Ramah, as Latter-day Saints sometimes have inferred from the words of Ether [Ether 13:20-21]. All in the organized armies may have done so, but inevitably there would have been survivors in remote byways at least” (John L. Sorenson, “The ‘Mulekites’,” BYU Studies volume 30, number 3, 1990, 12).

“he dwelt with them for the space of nine moons” This is the only use of the term “moon” for month on the small plates of Nephi. The words “month” and “months” will appear on Mormon’s abridgment—the plates of Mormon—some sixteen times. It is likely that the Nephites utilized the lunar calendar in which the year consisted of twelve months or moons and 354.367 days (Randall P. Spackman, “Introduction to Book of Mormon Chronology: The Principal Prophecies, Calendars, and Dates,” a FARMS reprint).

We are never told when the great final battle of the Jaredites occurred; when Jaredite civilization ended, and when Coriantumr was discovered by the people of Zarahemla. We do know that this account was made by the prophet Amaleki prior to the time when he delivered the small plates of Nephi to Benjamin in 130 BC. The people of Zarahemla left Jerusalem at the time of its destruction in 586 BC (Omni 1:15-16; Helaman 8:21). Thus, we may conclude that Coriantumr killed Shiz between the time of the Mulekites arrival in the New World in about 586 BC and 130 BC. Brother John L. Sorenson, an LDS anthropologist specializing in Mesoamerica, proposes a date of about 580 BC which coincides with the dramatic fall of the Olmec civilization which he reckons to be at about that same time (“The Years of the Jaredites,” FARMS Preliminary Report, 1969). Another prominent LDS anthropologist, Bruce W. Warren, has also tried to correlate the fall of the Jaredites with the fall of the Olmecs. He has argued for a later date, about 301 BC (New Evidences of Christ in Ancient America, Provo, Utah: Stratford Books, 1999, 22-23).

22 It also spake a few words concerning his fathers. And his first parents came out from the tower, at the time the Lord confounded the language of the people; and the severity of the Lord fell upon them according to his judgments, which are just; and their bones lay scattered in the land northward.

“his first parents came out from the tower” In Book of Mormon usage, the word tower relates to the “great tower” that was built, according to Genesis 11, in the land of Shinar, or Mesopotamia (see Ether 1:3, 5, 33) a few generations after the great

Flood, and is commonly referred to as “the tower of Babel.” It was a giant platform with stepped, sloping sides, called in the Babylonian (Akkadian) language ziggurratu and commonly rendered as ziggurat. Although the symbolism of ziggurats is not completely understood, they focused attention heavenward and are thought to have represented, among other things a holy mountain, representing the connection between heaven and earth, as true temples are meant to do.

These structures were thought of as artificial mountains where deity could dwell and appear to mortals in sacred privacy. The attempt to build “a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven” (Genesis 11:4; cf. Title Page; Helaman 6:28) indicates not that these people were foolishly attempting to climb to heaven but rather that they wanted to build a prominent tower that rose high into the sky.

Unfortunately, there are no contemporary historical accounts of this episode, and the brevity of the biblical account leaves many questions unanswered. For example, the people involved are never named, nor can a precise date be given. The city in which the tower was being built is generally accepted as Babylon based on Genesis 11:9. Post-biblical Jewish traditions that Nimrod built the tower developed from the note in Genesis that Nimrod founded several cities in Mesopotamia, including Babylon (Genesis 10:9-10). One Babylonian tradition credits the god Marduk with founding and naming the city.

All six references to the tower of Babel in the Book of Mormon occur in relation to the Jaredites, whom the Lord directed to leave the area of the tower and to travel to the Americas (Ether 1:38-43). The tower is mentioned in a Jaredite inscription on the stone referred to in this verse and in Ether’s record of the Jaredite people (Mosiah 28:17). Moroni said that as he edited Ether’s record, he dispensed with the portion that dealt with the creation of the earth “even to the great tower” (Ether 1:3) but provided a partial account of what was available “from the tower down unto [the Jaredites] were destroyed” (Ether 1:5). Although the Book of Mormon references corroborate the basic account in the Bible, they do not provide any significant additional historical information, except that Helaman 6:28 contains the theological observation, not specified in the Bible, that Satan motivated the people to build this tower.

It may seem strange to modern readers that bulky earthen platforms could be termed “towers” by Book of Mormon scribes. Yet when the Spanish invaders saw the Mesoamerican temple platforms, they immediately called them torres (“towers”), so height, not shape, must have been the main criterion.

Among Book of Mormon peoples, these towers served different purposes. King Benjamin’s tower enabled many of the people to hear his farewell address (see Mosiah 2:7) and to more effectively participate in his son Mosiah’s coronation.

Towers built and controlled by families or kin groups were used as places of personal worship, as shown by Nephi’s (the son of Helaman) praying from the top of his own tower (see Helaman 7:10-11). The equivalence of such towers to mountains and the Old-World ziggurats is clear: Nephi (Lehi's son) and the brother of Jared ascended mountains to pray (see 1 Nephi 17:7; Alma 31:13; Ether 3:1; 4:1), anticipating the later practice among Book of Mormon peoples of worshipping in sanctuaries built for that purpose (see Alma 15:17; 31:12-18).

In addition to affording strategic views of potential enemy attack (see Mosiah 11:12-13), towers among both Nephites and Lamanites were marks of an influential community. They served as rallying points for local governments (see Alma 48:1), and like European cathedrals, they asserted the renown and political power of the community. Accordingly, when Captain Moroni subdued the king-men, who had defied the authority of the Nephite government, the defeated survivors of the movement were "compelled to hoist the title [flag] of liberty upon their towers, and in their cities" as a sign of submission (see Alma 51:7-8, 13, 17, 20). Any settlement deserving to be labeled a city would have had a tower, and larger cities might have had many. The ability of a ruler to muster manpower and organize resources to construct a tower—the bigger the better—communicated his administrative ability, power, and glory (adapted from John L. Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1985, 171-74).

"severity of the Lord" This is an interesting phrase which, in all scripture, is unique to this verse. A related expression is "severity of God" which is found only in Romans 11:22. One might define the phrase as meaning something like "rigorous judgments of the Lord."

We will read in the book of Ether of the battles of mass destruction that occurred among the Jaredite peoples (Ether 13-15).

23 Behold, I, Amaleki, was born in the days of Mosiah; and I have lived to see his death; and Benjamin, his son, reigneth in his stead.

verse 23 Amaleki notes that he "was born in the days of Mosiah," but he does not say where he was born nor specify which "days of Mosiah" he meant—those in the land of Nephi or those in the land Zarahemla. If he was born in the land of Nephi, he was numbered among those who left the land with Mosiah and would have witnessed firsthand the events he wrote about.

From the time of Mosiah's departure from the land of Nephi in about 210 BC to Amaleki's delivering the plates to King Benjamin in about 130 BC was some eighty years. This observation does not prove anything, but if Amaleki was born in the land of Nephi, then he was quite young, probably not more than his twenties, when the Nephites departed the land of Nephi with Mosiah.

24 And behold, I have seen, in the days of king Benjamin, a serious war and much bloodshed between the Nephites and the Lamanites. But behold, the Nephites did obtain much advantage over them; yea, insomuch that king Benjamin did drive them out of the land of Zarahemla.

verse 24 If you are not familiar with the story of Zeniff, who led a group of Nephites who departed Zarahemla about 200 BC to return to the land of Nephi and reclaim their “homeland,” then please take a few moments now to review that story in the Narrative Historical Summary of the book of Mosiah. Pay particular attention to the summary of the record of Zeniff beginning in the fifth paragraph of that summary. The complete story of this people is reported in Mosiah chapters 9-22. It is noteworthy that Zeniff’s expeditions were not commanded by the Lord as was the expedition of Mosiah and his people who came out of the land of Nephi. Zeniff’s resulted from the personal desires of men to return to the lands of their inheritance.

The Lamanites’ attack on the land of Zarahemla described in this verse likely occurred about 160-150 BC. King Laman’s son led the attacks, and they probably came about the same time as the second attack on the Nephites in the city of Nephi during the reign of Zeniff or the two attacks during the reign of King Noah, since the Lamanites were otherwise peaceful toward the Zeniffites and Nephites during this period. The Lamanites’ motivation for these attacks seemed to be their fear of growing Nephite strength. In addition, there existed the Lamanite tradition of hatred toward the Nephites which had its origins in the belief that Nephi had wronged his elder brothers. Also, the Lamanites may have also been angered by the fact that the Nephites had moved the records of the people from the land of Nephi.

King Benjamin’s victory seems to have unified Zarahemla and established it as Nephite territory. The defeat of the Nephite king Noah established the land of Nephi as Lamanite territory. After these wars, there remained only the two independent kings, the Nephite king Benjamin in Zarahemla and the Lamanite king, the son of Laman, in the land of Nephi.

verses 25-26 These verses establish the fact that Amaleki was a man of great faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and a faithful preacher of the gospel.

25 And it came to pass that I began to be old; and, having no seed, and knowing king Benjamin to be a just man before the Lord, wherefore, I shall deliver up these plates unto him, exhorting all men to come unto God, the Holy One of Israel, and believe in prophesying, and in revelations, and in the ministering of angels, and in the gift of speaking with tongues, and in the gift of interpreting languages, and in all things which are good; for there is nothing which is good save it comes from the Lord; and that which is evil cometh from the devil.

verse 25 The large plates of Nephi were handed down from Nephi himself to each Nephite king in turn. Thus, they would have automatically passed from Mosiah I to his son Benjamin. The small plates, on the other hand, were handed down through the family of Nephi's brother Jacob. After Amaleki finished the plates, having no son to whom he might deliver the plates, he decided to give them to King Benjamin. Undoubtedly, they were highly prized by Benjamin who would have certainly read them eagerly and thrilled in their contents. When Benjamin took possession of both sets of plates it marked the first time both sets had been possessed by one man since the time of Nephi, an interval of over three hundred years.

“and believe in prophesying” Here is a profound principle that has been emphasized previously: All true religion is revealed religion. All influence which prompts us toward fulfilling our eternal potential and cautions us against distracting worldly influence comes from the Lord through the Spirit of the Holy Ghost. Thus, “there is nothing good save it comes from the Lord.”

26 And now, my beloved brethren, I would that ye should come unto Christ, who is the Holy One of Israel, and partake of his salvation, and the power of his redemption. Yea, come unto him, and offer your whole souls as an offering unto him, and continue in fasting and praying, and endure to the end; and as the Lord liveth ye will be saved.

verse 26 “ye should come unto Christ, who is the Holy One of Israel” Amaleki spells out clearly for all to hear, particularly, perhaps, the Jews, that Jesus Christ is the “Holy One of Israel,” the God of the Old Testament.

“offer your whole souls as an offering unto him” This phrase connotes complete submission to the Savior and is worth contemplating.

“as the Lord liveth ye will be saved” Amaleki puts this promise in the form of a binding and sacred oath. To be “saved,” of course, means to be exalted.

verses 27-30 Here Amaleki mentions the journey of those Nephites who returned to the land of Nephi about 200 BC under the leadership of Zeniff to claim the “land of their inheritance.” You have just reviewed this story in the Narrative Historical Summary of the book of Mosiah. Zeniff, as you will recall, was a righteous man and not the “stiffnecked man” referred to in verse 28.

27 And now I would speak somewhat concerning a certain number who went up into the wilderness to return to the land of Nephi; for there was a large number who were desirous to possess the land of their inheritance.

28 Wherefore, they went up into the wilderness. And their leader being a strong and mighty man, and a stiffnecked man, wherefore he caused a contention among them; and they were all slain, save fifty, in the wilderness, and they returned again to the land of Zarahemla.

29 And it came to pass that they also took others to a considerable number, and took their journey again into the wilderness.

30 And I, Amaleki, had a brother, who also went with them; and I have not since known concerning them. And I am about to lie down in my grave; and these plates are full. And I make an end of my speaking.

verse 30 It is interesting to learn that a brother of Amaleki was one of those who went with Zeniff. We sense a note of sadness in Amaleki's statement, "I have not since known concerning them." Amaleki likely had a great affection for his brother.

"these plates are full" This observation was apparently intended to be taken literally. We know, however, that it was not literally true. There was just enough room remaining for the prophet Mormon, in about AD 385, to enter onto the small plates an editorial comment which we now refer to as the Words of Mormon.

Why did not Jacob or his descendants add any new gold plates to those Nephi fashioned? Perhaps they lacked the resources or technology. More likely, however, the Jacobite authors regarded the plates as Nephi's record. They were a sacred legacy to which they were entitled to add only sparingly.

The writings of Amaleki make at least three contributions:

1. As a historical link, they are the source of all that is known about king Mosiah (Mosiah 1—Omni 1:12-23). They document the merger between Nephites and the people of Zarahemla (Omni 1:19); and they tell of two attempts by Nephite groups to regain an inheritance in the land of Nephi—the first a failure, and the second a qualified success (Omni 1:27-30; cf. Mosiah 9:1-4).

2. Amaleki's recording of God's commandment for the righteous Nephites to depart out of the land of Nephi (Omni 1:12) verified the fulfillment of a prophecy uttered by Jacob more than three hundred years before (Jacob 3:4).

3. Amaleki's writing places a final and appropriate admonition near the end of the small plates of Nephi for the readers to come unto Christ (Omni 1:26). This is consistent with the commandment given by his ancestor Nephi that the small plates were to persuade readers to "come unto" Christ (Omni 1:25-26; cf. 1 Nephi 6:4, 6; Jacob 1:1-3; 7:27). Amaleki sealed his plea to come unto Christ and his testimony of how to accomplish it with a promise attested by a sacred oath: "As the Lord liveth ye will be saved" (Omni 1:26).

The Words of Mormon

The Words of Mormon is actually an introduction to the small plates of Nephi (1 Nephi through Omni) written by the prophet Mormon onto the end of the small plates of Nephi about AD 385. Verses 3 through 11 of The Words of Mormon explain (a) how and when Mormon found the small plates; (b) how they became part of the larger archive at his disposal; (c) his summary of their contents; (d) and his reasons for appending them to his larger record. In short, these verses include everything a reader would expect to learn in an introduction. Yet Mormon placed his explanatory material at the end, not the beginning. Today, we expect to read an introduction prior to the material being introduced.

Similarly, the Title Page of the Book of Mormon was, according to Joseph Smith, “a literal translation taken from the last leaf of the plates [of Mormon]” (Joseph Smith, JS History, 1839, Church History Library, Salt Lake City, p. 9, in Karen Lynn Davidson, David J. Whittaker, Mark Ashurst-McGee, eds., Histories, Volume 1: Joseph Smith Histories, 1832–1844, The Joseph Smith Papers Project, Salt Lake City, UT: Church Historians Press, 2012, 352, Draft 1). Finding an introduction following the material being introduced is consistent with a common ancient practice known as subscriptio, where introductory information, such as “the indication of the name of the writer / author and the title of the book” is placed “right at the end, after the last line of the text” (Walter Burkert, The Orientalizing Revolution: Near Eastern Influence on Greek Culture in the Archaic Age, Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1992, 32). Walter Burkert, an expert in the Classics, believed that the finding of this practice in Greek literature was “a detailed and exclusive correspondence which proves that Greek literary practice is ultimately dependent upon Mesopotamia” (Ibid., 4), as that is where the practice of subscriptio originated.

Drawing on the work of Burkert, William J. Hamblin noted that if the practice of subscriptio is “proof,” as Burkert said, of the dependence of Greek literature on Mesopotamian influence, “cannot the same thing be said of the Book of Mormon—that the practice of subscriptio represents ‘a detailed and exclusive correspondence’ which offers proof that the Book of Mormon is ‘ultimately dependent’ on the ancient Near East?” (William J. Hamblin, “Metal Plates and the Book of Mormon,” in Pressing Forward with the Book of Mormon: The FARMS Updates of the 1990s, ed. John W. Welch and Melvin J. Thorne, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1999, 22).

While proof maybe a strong word, it is certainly true that, as Hamblin pointed out, “This idea would have been counterintuitive in the early nineteenth century when title pages [and introductions] appeared at the beginning, not the end, of books” (Ibid., 21). This is evident in the fact that although he found it on the “last leaf [of the plates of Mormon],” the title page was published in the front, not the back, of the Book of Mormon. This ancient practice is not only evident in the placement of the title page, however, but also the location of Words of Mormon. The practice of subscriptio explains why Mormon placed his explanation of the small plates at the end, not the beginning, of the record.

Incidentally, in the year the prophet Mormon wrote The Words of Mormon, he was 74 years old (Mormon was born in about the year AD 310). He was in the process of abridging the vast library of plates that had been handed down to him, the so called large plates of Nephi. He was entering his abridgment onto yet another set of plates, the plates of Mormon. He had started his abridgment with the records from time of Lehi and had completed his record down to the time of King Benjamin, the son of Mosiah I. In searching for additional records of this period, he came upon the small plates of Nephi which, he found, covered the entire period which he had just abridged. He was inspired to include these small plates with his own record. Mormon was not really told why the small plates should be included with his own plates. The small plates were eventually passed on to his son Moroni along with his own abridged record, the plates of Mormon.

It is interesting that Mormon was able to fit the Words of Mormon onto the small plates of Nephi since Amaleki had said that the plates were full (Omni 1:30). Apparently Amaleki left enough space for Mormon to record a few words. Perhaps he had been inspired to do so.

Let us summarize the sequential construction of the Book of Mormon as we have it today:

- The title page written by Moroni onto the last leaf of the plates of Mormon
- The small plates of Nephi, an unabridged record of Nephi, Jacob, and others—1 Nephi through Omni
- The Words of Mormon, Mormon's editorial comment which actually serves as an introduction for the small plates of Nephi and also smooths the transition between the unabridged small plates of Nephi and Mormon's abridgment of the large plates of Nephi. It was written on the last leaf of the small plates of Nephi.
- Mormon's abridgment of the large plates of Nephi—Mosiah through Mormon 5. This abridgment concluded with an abridgment of his own, more extensive, record originally written onto the large plates of Nephi—written beginning when he turned twenty-four years of age
- Mormon's additional history unabridged history written directly onto the plates of Mormon—Mormon 6-7
- Moroni's writings—Mormon 8-9
- Moroni's abridgment of the record of the Jaredites—the book of Ether. This abridgment was taken from the twenty-four plates onto which the record was originally written by the prophet Ether. Whether Moroni did his own translation of these plates or whether he utilized the translation done by King Mosiah (son of Benjamin) is not clear.

- Moroni's writings—the book of Moroni. In Moroni 7, Moroni reports a sermon delivered by Mormon, and in Moroni 8 and 9 Moroni records letters written to him by his father Mormon.

1 And now I, Mormon, being about to deliver up the record which I have been making into the hands of my son Moroni, behold I have witnessed almost all the destruction of my people, the Nephites.

verse 1 “And now I, Mormon” Joseph Smith once suggested that the name “Mormon” means “more good” (Times and Seasons 4:194; TPJS, 299-300).

The “record which I have been making” is, of course, Mormon’s abridgment of the large plates of Nephi which Mormon engraved onto a separate set of plates, the so-called plates of Mormon. It was this latter set of plates, along with the small plates of Nephi, that were eventually delivered to the prophet Joseph Smith, Jr., on September 22, 1827.

2 And it is many hundred years after the coming of Christ that I deliver these records into the hands of my son; and it supposeth me that he will witness the entire destruction of my people. But may God grant that he may survive them, that he may write somewhat concerning them, and somewhat concerning Christ, that perhaps some day it may profit them.

verse 2 It is estimated that Mormon’s “many hundred years after the coming of Christ” is about AD 385.

“he will witness the entire destruction of my people” Moroni did indeed witness this destruction. He will report in Mormon 8:7 a frightening inquisition and slaughter of his people by the Lamanites: “And behold, the Lamanites have hunted my people, the Nephites, down from city to city and from place to place, even until they are no more.”

“may God grant that he may survive them, that he may write somewhat concerning them” From the time Moroni received the plates from his father Mormon in about AD 385, we know that he had possession of the plates for at least thirty-five years until AD 421. This gave Moroni an opportunity to enter onto the plates of Mormon his own writings (Mormon 8-9 and the book of Moroni) and his translation of the record of the Jaredites (book of Ether).

“perhaps some day it may profit them” The pronoun “them” clearly refers to “my people” found earlier in the verse. These are Mormon’s people, the Nephites. Presumably Mormon is recording his hope that the descendants of his people will one day be blessed by the Book of Mormon. The large part of the people who were then called Nephites were destroyed though doubtless some few survived. Perhaps Mormon had in mind also that the descendants of those labeled in his lifetime as Lamanites might also benefit from this book. Let us remind ourselves that the labels "Nephites" and "Lamanites," following Christ's ministry among the Nephites, did not necessarily reflect blood lines. Rather, those labels referred only to an individual's inclination to accept the teachings of the prophets. And even that distinction had been blurred for some years prior to Mormon's final writings.

3 And now, I speak somewhat concerning that which I have written; for after I had made an abridgment from the plates of Nephi, down to the reign of this king Benjamin, of whom Amaleki spake, I searched among the records which had been delivered into my hands, and I found these plates, which contained this small account of the prophets, from Jacob down to the reign of this king Benjamin, and also many of the words of Nephi.

verse 3 "And now, I speak somewhat concerning that which I have written"

Mormon now tells of his experience of finding the small plates of Nephi.

The "plates of Nephi," of course, are the large plates of Nephi.

"this king Benjamin, of whom Amaleki spake" Mormon had apparently just finished reading the final sentences of the small plates of Nephi (Omni 1:23-25) when he recorded his editorial comment, the Words of Mormon, onto those same small plates.

"These plates," of course are the small plates of Nephi.

"I searched among the records which had been delivered into my hands, and I found these plates" It is notable that Mormon had to "search "among the voluminous collection of records he had in his possession in order to find the small plates of Nephi. This raises the question of how well known and how well read were the small plates of Nephi among the Nephite prophets such as Alma.

4 And the things which are upon these plates pleasing me, because of the prophecies of the coming of Christ; and my fathers knowing that many of them have been fulfilled; yea, and I also know that as many things as have been prophesied concerning us down to this day have been fulfilled, and as many as go beyond this day must surely come to pass—verse 4 Here Mormon outlines those subjects or themes contained upon the small plates of Nephi that were pleasing to him and caused him to decide to include the small plates with his own abridged record. These included the prophecies of the coming of Christ particularly in light of the subsequent fulfillment of many of the plates' prophecies and revelations. He referred particularly, of course, to those prophecies concerning the birth and ministry of Jesus Christ. He also was given to know the authenticity of the plates' prophecies yet to be fulfilled in his future.

5 Wherefore, I chose these things, to finish my record upon them, which remainder of my record I shall take from the plates of Nephi; and I cannot write the hundredth part of the things of my people.

verse 5 “these things” As mentioned in the footnotes, this phrase refers to those themes found in the small plates, mentioned in verse 4, which were pleasing to Mormon.

“I chose these things, to finish my record upon them” Mormon here reveals that the themes mentioned in verse 4, will also form the basis or themes of the remainder of his own record—his abridgment of the remainder of the large plates of Nephi.

“I cannot write the hundredth part of the things of my people” The limited space available on the plates of Mormon (see also Jarom 1:2, 14; Omni 1:30; Mormon 8:5); the time required to do the tedious work of engraving the plates (see also 2 Nephi 25:23; Jacob 4:1; Ether 12:24); and the complexities of writing the Egyptian glyphic form of Hebrew language in which the plates were engraved (3 Nephi 5:18; Mormon 9:34) would not permit a more complete record.

6 But behold, I shall take these plates, which contain these prophesyings and revelations, and put them with the remainder of my record, for they are choice unto me; and I know they will be choice unto my brethren.

verse 6 “these plates” The small plates of Nephi.

“the remainder of my record” The plates of Mormon.

“I know they will be choice unto my brethren” Who are his “brethren”? Mormon has reference to all the descendants of the people of the Book of Mormon, perhaps especially to the descendants of the Lamanites of his day (see verse 8). You will recall that Mormon and the Nephites of AD 385 were virtually exterminated (see the commentary for verse 2), and thus would have had few descendants.

7 And I do this for a wise purpose; for thus it whispereth me, according to the workings of the Spirit of the Lord which is in me. And now, I do not know all things; but the Lord knoweth all things which are to come; wherefore, he worketh in me to do according to his will.

verse 7 It is interesting that Mormon was not given to know specifically why the Lord wanted him to include the small plates of Nephi with his own plates of Mormon. We now know that the small plates of Nephi became especially vital when Martin Harris, in 1828, lost the 116 pages of manuscript which contained Joseph Smith’s translation of the book of Lehi taken from the plates of Mormon. These lost materials covered the same time period as is covered by the small plates of Nephi (see D&C 3, 10).

8 And my prayer to God is concerning my brethren, that they may once again come to the knowledge of God, yea, the redemption of Christ; that they may once again be a delightsome people.

verse 8 “my brethren” See the commentary for verse 6.

“Delightsome” may be defined as pleasing unto God. It certainly has nothing to do with skin color. We know that the Jews are also to become “a delightsome people” (2 Nephi 30:7), and they obviously are not black.

9 And now I, Mormon, proceed to finish out my record, which I take from the plates of Nephi; and I make it according to the knowledge and the understanding which God has given me.

verse 9 “my record” This is Mormon’s abridgment of the “plates of Nephi” which are, of course, the set of plates which we call the large plates of Nephi.

10 Wherefore, it came to pass that after Amaleki had delivered up these plates into the hands of king Benjamin, he took them and put them with the other plates, which contained records which had been handed down by the kings, from generation to generation until the days of king Benjamin.

verse 10 It is likely unnecessary at this point to remind the reader that “these plates” are the small plates of Nephi, and “the other plates” are the large plates of Nephi.

11 And they were handed down from king Benjamin, from generation to generation until they have fallen into my hands. And I, Mormon, pray to God that they may be preserved from this time henceforth. And I know that they will be preserved; for there are great things written upon them, out of which my people and their brethren shall be judged at the great and last day, according to the word of God which is written.

verse 11 “they were handed down” The small plates of Nephi were passed along by the keepers of the plates.

The phrase “my people and their brethren” refers to all the Book of Mormon people and their descendants.

12 And now, concerning this king Benjamin—he had somewhat of contentions among his own people.

verse 12 The only description of the “contentions” among the people of Benjamin is found in verses 15 through 18 which follow.

13 And it came to pass also that the armies of the Lamanites came down out of the land of Nephi, to battle against his people. But behold, king Benjamin gathered together his armies, and he did stand against them; and he did fight with the strength of his own arm, with the sword of Laban.

verse 13 “king Benjamin . . . did fight with . . . the sword of Laban” The sword that Nephi took from Laban served as a symbol of the legitimate authority of the Nephite rulers, beginning with Nephi himself. This fits a long tradition, often portrayed in royal and religious art. In the kingly pattern, the sword helped to establish the possessor as the ruler, the one on whom divine kingship was conferred. It symbolized his responsibility to protect the society and to mete out justice. The sword was passed on to the heir as a transfer of authority, and the giving of the sword to the new king was a widespread feature of coronation ceremonies. One example is Goliath’s sword which David used to cut off the head of the Philistine. That sword was preserved and revered. David later obtained the sword again, heroically led the Israelites against the Philistines, and later became king.

There is no direct evidence as to whether Joseph Smith ever possessed the sword of Laban, but it was part of the sacred relics, along with the plates, revealed by Moroni.

14 And in the strength of the Lord they did contend against their enemies, until they had slain many thousands of the Lamanites. And it came to pass that they did contend against the Lamanites until they had driven them out of all the lands of their inheritance.

verses 13-14 For additional information on this battle with the Lamanites, see the commentary for Omni 1:24.

verses 15-18 Mormon describes the contentions that occurred among the Nephites of King Benjamin’s day.

15 And it came to pass that after there had been false Christs, and their mouths had been shut, and they punished according to their crimes;

verse 15 “False Christs” may be individuals who are insidiously persuasive and charismatic, and who are capable of leading people away from the gospel of Christ. Or, “false Christs” may be false churches, specious philosophies, or erroneous doctrines that turn people from the truth.

16 And after there had been false prophets, and false preachers and teachers among the people, and all these having been punished according to their crimes; and after there having been much contention and many dissensions away unto the Lamanites, behold, it came to pass that king Benjamin, with the assistance of the holy prophets who were among his people—verses 15-16 There are some verses in the Book of Mormon suggesting that the Nephite legal code did not specify that a man be punished for simply having erroneous beliefs (see Alma 1:17; 30:7). On the other hand, there were apparently some types of heresy, of which these “false Christs,” “false prophets,” and “false preachers and teachers” were guilty, that broke the law.

17 For behold, king Benjamin was a holy man, and he did reign over his people in righteousness; and there were many holy men in the land, and they did speak the word of God with power and with authority; and they did use much sharpness because of the stiffneckedness of the people—verses 16-17 We have commented previously (see the commentary for Enos 1:22) that it is the Lord’s pattern to send simultaneously many prophets among the people, especially at times when the people are threatened with destruction for their disobedience.

18 Wherefore, with the help of these, king Benjamin, by laboring with all the might of his body and the faculty of his whole soul, and also the prophets, did once more establish peace in the land.

verse 18 “peace in the land” Undoubtedly this peace was born of spiritual unity as well as secular unity.

The Book of Mosiah

We now begin our study of Joseph Smith's translation of the plates of Mormon. These plates are comprised of:

1. Mormon's abridgment of the large plates of Nephi, including his abridgment of his own history previously entered onto the large plates of Nephi (Mormon 1-5);
2. some unabridged writings of Mormon directly onto the plates of Mormon (Mormon 6-7); and
3. the unabridged writings of Mormon's son, Moroni (Mormon 8-9, book of Ether, and book of Moroni).

The book of Mosiah, with its twenty-nine chapters, covers a period of only about forty years from 130 BC to 91 BC. Those authors whose writings have been abridged by Mormon to form the book of Mosiah include: king Benjamin, Zeniff, Mosiah—the son of king Benjamin—and the senior Alma. Before beginning your study of the text, please read carefully the Narrative Historical Summary of the book of Mosiah.

Chapter Outline of Mosiah

A brief outline of the book of Mosiah, worth committing to memory, is as follows:

Mosiah 2-5 King Benjamin's Speech

Mosiah 3 The Natural Man

Mosiah 9-22 Account of the People of Zeniff, Noah, and Limhi

Mosiah 11-17 The Preaching and Martyrdom of Abinadi and the Conversion of Alma

Mosiah 23-24 The Senior Alma and his People in the Wilderness

Mosiah 27 The Rebellion and Conversion of the Younger Alma and the Four Sons of Mosiah

At first glance the name Mosiah might be seen as being derived from the Hebrew word messiah. Kings, after all, were anointed, and so something like this name or title may have been used in the line of Nephite kings. A more likely suggestion, however, is that the name Mosiah derives from the Hebrew word môšîa (mo-SHE-ah), or "a champion of justice in a situation of controversy, battle or oppression" (John Sawyer, "What Was a Môšîa?" Vetus Testamentum 15, 1965: 476). This word comes from the verb yasha, meaning "to help," or "save" (Ludwig Koehler and Walter Baumgartner, The Hebrew and Aramaic Lexicon of the Old Testament, Leiden: Brill, 2001, 1:448; Francis Brown, S. R. Driver, and Charles A. Briggs, eds. and comps., A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament, Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1978, 446–447). Its nominal (noun) form yesha means "deliverance, rescue, salvation," etc. (Brown, Driver, and Briggs, A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament, 447). As a noun for a deliverer or rescuer, Môšia appears several times in the Hebrew Bible. The Lord himself is described as Israel's môšia ("saviour") in Isaiah 49:26.

The book of Mosiah is a book of saviors and deliverers. Examples include: (1) It was Mosiah I who delivered the Nephites from the highlands of the land of Nephi down into the land of Zarahemla (Omni 1:12–13). (2) Likewise, Mosiah II was appointed by the authority of God (Mosiah 2:30-31). He received the people of Limhi under his protection (Mosiah 24), delivering them from oppression after they had cried out for help (Mosiah 24). He authorized Alma the Elder to organize the church (Mosiah 25), forbade the persecution of church members (Mosiah 27:1–2), promoted justice and "equality among all men" (Mosiah 27:3), and ultimately reformed the Nephite government away from a monarchy and into a system of judges (Mosiah 29). (3) The senior Alma was a God-inspired môšia who peaceably saved his people from king Noah and the Lamanites. (4) Zeniff tried to return to the land of Nephi to repossess the rightful property of the Nephites. His efforts failed, however, and (5) his grandson Limhi eventually functioned as a môšia by leading his people in their escape back to Zarahemla. (6) The central core of Benjamin's speech is about the coming of the promised Messiah and the only way to be saved through His blood (Mosiah 3). (7) The centerpiece of the book of Mosiah is Abinadi's testimony that God Himself will come down to suffer and to take upon Himself the iniquity and transgressions of His people, to redeem them and satisfy the demands of justice (Mosiah 15:9; 17:8). (8) The culminating crux of the book of Mosiah is the conversion of Alma the Younger, who after three days and nights of spiritual overshadowing was "redeemed of the Lord" (Mosiah 27:24).

The book of Mosiah repeatedly witnesses that the Lord Jesus Christ is the Savior (môšia), the Redeemer, and the Mighty One of Israel (Isaiah 49:26). The book of Mosiah is, in short, a book of salvation. Thus, the book of Mosiah appears to have been meaningfully named (John W. Welch, "What Was a 'Mosiah'?" in Reexploring the Book of Mormon, ed. John W. Welch, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1992, 106–107).

The book of Mosiah begins with a father, King Benjamin, instructing his sons, as was the custom in ancient Israel (Deuteronomy 6:7).

1 And now there was no more contention in all the land of Zarahemla, among all the people who belonged to king Benjamin, so that king Benjamin had continual peace all the remainder of his days.

verse 1 The author of these initial materials in the book of Mosiah is king Benjamin. Note, however, that Benjamin is not the first person or persona in these writings. The first person in the book of Mosiah, and indeed in the remainder of the books in the Book of Mormon is no longer the author of the individual books. Who is the first person? He is the one who abridged the record, the prophet Mormon.

2 And it came to pass that he had three sons; and he called their names Mosiah, and Helorum, and Helaman. And he caused that they should be taught in all the language of his fathers, that thereby they might become men of understanding; and that they might know concerning the prophecies which had been spoken by the mouths of their fathers, which were delivered them by the hand of the Lord.

verse 2 “he called their names Mosiah, and Helorum, and Helaman” Benjamin’s kingship will soon be bestowed on his son Mosiah. It is never explicitly stated that Mosiah was Benjamin’s firstborn son, but this seems likely since his name here is mentioned first.

“he caused that they should be taught in all the language of his fathers”
Benjamin’s three sons were taught to read and write the form of writing in which the small and large plates of Nephi were written. What language was this? If you have not yet read the article, The Language of the Book of Mormon, then please do so now. The language of the large and small plates is Hebrew, written using a reformed or cursive style of Egyptian hieroglyphics. This language goes by the name of reformed Egyptian.

The large and small plates of Nephi, plus the brass plates of Laban, constituted the “standard works” of the Church of Jesus Christ among the Nephites. The brass plates contained the word of the Lord from the creation down to the ministry of Jeremiah. The large and small plates of Nephi contained “the sayings of our fathers from the time they left Jerusalem” (see verse 6).

These prophecies were available to the sons of king Benjamin in the large and small plates of Nephi, two of their “standard works.”

“which were delivered them by the hand of the Lord” “Which” refers to the “prophecies,” and “them” refers to “their fathers.”

3 And he also taught them concerning the records which were engraven on the plates of brass, saying: My sons, I would that ye should remember that were it not for these plates, which contain these records and these commandments, we must have suffered in ignorance, even at this present time, not knowing the mysteries of God.

verse 3 Here in this verse, Mormon records the beginning of a quotation of King Benjamin’s.

We have previously discussed the meaning of the expression “mysteries of God.” In general, we might say that mysteries are spiritual truths which may be grasped only through divine revelation. We might divide them into two types:

1. A mystery may be a point of doctrine that is not understood by an individual because that individual simply has insufficient knowledge of the matter. The point of doctrine may be basic and not particularly sacred, speculative, or secret. To one man a point of doctrine may be a mystery, but another may understand the doctrine, and to him it is not a mystery. This type of mystery is available by revelation from the Holy Ghost based on one's obedience.

2. Also a mystery may be a point of doctrine that is unusually sacred or esoteric, and one should not speak freely about it. Usually the Lord has not given a complete revealed explanation of this type of mystery, nor is it necessarily his intent to do so. Here in verse 3, definition (1) applies.

4 For it were not possible that our father, Lehi, could have remembered all these things, to have taught them to his children, except it were for the help of these plates; for he having been taught in the language of the Egyptians therefore he could read these engravings, and teach them to his children, that thereby they could teach them to their children, and so fulfilling the commandments of God, even down to this present time.

verses 3-4 Mormon is still quoting king Benjamin, which quotation continues through verse 7. We are taught explicitly that the brass plates of Laban were written in the Egyptian language. Perhaps they were written in the same language used by the Book of Mormon authors—Egyptian-type glyphic script with a distinct set of glyphic characters constructed for writing Hebrew text with Hebrew manners and culture. A recent suggestion has been made that the five books of Moses may have been written on the brass plates in Egyptian, but that “the prophets” (Isaiah, Malachi) on the brass plates were probably written in Hebrew (see Thomas A. Wayment, “The Hebrew Text of Alma 7:11,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, 2005, 14:98). See also the commentary for Alma 7:11.

verse 4 “that thereby they could teach them to their children, and so fulfilling the commandments of God” Parents are commanded to teach gospel truths to their children (Deuteronomy 6:6-7; Moses 6:58-62; D&C 68:25).

5 I say unto you, my sons, were it not for these things, which have been kept and preserved by the hand of God, that we might read and understand of his mysteries, and have his commandments always before our eyes, that even our fathers would have dwindled in unbelief, and we should have been like unto our brethren, the Lamanites, who know nothing concerning these things, or even do not believe them when they are taught them, because of the traditions of their fathers, which are not correct.

verse 5 “have his commandments always before our eyes” Here is a vital principle. Unless you the reader “have his commandments [the scriptures] always before [your] eyes,” you also are in danger of dwindling in unbelief.

The expression “traditions of their fathers” refers to the oral traditions passed from generation to generation by the Lamanites. These unwritten doctrinal and historical traditions invariably became altered in the passing. They are summarized in the commentary for Enos 1:14 and Mosiah 10:12-17.

6 O my sons, I would that ye should remember that these sayings are true, and also that these records are true. And behold, also the plates of Nephi, which contain the records and the sayings of our fathers from the time they left Jerusalem until now, and they are true; and we can know of their surety because we have them before our eyes.

verse 6 Benjamin testifies of the truth and value of the scriptures.

“the plates of Nephi” In this case this expression refers to both the large and the small plates of Nephi. Obviously, the materials contained upon the plates of brass and upon both the large and small plates of Nephi were somehow made available to the Nephite people and became their scriptures.

7 And now, my sons, I would that ye should remember to search them diligently, that ye may profit thereby; and I would that ye should keep the commandments of God, that ye may prosper in the land according to the promises which the Lord made unto our fathers.

verse 7 Trite though they may seem, here are the grand keys to exaltation: study the scriptures and keep the commandments.

“promises which the Lord made unto our fathers” We have discussed previously the Lord’s promise to the Book of Mormon people: “Inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments, ye shall prosper” (1 Nephi 2:20). There is also a corollary to that promise: “Inasmuch as ye will not keep my commandments ye shall not prosper in the land” (Omni 1:6).

8 And many more things did king Benjamin teach his sons, which are not written in this book.

9 And it came to pass that after king Benjamin had made an end of teaching his sons, that he waxed old, and he saw that he must very soon go the way of all the earth; therefore, he thought it expedient that he should confer the kingdom upon one of his sons.

verse 9 It is interesting to note that Benjamin conferred the kingdom on his son Mosiah fully three years before Benjamin's death (see Mosiah 6:5). This was a practice not unheard of in ancient Israelite culture (see the commentary for Mosiah 6:5). During these three years Mosiah and his father may have administered the kingdom jointly.

10 Therefore, he had Mosiah brought before him; and these are the words which he spake unto him, saying: My son, I would that ye should make a proclamation throughout all this land among all this people, or the people of Zarahemla, and the people of Mosiah who dwell in the land, that thereby they may be gathered together; for on the morrow I shall proclaim unto this my people out of mine own mouth that thou art a king and a ruler over this people, whom the Lord our God hath given us.

verse 10 "throughout all this land among all this people" Benjamin instructs his son Mosiah to announce his speech to take place the following day. He is to announce throughout the land to all the people. Just what size land is referred to here? The phrase "land of Zarahemla" may refer to at least two and sometimes three different land areas. First, there is the greater land of Zarahemla, bordered on the south by the narrow strip of wilderness, on the east and west by the East and West Seas, and on the north by the land Desolation. Second, the text may refer to the local land of Zarahemla, that land which immediately surrounds the city of Zarahemla. Finally, on occasion, the expression land of Zarahemla may be used to refer to the city of Zarahemla. Likely examples of this latter usage are found in Alma 2:15 and in Alma 15:18. In the verse we are now discussing, Benjamin likely has reference to the local land of Zarahemla including the city of Zarahemla and that land immediately surrounding the city.

"the people of Zarahemla, and the people of Mosiah" Note that at the time of king Benjamin, the "people of Zarahemla" (the Mulekites) and the "people of Mosiah" (the Nephites) are still counted separately.

"whom the Lord our God hath given us" It is interesting to note that the king in ancient Israel was thought to be chosen by God (Stephen D. Ricks, "The Ideology of Kingship in Mosiah 1-6," a FARMS reprint, August 1987). It is obvious that Benjamin believed that God had called Mosiah to be king. It was traditional that the eldest son succeed his father, though the king had his prerogatives if he felt God wanted otherwise. As previously mentioned in verse 2 of this chapter, we are never told that Mosiah was Benjamin's eldest son, though it is likely since his name is mentioned first in verse 2 of this chapter.

In our commentary of Mosiah 1-6, we will comment on some other features of the Nephite concept of kingship and how closely it correlates with that of the ancient Israelite view of kings.

11 And moreover, I shall give this people a name, that thereby they may be distinguished above all the people which the Lord God hath brought out of the land of Jerusalem; and this I do because they have been a diligent people in keeping the commandments of the Lord.

verse 11 “that thereby they may be distinguished above all the people” In English we would be more likely to say, “that thereby they may be distinguished from all the people.” The construction in this verse is awkward English but excellent Hebrew (John A. Tvedtnes, “The Hebrew Background of the Book of Mormon” in Rediscovering the Book of Mormon, 90).

verses 10-12 These are most intriguing and provocative verses. Benjamin’s people will gather “on the morrow.” Two of the purposes of the gathering, as explained in verse 10, are to announce Benjamin’s retirement and bestow the kingship on his son Mosiah. Another purpose is mentioned in verse 11: “I shall give this people a name, that they may be distinguished above all the people which the Lord God hath brought out of the land of Jerusalem.”

What exactly is going to happen to this people gathered at the temple? What great blessing are they about to receive? Keep in mind that these people are not spiritual novices. They are already a baptized and commandment-keeping people who had been “diligent” in “keeping the commandments of the Lord.” Yet they are about to receive a blessing which will render them unique among all Book-of-Mormon peoples. What is this great blessing? We will learn in Mosiah 5:7-9 that the name to be given to the people is that of the Savior Jesus Christ. Benjamin’s people will hereafter be called, as long as they continue in righteousness, by the name Christ. This title will symbolize a sacred covenant between the Lord and his people (Mosiah 5:7).

This covenant, involving a great spiritual endowment of power and knowledge, seems likely a covenant or set of covenants similar to those entered into by members of the Church today in the temple, the temple endowment. The temple endowment and the other covenants made available to us in the temple, result in a special covenant relationship between man and the Lord that “never shall be blotted out, except it be through transgression.” Blotted out means removed.

13 Yea, and moreover I say unto you, that if this highly favored people of the Lord should fall into transgression, and become a wicked and an adulterous people, that the Lord will deliver them up, that thereby they become weak like unto their brethren; and he will no more preserve them by his matchless and marvelous power, as he has hitherto preserved our fathers.

verse 13 All covenants with God impose an obligation upon the covenant maker. The loftier the covenant, the more binding the obligation. Since Benjamin's people are about to enter into a covenant which will render them "highly favored," they must beware lest they fall into transgression. If they were to fall, the Lord would "deliver them up" to spiritual destruction.

14 For I say unto you, that if he had not extended his arm in the preservation of our fathers they must have fallen into the hands of the Lamanites, and become victims to their hatred.

15 And it came to pass that after king Benjamin had made an end of these sayings to his son, that he gave him charge concerning all the affairs of the kingdom.

verse 15 "he gave him charge concerning all the affairs of the kingdom" It is apparent that in this verse Mosiah is given charge over the temporal affairs of the kingdom. In the next verse, he will be given charge over the kingdom's spiritual affairs.

16 And moreover, he also gave him charge concerning the records which were engraven on the plates of brass; and also the plates of Nephi; and also, the sword of Laban, and the ball or director, which led our fathers through the wilderness, which was prepared by the hand of the Lord that thereby they might be led, every one according to the heed and diligence which they gave unto him.

verse 16 Benjamin passed on to his son the records, the sword of Laban, and the Liahona. These three items have been regarded as the three tokens of Nephite kingship (Gordon C. Thomasson, "Mosiah: The Complex Symbolism and the Symbolic Complex of Kingship in the Book of Mormon," a FARMS reprint).

"plates of Nephi" Mosiah would have been given charge over both the small plates of Nephi and the large plates of Nephi.

In addition to the items mentioned here in verse 16, Mosiah was also given (or subsequently obtained) a set of "interpreters." For a discussion of the interpreters, see the commentary for Mosiah 8:13 and Appendix A, The Process of Translating the Book of Mormon Plates in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2. With the interpreters, he would later translate the twenty-four gold plates comprising the record of the Jaredites (see Mosiah 8:13, 19; 28:11-17). Do we have access to this translation today? We probably do not. Rather we have the book of Ether which is either Moroni's independent translation of the twenty-four Jaredite plates, or, alternatively, it is Moroni's abridgment of king Mosiah's translation of the Jaredite record.

All of these items (the small plates of Nephi, the large plates of Nephi, the sword of Laban, the Liahona, and the interpreters) will be passed along to Alma the younger, then to Alma's son Helaman. From Helaman, they will be passed along the line of prophets, eventually to Mormon and Moroni. Moroni will eventually bury Mormon's abridgments of the large plates of Nephi, the small plates of Nephi, the sword of Laban, and the Liahona where they will later be discovered by Joseph Smith (D&C 17:1). Also, Moroni will bury a set of the interpreters, the Urim and Thummim, fastened to a breast plate. Apparently, these interpreters were the same as those used by the brother of Jared. Whether or not Mosiah's interpreters were the same as those later delivered to Moroni and then to Joseph Smith is unknown.

Mosiah chapters 1-6 include the account of the coronation of Benjamin's son Mosiah. Brother Stephen D. Ricks has compared Mosiah's coronation with the coronation ceremonies of the Hebrews and other ancient near eastern cultures recorded in the Old Testament and other texts ("The Coronation of Kings," a FARMS reprint, July 1989). He cites a few similarities which will be mentioned in the commentary for these chapters. An example is found in this verse. In ancient Israel, during the coronation of a new king, various tokens of kingship were regularly bestowed upon the new monarch. In the Old Testament, these included such things as a "copy of [the] law" which the king was required to read (Deuteronomy 17:18-19), the diadem or crown, and other material symbols of power. In this verse these various objects were given to Mosiah as symbols of his power and leadership.

17 Therefore, as they were unfaithful they did not prosper nor progress in their journey, but were driven back, and incurred the displeasure of God upon them; and therefore they were smitten with famine and sore afflictions, to stir them up in remembrance of their duty.

verse 17 The prophet Mormon comments upon the travails and the cause of those travails experienced by the families of Lehi and Ishmael as they sojourned in the wilderness before coming to the New World (see particularly the commentary for 1 Nephi 16:35).

18 And now, it came to pass that Mosiah went and did as his father had commanded him, and proclaimed unto all the people who were in the land of Zarahemla that thereby they might gather themselves together, to go up to the temple to hear the words which his father should speak unto them.

verse 18 "the temple" Just when this temple was built in Zarahemla and by whom we are not informed. Probably it was built by the senior Mosiah, the father of Benjamin, during his reign as king over the Nephites and the people of Zarahemla. This temple is actually the second Nephite temple, as the first had been built centuries before by Nephi himself in the land of Nephi (see 2 Nephi 5:16).

It is interesting to note that in ancient Israel the temple site always served as the site of coronations (Ricks, 1989). We will note, as we continue our study of the Book of Mormon, that the entire Nephite society was quite temple-centered. Nephite kings made important announcements at the temple (Mosiah 2:5-6; 7:17). When the resurrected Jesus Christ visited the Nephites, he appeared to them at their temple in the land Bountiful (3 Nephi 11:1-10). Even the wicked king Noah spent extravagant amounts of money to furnish the temple.

Mosiah Chapter 2

Mosiah 2-5 King Benjamin's speech

Mosiah 2:17 When ye are in the service of your fellow beings ye are only in the service of your God.

Mosiah 2:20-21 If you should render all the thanks and praise, yet ye would be unprofitable servants.

Mosiah 2:22-24 And behold, all that he requires of you is to keep his commandments; and he has promised you that if ye would keep his commandments ye should prosper in the land. And now, in the first place, he hath created you, and granted unto you your lives, for which ye are indebted unto him. And secondly, he doth require that ye should do as he hath commanded you; for which if ye do, he doth immediately bless you; and therefore he hath paid you. And ye are still indebted unto him, and are, and will be, forever and ever; therefore, of what have ye to boast?

Mosiah 2:38 Therefore if that man repenteth not, and remaineth and dieth an enemy to God, the demands of divine justice do awaken his immortal soul to a lively sense of his own guilt, which doth cause him to shrink from the presence of the Lord, and doth fill his breast with guilt, and pain, and anguish, which is like an unquenchable fire, whose flame ascendeth up forever and ever.

Beginning here in Mosiah 2, Benjamin will deliver a speech at the coronation of his son Mosiah to be the new king over the Nephites. During Benjamin's speech, he will dedicate much of his discourse to plan of salvation themes. This may seem far from the point of the coronation of a new king. But it is interesting to note that in the Israelite culture it was traditional to associate the themes of salvation, direction, and redemption with the coronation of a new king. In fact, King Benjamin's speech follows all of the key points of an Israelite coronary speech, including the obligations of a leader to his people. King Benjamin's teachings about the plan of salvation on the occasion of his son's coronation is an example of his abiding by the traditions of those who came before.

Stephen D. Ricks has noticed that "many features of this coronation ceremony reflect ancient Israelite culture" (Stephen D. Ricks, "Kingship, Coronation, and Covenant in Mosiah 1–6," in King Benjamin's Speech: "That Ye May Learn Wisdom", ed. John W. Welch and Stephen D. Ricks, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1998, 233). These include themes of kingship, covenant-making, rising from the dust, coronation, and resurrection, all of which are found in Benjamin's speech, "were closely linked in the minds of ancient Israelites" (Ibid., 264). It is therefore not at all surprising that Benjamin would utilize the opportunity of his son's coronation to once again teach the fundamentals of the plan of salvation.

Paraphrasing Hugh Nibley, Ricks observed, "One of the best means of establishing a text's authenticity lies in examining the degree to which it accurately reflects in its smaller details the setting or environment from which it claims to derive" (Ibid.). The small details in Mosiah 1–6 illustrate the doctrinal and historical authenticity and richness of the Book of Mormon. Benjamin's speech deftly incorporates elements that accurately reflect many elements of ancient Israelite kingship and covenant ideology. As Ricks concluded, "That the covenant ceremonies in both the Old Testament and the book of Mosiah reflect an ancient Near Eastern pattern prescribed for such occasions may provide another evidence for establishing the genuineness of the Book of Mormon" (Ibid., 265).

Nothing specific is known about Benjamin's birth, though we can speculate that he was probably born between 195 and 187 BC. If he acceded to his father's throne at age thirty, then his reign began some time between 165 and 157 BC. Thus, both he and his father Mosiah each ruled about 40 years in Zarahemla. He fought a major war with the Lamanites around 160-150 BC. He was likely in his late 60s at the time of his sermon.

King Benjamin had fought a good fight. He had led his people and wielded the sword of Laban in their defense against the attacking Lamanites whom he had driven out of the land. He had successfully contended with "false Christs," "false prophets, and false preachers and teachers," and he had dealt with "much contention and many dissensions" among his people (Words of Mormon 1:12-18). In his sermon, we will learn that although he was a military hero in leading his people to victory against attacking Lamanites, he was meek and unassuming. Elder Neal A. Maxwell said of him, "Benjamin's meekness in the face of his many accomplishments marks this man. . . Benjamin was Benjamin, whether he was in his garden, on the battlefield, with his family, or practicing statecraft. For him there was no such thing as a public persona. Moreover, how many other warrior-kings, for instance, would have chosen to regard themselves as teacher more than king?" (King Benjamin's Speech Made Simple, ed. John W. Welch and Stephen D. Ricks, FARMS: Provo, Utah, 3).

He was now ready to report his stewardship to his people. As we have already learned, Benjamin had three primary reasons for calling his people together: (1) to announce his retirement; (2) to name a new king (Mosiah 1:10); and (3) to ask his people to covenant to take upon themselves the name of Christ (Mosiah 1:11-12).

Benjamin's sermon may be divided into three separate orations, each treating a different topic:

1. Mosiah 2:9-41—This is the report of his royal stewardship in which he declares that he had provided his people with temporal and spiritual peace.

2. Mosiah 3:1-27—Here he speaks as a prophet teaching his people how to achieve spiritual success. He relays to his people the words of an angel emphasizing Christ's ministry and atonement.

3. Mosiah 4:4-30—This is his discourse on how people can obtain remission of their sins through the principle of service.

This sermon was delivered about 124 BC. It is likely that Mormon recorded onto the plates of Mormon the entire account of Benjamin's speech without abridging it. It is actually difficult to classify this great sermon. It is, at once, a prophetic text, a coronation text, a covenant renewal text, a farewell speech, a doctrinal discourse, and a personal testimony.

King Benjamin's sermon has been oft analyzed by able scholars and is generally highly regarded today as a masterful oration. It has not always been so. It has taken us as a people a long time for our understanding of his speech to mature. B. H. Roberts viewed the speech as an elementary discussion, as if given, he said, to "little children who were taking first lessons" ("God's Great Men: Jacob and Benjamin," Millennial Star 50 [3 December 1888], 774). Sidney B. Sperry saw the speech as "remarkable in many respects," but he thought it was "highly improbable that Benjamin had received much instruction in the making of sermons or speeches" (Book of Mormon Compendium, Salt Lake City: Bookcraft, 1968, 293).

Benjamin's speech has been credited with facilitating the transition in Nephite government between kingship and a more democratic form of government, the rule of judges (John W. Welch, FARMS Brown Bag Lecture, April 8, 1998). This was accomplished by certain features of the speech including Benjamin's teaching that he as king was no better than any other person in the society (2:10-11). Benjamin made certain that his people understood that the only real king was God (2:19). In traditional Israelite coronations, only the king entered into a covenant with God, however in Benjamin's speech every person in the kingdom was allowed to enter into the covenant (5:2-7). Through the speech, the people became spiritually begotten, free, and empowered (3:17; 5:7-9). Benjamin shared the royal duties such as caring for the poor (4:16, 21-30), and he prohibited slavery (2:13).

A few fascinating patterns have been identified in King Benjamin's speech:

King Benjamin's speech and the Feast of Tabernacles. One of the exciting developments in Book of Mormon research in the past few years has been the discovery of evidence of the ancient Israelite pilgrimage festivals in the Book of Mormon. No single Book of Mormon source has been more fertile for these discoveries than King Benjamin's sermon. There is good reason to believe that the events recorded in Mosiah 2-6 took place during a Nephite observance of the Israelite Feast of Tabernacles (Sukkot in Hebrew).

Among the features of this account that are typical of the Israelite Feast of Tabernacles are the pilgrimage of whole families to the temple site, the sacrifice of animals, the people's dwelling in tents or booths and remaining in those tents during the speech, the speaker's speaking from a platform, reading the law and the renewal of covenants, blessings and cursings, and ritual response of prostration on the ground. The mention made of the Feast of Tabernacles in the Old Testament suggests that its purpose was to enable the Israelites to renew their covenant with God, and that appears to be what the Nephites were doing as they assembled at their temple (Mosiah 5:5; 6:1). If you have an interest in this topic, please read the supplemental article, The Jewish Pilgrimage Festivals and Their Relationship to King Benjamin's Speech. Also, see some additional consideration of the Feast of Tabernacles in the commentary for Mosiah 2:6.

Covenant renewal pattern. Another interesting pattern found in King Benjamin's sermon is described by Blake T. Ostler ("The Covenant Tradition in the Book of Mormon," in Rediscovering the Book of Mormon, 230-40). In the Israelite pilgrimage festivals and on the occasions of the coronation of a new king or ordination of a high priest, as described in the Bible, Brother Ostler has discovered a pattern of a covenant-renewal ritual with eight distinctive features. These are:

1. The gathering of the people, usually to the temple (Mosiah 1:10, 18).
2. The introduction of the person who will stand as the representative of the people before God and state the terms of the covenant (Mosiah 2:1, 9).
3. The covenant speech emphasizing the reasons why the people ought to be obedient to the terms of the covenants (Mosiah 2:21).
4. The outlining of the terms of the covenant (Mosiah 2:22-24).
5. Summarizing the blessings of obedience to the covenant and the penalties or cursings for disobedience (Mosiah 5:8-10).
6. Identifying those to stand as witnesses for the covenant (Mosiah 2:14).
7. The recording of the covenant (Mosiah 6:1).
8. Formal dismissal from the session (Mosiah 6:3).

A similar pattern has been identified in the gathering of the people to the temple in the land of Nephi by King Limhi (see Mosiah 7:17–8:4).

Farewell speech pattern. Scholars have recently taken an interest in similarities in the farewell speeches of many ancient religious and political leaders. Certain themes appear consistently in these addresses given by people such as Moses and Socrates at the end of their lives. It almost seems as if these ancient speakers were following a customary pattern. William S. Kurz has published a detailed study comparing twenty-two addresses from the classic and biblical traditions ("Luke 22:14-38 and Greco-Roman and Biblical Farewell Addresses," Journal of Biblical Literature 104, 1985: 251-68). Kurz signals four of the elements as particularly common to Hebrew farewell addresses: The speaker:

1. proposes tasks for successors
2. reviews theological history

3. reveals future events
4. declares his innocence and fulfillment of his mission.

These elements all appear in King Benjamin's sermon.

Benjamin's frequent use of Hebrew parallelism. King Benjamin's speech in Mosiah 2–5 may well be regarded as a masterpiece of oratory (Neal A. Maxwell, "King Benjamin's Sermon: A Manual for Discipleship," and John W. Welch, "Benjamin's Speech: A Masterful Oration," in King Benjamin's Speech: "That Ye May Learn Wisdom", ed. John W. Welch and Stephen D. Ricks, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1998, 1–22, 55–88). Just one way in which this is so is in the unmistakable presence of chiasmus and other forms of parallelism in the speech's structure. "A stunning array of literary structures appears in Benjamin's speech, purposefully and skillfully organized," noted John W. Welch. "Benjamin's use of chiasmus, all types of parallelisms, and many other forms of repeating patterns adds focus and emphasis to the main messages and the persuasive qualities of this text" (John W. Welch, "Parallelism and Chiasmus in Benjamin's Speech," in King Benjamin's Speech, 315; see also pp. 70-72, 315-410).

Brother Welch explains that King Benjamin's speech does not contain just one or two simple parallelisms, but rather multiple kinds that are spread throughout the text in intricate ways. In addition to chiasmus, "Benjamin's speech features [many additional parallelistic] techniques" (Ibid., 200, note 7).

An elegant statement in Benjamin's Speech, making use of directly parallelistic couplets, is his admonition of belief in Mosiah 4:8-10. Notice the reinforcing rhythms found in the pairs of word and redoubled echoes of Benjamin's eight-part elegy:

- 1 And this is the means whereby salvation cometh,
And there is none other salvation save this which hath been spoken of.
- 2 Neither are there any conditions whereby man can be saved Except the conditions which I have told you.
- 3 Believe in God, believe that he is
And that he created all things both in heaven and in earth.
- 4 Believe that he has all wisdom
And all power both in heaven and in earth.
- 5 Believe that man doth not comprehend all the things Which the Lord can comprehend.
- 6 And again believe that ye must repent of your sins
And forsake them.

7 And humble yourselves before God

And ask in sincerity of heart that he would forgive you.

8 And now if you believe all these things

See that ye do them.

As another example, an important instance of another type of parallelism in Benjamin's speech is the chiasm in Mosiah 5:10–12. It comes in the middle of the final section of the speech as something of a resounding climactic finale.

And now it shall come to pass, a that whosoever shall not take upon him the name of Christ

b must be called by some other name;
c therefore, he findeth himself on the left hand of God.
d And I would that ye should remember also, that this is the name that I said I should give unto you
e that never should be blotted out,
f except it be through transgression;
f' therefore, take heed that ye do not transgress,
e' that the name be not blotted out of your hearts.
d' I say unto you, I would that ye should remember to retain the name written always in your hearts, c' that ye are not found on the left hand of God,
b' but that ye hear and know the voice by which ye shall be called, a' and also, the name by which he shall call you.

This chiasm, discovered by John W. Welch in 1967 while on his mission in Germany (John W. Welch, "The Discovery of Chiasmus in the Book of Mormon," Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 16, no. 2, 2007: 74–87, 99). Since the initial discovery of this chiasm, Welch and other scholars have extensively analyzed the presence of chiasmus and other Hebrew poetic structures in the Book of Mormon, including their important roles in communicating textual meanings as well as their significance for locating the book's cultural and literary historicity (See generally John A. Tvedtnes, "The Hebrew Background of the Book of Mormon," in Rediscovering the Book of Mormon: Insights You May Have Missed Before, ed. John L. Sorenson and Melvin J. Thorne, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1991, 77–91; Donald W. Parry, "Hebraisms and Other Ancient Peculiarities in the Book of Mormon," in Echoes and Evidences of the Book of Mormon, ed. Donald W. Parry, Daniel C. Peterson, and John W. Welch, Provo, UT: FARMS, 155–190; Carl J. Cranney, "The Deliberate Use of Hebrew Parallelisms in the Book of Mormon," Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 23, 2014: 140–165; John A.

Tvedtnes, “Hebraisms in the Book of Mormon,” in Encyclopedia of Hebrew Language and Linguistics, 4 vols., ed. Geoffrey Khan, Leiden: Brill, 2013, 2:195–196).

The use of all kinds of parallelisms in a speech such as Benjamin’s can serve many important purposes. For example:

- It adds dignity to a formal occasion, such as a royal coronation, to have a guiding text that is carefully organized according to traditional literary forms.
- It adds emphasis to a serious declaration, such as a proclamation of a new monarch, to have important points repeated, calling double attention to each point of explanation and instruction.
- It adds balance at a covenant making moment, such as Benjamin’s placing his people under covenant to obey their new leader as God’s continuing servant on earth, to have the reciprocal obligations and blessings of that covenant tied together.
- It adds order to a deeply concentrated presentation, such as Benjamin’s masterful oration, to have words or phrases introduced in one sequence and then to have them repeated in a directly parallel or inverted parallel order, which makes the structure and details of this text impressive, memorable, and actually easier to memorize.

Although one cannot know absolutely whether Benjamin intentionally created the chiasmic patterns observable in his speech, or whether they emerged as something second nature to his way of thinking and writing, the presence of various forms of parallelism and chiasmus in Benjamin’s speech is significant in any literary evaluation of its qualities. It demonstrates that this text was composed carefully, meticulously, purposefully, and elegantly, in a manner consistent with the basic parallelistic norms of ancient Hebrew style (Welch, “Parallelism and Chiasmus in Benjamin’s Speech,” 324).

By including many parallelistic forms in his oration, Benjamin utilized a method that very effectively communicated his important messages. Not only does the presence of these forms provide evidence for the Book of Mormon’s Hebraic roots, it also helps modern readers appreciate the beauty of the text and focus their attention on the key points of rich doctrine that it contains.

Treaty / covenant pattern. Yet another ritual pattern has been identified in King Benjamin’s speech by Stephen D. Ricks (“Treaty and Covenant in King Benjamin’s address” in Echoes and Evidences of the Book of Mormon, [FARMS, 2002], 389-94). This is the “treaty / covenant pattern” in ancient Israelite literature—a literary feature that was completely unknown when the Book of Mormon was published in 1830 and was not identified and studied until the past two generations. In 1954 George Mendenhall described in detail the connection between a treaty pattern from ancient Hittite (inhabitants of Asia Minor or Turkey from 1900 to 1200 BC) treaties and Israelite covenant making (“Covenant Forms in Israelite Tradition,” Biblical Archaeologist 17 [1954]: 66). He identified the specific elements of the treaty / covenant pattern:

1. The king/prophet gives a preamble that introduces God as the one making the treaty or covenant or that introduces his prophet as a spokesman for God. Benjamin's covenant assembly preamble in the book of Mosiah begins: "These are the words which [Benjamin] spake and caused to be written, saying" (Mosiah 2:9). Although Benjamin is speaking, he is clearly acting as the mouthpiece of God. In fact, a sizable part of his address consists of words that had been made known to him "by an angel from God" (Mosiah 3:2).

2. The king / prophet gives a brief review of God's dealings with Israel in the past. The book of Mosiah passage includes a long account of the past relations between King Benjamin and his people as an a fortiori (with even a stronger reason) argument for the people's obligation to God (see Mosiah 2:19).

3. The king / prophet notes the terms of the treaty or covenant, listing specific commandments and obligations that God expects Israel to keep. Benjamin's address also contains numerous commandments; for example: "Believe in God. . . Believe that ye must repent of your sins and forsake them, and humble yourselves before God; and ask in sincerity of heart that he would forgive you" (Mosiah 4:9-10).

4. The people bear witness in formal statements that they accept the treaty or covenant. Following King Benjamin's address, the people express a similar desire "to enter into a covenant with [their] God to do his will, and to be obedient to his commandments" (Mosiah 5:5). They further witness their willingness to obey by allowing their names to be listed among those who have "entered into a covenant with God to keep his commandments" (Mosiah 6:1).

5. The king / prophet lists the blessings and curses for obedience or disobedience to the treaty or covenant. The curses and blessings in Benjamin's speech are implied rather than stated outright: "Whosoever doeth this shall be found at the right hand of God. . . Whosoever shall not take upon him the name of Christ must be called by some other name; therefore, he findeth himself on the left hand of God" (Mosiah 5:9-10).

6. The king / prophet makes provisions for depositing a written copy of the treaty or covenant in a safe and sacred place and for reading its contents to the people in the future. The words of King Benjamin were written and sent out among the people, not only so they could be studied and understood but also, it can be surmised, so they could serve as a permanent record of the assembly (see Mosiah 2:8-9). At the end of Benjamin's address, when all of the people expressed a willingness to take upon themselves Christ's name, their names were recorded and presumably preserved as a memorial of the covenant (see Mosiah 6:1).

Coronation ceremony pattern. Mosiah 2-5 is also a coronation ceremony for Benjamin's son Mosiah. Kingship in ancient Israel and in the ancient Near East and the various steps of the coronation ceremony remained unexamined until the first decades of the twentieth century, when they became the subject of systematic investigation. The account of Mosiah's coronation contains the following four key elements of ancient Israelite coronations:

1. The sanctuary (temple) as the coronation site. A society's most sacred spot is the location where the sacred act of coronation takes place. For Israel, the temple was that site (see 2 Kings 11:14; 1 Kings 1:45; and 1 Kings 1:39). In the case of the Nephites, the temple at Zarahemla was the sacred site chosen for Benjamin's address to the people and for Mosiah's consecration as king (see Mosiah 1:18).

2. Installation in office with insignia. For a biblical example, see the coronation of Joash (see 2 Kings 11:12). At the coronation of Mosiah, Benjamin gave him certain objects, passing on the official records of the people (the plates of brass and the plates of Nephi), the sword of Laban, and the miraculous ball—the director or liahona (see Mosiah 1:15-16).

3. Anointing. To anoint the king with oil was a significant part of coronation ceremonies in ancient Israel and in the ancient Near East generally. The Bible records the anointing of six kings: Saul, David, Solomon, Jehu, Joash, and Jehoahaz. Indeed, the name-title Messiah, which was used to refer to several of the kings of Israel, means “anointed” or “the anointed one,” no doubt referring to the rite of anointing the king during his installation in office.

Following his address and the people's renewal of the covenant, Benjamin “consecrated his son Mosiah to be a ruler and a king over his people” (Mosiah 6:3). The context does not indicate whether this “consecration” included anointing. However, some ritual act was evidently involved since almost the beginning of Nephite history, for Jacob mentioned a coronation that included anointing. He reported that his brother Nephi, the first king, “began to be old, and he saw that he must soon die; wherefore, he anointed a man to be a king and a ruler over his people now, according to the reigns of the kings” (Jacob 1:9). “According to the reigns of the kings” clearly refers to the pattern of kingship in Judah, with which Nephi was personally familiar.

4. Receiving a throne name. In many ancient societies, a king received a new name or throne name when he was crowned king. Several Israelite kings had two names, a birth name and a throne name. Similarly, use of a single royal title marked the early Nephite kings. Jacob wrote, “The people having loved Nephi exceedingly . . . wherefore, the people were desirous to retain in remembrance his name. And whoso should reign in his stead were called by the people, second Nephi, third Nephi, and so forth, according to the reigns of the kings; and thus, they were called by the people, let them be of whatever name they would” (Jacob 1:10-11). While we do not know that this new name was given to the Nephite rulers as part of the coronation rite, there is every reason to expect that it was.

John W. Welch and Stephen D. Ricks said of king Benjamin's speech:

Many points have deeply impressed us about Benjamin's speech. Our studies have convinced us that if a person were to sit down to write such a speech, that person would need to know hundreds of facts and details; and after years of research seeking to grasp all of those details correctly, that author would still be left with the staggering task of embedding all that information fluently and purposefully into an organized composition that accomplishes simultaneously multiple objectives and does so in an unassuming and artistically lucid manner. Benjamin's speech is not a creation that just happened. Its very existence, with all that it enfolds, testifies of God, that he is, that he loves his children despite their weaknesses, and that he blesses those who keep his commandments.

We conclude, both on spiritual and intellectual grounds, that Benjamin's speech bears true and valuable testimony of the prophesied atonement of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Creator of the heavens and the earth and all things that in them are. We apologize if it takes readers more than a day and a half to read this book [King Benjamin's Speech Made Simple], but we remind the impatient that Joseph Smith took only about that long to translate this section in the Book of Mormon containing King Benjamin's Speech (King Benjamin's Speech Made Simple, Introduction).

1 And it came to pass that after Mosiah had done as his father had commanded him, and had made a proclamation throughout all the land, that the people gathered themselves together throughout all the land, that they might go up to the temple to hear the words which king Benjamin should speak unto them.

verse 1 In ancient Hebrew culture one always went “up to the temple” implying that the temple was located on a high vantage point. Ascending the “mountain of the Lord's house” (Isaiah 2:2) was a ritual climb to the presence of the Lord.

2 And there were a great number, even so many that they did not number them; for they had multiplied exceedingly and waxed great in the land.

verse 2 We do not know the size and population of the land of Zarahemla in 124 BC, but it is possible to speculate:

1. The people were given only one day's notice to gather (Mosiah 1:10). This would make it unlikely that any point in the land of Zarahemla was more than twenty miles from the city. If in fact Benjamin's speech did take place at the time of the Feast of Tabernacles, as has been suggested above, then this point might be rendered invalid. In that case the people would have already been intending to gather for the observance of the Israelite pilgrimage festival.

2. “The number who attended Benjamin's assembly was somewhat greater than could be accommodated ‘within the walls of the temple’—likely the plaza or sacred courtyard area” (Mosiah 2:7). Initially the king had supposed that the crowd could fit into the area so that he might speak to them directly, but the group proved too big to hear the aged ruler. John Wesley, at age 70, was able to preach to 20,000 people in the open in England, which suggests that the size of the assembly in Zarahemla was perhaps a little larger. The extent of the land plus the number of people assembled suggest that the population centered in Zarahemla at the time of Benjamin, about 125 BC, was on the order of 25,000, many of whom lived in villages near the settlement, especially along the river” (John L. Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, 156-57).

3 And they also took of the firstlings of their flocks, that they might offer sacrifice and burnt offerings according to the law of Moses; verse 3 Here is evidence that King Benjamin’s speech coincided with the Jewish Feast of Tabernacles which was also called the Festival of the New Year. In the Jewish world, the new year festival traditionally began with burnt offerings of animals.

“they also took of the firstlings of their flocks, that they might offer sacrifice” See the important commentary for 2 Nephi 2:9.

4 And also that they might give thanks to the Lord their God, who had brought them out of the land of Jerusalem, and who had delivered them out of the hands of their enemies, and had appointed just men to be their teachers, and also a just man to be their king, who had established peace in the land of Zarahemla, and who had taught them to keep the commandments of God, that they might rejoice and be filled with love towards God and all men.

5 And it came to pass that when they came up to the temple, they pitched their tents round about, every man according to his family, consisting of his wife, and his sons, and his daughters, and their sons, and their daughters, from the eldest down to the youngest, every family being separate one from another.

6 And they pitched their tents round about the temple, every man having his tent with the door thereof towards the temple, that thereby they might remain in their tents and hear the words which king Benjamin should speak unto them;

verses 5-6 “tents” Perhaps this is further evidence that this occasion coincided with the ancient Jewish holiday known as the Feast of Tabernacles. This annual festival among ancient Jews was also called the Feast of Booths. It took place in the autumn and commemorated the completion of the agricultural year and celebrated the beginning of the new year. It was also held to recall Israel’s wilderness pilgrimage and to renew Israel’s covenant with the Lord. “Booths” were shelters constructed of branches and vines. The original significance of the “booths” derived from an agricultural practice: to protect the olive orchards in the month of harvest (September), their owners used to guard them by night, standing in these booths. Later on, the booth was reinterpreted as a symbol of Israel’s wilderness experience. Each celebrant had to provide himself with a booth in which he slept and ate all his meals for seven days. This was done in remembrance of Israel’s journey through the wilderness.

If you have not already read the supplemental article The Jewish Pilgrimage Festivals and Their Relationship to King Benjamin's Speech, then you might wish to do so now.

7 For the multitude being so great that king Benjamin could not teach them all within the walls of the temple, therefore he caused a tower to be erected, that thereby his people might hear the words which he should speak unto them.

verse 7 “he caused a tower to be erected” The building of wooden structures from which the prophet may speak to his people at important times of covenant making is well-established Hebrew tradition. For example, Josiah stood upon a “pillar” (2 Kings 23:3), Solomon built a “scaffold” (2 Chronicles 6:13), and Ezra stood upon a “pulpit of wood” (Nehemiah 8:4). Why did Benjamin build a “tower” and not a pulpit or scaffold or pillar? It is interesting that the “pulpit of wood” upon which Ezra stood was translated from the Hebrew word which may be transliterated in English “migdal” or “migdawl.” This Hebrew word is commonly translated from the Hebrew as “tower.”

See also the commentary on “tower” in Omni 1:22.

8 And it came to pass that he began to speak to his people from the tower; and they could not all hear his words because of the greatness of the multitude; therefore he caused that the words which he spake should be written and sent forth among those that were not under the sound of his voice, that they might also receive his words.

9 And these are the words which he spake and caused to be written, saying: My brethren, all ye that have assembled yourselves together, you that can hear my words which I shall speak unto you this day; for I have not commanded you to come up hither to trifle with the words which I shall speak, but that you should hearken unto me, and open your ears that ye may hear, and your hearts that ye may understand, and your minds that the mysteries of God may be unfolded to your view.

verse 9 “hear my words which I shall speak unto you this day” The phrase “this day” may mean more than merely “at this time.” It may have significant religious import. The words “this day” appears eighteen times in the Book of Mormon. Eleven of these appear in conjunction with Nephite gatherings at their temples. It has been suggested in an article (“This Day” by John W. Welch, Donald W. Parry, and Stephen D. Ricks, a FARMS reprint, 1990) that this phrase may be specific for one of the three Jewish pilgrimage festivals or feasts which may well have been observed by the Nephite people. “All Israelites were commanded to assemble at their temple ‘before the Lord God’ three times a year on their high holy days (see Exodus 23:17). The Nephites were ‘exceedingly strict’ in observing the law of Moses (in their looking forward to the Christ whom that law typified; see 2 Nephi 5:10; 11:4; Jarom 1:5; Alma 30:3). It thus follows that they also regularly gathered in holy assemblies on such days” (Ibid.). For a review of these three annual festivals, see the supplemental article The Jewish Pilgrimage Festivals and Their Relationship to King Benjamin’s Speech.

“mysteries of God” These “mysteries of God” likely refer to the temple endowment covenants about to be revealed to the people. Benjamin is able to reveal these mysteries by virtue of his holding the Melchizedek priesthood (D&C 84:19).

10 I have not commanded you to come up hither that ye should fear me, or that ye should think that I of myself am more than a mortal man.

verse 10 “I have not commanded you to come up hither . . . that ye should think that I of myself am more than a mortal man” It is interesting to note that in ancient Mesopotamian and Egyptian societies, the king was viewed as being divine or at least as being the adopted offspring of deity. In contrast, in Israelite and Nephite cultures, kingship was viewed rather ambivalently (Ibid., 1987). Later on, Mosiah will warn of the danger of kingship (Mosiah 29:16-17).

11 But I am like as yourselves, subject to all manner of infirmities in body and mind; yet I have been chosen by this people, and consecrated by my father, and was suffered by the hand of the Lord that I should be a ruler and a king over this people; and have been kept and preserved by his matchless power, to serve you with all the might, mind and strength which the Lord hath granted unto me.

verse 11 “I have been chosen by this people” Benjamin was appointed king by his father Mosiah. The role of the people here was only confirmatory.

12 I say unto you that as I have been suffered to spend my days in your service, even up to this time, and have not sought gold nor silver nor any manner of riches of you;

verses 11-12 “consecrated by my father” Benjamin’s father Mosiah had designated Benjamin as king and accordingly Benjamin’s life would be wholly dedicated to governing his people—he was “suffered to spend [his] days” in the service of his people.

13 Neither have I suffered that ye should be confined in dungeons, nor that ye should make slaves one of another, nor that ye should murder, or plunder, or steal, or commit adultery; nor even have I suffered that ye should commit any manner of wickedness, and have taught you that ye should keep the commandments of the Lord, in all things which he hath commanded you—verse 13 Here, the verb “suffered” might be alternatively interpreted as tolerated.

In this verse, King Benjamin sets forth a law specifying that five things will henceforth be prohibited. These are:

1. murder
2. plunder (steal valuables by open force)
3. theft
4. adultery
5. any manner of wickedness.

Apparently, the Nephites regarded this set of laws as a legal precedent. This five-part list will appear seven other times in the Book of Mormon (see Mosiah 29:36; Alma 23:3; 30:10; Helaman 3:14; 6:23; 7:21; and Ether 8:16). It has been observed that this repetition of these five items provides a compelling example of the internal consistency in the text of the Book of Mormon. When Joseph Smith translated the Book of Mormon, he dictated as he went, never taking time to go back and review. How then could he have remembered these five items and be able to repeat them accurately? The reason is simple—he was translating by divine power and not writing or editing.

Kings in ancient Israel were obligated to maintain justice and to protect the rights of the weakest members of society. “Indeed, these qualities were invariably mentioned in descriptions of good kings” (Ibid., 1987). See also Mosiah 4:26.

14 And even I, myself, have labored with mine own hands that I might serve you, and that ye should not be laden with taxes, and that there should nothing come upon you which was grievous to be borne—and of all these things which I have spoken, ye yourselves are witnesses this day.

verse 14 Benjamin had not required that his people support him financially. He had earned his bread by his own sweat just as the Lord had commanded Adam to do. Consequently, the people were not burdened with taxes. “Burdensome, unjust taxation is a form of theft. King Benjamin realized that a government has no more right to steal from its citizens than the citizens have to steal from one another. When all labor, none are oppressed. Since political morality depends upon personal morality, the strict observance of the moral code by both the ruler and the ruled was the very foundation of his benevolent reign” (Rodney Turner, “The Great Conversion,” Studies in Scripture, Volume Seven, 1 Nephi to Alma 29, 211).

Not only was Benjamin hard working and selfless, it seems obvious that he loved God and loved his people. These characteristics also applied to his son Mosiah, making both of them two of the greatest leaders in the pages of the Book of Mormon.

15 Yet, my brethren, I have not done these things that I might boast, neither do I tell these things that thereby I might accuse you; but I tell you these things that ye may know that I can answer a clear conscience before God this day.

16 Behold, I say unto you that because I said unto you that I had spent my days in your service, I do not desire to boast, for I have only been in the service of God.

verse 16 In ancient Hebrew culture, the kings were intended to be types or symbols of what the Messiah would one day be. Benjamin, with his selfless service and dedication to his people, was an apt symbol.

17 And behold, I tell you these things that ye may learn wisdom; that ye may learn that when ye are in the service of your fellow beings ye are only in the service of your God.

18 Behold, ye have called me your king; and if I, whom ye call your king, do labor to serve you, then ought not ye to labor to serve one another?

verses 19-24 Benjamin is about to teach his people one of the more profound lessons found in all scripture. A casual reading of these verses might fail to bring this idea to your attention. He will teach the doctrine of “divine indebtedness.” It is a universal truth, as applicable today as it was in Benjamin’s day. It is simply the necessity of viewing our relationship with our Savior in its true and proper perspective. And what is that perspective? It is that we are deeply in his debt. He has created us (verse 20) and granted unto us our lives (verse 23). He continues to preserve us from day to day (verses 20, 21). Even if we were to serve him with all our might and render unto him all the thanks our souls possess, we would yet be unprofitable servants (verses 20, 21). All he requires of us is that we keep his commandments (verse 22). When we do, he blesses us more than we have merited which only increases our indebtedness (verses 22, 24). Therefore, we have nothing of which to boast (verse 24).

Our material possessions are not ours, but his (D&C 104:13-14; Psalm 24:1). Consider, for a moment, what a different place the world would be if we all truly accepted the truth that material possessions are of no eternal significance. Instead, we observe today, desperate struggling to acquire possessions, possessiveness by those who “earned” their material goods, and the denial of those goods to those who don’t “deserve” them. We see crimes of theft and deception committed by the “have nots” and sins of hoarding and over-protectiveness committed by the “haves.” We see blood shed and war fought by nations in an effort to “own” more land.

Divine indebtedness also may be referred to as gratitude or humility. A man possessing this gift is said to have a “broken heart and contrite spirit.” He is truly humble. Divine indebtedness is the very antithesis of pride. Benjamin is not merely suggesting to his people that they express their gratitude to God, rather he is relaying to them a commandment of God to do so (D&C 59:7, 21; 78:19). The acquisition of true gratitude to God—divine indebtedness—is not merely a mental exercise, but rather a spiritual one. Only the Spirit of the Lord can impart the eternal perspective necessary for us to truly feel this indebtedness. Gratitude is thus a spiritual gift which can only be received by revelation. It is said that gratitude is not only the greatest virtue, but the parent of all other virtues. Why is this so? If a man can successfully obtain from the Holy Spirit a sense of complete and utter dependence upon God for all that he is, for all that he has, and for all that he can become, then he will realize the desperate need he has for the atoning blood of Jesus Christ. He will then be blessed to know that only through the atonement of Jesus Christ can he be saved and exalted.

19 And behold also, if I, whom ye call your king, who has spent his days in your service, and yet has been in the service of God, do merit any thanks from you, O how you ought to thank your heavenly King!

verse 19 “If I . . . do merit any thanks from you, O how you ought to thank your heavenly King!” Note how Benjamin is striving to obey the principle stated in Matthew 5:16: “Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.” He wanted the people’s gratitude for his service to be extended to the Lord instead of towards him.

Elder Neal A. Maxwell commented further on Benjamin’s meekness. In so doing, he commented also on the meekness and deference evident in both the Father and the Son:

Benjamin’s impressive meekness actually mirrors the majestic and mutual meekness of the Father and the Son, on which I have reflected lately. So, I share these brief thoughts with you. Consider these illustrations: Deferential Jesus said: “There is none good but one, that is, God” (Matthew 19:17). “My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me” (John 7:16). “The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do: for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise” (John 5:19). The Father said: “This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased” (Matthew 3:17). “And I heard a voice from the Father, saying: Yea, the words of my Beloved are true and faithful” (2 Nephi 31:15). The Father’s very voice, as we all know, was “small” but penetrating, not “harsh” or “loud” (3 Nephi 11:3). There is a majestic mutual meekness about the Father and the Son, and we should learn from it (King Benjamin’s Speech Made Simple, ed. John W. Welch and Stephen D. Ricks [FARMS: Provo, Utah], 18-19).

20 I say unto you, my brethren, that if you should render all the thanks and praise which your whole soul has power to possess, to that God who has created you, and has kept and preserved you, and has caused that ye should rejoice, and has granted that ye should live in peace one with another—verses 20-21 These two verses contain one of the longer sentences in the Book of Mormon.

21 I say unto you that if ye should serve him who has created you from the beginning, and is preserving you from day to day, by lending you breath, that ye may live and move and do according to your own will, and even supporting you from one moment to another—I say, if ye should serve him with all your whole souls yet ye would be unprofitable servants.

“if ye should serve him with all your whole souls yet ye would be unprofitable servants” Aren't these verses, on their face, a bit discouraging? Is it really true that a man may labor with all his heart and soul and yet be unprofitable to the Lord? It is true, but the reason is an exciting one. The Lord is so generous with us, we cannot possibly cause him to be in our debt. As we obey and serve him, he rewards us with spiritual blessings and gifts. These do not necessarily come as earthly blessings. He rewards us far in excess of our service to him. We are constantly and increasingly in his debt.

As I write these words, I have just returned from watching a professional tennis tournament. In each tennis tournament, one finds a few entrants referred to as “wild cards.” These are individuals who are invited to join a tournament who did not actually qualify for entrance by virtue of the points they have accumulated. In spite of their failure to qualify, the tournament committee extends to them an invitation—often for sentimental reasons. It is felt they will add to the quality and interest of the tournament. Though my analogy suffers from being only superficially apt, are we not all “wild cards” in the kingdom of God?

In perhaps one other sense, we are all unprofitable servants. The Savior is the Creator of all things. He is perfect in his knowledge and power. What could any of us possibly do to profit him? What could we do to improve his status or assets?

It is poignantly true that if we are as diligent as we can be, we cannot keep the Lord from blessing us. Just today, as I write these words, I have been made aware of a physician author writing recently in the British Medical Journal who commented on the “accidental” or serendipitous discoveries made in medicine over the years, especially the discovery of penicillin. He supposes that these discoveries are probably not, in fact, accidental, but rather the rewards of a merciful God to an individual who has done the work to prepare himself to make the discovery. Rather than being due to serendipity, they are due to “divinipity.” This author has coined the saying, “Serendipity is ‘divinipitous,’ but ‘divinipity’ is not serendipitous.” This would seem to be a saying well worth remembering.

22 And behold, all that he requires of you is to keep his commandments; and he has promised you that if ye would keep his commandments ye should prosper in the land; and he never doth vary from that which he hath said; therefore, if ye do keep his commandments he doth bless you and prosper you.

verse 22 This verse clearly spells out the way each of us can please God. We must simply “keep his commandments.”

23 And now, in the first place, he hath created you, and granted unto you your lives, for which ye are indebted unto him.

verse 23 The “first place” is the premortal existence.

24 And secondly, he doth require that ye should do as he hath commanded you; for which if ye do, he doth immediately bless you; and therefore he hath paid you. And ye are still indebted unto him, and are, and will be, forever and ever; therefore, of what have ye to boast?

verses 23-24 Benjamin is teaching the idea that each of us is deeply indebted to God for the blessings of life we all enjoy but have not earned. These include life itself and the Lord's protective care. We know not the way we should travel in this eternal universe, but he does, and he will lead us.

25 And now I ask, can ye say aught of yourselves? I answer you, Nay. Ye cannot say that ye are even as much as the dust of the earth; yet ye were created of the dust of the earth; but behold, it belongeth to him who created you.

26 And I, even I, whom ye call your king, am no better than ye yourselves are; for I am also of the dust. And ye behold that I am old, and am about to yield up this mortal frame to its mother earth.

verse 25-26 “can ye say aught of yourselves” “Aught” means anything. Benjamin is asking, “Do you have anything to brag about?”

“Ye cannot say that ye are even as much as the dust of the earth” Have we no worth at all? This stinging indictment is initially puzzling as it seems to debase mankind. Yet we know that man is supremely important to God (Moses 1:39). This expression is not just hyperbole. Rather it refers to natural and fallen man's propensity for disobedience. Man, in his naked carnal state, devoid of the Spirit of God, is disinclined to respond to promptings in matters of the Spirit. Rather he is inclined to respond only to worldly influences. The “dust of the earth,” in contrast, is obedient to God's commands: “For behold, the dust of the earth moveth hither and thither, to the dividing asunder, at the command of our great and everlasting God” (Helaman 12:7-8). Here is a great irony, since all God requires of us, in order to clear our indebtedness to him, is obedience to his laws.

27 Therefore, as I said unto you that I had served you, walking with a clear conscience before God, even so I at this time have caused that ye should assemble yourselves together, that I might be found blameless, and that your blood should not come upon me, when I shall stand to be judged of God of the things whereof he hath commanded me concerning you.

28 I say unto you that I have caused that ye should assemble yourselves together that I might rid my garments of your blood, at this period of time when I am about to go down to my grave, that I might go down in peace, and my immortal spirit may join the choirs above in singing the praises of a just God.

verses 27-28 We read in latter-day scripture: “It becometh every man who hath been warned to warn his neighbor. Therefore, they [the neighbors] are left without excuse, and their sins are upon their own head” (D&C 88:81-82). And what if we fail to warn our neighbors? Then “their blood would come upon our garments, and we would not be found spotless at the last day” (Jacob 1:19).

verse 28 “at this period of time when I am about to go down to my grave” A Bible scholar, William S. Kurz, has published a study comparing several farewell addresses from the classical and biblical traditions (“Luke 22:14-38 and Greco-Roman and Biblical Farewell Addresses,” Journal of Biblical Literature 104, 1985: 251-68). He has identified some twenty elements common to these farewell addresses. John W. Welch and Daryl R. Hague have compared King Benjamin’s farewell address with these elements and have found a remarkable correlation (“Benjamin’s Speech: A Classic Ancient Farewell Address,” a FARMS reprint, 1987). The details of their comparison will not be reported here. The interested reader is referred to their article.

29 And moreover, I say unto you that I have caused that ye should assemble yourselves together, that I might declare unto you that I can no longer be your teacher, nor your king;

30 For even at this time, my whole frame doth tremble exceedingly while attempting to speak unto you; but the Lord God doth support me, and hath suffered me that I should speak unto you, and hath commanded me that I should declare unto you this day, that my son Mosiah is a king and a ruler over you.

verse 30 “my whole frame doth tremble exceedingly while attempting to speak unto you” A physician student of the Book of Mormon, such as myself, may well wonder whether Benjamin intended a literal rather than a figurative meaning to this phrase. I cannot help but wonder if he might have developed a neurologic disorder involving a tremor in his later years. Might he have had Parkinson’s Disease or some other neurologic disease characterized by a tremor?

31 And now, my brethren, I would that ye should do as ye have hitherto done. As ye have kept my commandments, and also the commandments of my father, and have prospered, and have been kept from falling into the hands of your enemies, even so if ye shall keep the commandments of my son, or the commandments of God which shall be delivered unto you by him, ye shall prosper in the land, and your enemies shall have no power over you.

verse 31 “I would that ye should do as ye have hitherto done” Benjamin is commending his people for their obedience during his reign. Again, we are reminded that these Nephites are already committed church members. Since Benjamin and his father Mosiah were righteous men, as the people obeyed their commandments, they were obeying the commandments of God.

32 But, O my people, beware lest there shall arise contentions among you, and ye list to obey the evil spirit, which was spoken of by my father Mosiah.

verse 32 “ye list to obey the evil spirit, which was spoken of by my father Mosiah” To list is to lean toward or be inclined to. It is interesting to note that in all of the scriptures, the phrase “list to obey the evil spirit” is unique to this verse. The shorter phrase “list to obey” is found in only one other place, in D&C 29:45. In this latter Doctrine and Covenants reference it also refers to those who choose to obey evil influences.

“which was spoken of by my father Mosiah” We have no record of Benjamin’s father Mosiah’s speaking of the “evil spirit” or, for that matter, we have no report of his speaking on any subject. We are thus reminded again that the large plates of Nephi were heavily edited by Mormon, and Mormon’s record contains only a small fraction of the original writings of the Book of Mormon prophets.

33 For behold, there is a wo pronounced upon him who listeth to obey that spirit; for if he listeth to obey him, and remaineth and dieth in his sins, the same drinketh damnation to his own soul; for he receiveth for his wages an everlasting punishment, having transgressed the law of God contrary to his own knowledge.

verse 33 It is important to note that throughout the remainder of King Benjamin’s sermon, and indeed even previously in other passages, the Book of Mormon speaks of our eternal destiny in terms of extremes—the highest heaven and the lowest hell, salvation in the celestial kingdom with God or eternal damnation in outer darkness with the devil. There is “no middle ground. The doctrine of multiple degrees of salvation or multiple heavens revealed to the Prophet Joseph in February, 1832, in the 76th section of the Doctrine and Covenants is not contained in the Book of Mormon. This is not to say that the Book of Mormon prophets did not know about the three degrees of glory, but it is a simple fact that they did not write about them. An example is seen in 1 Nephi 15:35: “The final state of the souls of men is to dwell in the kingdom of God, or to be cast out.” See also verses 40 and 41 below.

Another related doctrine that is not found in the Book of Mormon is that the “probation” through which each of us must pass includes not only our mortal lives on earth, but also the period of time spent in the “spirit prison.” Those that are blessed to enter the “paradise” part of the spirit world have already completed their probation (see also the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:25-26). The fact that it is possible to repent after this mortal life, then, is missing from the Book of Mormon.

The doctrine of the Book of Mormon is thus: Repent during this earth life and be saved or you will be lost and suffer everlastingly. This is obviously incomplete doctrinal truth.

Why do we find incomplete gospel truths in the “most correct book” ever written? Two reasons seem most likely: (1) The Book of Mormon prophets may have known the complete truths of the plan of salvation, but they were able to teach only a limited version to their spiritually shallow congregations. (2) Those prophets may not as yet have received the full plan of salvation story, and thus they were able to teach only an incomplete version—that taught in the Book of Mormon. The Lord obviously intended the Book of Mormon to come forth in the nineteenth century. Perhaps he knew that a version of the doctrine which was more in line with the Protestant mind of the time would be more likely to be received by the people of that time. If the book contained the complete truths of the three degrees of glory, the temple ordinances, celestial marriage, and man’s ultimate potential destiny, it would have been held suspect by those of Joseph’s time and insurmountable ideological obstacles might have prevented the book’s success. Hence, perhaps the Lord intended the partial rendering of the plan of salvation which we read throughout the Book of Mormon.

One plausible way to interpret Book of Mormon passages on the subject of heaven is to interpret the concept of “heaven” as referring to the “multiple heavens,” or all three of the degrees of glory—celestial, terrestrial, and telestial.

This particular verse teaches that a person who responds to an evil spirit and dies in his sins drinks “damnation to his soul” and receives an “everlasting punishment” (see a brief discussion on what it means to be damned in the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:24). The implication is that a man who dies without repenting is banished to outer darkness to live with the devil and his angels eternally.

Perhaps some further clarification would be helpful. One possibility is that perhaps the verse does refer to the individual who will be banished to outer darkness. The phrase “dieth in his sins” may refer, not to the physical death, but to the person who lives out his time in the spirit prison and never does repent and accept Christ as his Savior. He persistently refuses to repent and remains “filthy still” (2 Nephi 9:16; D&C 88:35). Such a person will reside with the devil forever. Along the same lines, perhaps the phrase “having transgressed the law of God contrary to his own knowledge” gives us a clue as to its meaning. Perhaps this verse refers to that individual who accepts the gospel and lives its principles to the point where he is blessed to be visited by the “Second Comforter”—he has his calling and election made sure. Subsequently he comes out in open rebellion against the Church and seeks its destruction. He thus transgresses the law “contrary to his own knowledge.” Such an unwise and reckless soul will spend eternity with Satan.

An alternate explanation is that the expression “everlasting punishment” may not refer to outer darkness at all. In the Doctrine and Covenants, Martin Harris was taught by the Lord that the terms “Endless” or “Eternal” (and perhaps “Everlasting”) are simply names for God. Eternal or endless or everlasting punishment is not punishment that has no end, but rather is simply God’s punishment (D&C 19:4, 6, 10-12). When an unrepentant sinner dies, he is placed in the spirit prison. There he must be taught and refined. He will suffer much personal pain, even to produce “weeping, wailing and gnashing of teeth.” Such an individual is suffering God’s punishment, which may also be called “eternal punishment,” “endless punishment,” or “everlasting punishment.” The usual end result is that the individual will repent and be purified to the point where he will inherit a degree of glory—either terrestrial or telestial or even possibly celestial.

34 I say unto you, that there are not any among you, except it be your little children that have not been taught concerning these things, but what knoweth that ye are eternally indebted to your heavenly Father, to render to him all that you have and are; and also have been taught concerning the records which contain the prophecies which have been spoken by the holy prophets, even down to the time our father, Lehi, left Jerusalem;

verse 34 This verse seems a little awkward in the reading. If the phrase “except it be your little children that have not been taught concerning these things” were placed in parentheses, and if the words “all of you” were inserted after “also,” it might read more smoothly. Basically, the verse says, “All of you know that you are sufficiently eternally indebted to your heavenly Father that you ought to completely dedicate yourself to him. Also, each of you is familiar with the writings of the prophets on the brass plates.”

“render to him all that you have and are” “The earth is the Lord’s, and the fulness thereof” (Psalm 24:1).

35 And also, all that has been spoken by our fathers until now. And behold, also, they spake that which was commanded them of the Lord; therefore, they are just and true.

verses 34-35 Here Benjamin summarizes the scriptures or “standard works” available to his people. They consist of (1) “the records which contain the prophecies which have been spoken by the holy prophets, even down to the time our father, Lehi, left Jerusalem”—the plates of brass, and (2) “all that has been spoken by our fathers until now”—the writings on the large and small plates of Nephi.

verses 36-39 These verses seem to refer to the unpardonable sin or the sin against the Holy Ghost. To reiterate, the essential elements of this sin are: (1) Accepting Christ and his gospel and living the commandments to the point where one is blessed to be sealed up to eternal life either by the Holy Ghost or by a personal visit from the Savior himself. (2) After achieving such a favored state, one must then deny one’s testimony and come out in open rebellion against the Church and seek for its destruction.

It is apparent that the great spiritual endowments about to be received by this people impose upon them a most solemn and binding obligation.

36 And now, I say unto you, my brethren, that after ye have known and have been taught all these things, if ye should transgress and go contrary to that which has been spoken, that ye do withdraw yourselves from the Spirit of the Lord, that it may have no place in you to guide you in wisdom's paths that ye may be blessed, prospered, and preserved—

37 I say unto you, that the man that doeth this, the same cometh out in open rebellion against God; therefore he listeth to obey the evil spirit, and becometh an enemy to all righteousness; therefore, the Lord has no place in him, for he dwelleth not in unholy temples.

verse 37 The phrase “open rebellion” originated with the Book of Mormon. It is found nowhere in the scriptures but in this verse, in Alma 3:18, and in Mormon 2:15.

38 Therefore if that man repenteth not, and remaineth and dieth an enemy to God, the demands of divine justice do awaken his immortal soul to a lively sense of his own guilt, which doth cause him to shrink from the presence of the Lord, and doth fill his breast with guilt, and pain, and anguish, which is like an unquenchable fire, whose flame ascendeth up forever and ever.

verse 38 “shrink from the presence of the Lord” Here is the condition exactly opposite to that described in D&C 121:45: “Let virtue garnish thy thoughts unceasingly; then shall thy confidence wax strong in the presence of God.”

“doth fill his breast with guilt, and pain, and anguish, which is like an unquenchable fire, whose flame ascendeth up forever and ever” Later in his speech, Benjamin will continue on to build upon this metaphorical sense by emphasizing that these feelings of fiery wrath do not come from an actual pit of fire, or the like, but from the sinner’s awakening “to an awful view of their own guilt and abominations,” which “doth cause them to shrink from the presence of the Lord into a state of misery and endless torment” (Mosiah 3:25). The nature of this “punishment,” according to King Benjamin, would be mental torment that we inflict upon ourselves because of our awareness of our own guilt.

This concept of experiencing “hell” through the pain and anguish of a guilty conscience can be found in the Old Testament as well. The Psalmist, for example, lamented that “the sorrows of hell compassed me about” (Psalm 18:5) and that the “pains of hell gat hold upon me: I found trouble and sorrow” (Psalm 116:3). These sentiments parallel with those of Alma the Younger, who recounted that he was “tormented with the pains of hell” and “harrowed up by the memory of my sins” when he remembered his rebellion against God. He wished that he “could be banished and become extinct both soul and body, that I might not be brought to stand in the presence of my God, to be judged of my deeds” (Alma 36: 12-17)

39 And now I say unto you, that mercy hath no claim on that man; therefore his final doom is to endure a never-ending torment.

40 O, all ye old men, and also ye young men, and you little children who can understand my words, for I have spoken plainly unto you that ye might understand, I pray that ye should awake to a remembrance of the awful situation of those that have fallen into transgression.

41 And moreover, I would desire that ye should consider on the blessed and happy state of those that keep the commandments of God. For behold, they are blessed in all things, both temporal and spiritual; and if they hold out faithful to the end they are received into heaven, that thereby they may dwell with God in a state of never-ending happiness. O remember, remember that these things are true; for the Lord God hath spoken it.

verse 41 “O remember, remember that these things are true” The Hebrew verb zakhor (to remember) carries a richer meaning than usually attributed to the verb remember in English. It seems to mean far more than the mere mental recall of information, though of course that is part of its meaning. This verb occurs in the Old Testament over two hundred times and means “to be attentive, to consider, to keep divine commandments, or to act. . . Indeed, to remember involves turning to God, or repenting, or acting in accordance with divine injunctions. . . Conversely, the antonym of the verb to remember in Hebrew—to forget—does not merely describe the passing of a thought from the mind, but involves a failure to act, or a failure to do or keep something. Hence, forgetting God and his commandments is the equivalent of apostasy” (Louis C. Midgley, “O Man, Remember, and Perish Not,” a FARMS reprint, March 1990). For examples of other uses of the verb to remember in the Book of Mormon see Mosiah 4:30; 13:29-30; Alma 37:35; and Moroni 4:3.

Mosiah 3 The Natural Man

Mosiah 3:8 (see also Alma 7:10) Specific prophecy of Jesus Christ and Mary: And he shall be called Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Father of heaven and earth, the Creator of all things from the beginning; and his mother shall be called Mary.

Mosiah 3:17 There is no other name given nor any other way nor means whereby salvation can come unto the children of men, only in and through the name of Christ.

Mosiah 3:19 For the natural man is an enemy to God.

1 And again my brethren, I would call your attention, for I have somewhat more to speak unto you; for behold, I have things to tell you concerning that which is to come.

2 And the things which I shall tell you are made known unto me by an angel from God. And he said unto me: Awake; and I awoke, and behold he stood before me.

verse 2 “an angel” Angels may be commissioned by God to show to men the mysteries of God and to assist prophets in teaching their people. We do not know the identity of this messenger, but keep in mind that at the time of King Benjamin, no one had as yet been resurrected. This angel might have been a translated being. A man like Enoch, for example, might qualify for such an assignment. For a more complete discussion of angels, see the commentary for Alma 29:1.

3 And he said unto me: Awake, and hear the words which I shall tell thee; for behold, I am come to declare unto you the glad tidings of great joy.

verse 3 The “glad tidings of great joy” are announced in verses 5 through 11.

4 For the Lord hath heard thy prayers, and hath judged of thy righteousness, and hath sent me to declare unto thee that thou mayest rejoice; and that thou mayest declare unto thy people, that they may also be filled with joy.

verse 4 Here, we gain insight into how a prophet receives revelation. This verse also contains the two keys for any individual’s receiving a testimony of Christ and his gospel. What are those keys? They are righteous living and prayerful seeking.

5 For behold, the time cometh, and is not far distant, that with power, the Lord Omnipotent who reigneth, who was, and is from all eternity to all eternity, shall come down from heaven among the children of men, and shall dwell in a tabernacle of clay, and shall go forth amongst men, working mighty miracles, such as healing the sick, raising the dead, causing the lame to walk, the blind to receive their sight, and the deaf to hear, and curing all manner of diseases.

verse 5 It is interesting to note that the term “Lord Omnipotent” or “Lord God Omnipotent” is used in very few places in our scripture. Aside from being used in Mosiah chapters 3 and 5 (Mosiah 3:5, 17, 18 21; 5:2, 15), it is used in only one other place in all four of the standard works, in Revelation 19:6. This term is likely used here to emphasize the contrast between the Lord’s complete power and his children’s inability to save themselves.

“who was, and is from all eternity to all eternity” The Savior has always existed. We all share this characteristic with the Savior (D&C 93:29). Our intelligence—the essence of our individual being—like his, was neither created nor can it be destroyed. If this phrase is intended to refer to his reign, then it is hyperbolic, since his dominant role in our round of creation did have a finite beginning.

“the Lord shall come down from heaven among the children of men, and shall dwell in a tabernacle of clay” For a discussion of the concept of the condescension of God, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 11:16.

He shall dwell in a mortal body made up of materials from this mortal world (“clay”).

6 And he shall cast out devils, or the evil spirits which dwell in the hearts of the children of men.

7 And lo, he shall suffer temptations, and pain of body, hunger, thirst, and fatigue, even more than man can suffer, except it be unto death; for behold, blood cometh from every pore, so great shall be his anguish for the wickedness and the abominations of his people.

verse 7 “he shall suffer . . . even more than man can suffer, except it be unto death” It is clear that the physical, mental, emotional, and spiritual suffering that Christ endured in Gethsemane and on the cross were of a greater magnitude than any mortal man is able to endure without fainting or succumbing. Elder James E. Talmage wrote: “He struggled and groaned under a burden such as no other being who has lived on earth might even conceive as possible. It was not physical pain, nor mental anguish alone, that caused him to suffer such torture as to produce an extrusion of blood from every pore; but a spiritual agony of soul such as only God was capable of experiencing. No other man, however great his powers of physical or mental endurance, could have suffered so; for his human organism would have succumbed, and syncope would have produced unconsciousness and welcome oblivion” (Jesus the Christ, 613).

What of the enigmatic phrase “except it be unto death”? What does this phrase imply? Apparently, it means that no other mortal would have been able to suffer the qualitative and quantitative pain the Savior suffered and remain alive.

We are taught that no man is capable of suffering himself without help to the point of being saved in a kingdom of glory. The unrepentant sinner in spirit prison will begin to suffer for his own sins: “But if they would not repent they must suffer even as I; which suffering caused myself, even God, the greatest of all, to tremble because of pain, and to bleed at every pore, and to suffer both body and spirit—and would that I might not drink the bitter cup and shrink” (D&C 19:17-18). But then—if the sinner confesses Christ and covenants to obey him—he will be spared the additional suffering by virtue of the Savior’s atoning suffering and death. While in a qualitative sense the sinner’s suffering resembles the suffering of the Savior, the suffering of no man will measure up to the quantitative magnitude of the Savior’s agony.

A poignant point to ponder: This verse proves that Jesus knew in explicit detail the fate that awaited him on the earth even before he came. Since the angel was able to prophesy the details of Jesus’s mortal experiences, then certainly Jehovah himself knew all of those details. In the pre-existence he thus accepted the assignment to come to earth, not blindly, but with full knowledge of all he would suffer.

It must also be noted that not all of the mortal suffering the Savior would endure occurred in Gethsemane or on the cross. During his life and ministry, he also suffered many of the pains of mortality (see John 4:6 and its commentary).

8 And he shall be called Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Father of heaven and earth, the Creator of all things from the beginning; and his mother shall be called Mary.

verse 8 It is fascinating to contemplate the process by which we have received the words contained in the Book of Mormon’s verses. See The Process of Translating the Book of Mormon in volume 2, Appendix A of Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine. In this particular verse, Joseph Smith, as he translated, was given words that may not have been completely appropriate in the days of the Book of Mormon people. Some have been critical of the Book of Mormon because it contains, for example, words of Greek origin such as “Christ” and “Mary.” The Greek language, so far as we know, was unknown to the Book of Mormon people. As Joseph Smith translated, it was necessary that he perceive the meanings of text he was given. The words in this verse are rich in meaning. Jesus, which would be Joshua in Hebrew, means “Jehovah saves.” Christ is a title of Greek origin meaning “anointed one.” Mary is the Greek form of the Hebrew name Miriam and means “exalted of the Lord” or, alternatively, “bitter tears.”

“the Father of heaven and earth” Jesus Christ is identified as the Father or Creator of both heaven and earth. The term “heaven” has a few different meanings in the Book of Mormon. (1) The abode of Deity, where God the Father and his angels dwell. (2) The expanse or firmament containing the sun, moon, and stars. This definition pertains in this particular verse. (3) The eternal residence of the righteous where they may dwell forever with God the Father and God the Son. (4) The Lord's (the Son's) heavenly kingdom—the “kingdom of heaven.”

9 And lo, he cometh unto his own, that salvation might come unto the children of men even through faith on his name; and even after all this they shall consider him a man, and say that he hath a devil, and shall scourge him, and shall crucify him.

verse 9 “he cometh unto his own” He will be born into the house of Israel, the chosen lineage.

“that salvation might come” Again, as has been mentioned previously, the word salvation, when used in the Book of Mormon, is usually synonymous with exaltation. Here, however, salvation may refer to any degree of salvation—to any degree of glory.

“they shall consider him a man” They will refuse to recognize that he is divine—the literal Son of God.

10 And he shall rise the third day from the dead; and behold, he standeth to judge the world; and behold, all these things are done that a righteous judgment might come upon the children of men.

verse 10 The apostle Paul wrote, “He rose again the third day according to the scriptures” (1 Corinthians 15:4). Just where is this prophecy referred to by Paul? Where did he read this prophecy in the Old Testament? It is not found in the Old Testament! We have learned previously that this prophecy was commonly known among the Nephite people and that it likely originated with the prophet Zenos (1 Nephi 19:10; 2 Nephi 25:13). Undoubtedly Paul’s scriptures, the Old Testament before plain and precious truths were removed by that great and abominable entity, contained the specific prophecy of Christ’s resurrection written by more than one prophet.

“that a righteous judgment might come upon the children of men” Through the process of the atonement, Christ became the perfect judge capable of meting out “righteous judgment” upon the children of men. For a further discussion of the concept of “righteous judgment” see “Just What Did Happen in Gethsemane and at Calvary?” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 19, The Essence of the Lord’s Atonement.

11 For behold, and also his blood atoneth for the sins of those who have fallen by the transgression of Adam, who have died not knowing the will of God concerning them, or who have ignorantly sinned.

verse 11 “who have ignorantly sinned” The modern mind might tend to interpret sin as the conscious violation of a commandment of God. Hence, some might say that a person cannot ignorantly sin. To the ancient Hebrew mind, however, sinning in ignorance was a definite category of sin (see Numbers 15:22-29). Unintentional sin was of much greater concern to ancient people than it is to us today. It is likely that we worry very little about such sins, since we know they will be dealt with lightly until the individual is informed of the pertinent commandment (see John W. Welch, FARMS Update in Insights [April 1996], 2).

This verse refers to a specific group of people—those “who have ignorantly sinned.” What of these? Do they enjoy a favored status? Are they, at death, automatically ushered into paradise because of their ignorance of the law? Let us review the basics: Adam’s transgression brought upon mankind mortality and separation from God. This means that all men will eventually suffer a physical death and also will live out their mortal sojourn on this telestial earth outside of God’s presence. Also, because each individual commits sins on his own, he or she will be excluded from God’s presence until the effect of those sins is overcome. If there had been no atonement made, then at death all men would live eternally with a spirit body with Satan in outer darkness (2 Nephi 9:8-9). Christ’s atonement automatically eliminates the consequences of Adam’s transgression. Thus, all mankind will be resurrected, and none will be kept out of God’s presence because of anything Adam did. But what of our own sins? We are each responsible for these. We must strive to repent and improve our performance relative to the law as we understand it. All will be judged according to the light and knowledge available to them. Eventually all will have their sins remitted and be exalted in the celestial kingdom or saved in a lesser degree of glory. Some few who remain unrepentant will be banished to outer darkness forever.

And what of those who lived on the earth without an opportunity to hear the gospel and thus those who “ignorantly sinned”? Do they escape the necessity of having to live the gospel law? No indeed. These will be judged by an all-knowing Savior (D&C 137:5-9). Those who would have embraced the gospel and endured in its principles had they the opportunity to hear it will be directed, at death, to paradise and later to the celestial kingdom. Those who would not have accepted the gospel will receive an appropriate lesser reward (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:25-26).

12 But wo, wo unto him who knoweth that he rebelleth against God! For salvation cometh to none such except it be through repentance and faith on the Lord Jesus Christ.

13 And the Lord God hath sent his holy prophets among all the children of men, to declare these things to every kindred, nation, and tongue, that thereby whosoever should believe that Christ should come, the same might receive remission of their sins, and rejoice with exceedingly great joy, even as though he had already come among them.

verse 13 “to declare these things to every kindred, nation, and tongue” All of mankind is in a fallen state, and therefore all need to hear the message that would redeem them from the fall.

Was the future mortal advent of Jesus Christ really preached widely and specifically to the ancient world by prophets? Was there a knowledge of Christ more widely had by the ancient world than is commonly thought? This verse declares it (see Jacob 4:4; Luke 24:25-27).

“the same might receive remission of their sins . . . even as though he had already come among them” Here is a fascinating truth! The blessings of Christ’s atonement are extended to the people of Benjamin’s day, indeed all the way back to the days of Adam, even though the Savior will not actually experience his atoning sacrifice for another hundred and fifty or so years!

14 Yet the Lord God saw that his people were a stiffnecked people, and he appointed unto them a law, even the law of Moses.

verse 14 Since the people were unwilling to accept the full message of the prophets, they were given the lesser law.

15 And many signs, and wonders, and types, and shadows showed he unto them, concerning his coming; and also holy prophets spake unto them concerning his coming; and yet they hardened their hearts, and understood not that the law of Moses availeth nothing except it were through the atonement of his blood.

verse 15 Here is one of the great religious ironies of all time. The early Israelites misinterpreted the Lord’s giving them the law of Moses. They had to be given the law of carnal commandments because of their spiritual immaturity. It was a temporary means to help them with their spiritual growth. Yet, they believed that the law was a permanent end—that it proved them superior to all the rest of God’s children. They believed they only needed to adhere rigorously to the law. They saw no need for Christ and his atonement. They sought to become “justified” by the law itself. They failed to understand the vital fact that “the law of Moses availeth nothing except it were through the atonement of his blood” (see also Mosiah 13:28-32). For a summary of the ways in which the law of Moses was the typifying of Jesus Christ, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 11:4.

16 And even if it were possible that little children could sin they could not be saved; but I say unto you they are blessed; for behold, as in Adam, or by nature, they fall, even so the blood of Christ atoneth for their sins.

verse 16 This verse begins with two assumed hypotheses. First it assumes that no atonement will ever be made for mankind. It also assumes that in the absence of an atonement, even little children could not be saved in a kingdom of glory. Benjamin then goes on to teach that because of the atonement, all children will be saved.

Benjamin's conclusions seem clear enough, but we might benefit from a bit of discussion of his assumptions and his teachings.

Why precisely is it that little children who have not yet reached the age of accountability could not be saved in God's heavenly kingdom had there been no atonement made? One may reason, "Wouldn't little children, who are not accountable, be totally innocent of any sin and therefore 'justified by the law'? Thus, they would not need an atonement?" We have been taught that, in the absence of an atonement, all mankind would be lost to outer darkness (2 Nephi 9:8-9). It has been suggested that declaring an infant or young child innocent and free of sin until the age of eight years may be more than simply an arbitrary designation by the Lord. It is not that they are good by nature. Certainly, there was an opportunity to sin in the premortal world, and doubtless many individuals left that realm guilty of sin. They are innocent because the Lord has decreed them so. The actual mechanism whereby they are made innocent is that at the time of their mortal birth into mortality they are cleansed by the blood of Christ's atonement. Without the atonement, they would not be innocent and free of sin during those early childhood years up until age eight. This has been so since the time of Adam.

But how could infant children at the time of Adam benefit by the blessings of the atonement, since Christ's atoning blood would not be shed for thousands of years? In the scriptures, it is clear that the blessings of the atonement have been extended to all mankind since the days of Adam. The blessings of his atoning blood have always been available to all men. The scriptures refer to this phenomenon by saying that Christ is the Lamb "slain from the foundations of the world" (Revelation 13:8; Moses 7:47).

Benjamin then goes on to say that an atonement will indeed be made, and because of that atonement, the little children "are blessed; for behold, as in Adam, or by nature, they fall, even so the blood of Christ atoneth for their sins." Because of the atonement, no one will suffer for the transgression of Adam. All will be resurrected and no one will remain outside the presence of God because of Adam. But still, every man, child or adult, is still responsible for his own "nature" and inclinations.

Some Christian religions have taught the doctrine that children are born into this world with the "original sin" of Adam weighing upon them, and unless they are baptized in the name of Christ to remove that sin, they are consigned to eternal misery and damnation. For a discussion of this phenomenon, see the introductory commentary for Moroni chapter 8. Are children "guilty" because of Adam's transgression? Certainly not. The law of justice would not allow a guiltless person to be kept out of God's heavenly kingdom because of the sins of another person.

"as in Adam, or by nature, they fall" The parenthetical expression "or by nature" within this phrase has added significantly to our understanding of the expression

“as in Adam.” Here Benjamin teaches us that the expression “as in Adam” actually means “or by nature”—because of the nature of man, because of the natural self or “natural man” within us. The Hebrew common noun adam occurs over five hundred times in the Old Testament with the generic meaning “man” or “mortal man” or “natural man.” Thus, the expression “as in Adam” simply means because of the “natural man” within us, and perhaps the proper noun Adam here should have been rendered as the common noun adam in this verse.

It seems true that most apostate doctrines have at their roots true doctrines that have been adulterated. Perhaps the doctrine of “original sin” actually is simply an altered or adulterated version of the doctrine or concept of the “natural man.”

“but I say unto you they are blessed” If there had been no atonement, even innocent little children would be lost. But, of course, they are not lost. Christ did atone, and his atonement applies to them as well as to all mankind.

Some special groups of people here on earth are not considered fully responsible for their sins. These include the mentally handicapped, little children who have not reached the age of accountability, and even those who have not received the gospel (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:25-26). This is not to say that each of these hasn’t sinned. The apostle Paul taught that “All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God” (Romans 3:23, emphasis added). But the sins of these special groups are committed in ignorance. Even so, they cannot be saved in a kingdom of glory without the atonement of Christ. Because of the atonement, Jesus is empowered to judge each of the members of these special groups as if they had received the gospel in a non-ignorant condition (again, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:25-26).

17 And moreover, I say unto you, that there shall be no other name given nor any other way nor means whereby salvation can come unto the children of men, only in and through the name of Christ, the Lord Omnipotent.

verse 17 It is apparently this very passage written by King Benjamin that Helaman will refer to when he says to his sons Lehi and Nephi, “Remember, remember, my sons, the words which king Benjamin spake unto his people” (Helaman 5:9).

This verse forms the very essence of Benjamin’s sermon. It is an absolute verity and is true regardless of how any man may regard the Savior. All other “gods” of this world will eventually pass from importance. “Princes come, princes go. An hour of pomp, [an hour of] show” (Kismet: A Musical Arabian Knight, Boston: Frank, 1955).

“salvation can come unto the children of men, only in and through the name of Christ” Everything redemptive is accomplished in the name of Christ, who mediates all transactions between God and man. In an important conference address in April of 1985, Elder Dallin H. Oaks gave important insight into the phrase “the name of Jesus Christ.” He said: “Scriptural references to the name of Jesus Christ often refer to the authority of Jesus Christ (italics added).” Elder Oaks taught that salvation, or in this case exaltation, can only come to the children of men through this authority particularly when it is employed in the temple to administer sacred covenants. Thus, no man can be exalted in the celestial kingdom without entering into those most sacred covenants available to us in the temple.

verses 18-19 These verses contain a compelling example of chiasmus which is a pattern of writing found in Hebrew writings. See the supplemental article, The Hebrew Language and the Book of Mormon. If the reader has an interest, the following chiastic diagram is included:

The mention of chiasmus brings to mind an insightful statement by Dr. John W. Welch, the discoverer of chiasmus. As he was discussing the role of evidence in strengthening our faith in the Book of Mormon, he wrote, “Marshaling evidence builds respect for the truth. I have been amazed and pleased to watch the Book of Mormon win respect for itself and for the gospel of Jesus Christ. I had long appreciated and valued the Book of Mormon, but it was not until I began to see it speaking for itself before sophisticated audiences, especially in connection with such things as chiasmus and law in the Book of Mormon, that I began to sense the high level of respect that the book really can command. On many grounds, the Book of Mormon is intellectually respectable. The more I learn about the Book of Mormon, the more amazed I become at its precision, consistency, validity, vitality, insightfulness, and purposefulness. I believe that the flow of additional evidence nourishes and enlarges faith” (“A Book You Can Respect,” Ensign, September 1977, 45-48).

18 For behold he judgeth, and his judgment is just; and the infant perisheth not that dieth in his infancy; but men drink damnation to their own souls except they humble themselves and become as little children, and believe that salvation was, and is, and is to come, in and through the atoning blood of Christ, the Lord Omnipotent.

verse 18 “men drink damnation to their own souls” For a brief discussion of what it means to be damned, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:24.

19 For the natural man is an enemy to God, and has been from the fall of Adam, and will be, forever and ever, unless he yields to the enticings of the Holy Spirit, and putteth off the natural man and becometh a saint through the atonement of Christ the Lord, and becometh as a child, submissive, meek, humble, patient, full of love, willing to submit to all things which the Lord seeth fit to inflict upon him, even as a child doth submit to his father.

verse 19 “the natural man is an enemy to God, and has been from the fall of Adam” Who is this “natural man” who is an enemy to God? There has been some difference of opinion on this matter. Some of the brethren, including even Joseph Smith and Brigham Young, have taken issue with the idea that man naturally is an enemy to God. Rather, they have taught man is naturally good—it is the nature of man to be good. It is natural to be happy and at peace with God, and it is unnatural to be wicked and an enemy to God. Further, they have taught that King Benjamin here must be interpreted in context: He is talking here about the incorrigible sinner, the carnal man who won't repent.

There is an alternate interpretation: The term “natural man” describes a trait common to all men and women born into this world. This label does not refer to any particular individual's moral character but rather to a universal characteristic of all mankind. A “natural man” or the “natural” characteristics of all men are those which have not been touched or refined by the influence of the Holy Ghost. Every man or woman has tendencies of the natural man that are not alterable except through the influence of the Holy Ghost. The natural man is an “enemy to God” because his natural-self nature is alien to things of a spiritual or eternal nature. His perspective is limited to the carnal and worldly, and he is completely incapable of understanding spiritual things. “[Spiritual truths] are foolishness unto him” (1 Corinthians 2:14). He is blind and deaf to matters of the Spirit. He is independent rather than submissive and humble, though, ironically, he usually ends up conforming to the worldly trends of the day. He is proud, overly-competitive, impatient, and driven by rewards of the world. His behavior is likely to be influenced by his animal passions.

Every man is a natural man and in bondage to the flesh until he “yields to the enticings of the Holy Spirit, and putteth off the natural man and becometh a saint through the atonement of Christ the Lord.” Once sanctified by the Holy Spirit, man is fundamentally and profoundly changed. He is “born again.” He is a “new creature.” He transforms from a state of carnality to being “as a child, submissive, meek, humble, patient, full of love, willing to submit to all things which the Lord seeth fit to inflict upon him.” He cannot look upon sin “save it be with abhorrence.” He receives Christ’s “image” in his “countenance.” He experiences a “mighty change” of heart. He enjoys the “fruits of the Spirit” which, according to the Apostle Paul, are “love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, faith, meekness, temperance” (Galatians 5:22-23). He is then said to possess the “divine nature” rather than a “natural” nature. His perspective is not confined to this earthly sojourn but is rather an eternal one. He knows that this earth life is not the “real life.”

It is essential to become a “new creature” of the Holy Ghost because the natural man is unable to withstand the light and glory of God. Elder Bruce Hafen has written:

The purpose of our existence here is to have an opportunity to develop the skills, the capacities, that are necessary for us to live in the celestial kingdom. When my nine-year-old boy says he wants to drive the car, I must explain to him that if he goes out onto the freeway, he is going to be dangerous—he might kill himself and a lot of other people as well. He does not yet have the capacity to use the freedom offered by a freeway. Until I can help him develop that capacity—the skill, the judgment, the maturity—going out there freely will kill him. The same would be true of our premature introduction to the freedom—and the responsibility—of living in a kingdom governed by celestial laws. The assumption of responsibility can be liberating or crushing, depending upon one’s preparation to receive it (“The Value of the Veil,” Ensign [June 1977] 7:10-13).

Only when man is transformed by the Spirit does he come to realize how totally dependent is humanity upon the Lord. This true humility comes only with revealed divine knowledge to the sanctified individual. The proud (worldly), on the other hand, are never humble. They are ignorant of man’s dependence upon the Lord, and they are unaware of their own ignorance. For supplemental reading on this important subject, see the following chapters in volume 1 of Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine: chapter 5, The “Natural Self” and “Spiritual Self” (especially the subheading “Pride” in that chapter). See also chapter 17, Justification and Sanctification.

20 And moreover, I say unto you, that the time shall come when the knowledge of a Savior shall spread throughout every nation, kindred, tongue, and people.

verse 20 This prophecy was likely intended to have its fulfillment in these latter days and in the Millennium, and the Book of Mormon will be the very means by which it will be fulfilled.

21 And behold, when that time cometh, none shall be found blameless before God, except it be little children, only through repentance and faith on the name of the Lord God Omnipotent.

verse 21 Once an individual has a knowledge of the Savior, his gospel, and the significance of his atonement, an obligation or responsibility is placed upon him. He may only then become “blameless” or free of sin through the process of obedience and repentance.

22 And even at this time, when thou shalt have taught thy people the things which the Lord thy God hath commanded thee, even then are they found no more blameless in the sight of God, only according to the words which I have spoken unto thee.

verses 21-22 In the future, when the gospel message is promulgated widely, no one other than children will be able to plead ignorance. Even “at this time”—at the time of King Benjamin—Benjamin tells his people, when you hear the gospel and teach it to your families and friends (“thy people”), then you and they have an obligation to repent and obey.

“only according to the words which I have spoken unto thee” This phrase seems to say that only through the blessings of the atonement can we become blameless in the sight of God.

23 And now I have spoken the words which the Lord God hath commanded me.

verses 24-27 Again, these verses illustrate the fact that the Book of Mormon makes no allowance for post-mortal repentance and lesser degrees of glory. Men are categorized as simply “good” or “evil.” In verses 25 through 27, those who are evil apparently inherit what sounds much like outer darkness (see the commentary for Mosiah 2:33).

24 And thus saith the Lord: They shall stand as a bright testimony against this people, at the judgment day; whereof they shall be judged, every man according to his works, whether they be good, or whether they be evil.

verse 24 The first “they” refers to the words which Benjamin has just spoken. The second refers to “this people,” the third and fourth to “the works of every man.”

What constitutes a man’s “works”? Plausibly his “works” consist of his behaviors (the things he thinks, says, and does), the real intentions and feelings of his heart, and his obedience to the commandments.

25 And if they be evil they are consigned to an awful view of their own guilt and abominations, which doth cause them to shrink from the presence of the Lord into a state of misery and endless torment, from whence they can no more return; therefore they have drunk damnation to their own souls.

verse 25 This verse has been an object of ridicule. Some anti-Mormon critics have suggested that Joseph Smith borrowed from William Shakespeare when he wrote it. For a possible explanation of why the wording in this verse resembles Shakespeare's phraseology, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 22:15.

“therefore they have drunk damnation to their own souls” For a brief discussion of what it means to be damned see the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:24.

26 Therefore, they have drunk out of the cup of the wrath of God, which justice could no more deny unto them than it could deny that Adam should fall because of his partaking of the forbidden fruit; therefore, mercy could have claim on them no more forever.

27 And their torment is as a lake of fire and brimstone, whose flames are unquenchable, and whose smoke ascendeth up forever and ever. Thus hath the Lord commanded me. Amen.

Mosiah Chapter 4

Mosiah 4:14-15 Benjamin's counsel to teach your children to walk in the ways of truth and soberness.

Mosiah 4:16-19 Benjamin's counsel for dealing with a beggar: Ye will not suffer that the beggar will put up his petition to you in vain. Are we not all beggars?

Mosiah 4:27 It is not requisite that a man should run faster than he has strength.

Mosiah 4:30 Benjamin counsels: If ye do not watch yourselves, ye must perish. O man, remember, and perish not.

1 And now, it came to pass that when king Benjamin had made an end of speaking the words which had been delivered unto him by the angel of the Lord, that he cast his eyes round about on the multitude, and behold they had fallen to the earth, for the fear of the Lord had come upon them.

verse 1 Why do we today not fall to earth or prostrate ourselves as a manifestation of our humility and respect? Today our cultural habits of worship do not include this outward display as they obviously did with the Nephites. Other ancient and contemporary cultures have in the past, and do today, practice this form of worship. We can only hope that in spite of our reservedness regarding the outward physical displays of our worship, we feel inwardly the same adoration and respect and reverence as these other cultures.

2 And they had viewed themselves in their own carnal state, even less than the dust of the earth. And they all cried aloud with one voice, saying: O have mercy, and apply the atoning blood of Christ that we may receive forgiveness of our sins, and our hearts may be purified; for we believe in Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who created heaven and earth, and all things; who shall come down among the children of men.

verse 2 “they had viewed themselves in their own carnal state” Earlier, it was said of Benjamin's people, “They have been a diligent people in keeping the commandments of the Lord.” Why do they now view themselves as being in a carnal state? Certainly, the ability of mortal man to see himself in a perfect eternal perspective can only be achieved as a gift from the Spirit of God. How might we refer to such a gift? Perhaps it may be appropriately called gratitude or humility or divine indebtedness (see the discussion of this vastly important gift of the Spirit in the introductory commentary for Mosiah 2:19-24). Only the recipients of this gift are able to perceive their utter and absolute dependence upon the Savior in spite of their best efforts. Only those so blessed can see clearly the very real and potentially deadly, in an eternal sense, weakness each of us possesses as a result of the “natural self” potential within each of us.

What remarkable spiritual blessings these people had experienced as a result of Benjamin’s words and the ministrations of the Spirit. They had been significantly boosted along the path toward their sanctification. As with all of us, though, every level of spiritual progress is potentially fleeting lest we continuously strive.

There is also a completely positive aspect to the Lord's revealed perspective of our true spiritual condition. This is the gift of hope. See a discussion of this gift in "Perquisite Gifts of the Spirit" in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1 of chapter 8, The Blessings of Spiritual Gifts.

“And they all cried aloud with one voice, saying: O have mercy” Who is it that the people are addressing here? King Benjamin? It is more likely they are addressing the Lord himself.

It has been suggested that the people’s falling to the ground and crying out in unison “O have mercy” may have been part of the ritual of the annual festival celebration (Terrence L. Szink and John W. Welch, “An Ancient Israelite Festival Context,” in King Benjamin’s Speech Made Simple, 137).

“apply the atoning blood of Christ that we may receive forgiveness of our sins” Again here is the exciting principle initially discussed in the commentary for Mosiah 3:13. How can the atoning blood of Christ be applied to any of the Nephite people when that blood will not even be shed for some hundred and fifty or so years? How is it possible that people who lived before the time of Christ could receive forgiveness of their sins when the great atoning sacrifice had not yet been made? Did the Lord Jehovah have the power to extend to men a complete forgiveness of their sins when he had not yet atoned for those sins? Of course, the Lord was able to forgive sins and did so many times in Old Testament times (see, for example, Isaiah 6:7). Those who lived before the meridian of time—even Adam and Eve—who had faith in Jesus Christ and in his future atonement and who lived his commandments, could be beneficiaries of his atoning blood just as surely as those who have lived since Christ’s atonement. In its infinite nature, the atonement is also timeless. At the time of King Benjamin, the Nephites were urged to have faith in Christ and in his future atonement. According to divine foreknowledge, that atonement would take place. If the Nephites did accept Christ and his atonement and repented of their sins, they could be forgiven just as surely as we can today. We will learn in the following verse that these repentant Nephites did in fact receive a forgiveness of their sins. Christ’s atoning blood was applied to them!

“for we believe in Jesus Christ, the Son of God” Something very profound is happening to these Nephites. In the purest sense they are experiencing a more complete conversion to the gospel of Jesus Christ. How complete does our conversion need to be? Joseph Smith taught: “A religion that does not require the sacrifice of all things never has power sufficient to produce the faith necessary unto life and salvation” (Lectures on Faith, 6:7). This may not always mean having to give up all one’s worldly possessions to the Church, but it certainly does imply a willingness to completely forsake worldliness, embrace the Spirit, and place in highest priority matters of the eternities. We spoke previously of the endowment-like ceremony in which these Nephites had been involved. They had doubtless entered into solemn covenants over and beyond that which they made at their baptism, and they had been given the name Jesus Christ in the context of making covenants (see Mosiah 5:7).

3 And it came to pass that after they had spoken these words the Spirit of the Lord came upon them, and they were filled with joy, having received a remission of their sins, and having peace of conscience, because of the exceeding faith which they had in Jesus Christ who should come, according to the words which king Benjamin had spoken unto them.

verse 3 “the Spirit of the Lord came upon them, and they were filled with joy, having received a remission of their sins” Can an individual enjoy the companionship of the Holy Ghost without being forgiven of his or her sins? Perhaps not. After all, we know that no unclean thing can dwell in the divine presence. Let us hope that a personal experience with the Holy Ghost implies a remission of one’s sins.

Joy is that deeply fulfilling emotion that is most always associated with spiritual growth. This is the definition of joy that pertains in the scriptures. One may feel joy for his own spiritual growth, or it is possible to feel joy vicariously when someone close to you experiences spiritual growth. Joy is different from happiness or pleasure. It is a richer and more abiding emotion.

4 And king Benjamin again opened his mouth and began to speak unto them, saying: My friends and my brethren, my kindred and my people, I would again call your attention, that ye may hear and understand the remainder of my words which I shall speak unto you.

verse 4 Is it possible that Benjamin is addressing the Mulekites and the Nephites separately here? Perhaps “my friends and my brethren” were the people of Zarahemla (Mulekites), and “my kindred and my people” were his own people, the Nephites.

5 For behold, if the knowledge of the goodness of God at this time has awakened you to a sense of your nothingness, and your worthless and fallen state—verse 5 “the knowledge of the goodness of God” It is probably appropriate to regard this knowledge as a spiritual conviction of the atonement.

“your nothingness, and your worthless and fallen state” Though he seems guilty of using a bit of hyperbole, Benjamin likely used these words to emphasize the contrast between the exalted state of God and the fallen state of man including the latter’s complete inability to save himself. It is appropriate for man to feel a profound and abject sense of humility and utter dependence upon the Savior. An appropriate associated emotion should be a feeling of deeply-held gratitude to him for the opportunity he has given to us to be redeemed.

6 I say unto you, if ye have come to a knowledge of the goodness of God, and his matchless power, and his wisdom, and his patience, and his long-suffering towards the children of men; and also, the atonement which has been prepared from the foundation of the world, that thereby salvation might come to him that should put his trust in the Lord, and should be diligent in keeping his commandments, and continue in the faith even unto the end of his life, I mean the life of the mortal body—

7 I say, that this is the man who receiveth salvation, through the atonement which was prepared from the foundation of the world for all mankind, which ever were since the fall of Adam, or who are, or who ever shall be, even unto the end of the world.

verses 6-7 Here is another of those “longest sentences in the Book of Mormon.”

The phrase “prepared from the foundation of the world” found in each of these verses refers to something that was known about and taught about in the premortal phase even before the creation of the earth.

verse 7 “through the atonement which was prepared from the foundation of the world for all mankind” On March 1, 1842, the Church newspaper Times and Seasons published a letter that Joseph Smith had written to a Chicago newspaper reporter named John Wentworth (“Church History,” Times and Seasons 3, no. 9, 1 March, 1842: 706–710). In this letter, Joseph wrote a list of statements about LDS doctrine that would later become the Articles of Faith.

The third statement on this list reads: “We believe that through the Atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel” (Articles of Faith 1:3). At first glance, this statement, as well as many other statements Joseph made about Christ, look like basic summaries of doctrine gleaned from the Bible. However, early Mormon understanding of Jesus Christ and the Atonement actually seem to more closely reflect the Book of Mormon (Obviously, many of Joseph Smith’s ideas about Christ also came from visions of Christ Himself. See, for example, Doctrine and Covenants 76:14, 24; 110:1–10).

King Benjamin, for example, stated that a person who keeps the commandments could receive “salvation, through the atonement which was prepared from the foundation of the world for all mankind” (Mosiah 4:6–7). This statement is very similar to the third Article of Faith: that through the Atonement, salvation can come to all mankind, if they are obedient.

In addition, Joseph’s use of the word “atonement” suggests a Book of Mormon background (The word occurs frequently in the Old Testament, but is not explicitly associated with Christ. For a discussion of atonement in the Book of Mormon, see, for example, 1 Nephi 10:6; 2 Nephi 2:6-9; 9:6-9; Alma 7:11-12; 11:37-45; 12:16-18; 22:14; 42:6; 3 Nephi 27:13-14; and Moroni 8:8, among many others.). The word only appears once in the entire New Testament (Romans 5:11), yet it appears more than twenty-five times in the Book of Mormon (James Strong, ed., “Atonement,” The New Strong’s Expanded Exhaustive Concordance of the Bible, Nashville, TN: Thomas Nelson Publishers, 2001). Thus, it seems likely that the Book of Mormon helped shape Joseph Smith’s theological vocabulary and understanding.

The Book of Mormon may also have shaped what he chose to emphasize. His emphasis on obedience, for example, may be telling. In the Book of Mormon, apostate Nephites expressed the belief that “all mankind should be saved” unconditionally (Alma 1:4; 21:6). In fact, Alma 1:4 is the only time the phrase “all mankind . . . be saved” appears in the scriptures outside this article of faith. Thus, it is possible that Joseph Smith had this statement in mind when he wrote that “all mankind may be saved” only “by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel” (Articles of Faith 1:3). It is almost as though Joseph was recalling and responding to Nehor’s ideas when he wrote this article of faith.

Many of the revelations recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants also seem to assume that Joseph and his audience knew the Book of Mormon well enough to pick up on references to it. Shortly after the Book of Mormon was published, Martin Harris received a revelation through Joseph Smith. In this revelation, the Lord said His “suffering caused myself, even God, the greatest of all, to tremble because of pain, and to bleed at every pore, and to suffer both body and spirit” (Doctrine and Covenants 19:18, emphasis added) (Steven C. Harper, Making Sense of the Doctrine and Covenants: A Guided Tour through Modern Revelation, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 2008, 68–69).

This seems to assume that Joseph and Martin would remember Mosiah 3:7: “And lo, he shall suffer temptations, and pain of body, hunger, thirst, and fatigue, even more than man can suffer, except it be unto death; for behold, blood cometh from every pore, so great shall be his anguish.”

These are only a few simple examples. The Book of Mormon appears to have strongly shaped and influenced early LDS teachings about Christ and his Atonement (Gerald E. Smith, Schooling the Prophet: How the Book of Mormon Influenced Joseph Smith and the Early Restoration, Provo, UT: Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2015, 56–58). As LDS Institute instructor Gerald E. Smith argued, “The Book of Mormon shaped Mormon Christology through stories and narratives of prophets and believers as they experienced Christ in vision and revelation, interacted with him personally during his post-resurrection visit to the New World, and recorded their observations in the scriptural record” (Smith, Schooling the Prophet, 56).

That Joseph Smith’s ideas and wordings about Christ and the Atonement were likely shaped, to a significant degree, by the Book of Mormon is remarkable considering that he personally communicated with the Savior on multiple occasions (For an impressive example of one of these occasions, see Ed J. Pinegar, Richard J. Allen, and Karl R. Anderson, Teachings and Commentaries on the Doctrine and Covenants, American Fork, UT: Covenant Communications, 2008, 250–252). Even with all his visions, Joseph seems to have drawn on the Book of Mormon for knowledge about Christ, and Christ seems to have alluded to the Book of Mormon when revealing Himself to Joseph.

Knowing that even Joseph Smith’s views about Christ were shaped by the Book of Mormon, modern readers can, all the more, turn to it in the same way, allowing their understanding of Christ to be informed and enriched by it as well. On the evening of September 21, 1823, the angel Moroni told Joseph that the book that he would bring forth would contain “the fullness of the everlasting Gospel” (See the “Testimony of the Prophet Joseph Smith” at the beginning of current editions of the Book of Mormon). Never forgetting this, Joseph knew until the day he died that important truths about Christ were to be gleaned from the pages of the Book of Mormon. Modern readers can likewise continue, throughout their lives, to gather important insights into the eternal mission, gospel, and atonement of Christ by repeatedly contemplating the words of this testament of Jesus Christ.

Readers who allow the Book of Mormon to help shape their perception of the Atonement will find themselves grounded in its eternal truths. As Boyd K. Packer stated, “[The Atonement of Jesus Christ] is the very root of Christian doctrine. You may know much about the gospel as it branches out from there, but if you only know the branches and those branches do not touch that root, if they have been cut free from that truth, there will be no life nor substance nor redemption in them” (President Boyd K. Packer, “The Cornerstones of Our Faith,” Ensign, May 1977, 56).

The Book of Mormon can help readers to connect to the root of the gospel and understand the Atonement in all its depth and beauty, just as Joseph Smith did.

The phrase “which ever were since the fall of Adam, or who are, or who ever shall be, even unto the end of the world” simply underscores the preceding adjective—“all mankind.”

8 And this is the means whereby salvation cometh. And there is none other salvation save this which hath been spoken of; neither are there any conditions whereby man can be saved except the conditions which I have told you.

verse 8 “neither are there any conditions whereby man can be saved except the conditions which I have told you” What are these conditions? Humble yourself and realize your utter dependence upon the Savior for your salvation (Mosiah 2:20-21; 2:25; 2:40; 3:19). Study the scriptures and learn the commandments (Mosiah 2:34-35). Deliberately obey the commandments of God (Mosiah 2:22; 2:41). Avoid evil (Mosiah 2:33; 2:27). Trust in Christ who is to come and in his atonement (Mosiah 3:5-18; 3:6-7). Confess your sins and repent of them (Mosiah 3:2), and receive the Holy Ghost (Mosiah 3:3).

What about baptism? It is not mentioned in these verses. Is not salvation impossible without baptism? It is indeed impossible. It is likely Benjamin's people had already been baptized by water since baptism is a doctrine of the law of Moses (D&C 84:27). Also, this verse may be an example of a merism. See the discussion of merismus in the introductory commentary for 2 Nephi 31.

Also, we will learn that we must expand our understanding of the ordinance of baptism. Baptism is at the very heart of the spiritual progress we make here in mortality. Baptism is the very ordinance by which we grow spiritually. The ordinance of baptism consists of three distinct ordinances—the baptism of water, the baptism of the Spirit, and the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost. Please see the important discussion of the complete ordinance of baptism in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 18, Baptism, the Ordinance that Brings Spiritual Growth.

9 Believe in God; believe that he is, and that he created all things, both in heaven and in earth; believe that he has all wisdom, and all power, both in heaven and in earth; believe that man doth not comprehend all the things which the Lord can comprehend.

verse 9 “man doth not comprehend all the things which the Lord can comprehend” This profound truth is likely only fully appreciated by the converted, sanctified, reborn individual. Only he is fully aware of man's relative nothingness regarding his insight and knowledge. The proud and “learned” are ignorant of this truth. This thought is continued in verse 11.

10 And again, believe that ye must repent of your sins and forsake them, and humble yourselves before God; and ask in sincerity of heart that he would forgive you; and now, if you believe all these things see that ye do them.

verse 10 “if you believe all these things see that ye do them” One is reminded of the sign President Spencer W. Kimball reportedly kept on his desk. It said simply, “Do it.”

11 And again I say unto you as I have said before, that as ye have come to the knowledge of the glory of God, or if ye have known of his goodness and have tasted of his love, and have received a remission of your sins, which causeth such exceedingly great joy in your souls, even so I would that ye should remember, and always retain in remembrance, the greatness of God, and your own nothingness, and his goodness and long-suffering towards you, unworthy creatures, and humble yourselves even in the depths of humility, calling on the name of the Lord daily, and standing steadfastly in the faith of that which is to come, which was spoken by the mouth of the angel.

verse 11 “standing steadfastly in the faith of that which is to come” Do you believe it is easier to have faith in Christ in our dispensation than it was in Benjamin’s day? After all, we have the scriptural record available to us which “proves” that Christ did come to earth, and he atoned for our sins. Perhaps it should be easier, but I suspect it is not. Many people today will fall by the way out of apathy, ignorance, or worldliness even though the record of Christ’s ministry—plus the testimonies of several eye witnesses—is available to all.

12 And behold, I say unto you that if ye do this ye shall always rejoice, and be filled with the love of God, and always retain a remission of your sins; and ye shall grow in the knowledge of the glory of him that created you, or in the knowledge of that which is just and true.

verse 12 “ye shall grow” Here is an important principle. As long as we are involved in the kingdom of God and conscientiously and pro-actively working to live the principles of the gospel, there will be continual growth in our knowledge of eternal things and in our eternal character. This is not to say that we mortals will not have our lapses—our moments of regression. Yet diligence will inevitably result in spiritual growth.

13 And ye will not have a mind to injure one another, but to live peaceably, and to render to every man according to that which is his due.

verse 13 Those individuals who are in touch with the Spirit have no disposition other than to help and bless others. It is natural that as we become more confident with our standing before God, we turn our attentions (our “arrows”) outward—to others (see the commentary for verses 20-21 of this chapter).

verses 14-15 In these verses, King Benjamin describes the blessings of deep conversion—the inclinations of the individual who has arrived at the point of a profound appreciation of and gratitude to the Savior. These verses may also be regarded as a commandment to the parents of children.

14 And ye will not suffer your children that they go hungry, or naked; neither will ye suffer that they transgress the laws of God, and fight and quarrel one with another, and serve the devil, who is the master of sin, or who is the evil spirit which hath been spoken of by our fathers, he being an enemy to all righteousness.

15 But ye will teach them to walk in the ways of truth and soberness; ye will teach them to love one another, and to serve one another.

verses 14-15 To those of us who have labored to bring up children, the counsel contained in these verses is sobering. Some children seem naturally inclined to obey and conform their lives to the principles of the gospel. Others do not. Our challenge lies with this latter group. We must never be found guilty of not doing all we can for them, even if we should ultimately fail.

verses 16-26 These next eleven verses contain King Benjamin's notable and clearly stated teachings on Christian charity and service. Brother Rodney Turner aptly said, "We all travel the Jericho road—sometimes as the injured Jew, sometimes as the good Samaritan. It is for God to be just. It is for his children to be merciful. To judge others as unworthy of our help, and then to withhold it, is to assume a prerogative the Lord has not given us. Everything we have belongs to the Lord. He has commanded us to share his substance with others. . . Inheriting the 'true riches' of heaven depends upon our faithfulness as stewards over the Lord's wealth on earth" (Studies in Scripture, volume seven, 1 Nephi to Alma 29, 221, italics added).

In teaching his people about the importance of service, it is apparent that Benjamin was not just teaching another of a litany of saving principles. His people had already been baptized, and they had a basic understanding of the principles of repentance, baptism, and forgiveness. He now intended to give them something more, something vital. Benjamin now intended to teach them how they might retain the remission of sins which they obtained at baptism. He understood through personal revelation and experience that great mystery Christ would later teach during his earthly ministry: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me" (Matthew 25:40). Charity and service are the covenant obligations of members of Christ's Church. Giving deliberate service is the very mechanism for earning the spiritual gift of charity. Service is deliberate charity (see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 7, Spiritual Growth—Gifts of the Spirit). No action of ours is more soul-exalting than that of selfless service. Benjamin teaches in verse 26 that Christlike service is the key to obtaining "a remission of [our] sins from day to day."

The act of service is the earthly counterpart, indeed the "school" in which we earn the gift of charity. As we deliberately serve others, even if we don't feel like doing so, then we are “experimenting upon [the] words” of Christ. We are qualifying ourselves to eventually receive the highest of all spiritual gifts, the gift of charity. Only by receiving this gift by divine revelation, once we are judged qualified by the Spirit of God, can we truly come to know and feel—indeed, actually possess—the pure love of Christ.

16 And also, ye yourselves will succor those that stand in need of your succor; ye will administer of your substance unto him that standeth in need; and ye will not suffer that the beggar putteth up his petition to you in vain, and turn him out to perish.

17 Perhaps thou shalt say: The man has brought upon himself his misery; therefore I will stay my hand, and will not give unto him of my food, nor impart unto him of my substance that he may not suffer, for his punishments are just—verse 17 Chauncy C. Riddle wrote:

We observe in Nephite history the typical pattern in the societies of “natural men.” Society is stable and prosperous when there is a religious piety and humility among a people. But when pride enters, people reject God and morality and begin to fashion their own designs to foster their personal interests. Those who are proud forget that every person is a beggar before God, dependent upon him for life, breath, and prosperity. They begin to think that their good fortune in being richer or more learned or more refined than other people is due to their intelligence, or their hard work, or their superior genes. They begin to say of the poor, in their words of king Benjamin: “The man has brought upon himself his misery; therefore I will stay my hand, and will not give unto him of my food, nor impart unto him of my substance that he may not suffer, for his punishments are just” (Mosiah 4:17) (“Days of Wickedness and Vengeance: Analysis of 3 Nephi 6 and 7” in The Book of Mormon Helaman Through 3 Nephi 8, According To Thy Word, 196).

18 But I say unto you, O man, whosoever doeth this the same hath great cause to repent; and except he repenteth of that which he hath done he perisheth forever, and hath no interest in the kingdom of God.

verse 18 “no interest in the kingdom of God” How are we to interpret the word “interest” here? Perhaps it is referring to the fact that the uncharitable individual will have no claim upon, or no stock, stake, or holding within the kingdom. Alternatively, perhaps we are being taught that such an uncharitable man will lose his desire for the kingdom of God and will become indifferent toward it.

19 For behold, are we not all beggars? Do we not all depend upon the same Being, even God, for all the substance which we have, for both food and raiment, and for gold, and for silver, and for all the riches which we have of every kind?

verse 19 “For behold, are we not all beggars?” Do we really own anything in this world? We tend to attribute much credit to ourselves for our diligence in “earning” our material possessions. Yet, again, do we really own anything? How permanent is our ownership?

20 And behold, even at this time, ye have been calling on his name, and begging for a remission of your sins. And has he suffered that ye have begged in vain? Nay; he has poured out his Spirit upon you, and has caused that your hearts should be filled with joy, and has caused that your mouths should be stopped that ye could not find utterance, so exceedingly great was your joy.

verse 20 “ye have been calling on his name, and begging for a remission of your sins” In the previous verse, we learn that we are all beggars in that we all depend on the same being, even God, for the substance we have. In yet another sense, also, we are all beggars. We are all beggars for grace. The term grace refers to a favorable merciful disposition (love) God has for man, without that favorable disposition's being earned or merited. If a man accepts the gospel, joins the Church, and adheres faithfully to all the commandments, he still, on his own merit, does not have enough eternal credits to become exalted in the celestial kingdom. He must await the grace of God—the granting of the privilege of entering into eternal life to those who do not fully merit it.

“has caused that your mouths should be stopped that ye could not find utterance” Benjamin's people could find no words to adequately express their joy.

21 And now, if God, who has created you, on whom you are dependent for your lives and for all that ye have and are, doth grant unto you whatsoever ye ask that is right, in faith, believing that ye shall receive, O then, how ye ought to impart of the substance that ye have one to another.

verses 20-21 Note Benjamin's compelling logic: Once you are aware of your utter dependence on the grace of God spoken of in verse 20, you are then disposed to beg for his mercy. In your helpless and pitiful state, does God abandon you? No, he comes willingly to your rescue and pours his Spirit out upon you! If God, without being compelled, comes anxiously to your rescue, shouldn't you, in turn, come to the rescue to those of your fellow mortals who need your help even if they don't “deserve” it? Shouldn't you willingly impart of your substance to anyone who needs it? Eventually inheriting the eternal riches of heaven is contingent upon our stewardship over the possessions the Lord allows you to hold here upon the earth. If the Spirit has truly born witness to you of God's mercy toward you, that same mercy cannot help but spill over into the lives of others.

22 And if ye judge the man who putteth up his petition to you for your substance that he perish not, and condemn him, how much more just will be your condemnation for withholding your substance, which doth not belong to you but to God, to whom also your life belongeth; and yet ye put up no petition, nor repent of the thing which thou hast done.

verse 22 “And if he judge the man who putteth up his petition to you for your substance that he perish not, and condemn him . . .” The essential issue here is that if a man comes to you and asks for some of your material goods, claiming that he will perish without them, it is not for you to pass judgment as to his worthiness. Rather, you must simply assess his need and give accordingly. After all, your material goods are not really, in the last analysis, yours at all, but God’s. All things belong to God.

“and yet ye put up no petition” A man who is devoid of the Spirit, which bears witness of man’s proper relationship to God, has no inclination to beg for God’s mercy. He is oblivious of his abject and helpless state and his complete dependence upon God. He has no motivation to repent.

23 I say unto you, wo be unto that man, for his substance shall perish with him; and now, I say these things unto those who are rich as pertaining to the things of this world.

verse 23 “his substance shall perish with him” Worldly wealth is an illusion. No one really owns his stewardship. All things, even our lives, belong to the Lord.

24 And again, I say unto the poor, ye who have not and yet have sufficient, that ye remain from day to day; I mean all you who deny the beggar, because ye have not; I would that ye say in your hearts that: I give not because I have not, but if I had I would give.

verses 24-25 Benjamin then instructs those who are poor relative to material goods—those who barely have enough for their needs. It is vital, even for these, to be completely converted to the concept of giving to those who are in need. They must come to the point of yearning in their heart to be able to give to the needy, and they must be prevented only by the fact that they don’t possess sufficient material goods. Those who do not develop this yearning are condemned. They are accused of coveting material things they do not possess.

Joseph Fielding McConkie and Robert L. Millet have observed that these verses illustrate an important principle which they call the “doctrine of intent.” It is “the principle that we are judged by the intent of our hearts. Those unable to give must still have in their hearts the fixed determination to share with those in need and the longing that a time will come when they are in a position to do so. Should that not be their intent and desire, they are as much to be condemned as those who have refused to be caring of others” (Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, volume II, 166-67).

26 And now, for the sake of these things which I have spoken unto you—that is, for the sake of retaining a remission of your sins from day to day, that ye may walk guiltless before God—I would that ye should impart of your substance to the poor, every man according to that which he hath, such as feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, visiting the sick and administering to their relief, both spiritually and temporally, according to their wants.

verse 26 The message of this verse is clear, and it may come as a surprise to some of us. Is this really a doctrine of the gospel of Jesus Christ? It is indeed a vital saving principle of the gospel. There is no one in the Church who has not been counseled to impart of their substance to the poor, yet how many of us know that the command to do so is fundamental and essential to our eventual exaltation? There can be no mistaking the emphasis Benjamin intended to give to this concept. The eternal precept is clear: In order to maintain a remission of our sins, we must “impart of [our] substance to the poor, every man according to that which he hath.” Doing so is a necessity and not just a nicety for true discipleship unto Christ.

“according to their wants” (italics added) We all share a tendency to give to the needy according to what we perceive as their needs as opposed to merely acquiescing to their “wants.” The spirit of Benjamin’s counsel is to be cautious about trying to sit in judgment as to a man’s needs.

Consider the image created by the contemporary author Robert Fulghum as he described a scene that occurred in Oslo, Norway, in December of 1980:

A small, stooped woman in a faded blue sari and worn sandals received an award. From the hand of a king. An award funded from the will of the inventor of dynamite. In a great glittering hall of velvet and gold and crystal. Surrounded by the noble and famous in formal black and in elegant gowns. The rich, the powerful, the brilliant, the talented of the world in attendance. And there at the center of it all—a little old lady in sari and sandals. Mother Teresa, of India. Servant of the poor and sick and dying. To her, the Nobel Peace prize. No shah or president or king or general or scientist or pope; no banker or merchant or cartel or oil company or ayatollah holds the key to as much power as she has. None is as rich. For hers is the invincible weapon against the evils of this earth: the caring heart. And hers are the everlasting riches of this life: the wealth of the compassionate spirit (All I Really Need to Know I Learned in Kindergarten, New York: Villard, 1989).

If this counsel of King Benjamin’s is indeed eternally valid, if each of us does have an absolute obligation to care for the poor and needy, then the converse version of the same principle is also true. That is, failure to care for the poor is spiritually dangerous. If we fail in our obligation to our needy brothers and sisters, then we lose our right to have our sins remitted.

Take a moment to read the specific counsel of the prophet Moroni directed specifically to us today. It is found in Mormon 8:35-39.

27 And see that all these things are done in wisdom and order; for it is not requisite that a man should run faster than he has strength. And again, it is expedient that he should be diligent, that thereby he might win the prize; therefore, all things must be done in order.

verse 27 This verse proffers excellent advice even when taken out of context. As general counsel, the verse speaks for the importance of balance and order. It is clear, however, that Benjamin was speaking specifically of meeting the needs of the disadvantaged. In trying to provide for the needy, a man must be cautious not to neglect the needs of his own self and family.

28 And I would that ye should remember, that whosoever among you borroweth of his neighbor should return the thing that he borroweth, according as he doth agree, or else thou shalt commit sin; and perhaps thou shalt cause thy neighbor to commit sin also.

verse 28 After all of the eloquent spiritual rhetoric, some have felt it a bit surprising that Benjamin would provide such a plain and ordinary example. Perhaps he intended that this mundane example teach us an important lesson. There is a tendency in all of us to hear inspiring teachings that touch us with the Spirit. But then as we go back to our every-day world, we may fail to see how those teachings are applicable in purely practical ways in our day-to-day lives. We may fail to make the connection between the sermons we hear at church and borrowing a shovel from our neighbor. They are indeed applicable, and we need to learn that lesson. We need to learn to make a swift transition between the spiritual principle and its worldly practical application.

29 And finally, I cannot tell you all the things whereby ye may commit sin; for there are divers ways and means, even so many that I cannot number them.

verse 29 “divers ways and means” Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines divers as, “different, various, several, sundry.”

verses 28-29 Here is an important principle. Small and even apparently insignificant sins can lead to the loss of great blessings. King Benjamin, in these verses, emphasizes this principle by warning, not against overt and obvious transgressions, but against small and relatively less visible sins.

As you muse over verse 28, particularly the final phrase, “and perhaps thou shalt cause thy neighbor to commit sin also,” you will probably smile since it strikes at what is so typical of human nature.

30 But this much I can tell you, that if ye do not watch yourselves, and your thoughts, and your words, and your deeds, and observe the commandments of God, and continue in the faith of what ye have heard concerning the coming of our Lord, even unto the end of your lives, ye must perish. And now, O man, remember, and perish not.

verse 30 A true convert to the church of Christ—a saint—is not superficially converted. He is not simply able to control his outward actions. Rather, even his thoughts are attuned to the Spirit. He is fundamentally and basically changed. His whims and inclinations and idle thoughts all align themselves with things of an eternal nature. His words and actions are mere reflections of a fundamentally changed inner personality.

“And now, O man, remember, and perish not.” The word remember here is far richer than simply calling to mind. See the commentary for Mosiah 2:41.

Mosiah Chapter 5

Scripture Mastery

Mosiah 5:1-2 Response of the people to Benjamin's speech: We have no more disposition to do evil, but to do good continually.

Mosiah 5:13 How knoweth a man the master whom he has not served?

1 And now, it came to pass that when king Benjamin had thus spoken to his people, he sent among them, desiring to know of his people if they believed the words which he had spoken unto them.

verse 1 It is obvious that Benjamin is highly concerned over the spiritual welfare of his people.

2 And they all cried with one voice, saying: Yea, we believe all the words which thou hast spoken unto us; and also, we know of their surety and truth, because of the Spirit of the Lord Omnipotent, which has wrought a mighty change in us, or in our hearts, that we have no more disposition to do evil, but to do good continually.

"We have no more disposition to do evil, but to do good continually." One's disposition refers to one's nature, desires, inclinations, or feelings. When we experience and feel the light of Christ—when we are filled with the Spirit of God—we are also filled with the love of God. We feel this love, we experience it. It brings to us a feeling of unspeakable joy. Nephi testified: "He hath filled me with his love, even unto the consuming of my flesh" (2 Nephi 4:21). In his 1832 account of the First Vision, Joseph Smith wrote: "My soul was filled with love, and for many days I could rejoice with great joy." The 1835 account states: "A pillar of fire . . . rested down upon me, and filled me with unspeakable joy" (Backman, The First Vision, 157, 159). During such rare and privileged moments, the soul's darkness is swallowed up in the light of the Holy Spirit. All ungodly appetites, desires, and inclinations vanish. Thus enveloped in the very peace and virtue of Christ, sin in any form becomes, at the time, an impossibility. The divine nature prevails. It has been said that Spirit, glory, joy, and love are inseparable principles of righteousness and truth. If one is present, then they are all present to some degree. When we earn these spiritual gifts, these become permanent characteristics. Then we are ready for our exaltation. For only those who have become one with God in righteousness and truth can become one with him in power and dominion (D&C 121:36-37).

Benjamin's people had experienced, at the hands of the Spirit, the miracle of having been spiritually reborn (see the commentary for Mosiah 3:19, Mosiah 4:30, and 3 Nephi 19:13-14). Obviously, their consciences and their desires had also benefited from a spiritual rebirth. See other instances of this rebirth in Alma 13:11-12 (this passage applies to those among the Church that had been ordained high priests) and in Alma 19:33-34 (this passage applies to the household of the newly converted Lamoni). Each had experienced a modicum of spiritual growth. Keep in mind, however, that their sanctification is not complete. Along the road to spiritual progress, they likely will yet experience some ups and downs.

3 And we, ourselves, also, through the infinite goodness of God, and the manifestations of his Spirit, have great views of that which is to come; and were it expedient, we could prophesy of all things.

verse 3 When we receive a testimony of Jesus by personal revelation through the Spirit of God, we may receive from him not only the gift of testimony but his other gifts as well, including the gift of prophecy.

4 And it is the faith which we have had on the things which our king has spoken unto us that has brought us to this great knowledge, whereby we do rejoice with such exceedingly great joy.

verse 4 "Our king" is Benjamin. Benjamin's people are speaking. This faith is an incremental accumulation of gifts received by personal revelation from the Holy Spirit. For a discussion of the different aspects of faith, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1. The pertinent chapters include chapters 9, Revealed Faith, 10, Deliberate Faith and Revealed Faith, and 11, Other Notes on Faith.

5 And we are willing to enter into a covenant with our God to do his will, and to be obedient to his commandments in all things that he shall command us, all the remainder of our days, that we may not bring upon ourselves a never-ending torment, as has been spoken by the angel, that we may not drink out of the cup of the wrath of God.

verse 5 "that we may not bring upon ourselves a never-ending torment . . . that we may not drink out of the cup of the wrath of God" As has been previously mentioned, the people of King Benjamin were already baptized members of the Church and had already taken upon themselves the name of Christ. In association with Benjamin's sermon, his people not only renewed this covenant, but seemed to enter into an even richer covenant with the Lord at a more sacred level. In so doing, they covenanted to keep the commandments of God throughout the remainder of their mortal lives. We have previously likened this expanded covenant relationship as being analogous to our present-day temple covenants and temple endowment (see also the verses which follow).

Again, as was discussed in the commentary for Mosiah 2:33, a word of caution is warranted in interpreting the simplified concept of our post mortal existence found in the Book of Mormon. Here Benjamin's people indicate that they have been taught that if they do not keep their covenant with God, they will bring upon themselves "never-ending torment" and "drink out of the cup of the wrath of God." Perhaps we ought to be cautious about taking this verse too literally. The only "never-ending torment" we know about is living with Satan as sons (and daughters) of Perdition. These Nephites listening to King Benjamin at the temple would not likely have been capable of sinning to that extent. It seems unlikely that they were capable of committing the sin against the Holy Ghost which they would have to commit to land themselves in outer darkness with Satan and his angels.

6 And now, these are the words which king Benjamin desired of them; and therefore he said unto them: Ye have spoken the words that I desired; and the covenant which ye have made is a righteous covenant.

verses 7-12 John W. Welch and Terrence L. Szink have seen in these next six verses evidences of the ancient Hebrew scapegoat ritual (FARMS Update in Insights [January 1995], 2). As prescribed in Leviticus 16, two goats were set before the high priest. From an urn, he drew two lots to determine which goat was to be declared "for the Lord" and which "for Azazel," a desert-dwelling demon. Apparently, the lot "for the Lord" was always placed on the head of the goat on the right hand of the priest, while Azazel's would be on the left. The goat for the Lord was then sacrificed and its blood was used to purge the temple. The high priest transferred Israel's sins to the other goat, and it was then taken out into the desert.

The reader is left to himself to discover any evidence in these verses of the ancient scapegoat ritual.

7 And now, because of the covenant which ye have made ye shall be called the children of Christ, his sons, and his daughters; for behold, this day he hath spiritually begotten you; for ye say that your hearts are changed through faith on his name; therefore, ye are born of him and have become his sons and his daughters.

verse 7 The people of Benjamin had just entered into a sacred covenant with the Lord. In return, the Lord here gave them a special name (see Mosiah 1:11). What exactly is happening here? We do know that each person who joins the Church of Christ takes upon himself the name of Christ. We have argued previously, however, that most of Benjamin's people were already members of the Church of Christ.

Benjamin and other “holy men” and “prophets” had been living among them teaching them the gospel (Words of Mormon 1:17-18). Apparently, something more special and more sacred was occurring here. Because of the purity of the hearts of Benjamin’s people, they are blessed to become “children of Christ.” They are adopted into the spiritual family of Christ—“spiritually begotten” by Christ. They are “born again” or “born of God” and are granted a position eternally at his “right hand.” They are given a proclivity to be like Christ—to have his spiritual image in their countenances. Indeed, they have been blessed to enter into covenants perhaps identical to those available to us in the temple today. Perhaps they are receiving something akin to their temple endowment! (See “Endowment of Power” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 18, The Temple.)

“ye shall be called the children of Christ” While Christ is not the father of our spirits, he is the “author of [our] eternal salvation” (Hebrews 5:9). He has been assigned by the Father to be our advocate, our Lord, our God, our Father during our mortal sojourns.

The children of Christ are those who have entered into the covenant of baptism, hearkened to the words of the prophets, put off the natural man, and become “new creatures” through the Holy Ghost. They have also entered into a sacred and solemn covenant relationship with the Savior (equivalent to temple endowment). Fathers give life. Jesus’s redemptive act affords both rebirth in this life and the opportunity for eternal life in the world to come.

The reader may wish to also look over the other Book of Mormon verses that contain the concept of “children” or “child” or “sons” of Christ. These include Mosiah 27:25; 3 Nephi 9:17; 4 Nephi 1:17, Mormon 9:26, Ether 3:14; Moroni 7:19; and Moroni 7:48.

8 And under this head ye are made free, and there is no other head whereby ye can be made free. There is no other name given whereby salvation cometh; therefore, I would that ye should take upon you the name of Christ, all you that have entered into the covenant with God that ye should be obedient unto the end of your lives.

verse 8 The word “head” means name or title.

“there is no other head whereby ye can be made free” Each individual possesses agency or “free agency,” as we in the Church are wont to call it. Agency is not negotiable. It can be neither given nor taken away. It is given without price to each and every individual. Agency is simply the right to choose among available alternatives.

To be free is to have freedom. Freedom, sometimes called liberty, is the blessing of having many, rather than limited, choices. Freedom is not the entitlement of every person. Rather, freedom must be earned, and it is often hard won. To be truly free means to have the earned opportunity, based on the righteousness of one’s previous unrestrained decisions and choices, to rise to the loftiest heights. Because of the fall of man and also because of our own sins, each of us is deprived of our most essential freedoms. It is possible we may never again live in the presence of our God. It is possible we will never be free of Satan's rule and influences. There is only one way by which we can be free again. There is only one ultimate freedom. It is the freedom to possess the right to choose whether or not we will live with God forever. And that freedom must be earned. And it will inevitably be "hard won" (see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 13, Agency and Freedom). And there is only one name by which we may be rescued or redeemed (D&C 18:23; 2 Nephi 2:26; Mosiah 3:17; Acts 4:12).

9 And it shall come to pass that whosoever doeth this shall be found at the right hand of God, for he shall know the name by which he is called; for he shall be called by the name of Christ.

verse 9 "whosoever doeth this" Whosoever takes upon himself the name of Christ by covenant and then endures in keeping that covenant.

10 And now it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall not take upon him the name of Christ must be called by some other name; therefore, he findeth himself on the left hand of God.

verses 9-10 "At the Great Assembly when all living things must appear in the presence of the King to acclaim him, every individual must be in his proper place, at the right hand or left hand of God" (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 6, 305-06).

11 And I would that ye should remember also, that this is the name that I said I should give unto you that never should be blotted out, except it be through transgression; therefore, take heed that ye do not transgress, that the name be not blotted out of your hearts.

12 I say unto you, I would that ye should remember to retain the name written always in your hearts, that ye are not found on the left hand of God, but that ye hear and know the voice by which ye shall be called, and also, the name by which he shall call you.

verses 10-12 These verses contain another compelling example of chiasmus which is a pattern of writing found in Hebrew writings. See the supplemental article, The Hebrew Language and the Book of Mormon. For the convenience of the reader, the chiastic diagram follows:

verse 12 “that ye hear and know the voice by which ye shall be called” In order to “hear and know the voice” of the Savior, he must be revealed to us by the Spirit of God. Thus, we come to a relationship with him wherein we know more than merely “about him.” Rather, we come to truly and intimately know him—this is a “testimony” of Jesus Christ.

Elder Jeffrey R. Holland has taught that when an individual hears a testimony born of the Savior, they sometimes perceive it as “an echo” from a former time. All of the inhabitants of earth attended the grand premortal councils before this earth was. There, all of us came to know and love the Savior. On coming here to earth, the veil was drawn, but not completely. A testimony born of him here on earth sometimes nudges and stirs within us a deeply held memory and conviction (Mission Presidents’ Training Seminar, Missionary Training Center, June 1999). President Joseph F. Smith taught: “All those salient truths that come home so forcibly to the head and heart [of men here on earth] seem but the awakening of the memories of the spirit. Can we know anything here that we did not know before we came here? . . . But in coming here, we forgot all, that our agency might be free indeed, to choose good or evil, that we might merit the reward of our own choice and conduct. By the power of the Spirit, in the redemption of Christ, through obedience, we often catch a spark from the awakened memories of the immortal soul, which lights up our whole being as with the glory of our former home” (Gospel Doctrine, 12-14).

13 For how knoweth a man the master whom he has not served, and who is a stranger unto him, and is far from the thoughts and intents of his heart?

verse 13 Elder Neal A. Maxwell wrote: “By serving Jesus and by thinking of him we draw closer to him and are enlightened. Otherwise, we become estranged from his exemplification as well as from him” (Men and Women of Christ, 58). Elder Maxwell also described the results when a disciple seeks to know the thoughts and intents of the Master’s heart and strives to serve him: “For serious disciples, the greater their knowledge, the greater their meekness. The more such individuals associate with and are taught by the Lord, the more they strive to become like him and the more they wish to declare His gospel” (Meek and Lowly, 117). Clearly discipleship requires considerable thinking about, praying to, and serving God.

14 And again, doth a man take an ass which belongeth to his neighbor, and keep him? I say unto you, Nay; he will not even suffer that he shall feed among his flocks, but will drive him away, and cast him out. I say unto you, that even so shall it be among you if ye know not the name by which ye are called.

verse 14 Benjamin uses a rather hard-hitting analogy here as he compares the disobedient and wicked to an ass among a neighbor's flocks. "If ye know not the name by which ye are called," he warns them, ye shall be "cast out," as a strange animal is cast out of a flock by the owner to whom it does not belong.

15 Therefore, I would that ye should be steadfast and immovable, always abounding in good works, that Christ, the Lord God Omnipotent, may seal you his, that you may be brought to heaven, that ye may have everlasting salvation and eternal life, through the wisdom, and power, and justice, and mercy of him who created all things, in heaven and in earth, who is God above all. Amen.

verse 15 "I would that ye should be steadfast and immovable, always abounding in good works" Being "steadfast and immovable" is arriving at that state of faith and conviction which enables the saint to undergo tribulation, temptation, and persecution while remaining resolute and unwavering in their spiritual convictions (see also 1 Nephi 2:10).

Benjamin closes his sermon by reminding his people of the necessity of enduring to the end in righteousness. They were not yet sealed up to eternal life, but the promise was theirs if they persisted in good works. He then provides them with a glimpse of exaltation.

"Christ, the Lord God Omnipotent, may seal you his" Benjamin's people have had the remarkable experience of making binding and sacred covenants with God. As has been pointed out, this experience is likely analogous to receiving their temple endowments. Here they are told that if they persist in righteousness, they will be sealed up to eternal life and ultimately exalted.

1 And now, king Benjamin thought it was expedient, after having finished speaking to the people, that he should take the names of all those who had entered into a covenant with God to keep his commandments.

2 And it came to pass that there was not one soul, except it were little children, but who had entered into the covenant and had taken upon them the name of Christ.

3 And again, it came to pass that when king Benjamin had made an end of all these things, and had consecrated his son Mosiah to be a ruler and a king over his people, and had given him all the charges concerning the kingdom, and also had appointed priests to teach the people, that thereby they might hear and know the commandments of God, and to stir them up in remembrance of the oath which they had made, he dismissed the multitude, and they returned, every one, according to their families, to their own houses.

verse 3 “Benjamin . . . consecrated his son Mosiah to be a ruler and a king over his people” It was the tradition in ancient Israel to anoint the king with oil as part of the coronation ceremony. We are not told here whether Mosiah’s “consecration” included anointing. It is apparent, however, that some ritual act was involved. Earlier in the Book of Mormon we were told that Nephite kings were “anointed” (see Jacob 1:9).

“appointed priests to teach the people” It is interesting to note that in ancient Israel, during the coronation of Israelite kings, typically there was a reappointment of priests and the reconstitution of officers for the new regime (Stephen D. Ricks, “The Coronation of Kings,” a FARMS reprint, July 1989).

In the book of Mosiah, ordaining to the priesthood seems to be a royal prerogative. This is not to suggest that kings had the right to ordain because of their positions as political rulers; rather it has been suggested that kingship among the Nephites was a priesthood calling (Daniel C. Peterson, “Priesthood in Mosiah” in The Book of Mormon: Mosiah, Salvation Only through Christ, 189). Brother Peterson observes: “This notion of a priestly kingship is perhaps a bit jarring to modern readers, living in a society where church and state are kept separate as a matter of principle. But it should not be so disturbing to Latter-day Saints, whose aspirations for the life to come include becoming both ‘priests and kings’ (D&C 76:56). . . Furthermore, it seems that Christ, the true king of Israel, holds his kingship as a priesthood office. . . Kingship in the Book of Mormon is very much a religious affair, much as it had been (or had been intended to be) among the Israelites of the Old World” (Ibid., 190).

In the Book of Mormon, the verb “consecrate” is commonly used in placing a king into office (Mosiah 2:11; Alma 2:9). This very same verb is used in the Book of Mormon for ordination of priests (2 Nephi 5:26, 6:2; Jacob 1:18; Mosiah 11:5; 23:17; Alma 4:4,7;

5:3; 23:4). The Nephite king was regarded by the Nephites as representing God on earth. The king speaks for and on behalf of God.

“to stir them up in remembrance of the oath which they had made” In ancient Israel the king was considered to be the guardian or caretaker of the covenant between God and man.

4 And Mosiah began to reign in his father’s stead. And he began to reign in the thirtieth year of his age, making in the whole, about four hundred and seventy-six years from the time that Lehi left Jerusalem.

verse 4 We learned from the prophet Jacob that the Nephite kings, at their coronation, were given a new name. They “were called by the people second Nephi, third Nephi, and so forth, according to the reigns of the kings” (Jacob 1:10-11). Apparently, between the time Jacob made his record and Mosiah acceded to the throne, this practice of using Nephi as a royal name had been changed. Perhaps this change was made since the kingdom was no longer located in the land of Nephi. Mosiah is always referred to as simply “Mosiah.” Whether Mosiah is his given name or his royal name given at the time of his coronation is unknown. We learned previously that “Mosiah” may be a title meaning “savior” or “deliverer” (see the commentary for Omni 1:12). Mosiah will reign for thirty-three years from 124 BC to 91 BC. He will die in office at age sixty-three.

“making in the whole, about four hundred and seventy-six years from the time that Lehi left Jerusalem” (italics added) The word about in this phrase might give the impression that the Nephites had developed some uncertainty over their keeping track of the years. It is likely that Mosiah’s coronation took place very near the time of the 476th anniversary of Lehi’s departure from Jerusalem. Thus, the word about might be interpreted as “almost exactly” (Randall P. Spackman, “Introduction to Book of Mormon Chronology: The Principal Prophecies, Calendars, and Dates,” a FARMS reprint).

5 And king Benjamin lived three years and he died.

verse 5 It is interesting to note that Benjamin conferred the kingdom on his son Mosiah three years before Benjamin died. Apparently, there was a precedent for this in ancient Israelite culture. “Both Solomon and Jotham became king while their fathers were still alive and ruling (1 Kings 1:32-40; 2:1-10; 2 Kings 15:5)” (Stephen D. Ricks, “The Ideology of Kingship in Mosiah 1-6” a FARMS reprint). Benjamin was probably about seventy years old or in his early seventies at his death.

6 And it came to pass that king Mosiah did walk in the ways of the Lord, and did observe his judgments and his statutes, and did keep his commandments in all things whatsoever he commanded him.

7 And king Mosiah did cause his people that they should till the earth. And he also, himself, did till the earth, that thereby he might not become burdensome to his people, that he might do according to that which his father had done in all things. And there was no contention among all his people for the space of three years.

verse 7 Just as his father before him (see Mosiah 2:14), Mosiah earned his bread by his own labor.

Mosiah Chapter 7

Scripture Mastery

Mosiah 7-8, 21-22 The rescue of the people of Limhi by Ammon and his men.

1 And now, it came to pass that after king Mosiah had had continual peace for the space of three years, he was desirous to know concerning the people who went up to dwell in the land of Lehi-Nephi, or in the city of Lehi-Nephi; for his people had heard nothing from them from the time they left the land of Zarahemla; therefore, they wearied him with their teasings.

verse 1 “the people who went up to dwell in the land of Lehi-Nephi” The only previous reference we have to these “people who went up to dwell” in this land in the Book of Mormon text is the prophet Amaleki’s mention of them in Omni 1:27-30. These people, the so-called Zeniffites, are the subject of the next eighteen chapters of the Book of Mormon—Mosiah 7 through 24.

We have developed a peculiar habit of assigning names to peoples in the Book of Mormon when those names are not actually contained in the Book of Mormon text. Zeniffite is an example. Can you think of any others? Mulekite and Lehite are two other examples.

If the history of the Zeniffites is not already familiar to you, then please take a few minutes and read the Narrative Historical Summary of the book of Mosiah.

“the land of Lehi-Nephi, or in the city of Lehi-Nephi” This is the first reference to the “land” and to the “city” of “Lehi-Nephi.” These locations are apparently identical with the land and city of Nephi first mentioned in 2 Nephi 5:8. The origin of these names is not clear. Perhaps they are simply later terms used to designate the land and city of Nephi. It is the same land and the same city to which the prophet Nephi led those that would follow him after separating from his older brothers Laman and Lemuel in the land of their “first inheritance” (see 2 Nephi 5). When or why or by whom the name was changed is not clear.

“the time they left the land of Zarahemla” The events of this verse occurred in about 121 BC. Zeniff had led his followers out of Zarahemla (“the time they left the land of Zarahemla”) almost eighty years previously, in about 200 BC.

2 And it came to pass that king Mosiah granted that sixteen of their strong men might go up to the land of Lehi-Nephi, to inquire concerning their brethren.

verse 2 Notice that the land of Lehi-Nephi is “up” in elevation from Zarahemla. I have often thought to myself that perhaps Zeniff and his followers, in their desire to return to “the land of their fathers,” had been less influenced by idealistic concerns and more influenced by the cooler temperatures of the mountains that prevailed in the higher land of Lehi-Nephi (see the commentary for Mosiah 9:3).

3 And it came to pass that on the morrow they started to go up, having with them one Ammon, he being a strong and mighty man, and a descendant of Zarahemla; and he was also their leader.

verse 3 Ammon was a Mulekite—a “descendant of Zarahemla.” It is interesting to note that Ammon is the most common name in the Book of Mormon. We have discussed previously the considerable Egyptian influence that existed in ancient Judah at the time Lehi and Mulek departed that land. It is interesting to note that Ammon is also the most common name in the 26th Egyptian Dynasty from 664 to 525 BC (Hugh Nibley, Encyclopedia of Mormonism, volume 1, “Book of Mormon Near Eastern Background”).

4 And now, they knew not the course they should travel in the wilderness to go up to the land of Lehi-Nephi; therefore they wandered many days in the wilderness, even forty days did they wander.

verse 4 It has been speculated that the distance from Zarahemla to the land of Lehi-Nephi was about 250 miles on land or more like 180 miles as the crow flies (see the commentary for Mosiah 24:25). The senior Alma and his followers will make this same trip in the reverse direction in about twenty-four or so days, traveling with families and flocks. Perhaps Alma had a better idea of where he was going or perhaps he was guided by the Lord.

5 And when they had wandered forty days they came to a hill, which is north of the land of Shilom, and there they pitched their tents.

verse 5 We learn here that within the greater land of Nephi there was a land of Shilom. We will later read of other smaller lands located within the land of Nephi. These include the land of Ishmael, the land of Shemlon, and the smaller land of Nephi or Lehi-Nephi. Apparently, each smaller land had at its center a city with the same name. In modern parlance, we would be more likely to refer to these cities as “villages” or “towns,” and the smaller lands might correspond to “counties.” The Zeniffites occupied the land of Lehi-Nephi and the neighboring land of Shilom. The Lamanites occupied the other lands. It is, of course, not possible to know exactly how these lands were oriented with respect to one another. For a plausible model of the arrangement of these lands see the map, Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands.

6 And Ammon took three of his brethren, and their names were Amaleki, Helem, and Hem, and they went down into the land of Nephi.

verse 6 “they went down into the land of Nephi” To what specific land does the phrase “land of Nephi” refer here? As mentioned in the previous verse, within the greater land of Nephi there was apparently a smaller specific land of Nephi. This was likely the specific area surrounding the city of Nephi. It is probably this smaller land referred to here in this verse. Note that the terms “land of Lehi-Nephi” and “land of Nephi” are apparently being used interchangeably by the writer Mormon.

7 And behold, they met the king of the people who were in the land of Nephi, and in the land of Shilom; and they were surrounded by the king’s guard, and were taken, and were bound, and were committed to prison.

verse 7 “they met the king of the people who were in the land of Nephi” We will learn that this king is Limhi, the son of Noah and the grandson of Zeniff. The people are the Zeniffites, those Nephites who had descended from those who had originally come up from the land of Zarahemla with Zeniff.

Why did King Limhi and his guards not recognize Ammon and his men as Nephites who likely had come from Zarahemla. Shouldn’t the very appearance of Ammon and his men have alerted Limhi’s men as to the probable identity of their captives? Who else could they have been other than Nephites from Zarahemla? In verse 13, Ammon identifies himself as a “descendant of Zarahemla” or a Mulekite (see also verses 3, 13). Perhaps the descendants of the people of Zarahemla had an appearance unlike that of the other Nephites. Or perhaps, as we have argued previously, there were many other indigenous peoples in the land whose identity would have been difficult to sort out by their appearance alone (see the commentary for Jacob 7:6).

“they were . . . committed to prison” Perhaps Limhi and his men mistook Ammon and his three companions for some of the priests of Noah (see Mosiah 21:23). We will read about this interesting group later on.

8 And it came to pass when they had been in prison two days they were again brought before the king, and their bands were loosed; and they stood before the king, and were permitted, or rather commanded, that they should answer the questions which he should ask them.

9 And he said unto them: Behold, I am Limhi, the son of Noah, who was the son of Zeniff, who came up out of the land of Zarahemla to inherit this land, which was the land of their fathers, who was made a king by the voice of the people.

verse 9 “I am Limhi . . . who was made a king by the voice of the people” Limhi is perhaps one of the more underappreciated characters in the Book of Mormon. When Mormon abridged the records of people of Zeniff, Noah, and Limhi, he included several quotations from Limhi. Limhi was not a prophet and did not come from an honorable family. Then why did Mormon quote him so often?

John Gee has pointed out, “Direct quotations of Limhi occur in the following places in the record: (1) The trial of Ammon, the Mulekite dispatched to rescue the people of Limhi (Mosiah 7:8–15); (2) an official address given to all his subjects at a covenant renewal ceremony (Mosiah 7:17–33); (3) the discussion with Ammon about the twenty-four Jaredite plates found by those whom Limhi had dispatched in an attempt to find Zarahemla (Mosiah 8:5–21); and (4) the interrogation of the king of the Lamanites who attacked Limhi’s people in reprisal for the abduction of Lamanite daughters by the priests of Noah (Mosiah 20:13–22)” (John Gee, “Limhi in the Library,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 1, no. 1, 1992: 55-56). Brother Gee has pointed out that we can learn some very important things about Limhi’s character from these quotations. “The major speeches of King Limhi [carefully quoted by Mormon] are dotted with quotations from previous records and prophecies, some of which are no longer available to us,” Gee observed. “These speeches seem to show a man very well versed in his records. From these it seems that Limhi had spent a good deal of time studying and memorizing the records of his people” (Ibid., 65).

Brother Gee concluded, “Limhi’s passionate interest in records and scriptures might also explain why he was righteous in spite of the wickedness of his father (Mosiah 11:1–15; 19:17) and in spite of the general unrighteousness of his people (Mosiah 7:24–25; 23:9, 12). Furthermore, unlike Noah and his priests (Mosiah 12:25–30; 13:7–8, 11), Limhi took seriously the spiritual implications of the happenings of his people (Mosiah 7:26; 21:31–35). We need look no further than Limhi for reasons to be serious about studying our scriptures” (Ibid., 66).

Note that this verse says that Limhi “was made a king by the voice of the people.” He was not voted into office. Rather, the voice of the people acted only to confirm Limhi as their king.

10 And now, I desire to know the cause whereby ye were so bold as to come near the walls of the city, when I, myself, was with my guards without the gate?

verse 10 “ye were so bold as to come near the walls of the city” The city of Nephi (Lehi-Nephi) has walls. Doubtless these were erected as defensive fortifications and probably patterned after those around Old World Jerusalem. These are the earliest defensive fortifications mentioned in the Book of Mormon text. Mesoamerican archaeologists have discovered numerous examples of walls around ancient cities (Prudence M. Rice and Don S. Rice, “Topoxte, Macanche, and the Central Peten Post-Classic,” in The Lowland Maya Postclassic, ed. A. F. Chase and Prudence M. Rice [Austin: University of Texas Press, 1985], 166-83, especially 176).

Without the gate, of course, means outside the gate.

11 And now, for this cause have I suffered that ye should be preserved, that I might inquire of you, or else I should have caused that my guards should have put you to death. Ye are permitted to speak.

12 And now, when Ammon saw that he was permitted to speak, he went forth and bowed himself before the king; and rising again he said: O king, I am very thankful before God this day that I am yet alive, and am permitted to speak; and I will endeavor to speak with boldness;

13 For I am assured that if ye had known me ye would not have suffered that I should have worn these bands. For I am Ammon, and am a descendant of Zarahemla, and have come up out of the land of Zarahemla to inquire concerning our brethren, whom Zeniff brought up out of that land.

14 And now, it came to pass that after Limhi had heard the words of Ammon, he was exceedingly glad, and said: Now, I know of a surety that my brethren who were in the land of Zarahemla are yet alive. And now, I will rejoice; and on the morrow I will cause that my people shall rejoice also.

verse 14 “Now, I know of a surety that my brethren who were in the land of Zarahemla are yet alive” What reason did Limhi have to think that those people in Zarahemla had been destroyed? We will soon learn the interesting answer to this question (see Mosiah 8:7-10; 21:25-28).

15 For behold, we are in bondage to the Lamanites, and are taxed with a tax which is grievous to be borne. And now, behold, our brethren will deliver us out of our bondage, or out of the hands of the Lamanites, and we will be their slaves; for it is better that we be slaves to the Nephites than to pay tribute to the king of the Lamanites.

verse 15 “we will be their slaves” It is interesting that Limhi is willing to accept a second-class status for his people once they are back among the Nephites. This causes one to wonder if there had been a socially stratified society among the Nephites when Limhi’s grandfather Zeniff departed Zarahemla. Perhaps there had been, and Limhi assumed that such a dependent category still existed.

16 And now, king Limhi commanded his guards that they should no more bind Ammon nor his brethren, but caused that they should go to the hill which was north of Shilom, and bring their brethren into the city, that thereby they might eat, and drink, and rest themselves from the labors of their journey; for they had suffered many things; they had suffered hunger, thirst, and fatigue.

verses 17-18 King Limhi here begins a sermon that will extend through the end of chapter 7. We will learn that the account given here of this sermon by the prophet Mormon is but a small part of Limhi’s entire sermon (Mosiah 8:1).

17 And now, it came to pass on the morrow that king Limhi sent a proclamation among all his people, that thereby they might gather themselves together to the temple to hear the words which he should speak unto them.

verse 17 “on the morrow” We will later learn that one of the items Limhi included in this sermon to his people was a discussion of “all the things concerning their brethren who were in the land of Zarahemla (Mosiah 8:1). Perhaps he had learned much of this from his father and grandfather, but it is logical that he had also spent the previous evening with Ammon bringing himself up to date on the happenings in Zarahemla.

Note that the Zeniffites had a temple. Perhaps the Zeniffites restored the temple that Nephi had built centuries before in the same area (2 Nephi 5:16).

18 And it came to pass that when they had gathered themselves together that he spake unto them in this wise, saying: O ye, my people, lift up your heads and be comforted; for behold, the time is at hand, or is not far distant, when we shall no longer be in subjection to our enemies, notwithstanding our many strugglings, which have been in vain; yet I trust there remaineth an effectual struggle to be made.

verse 18 “notwithstanding our many strugglings, which have been in vain; yet I trust there remaineth an effectual struggle to be made” We have experienced many frustrations and hardships in the past in bondage to the Lamanites, but now there is real hope for the future. Read of the fulfillment of this prophecy in Mosiah 22:13-14.

Effectual means producing the desired or intended effect.

19 Therefore, lift up your heads, and rejoice, and put your trust in God, in that God who was the God of Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob; and also, that God who brought the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt, and caused that they should walk through the Red Sea on dry ground, and fed them with manna that they might not perish in the wilderness; and many more things did he do for them.

verse 19 The story of Moses’s parting the Red Sea is an important and appropriate motif in the Book of Mormon (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 4:2). Hence, divine deliverance is also an important and recurring theme in the Book of Mormon. Lehi and his family were delivered from Jerusalem. Nephi and his followers were delivered from Nephi’s brothers Laman and Lemuel in the land of their first inheritance (2 Nephi 5). Mosiah (the father of Benjamin) and the Nephites were delivered from the land of Nephi (Omni 1). Now Limhi is hoping for deliverance of his people from bondage.

20 And again, that same God has brought our fathers out of the land of Jerusalem, and has kept and preserved his people even until now; and behold, it is because of our iniquities and abominations that he has brought us into bondage.

21 And ye all are witnesses this day, that Zeniff, who was made king over this people, he being over-zealous to inherit the land of his fathers, therefore being deceived by the cunning and craftiness of king Laman, who having entered into a treaty with king Zeniff, and having yielded up into his hands the possessions of a part of the land, or even the city of Lehi-Nephi, and the city of Shilom; and the land round about—verse 21 “he being over-zealous to inherit the land of his fathers” Limhi’s grandfather, Zeniff, had himself admitted that he had been “over-zealous” to reclaim the land of his fathers. The implication is that the desire to return to the land of Nephi was his own and was not obtained in counsel with the Lord. He had been careless of the Lord’s desires in the matter. Here is a reminder that there is a proper balance between lethargy with its inevitable idleness and overzealousness with its associated fanaticism. Either extreme tends to subject an individual or a people to those who would seek dominion or power over them and hold them in bondage.

“having yielded up into his hands” A careful reading of this verse indicates that it was the crafty King Laman who was doing the “yielding” here.

22 And all this he did, for the sole purpose of bringing this people into subjection or into bondage. And behold, we at this time do pay tribute to the king of the Lamanites, to the amount of one half of our corn, and our barley, and even all our grain of every kind, and one half of the increase of our flocks and our herds; and even one half of all we have or possess the king of the Lamanites doth exact of us, or our lives.

verse 22 “one half of our corn” The mention of “corn” in this verse is interesting. “Corn” is almost certainly maize, the native American plant that has been the mainstay of the native Americans’ diet for centuries. Maize is so totally domesticated a plant that it will not reproduce without human care. It is therefore impossible that they would have found it growing wild on their arrival. Also, there is no possibility that Lehi’s party would have brought this American crop with them since it does not exist in the land of Judah from whence they came. Zeniff’s people could only be growing corn because people already familiar with the complex techniques had passed on the requisite knowledge and seed to him. Here, then, is further evidence that “others” passed on the knowledge to the descendants of Lehi (John L. Sorenson, “When Lehi’s party Arrived in the Land, Did They Find Others There?” in the Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, volume 1, number 1 [Fall 1992], 1-34).

“one half of . . . our barley” Prior to 1983 there was no evidence that pre-Colombian domesticated barley ever existed in the western hemisphere. In the December 1983 edition of the magazine Science, archaeologists reported the discovery of what appeared to be this type of barley in Phoenix, Arizona (see also Alma 11:7).

verses 21-22 Sentence structures in Hebrew differ from those in English. For example, long strings of subordinate clauses and verbal expressions, such as is found in these two verses are acceptable in Hebrew, though unorthodox and discouraged in English.

“or our lives” Obviously, the people of Limhi were threatened by the Lamanites with death if they did not comply with all of the various taxations to which they were subject.

23 And now, is not this grievous to be borne? And is not this, our affliction, great? Now behold, how great reason we have to mourn.

24 Yea, I say unto you, great are the reasons which we have to mourn; for behold how many of our brethren have been slain, and their blood has been spilt in vain, and all because of iniquity.

25 For if this people had not fallen into transgression the Lord would not have suffered that this great evil should come upon them. But behold, they would not hearken unto his words; but there arose contentions among them, even so much that they did shed blood among themselves.

verse 25 “they did shed blood among themselves” What are these incidents of bloodshed? We do know of blood-shed during the incident involving the “austere and blood-thirsty man” who originally led Zeniff and the other Nephites up to the land of Nephi (Mosiah 9:2). We will read in the next verse of King Noah’s ordering the execution of the prophet Abinadi. There may have been other unmentioned incidents of fratricide particularly during the reign of King Noah.

26 And a prophet of the Lord have they slain; yea, a chosen man of God, who told them of their wickedness and abominations, and prophesied of many things which are to come, yea, even the coming of Christ.

verse 26 Who is this “prophet of the Lord” who was slain? Of course, it is the prophet Abinadi who was burned to death about 150 BC. We will read the complete story of the prophet Abinadi in Mosiah chapters 11 through 17. In the Book of Mormon, we will learn that Abinadi is a type of Christ as well as a messenger of him. Nothing is known of Abinadi’s parentage or place of origin or life, whether he was old or young, large or small. We will learn, however, that he was a man of great courage. We will read of his boldly confronting the priests of Noah and then baiting, challenging, and questioning them.

27 And because he said unto them that Christ was the God, the Father of all things, and said that he should take upon him the image of man, and it should be the image after which man was created in the beginning; or in other words, he said that man was created after the image of God, and that God should come down among the children of men, and take upon him flesh and blood, and go forth upon the face of the earth—verse 27 In this verse Limhi summarizes the teachings of the great prophet Abinadi. We will encounter these teachings in detail in Mosiah 11 through 17.

Abinadi was the first Nephite in the Book of Mormon to die as a martyr. He was killed by fire—primarily for the clear testimony that he bore. That testimony was essentially that Christ was the God of the Old Testament, “the Father of all things,” and would eventually come to earth among men and take upon himself flesh and blood (see Mosiah 17:7-8).

“Christ was the God, the Father of all things” We have previously reviewed the four reasons why Jesus Christ is considered “the Father of all things.” First, he is the Father because of his central role in the creation of all things. Secondly, he is the Father because those sons of man who obey him and progress in his gospel become the “children” or “sons and daughters” of Christ. Third, he is the Father because in his role as Jehovah, God of the Old Testament, he became known as the God and Father of Heaven. Finally, Christ may be considered the Father by the principle of the divine investiture of authority. The Father has invested in the Son his power and the right to act in his name.

“he said that man was created after the image of God” Note that Abinadi had taught that man was created, at least in part, in the image of Christ, the God who was to “come down among the children of men.” Christ was the Firstborn in the spirit. That is his intelligence was the first to be “begotten” by the Father and clothed with a body of spirit. Jesus was then tutored and tested, and he developed from “grace to grace” and eventually received a “fulness of truth” (D&C 93:11-14). The fulness of truth is defined in scripture as “a knowledge of things past, present, and future” (D&C 93:24). Then the Son became a God and was placed in charge of the creation or organization of all the rest of the Father’s kingdom (Moses 1:32-33). He even somehow assisted with the creation of the spirit bodies of all men (D&C 93:10). This clarifies the Genesis account of “let us make man in our image” (1:26). The plural pronouns us and our in Genesis must refer to Christ’s being with his Father from the beginning and being involved in the plan to people the earth.

28 And now, because he said this, they did put him to death; and many more things did they do which brought down the wrath of God upon them. Therefore, who wondereth that they are in bondage, and that they are smitten with sore afflictions?

verse 28 “Therefore, who wondereth that they are in bondage” Limhi said of those people who murdered Abinadi, in effect, “No wonder our people are living in bondage.”

verses 29-31 John Gee has pointed out that in these three verses, Limhi finishes his speech by quoting three items of scripture, prefacing each with “the Lord hath said” (verse 29) or the equivalent “again he saith” (verses 30-31). But these items of scripture are unavailable to us outside of Limhi's quotations. These three items are:

1. “I will not succor my people in the day of their transgression; but I will hedge up their ways that they prosper not and their doings shall be as a stumbling block before them” (verse 29).

2. “If my people shall sow filthiness they shall reap the chaff thereof and the effect thereof is poison” (verse 30).

3. “If my people shall sow filthiness they shall reap the east wind which bringeth immediate destruction” (verse 31).

These passages are not found in any of the scriptures presently available to us. The closest parallel is Hosea 8:7: “For they have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind.” We might guess that Hosea relied on the same scripture that Limhi did, although what that source might be remains unknown. We are told that the biblical records were “not so many” as the brass plates of Laban (1 Nephi 13:23), so we should not be surprised that we cannot find these quotations in the Bible (“Limhi in the Library,” FARMS Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, volume 1, number 1 [Fall 1992], 63).

Previously in verses 27 and 28, Limhi quoted from the prophet Abinadi. It seems possible that in verses 29 through 31, he is still quoting the words of Abinadi. Perhaps Abinadi simply found these metaphorical concepts on the plates of brass.

29 For behold, the Lord hath said: I will not succor my people in the day of their transgression; but I will hedge up their ways that they prosper not; and their doings shall be as a stumbling block before them.

verse 29 To “succor” means to help or nourish. To “hedge up their ways” means to obstruct or block their path (with a hedge) or impede their progress (Hosea 2:6; Ether 9:33; D&C 122:7).

30 And again, he saith: If my people shall sow filthiness they shall reap the chaff thereof in the whirlwind; and the effect thereof is poison.

verse 30 Here is a reference to the principle of the so-called “law of the harvest” which, simply stated, is that men are accountable for all of their acts, both spiritual and temporal. Alma the younger will later refer to this principle as the “law of restoration” in giving counsel to his son Corianton (see the introductory commentary for Alma 41). This law holds that man will be judged by his works and the intentions of his heart. If a man’s works and the desires of his heart in this life are good, then in the judgment the man will be restored to that which is good. If his works and desires are evil, then in that last day, evil will be restored to him.

“they shall reap the chaff thereof in the whirlwind” Another well-known scriptural verse contains the idea of the whirlwind’s being associated with Satanic influences (see Helaman 5:12).

31 And again he saith: If my people shall sow filthiness they shall reap the east wind, which bringeth immediate destruction.

verse 31 The “east wind” is a biblical concept that had its origins in Palestine. The term is used on one additional occasion in the Book of Mormon (see Mosiah 12:6). In Israel, the prevailing winds are west winds that come off the Mediterranean. They are cooling and refreshing. When the winds change, however, and blow from the east off the desert, there is great heat, blown sand, and even pestilence in the form of plagues of grasshoppers and other insects. Thus, the east wind metaphorically represents the judgment and destruction from God (Genesis 41:23; Ezekiel 19:12; Hosea 13:15; Jonah 4:8).

It is interesting that we have a man in 120 BC in the western hemisphere using the concept of the “east wind.” How might we explain this? The first person or speaker in this verse is Limhi. As mentioned above, the concept of the “east wind” may have originated in the plates of brass. Or, perhaps Limhi was actually referring to the weather patterns in his own land. In Mesoamerica, there were certainly destructive “east winds”—hurricanes that came in from the east. Thus, the concept of destructive “east winds” might also have been a valid one among the people of Limhi.

32 And now, behold, the promise of the Lord is fulfilled, and ye are smitten and afflicted.

33 But if ye will turn to the Lord with full purpose of heart, and put your trust in him, and serve him with all diligence of mind, if ye do this, he will, according to his own will and pleasure, deliver you out of bondage.

verse 33 “with full purpose of heart” This expression is found exclusively in the Book of Mormon and in the Doctrine and Covenants (D&C 17:1; 18:27-28). Its meaning is evident. In contrast, we often use the expression “halfhearted.”

1 And it came to pass that after king Limhi had made an end of speaking to his people, for he spake many things unto them and only a few of them have I written in this book, he told his people all the things concerning their brethren who were in the land of Zarahemla.

verse 1 Who is the first person in this verse, and what is “this book”? The “I” is Mormon, and “this book” is the plates of Mormon. See the supplementary article, Those Confusing Book of Mormon Plates. Mormon, here, makes reference to King Limhi’s sermon found in verses 18 through 33 of Mosiah 7.

“all the things concerning their brethren who were in the land of Zarahemla” As mentioned previously (see the commentary for Mosiah 7:17), it is likely that Limhi spent the evening prior to his sermon at the temple visiting with Ammon and brushing up on the current happenings in Zarahemla.

2 And he caused that Ammon should stand up before the multitude, and rehearse unto them all that had happened unto their brethren from the time that Zeniff went up out of the land even until the time that he himself came up out of the land.

verse 2 “from the time that Zeniff went up to the land even until the time that he [Ammon] himself came up out of the land” Zeniff had departed Zarahemla about 200 BC, probably some ten years after the Nephites arrival in Zarahemla. The rescue of the Zeniffites by Ammon was about 121 BC. Hence, Ammon was asked to provide the Zeniffites as much of the history of the Nephites sojourn in Zarahemla as he knew.

3 And he also rehearsed unto them the last words which king Benjamin had taught them, and explained them to the people of king Limhi, so that they might understand all the words which he spake.

verse 3 “the last words which king Benjamin had taught them” Keep in mind that the Zeniffites knew nothing of king Benjamin, as they had been in the land of Nephi (or Lehi-Nephi) at the time of Benjamin’s reign in Zarahemla. Benjamin began his reign about 160 BC (which, coincidentally, was about the same time that Noah became king) and ruled until 124 BC. Thus Benjamin’s sermon had been delivered only three years previously and was undoubtedly fresh on Ammon’s mind.

4 And it came to pass that after he had done all this, that king Limhi dismissed the multitude, and caused that they should return every one unto his own house.

5 And it came to pass that he caused that the plates which contained the record of his people from the time that they left the land of Zarahemla, should be brought before Ammon, that he might read them.

verse 5 This is the first mention of this set of plates, the record of the Zeniffites compiled by the Zeniffites themselves. The translation, and probable abridgement, of these plates comprises chapters 9 through 22 of the book of Mosiah.

There is no indication that Ammon had any difficulty communicating with the Zeniffites. They must have had a language in common.

6 Now, as soon as Ammon had read the record, the king inquired of him to know if he could interpret languages, and Ammon told him that he could not.

verse 6 Ammon had obviously been able to read the record of the Zeniffites. In this verse Limhi is asking Ammon if he can read languages other than that spoken by the Nephites and the Zeniffites.

7 And the king said unto him: Being grieved for the afflictions of my people, I caused that forty and three of my people should take a journey into the wilderness, that thereby they might find the land of Zarahemla, that we might appeal unto our brethren to deliver us out of bondage.

8 And they were lost in the wilderness for the space of many days, yet they were diligent, and found not the land of Zarahemla but returned to this land, having traveled in a land among many waters, having discovered a land which was covered with bones of men, and of beasts, and was also covered with ruins of buildings of every kind, having discovered a land which had been peopled with a people who were as numerous as the hosts of Israel.

verse 8 When these forty-three men happened on to the remains of the Jaredite culture, did they know where they were? Did they know the identity of the people whose remains they were viewing? We will learn later that the men feared they may have found the remains of Zarahemla with all of its inhabitants annihilated (For a more complete account of this experience see Mosiah 21:25-28 and its commentary).

9 And for a testimony that the things that they had said are true they have brought twenty-four plates which are filled with engravings, and they are of pure gold.

verse 9 “twenty-four plates which are filled with engravings” We will later learn that these are the plates of Ether, the record of the Jaredites. They will later be translated by king Mosiah, the son of king Benjamin. The prophet Moroni will later either re-translate this record or abridge king Mosiah’s translation and record the book of Ether.

10 And behold, also, they have brought breastplates, which are large, and they are of brass and of copper, and are perfectly sound.

verse 10 “breastplates, which are large” The Jaredites are believed by several investigators in Book of Mormon geography to correlate with the ancient Olmec culture of Mesoamerica who lived some time between 2500 BC and 300 BC (Joseph L. Allen, Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon, 55-67). It is particularly interesting to note that these people were of unusually large boney structure. The 16th century historian Fernando de Alva Ixtlilxochitl referred to them in his writings as “giants.”

11 And again, they have brought swords, the hilts thereof have perished, and the blades thereof were cankered with rust; and there is no one in the land that is able to interpret the language or the engravings that are on the plates. Therefore I said unto thee: Canst thou translate?

verse 11 The “hilt” of a sword is its handle. King Limhi is still speaking to Ammon.

12 And I say unto thee again: Knowest thou of any one that can translate? For I am desirous that these records should be translated into our language; for, perhaps, they will give us a knowledge of a remnant of the people who have been destroyed, from whence these records came; or, perhaps, they will give us a knowledge of this very people who have been destroyed; and I am desirous to know the cause of their destruction.

13 Now Ammon said unto him: I can assuredly tell thee, O king, of a man that can translate the records; for he has wherewith that he can look, and translate all records that are of ancient date; and it is a gift from God. And the things are called interpreters, and no man can look in them except he be commanded, lest he should look for that he ought not and he should perish. And whosoever is commanded to look in them, the same is called seer.

verse 13 Some have felt that Ammon was oddly silent when he was told about the twenty-four plates and other artifacts that had been recovered from the land Desolation. After all, he was a descendant of the people of Zarahemla (Mosiah 7:13), and might be expected to have known of the tradition that existed among his people of finding Coriantumr, the last survivor of the great Jaredite conflict (Omni 1:20-22). He gives no indication of having heard of the Jaredites who occupied the land of Desolation or of the war of extinction or of the wounded Jaredite ruler who lived among his ancestors for nine months. Ammon seemed to be as ignorant of Coriantumr as Limhi was. It could be that Ammon was simply carelessly ignorant of his people’s traditions. After all, Coriantumr was discovered some 400 years previously. Or, it could be that Mormon’s account of Ammon’s response in this instance is deficient. It has also been suggested that the “Mulekites” were a heterogeneous group and that all segments of their population did not share the same traditions (John L. Sorenson, “When Lehi’s Party Arrived in the Land, Did They Find Others There?” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, volume 1, number 1, 1992, 16).

“a man that can translate the records” Ammon, of course, is referring to king Mosiah, the son of king Benjamin.

“the things are called interpreters” This is the first mention in the Book of Mormon of this peculiar device intended by the Lord to be used for translating ancient records. For a detailed description of this device, see The Process of Translating the Book of Mormon Plates, in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, appendix A. We understand the “interpreters” to be the “Urim and Thummim,” two special stones prepared by God and used by prophets for receiving revelations and for translating scriptural records written in a language unknown to the prophet. God’s prophets who are allowed to use the Urim and Thummim have been referred to as “seers.” The term “interpreters” is unique to the Book of Mormon. The term “Urim and Thummim” is not found in the Book of Mormon text.

Is there more than one set of interpreters in ancient scripture? There are at least two and possibly three or more. The brother of Jared was the first to receive a set (Ether 3:22-28). He was commanded to seal them up with his record as a means of translating the same (Ether 3:23-24). Joseph Smith, of course, possessed the interpreters, and we are told that his were the same given to the brother of Jared (D&C 17:1). Where did King Mosiah get his? There is no mention of Lehi and his party’s bringing these stones with them. Some have suggested that Mosiah obtained his from his father and grandfather, Benjamin and Mosiah. This idea originates with the account of the older Mosiah’s translating the Mulekite’s large stone “by the gift and power of God” (Omni 1:20-21). Were King Mosiah’s interpreters the same as those given to the brother of Jared? It is possible, but it seems unlikely, unless the early Mulekites found them among the artifacts previously belonging to the Jaredites and handed them down to eventually be delivered by the people of Zarahemla to Mosiah.

Abraham received a set (Abraham 3:1). Either Abraham’s set was passed along or Moses received another (Exodus 28:30). The fate of this set or these sets is unknown. There are several other mentions of this type of device in the Old Testament. Apparently a Urim and Thummim was kept in the pocket of the breastplate worn by the high priest in Old Testament Israel (Exodus 28:30; Leviticus 8:8; Numbers 27:21; Deuteronomy 33:8; 1 Samuel 28:6; Ezra 2:63; Nehemiah 7:65). This Urim and Thummim was also apparently used for receiving revelation from the Lord (e.g., Numbers 27:21; 1 Samuel 28:6).

The name “Urim and Thummim” is the transliteration of two Hebrew words which mean “lights” and “perfections,” referring to the stones’ ability to bring to light hidden things of the past (Alma 37:23). The -im ending on both words apparently represents the Hebrew masculine plural suffix.

Joseph Smith first learned of the stones' existence the night of September 21, 1823 from Moroni, then a resurrected being, who told him that when he should obtain them, he should show them only to those to whom he should be commanded to show them (JS-H 1:42). Joseph first saw the Urim and Thummim the following day (JS-H 1:52), and obtained them and the plates four years later (JS-H 1:59).

“lest he should look for that he ought not and he should perish” Ammon suggests that the unauthorized use of the interpreters might lead to the death of the offender. It seems more likely that any unworthy individual who tries to use them would simply find them ineffectual (see 1 Samuel 28:6).

14 And behold, the king of the people who are in the land of Zarahemla is the man that is commanded to do these things, and who has this high gift from God.

15 And the king said that a seer is greater than a prophet.

verse 15 Mormon seems to attribute this verse to king Mosiah, the son of Benjamin. Are “prophets” different than “seers”? Apparently, the term “seer” was used in the earliest of Old Testament times to designate a prophet. A prophet is essentially one who proclaims the word of God, especially the testimony of Jesus Christ, by the power of the Holy Spirit. A seer has the gift to prophesy of future events and to interpret past events and records (see the commentary for the following verse). Most prophets are also seers, but apparently, it is possible to be a prophet and not be a seer. We will learn in the next verse, however, that every seer is also a prophet.

But why is “a seer greater than a prophet”?

16 And Ammon said that a seer is a revelator and a prophet also; and a gift which is greater can no man have, except he should possess the power of God, which no man can; yet a man may have great power given him from God.

verse 16 “a seer is a revelator and a prophet also” A seer is the most inspired of men, having visual revelations of things past, present, and future pertaining to both heaven and earth. These visions are not mere dreams; they may be experienced while in a waking state. Father Lehi, his son Nephi, and the brother of Jared are notable seers in the Book of Mormon. The translation of ancient records is another aspect of seership (see verse 13). A man who possesses the interpreters (Urim and Thummim or seerstone) is a seer. He is allowed “by the gift and power of God” to look in the interpreters for the purpose of interpreting languages.

“except he should possess the power of God” The term “power of God” here might be interpreted as “all of the power of God.”

“yet a man may have great power given him from God” We know that under certain circumstances, God allows man to borrow some of his power. Such a man is said to hold the priesthood.

17 But a seer can know of things which are past, and also of things which are to come, and by them shall all things be revealed, or, rather, shall secret things be made manifest, and hidden things shall come to light, and things which are not known shall be made known by them, and also things shall be made known by them which otherwise could not be known.

verse 17 “a seer” We may summarize the unique characteristics of a seer. He is a priesthood leader who is empowered to see with spiritual eyes things which are not visible with the natural eyes. He can see “things which are past,” “things which are to come,” “secret things,” hidden things,” and “things which are not known.” See also the following verse.

18 Thus God has provided a means that man, through faith, might work mighty miracles; therefore he becometh a great benefit to his fellow beings.

verse 18 “man, through faith, might work mighty miracles” Here is a reminder that miracles are not given by the Lord in order to produce faith in the receiver. Rather, miracles are given to mortals as a reward for their faith. See Miracles in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 20.

Here, we learn that a seer is also one who “through faith, might work mighty miracles” by the use of “means” (divine instruments) prepared by God (Mosiah 8:18) (According to Joseph Smith’s 1838 history, the angel Moroni indicated to the boy prophet that “the possession and use of [seer stones] were what constituted ‘seers’ in ancient or former times,” Joseph Smith—History 1:35). As Ammon explained, seership is greater than prophethood because a seer unlocks what happened in the past, including mysteries, secrets, obscured teachings, lost scripture, and hidden knowledge. As Limhi acknowledged, the instruments of seership are “doubtless prepared for the purpose of unfolding all such mysteries to the children of men” (Mosiah 8:19). In this way, a seer goes beyond the gifts granted to prophets and is therefore “greater” both regarding power and responsibility.

Joseph Smith himself is designated a “seer” in the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants (2 Nephi 3:6; Doctrine and Covenants 21:1). He can rightly be called such since with divine instruments he translated the Book of Mormon and in doing so also glimpsed the distant past of ancient America (Lucy Mack Smith recalled that during his encounters with Moroni in the mid-1820s her son “would occasionally give [the Smith family] some of the most amusing recitals that could be imagined: he would describe the ancient inhabitants of this continent; their dress, mode of travelling, and the animals upon which they rode; their cities, and their buildings, with every particular; he would describe their [mode of] warfare, as also their religious worship. This he would do with as much ease, seemingly, as if he had spent his whole life with them.” Lucy Mack Smith, History, 1845, 87. While skeptics might dismiss this as the young prophet telling tall tales or spinning yarn, it is also possible to interpret this as Joseph utilizing his newly-honed seeric abilities under Moroni's tutelage.

With the restoration of God's ancient order in our time came the gift of seership again. Steven C. Walker commented, "The ancient calling of seer remains active through modern times," as "in the modern Church, members of the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles serve as seers. These fifteen apostolic officials are designated prophets, seers, and revelators who direct the Church by means of divine revelation" (Steven C. Walker, "Seer," in The Encyclopedia of Mormonism, 3:1292–1293).

19 And now, when Ammon had made an end of speaking these words the king rejoiced exceedingly, and gave thanks to God, saying: Doubtless a great mystery is contained within these plates, and these interpreters were doubtless prepared for the purpose of unfolding all such mysteries to the children of men.

verse 19 "mystery" "mysteries" For a discussion of the two definitions of the concept of the "mysteries of God" see the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:1.

For further discussion of the "interpreters" see the commentary for Mosiah 8:13.

20 O how marvelous are the works of the Lord, and how long doth he suffer with his people; yea, and how blind and impenetrable are the understandings of the children of men; for they will not seek wisdom, neither do they desire that she should rule over them!

verse 20 "for they will not seek wisdom, neither do they desire that she should rule over them" (italics mine) It should be noted that in biblical scripture, the concept of wisdom is often referred to as "she" or "her" (see Proverbs 1:20; 2:4; 3:13; 4:5-9). By the way, if you have ever used Proverbs 8:22-31 as a passage of scripture which provides evidence of the pre-existence of man, notice that the first person in this passage is not man, but rather wisdom!

The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old. I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was. When [there were] no depths, I was brought forth; when [there were] no fountains abounding with water. Before the mountains were settled, before the hills was I brought forth: While as yet he had not made the earth, nor the fields, nor the highest part of the dust of the world. When he prepared the heavens, I [was] there: when he set a compass upon the face of the depth: When he established the clouds above: when he strengthened the fountains of the deep: When he gave to the sea his decree, that the waters should not pass his commandment: when he appointed the foundations of the earth: Then I was by him, [as] one brought up [with him]: and I was daily [his] delight, rejoicing always before him; Rejoicing in the habitable part of his earth; and my delights [were] with the sons of men (Proverbs 8:22-31).

21 Yea, they are as a wild flock which fleeth from the shepherd, and scattereth, and are driven, and are devoured by the beasts of the forest.

verse 21 “They” here refers to the “children of men” whose understandings are “blind and impenetrable” in the previous verse. King Limhi is commenting on the natural tendency of man and its consequences (see The “Natural Self” and “Spiritual Self” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 5).

Mosiah Chapter 9

Mosiah 9-22 The account of the people of Zeniff, Noah, and Limhi in the land of Nephi.

This chapter begins the record of the Zeniffites referred to in Mosiah 8:5. Mormon obviously chose to include this account on the plates of Mormon. It is likely that he abridged the original plates of the Zeniffites and engraved this abridgement rather than a verbatim version onto his plates. The account extends through Mosiah chapter 22. This record began about 200 BC. The Zeniffites will be rescued and led back to the land of Zarahemla after some eighty years, in 121 BC. Before beginning your study of these chapters, be certain you are familiar with the Narrative Historical Summary of the book of Mosiah.

The Record of Zeniff—An account of his people, from the time they left the land of Zarahemla until the time that they were delivered out of the hands of the Lamanites. Comprising chapters 9 to 22 inclusive.

This heading was contained on the plates of Mormon except, of course, for the phrase “Comprising chapters 9 to 22 inclusive, which is a modern addition.

1 I, Zeniff, having been taught in all the language of the Nephites, and having had a knowledge of the land of Nephi, or of the land of our fathers’ first inheritance, and having been sent as a spy among the Lamanites that I might spy out their forces, that our army might come upon them and destroy them—but when I saw that which was good among them I was desirous that they should not be destroyed.

verse 1 Note that if Mormon did abridge this record, he left Zeniff as the first person. Zeniff will remain the first person through chapter 10 after which he died. Mormon then becomes the first person and remains so throughout the remainder of the record of the Zeniffites. Zeniff is obviously the author of the materials in chapters 9 and 10. Who is the author of the remainder of the Zeniffite record? We are not told. Perhaps it was a scribe in the king’s court.

“I, Zeniff, having been taught in all the language of the Nephites” Zeniff states how he is able to commence this record of his doings. In which language was his record engraved? We do not know. Was it the same “reformed Egyptian”—the glyptic form of Hebrew—in which the rest of the plates of the Book of Mormon were engraved? It seems improbable that it would be, as it would be a little surprising if the rescuer

Ammon, one of the “strong men” of Zarahemla (Mosiah 7:2) and a descendant of the Mulekites, would have been able to read a record so recorded (see Mosiah 8:5-6)?

“having been sent as a spy among the Lamanites that I might spy out their forces, that our army might come upon them and destroy them” It seems clear that this initial journey by Nephites from Zarahemla back up to the land of Nephi was a military excursion of armed men, intended, at least in the eyes of its leader and some others, to win back the land of Nephi from the Lamanites by combat.

2 Therefore, I contended with my brethren in the wilderness, for I would that our ruler should make a treaty with them; but he being an austere and a blood-thirsty man commanded that I should be slain; but I was rescued by the shedding of much blood; for father fought against father, and brother against brother, until the greater number of our army was destroyed in the wilderness; and we returned, those of us that were spared, to the land of Zarahemla, to relate that tale to their wives and their children.

verse 2 “until the greater number of our army was destroyed in the wilderness” We are not told all of the reasons for the infighting that occurred among this Nephite army, though Omni 1:28 suggests that the leader of the excursion was responsible. Perhaps it was the same issue that was troubling Zeniff—whether to attack the Lamanites or enter into a treaty with them. Following the fighting, only fifty men remained alive (Omni 1:28).

By today’s military standards and if this military excursion was sent from a central military command in Zarahemla to spy on the enemy (the Lamanites), it would seem that Zeniff perhaps should be judged as guilty of sedition, as he seems to have objected to his commander’s orders. Perhaps he is fortunate that he was not tried by a military tribunal once he arrived back in Zarahemla.

3 And yet, I being over-zealous to inherit the land of our fathers, collected as many as were desirous to go up to possess the land, and started again on our journey into the wilderness to go up to the land; but we were smitten with famine and sore afflictions; for we were slow to remember the Lord our God.

verse 3 “I being over-zealous to inherit the land of our fathers” Apparently, by the time Zeniff wrote this account, he had had time to reflect on the appropriateness of the entire venture. There is no evidence in the text that the Lord ever inspired or even approved of this undertaking by Zeniff and his followers. The entire experience was the idea of Zeniff and perhaps some others. By his own admission, Zeniff and his adherents were “slow to remember the Lord our God.”

It is suggested that one reason why Zeniff and his associates might have wanted to return to the land of Nephi is that the Chiapas depression, the likely site of the city of Zarahemla, is at a low elevation and is characterized by tropical moist heat. Highland Guatemala, the likely site of the land of Nephi, in contrast, has an almost perpetual spring-like climate.

4 Nevertheless, after many days' wandering in the wilderness we pitched our tents in the place where our brethren were slain, which was near to the land of our fathers.

5 And it came to pass that I went again with four of my men into the city, in unto the king, that I might know of the disposition of the king, and that I might know if I might go in with my people and possess the land in peace.

6 And I went in unto the king, and he covenanted with me that I might possess the land of Lehi-Nephi, and the land of Shilom.

verse 6 The local lands of Lehi-Nephi and Shilom surround the cities of the same name. We have already commented that the city of Nephi, founded originally by Nephi and his followers, now has a new name (see verse 8). It is the city of Lehi-Nephi. When was the name changed? We have commented previously that we are not told. It was sometime during the 400 years of Nephite control of that city.

7 And he also commanded that his people should depart out of the land, and I and my people went into the land that we might possess it.

8 And we began to build buildings, and to repair the walls of the city, yea, even the walls of the city of Lehi-Nephi, and the city of Shilom.

verse 8 John A. Tvedtnes observed: "By the time the Lamanite king returned the cities of [Lehi-Nephi] and Shilom to the Nephites led by Zeniff (with the intent of bringing them into bondage), the city seems to have fallen into disrepair. . . . It is possible that the Lamanites were anxious to absorb Nephite dissenters precisely because they could make use of their skills (cf. Alma 21:2)" (Review of Books on the Book of Mormon, 32). Apparently the Lamanites never did become as skilled as the Nephites in building.

9 And we began to till the ground, yea, even with all manner of seeds, with seeds of corn, and of wheat, and of barley, and with neas, and with sheum, and with seeds of all manner of fruits; and we did begin to multiply and prosper in the land.

verse 9 "seeds of corn" It would seem that the most staple food product throughout much of the Book of Mormon was corn. Corn, or maize, has been shown by archaeologists to be "native to the Americas; and evidence of corn appears as early as 500 BC" (Joseph L. Allen, Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon, 171). See also the commentary for Mosiah 7:22.

For additional notes on the agriculture of the Book of Mormon people, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 8:1.

“and of wheat” As of this writing, modern archaeologists have found no evidence of pre-Columbian wheat in the Americas. Undoubtedly, they will eventually find such evidence.

“and of barley” Until recently, barley also had never been reported to exist in the Americas prior to Columbus. In the December 1983 issue of Science 83, professional archaeologists reported finding what is apparently pre-Columbian, domesticated barley among the ruins of the Hohokam civilization in Arizona.

“Little barley,” as scientists call it, has since been found throughout the Mississippi River valley where it was a major staple during the Middle (ca. 200 BC–AD 500) and Late Woodland (ca. AD 500–1000) periods (Michael T. Dunn and William Green, “Terminal Archaic and Early Woodland Plant Use at the Gast Spring Site, 13LA152, Southeast Iowa,” Midcontinental Journal of Archaeology 23, no. 1, 1998: 47), though “likely cultivated specimens” have also been found dating to as early as 800 BC in Iowa (Ibid., 64). According to two non-LDS scholars, “extensive archaeological evidence also points to the cultivation of little barley in the Southwest and parts of Mexico” (Ibid.).

Over time, more and more evidence for domestication of little barley in the Americas has emerged over an increasingly wider span of both time and geography. Little barley may have diffused to other regions of the Americas which were known to trade with the southwest and eastern United States, including the exchange of crops (See Livingston, “Barley and the Book of Mormon”; also see John L. Sorenson, “Mesoamericans in Pre-Columbian North America,” in Reexploring the Book of Mormon, 218–219). In any case, evidence demonstrates that in at least some parts of the Americas, a type of barley was a highly important crop during Book of Mormon times.

This has important implications for the Book of Mormon. In the second and first centuries BC, barley played a significant role in Nephite society, not only as food, but as a measurement of exchange (Alma 11:1–19), just as it did in ancient Near Eastern economic systems (See John W. Welch, “The Law of Mosiah,” in Reexploring the Book of Mormon, 160; John W. Welch, “The Laws of Eshnunna and Nephite Economics,” in Pressing Forward with the Book of Mormon: The FARMS Updates of the 1990s, ed. John W. Welch and Melvin J. Thorne, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1999, 147–149; John W. Welch, “Weighing and Measuring in the Worlds of the Book of Mormon,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 8, no. 2, 1999: 40–41). Evidence from what is often called archaeobotany (the study of plants remains at archaeological sites) now confirms that a species of barley was highly important to some cultures in the Americas at this time.

This is another example that illustrates the benefits that come with patience in archaeology. John L. Sorenson commented, “That such an important crop could have gone undetected for so long by archaeologists justifies the thought that wheat might also be found in ancient [American] sites” (John L. Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1985, 184). Questions remain about Nephite crops, animals, and material culture, but discoveries like little barley illustrate the wisdom in keeping an open mind and avoiding hasty judgments while considering and exploring what the Book of Mormon says about Nephite life.

“with neas and with sheum” “Neas” are possibly avocados.

“Sheum” may well be a type of grain related to barley. Just in the last forty years we have learned that the most important cereal grain among the Akkadians (Babylonians) of Mesopotamia was called she’um (see R. F. Smith, “Some ‘Neologisms’ from the Mormon Canon,” in 1973 Conference on the Language of the Mormons [Provo, Utah: BYU Language Research Center, 1973], 66). In Akkadian, the word she’um meant “barley.” In Old Assyrian, a neighbor tongue, the term signified “wheat.” Since both wheat and barley are separately listed in this verse, she’um did not mean either of those two grains, but it could have been transferred to another seed or even a non-seed plant. Regarding seven little-known grain crops from Mesoamerica to which the name she’um might have been applied, see John L. Sorenson, “Viva Zapato! Hurray for the Shoe!” Review of Books on the Book of Mormon 6/1 [1994]:338-39). The Jaredites, who had originally lived in Mesopotamia, could have put the name on some cultivable plant they encountered in their new land. Some of their undocumented descendants may well have passed the name and whatever grain it labeled down to the Zeniffites.

10 Now it was the cunning and the craftiness of king Laman, to bring my people into bondage, that he yielded up the land that we might possess it.

11 Therefore it came to pass, that after we had dwelt in the land for the space of twelve years that king Laman began to grow uneasy, lest by any means my people should wax strong in the land, and that they could not overpower them and bring them into bondage.

verse 11 The pronoun “they” in this verse and the “they”s in the following verse have no antecedent. They obviously refer to the Lamanites, however.

12 Now they were a lazy and an idolatrous people; therefore they were desirous to bring us into bondage, that they might glut themselves with the labors of our hands; yea, that they might feast themselves upon the flocks of our fields.

verse 12 “that they might glut themselves with the labors of our hands” Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines glut. “To swallow, or to swallow greedily; to gorge; to cloy; to fill beyond sufficiency; to sate; to disgust; to feast or delight even to satiety.”

13 Therefore it came to pass that king Laman began to stir up his people that they should contend with my people; therefore there began to be wars and contentions in the land.

14 For, in the thirteenth year of my reign in the land of Nephi, away on the south of the land of Shilom, when my people were watering and feeding their flocks, and tilling their lands, a numerous host of Lamanites came upon them and began to slay them, and to take off their flocks, and the corn of their fields.

15 Yea, and it came to pass that they fled, all that were not overtaken, even into the city of Nephi, and did call upon me for protection.

verse 15 Note, again, that the terms “city of Nephi” and “city of Lehi-Nephi” are used interchangeably (see verse 8).

16 And it came to pass that I did arm them with bows, and with arrows, with swords, and with cimeters, and with clubs, and with slings, and with all manner of weapons which we could invent, and I and my people did go forth against the Lamanites to battle.

verse 16 What is a “cimeter”? It is probably a curved sword or saber which has its cutting edge on the convex side. Today it is more likely to be referred to as a “scimitar” or “scimiter.” The primary distinction between a cimeter and a sword is that the former has a curved blade. This spelling of the word “cimeter” is unique to the Book of Mormon (see the commentary for Enos 1:20).

17 Yea, in the strength of the Lord did we go forth to battle against the Lamanites; for I and my people did cry mightily to the Lord that he would deliver us out of the hands of our enemies, for we were awakened to a remembrance of the deliverance of our fathers.

verse 17 “my people did cry mightily to the Lord that he would deliver us out of the hands of our enemies” Regarding the pre-battle prayers of the Nephites, Gary L. Sturgess has written:

We do not know what “cry[ing] mightily to the Lord” meant, but it occurs so often in this context that we must understand it to be some kind of pre-battle ritual. Alma’s son Helaman wrote to [Captain] Moroni a decade or more after his father’s departure: “We trust God will deliver us, notwithstanding the weakness of our armies, yea, and deliver us out of the hands of our enemies” (Alma 58:37). There would also appear to have been a ritual thanksgiving after a victorious battle in which Jehovah was praised for delivering the people. Alma 45:1 records fasting and prayer, as well as a form of worship that involved great rejoicing, “because the Lord had again delivered them out of the hands of their enemies.” We find this same pattern of deliverance and rejoicing alluded to in Omni 1:6–7; Alma 49:28–30; 62:48–52; and 3 Nephi 4:28–33 (Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, volume 4, Number 2, 126).

“we were awakened to a remembrance of the deliverance of our fathers” This phrase should probably read “deliverances of our fathers” since Zeniff and his people had a few deliverances in their heritage. Lehi and his family were delivered from the impending destruction of Jerusalem. Nephi and others were delivered from the threats of Laman and Lemuel (2 Nephi 5). Mosiah, the father of Benjamin, had delivered the Nephites from the increasingly dangerous land of Nephi (Omni 1).

18 And God did hear our cries and did answer our prayers; and we did go forth in his might; yea, we did go forth against the Lamanites, and in one day and a night we did slay three thousand and forty-three; we did slay them even until we had driven them out of our land.

19 And I, myself, with mine own hands, did help to bury their dead. And behold, to our great sorrow and lamentation, two hundred and seventy-nine of our brethren were slain.

1 And it came to pass that we again began to establish the kingdom and we again began to possess the land in peace. And I caused that there should be weapons of war made of every kind, that thereby I might have weapons for my people against the time the Lamanites should come up again to war against my people.

verse 1 “we again began to establish the kingdom” This phrase does not have reference to the kingdom of God, but rather to the organization of the community of the Zeniffites under the leadership of Zeniff as their king.

2 And I set guards round about the land, that the Lamanites might not come upon us again unawares and destroy us; and thus I did guard my people and my flocks, and keep them from falling into the hands of our enemies.

3 And it came to pass that we did inherit the land of our fathers for many years, yea, for the space of twenty and two years.

verse 3 “we did inherit the land of our fathers for many years” We know that the Zeniffites lived in the land and city of Shilom and in the neighboring land and city of Nephi or Lehi-Nephi. At this early stage in their history, these two areas must not have been more than small settlements. We are not told the numbers of people that were involved. The Lamanites apparently lived in the neighboring land of Shemlon. Zeniff is likely a bit presumptuous when he writes that they did inherit the land. The word inherit implies divine intention which was probably lacking here (see the commentary for Mosiah 9:3).

4 And I did cause that the men should till the ground, and raise all manner of grain and all manner of fruit of every kind.

5 And I did cause that the women should spin, and toil, and work, and work all manner of fine linen, yea, and cloth of every kind, that we might clothe our nakedness; and thus we did prosper in the land—thus we did have continual peace in the land for the space of twenty and two years.

6 And it came to pass that king Laman died, and his son began to reign in his stead. And he began to stir his people up in rebellion against my people; therefore they began to prepare for war, and to come up to battle against my people.

7 But I had sent my spies out round about the land of Shemlon, that I might discover their preparations, that I might guard against them, that they might not come upon my people and destroy them.

8 And it came to pass that they came up upon the north of the land of Shilom, with their numerous hosts, men armed with bows, and with arrows, and with swords, and with cimeters, and with stones, and with slings; and they had their heads shaved that they were naked; and they were girded with a leathern girdle about their loins.

9 And it came to pass that I caused that the women and children of my people should be hid in the wilderness; and I also caused that all my old men that could bear arms, and also all my young men that were able to bear arms, should gather themselves together to go to battle against the Lamanites; and I did place them in their ranks, every man according to his age.

verse 9 “all my young men that were able to bear arms” The term “young men” in the Book of Mormon almost always refers to soldiers. In Hebrew culture, it appears that any male who had reached the age of twenty was responsible to render military service, though in a state of emergency perhaps those younger than twenty might be utilized (Warfare in the Book of Mormon, Edited by Stephen D. Ricks and William J. Hamblin, Deseret Book Company and FARMS, 66). Since Zeniff is mobilizing both the young men and the “old men,” he is obviously utilizing all available man power.

10 And it came to pass that we did go up to battle against the Lamanites; and I, even I, in my old age, did go up to battle against the Lamanites. And it came to pass that we did go up in the strength of the Lord to battle.

verse 10 “we did go up in the strength of the Lord to battle” Does the Lord really take sides in war? As we look back in our history, it seems obvious that the Lord’s purposes might have been thwarted, but for a key victory, in battle, of a more righteous people—World War II being a good example.

How might the Lord assist his people? It would seem that when two opposing forces collide in battle, providing one of the sides does not have an overwhelming technological or manpower edge, then the victory will go to the side that has genuine courage and a positive outlook about their chances for victory. Through the influence of the Spirit, the Lord can buoy up the fighting forces of a country.

11 Now, the Lamanites knew nothing concerning the Lord, nor the strength of the Lord, therefore they depended upon their own strength. Yet they were a strong people, as to the strength of men.

verses 12-17 “tradition of their fathers” In the Book of Mormon text we will often read of the Lamanites’ “tradition” or “traditions” of their fathers. These are the false oral traditions handed down by the Lamanites from generation to generation which formed the basis of the hatred which the Lamanites held toward the Nephites. All Lamanite children were doubtless indoctrinated with these traditions from the time they were able to understand. The central features of these traditions include:

1. Lehi was actually forced to leave Jerusalem because of his iniquities.

2. Lehi used unrighteous dominion in forcing his family to leave behind their choice possessions and their beloved home and land to travel into the wilderness.

3. Once in the wilderness, the family was unfairly dominated not only by their father Lehi, but also by their younger brother Nephi. The birthright or the right to govern, after all, rightfully belonged to the oldest son Laman and not to Nephi.

4. When Laman and Lemuel expressed fear of boarding a ship and sailing into the unknown sea, they received no understanding or sympathy. Rather they were forced to board the boat against their will.

5. Once in the New World in the land of their original settlement, the land of their “first inheritance,” Nephi continued to rule over them. When they tried to resist, Nephi stole their brass plates and departed into the wilderness.

The Nephites also had a set of unwritten traditions that were handed down. See the commentary for Enos 1:14.

12 They were a wild, and ferocious, and a blood-thirsty people, believing in the tradition of their fathers, which is this—Believing that they were driven out of the land of Jerusalem because of the iniquities of their fathers, and that they were wronged in the wilderness by their brethren, and they were also wronged while crossing the sea;

13 And again, that they were wronged while in the land of their first inheritance, after they had crossed the sea, and all this because that Nephi was more faithful in keeping the commandments of the Lord—therefore he was favored of the Lord, for the Lord heard his prayers and answered them, and he took the lead of their journey in the wilderness.

verses 12-13 In these two verses, the author Zeniff starts out his explanation of the traditions of the Lamanites’ fathers by speaking from the vantage point or perspective of the Lamanites. Then, he suddenly switches from the Lamanites’ perspective to his own more objective perspective between the words “sea” and “and” of verse 13. He maintains his own perspective through verse 17.

14 And his brethren were wroth with him because they understood not the dealings of the Lord; they were also wroth with him upon the waters because they hardened their hearts against the Lord.

verse 14 Wroth means very angry; exasperated.

“they hardened their hearts against the Lord” See the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

15 And again, they were wroth with him when they had arrived in the promised land, because they said that he had taken the ruling of the people out of their hands; and they sought to kill him.

verse 15 “he [Nephi] had taken the ruling of the people out of their hands”

The bitter resentment of Nephi’s older brothers may have had, in part, a cultural basis (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 16:37).

16 And again, they were wroth with him because he departed into the wilderness as the Lord had commanded him, and took the records which were engraven on the plates of brass, for they said that he robbed them.

verse 16 “they said that he had robbed them” This accusation against Nephi—that Nephi stole the plates of brass and the plates of Nephi from the Lamanites—of course, is ludicrous. One has but to recall Laman’s and Lemuel’s ignorance of and indifference toward spiritual matters to appreciate this.

17 And thus they have taught their children that they should hate them, and that they should murder them, and that they should rob and plunder them, and do all they could to destroy them; therefore they have an eternal hatred towards the children of Nephi.

verse 17 “they have taught their children that they should hate them” The Lamanites had utilized these erroneous “traditions of their fathers” as propaganda to brainwash or mislead their children into hating the Nephites. It is peculiar that Zeniff refers to the Nephites as “them,” though he and his people were all of Nephite descent.

Truly, the Lamanites had “eaten a sour grape, and [their] children’s teeth [were] set on edge” (Jeremiah 31:29).

18 For this very cause has king Laman, by his cunning, and lying craftiness, and his fair promises, deceived me, that I have brought this my people up into this land, that they may destroy them; yea, and we have suffered these many years in the land.

verse 18 Zeniff is speaking. Certainly Zeniff is not implying that king Laman had anything to do with Zeniff’s leading his people from Zarahemla to the land of Nephi initially. The idea for that migration seemed to be largely Zeniff’s. Rather, Zeniff implies that King Laman’s strategy in allowing the Zeniffites to occupy the lands of Lehi-Nephi and Shilom was to place the Nephites in a disadvantageous military strategic position where they might well fall under bondage to the surrounding Lamanites.

“his fair promises” Fair is an English word that has several possible meanings. The meaning which is most applicable here is “apparently favorable but really false; specious” (Webster’s New World Dictionary of the American Language, second college edition, 1970).

19 And now I, Zeniff, after having told all these things unto my people concerning the Lamanites, I did stimulate them to go to battle with their might, putting their trust in the Lord; therefore, we did contend with them, face to face.

20 And it came to pass that we did drive them again out of our land; and we slew them with a great slaughter, even so many that we did not number them.

21 And it came to pass that we returned again to our own land, and my people again began to tend their flocks, and to till their ground.

verse 21 There was no rejoicing after their victory. They had fought because they were attacked and were forced to defend themselves.

22 And now I, being old, did confer the kingdom upon one of my sons; therefore, I say no more. And may the Lord bless my people. Amen.

verse 22 We have no information to indicate Zeniff's age. Zeniff was succeeded as king of the people by his son Noah.

Mosiah Chapter 11

Mosiah 11-17 The preaching and martyrdom of Abinadi and the conversion of Alma.

A major subject in chapter 11 is the corruption of King Noah and the people in his kingdom. In the Book of Mormon, King Noah is the prototype of the wicked king just as Benjamin is the type of a righteous one. Whereas Benjamin brought great joy to his people as he taught them righteous principles, Noah brings sore afflictions and suffering to his people. This chapter documents and itemizes the sins of Noah's people which include: having many wives and concubines, doing all manner of wickedness, levying burdensome taxes which were used to support the extravagant lifestyle of Noah and his court, consecrating priests who were lazy and lifted up in pride, worshiping idols, enjoying whoredoms, speaking lying and vain words, placing their hearts upon riches, spending their time in riotous living, becoming wine bibbers, boasting of their own strength, and delighting in the shedding of blood.

At this time in the Book of Mormon, there are two parallel stories unfolding, one here in the Land of Lehi-Nephi and the other in the land of Zarahemla. So that the reader might maintain a reasonable orientation as to how one story relates temporarily to the other, let us briefly review the relative dates of the two locations.

First let's consider the land of Zarahemla. Recall that Mosiah led the Nephite peoples from the land of Nephi to the land of Zarahemla in about 210 BC. We are not given the date on which King Benjamin succeeded his father Mosiah on the throne but it was probably about 160 BC. Benjamin's farewell address and the succession of Benjamin's son Mosiah to the throne took place in about 124 BC.

Zeniff led a group of Nephite peoples from Zarahemla to the land of Lehi-Nephi in about 200 BC. Zeniff ruled over his people until he was succeeded by his son Noah in about 160 BC. Noah was killed and his son Limhi installed as puppet monarch in about 145 BC. Limhi and his people will be rescued and will return to the land of Zarahemla in about 121 BC. Alma will lead his people back to Zarahemla in about the same year.

Thus we learn that King Benjamin's speech was delivered only about three years before the return of King Limhi and his people and the return of Alma and his people to the land of Zarahemla.

1 And now it came to pass that Zeniff conferred the kingdom upon Noah, one of his sons; therefore Noah began to reign in his stead; and he did not walk in the ways of his father.

verse 1 Notice that between the final verse in chapter 10 and this first verse of chapter 11, the speaker or first person changes. In chapters 9 and 10, Zeniff is the first person. Beginning in chapter 11 Mormon becomes the first person. This illustrates Mormon's technique of abridgment. At times he lifted direct quotations or first person accounts out of the collection of records we call the large plates of Nephi, and at other times he limited himself to a simple abridgment of them, functioning himself as the first person.

2 For behold, he did not keep the commandments of God, but he did walk after the desires of his own heart. And he had many wives and concubines. And he did cause his people to commit sin, and do that which was abominable in the sight of the Lord. Yea, and they did commit whoredoms and all manner of wickedness.

verse 2 It is interesting to note that by this time the population of the Zeniffites was sufficiently large, that Noah could have "many wives." Presumably the concubines were women of a different culture. Perhaps they were Lamanites or women of other peoples who lived in the area of the land of Lehi-Nephi.

"he did cause his people to commit sin" Apparently his example of leadership and personal conduct gave license to his people to conduct, themselves similarly. This point is made repeatedly in this chapter (see also verses 6-7, 15, 19). People have a tendency to follow their leaders, and corrupt leaders bear some of the responsibility of the corruption of individuals under their influence.

For insight into and reasons why polygamy was a real problem, see the commentary for Jacob 2:30.

3 And he laid a tax of one fifth part of all they possessed, a fifth part of their gold and of their silver, and a fifth part of their ziff, and of their copper, and of their brass and their iron; and a fifth part of their fatlings; and also a fifth part of all their grain.

verse 3 By today's standards this 20% tax may not seem overly burdensome!

"ziff" It is interesting that "zeev" or its transliteration "ziff" is a Hebrew word which means something like "shining" or "brightness." Here it refers to some type of shiny metal.

The term "fatlings" may refer to any young animal (calf, kid, lamb, or pig) which is being fattened before being slaughtered.

4 And all this did he take to support himself, and his wives and his concubines; and also his priests, and their wives and their concubines; thus he had changed the affairs of the kingdom.

verse 4 "thus he had changed the affairs of the kingdom" Mormon makes something of an understatement.

5 For he put down all the priests that had been consecrated by his father, and consecrated new ones in their stead, such as were lifted up in the pride of their hearts.

verse 5 To “put down” apparently means to dismiss.

It is not clearly stated in the Book of Mormon whether or not Zeniff or any of his priests were properly ordained to the Melchizedek priesthood. We would presume that the priesthood authority did reside with Zeniff and his priests. We will later learn that Alma, one of King Noah’s priests, did possess “authority from God” (Mosiah 18:18). Alma had to have received his authority from an angel, from Abinadi, or from some other person holding the authority. It seems unlikely that the prophet Abinadi had an opportunity to ordain Alma before Abinadi’s martyrdom. Thus, it is likely that Alma and the other priests of King Noah did trace their authority back to Zeniff’s court.

6 Yea, and thus they were supported in their laziness, and in their idolatry, and in their whoredoms, by the taxes which king Noah had put upon his people; thus did the people labor exceedingly to support iniquity.

verse 6 “they were supported . . . in their whoredoms” Noah’s priests were guilty of more than just the unrighteous taking of many wives and concubines. Adultery was apparently among their several vices (see verse 14).

“thus did the people labor exceedingly” The record is unclear as to whether or not Noah’s people saw themselves as being oppressed. If this phrase was strictly Mormon’s editorial observation, then perhaps they did not. If, on the other hand, Mormon found in the record that the people described themselves as having to “labor exceedingly,” then it is likely that at least some of them viewed Noah’s leadership as oppressive.

We have already learned that the people themselves generally became wicked. This is an example of wicked leadership leading to a corrupt following (see also verse 20).

7 Yea, and they also became idolatrous, because they were deceived by the vain and flattering words of the king and priests; for they did speak flattering things unto them.

verse 7 “they were deceived by the vain and flattering words of the king and priests” Tyrannical governments throughout history have been able to maintain control of their people by appealing to their vanity. Two common ways to do this include: (1) building large and lavish buildings and monuments that ostensibly display the greatness and prestige of the land, and (2) seeking military conquests that supposedly demonstrate the superiority of the land over others. Note in the following verses how King Noah used these very techniques to flatter his people (see especially verses 8-10, 12-13, and 16-19).

For a discussion of the various forms of the word flatter, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 28:22.

8 And it came to pass that king Noah built many elegant and spacious buildings; and he ornamented them with fine work of wood, and of all manner of precious things, of gold, and of silver, and of iron, and of brass, and of ziff, and of copper;

verse 8 “and he ornamented them with . . . iron” Today we do not consider iron a decorative metal. John W. Welch has pointed out that in ancient Palestine iron was difficult to obtain and the product of a difficult production technique. It was therefore highly prized and utilized for decoration. Items were not of solid iron but were plated, veneered, or studded with the metal (see also 2 Nephi 5:15; Jarom 1:8; Ether 10:23) (“Decorative Iron in Early Israel,” in Reexploring the Book of Mormon, 133-34).

9 And he also built him a spacious palace, and a throne in the midst thereof, all of which was of fine wood and was ornamented with gold and silver and with precious things.

verses 10-11 The description of Noah’s temple, which follows, leaves one with an empty feeling. It was obviously a worldly place wherein no true temple worship occurred. It was more the symbol of worldly success—on which the working classes might look with pride—than a place of honest worship.

10 And he also caused that his workmen should work all manner of fine work within the walls of the temple, of fine wood, and of copper, and of brass.

verse 10 It seems likely that Zeniff had previously restored the temple originally built by Nephi and his people over four-hundred years previously (2 Nephi 5:16).

11 And the seats which were set apart for the high priests, which were above all the other seats, he did ornament with pure gold; and he caused a breastwork to be built before them, that they might rest their bodies and their arms upon while they should speak lying and vain words to his people.

verse 11 It is interesting to note that in Noah’s court there were “high priests.” In its many other occurrences in the Book of Mormon text, the term “high priest” seems to refer to an office resembling the high priest in ancient Israel. Usually there was only one at a time. An example is the elder Alma (Mosiah 23:16; 26:7). Later on, in the Book of Mormon, perhaps because of the size of the Church, it seems to have been necessary to have more than one high priest (Alma 30:20-21). Apparently, these were regional high priests who functioned under the direction of the chief high priest in Zarahemla who was the younger Alma (Alma 30:29; 46:6, 38; Helaman 3:25; 3 Nephi 6:21-22, 27). Why is it that Noah apparently had more than one high priest? Perhaps this was just another of the many apostate features of his court. The title high priest does not appear in the Nephite record after the coming of Christ.

12 And it came to pass that he built a tower near the temple; yea, a very high tower, even so high that he could stand upon the top thereof and overlook the land of Shilom, and also the land of Shemlon, which was possessed by the Lamanites; and he could even look over all the land round about.

verse 12 Keep in mind that the Nephites occupied the lands of Lehi-Nephi and Shilom, while the Lamanites occupied the neighboring land of Shemlon. See the Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands. See also the supplemental article, Notes on the Hypothetical Map of the Book of Mormon Lands.

13 And it came to pass that he caused many buildings to be built in the land Shilom; and he caused a great tower to be built on the hill north of the land Shilom, which had been a resort for the children of Nephi at the time they fled out of the land; and thus he did do with the riches which he obtained by the taxation of his people.

verse 13 “he caused a great tower to be built on the hill north of the land Shilom” Note that Noah built at least two towers, the one described in this verse and the one in the city of Lehi-Nephi near the temple.

“which had been a resort for the children of Nephi at the time they fled out of the land” Apparently a hill north of the land of Shilom was regarded as the traditional site where the Nephites, led by Mosiah, stopped to rest as they fled out of the land of Nephi a few decades previously. The word resort can refer to a resting place or a place that is frequently visited.

14 And it came to pass that he placed his heart upon his riches, and he spent his time in riotous living with his wives and his concubines; and so did also his priests spend their time with harlots.

verse 14 One cannot help but contrast Noah’s “style” with that of King Benjamin who “labor[ed] with [his] own hands that [he] might serve [his people], and that [they] should not be laden with taxes” (Mosiah 2:14).

15 And it came to pass that he planted vineyards round about in the land; and he built wine-presses, and made wine in abundance; and therefore he became a wine-bibber, and also his people.

verse 15 “he built wine-presses, and made wine in abundance; and therefore he became a wine-bibber” Some scholars have faulted Joseph Smith for references in the Book of Mormon to wine in the New World. These scholars assure us that wine produced from grapes—which is the usual meaning of the word wine—was never made nor used in the Americas. However, the Book of Mormon makes no reference to grapes, although it does, as in this verse, mention “vineyards.” Some other sort of wine could have been so labeled by the Nephites. When the Spaniards arrived in Mesoamerica, they spoke about several kinds of native “wines.” An intoxicating drink was commonly manufactured by fermenting a mixture of water, a certain tree bark, and honey. Other groups fermented juices drawn from the agave plant, bananas, pineapples, or the heart of certain palm trees. To all of these, the Europeans applied the term wine (see documentation in Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, 186-87). Further, the Spaniards spoke of native plantings of the agave cactus (from which the drink balche was made) as “vineyards” (see J.E.S. Thompson, ed., Tomas Gage’s Travels in the New World [Norman: University of Oklahoma Press, 1958], 76).

So, Joseph Smith’s use of the terms wine and vineyards in the translation of the Book of Mormon has proved to be no mistake, whether some non-grape fruit was used or, as Joseph himself probably assumed, Nephite wine was made from grapes by a process like that used by European settlers in the early United States. The grape plant has now been identified from an archaeological site in the Mexican state of Chiapas that dates to the Nephite period. The archaeologist making the discovery presumed that the ancient people made wine from the fruit (see Alejandro Claudio Martinez Muriel, “Don Martin, Chiapas: inferencias economico-sociales de una comunidad arqueologica” [master’s theses, Escuela Nacional de Antropologia e Historia, and Universidad Nacional Autonoma de Mexico, 1978], 105, 120, 125).

Joseph L. Allen has suggested that in Mesoamerica “the wine was probably made from the maguey plant or from other similar plants. The maguey plant is a relative of the century plant and has a large center with the appearance of a giant pineapple. The unfermented pulp juice is processed into tequila or mescal” (Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon, 174).

The Book of Mormon itself never actually mentions grapes, but it does mention “wine-presses” (only once, Mosiah 11:15) (2 Nephi 15:2 is a quotation of Isaiah 5:2), perhaps indicating grape-based wine. American species of grapes were known to grow in the Gulf Coast and Yucatan areas, and some natives in northern Mexico reportedly made red wine from native grapes (Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex, 307).

There is no question that grapes and vineyards can grow in a number of areas throughout North and South America, including near Guatemala City where the Chateau DeFay winery and vineyards were established in 2008. So, it is possible that either the Lehites or the Mulekites brought grape vines with them, which were then cultivated amongst Book of Mormon peoples. There is also some evidence that the Old World grape was known and used for winemaking at one site in Chiapas, Mexico dating to between the first centuries BC and AD. John L. Sorenson explained: “Our understanding of wine in ancient Mesoamerica was enhanced 30 years ago when Martínez M. excavated a site of Late Pre-Classic date (first centuries BC and AD) beside the Grijalva River in Chiapas. . . There he carefully recovered and studied all traces of plant remains. He found seeds of Vitis vinifera, the wine grape known in Europe, from which he concluded that the fruit had been used to manufacture wine equivalent to that of the Old World (Sorenson, Mormon's Codex, 307–308. Sorenson is citing Alejandro C. Martínez Muriel, “Don Martín, Chiapas: Inferencias económico-sociales de una comunidad arqueológica,” thesis, Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México, 1978, 102ff., 125).

Sorenson then concluded, “Thus the Book of Mormon statements about wine could turn out to refer either to that drink in the usual European sense or to alternative Mesoamerican intoxicants that were based on other fruits” (Sorenson, Mormon's Codex, 308).

Based on the above evidence, the production and use of wine in the Book of Mormon is not problematic from a historical standpoint. Without more information, however, it is impossible to be certain what kind of beverage “wine” meant in the Book of Mormon. It is likely that many, if not all, of these fermented beverages were known and used by Book of Mormon peoples, and “wine” may very well have been a catch-all term for all the varieties of alcoholic drinks available to them.

Still, being aware of the different possibilities invites questions perhaps never before considered. For example, visualize that sacred moment when the risen Lord asked the disciples to retrieve both bread and wine for the sacrament (3 Nephi 18:1–3, 8), and then shortly thereafter Lord Himself miraculously provided wine and bread for a second performance of that sacred ritual (3 Nephi 20:5–8). Was the miraculous wine from the Savior the same variety of wine the disciples brought? If not, why not?

Although speculative, one possible answer is that perhaps the available native wine was a different color and did not strongly enough symbolize the blood of Christ (Agave, banana, and pineapple all, unsurprisingly, produce a yellowish or cider colored wine.). While accepting the disciples' humble offer the first time, for the second occasion Christ may have chosen to miraculously produce traditional red wine from the Old World in order to more strongly convey to them His important teaching, “he that drinketh of this wine drinketh of my blood to his soul; and his soul shall never hunger nor thirst, but shall be filled” (3 Nephi 20:8).

This could have provided a powerful visual for Nephites accustomed to drinking yellowish colored wines. Even if this is not the case, being aware of the different possible types of wine allows readers to better visualize Book of Mormon life. This is especially insightful with wine, since it is so frequently mentioned within the text of the Book of Mormon.

16 And it came to pass that the Lamanites began to come in upon his people, upon small numbers, and to slay them in their fields, and while they were tending their flocks.

17 And king Noah sent guards round about the land to keep them off; but he did not send a sufficient number, and the Lamanites came upon them and killed them, and drove many of their flocks out of the land; thus the Lamanites began to destroy them, and to exercise their hatred upon them.

18 And it came to pass that king Noah sent his armies against them, and they were driven back, or they drove them back for a time; therefore, they returned rejoicing in their spoil.

verse 18 King Noah sent his armies against the Lamanites. At times the Nephites were driven back by the Lamanites. On other occasions the Nephites were able to temporarily gain advantage over the Lamanites. On these occasions, the forces of Noah would return home exulting over their “victories”—albeit very temporary ones.

19 And now, because of this great victory they were lifted up in the pride of their hearts; they did boast in their own strength, saying that their fifty could stand against thousands of the Lamanites; and thus they did boast, and did delight in blood, and the shedding of the blood of their brethren, and this because of the wickedness of their king and priests.

verse 19 Mormon seems to use the expression “great victory” here with some sarcasm. He seems to be making a mockery out of the Nephites’ arrogance.

“Their fifty could stand against thousands of the Lamanites” There are some suggestions in the Book of Mormon that the Nephite military structure was based on the “decimal system,” that is, the size of the military units were multiples of one hundred. In this case one-half of one hundred. This system was found in Palestine at the time Lehi and his family left there.

There are references to units of . . . thousands (see Alma 43:5; 60:22; 3 Nephi 3:22), and ten thousand (see Mormon 6:10-15). In only Israelite-sized units, not specifically mentioned in Nephite-Lamanite organizations, are formations of tens and hundreds. Possibly these also existed among Book of Mormon people but were not mentioned because of their relative unimportance and because they comprised part of other units, like fifties and thousands. Units of ten thousand are most frequently mentioned in the Book of Mormon, at least after the time of the judges (ca. 91 BC). Use of the larger units may have resulted from increasing population and hence the increased ability or need to support larger armies. The earlier battles speak of units of fifty and thousands (see Mosiah 11:19; Alma 43:5), while later battles speak more of thousands and tens of thousands (see 3 Nephi 4:21) (A. Brent Merrill, “Nephite Captains and Armies” in Warfare in the Book of Mormon, edited by Stephen D. Ricks and William J. Hamblin, 268-69).

20 And it came to pass that there was a man among them whose name was Abinadi; and he went forth among them, and began to prophesy, saying: Behold, thus saith the Lord, and thus hath he commanded me, saying, Go forth, and say unto this people, thus saith the Lord—Wo be unto this people, for I have seen their abominations, and their wickedness, and their whoredoms; and except they repent I will visit them in mine anger.

verse 20 Here is a new character, who has not previously appeared in the Book of Mormon. He is Abinadi. We have no information as to his origin, though it is interesting to speculate. Did he come up to the land of Nephi with Zeniff? Or did he come up from Zarahemla on his own? Was he born in the land of Nephi? Obviously we don't know. He knew the scriptures and therefore must have encountered the plates of brass in Zarahemla. He is a vital figure in the Book of Mormon and a great prophet. He will eventually give his life for the gospel. His doctrinal teachings as contained in Mosiah chapters 12 through 16 are invaluable. He apparently operated alone, and we know for certain of only one convert that resulted from his teachings, the man Alma. Abinadi thus set the stage for most of the remainder of the Book of Mormon story which consists of Alma's establishing the church or kingdom on the American continent.

In our mind's eye, we usually picture Abinadi as an old man, thin and weather-beaten, and he may well have been. This bias has probably resulted largely from the well-known depiction of him by the artist Arnold Friberg. It is notable, however, that there is nothing in the text of the Book of Mormon that tells us anything about his age or physical characteristics.

One author has compared him to John the Baptist (Rodney Turner, Studies in Scripture, volume seven, 1 Nephi to Alma 29, Deseret Book: Salt Lake City, 240- 41). The similarities between Abinadi and John the Baptist are interesting. Abinadi, like John, preached to a people whose religious orientation was toward the law of Moses. He (Abinadi) preached of the Messiah to come, although he actually knew little about that Messiah. He preached repentance and warned of the impending judgments of God. Both Abinadi and the Baptist were opposed by the religious and secular leaders of their day, and both died violent deaths at their hands. Both served as "transitional" prophets who provided the link between the old covenant and the new covenant—the law of Moses and the Gospel of Christ. Thus, they both served as "Eliases," preparing the way for the mortal advent of the Messiah.

Elder Jeffrey R. Holland has pointed out that Abinadi is also one of the most extensively developed types or shadows or prophetic prefigurations of the Savior in the Book of Mormon (Christ and the New Covenant, chapter 8). Consider the following foreshadowing links and parallel possibilities between Abinadi, the first Book of Mormon martyr and Christ, the last and great sacrifice:

1. Both were called to preach repentance to those sinning, and both were rejected.
2. They were bound and taken before religious priests and political rulers.
3. They were cross-examined.
4. Both were dismissed as being mad.
5. They spoke with power and authority.
6. Neither could be slain until their message or mission was completed.
7. Abinadi was imprisoned for three days, while Christ was “entombed” for three days.
8. They were both condemned for blasphemy, and they would not recall their words.
9. In their deaths, innocent blood was shed.
10. In both cases a leader was tempted to release them, but both leaders yielded to detractors and delivered them to be slain.
11. Yet another conspicuous irony is that both died lamenting that those who claimed a belief in the law of Moses could not recognize the messianic teachings contained therein, let alone discern the Messiah himself, toward which that law, in its purity, had always been directed.

21 And except they repent and turn to the Lord their God, behold, I will deliver them into the hands of their enemies; yea, and they shall be brought into bondage; and they shall be afflicted by the hand of their enemies.

verse 21 In this verse, Abinadi is still speaking for the Lord (see verse 20). Here is the essence of Abinadi’s warning to the people: Repent or be taken into bondage by your enemies. Perhaps this bondage is both temporal and spiritual. As one considers the history of the house of Israel, it becomes apparent that no segment of Israel has ever been placed in bondage to their enemies (1) without being warned by prophets whom the Lord has raised up for that express purpose, and (2) without “earning” and deserving their captivity by virtue of their disobedience and wickedness.

22 And it shall come to pass that they shall know that I am the Lord their God, and am a jealous God, visiting the iniquities of my people.

verse 22 “I am . . . a jealous God” Abinadi continues speaking the words of the Lord, and he will continue to do so through verse 25. This phrase means that the Lord is not willing to share a person’s devotion. He asks that we direct all our allegiance to him and to no other.

“visiting the iniquities of my people” When the Lord “visits” an individual’s iniquities upon him, he punishes that person for his evil doings. This expression is found elsewhere in the scriptures (Jeremiah 23:2; Exodus 20:5; 34:7; Deuteronomy 5:9; Numbers 14:18; Exodus 34:7; see also Mosiah 13:3).

23 And it shall come to pass that except this people repent and turn unto the Lord their God, they shall be brought into bondage; and none shall deliver them, except it be the Lord the Almighty God.

24 Yea, and it shall come to pass that when they shall cry unto me I will be slow to hear their cries; yea, and I will suffer them that they be smitten by their enemies.

25 And except they repent in sackcloth and ashes, and cry mightily to the Lord their God, I will not hear their prayers, neither will I deliver them out of their afflictions; and thus saith the Lord, and thus hath he commanded me.

verses 23-25 These prophecies were, of course, fulfilled. The Nephites under King Limhi, Noah's son and successor, will live in virtually complete captivity to the Lamanites.

verse 25 "sackcloth and ashes" This expression is symbolic of true contrition and repentance. Sackcloth is a coarse, dark-colored cloth traditionally worn, in Hebrew culture, by those in mourning. Such a person would also often scatter ashes upon himself as another gesture of humility (Isaiah 58:5; Daniel 9:3; Matthew 11:21).

26 Now it came to pass that when Abinadi had spoken these words unto them they were wroth with him, and sought to take away his life; but the Lord delivered him out of their hands.

verse 26 The people were wroth or angry with Abinadi. Abinadi's message had thrown a damper on the celebratory mood of the Nephites who were celebrating the shedding of Lamanite blood just prior to his arrival. His message obviously angered his listeners, who by now were blood thirsty. Note that it was not just Noah and his priests who rejected Abinadi and his teachings, but the people of Noah as well.

27 Now when king Noah had heard of the words which Abinadi had spoken unto the people, he was also wroth; and he said: Who is Abinadi, that I and my people should be judged of him, or who is the Lord, that shall bring upon my people such great affliction?

verse 27 "who is the Lord" King Noah was not the first to ask this question. It was also asked by Cain the notorious son of Adam (Genesis 5:4) and by Pharaoh, the captor of Hebrews in Egypt (Exodus 5:2). It is a most heretical and blasphemous question, as its meaning is something like: "Who does he think he is, anyway?"

28 I command you to bring Abinadi hither, that I may slay him, for he has said these things that he might stir up my people to anger one with another, and to raise contentions among my people; therefore I will slay him.

29 Now the eyes of the people were blinded; therefore they hardened their hearts against the words of Abinadi, and they sought from that time forward to take him. And king Noah hardened his heart against the word of the Lord, and he did not repent of his evil doings.

verse 29 Though Noah and his people sought the life of Abinadi, the Lord allowed him to escape. He will return two years later in disguise. Where he went during these two years is not stated. Perhaps he returned to Zarahemla.

“they hardened their hearts against the words of Abinadi” See the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

Mosiah Chapter 12

Chapters 12 through 16 contain the eloquent warnings and preachings of Abinadi to King Noah's people and to his court. One might wonder how we happen to have a record of these preachings since Abinadi was preaching in a hostile environment in which very few believed his words, and he was martyred immediately after delivering his message. Who recorded his words? We will later learn that Alma made the record (see Mosiah 17:4).

Abinadi would have wanted to come into the city of Nephi to preach at a time when there was a large group of people gathered together to hear his message. A festival day would have been the ideal time for Abinadi to return and share the message of judgment the Lord wanted the people, and King Noah in particular, to hear. The most appropriate festival day to share this message of judgment would have been the feast of Pentecost / Weeks, the day that the Law was celebrated. Pentecost was a pilgrimage festival that took place in the spring, the fiftieth day after Passover, which celebrated the giving of the Law to Moses on Mount Sinai (see Exodus 34:22; Deuteronomy 16:10). Pentecost was a time when all the people gathered at the temple to celebrate the first grain harvest and to commemorate the deliverance from bondage in Egypt as well.

According to LDS scholars John W. Welch, Gordon C. Thomasson, and Robert F. Smith: "Both of Abinadi's speeches [Mosiah 11 and Mosiah 12-16] deal with the themes of Pentecost. He reversed the festival's blessings and rejoicing, and turned them into curses and predictions of gloom. At the time when a bounteous grain season would have been at hand, Abinadi cursed the crops . . . (Mosiah 12:6). While Israel's deliverance from bondage was traditionally being celebrated, Abinadi called upon Exodus terminology to proclaim the bondage and burdens would return to the wicked people in the city of Nephi. . . (Mosiah 11:21, 23) . . . (John W. Welch, Gordon C. Thomasson, and Robert F. Smith, "Abinadi and Pentecost," in Reexploring the Book of Mormon, ed. John W. Welch (Salt Lake City: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1992), 136).

Brothers Welch, Thomasson, and Smith go on to point out a number of very interesting parallels between Abinadi's prophetic mission and the festival of Pentecost, including the following points:

- The giving of the Ten Commandments: At a time when the priests of King Noah would have been celebrating and pledging allegiance to the Ten Commandments given to Moses, Abinadi rehearses those commandments and accuses them of not teaching, living, or even understanding them properly (Mosiah 12:27–37).
- Shining face: Abinadi's "face shone with exceeding luster, even as Moses' did while in the mount of Sinai" (Mosiah 13:5, compare Exodus 34:29–30).

- Three days: The festival of Pentecost apparently lasted for three days (see Exodus 19:11), which may be the reason Abinadi's trial was postponed for three days (Mosiah 17:6).

- Psalms 50 and 81: Hebrew University professor Moshe Weinfeld argued that Psalms 50 and 81 were likely sung at Pentecost (Moshe Weinfeld, "The Decalogue in Israel's Tradition," in Religion and Law: Biblical / Judaic and Islamic Perspectives, ed. Edwin Firmage, Bernard Weiss, and John Welch, Winona Lake, Indiana: Eisenbrauns, 1990, 38-47). There are several parallels between the text of Abinadi's words and these psalms (For the complete treatment of parallels between Psalm 50 and Abinadi's words, see Welch, et al., "Abinadi and Pentecost," 137–138. For a chart listing the many parallels between Pentecost and Abinadi's words, see "Did Abinadi Prophecy against King Noah on Pentecost?" in John W. Welch and J. Gregory Welch, Charting the Book of Mormon, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1999, chart 124).

- "Our God shall come" (Psalm 50:3); on "the third day the Lord will come down" (Exodus 19:11); "God himself shall come down" (Mosiah 15:1).

- Psalm 50:4–7 has been described as God's lawsuit against his people; Abinadi's words have been called a "prophetic lawsuit" (See Richard McGuire, "Prophetic Lawsuits in the Hebrew Bible and Book of Mormon," Provo, UT: FARMS, 1983).

- In order to teach the law, one must keep it or be cursed (Psalm 50:16, 22); this is the essence of Abinadi's accusation: "If ye teach the law of Moses why do ye not keep it?" (Mosiah 12:29).

- Psalm 50:15 promises that "in the day of trouble," if the righteous will call upon God, He "will deliver" them. Abinadi declares that if the wicked people of King Noah call upon God, He "will not hear their prayers, neither will [He] deliver them" (Mosiah 11:25) (John W. Welch, The Legal Cases in the Book of Mormon, Provo, UT: BYU Press and the Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2008, 192).

- The use of Psalm 50:16-21 at Pentecost could indicate that the day became known as one of stern admonition. People who rejected instruction and collaborated with lawbreakers were chastised. Transgressors were reprimanded publicly. These traditions align with the way in which Abinadi approached the delivery of the Lord's message to King Noah (Welch, The Legal Cases, 192).

- "I am the Lord thy God, who hath brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage" (Exodus 20:2). These words of the Lord to Moses on Sinai are echoed in both Psalm 81:10 and Mosiah 12:34.

Ultimately, Abinadi was wrongfully put to death, even by fire, having in the beginning issued a similar curse against Noah that Noah's life "shall be valued even as a garment in a hot furnace" (Mosiah 12:3). On Pentecost, it could not have escaped anyone's notice that this reference to a "furnace" hearkened back to Mount Sinai. It was covered with lightning, fire and smoke "as the smoke of a furnace" (Exodus 19:18), as Moses went up into the mount to speak with God, while the unworthy people stayed below "lest [the Lord] break forth upon them" and consume them with fire.

As BYU Professor of Law John W. Welch concludes: "Taken together, these details all point to one conclusion: No other day on the ancient Israelite calendar fits the message, words, and experience of the prophet Abinadi more precisely or more appropriately than does the ancient Israelite festival of Pentecost. It is thus ironic that, at the very time when Noah and his people would have been celebrating the law, the most unfortunate judicial result in Nephite history should have taken place" (Welch, The Legal Cases, 193).

verses 1-7 Notice that the nature of Abinadi's warning has changed. No longer is he saying, "Repent or be taken into bondage." It is too late for Noah's people to avoid captivity. The time for repentance is past. Abinadi is no longer issuing warnings of consequences that can be avoided. He was now delivering unconditional pronouncements of impending destruction: "You shall be visited by the Lord in his anger."

In these verses, we learn the fiery quality of Abinadi's speech. He uses colorful and descriptive phrases and metaphors that are unique to the Book of Mormon and unique to the prophet Abinadi. Examples include: "king Noah shall be valued even as a garment in a hot furnace" (verse 3), "I will cause that they shall howl all the day long" (verse 4), and "they shall have burdens lashed upon their backs; and they shall be driven before like a dumb ass" (verse 5).

1 And it came to pass that after the space of two years that Abinadi came among them in disguise, that they knew him not, and began to prophesy among them, saying: Thus has the Lord commanded me, saying—Abinadi, go and prophesy unto this my people, for they have hardened their hearts against my words; they have repented not of their evil doings; therefore, I will visit them in my anger, yea, in my fierce anger will I visit them in their iniquities and abominations.

verse 1 It would be a shame if we could not maintain a twinkle in our eye as we read the scriptures. There is a bit of slap-stick comedy in this verse which should not be missed. Enter Abinadi in a clever disguise—perhaps false mustache and wig—feeling smug because no one recognizes him. Then his CIA training lets him down when he announces to King Noah's people, "Thus has the Lord commanded me, saying, Abinadi, go and prophesy . . ." oops!

verses 2-12 In these verses, the Lord, speaking through his prophet Abinadi, curses king Noah because of his great wickedness. Following the Lord's command, Abinadi stretches forth his hand, introduces his words with the phrase "Thus saith the Lord," and pronounces three curses upon Noah's head. These three curses are given in a form characteristic of Hebrew cultural tradition. They are “simile curses.” A simile curse combines the elements of a simile (a comparison of two things or a resemblance, marked with like or as) with a curse.

An example of an Old Testament simile curse appears in 1 Kings 14, which registers Jeroboam’s evil deeds and idolatries in verses 7-8: “Therefore, behold, I [the Lord] will bring evil upon the house of Jeroboam . . . and will take away the remnant of the house of Jeroboam, as a man taketh away dung, till it be all gone.” Note the simile marker as, which connects the two points of comparison (house of Jeroboam and dung) to graphically portray the manner whereby the remnant of Jeroboam’s family will be exiled.

In another example, in 2 Kings 21:12-13, the Lord curses Judah’s king Manasseh, members of the tribe of Judah, and Jerusalem for their considerable iniquities. The curse compares the destruction of Jerusalem and Judah to the cleaning of a dirty dish: “Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Behold, I am bringing such evil upon Jerusalem and Judah, that whosoever heareth of it, both his ears shall tingle. . . . I will wipe Jerusalem as a man wipeth a dish, wiping it, and turning it upside down.”

Given the Hebrew roots of the Book of Mormon, the presence of simile curses should not be surprising to those of us who believe in the book as an authentic ancient record. For those who believe otherwise, the presence of simile curses is difficult to explain, since not many examples of simile curses appear in the Old Testament, and it is doubtful that Joseph Smith was aware of their form or setting in scripture. The simile curses in the Book of Mormon provide additional indication that the Book of Mormon was indeed framed in antiquity (see the supplemental article, Evidences of the Book of Mormon).

2 Yea, wo be unto this generation! And the Lord said unto me: Stretch forth thy hand and prophesy, saying: Thus saith the Lord, it shall come to pass that this generation, because of their iniquities, shall be brought into bondage, and shall be smitten on the cheek; yea, and shall be driven by men, and shall be slain; and the vultures of the air, and the dogs, yea, and the wild beasts, shall devour their flesh.

verse 2 As we will learn, Noah and his adherents will eventually be driven and smitten and brought into captivity by the Lamanites and also by some of their own people (see Mosiah 19:20).

If, indeed, the Book of Mormon story did take place in Central America, then what might be the “wild beasts” spoken of in this verse? One carnivorous wild beast indigenous to that area is the jaguar.

3 And it shall come to pass that the life of king Noah shall be valued even as a garment in a hot furnace; for he shall know that I am the Lord.

verse 3 “the life of king Noah shall be valued even as a garment in a hot furnace” (italics added) Note the form of the simile curse here. See the commentary for verses 2-12 above. See also a reiteration of this simile curse in verse 10

“for he shall know that I am the Lord” Here is the Lord’s rejoinder to Noah’s blasphemous question in Mosiah 11:27: “Who is the Lord, that shall bring upon my people such great affliction.”

4 And it shall come to pass that I will smite this my people with sore afflictions, yea, with famine and with pestilence; and I will cause that they shall howl all the day long.

5 Yea, and I will cause that they shall have burdens lashed upon their backs; and they shall be driven before like a dumb ass.

verse 5 “they shall be driven before *like a dumb ass” (italics mine) Again, the form of a simile curse.

6 And it shall come to pass that I will send forth hail among them, and it shall smite them; and they shall also be smitten with the east wind; and insects shall pester their land also, and devour their grain.

7 And they shall be smitten with a great pestilence—and all this will I do because of their iniquities and abominations.

verses 6-7 See the discussion on the concept of the “east wind” in the commentary for Mosiah 7:31.

8 And it shall come to pass that except they repent I will utterly destroy them from off the face of the earth; yet they shall leave a record behind them, and I will preserve them for other nations which shall possess the land; yea, even this will I do that I may discover the abominations of this people to other nations. And many things did Abinadi prophesy against this people.

verse 8 “except they repent I will utterly destroy them from off the face of the earth” Abinadi was addressing the people of King Noah yet this prophecy seems to apply to a broader group of Book of Mormon people. The fulfillment of this prophecy will occur in the early fifth century when the Nephite people were annihilated, or nearly so, by the Lamanites. The people of Noah were never actually destroyed “from off the face of the earth.”

“I will preserve them for other nations” The construction here is unusual. The antecedent for the plural pronoun “them” is the singular noun “record.”

“that I may discover the abominations of this people to other nations” The meaning intended for the verb “discover” here is an archaic one—to uncover, reveal, or disclose.

9 And it came to pass that they were angry with him; and they took him and carried him bound before the king, and said unto the king: Behold, we have brought a man before thee who has prophesied evil concerning thy people, and saith that God will destroy them.

10 And he also prophesieth evil concerning thy life, and saith that thy life shall be as a garment in a furnace of fire.

11 And again, he saith that thou shalt be as a stalk, even as a dry stalk of the field, which is run over by the beasts and trodden under foot [emphasis added].

verse 11 Here is the third of the four simile curses (see the commentary for verses 2-12 above). Don’t fail to notice the delicious imagery present in this verse.

12 And again, he saith thou shalt be as the blossoms of a thistle, which, when it is fully ripe, if the wind bloweth, it is driven forth upon the face of the land. And he pretendeth the Lord hath spoken it. And he saith all this shall come upon thee except thou repent, and this because of thine iniquities.

verses 10-12 “he saith thou shalt be as the blossoms of a thistle, which, when it is fully ripe, if the wind bloweth, it is driven forth upon the face of the land” (emphasis mine) Here is the last of the four simile curses pronounced by Abinadi.

In these verses, Noah’s people report to their king a few unflattering metaphors that Abinadi has been using in accusing and condemning King Noah. These include “a garment in a furnace of fire,” “a dumb ass,” “a dry stalk of the field,” and “blossoms of a thistle.” We have record, here in Mosiah 12, of Abinadi’s using only the first two of these four (see verses 3, 5). Alma, in recording his record of this event and in later summarizing the preaching of Abinadi (or perhaps the prophet editor himself, Mormon) omitted the latter two, but there is no reason to doubt that Abinadi utilized these latter two in his fiery rhetoric.

13 And now, O king, what great evil hast thou done, or what great sins have thy people committed, that we should be condemned of God or judged of this man?

verse 13 What great sins indeed! Review the rather long list contained in the introduction to Mosiah chapter 11.

14 And now, O king, behold, we are guiltless, and thou, O king, hast not sinned; therefore, this man has lied concerning you, and he has prophesied in vain.

verse 14 “he has prophesied in vain” Abinadi is accused of being a false prophet. According to Hebrew law, a false prophet is guilty of a capital crime and deserves execution.

15 And behold, we are strong, we shall not come into bondage, or be taken captive by our enemies; yea, and thou hast prospered in the land, and thou shalt also prosper.

verse 15 “thou shalt also prosper” This phrase means thou shalt yet prosper in the future.

16 Behold, here is the man, we deliver him into thy hands; thou mayest do with him as seemeth thee good.

17 And it came to pass that king Noah caused that Abinadi should be cast into prison; and he commanded that the priests should gather themselves together that he might hold a council with them what he should do with him.

18 And it came to pass that they said unto the king: Bring him hither that we may question him; and the king commanded that he should be brought before them.

19 And they began to question him, that they might cross him, that thereby they might have wherewith to accuse him; but he answered them boldly, and withstood all their questions, yea, to their astonishment; for he did withstand them in all their questions, and did confound them in all their words.

verse 19 “that they might cross him” That they might ensnare him by causing him to contradict himself.

“for he did withstand them in all their questions” Although this phrase says that Abinadi did answer all their questions, in our Book of Mormon text we have record of only one question which a priest of Noah asked and which Abinadi answered. This question is found in the next five verses—20 through 24. What were the other questions? The fact that we do not have an account of others is evidence that either the prophet Mormon did not include Alma’s entire account (Mosiah 17:4) of the prophet Abinadi when he engraved his abridgment upon the plates of Mormon, or perhaps that Alma himself omitted parts of the story of Abinadi.

20 And it came to pass that one of them said unto him: What meaneth the words which are written, and which have been taught by our fathers, saying:

verse 20 “one of them said unto him” Do you suppose this questioning priest could have been Alma? Whoever he was, he asked Abinadi to explain the meaning of four verses from chapter 52 of Isaiah, verses 7-10. These verses contain prophetic material that deals with a time period in the last days just prior to the Millennium. They foretell the gathering of the house of Israel. By what line of reasoning do you suppose this questioning priest might have been seeking to “cross” or ensnare Abinadi (see verse 19)? The priest might have been saying: “The message of gloom and doom which you have just delivered is inappropriate and incompatible with the scripture. Look here at this inspired message by Isaiah in which he foretells a bright future wherein the Lord’s servants will proclaim the good tidings. How do you explain this?” Perhaps he hoped to catch Abinadi in conflict with the scripture and thereby convict him of false prophecy, a capital offense under the law of Moses. Or, the priest might also have been motivated by the fact that he did not understand the passage, and he likely assumed that Abinadi would not understand it either. Perhaps he hoped to place Abinadi in an embarrassing situation.

In ancient Israelite law, a “false prophet” was not simply someone whose prophecy did not come true. Anyone who spoke in contradiction to the word of previously accepted prophets could also be deemed a false prophet (David W. Warby, “The Book of Mormon Sheds Light on the Ancient Israelite Law of False Prophecy,” Studia Antiqua, Summer 2003: 107–116). As such, there must have been a commonly accepted interpretation of Isaiah 52:7–10 which they believed would expose Abinadi as a false prophet (John W. Welch, “Isaiah 53, Mosiah 14, and the Book of Mormon,” in Isaiah in the Book of Mormon, ed. Donald W. Parry and John W. Welch, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1998, 294; John W. Welch, The Legal Cases in the Book of Mormon, Provo, UT: BYU Press and the Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2008, 176–177). Abinadi had come among the people warning of the consequences of sin and riotous living (Mosiah 12:1–12), and his message was the polar opposite of the “glad tidings” Isaiah said would be the message of a true prophet (Mosiah 12:21; Isaiah 52:7).

The people of Zeniff’s colony likely saw themselves as fulfilling this prophetic passage from Isaiah. After all, they had returned from the lowlands of Zarahemla and established themselves “upon the mountains,” and were seeking to “bring again Zion” in their original land of inheritance, which they had “redeemed” from the Lamanites (compare the words in Mosiah 12:21–24 and Isaiah 52:7–10). “In the face of Isaiah’s prophecy and its apparent glorious fulfillment by Zeniff’s people, how did Abinadi dare accuse both the king and his people of falling under God’s worst judgments?” (John W. Welch, The Legal Cases in the Book of Mormon, Provo, UT: BYU Press and the Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2008, 176).

Given this background, the exchange between Abinadi and the priests begins to make greater sense. Noah’s priests were not just quizzing Abinadi on his scriptural knowledge; they were looking for a legal cause of action “wherewith to accuse” Abinadi. False prophecy being a capital offense, those found guilty of it were worthy of death (Deuteronomy 18:20). It is in response to this charge that Abinadi quoted Isaiah 53, thereby supplying the fuller context of the passage used by the priests. Abinadi followed by expounding upon both Isaiah 52 and 53 as he testified of the Redeemer (see Mosiah 13–16) (John W. Welch, “Isaiah 53, Mosiah 14, and the Book of Mormon,” in Isaiah in the Book of Mormon, ed. Donald W. Parry and John W. Welch, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1998, 295-305). His exposition was legally relevant and textually persuasive.

When Abinadi finally got around to providing an interpretation of Isaiah 52:7–10, he applied its words regarding good tidings, peace, and salvation first to the prophets (Mosiah 15:11–17). Then, he applied it ultimately to the Redeemer himself (Mosiah 15:18–19). A similar interpretation can be found in the Dead Sea Scrolls (Pike, “How Beautiful upon the Mountains,” 276–279; John A. Tvedtnes, The Most Correct Book: Insights from the Book of Mormon Scholar, Springville, UT: Horizon, 2003, 164–166). A text about Melchizedek, from the mid-first century BC, quotes Isaiah 52:7, and then says: “Its interpretation; the mountains are the prophets . . . and the messenger is the Anointed one of the spirit” (Translation from Geza Vermes, The Complete Dead Sea Scrolls in English, New York, NY: Penguin Books, 2004, 533, emphasis and ellipses in the original).

This is an interpretation from a Jewish source nearly contemporary with Abinadi that includes both the prophets and “the anointed one” (the “messiah” in Hebrew) (Pike, “How Beautiful upon the Mountains,” 278). Although the Dead Sea Scrolls author was applying this to Melchizedek, Dana Pike pointed out that Melchizedek is a type of Christ (Ibid., 278-79). Furthermore, just as Melchizedek is called the “king of Salem” (in Hebrew, “king of peace”; Genesis 14:18; cf. JST Genesis 14:33; Alma 13:18), Abinadi describes the Redeemer as “the founder of peace” (Mosiah 15:18; cf. Isaiah 9:6).

Although the priests did not interpret the text this way, Abinadi demonstrated that the passage did not necessarily apply to Noah and his people, as they likely thought (Mosiah 13:27–35). Abinadi’s argument was thus linguistically sophisticated and theologically impressive.

In the end, the priests’ charge of false prophecy did not stick, and after coming up with yet another charge, that of blasphemy, which Abinadi also withstood (Mosiah 17:7–8), Abinadi was finally executed for having reviled against the king (Mosiah 17:12; see Exodus 22:28) (Welch, Legal Cases, 200). Thanks, however, to the priests’ accusation of false prophecy, readers today can ultimately benefit from, learn from, and cherish Abinadi’s inspiring explanation of Isaiah’s words as well as Abinadi’s testimony of the redeeming power of the Atonement. That was a testimony which Abinadi sealed with his blood (Mosiah 17:12–20).

If you have not recently reviewed the salient features of the scattering and gathering of Israel, you might want to do so by reading the introductory commentary for 1 Nephi 20.

21 How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings; that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good; that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth;

verse 21 This verse speaks of the Lord's messengers, especially his prophets and missionaries, taking the gospel to scattered Israel. To an individual held captive, what can be more beautiful than the sight of someone coming to rescue them?

"Good tidings," "peace," "good tidings of good," and "salvation" are all terms that refer to the good news of the everlasting gospel. To "publish" is to announce, proclaim, or promulgate.

"Thy God reigneth." Behold, it is thy God that is the true God.

22 Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing; for they shall see eye to eye when the Lord shall bring again Zion;

verse 22 A watchman is a prophet who is commissioned to watch over God's people. In this case the "watchmen" are the prophets of scattered Israel.

"they shall see eye to eye" They shall see clearly the coming gathering of Israel and shall lift up their voices and proclaim ("sing") it.

"when the Lord shall bring again Zion" When the Lord restores Zion.

23 Break forth into joy; sing together ye waste places of Jerusalem; for the Lord hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem;

verse 23 "ye waste places of Jerusalem" This expression refers to the ancient ruins of Jerusalem about to come alive again as the saints gather there.

24 The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations, and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God?

verse 24 "The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations" The Father has prepared for battle and has shown his strength. The expression has its origin in the Hebrew practice of throwing back the cloak from his right arm so that it does not produce an impediment.

Abinadi's response to this priest's question is not a brief one. It will extend through the rest of chapter 12 and the entirety of Mosiah chapters 13 through 16.

25 And now Abinadi said unto them: Are you priests, and pretend to teach this people, and to understand the spirit of prophesying, and yet desire to know of me what these things mean?

26 I say unto you, wo be unto you for perverting the ways of the Lord! For if ye understand these things ye have not taught them; therefore, ye have perverted the ways of the Lord.

verses 25-26 It is ironic that the priest had quoted a verse which spoke of the concept of the "watchmen," those servants of the Lord charged with the responsibility of warning his children of the vicissitudes of life. In a sense Noah's priests had assumed the role of the watchmen of their people. They had perverted the ways of the Lord by not only failing to warn their people, but also by contributing to the people's wickedness with their evil examples.

27 Ye have not applied your hearts to understanding; therefore, ye have not been wise. Therefore, what teach ye this people?

verses 25-27 Abinadi eventually does answer the priest's question and gives them the interpretation of these verses (see Mosiah 15:28 through 16:1). First, however, he scolds him and the other priests for not knowing the answers themselves.

verse 27 The concept of "applying one's heart to understanding" is contained elsewhere in the scriptures (Psalm 90:12; Proverbs 2:2, 22:17, 23:12), and carries the meaning of taking mere knowledge and turning it into real wisdom.

28 And they said: We teach the law of Moses.

verse 28 One can just picture the confidence with which this answer was given. Could there be anything as safe as that? Again, we should be reminded that even though the Nephites were taught and intended to live the law of Moses, it was a somewhat modified version of the law of Moses. They did not, for example, observe the Levitical regulations concerning rites of purification and dietary codes. Their concern was mainly with the moral and ethical restrictions (see Bruce R. McConkie's Promised Messiah, 427).

29 And again he said unto them: If ye teach the law of Moses why do ye not keep it? Why do ye set your hearts upon riches? Why do ye commit whoredoms and spend your strength with harlots, yea, and cause this people to commit sin, that the Lord has cause to send me to prophesy against this people, yea, even a great evil against this people?

verse 29 "If ye teach the law of Moses why do ye not keep it?" Abinadi throws them off balance.

"spend your strength" Why do you waste the vital fluid of your manhood?

"and cause this people to commit sin" Again, we are reminded that the Lord holds responsible those leaders who lead their people away from truth and righteousness.

The "great evil" that Abinadi prophesies "against this people" is their eventual destruction by the Lord because of their unrighteousness.

30 Know ye not that I speak the truth? Yea, ye know that I speak the truth; and you ought to tremble before God.

verse 30 Abinadi perceives that Noah's priests actually believed or at least suspected that Abinadi was teaching the truth. This probably explains their aggressive and angry reaction to him. They could not rest until they had put him to death.

31 And it shall come to pass that ye shall be smitten for your iniquities, for ye have said that ye teach the law of Moses. And what know ye concerning the law of Moses? Doth salvation come by the law of Moses? What say ye?

verse 31 “Doth salvation come by the law of Moses?” Abinadi will answer his own question in Mosiah 13:28. The answer is that salvation, actually exaltation, comes only through Christ and not through the law.

32 And they answered and said that salvation did come by the law of Moses.

verses 33 through chapter 13 verse 24 Here Abinadi quotes the Ten Commandments. He obviously had had prior access to the account of the giving of the Ten Commandments contained on the brass plates. This account contains verbatim renderings from the King James Bible’s book of Exodus (see Exodus 20:1-17).

The context in which Abinadi quotes the Ten Commandments seems to be this: After Noah’s priests stated in verse 32 that they did believe that salvation came by living the law of Moses, Abinadi intended to correct their misconception. Before doing so in Mosiah 13:28, however, he decided first to point out that they were not even living the Ten Commandments which were a fundamental part of the law of Moses which they allegedly espoused. Abinadi will then teach that salvation cannot come through these commandments or even through keeping all of the laws of Moses. It may come only through Jesus Christ. Joseph Fielding McConkie and Robert L. Millet compared the law of Moses to “ethics without doctrine.” They wrote:

[The law of Moses] is like the body without the spirit—it may have the same appearance but is void of the power of life. The Ten Commandments, independent of the fulness of the gospel, are little more than an anemic theology in the hands of social reformers, being bereft of the laws and ordinances of the gospel. Similarly, Jesus’s Sermon on the Mount, detached from the testimony of Christ’s divine sonship, is but a curriculum for a civics class, rather than a testament of those verities by which one obtains [eternal] life (Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, volume II—Jacob through Mosiah, 215-16).

The Ten Commandments were not only an integral part of the law of Moses, but they are also a vital component of the higher law, the complete gospel (see D&C 59:5-12). In the New Testament Jesus acknowledged them as the foundation of the law when he recited them to the rich man seeking eternal life (Matthew 19:17-19; Mark 10:19; Luke 18:20), and in the Sermon on the Mount (Matthew 5) wherein he made reference to murder, adultery, and foreswearing or bearing false witness.

In Moses’s day, the Ten Commandments constituted a covenant between God and the house of Israel. They are a list of imperatives applicable to every individual Israelite. They represent a summary of the basic demands made by the God of Israel upon all those covenanted to him. Hence the chest in which the tablets were housed was the “Ark of the Covenant.” Moses eventually told the Israelites that breaking this covenant would result in their dispersion and destruction (Deuteronomy 28:64).

The first five commandments deal with the relationship between God and man, and the second five with the relationship between man and man. The exception to this scheme might seem to be number five: “Honor thy father and thy mother” because this is clearly a commandment dealing with the relationship of man to man. This has been explained by Bible commentators by noting that commandment number five is the transition from those between “man and God” and those between “man and man.” After all, parents are in a position of unique authority, as is God. When Jesus was asked, “Master, which is the great commandment in the law?” he answered, “Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets” (Matthew 22:36-40). Some have felt that the first great commandment, “Thou shalt love the Lord thy God” refers to the first five of the Ten Commandments, and that the second great commandment, “Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself” refers to the latter five. Perhaps Jesus was summarizing the Ten Commandments into two commandments.

In pointing out to King Noah and his people that they had broken this covenant, Abinadi taught them that had forfeited their right to heavenly protection.

33 But now Abinadi said unto them: I know if ye keep the commandments of God ye shall be saved; yea, if ye keep the commandments which the Lord delivered unto Moses in the mount of Sinai, saying:

verse 33 “if ye keep the commandments of God ye shall be saved” The salvation spoken of here may be just as much temporal as eternal. A similar juxtaposition between salvation and obedience is found in Alma’s counsel to his son Helaman: “for he has brought our fathers out of Egypt, and he has swallowed up the Egyptians in the Red Sea; and he led them by his power into the promised land; yea, and he has delivered them out of bondage and captivity from time to time. Yea, and he has also brought our fathers out of the land of Jerusalem; . . . But behold, my son, this is not all; for ye ought to know as I do know, that inasmuch as ye shall keep the commandments of God, ye shall prosper in the land” (Alma 36:28-30). The survival in the land of the Lehitites depended on their strict adherence to the laws of God.

34 I am the Lord thy God, who hath brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage.

35 Thou shalt have no other God before me.

verse 35 Note that this commandment differs slightly from the version in Exodus 20:3. Abinadi quotes, “thou shalt have no other God [rather than gods] before me.”

36 Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing in heaven above, or things which are in the earth beneath.

37 Now Abinadi said unto them, Have ye done all this? I say unto you, Nay, ye have not. And have ye taught this people that they should do all these things? I say unto you, Nay, ye have not.

verse 37 “Have ye done all this?” Have you been careful not to worship the temporal gods instead of the true God?

Mosiah Chapter 13

1 And now when the king had heard these words, he said unto his priests: Away with this fellow, and slay him; for what have we to do with him, for he is mad.

verse 1 Notice how King Noah can no longer endure the truths of Abinadi's preaching, and he interrupts the prophet before he finishes his message.

"for he is mad" By pronouncing Abinadi "mad," Noah provided his priests with a legal excuse to condemn him to death, since a madman posed a threat to the community. It is interesting to note that other righteous men were accused by the people of being "mad," including Enoch (Moses 6:38), Christ (John 10:20), Paul (Acts 26:24), and Joseph Smith (JS-H 1:24-25).

2 And they stood forth and attempted to lay their hands on him; but he withstood them, and said unto them:

verse 2 Abinadi refuses to be interrupted.

3 Touch me not, for God shall smite you if ye lay your hands upon me, for I have not delivered the message which the Lord sent me to deliver; neither have I told you that which ye requested that I should tell; therefore, God will not suffer that I shall be destroyed at this time.

verse 3 "neither have I told you that which ye requested that I should tell" Remember that one of Noah's priests had asked Abinadi a question (see Mosiah 12:20-24), and Abinadi has not as yet answered the question. For Abinadi's answer to this question see Mosiah 15:28 through Mosiah 16:1.

4 But I must fulfil the commandments wherewith God has commanded me; and because I have told you the truth ye are angry with me. And again, because I have spoken the word of God ye have judged me that I am mad.

5 Now it came to pass after Abinadi had spoken these words that the people of king Noah durst not lay their hands on him, for the Spirit of the Lord was upon him; and his face shone with exceeding luster, even as Moses' did while in the mount of Sinai, while speaking with the Lord.

verse 5 Abinadi was "transfigured" by the Holy Ghost. It would seem that our knowledge of this special state is limited. It seems to involve a change from the mortal telestial state to a higher or more exalted condition and appearance. The change in appearance is visible to the mortal eyes of others, and this transformation enables the individual so favored to stand in the presence of God and view the things of God. The scripture refers to these individuals as having "spiritual eyes" (Moses 1:11). The scriptures report the "transfiguration" of several prophets and even the Lord himself (see Matthew 17:1-13; Mark 9:2-13; 2 Peter 1:16-19; Luke 9:28-36; Moses 1:11; D&C 67:11; Exodus 34:29-35; 3 Nephi 28:13-17; 2 Corinthians 12:1-4). Even the earth itself will be transfigured during the Millennium (D&C 63:20-21).

For a broader application of the phenomenon of transfiguration, see the commentary for D&C 67:10. For a more complete discussion of the phenomenon of transfiguration, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 14, Transfiguration.

It has been suggested that Abinadi may have carefully chosen the time of his second entry into the city of Nephi to coincide with the Zeniffites' celebration of the ancient Israelite festival of Pentecost (Reexploring the Book of Mormon, John W. Welch, Gordon C. Thomasson, and Robert F. Smith, Deseret Book Company and FARMS, 1992, 135-138). The law of Moses required the children to annually observe this three-day festival (see Exodus 23:16) which is also known as the Festival of the First Fruits. It came fifty days after Passover (thus its name—Pentecost—which means fiftieth day) and marked the time of the harvesting of the first crops. It also apparently celebrated the Lord's giving of the Ten Commandments to Moses, since it was this time of the year when Moses ascended Mount Sinai to receive these commandments (see Exodus 19:1). Accordingly, it was a time of stern admonition.

Consider the following observations regarding the validity of this suggestion: (1) Abinadi's reentry into the city of Nephi at the time of a pilgrimage festival would have given him a ready audience. (2) At the time when King Noah's people were celebrating the harvest, Abinadi cursed the crops. He prophesied that insects, hail, and dry winds would ruin their "grain" (Mosiah 12:6). (3) At the very time when Noah's priests were pledging allegiance to the Ten Commandments, Abinadi critically rehearsed them on those very commandments. (4) How appropriate that Abinadi's "face shone with exceeding luster, even as Moses' did while on the mount of Sinai, while speaking with the Lord" (see also Exodus 34:29-30). This divine manifestation was quintessentially pentecostal. (5) Abinadi's trial was postponed for "three days" (Mosiah 17:6), perhaps to coincide with the conclusion of the festival. (6) Psalm 50, which has been identified as a psalm of Pentecost, asks what a person must do to teach the law (Psalm 50:16). The answer is that one must keep the law, and Abinadi previously made this point (Mosiah 12:29).

6 And he spake with power and authority from God; and he continued his words, saying:

7 Ye see that ye have not power to slay me, therefore I finish my message. Yea, and I perceive that it cuts you to your hearts because I tell you the truth concerning your iniquities.

verse 7 Brigham Young articulated a divine principle: "The Lord never let a prophet fall on the earth until he had accomplished his work" (HC, 7:302). On several occasions, people sought to kill Jesus. On two of these occasions, he simply went “through the midst of them” and escaped unharmed (Luke 4:30; compare John 8:58-59). On two other occasions, we read that “no man laid hands on him, because his hour was not yet come” (John 7:30; 8:20; 2:4; 7:6, 8). Only when he had completed his mortal ministry did he declare that “the hour is come; [and] the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners” (Mark 14:41; compare John 12:23; 13:1; 17:1).

8 Yea, and my words fill you with wonder and amazement, and with anger.

9 But I finish my message; and then it matters not whither I go, if it so be that I am saved.

verse 9 “then it matters not whither I go, if it so be that I am saved” Abinadi says, “After I have delivered my message, it really doesn’t matter what you do to me, so long as I am ultimately allowed to return to God’s presence.”

10 But this much I tell you, what you do with me, after this, shall be as a type and a shadow of things which are to come.

verse 10 “a type and a shadow of things which are to come” The allusion here seems to be to the future execution of the Savior. Abinadi apparently knows of his own impending death, and he views it as a “type and shadow” of the Savior’s crucifixion (see the commentary for verse 31 below).

11 And now I read unto you the remainder of the commandments of God, for I perceive that they are not written in your hearts; I perceive that ye have studied and taught iniquity the most part of your lives.

verse 11 The “commandments of God” are those commandments we know as the Ten Commandments. It seems likely that Abinadi could have quoted from memory the remaining commandments, but he chose to read them—probably to make a point: These commandments are written into your own law of Moses, and I am going to read them to you. Are you teaching them to your people? Are you obeying them yourselves? At this point Abinadi likely turned to a scroll, plates, or book of some kind containing Exodus. The brass plates contained this material.

12 And now, ye remember that I said unto you: Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of things which are in heaven above, or which are in the earth beneath, or which are in the water under the earth.

13 And again: Thou shalt not bow down thyself unto them, nor serve them; for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquities of the fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generations of them that hate me;

verse 13 “Thou shalt not bow down thyself unto them, nor serve them” See the discussion of idolatry in the commentary for Omni 1:20.

“visiting the iniquities of the fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generations of them that hate me” Again, as we discussed in the commentary for Mosiah 11:22, when the Lord “visits” an individual’s iniquities upon him, he punishes that person for his evil doings. The question may be asked: Is it fair for the Lord to punish a child for the sins of his father? Is a child responsible for his parents’ sins? The answer is “no” to both questions. There can be no question, however, that the child of a sinner may have significant disadvantages in this mortal life. First, the child suffers from having had an unfavorable example set for him. He is naturally inclined to emulate his sinful parent. Secondly, the parents’ evil acts may create for the child a less favorable spiritual environment. For example, because of the rejection of the gospel by Laman and Lemuel, several generations of Lamanites lived without the priesthood and without much of a chance to learn the gospel principles. It is clear, however, that a child is not culpable for the evil misdeeds of a parent. Reason indicates that he will not be punished for them. Rather, he will be judged by an all-knowing Lord, based upon what he does with what he received and the circumstances into which he is born. Will he be true to that eternal spark within him, the so-called spirit of Christ, or will he give himself over to the world and to the unrighteous example provided by his parents?

14 And showing mercy unto thousands of them that love me and keep my commandments.

verse 14 Here the Lord contrasts the way he deals with those who love him and keep his commandments with the way he treats “them that hate me” (verse 13 above).

15 Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain; for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain.

verse 15 What does it really mean to take the name of the Lord “in vain”? Today we refer to this unholy practice as “swearing” or “profaning.” Solemn oaths in the Old Testament were sworn by invoking the name of the Lord. Such an oath made falsely without intent would be categorized as “taking the name of the Lord in vain.” When a person today uses “profanity,” he is speaking the remnants of a solemn oath and doing so obviously without any sincere intent or with evil intent.

16 Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy.

verse 16 Other than this verse, there are only two references to this commandment in the Book of Mormon. Jarom, in speaking about the Nephites, said, “they observed to keep the law of Moses and the sabbath day holy unto the Lord” (Jarom 1:5). Also, Alma, at the waters of Mormon, instructed the new members of the church, “that they should observe the sabbath day, and keep it holy, and also every day they should give thanks to the Lord their God” (Mosiah 18:25).

17 Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work;

18 But the seventh day, the sabbath of the Lord thy God, thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates;

verse 18 “nor thy stranger that is within thy gates” The word “stranger” might be alternatively translated traveler or sojourner.

19 For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and the sea, and all that in them is; wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it.

20 Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.

verse 20 The only other reference to this commandment in the Book of Mormon is in 1 Nephi 17:55. Nephi was speaking to his older brothers Laman and Lemuel: “Wherefore, worship the Lord thy God, and honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God shall give thee.” Here Nephi was undoubtedly referring to the promised land in the western hemisphere which was promised to the posterity of Lehi.

verse 22 In the Book of Mormon, the phrase “commit adultery” occurs only five other times (Mosiah 2:13; Alma 23:3; Helaman 7:5; and 3 Nephi 12:27, 32). The word “adultery” is not found on the small plates. On the small plates the word used to mean adultery is most commonly “whoredoms” (David Rolph Seely, “The Ten Commandments in the Book of Mormon,” a FARMS reprint, 14).

In the Book of Mormon text, there are words from four different roots used to mean stealing. These include “steal,” “thieve,” “rob,” and “plunder.” Are all of these word roots synonymous? It has been suggested that in the Book of Mormon there might be a difference between stealing (or theft) and robbery (or plunder). Stealing (also theft) is a crime committed by an individual against his neighbor and is dealt with by the civil law. Robbery (or plunder) usually involves outsiders who attack in groups and is most often dealt with militarily (John W. Welch, “Theft and Robbery in the Book of Mormon and in Ancient Near Eastern Law,” a FARMS reprint). See also the commentary for 3 Nephi 3:12.

23 Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor.

verse 23 This command likely refers to any untruth told which would injure one’s fellow beings.

24 Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife, nor his man-servant, nor his maid-servant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor anything that is thy neighbor's.

verse 24 The word “covet” is seldom used in the Book of Mormon text, the only other instance being in Mosiah 4:25. The Book of Mormon word for covet is “envy” (2 Nephi 26:32). To “covet” seems to mean more than lusting after someone or some thing that one does not possess. It also applies to an attitude toward one's own possessions (D&C 1; 9:26). To covet one's own possessions is to have an unhealthy fixation on them and on all material things.

25 And it came to pass that after Abinadi had made an end of these sayings that he said unto them: Have ye taught this people that they should observe to do all these things for to keep these commandments?

26 I say unto you, Nay; for if ye had, the Lord would not have caused me to come forth and to prophesy evil concerning this people.

27 And now ye have said that salvation cometh by the law of Moses. I say unto you that it is expedient that ye should keep the law of Moses as yet; but I say unto you, that the time shall come when it shall no more be expedient to keep the law of Moses.

28 And moreover, I say unto you, that salvation doth not come by the law alone; and were it not for the atonement, which God himself shall make for the sins and iniquities of his people, that they must unavoidably perish, notwithstanding the law of Moses.

verse 28 “salvation doth not come by the law alone” For a discussion of why it does not, see the commentary for Mosiah 14:11. You will learn in that commentary that it is impossible for a man to be justified and exalted without the benefits of the atonement of Christ which the Savior doles out to us sinners in his mercy (see also Alma 34:9). Salvation is found only in Christ and not in the law.

“the atonement, which God himself shall make” Abinadi in his teachings leaves no doubt that the God of Israel himself will be the Redeemer who will come to earth as the Son of God (see also 1 Nephi 19:7-10; 2 Nephi 9:5; 10:3; Mosiah 3:5-10). Abinadi will yet give this teaching repeated emphasis (see Mosiah 13:32, 33, 34-35; 15:1, 2-4, 5-7, 8, 23; 16:4, 15). Apparently he made his point well, since it was this very teaching that resulted in his being charged with the crime of blasphemy and condemned to death (see Mosiah 17:7-8).

“they must unavoidably perish” What would eventually become of mankind were it not for the atonement? They would all become sons of perdition and live with Satan forever (2 Nephi 9:8-9).

29 And now I say unto you that it was expedient that there should be a law given to the children of Israel, yea, even a very strict law; for they were a stiffnecked people, quick to do iniquity, and slow to remember the Lord their God;

verse 29 “it was expedient that there should be a law given to the children of Israel” In their weakness, the Israelites were given a lesser law of carnal commandments, the law of Moses (D&C 84:27; JST, Exodus 34:2).

“even a very strict law” The Mosaic law evolved to become a comprehensive law which covered almost every aspect of daily life. For a more complete discussion of the law of Moses, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 16, The Law of Moses.

30 Therefore there was a law given them, yea, a law of performances and of ordinances, a law which they were to observe strictly from day to day, to keep them in remembrance of God and their duty towards him.

31 But behold, I say unto you, that all these things were types of things to come.

verse 31 “types of things to come” We have discussed previously the fact that the law of Moses is replete with “types” or symbols of Christ (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 11:4). Especially obvious is the ritual of animal sacrifice which is a type of the atoning sacrifice of the Savior. The Mosaic Law was a temporary expedient that pointed to a greater reality to come, its “fulfillment.” In a way, the law of Moses was a prophecy of which Jesus Christ was the fulfillment. Redemption could never come through the sacrifices of the Law of Moses. Rather, the higher law or the atonement is essential.

32 And now, did they understand the law? I say unto you, Nay, they did not all understand the law; and this because of the hardness of their hearts; for they understood not that there could not any man be saved except it were through the redemption of God.

verse 32 In general, the Israelites failed to understand the law of Moses in its proper perspective, and they tried to make it an end in itself. They did not comprehend that the law was completely unable to save anyone without the “redemption” and the “atonement, which God himself shall make for the sins and iniquities of his people.”

It is not only ancient Israel that has failed to understand the law. Even today there is a great deal of misunderstanding about what the law was and why it was given. This misunderstanding may be found among Christians, Jews, and even among those within the Church today.

verses 33-35 These verses are profound and state clearly what has been taught by “all the prophets who have prophesied ever since the world began.”

33 For behold, did not Moses prophesy unto them concerning the coming of the Messiah, and that God should redeem his people? Yea, and even all the prophets who have prophesied ever since the world began—have they not spoken more or less concerning these things?

verse 33 Do we actually have a prophecy of Moses's wherein he prophesies of the birth of the Savior? Where is it found in the scripture? It is found in Deuteronomy 18:15-19:

The LORD thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken; according to all that thou desiredst of the LORD thy God in Horeb in the day of the assembly, saying, Let me not hear again the voice of the LORD my God, neither let me see this great fire any more, that I die not. And the LORD said unto me, they have well spoken that which they have spoken. I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him.

This remarkable passage is perhaps the most often quoted messianic prophecy in all the scripture. Lehi quoted it to his children (1 Nephi 10:4). Nephi quoted it to his brothers (1 Nephi 22:20-21). Peter quoted it while preaching in the temple (Acts 3:22-23). Christ quoted it during his appearance to the Nephites (3 Nephi 21:11). Stephen quoted it before the Jewish Sanhedrin (Acts 7:37). Moroni quoted it to Joseph Smith (JS-H 1:40). And it is found in the Doctrine and Covenants (D&C 1:14; 133:63).

We don't really have any scripture that plainly states that Moses clearly understood the concept of the atonement and knew precisely of its necessity. Do you think it is likely he did? Of course he did!

“have they not spoken more or less concerning these things?” What is the significance of the phrase “more or less” here? It probably refers to the fact that not all prophets are equal in their ability to prophesy.

34 Have they not said that God himself should come down among the children of men, and take upon him the form of man, and go forth in mighty power upon the face of the earth?

verse 34 “God himself should come down among the children of men” This is the very teaching that was responsible for Abinadi's being condemned to death (see also Mosiah 15:1 and its commentary and Mosiah 17:7-8).

35 Yea, and have they not said also that he should bring to pass the resurrection of the dead, and that he, himself, should be oppressed and afflicted?

Mosiah Chapter 14

Mosiah 14 Abinadi quotes Isaiah 53 in preaching to the court of King Noah.

Here Abinadi quotes in its entirety the material contained in Isaiah 53. This chapter is considered by many Christians to be the most sublime messianic prophecy in all the scriptures. The verses from this chapter have formed the text of countless sermons. In a very few verses, Isaiah provides an overview of the Savior's life and mission. It is likely that Abinadi is not the first Book of Mormon prophet to utilize the materials in Isaiah 53. Many of the concepts contained herein were also taught previously by Book of Mormon prophets such as Nephi and his brother Jacob.

Isaiah 53 is often called the "Song of the Suffering Servant."

The Jews, of course, do not consider Isaiah 53 to be a prophecy of Jesus Christ and his suffering. The Jews were looking for an invincible millennial Messiah to come in power and glory and conquer those who were oppressing the Jews. The Messiah described by Isaiah in this chapter would come from humble and obscure beginnings, would look like an ordinary man, and he would suffer and die. In his first coming to earth he came as a suffering servant. In his second coming he will come as a reigning King. In his first coming he would not overthrow earthly kingdoms and governments but rather conquer something far greater, even sin and death.

The Jews interpretation is that Isaiah is not describing the suffering of a particular individual, but rather the future travails of the entire nation of Israel. Obviously, the priests of Noah also did not consider Isaiah 53 to be a prophecy of Jesus's coming. Matthew, John (John 12:37-38), Peter, Paul, and Philip understood that at least parts of this chapter referred to Jesus. Abinadi's commentary on these verses in Mosiah 15-16 will corroborate the Christian view and furnish details not found in the writings of any Christian scholar.

John W. Welch said of this chapter:

In this poem, Isaiah speaks in short, powerful phrases. His compact expressions project strong bursts of imagery; he does not dwell long on each painful scene in the travail of the Redeemer. Each of these flashes evokes sober reflection. Isaiah has seen the suffering of the servant, but it is almost as if he cannot stand to look (Isaiah in the Book of Mormon, edited by Donald W. Parry and John W. Welch, a FARMS publication, 293).

verses 1-3 Here Isaiah describes Christ's mortal life.

1 Yea, even doth not Isaiah say: Who hath believed our report, and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?

verse 1 In this verse, Isaiah asks two questions. The first is: “Who hath believed our report?” The word “report” may be interpreted as words. Here Isaiah alludes to the fact that he (Isaiah) and all other prophets since the world began had prophesied and testified of the Messiah, yet few had believed them. The second question is: “To whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?” This rhetorical question might be rephrased: “Who will witness and who will directly benefit from the Lord’s using his power to bring about salvation for his people? Isaiah will partly answer his own question in Mosiah 15:31 (Isaiah 52:10). There he says that all will have the opportunity to witness the Lord’s power and the Lord’s salvation (see Mosiah 16:1 and its commentary).

2 For he shall grow up before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of dry ground; he hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him there is no beauty that we should desire him.

verse 2 “For he [the servant, or Jesus Christ] shall grow up before him [Elohim] as a tender plant [a helpless newborn of humble beginnings] and as a root out of dry ground [Jesus will come forth out of the dry sterile and nearly impenetrable ground of apostate Judaism].” In other words, the servant shall grow up in the caring and watchful presence of Elohim, but in most humble circumstances and among a spiritually impoverished people.

“he hath no form nor comeliness” “there is no beauty that we should desire him” These phrases do not necessarily imply that the mortal Jesus will be unattractive physically. Rather they suggest that he will not be distinguishable from other Jewish boys or Jewish men. He will have no distinctive features, no glorious affect, to make him identifiable as the son of God or to draw attention to himself. He will not come as an exalted and glorified being. He will not come as the bigger-than-life political deliverer that many expected.

It is, of course, also possible that his physical appearance was not unusually attractive. Your author, being not particularly physically “comely” himself, will admit to the secret, silent hope that the Savior’s physical features were not especially handsome.

3 He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief; and we hid as it were our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not.

verse 3 No one on earth has ever loved with the intensity and the sensitivity of Jesus, yet he experienced bitter sorrow, disappointment, and rejection throughout his life. Isaiah eloquently prophesies that he will be “despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief.” Surely no one who has ever sojourned on this earth has ever been more “acquainted with grief.”

Even some of his family members rejected him at first (John 7:5). People in his hometown tried to kill him (John 8:16-30). His own countrymen rejected him (John 1:11). One of his closest associates betrayed him (Luke 22:48). In the end “all the disciples forsook him, and fled” (Matthew 26:56), and his enemies demanded his execution (Matthew 27:22-23).

“we hid . . . our faces from him” Keep in mind the common practice of prophets’ writing in the past tense of events yet in the future (the so-called “prophetic perfect” verb tense). Here, stated in the past tense, Isaiah perceives that people, particularly the nation of Israel, will in the future, ignore him or look the other way as though he were of no worth. This expression is used in describing the people’s reaction to lepers. In other words, the people will shun him.

“he was despised” Moreover, they will hate him and seek to kill him, eventually succeeding in their efforts.

“and we esteemed him not” The past verb tense is still being used for events yet to occur in the future. Isaiah uses the word we here as a rhetorical device to draw us, the readers, in. We are participants with those who were there. Our “esteem” of Christ is measured by our willingness to obey his commandments. People living in Christ’s day or in the present day are preoccupied by wickedness. They resent and despise Christ for intruding into their selfish and lustful way of living.

verses 4-6 In these verses Isaiah describes the terrible ordeal of Christ’s Atonement. One might well wonder if Abinadi chose to quote Isaiah 53, the song of the suffering servant, in part, because of the suffering he was undergoing at the hands of King Noah and his priests. He stood before the court accused of false prophesy, and it seems he may well have personally identified with Isaiah’s portrayal of the suffering servant.

The Servant was “despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief” (Mosiah 14:3; Isaiah 53:3). As one Isaiah scholar put it, “the Servant [had] to take the lowest place, to brave the scorn, and even worse, the dismissal of the very ones he came to serve” (John N. Oswalt, The Holy One of Israel: Studies in the Book of Isaiah, Eugene, OR: Cascade Books, 2014, 147). Similarly, Abinadi was sent twice to call king Noah and his people to repentance, for which he was scorned, rejected, imprisoned, accused, scourged, and executed by them (Mosiah 11:26–29; 13:9, 17, 19; 17:5–20).

Abinadi had reason to take special note of this Servant’s bearing the griefs, carrying the burdens and sorrows of his people, being taken from prison and being brought as a lamb to the slaughter (Mosiah 14:4, 7-8; Isaiah 53:4, 7-8). He could also have been struck by the extent to which the people of Noah, like sheep who had “gone astray," everyone having turned to their own iniquitous way (Mosiah 14:6; Isaiah 53:6). Isaiah 53 may well have seemed to Abinadi at that time a source of refuge and comfort.

King Noah and his priests provided an interesting contrast to the Suffering Servant. The Servant was “esteemed . . . not” (Mosiah 14:3; Isaiah 53:3), meaning “the Servant has none of the outward accouterments of power, position, and success” (Oswalt, The Holy One of Israel: Studies in the Book of Isaiah, 148). On the other hand, Noah enjoyed riches and power, having many wives and concubines (a sign of prestige), “many elegant and spacious buildings . . . ornamented . . . with fine work” had “a spacious palace, and a throne” and his priests had “seats which were set apart . . . above all the other seats . . . ornamented with pure gold” (Mosiah 11:3–14).

Abinadi may also have quoted Isaiah 53 to send a powerful message to Noah and his wicked priests: while they mistakenly thought they were the Lord’s messengers, the contrast between them and the Servant in Isaiah 53 underscores how far they were from true servants of the Lord.

Note the use in this passage of the so-called “prophetic perfect” verb tense wherein a prophet speaks in past tense verbs of an event yet to come (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 5:4-5).

4 Surely he has borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows; yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted.

verse 4 It is a classic irony that even though Christ was suffering for the sins of all mankind and suffering the pains and sufferings of all humankind—so that he might become their Savior—including those who were actual witnesses of Christ’s crucifixion, the onlookers thought he was being justly punished for the crime of blasphemy. The reality is that he suffered willingly in order to overcome the effects of our sins as is made clear in the next verse: “he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities.” To qualify to become our Savior, the Lord had to suffer to the extent that he “descended below [us] all” (D&C 122:7-8; see also Alma 7:11-12).

“stricken” It is interesting that the word “stricken” is used some sixty times in Leviticus 13 and 14, always with the same meaning—that of suffering the emotional pain of having leprosy. Jesus will be viewed with the same disdain as the Jews viewed a leper.

“smitten of God, and afflicted” It has been common in many ages for people to assume that someone who suffers justly (for their sins) is being punished by God. Those who see the Christ suffer consider that he is being punished for sin. Ironically, they are correct. It is the Father who orchestrated his terrible ordeal (see Matthew 26:39; 3 Nephi 11:11; D&C 76:107). But it is not his own sin for which he suffers; rather, it is for ours.

5 But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed.

verse 5 “wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities” “Wounded” (Hebrew chala) is better translated as “pierced fatally.” “Bruised” (Hebrew daka) is more correctly “crushed.”

“the chastisement of our peace was upon him” The suffering necessary for our healing and peace of mind (“our peace”) was borne by him. It is notable that the Hebrew word shalom, meaning “peace,” derives from the verb shillem, meaning “to reconcile” or “to make whole.” Thus the peace of Christ is far more than a friendly greeting—shalom. It is instead a gift of the Spirit, a wholeness of being, a oneness with God (Keith Meservy, “Isaiah 53: The Richest Prophecy on Christ’s Atonement in the Old Testament,” A Witness of Jesus Christ: The 1989 Sperry Symposium on the Old Testament. Edited by Richard D. Draper, Salt Lake City: Deseret Book, 1990, 155-77).

“with his stripes we are healed” The marks they left in his skin (palms, wrists, side) are a symbol of his atoning sacrifice by which we are made whole.

6 All we, like sheep, have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquities of us all.

verse 6 Like a herd of sheep, every one of us has followed together the wrong road and committed sin (see also Romans 3:23). Each of us has given in to our “natural” human frailties, our “own way.” Yet his atonement applies to us all.

“the Lord hath laid on him the iniquities of us all” The Lord (the Father) hath laid on him (the Son) the iniquities of us all.

7 He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth; he is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb so he opened not his mouth.

verse 7 While Jesus was oppressed and afflicted throughout his ministry, this passage seems to refer particularly to the legal trials he suffered immediately before his crucifixion which he suffered without speaking (Matthew 26:67-68; 27:29-30; Mark 15:3-5; Luke 23:9; John 19:9). “Dumb” means silent. He was persecuted harshly, yet he never complained, nor did he offer any excuses or apologies for his teachings. He was tormented, yet he endured it quietly and submissively like “a sheep before her shearers.”

8 He was taken from prison and from judgment; and who shall declare his generation? For he was cut off out of the land of the living; for the transgressions of my people was he stricken.

verse 8 “He was taken from prison and from judgment” is better rendered “He was taken by force (Hebrew utser) and without justice (Hebrew mish’pat).

“who shall declare his generation” Among scholars there is considerable difference of opinion as to how the Hebrew word, here rendered “generation,” should be translated. Some would prefer to translate it as “fate.” Thus, one possible meaning of this phrase might be, “Who cares about his fate?” or “Who cares about him?” or “Who will pay attention to him and obey him?” The phrase, when thus interpreted, seems to emphasize his aloneness and his rejection.

Another proposed meaning of “his generation” is his genealogy, his genesis, his roots, his origin. Who will tell the source whence he sprang? What of his mother and Father? The idea is that the only ones who can testify of Christ’s true origin are those who have an understanding of his mortal and immortal attributes, derived from his mortal mother and immortal Father.

The New International Version renders this phrase as “who can speak of his descendants?” implying that because he was “cut off from the land of the living” he had none. But Jesus did indeed have descendants, those who become his children through righteousness. He shall see his seed.

“he was cut off out of the land of the living; for the transgressions of my people was he stricken” Not only will Jesus suffer, but he will also die. He will be put to death to atone for the sins of all people.

9 And he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death; because he had done no evil, neither was any deceit in his mouth.

verse 9 The word “because” here is better rendered though. Jesus died between two thieves though he had never committed a crime or told a lie. He was buried in a rich man’s tomb (that of Joseph of Arimathea—see Matthew 27:57-60), 10 Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him; he hath put him to grief; when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand.

verse 10 “it pleased the Lord to bruise him; he hath put him to grief” This phrase has at least two possible interpretations: (1) “Lord” is likely a reference to Elohim, the Father, thus teaching that it was the Father’s will that Christ suffer the agony of the atonement—“he hath put him to grief.” The Father had in mind a purpose for the suffering of the Son, thus he did not intervene and spare the Son (3 Nephi 11:11; D&C 76:107; John 3:16). (2) Isaiah may be differentiating between the two roles of the Savior: it pleased Jehovah, the God of the Old Testament, to bruise Jesus, pointing to the fact that the great Jehovah would come in the person of Jesus, and that they are, indeed, one God (cf. Mosiah 14:2-4).

“when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin he shall see his seed” When thou (the Father) shalt make his (Christ’s) soul an offering for sin, he (Christ) shall see his seed. That is, when one is forgiven of sins through the atonement, one is spiritually begotten of Christ and becomes “his seed,” or child (cf. Mosiah 15:2-4). Jesus’s “offspring” will include those who become his spiritually begotten sons and daughters—those who take upon themselves his name and his covenants and abide in them (see Mosiah 15:2-4, 10-13; D&C 84:36-38).

“he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand” Christ is promised the blessing of eternal life. He will be resurrected and become immortal. Also because of Christ, the will and the purposes of the Father (“the pleasure of the Lord”) will succeed.

11 He shall see the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied; by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many; for he shall bear their iniquities.

verse 11 “He shall see the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied” “He” (the Father) will see the travail of “his” (the Son’s) soul, and the Father will be satisfied.

“by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many” “His knowledge” may refer to the knowledge the gospel brings, or to the knowledge and ability Jesus has, as a result of the atonement, to save and exalt us. The use of “many” rather than “all” suggests that some, the unrepentant, will not be justified (cf. D&C 19:16-19).

“My righteous servant” is the Savior. Who is the speaker or first person (to whom does “my” refer?) in this phrase? It is likely the Father (see verse 12).

Christ shall “justify” many. The word “justify” is a rich word. To be justified is to be regarded as righteous by God—free of sin, legally innocent. Man cannot be exalted if he is not justified. For a thorough discussion of the process of justification, see Justification and Sanctification in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 17.

Justification requires three essential ingredients:

1. An individual must strive mightily to keep the commandments, including participation in the required saving ordinances and covenants. Also, he must repent often whenever he falls short.

2. The Holy Spirit must then assess the intention of the man’s heart and his efforts in striving to obey. If the laws and ordinances have been kept with an honest heart and with sincere intent, and if the man’s efforts have been adequate, then the Spirit of God, the Holy Ghost, will ratify the act of repentance. This is often referred to as being “sealed by the Holy Spirit of Promise.” The “Holy Spirit of Promise,” of course, is one of the names for the Holy Ghost.

3. It should be recognized that as hard as a man tries to live the commandments and maintain a pure heart, he invariably falls short of perfection, and “the Lord cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance” (Alma 45:16). Thus, man cannot be justified on his own merit. He needs help. The needed help comes because of the grace of God.

The term grace refers to the love God has for man. Particularly, it refers to that aspect of God’s love that inclines him to extend to man blessings the man does not actually merit or deserve. Blessings may be extended to man by God, according to the concept of grace, even when that man is lacking in merit. Thus, in the case of justification, the Holy Ghost may justify an individual when proper effort and progress has been made, even though that individual falls somewhat short of the mark. The Spirit extends to the deserving individual the blessings of the Savior's atonement. Thus, it may be said that "by the law no flesh is justified" (2 Nephi 2:5)—the commandments, in and of themselves, do not save anyone. While it is vital to live the commandments, it is not enough. Without the grace, or leniency, of God, no man could be justified. This grace or leniency is available from the Savior because of his atoning sacrifice, and, as we have noted, it is extended to an individual only on conditions of personal effort and personal righteousness.

By this process, then, an individual may become justified or free of sin. The absolute necessity of complying with the laws of the gospel may be referred to as the "law of justification." There are no unearned blessings. Some Protestant sects have misinterpreted Paul's teachings (Acts 13:38-39; Romans 3:19-28; 4:5; 5:1-10; Galatians 2:15-21), and have taught that man is justified by faith alone, without works. They misunderstand the concept of faith, thinking it is a belief held in the mind. 'They fail to understand that the basic form of faith is obedience. Manifesting faith is the act of obeying. For an explanation of Paul's teachings and for a more complete discussion of historical Christianity's apostate doctrine of salvation, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 4, chapter 10, The Afterlife, chapter 11, Grace and Works, and chapter 12, The Fate of the Unevangelized.

A concept related to justification is sanctification. When an individual is in a state of justification, the Holy Ghost can then begin the process of sanctifying that individual. Sanctification consists of two separate phenomena. The first is that an increment of the natural self of the individual is purged from him—it is burned out of him as if by fire. Second, he is granted an increment of an attribute of Christ. Again, for a more complete explanation of sanctification, see Justification and Sanctification in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 17. This is an ongoing and incremental process and is also afforded to an individual by the principle of grace and not by his own merit. Personal righteousness implies more than simply being free of sin. It also includes the incremental spiritual growth resulting from the process of sanctification.

"bear their iniquities" Metaphorically, Christ carries the sins of the people upon his shoulders.

12 Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong; because he hath poured out his soul unto death; and he was numbered with the transgressors; and he bore the sins of many, and made intercession for the transgressors.

verse 12 “will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong” Again the speaker or first person in this verse is the Father. Christ and his celestial spiritual offspring (“the great” and “the strong”) will become joint heirs of everything the Father has: possessions, glory, power, knowledge, and godhood. Christ’s portion, among the great and strong, will be the first and greatest. He will share his inheritance with all of his “children.”

“he hath poured out his soul unto death” He went the whole way and willingly gave his life.

“he was numbered with the transgressors” He lived among and was mistaken by some as a sinner. He was hung on the cross between two thieves.

“Intercession” is an act done on behalf of someone else.

Mosiah Chapter 15

Chapters 15 and 16 constitute Abinadi's commentary on Isaiah's messianic prophecy contained in chapter 14 (Isaiah 53).

verses 1-5 God the Father, his son Jesus Christ, and the Holy Ghost are three separate individuals. However, these truths about the Godhead might seem difficult, for the inexperienced student of the gospel, to pull out of these five verses. It is clear that all of the prophets including Isaiah and Abinadi understood the exact nature of the Godhead. In chapter 14 we read several verses from Isaiah 53 which referred to the Father and the Son as two separate beings (see verses 2, 6, 10, 11, 12). Let us take these first five verses in chapter 15 one at a time and see if we might ascertain Abinadi's specific meanings.

1 And now Abinadi said unto them: I would that ye should understand that God himself shall come down among the children of men, and shall redeem his people.

verse 1 This verse contains the essence of Abinadi's message, that God himself, the great Jehovah, shall come to earth as a man in the flesh, even Jesus Christ, to redeem his people. See a discussion of the concept of the condescension of God in the commentary for 1 Nephi 11:16.

2 And because he dwelleth in flesh he shall be called the Son of God, and having subjected the flesh to the will of the Father, being the Father and the Son—verse 2 Taken in isolation, it would be easy to read this verse as somehow teaching the doctrine of the Trinity. However, this reading quickly breaks down when the passage is viewed more broadly within the backdrop of the Book of Mormon's overall theology about God the Father and his Son (cf. 3 Nephi 1:14; 9:15; 20:31; Mormon 9:12; Ether 3:14). A true and simple explanation is:

We know that Elohim is called Father because he is the father of the spirits of all men including that of Jesus Christ.

Christ is the Son:

1. He was sired, both in the premortal realm as a spirit child and here on earth by the Father.

2. Christ is also the "Son" by virtue of his dwelling here on earth in the flesh, yet submitting his will completely to the will of the Father.

Jesus is the Father:

1. Jesus is the Father by virtue of his role as creator of the heavens and the earth.

2. In his role as Jehovah, the God of the Old Testament, he became known as the God or Father of heaven.

3. Those on earth who are “born again” and changed from a fallen state to a state of righteousness, are received into a new family relationship. They become the sons and daughters of Christ (Mosiah 5:7). Thus, Christ becomes their Father.

4. Finally, Christ is the Father by the divine investiture of authority. Speaking of the divine investiture of authority, Elder Bruce R. McConkie wrote, “The Father Elohim has placed his name upon the Son, has given him his own power and authority, and has authorized him to speak in the first person as though he were the original or primal Father” (Promised Messiah, 63).

3 The Father, because he was conceived by the power of God; and the Son, because of the flesh; thus becoming the Father and Son—verse 3 This verse continues to consider reasons Jesus Christ is “the Father.”

“The Father, because he was conceived by the power of God” This phrase seems to have reference to the principle of the divine investiture of authority. Because he was conceived on the earth by the Father, he possessed the power of the Father, or the authorization to speak for him. In D&C 93:4, the Savior teaches that he is “the Father because he [Elohim] gave me of his fulness [fulness of power and authority], and the Son because I was in the world and made flesh my tabernacle, and dwelt among the sons of men.”

“and the Son, because of the flesh” Again, the Savior is the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh, therefore he is known as “the Son.”

4 And they are one God, yea, the very Eternal Father of heaven and of earth.

verse 4 “And they are one God” The key to understanding this phrase is to understand the antecedent of the pronoun they. In this context, it seems less likely to be referring to God the Father and God the Son. Rather, it appears to be referring to the two roles of Jesus Christ—his role as Father and his role as Son. Hence, the “one God” is Jesus Christ.

Abinadi seems to be teaching here what Elder Bruce R. McConkie has referred to as “the pronouncement of pronouncements, the doctrine of doctrines, the message of messages, which is that Christ is God. And if it were not so, he could not save us” (Promised Messiah, 98).

verses 5-7 These verses contain a rather specific description of the ministry, sufferings, rejections, trial, and crucifixion of Jesus.

Thus far in our reading of the Book of Mormon, the prophets often have spoken of Christ, and as we read subsequent chapters and verses of the book, prophets will yet speak of Jesus Christ, long before his birth into mortality. Lehi and his sons Nephi and Jacob knew of Christ's name and title, his baptism by John, his teachings, his selection of twelve apostles, his miraculous healings and casting out of devils, and his death on the cross (see 1 Nephi 10:7-10; 11:27-33; 2 Nephi 10:3; 25:19). King Benjamin knew the name of Christ's mother, along with other details of the Savior's life, such as the kinds of miracles he would perform, his temptation and suffering, his crucifixion, and his resurrection on the third day (see Mosiah 3:5-10). Alma also will write of the name of Christ's mother, Mary, and of Christ's suffering and death (see Alma 7:10-12). Samuel the Lamanite will speak of the heavenly signs that will accompany the birth and death of the Savior (Helaman 14:3-6, 20-27).

The Book of Mormon will also suggest that various other Old World prophets knew details of Christ's life long before he was born. Nephi noted that Zenock and Neum had written of the Messiah's crucifixion, while Zenos wrote of his burial and the three days of darkness that would be a sign of his death (1 Nephi 19:10). Nephi, the son of Helaman, will declare that "many prophets" of old had testified of Christ, including Moses, Abraham, Zenock, Ezias, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and "all the holy prophets" between the time of Abraham and the time of Moses (Helaman 8:13-20). Father Lehi's son Jacob will simply say, "all the holy prophets" knew of Christ (Jacob 4:4, italics added).

Here is a summary of the other major passages in the Book of Mormon where specific prophecies are given pertaining to the future life and ministry of Jesus:

1. 1 Nephi 11:3-33. This is the magnificent vision given to Nephi in the sixth century BC.

2. 1 Nephi 19:8-13. This is another messianic prophecy by Nephi in which he quotes Old Testament prophets, presumably taken from the plates of brass. These prophets were Zenock, Neum, and Zenos.

3. 2 Nephi 10:3-6. The prophet Jacob prophesies specifically of Christ's crucifixion in Jerusalem.

4. 2 Nephi 25:19-26. Again, Nephi, now toward the end of his mortal life, prophesies of the Savior to come.

5. Mosiah 3:5-10. These are the words of the angel to King Benjamin which he reported in his speech from the tower. As an aside, when was King Benjamin's speech relative to the time of Abinadi's speech to King Noah's court? You may be surprised to learn that King Benjamin's was some twenty-six years later!

6. Mosiah 14. This is the splendid messianic prophecy Abinadi quoted from the book of Isaiah, chapter 53.

7. Alma 7:10-12. As Alma taught the people in Gideon, he taught some specifics of Jesus's birth and ministry.

Critics of the Book of Mormon claim that such details of Christ's life could not have been known before he was born. But early Christians readily accepted the idea. Ignatius, bishop of Antioch (died AD 107), wrote to the Magnesians: "The divine prophets lived according to Christ Jesus. On this account also, they were persecuted, being inspired by His grace to fully convince the unbelieving that there is one God, who has manifested Himself by Jesus Christ His Son” (see the discussion in John A. Tvedtnes, “That Which Is to Come,” in his Most Correct Book, 235-41; see also Budge, Book of the Mysteries, 159).

The Epistle of Barnabas, which was widely read in Christian congregations of the second century AD, indicates in its twelfth chapter that Moses knew that the Messiah would be called Jesus.

Chapter 32 of the Book of the Bee, a thirteenth-century text first published fifty-six years after the Book of Mormon, preserves a number of early Christian traditions about prophecies of Christ uttered by various Old Testament prophets. According to this account, (1) The prophet Hosea “prophesied mystically about our Lord Jesus Christ who was to come; saying that when He should be born, the oak in Shiloh should be divided into twelve parts; and that He should take twelve disciples of Israel” (Sir Ernest A. Wallis Budge, trans., Book of the Bee [Oxford: Clarendon, 1886], 69). (2) The prophet Nahum “prophesied that when the Messiah should be slain, the veil of the temple should be rent in twain, and that the Holy Spirit should depart from it” (Ibid., 71). (3) The prophet Habakkuk “prophesied concerning the Messiah, that He should come, and abrogate [do away with] the laws of the Jews” (Ibid.). (4) The prophet Zephaniah “prophesied concerning the Messiah, that He should suffer, and that the sun should become dark, and the moon be hidden” (Ibid., 71-72). Even though the Book of the Bee is a relatively late document (thirteenth century AD), there is evidence that the stories contained in it are very old. One piece of evidence is that the fourth-century Christian Father Epiphanius commented on one of the prophecies attributed to the prophet Nahum which is related in the book (see Ibid., 71, n. 2).

Two second-century church fathers, Justin Martyr and Irenaeus, writing of Christ’s preaching to the dead while his body lay in the tomb, attributed to Jeremiah a prophecy (one not found in the Bible) in which the prophet wrote that the Lord would descend to preach salvation to the dead. In Dialogue with Trypho 72, Justin Martyr wrote, “And again, from the sayings of the same Jeremiah these have been cut out [by the Jews]: ‘The Lord God remembered His dead people of Israel who lay in the graves; and He descended to preach to them His own salvation’” (Roberts and Donaldson, eds., Ante-Nicene Fathers, 1:235. Many early Christian texts refer to Christ’s preaching in the spirit world, an event additionally recorded in 1 Peter 3:18-19; 4:6; and D&C 138). Irenaeus cited the same passage in Against Heresies 4.22 (Ibid., 1:493-94).

The Book of the Bee also preserves an earlier tradition of another nonbiblical prophecy of Jeremiah, declaring that “this (prophet) during his life said to the Egyptians, ‘a child shall be born—that is the Messiah—of a virgin, and He shall be laid in a crib, and He will shake and cast down the idols.’ From that time and until Christ was born, the Egyptians used to set a virgin and a baby in a crib, and to worship him, because of what Jeremiah said to them, that He should be born in a crib” (Budge, trans., Book of the Bee, 72. Compare Isaiah 19:1).

Another Christian document known from medieval manuscripts in various languages is 4 Baruch, which is subtitled “The Things Omitted from Jeremiah the Prophet.” The Ethiopic version attributes the book to Jeremiah’s scribe Baruch, but the Greek says it was written by Jeremiah himself. Chapter 9 has Jeremiah prophesying of the coming of Jesus Christ, the Son of God; of his selection of twelve apostles; of his death and resurrection after three days; and of his return in glory to the Mount of Olives. According to the account, Jeremiah was stoned for this declaration (for an English translation of the Jeremiah passage, see James H. Charlesworth, The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, Garden City: Doubleday, 1985, 2:387-88).

The New Testament suggests in passing that Abraham knew of Christ’s coming (see John 8:56; Galatians 3:8), though the Old Testament story of Abraham itself does not demonstrate this. The Book of Mormon prophet Jacob noted that Abraham’s offering of Isaac was “a similitude of God and his Only Begotten Son” (Jacob 4:5)—something that is confirmed in several early Christian sources, such as Epistle of Barnabas 7:3, Irenaeus’s Against Heresies 4.4, 5, and Augustine’s City of God 16.32.

From the Book of Abraham that Joseph Smith restored, we learn that the ancient patriarch actually saw Christ in the premortal council (Abraham 3:22-28). This kind of intimate knowledge of the Savior on the part of Abraham is suggested in a centuries-old Ethiopic text that derives from a Coptic text dated by the translator to the sixth century but not published until 1922. In Kebra Nagast 14, we read: “And God held converse with Abram, and He said unto him, ‘Fear thou not. From this day thou art My servant, and I will establish My Covenant with thee and with thy seed after thee . . . and afterwards I will send My Word for the salvation of Adam and his sons forever’” (Sir Ernest A. Wallis Budge, The Queen of Sheba and Her Only Son Menyelek, London: Medici Society, 1922, 10. Kebra Nagast means “glory of the kings” of Ethiopia and is one of the most highly praised traditional stories among Ethiopian Christians). Chapter 104 of the same work says, “And thou dost not understand that they were justified by faith—Abraham, and David and all the Prophets, one after the other, who prophesied concerning the coming of the Son of God. And Abraham said, ‘Wilt Thou in my days, O Lord, cast Thy word upon the ground?’ and God said unto him, ‘By no means. His time hath not yet come, but I will shew thee a similitude of His coming.’” God then has Abraham meet with Melchizedek, who “gave him the mystery of the bread and wine, that same which is celebrated in our Passover for our salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ” (Ibid., 200).

Isn’t it fascinating to learn how much “plain and precious” information was taught by the Old Testament prophets concerning the coming of the Savior? We find little, if any, of this in our Bible today. It is no wonder that both Christians and Jews struggle in their attempts to interpret the Bible!

5 And thus the flesh becoming subject to the Spirit, or the Son to the Father, being one God, suffereth temptation, and yieldeth not to the temptation, but suffereth himself to be mocked, and scourged, and cast out, and disowned by his people.

verse 5 “the flesh becoming subject to the Spirit” As the son, Jesus was less than, and subject to his father. The atonement process required that the will of the Son be subjected to the will of the Father. The Son asked to have the cup pass from him. The Father willed that it be drunk to its dregs. The “flesh” is Jesus Christ, and the “Spirit” is the Father.

“being one God” This time the phrase “one God” refers to the intimate unity between God the Father and God the Son. The phrase refers to the separate members of the godhead being “one God” or “one Eternal God” (see also 2 Nephi 31:21; Alma 11:44; Mormon 7:7). It would seem that the nature of the relationship of the three members of the godhead to one another leads to these statements. The three are so closely aligned and allied that they function as a single unit. Their powers, their influences, their intentions, their goals, their responses are indistinguishable and identical. The three, indeed, function as one God. It seems likely to me, as a student of the doctrine, that we mortals are not given as yet to completely understand this oneness that exists in the Godhead.

An alternate explanation is that this particular statement, “being one God,” refers only to Jesus Christ. The powers and authorities of the Father, the spirit of the Son, and mortal flesh are all combined to become “one God,” even Jesus Christ.

“suffereth temptation, and yieldeth not to the temptation” Another essential ingredient of the atonement was that it was necessary that Jesus be unmarred by sin. He had to be the unblemished sacrificial lamb.

”suffereth himself to be mocked, and scourged, and cast out, and disowned by his people” The Son’s participation was purely voluntary. He descended in suffering below what any man can tolerate. Yet, he did have the power to abort the process and save himself from going through the ordeal. He must have been tempted to do so, but he obviously did not.

6 And after all this, after working many mighty miracles among the children of men, he shall be led, yea, even as Isaiah said, as a sheep before the shearer is dumb, so he opened not his mouth.

verse 6 “even as Isaiah said” See Mosiah 14:7 (Isaiah 53:7) and its commentary.

7 Yea, even so he shall be led, crucified, and slain, the flesh becoming subject even unto death, the will of the Son being swallowed up in the will of the Father.

verse 7 “the flesh becoming subject even unto death” This phrase and the one which follows—“the will of the Son being swallowed up in the will of the Father”—are parallel statements having the same meaning. Thus, we learn that Christ’s submitting “even unto death” meant that he submitted to the will of the Father. Paul wrote, in referring to Christ’s atonement: “he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross” (Philippians 2:8).

8 And thus God breaketh the bands of death, having gained the victory over death; giving the Son power to make intercession for the children of men—verse 8 On reading this verse for the first time, it is tempting to interpret “God” as being the Father. In context (see verse 9 and verse 23), however, it is obvious that “God” is the Son who is portrayed as giving himself, through his personal atoning death, the power to intercede for men with the law of justice.

“the bands of death” The concept of breaking the “bands of death” is unique to the Book of Mormon and is found nowhere else in the scriptures. It is used additionally by Abinadi and also by the younger Alma whose father was converted by Abinadi (see also Mosiah 15:9, 20, 23; 16:7; 23:12; Alma 4:14; 5:7, 9, 10; 7:12; 11:41-42; 22:14).

Though this phrase is not found in the King James Bible, there is a phrase in the Hebrew of the Old Testament—heveli-mot—that can be translated “bands of death” (as in one modern Bible translation). The phrase appears in Psalms 18:4 and 116:3, where it is translated variously as “cords of death” (Psalm 18:4; NIV, ESV, NASB, ISV, ASV, ERV, WEB), “ropes of death” (NLT, HCSB), or “snares of death” (Psalm 116:3; ESV), although the KJV renders it as “sorrows of death.”

The Psalmist expresses well the horror of being caught in these bands, or cords, of death and hell. “The cords of death encompassed me; the torrents of destruction assailed me; the cords of Sheol entangled me; the snares of death confronted me” (Psalm 18:4, ESV).

The Hebrew word hevel expresses an impressive array of meanings, including “cord, rope, band, snare” or “pain, pang, travail”—symbols of captivity and subjection. It can also refer to “binding” or “pledging,” as in the binding nature of a covenant. It appears that the word was used for that which could bind you either to the pain and sorrow of death and hell or to the promised blessings and inheritance of the Lord.

The concept of gaining a “victory over death” is found in one other place in the scriptures, in 1 Corinthians 15:54-57. Here Paul is quoting from previous scriptures—he refers to this concept as the “saying that is written” (1 Corinthians 15:54). Some have suggested that Paul was quoting from Hosea 13:14, but this supposition requires quite a stretching of the imagination. Paul could not have been quoting Abinadi. It therefore seems likely that both Paul and Abinadi were quoting from an earlier scriptural text that has subsequently been lost.

The “death” spoken of in this verse surely has a dual meaning. It refers to both physical death and spiritual death, both of which were overcome by the Savior’s atonement.

The likelihood that Abinadi was familiar with these nuances of the Hebrew word hevel and purposefully used the phrase heveli-mot, or “bands of death” in English, even though this phrase does not appear in the KJV Bible, adds depth to our understanding of Abinadi’s words. It also adds another detail in support of the historicity and truthfulness of the Book of Mormon. Abinadi assuredly knew well these key concepts of the Hebrew words and texts and understood their relevance and applicability to the mission of the Messiah.

“having gained the victory over death” Each and every descendant of Adam and Eve will be resurrected and thus enjoy the victory over physical death. Those who accept and live the gospel will be exalted and thus gain victory over spiritual death.

9 Having ascended into heaven, having the bowels of mercy; being filled with compassion towards the children of men; standing betwixt them and justice; having broken the bands of death, taken upon himself their iniquity and their transgressions, having redeemed them, and satisfied the demands of justice.

verse 9 All events in this verse are spoken of as having occurred in the past. They do, of course, still lie in Abinadi’s future.

“Having ascended into heaven” After the Atonement, the Savior will ascend into heaven.

There are two phrases in this verse that are stated in parallel—that is, they are identical in their meaning. They are: “having the bowels of mercy” and “being filled with compassion towards the children of men.” These phrases do, of course, describe the Savior.

Here is a little known yet most profound doctrine: Jesus suffered the agony of the atonement, not only that he may ultimately intercede for all humankind and stand “betwixt them and justice,” but also in order that his own empathy and compassion for his brothers and sisters might be perfected—in order that he might become the perfect judge of us all (see The Essence of the Lord’s Atonement in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 19). It is because he became the perfect judge, through acquiring perfect empathy through his atoning sacrifice, that he is allowed by the demands of justice to plead our case before the law of justice. Alma will later write, in referring to the atonement: “And he will take upon him death, that he may loose the bands of death which bind his people; and he will take upon him their infirmities, that his bowels may be filled with mercy, according to the flesh, that he may know according to the flesh how to succor his people according to their infirmities” (Alma 7:12).

“standing betwixt them and justice” If the law of justice were to mete out to every man and woman their just deserts without anyone’s being available to rescue or protect them, then no one would be saved in God's eternal kingdom. None of us is able to satisfy the demands of the law of justice on our own without help. We all must be redeemed or rescued from the natural consequences of this law. Thus, is Christ "standing betwixt [us] and [the law of] justice."

10 And now I say unto you, who shall declare his generation? Behold, I say unto you, that when his soul has been made an offering for sin he shall see his seed. And now what say ye? And who shall be his seed?

verse 10 "who shall declare his generation" We discussed, in the commentary for Mosiah 14:8, the few possible meanings of this phrase. Here, it likely means something like, "Who are his people?" "Who shall become the Savior's seed?" Abinadi will answer his own question in the next verse.

"when his soul has been made an offering for sin he shall see his seed" When Christ has made himself an offering for sin, he shall be blessed by the Father. His blessings will include "seed" or "offspring." Each person who inherits the celestial kingdom will become his eternal "seed" or "offspring." In addition, Jesus's "seed" will include those in mortality who become his spiritually begotten sons and daughters—those who take upon themselves his name and his covenants and abide in them (see verse 11).

11 Behold I say unto you, that whosoever has heard the words of the prophets, yea, all the holy prophets who have prophesied concerning the coming of the Lord—I say unto you, that all those who have hearkened unto their words, and believed that the Lord would redeem his people, and have looked forward to that day for a remission of their sins, I say unto you, that these are his seed, or they are the heirs of the kingdom of God.

12 For these are they whose sins he has borne; these are they for whom he has died, to redeem them from their transgressions. And now, are they not his seed?

verse 12 "these are they whose sins he has borne" We know that Christ suffered for the sins of all men and not just for those who qualify to be his "seed" as in verse 11. All mankind on earth will receive the unconditional gift of resurrection which resulted from his atonement. The "offspring" of Christ, however, will be only those who qualify for the conditional gift of eternal life in his presence.

Notice the verb tenses in this verse: "whose sins he has borne; these are they for whom he has died, to redeem them from their transgressions." Abinadi uses the past tense to refer to events yet in the future. Again, as we have previously discussed, we see the use of the "prophetic perfect" verb form.

13 Yea, and are not the prophets, every one that has opened his mouth to prophesy, that has not fallen into transgression, I mean all the holy prophets ever since the world began? I say unto you that they are his seed.

verse 13 Christ's "seed" will include his valiant prophets and missionaries.

14 And these are they who have published peace, who have brought good tidings of good, who have published salvation; and said unto Zion: Thy God reigneth!

verse 14 As we have learned previously (see the commentary for Mosiah 12:21), "peace," "good tidings of good," and "salvation" are all terms that refer to the good news of the everlasting gospel. To "publish peace" is to announce, proclaim, or promulgate that gospel.

15 And O how beautiful upon the mountains were their feet!

verse 15 The prophet Abinadi clearly identifies those in Isaiah's prophecy (Isaiah 52:7: "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!") who have and will yet "publish peace." They are all of the holy prophets since the world began who have prophesied and will yet prophesy of Jesus Christ. This includes the Lord Jesus Christ himself.

There is an ancient document that agrees with Abinadi's interpretation of Isaiah 52:7. It is one of the Dead Sea Scrolls, 11Q Melchizedek (also known as 11Q13), which cites the Isaiah passage, then explains that "the mountains are the prophets . . . And the messenger is the anointed of the spirit [the Messiah or Jesus Christ]" ("The Imagery of Isaiah 52:7-10," in Isaiah in the Book of Mormon, ed. Donald W. Parry and John W. Welch [Provo, Utah: FARMS, 1998], 261-65; see also John A. Tvedtnes, "How Beautiful upon the Mountains," in his Most Correct Book, 172-75).

16 And again, how beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of those that are still publishing peace!

17 And again, how beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of those who shall hereafter publish peace, yea, from this time henceforth and forever!

18 And behold, I say unto you, this is not all. For O how beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that is the founder of peace, yea, even the Lord, who has redeemed his people; yea, him who has granted salvation unto his people;

verses 15-18 "how beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings" This phrase, which has its origins in Isaiah 52:7, whenever it is encountered in the scriptures, speaks of the Lord's latter-day messengers, especially his prophets and missionaries, taking the gospel to scattered Israel. In verse 18, Abinadi, however, applies it directly to the Lord himself.

Note in these four verses Abinadi's fourfold use of the phrase as he speaks of past, present, and future messengers and especially the Lord himself, the very "founder" or "prince" of peace. True peace comes only from the gospel.

This phrase is an example of a figure of speech called a synecdoche (sin ek' da kee) in which a part stands for the whole (i.e., the feet represent the entire person). For additional discussion of synecdoche, see the introductory commentary for Jacob 5.

19 For were it not for the redemption which he hath made for his people, which was prepared from the foundation of the world, I say unto you, were it not for this, all mankind must have perished.

verse 19 Abinadi continues to speak in the past tense as he prophesies of future events.

"Were it not for the redemption . . . all mankind must have perished." This doctrine is stressed repeatedly in the Book of Mormon (see also 1 Nephi 10:6; 2 Nephi 9:8-9; Mosiah 16:4; Alma 34:9; and Alma 42:6). Simply stated, were it not for the atonement, all mankind would live eternally with Satan as sons of perdition.

20 But behold, the bands of death shall be broken, and the Son reigneth, and hath power over the dead; therefore, he bringeth to pass the resurrection of the dead.

verse 20 Abinadi now uses both future and present tense verbs to describe Christ's victory over physical death (see the commentary for verse 8 of this chapter).

21 And there cometh a resurrection, even a first resurrection; yea, even a resurrection of those that have been, and who are, and who shall be, even until the resurrection of Christ—for so shall he be called.

verse 21 "even a first resurrection" Earlier prophets had taught of the resurrection, but Abinadi was the first in the Book of Mormon to describe and use the phrase "first resurrection." His discourse on the subject begins in Mosiah 15:20 and extends through Mosiah 16:11, a total of two complete pages. Prior to reading this discussion of Abinadi's, please review carefully the sequence of the resurrections as discussed in the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:15. Abinadi's reference to the "first resurrection" applies to what we now understand as "the morning of the first resurrection," or that resurrection wherein the righteous come forth with celestial bodies to inherit the eternal presence of God. Abinadi's teachings are generally in harmony with the expanded knowledge about the resurrection that the prophet Joseph Smith gained through revelation. However, Abinadi's record is incomplete and does not tell it all. What he does not say, at least in what we have of his record, is that those who die after the time of Christ, who are righteous, will also be part of the first resurrection (see the commentary for the following verse).

“until the resurrection of Christ—for so he shall be called” The earliest reference to the specific name “Christ” in the Book of Mormon text is in the teachings of Jacob in 2 Nephi 10:3. The name means the “Messiah” or the “anointed one.”

22 And now, the resurrection of all the prophets, and all those that have believed in their words, or all those that have kept the commandments of God, shall come forth in the first resurrection; therefore, they are the first resurrection.

verses 21-22 “first resurrection” Again, for a discussion and explanation of the two resurrections, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:15. If you have not done so, it is important that you take a few moments to review that discussion now. An alternate source for learning about the sequence of the resurrections is the section titled “When Are We Resurrected?” in volume 2, chapter 13 of Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, The Spirit World. The “first resurrection” (actually the morning of the first resurrection) will begin at the time of the resurrection of Jesus Christ.

23 They are raised to dwell with God who has redeemed them; thus they have eternal life through Christ, who has broken the bands of death.

verse 23 This verse refers to all who qualify to be “raised” or resurrected in the morning of the first resurrection and inherit the celestial kingdom. The titles “God” and “Christ” here are certainly synonymous and refer to the Lord Jesus Christ.

24 And these are those who have part in the first resurrection; and these are they that have died before Christ came, in their ignorance, not having salvation declared unto them. And thus the Lord bringeth about the restoration of these; and they have a part in the first resurrection, or have eternal life, being redeemed by the Lord.

verse 24 This verse might be a bit confusing. The initial phrase, “And these are those who have part in the first resurrection,” refers to all those who will come forth in the morning of the first resurrection. These include “all the prophets and all those that have believed in their words, or all those that have kept the commandments of God.”

The next phrase causes the confusion. If we were to remove the phrase “and these are they that have” and replace it with “and these will be accompanied by those who,” then the meaning is clearer. But even with this adjustment in the wording, some additional explanation is required. More details are needed: Those who lived upon the earth without having the opportunity to hear the gospel of Christ who, in the judgment of the Savior, would have accepted with all their hearts if they had heard it, will also be heirs of the celestial kingdom (D&C 137:5-9). These individuals may have lived before the mortal advent of Jesus or at any time in the history of the world.

25 And little children also have eternal life.

verse 25 Also, all children who die before the age of accountability who would have received the gospel had they been allowed to tarry, will be exalted in the celestial kingdom (D&C 137:5-10).

26 But behold, and fear, and tremble before God, for ye ought to tremble; for the Lord redeemeth none such that rebel against him and die in their sins; yea, even all those that have perished in their sins ever since the world began, that have wilfully rebelled against God, that have known the commandments of God, and would not keep them; these are they that have no part in the first resurrection.

27 Therefore ought ye not to tremble? For salvation cometh to none such; for the Lord hath redeemed none such; yea, neither can the Lord redeem such; for he cannot deny himself; for he cannot deny justice when it has its claim.

verses 26-27 Abinadi continues in his warnings to the wicked Nephites of Noah's kingdom. These verses likely have reference to all those who do not come forth in the first resurrection. They apply to those who will inherit a lesser kingdom of Glory and to those assigned to the kingdom without glory—outer darkness.

To be redeemed or saved, in these verses, means the same as receiving a celestial resurrection. However, the disobedient individuals in these two verses will not be resurrected in (the morning of) the first resurrection. They “have known the commandments of God, and would not keep them.” By rebelling against God these individuals cut themselves off from his atoning sacrifice. The law of justice, untempered by Christ's mercy, lays claim to them, and they suffer the wrath of God in the spirit world or “hell” before being resurrected to a lesser kingdom or becoming sons of perdition (D&C 76:82-85).

“for the Lord hath redeemed none such; yea, neither can the Lord redeem such” The word redeem, as it is used in the scriptures, has a few different meanings:

1. The first and ultimate meaning is that Christ redeems us when he grants us the opportunity for salvation or exaltation. This redemption is, of course, conditional as is made clear in this particular verse and is based on an individual's accepting Christ and obeying his gospel.

2. The second meaning is that all of mankind is redeemed in that they will all be resurrected. “Now, verily I say unto you, that through the redemption which is made for you is brought to pass the resurrection from the dead. And the spirit and the body are the soul of man. And the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul” (D&C 88:14-16; see also Mormon 9:12-13; Helaman 14:17). The scriptures teach that Christ came into the world to “redeem the children of men from the fall” (2 Nephi 2:26). This redemption includes definitions 1 and 2.

3. It is also possible to be redeemed in this life. Forgiveness of sin constitutes redemption from sin. By virtue of Christ's atoning blood, a man may be redeemed from sin as he repents and comes to Christ (2 Nephi 1:15; Alma 5:21; 9:27; Mosiah 27:24).

Father Lehi rejoiced: “The Lord hath redeemed my soul from hell; I have beheld his glory, and I am encircled about eternally in the arms of his love” (2 Nephi 1:15).

“for he cannot deny justice when it has its claim” “Justice” here refers to the law of justice. The law of justice in essence states that for every violation of God’s law, a penalty must be paid. No man can be exalted in the celestial kingdom without being “justified.” A man is said to be justified when all penalties are paid. Then the man is “reconciled to God” or brought into perfect harmony with God to the point where he can be exalted. Even God himself cannot redeem a man when the man has not satisfied the demands of justice. God cannot break the law of justice. For a review of the concepts of the law of justice, the fall, and the atonement, see The Essence of the Lord’s Atonement (Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 19) and Consequences of the Savior’s Atonement (Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 2).

verses 28-31 Abinadi now quotes from Isaiah 52:8-10 which verses prophesy of the latter days when Israel will be gathered for the final time just prior to the Millennium.

28 And now I say unto you that the time shall come that the salvation of the Lord shall be declared to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people.

29 Yea, Lord, thy watchmen shall lift up their voice; with the voice together shall they sing; for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion.

verse 29 “thy watchmen” It was traditional in Palestine to place watchers or guards on the walls of the cities to observe those who approached.

“thy watchmen shall lift up their voice” Symbolically, the watchmen are priesthood leaders who keep watch over the Church and call out the good news of redemption.

“with the voice together shall they sing [a new millennial song entitled] when the Lord shall bring again Zion” The words of this song are given by the Lord in D&C 84:99-102:

The Lord hath brought again Zion;
 The Lord hath redeemed his people, Israel,
 According to the election of grace,
 Which was brought to pass by the faith
 And covenant of their fathers.
 The Lord hath redeemed his people;
 And Satan is bound and time is no longer.
 The Lord hath gathered all things in one.
 The Lord hath brought down Zion from above.
 The Lord hath brought up Zion from beneath.
 The earth hath travailed and brought forth her strength;

And truth is established in her bowels;
And the heavens have smiled upon her;
And she is clothed with the glory of her God;
For he stands in the midst of his people.
Glory, and honor, and power, and might,
Be ascribed to our God; for he is full of mercy,
Justice, grace and truth, and peace,
Forever and ever, Amen.

“they shall see eye to eye” Unity is one of the key characteristics of Zion. Moses recorded: “The Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind” (Moses 7:18). Through the Prophet Joseph, the Lord said, “I say unto you be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine” (D&C 38:27). Joseph Smith wrote, “What if all the world should embrace this gospel? They would then see eye to eye, and the blessings of God would be poured out upon the people, which is the desire of my whole soul” (HC, 5:259).

verse 30 “Break forth into joy, sing together” All the righteous will join in chorus.

“ye waste places of Jerusalem” This expression refers to the ancient ruins of Jerusalem about to come alive again as Israel gathers there.

“for the Lord hath comforted his people” The comfort comes in the form of redemption and a restoration to the Lord’s promises.

“he hath redeemed Jerusalem” Jerusalem will be set free from captivity, both physical and spiritual.

31 The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God.

verse 31 “The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations” The expression has its origin in the Hebrew practice of throwing back the cloak from his right arm so that it does not produce an impediment in combat. At his second coming, Christ will “make bare his holy arm” when he shows forth his power for all to see.

“in the eyes of all the nations” Here Isaiah answers the question which he asked in Mosiah 14:1: “To whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?” All the world will know of his salvation, meaning the victory of our Lord over the forces of evil and corruption. The same idea is then repeated: “and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God.”

Mosiah Chapter 16

1 And now, it came to pass that after Abinadi had spoken these words he stretched forth his hand and said: The time shall come when all shall see the salvation of the Lord; when every nation, kindred, tongue, and people shall see eye to eye and shall confess before God that his judgments are just.

verse 1 “he stretched forth his hand” Abinadi’s confrontation with the wicked king Noah and his priests (Mosiah 12–16) concluded with the prophet’s enacting a dramatic gesture. Here, the text records that “after Abinadi had spoken these words he stretched forth his hand and said: The time shall come when all shall see the salvation of the Lord; when every nation, kindred, tongue, and people shall see eye to eye and shall confess before God that his judgments are just.”

The added detail of Abinadi’s raising or stretching out his hand (or “hands” in the Printer’s Manuscript) as he prophesied may seem insignificant, but as David Calabro has observed, “The gestures described in passages of scripture, rather than being just incidental ornaments, contribute to the meanings of those passages; understanding the meanings of gestures therefore leads to a fuller understanding of the scriptural message” (David Calabro, “‘Stretch Forth Thy Hand and Prophecy’: Hand Gestures in the Book of Mormon,” Journal of the Book of Mormon and Other Restoration Scripture 21, no. 1, 2012: 47).

In the case of stretching forth the hand(s), which is found throughout the Book of Mormon as a prophetic gesture (1 Nephi 17:54; Mosiah 12:2; Alma 10:25; Alma 13:21; 15:5; 19:12; 32:7; 3 Nephi 11:9; 12:1), Calabro suggests that this action “seems to increase the force or urgency of the speech’s” being delivered by the prophet. In stretching forth their hand(s), the prophets increase the drama or emotional appeal in their pleadings with their audiences to hearken to their words. This makes perfect sense in the context of Abinadi’s final message in Mosiah 16, which urgently warned of God’s judgment and punishment of the wicked and unrepentant.

Additionally, Calabro noted how this gesture in the Book of Mormon finds a home in the ancient world. The Hebrew Bible, for instance, records how Moses “stretched out his hand over the sea” in leading the Israelites out of Egypt (Exodus 14:21, 27). Thus stretching forth the hand(s) would seem in some cases to also convey supernatural ability. Additionally, ancient Egyptian iconography portrays actions of speech “in which an individual stretches forth the hand in vertical position toward the addressee.” That being said, this gesture may serve several purposes, as the Book of Mormon’s uses of the ritual gesture of stretching forth the hand(s) carry, in Calabro’s words, a “diversity of interpretations” or meanings depending on the context of the passage.

Readers of the Book of Mormon should be attentive to the small details in the text, since it’s often the small details that illuminate the text most meaningfully.

“Understanding how [ritual] gestures [in the Book of Mormon] function helps to illuminate the scriptural passages in which they are mentioned,” Calabro concluded. “For example, knowing that the stretched-forth hand accompanying speech is [often] a plea for contact and acceptance makes Abinadi’s use of the gesture while delivering a message that would lead to his martyrdom especially vivid.”

With all of this in mind, attentive readers can draw vivid meaning from the scriptures. Just as the prophet Abinadi stretched forth his hand to the stubborn priests of Noah, his powerful words continue to reach out to readers everywhere who earnestly desire to see the salvation of Lord and to confess to God that His judgments are just.

“The time shall come when all shall see the salvation of the Lord” The expression “to see the salvation of the Lord” means simply to come to an understanding and to acknowledge that salvation, or redemption from sin and from the fall, can come only through Jesus Christ. This expression is used elsewhere in scripture. Moses used it, for example, in addressing the Israelites as they were being pursued by the Egyptian army (Exodus 14:13-14). Isaiah used the expression in speaking of the latter days when all Israel will be gathered just prior to the Millennium (Isaiah 52:10). We know that there will eventually come a time when “every knee shall bow and every tongue confess” that Jesus is the Christ (Mosiah 27:31; D&C 88:104). Each and every person who has ever inhabited this earth will finally know that Jesus Christ and his gospel—his commandments—are the only standards against which we will all be measured.

To what time period is Abinadi referring here? When is it that all shall see the salvation of the Lord? It has been suggested by authority that there are at least two times when every knee will bow and every tongue confess. Brigham Young suggested that this will occur during the Millennium when Christ will reign personally upon the earth as head of the political kingdom of God (Discourses of Brigham Young, 115). Though all will acknowledge the Christ, not all will belong to his Church. Indeed, there may be more religious sects upon the earth than there are now (Ibid, 439). Bruce R. McConkie has also suggested a post-millennial time when all have been resurrected and the earth is about to be celestialized (Doctrinal New Testament Commentary, 3:531-32; D&C 88:103-04).

It would seem that there may yet be a third moment in time when all shall see the salvation of the Lord. This is the time, just prior to the resurrection, when the purposes of the spirit-world experience have all been fulfilled—when all have had a chance to hear and understand the gospel plan. Then “As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God [that Jesus is Lord]” (Romans 14:11), except for those few who remains filthy still. These latter unfortunate souls will spend eternity in outer darkness. All of the rest will be then resurrected with bodies of celestial, terrestrial, and telestial glory.

“every nation, kindred, tongue, and people shall see eye to eye and shall confess before God that his judgments are just” It has been pointed out by Joseph

Fielding Smith, Jr. that even though every knee shall bow and every tongue confess that Christ's judgments are just, not all who so confess will receive forgiveness of sin or exaltation. Some will likely confess grudgingly (Doctrines of Salvation, 2:30). All of those who inherit the telestial kingdom, for example, will confess that Jesus is the Christ, yet their rewards are far less than eternal life in the celestial realm. What of those destined to become sons of Perdition? Will they confess Christ? It is unlikely they will, though they all will certainly understand in their private thoughts the exact role of Christ in the salvation of mankind. It seems likely that they will stubbornly and steadfastly refuse to publicly confess Christ and will remain "filthy still" (D&C 29:44; 88:35).

2 And then shall the wicked be cast out, and they shall have cause to howl, and weep, and wail, and gnash their teeth; and this because they would not hearken unto the voice of the Lord; therefore the Lord redeemeth them not.

verse 2 "the Lord redeemeth them not" Which people are referred to in this verse? Those who require no redemption are those who go with Satan to outer darkness. For those who are redeemed, there are various degrees of redemption. Those who inherit the telestial and terrestrial kingdoms require redemption from their sins, as they lack the ability to pay the price for their sins themselves. Only those who are exalted in the celestial kingdom are fully redeemed in the highest spiritual sense.

It would seem that this verse likely refers to those few unfortunate souls to spend eternity in outer darkness, though we have previously made the point that the Book of Mormon teaches an incomplete and simplistic version of our post-mortal life (see "Post-Mortal Life and the Book of Mormon" in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 13, The Spirit World).

3 For they are carnal and devilish, and the devil has power over them; yea, even that old serpent that did beguile our first parents, which was the cause of their fall; which was the cause of all mankind becoming carnal, sensual, devilish, knowing evil from good, subjecting themselves to the devil.

verse 3 "they are carnal and devilish, and the devil has power over them" The pronoun "they" refers back to the "wicked" who are "cast out" in verse 2. As in verse 2, this verse seems to have reference also to those who will ultimately go with Satan and become the sons of Perdition.

4 Thus all mankind were lost; and behold, they would have been endlessly lost were it not that God redeemed his people from their lost and fallen state.

verse 4 Abinadi now suddenly shifts his reference away from the sons of Perdition to all mankind who have been subject to the fall. We have read this doctrine before. It is an important doctrine that is stressed repeatedly in the Book of Mormon

(see also 1 Nephi 10:6; 2 Nephi 9:8-9; Mosiah 15:19; 16:4; Alma 34:9; and Alma 42:6). Simply stated, were it not for the atonement, all mankind would live eternally with Satan as sons of Perdition. Again, Abinadi is speaking of the atonement of Christ as if it were in the past, though it is yet to occur in Abinadi's future.

5 But remember that he that persists in his own carnal nature, and goes on in the ways of sin and rebellion against God, remaineth in his fallen state and the devil hath all power over him. Therefore, he is as though there was no redemption made, being an enemy to God; and also is the devil an enemy to God.

verse 5 Just who is this rebellious “enemy to God” who “persists in his own carnal nature” and “goes on in the ways of sin”? He is the “natural man” whom we have discussed previously in the commentary for Mosiah 3:19. It is important to have firmly in mind the definition of this natural man. Hence, let us review that commentary:

The term “natural man” applies to all men and women born into this world. This label does not refer to a man's moral character but rather to his relationship to God. A natural man is one who has not been touched by the influence of the Holy Ghost. He has not been born again. He has not become transformed into a new creature. Indeed, he is not a saint. The natural man is an “enemy to God” because his nature is alien to things of a spiritual or eternal nature. His perspective is limited to the carnal and worldly, and he is incapable of understanding spiritual things. “[Spiritual truths] are foolishness unto him” (1 Corinthians 2:14). He is blind and deaf to matters of the Spirit. He is independent rather than submissive and humble, though, ironically, he usually ends up conforming to the worldly trends of the day. He is proud, overly-competitive, and driven by rewards of the world. His behavior is likely to be influenced by his animal passions.

Every man is a natural man and in bondage to the flesh until he “yields to the enticings of the Holy Spirit, and putteth off the natural man and becometh a saint through the atonement of Christ the Lord” (Mosiah 3:19). Once sanctified by the Holy Spirit, man is fundamentally and profoundly changed. He transforms from a state of carnality to being “as a child, submissive, meek, humble, patient, full of love, willing to submit to all things which the Lord seeth fit to inflict upon him” (Ibid.). He cannot look upon sin “save it be with abhorrence.” He receives Christ's “image” in his “countenance.” He experiences a “mighty change” of heart. He enjoys the “fruits of the Spirit” which, according to the Apostle Paul, are “love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, faith, meekness, temperance” (Galatians 5:22-23). He is then said to possess the “divine nature” rather than a “natural” nature. His perspective is not confined to this earthly sojourn but is rather an eternal one. He knows that this earth life is not the real life. Ultimately, he may be endowed with the most transcendent fruit of the Spirit—charity. He will be enabled to love as Christ loved.

Only when thus transformed does a man realize how totally dependent is humanity upon the Lord. This true humility comes only with revealed divine knowledge to the sanctified individual. The proud, on the other hand, are never humble. They are ignorant of man's dependence upon the Lord, and they are unaware of their ignorance. Pride is the very father of ignorance.

For a more complete discussion of this subject, see The "Natural Self" and "Spiritual Self" in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 5.

6 And now if Christ had not come into the world, speaking of things to come as though they had already come, there could have been no redemption.

verse 6 "if Christ had not come into the world . . . there could have been no redemption" The redemption that resulted from Christ's atoning sacrifice consists of two major parts: (1) the unconditional overcoming of physical death and (2) the conditional overcoming of spiritual death—in other words, giving man the opportunity, based on the degree of his repentance, of returning to live with God in the celestial kingdom, or at least escaping the clutches of Satan by inheriting either the terrestrial or the telestial kingdom.

"speaking of things to come as though they had already come" We have spoken previously of the so-called "prophetic perfect" verb tense (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 5:4-5). It is that a prophet may prophesy of things yet in the future, but speak of them as though they had occurred in the past or as if they were occurring in the present. It is interesting to see this very principle explained by the editorial comment that is inserted into the middle of this verse. After stating a future event but placing it in the past perfect tense ("if Christ had not come into the world"), the text then explains the use of the seemingly illogical verb tenses ("speaking of things to come as though they had already come"). Do we know for certain who inserted this editorial comment? It certainly could have been Abinadi himself or perhaps it was Alma or even the prophet Mormon (Mosiah 17:4).

7 And if Christ had not risen from the dead, or have broken the bands of death that the grave should have no victory, and that death should have no sting, there could have been no resurrection.

8 But there is a resurrection, therefore the grave hath no victory, and the sting of death is swallowed up in Christ.

verses 7-8 These verses simply restate the fact that through Christ's atonement, physical death, the "last enemy" (JST 1 Corinthians 15:26), has been eliminated as a permanent condition.

9 He is the light and the life of the world; yea, a light that is endless, that can never be darkened; yea, and also a life which is endless, that there can be no more death.

verse 9 “He is the light and the life of the world” What does this expression really mean? Perhaps man is not given, as yet, to fully understand it. In reviewing what has been said by authority about this phrase, it seems there are two general meanings. The first was given by Elder Bruce R. McConkie. He suggested that the phrase means that in some mysterious physical way, Christ is the very source of life, light, and truth (Mormon Doctrine, 448). Unfortunately, this explanation does not add to our understanding. It is possible that the light which emanates from God actually brings life and energy to all things in the universe (D&C 88:13). See The Concept of Light in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 15.

The second meaning is suggested by 3 Nephi 11:11. The atoning sacrifice qualified the Savior to be the “light”—the beacon or signal which man must navigate toward his eternal destiny—and the “life”—the giver of eternal life.

10 Even this mortal shall put on immortality, and this corruption shall put on incorruption, and shall be brought to stand before the bar of God, to be judged of him according to their works whether they be good or whether they be evil—verse 10 “this mortal shall put on immortality, and this corruption shall put on incorruption” For a discussion of the terms corruption and incorruption, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 2:11. “This mortal” refers to our mortal bodies. They shall be changed into immortal ones at our resurrection. “This corruption” also refers to our mortal bodies which are subject to physical change, disease, decay, aging, and death. They shall be changed into “incorruptible” eternal bodies.

We have commented previously that the sequence contained in this verse and in other scripture is a little confusing. This verse suggests that first we will be resurrected, and then we will stand before the judgment bar of God. We know, however, that at the moment of our resurrection, our eternal judgment and reward will already be evident and obvious since the type of body in which we come forth will betray that judgment. That is, we will come forth with celestial bodies, terrestrial bodies, or telestial bodies. Perhaps we will stand before the judgment bar of God after our resurrection, but that is likely to be more of a ritual or symbolic experience rather than the actual judgment.

There is another possible explanation for this enigma. Please see subtitle “What is the role of the resurrection in the final judgment of us all—two views of resurrection?” under “The Great Final Judgment” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 9, The Judgments.

11 If they be good, to the resurrection of endless life and happiness; and if they be evil, to the resurrection of endless damnation, being delivered up to the devil, who hath subjected them, which is damnation—verses 10-11 In these verses we again encounter the Book of Mormon's simplified doctrine of eternity—the “good” will enjoy “endless life and happiness” and the “evil” will suffer “endless damnation” in subjection to Satan. For a brief discussion of what it means to be damned, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:24. See also “Post-Mortal Life and the Book of Mormon” in The Spirit World in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 13.

We now are privileged to have further light on this subject as revealed to Joseph Smith in D&C 76. We know that salvation is divided into “many mansions.”

verse 11 While studying Mosiah 15, it was suggested that you review the understanding now available to us of the sequence of the two resurrections in the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:15. You may want to review those important concepts yet again. There we learned that there are two resurrections—the “first” and the “second.” The first resurrection has a “morning” and an “afternoon.” Those resurrected during the morning of the first resurrection (beginning at the moment of Christ's resurrection) will come forth with celestial bodies. Those who come forth with terrestrial bodies (during the Millennium) will come forth in the “afternoon” of the first resurrection. The second resurrection will occur following the millennial thousand years and will involve those bound for the telestial kingdom. And then, also as part of the second resurrection, those who have earned no kingdom of glory will come forth with resurrected bodies. These will spend eternity with Satan. They are the sons of Perdition.

The doctrine of the resurrection taught in the Book of Mormon is a simpler version. Abinadi teaches that the first resurrection involves the just and is a resurrection unto eternal life. The second resurrection includes the unjust and is unto damnation. Armed with the more complete understanding provided by modern revelation and summarized in the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:15, each of us must interpret for ourselves Abinadi's teachings. Apparently, he had not been given all of the details of the two resurrections that we have today. You might want to assume, in Book of Mormon terms, that the first resurrection includes only those who have earned the celestial glory or eternal life, and the second resurrection includes everyone else.

12 Having gone according to their own carnal wills and desires; having never called upon the Lord while the arms of mercy were extended towards them; for the arms of mercy were extended towards them, and they would not; they being warned of their iniquities and yet they would not depart from them; and they were commanded to repent and yet they would not repent.

verse 12 This verse describes the “natural man” who never yields to the offer of the “arms of mercy,” which might be interpreted here as the “enticings of the Holy Spirit.” See the commentary for verse 5 above.

13 And now, ought ye not to tremble and repent of your sins, and remember that only in and through Christ ye can be saved?

14 Therefore, if ye teach the law of Moses, also teach that it is a shadow of those things which are to come—verse 14 Abinadi summarizes and scolds Noah’s priests. He says, “If you are going to teach the law of Moses, then at least teach it in its proper context. Teach that it is a ‘shadow’ [type or symbol or foreshadowing] of the Savior who is to come.”

15 Teach them that redemption cometh through Christ the Lord, who is the very Eternal Father. Amen.

verse 15 “Christ the Lord, who is the very Eternal Father” We have previously discussed the reasons why Christ may be referred to as the Father. See, for example, the commentary for Mosiah 15:2.

Mosiah Chapter 17

1 And now it came to pass that when Abinadi had finished these sayings, that the king commanded that the priests should take him and cause that he should be put to death.

2 But there was one among them whose name was Alma, he also being a descendant of Nephi. And he was a young man, and he believed the words which Abinadi had spoken, for he knew concerning the iniquity which Abinadi had testified against them; therefore he began to plead with the king that he would not be angry with Abinadi, but suffer that he might depart in peace.

verse 2 “there was one among them whose name was Alma” Alma was one of Noah’s priests.

The Book of Mormon’s use of Alma as a man’s name has occasioned considerable amusement among uninformed critics of the book. If Joseph Smith knew the name Alma at all from his environment, it is highly likely that he would have known it as a Latinate woman’s name rather than as a masculine one (many will recognize the Latin phrase alma mater, which means “beneficent mother”). Recent documentary finds demonstrate, however, that Alma also occurs as a Semitic masculine personal name in the ancient Near East—just as it does in the Book of Mormon (see Paul Y. Hoskisson, “Alma as a Hebrew Name,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 7/1, 1998: 72-73; Terrence L. Szink, “Further Evidence of a Semitic Alma,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 8/1 [1999]: 70; and Terrence L. Szink, “The Personal Name ‘Alma’ at Ebla,” The Religious Educator 1/1, 2000: 53-56).

Brother Hugh Nibley has pointed out: “The name Alma has long been derided for its usage in the Book of Mormon as a man’s name. It is interesting to note that the name Alma has now been found in the Bar Kokhba letters as “Alma, son of Judah” (Encyclopedia of Mormonism, volume 1, “Book of Mormon Near Eastern Background”). See the supplemental article, Names in the Book of Mormon.

Joseph, of course, could not have known about Alma as a man’s name from any source existing in his frontier American environment.

“he was a young man” We can calculate that Alma was about twenty-five years old at this time, his having been born about 173 BC. Abinadi’s death was about 148 BC. We will later learn that Alma will die in 91 BC at the age of 82.

“he knew concerning the iniquity which Abinadi had testified against them” This phrase suggests that Alma had been troubled over the iniquity of his people, even before Abinadi’s appearance among them.

3 But the king was more wroth, and caused that Alma should be cast out from among them, and sent his servants after him that they might slay him.

verse 3 “But the king was more wroth” Alma’s pleading caused the king to be even more angry. Undoubtedly Noah harbored the nagging feeling, though mostly suppressed, that Abinadi had been teaching the truth. Noah’s psychological defense against this ambivalence and feeling of guilt was to become violently angry and seek to strike out against Alma.

4 But he fled from before them and hid himself that they found him not. And he being concealed for many days did write all the words which Abinadi had spoken.

verse 4 “he being concealed for many days did write all the words which Abinadi had spoken” This period of “many days” must have been for this young priest a period of profound anguish and soul searching as he “repented of his sins and iniquities” (Mosiah 18:1; 23:10) and sought for the Lord’s forgiveness.

We learn that the senior Alma was the author of that part of the record of the Zeniffites which gives the account of Abinadi’s ministry among them. Even though this phrase states that Alma wrote all the words which Abinadi spoke, we need not assume that our present-day book of Mosiah contains all of Abinadi’s teachings. There is evidence that the prophet Mormon may have abridged this record of Alma before he placed it upon the plates of Mormon. If you are interested in reviewing this evidence then see the commentaries for Mosiah 7:27, Mosiah 12:19, and Mormon 1:19.

In the Book of Mormon text there is no evidence that Alma ever had a private conversation with Abinadi or that he was ordained to the Melchizedek priesthood by him. One wonders if Alma had heard Abinadi’s initial testimony when Abinadi preached two years earlier. Perhaps that testimony prepared him for this final witness.

5 And it came to pass that the king caused that his guards should surround Abinadi and take him; and they bound him and cast him into prison.

6 And after three days, having counseled with his priests, he caused that he should again be brought before him.

verse 6 Abinadi was retained in prison for three days before being formally accused and condemned to death. Why the delay? Perhaps Noah and his priests had difficulty in deciding on a plausible capital charge to level against him. Or perhaps they were using a psychological maneuver to break his spirit through fear and intimidation. It was suggested previously that these events might have occurred at the feast of Pentecost, and that perhaps Abinadi was imprisoned until the festival was concluded (see the commentary for Mosiah 13:5).

7 And he said unto him: Abinadi, we have found an accusation against thee, and thou art worthy of death.

8 For thou hast said that God himself should come down among the children of men; and now, for this cause thou shalt be put to death unless thou wilt recall all the words which thou hast spoken evil concerning me and my people.

verse 8 Abinadi was not charged with a crime against the state. Rather he was charged with the crime of blasphemy. He had indeed said what he was accused of saying (see the commentary for Mosiah 13:28).

9 Now Abinadi said unto him: I say unto you, I will not recall the words which I have spoken unto you concerning this people, for they are true; and that ye may know of their surety I have suffered myself that I have fallen into your hands.

verse 9 “that ye may know of their surety I have suffered myself that I have fallen into your hands” Somehow Noah’s ordering and carrying out the execution of Abinadi will cause Noah to know in his heart that Abinadi’s preachings had all been true. We will learn in verse 11 that Noah already suspected their truth and was frightened by them. In verse 20 we will read that Abinadi’s death will also “seal the truth of his words.” For a discussion of the meaning of this provocative phrase, see the commentary for that verse.

10 Yea, and I will suffer even until death, and I will not recall my words, and they shall stand as a testimony against you. And if ye slay me ye will shed innocent blood, and this shall also stand as a testimony against you at the last day.

verse 10 “if ye slay me ye will shed innocent blood” What does it mean to shed innocent blood? How serious a sin is this? To shed innocent blood is simply to take life without justification, to kill unjustly. The premeditated shedding of innocent blood is said to be a “sin unto death” (1 John 5:16-17), meaning a sin for which there is “no forgiveness” (D&C 42:79). Does this mean that the shedding of innocent blood is the unpardonable sin? Can a man not repent and be cleansed of this sin? No.

The ultimate and unpardonable sin is to figuratively shed the only completely innocent blood, the blood of Jesus Christ. Once an individual has been converted to the divinity of Jesus Christ by the Spirit of the Holy Ghost and has come to know God and have an absolute witness, then that individual has a most serious and binding obligation. If he should ever turn altogether against the Church and come out in open rebellion against it, then he is guilty of the unpardonable sin. It is as though he “crucifies [Christ] afresh or assent[s] unto [his] death” (D&C 76:35; 132:27). Such an individual will be resurrected but will not inherit a kingdom of glory. Rather he will become a son of Perdition and spend eternity with Satan and his angels.

The unjustified shedding of human life is second only to the unpardonable sin in its gravity. Murder is said to be the unforgivable (rather than unpardonable) sin. A murderer may repent and be cleansed in the post-mortal life, and he may be admitted to a kingdom of glory—the telestial kingdom. He cannot, however be forgiven to the point of being worthy for the celestial kingdom, or even the terrestrial kingdom. He may become a “servant of the Most High; but where God and Christ dwell they cannot come” (D&C 76:112). For a more complete discussion of the Three Most Abominable Sins, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 18.

“this shall also stand as a testimony against you at the last day” Does the Lord allow the shedding of innocent blood in order that actions of the murderer may eventually serve as a witness against him? It is true that many unjust and dreadful things happen here on earth. Though the Lord certainly has the ability to intervene in such happenings, generally he does not. Usually he is inclined to allow man to use his agency as he wishes—for good or for ill (see Alma 14:10-11 and Alma 60:13).

11 And now king Noah was about to release him, for he feared his word; for he feared that the judgments of God would come upon him.

verse 11 “for he feared his words” Though he likely remained somewhat ambivalent, it is clear that Noah strongly suspected and feared the truth of Abinadi’s teachings.

12 But the priests lifted up their voices against him, and began to accuse him, saying: He has reviled the king. Therefore the king was stirred up in anger against him, and he delivered him up that he might be slain.

verse 12 “the priests lifted up their voices against him” The priests, seeing that the king was beginning to waver, knew just how to appeal to the king’s vanity. They said, “He has reviled the king.” Apparently reviling the king was a crime against the state, a type of sedition.

“he delivered him up that he might be slain” At the encouragement of his priests, Noah regained his depraved courage and delivered Abinadi to be slain.

13 And it came to pass that they took him and bound him, and scourged his skin with faggots, yea, even unto death.

verse 13 “scourged his skin with faggots, yea, even unto death” How exactly was Abinadi executed? We will later learn that he “suffered death by fire” (verse 20). In our minds eye, we intuitively think that he was burned at the stake, yet nowhere in the scripture do we read that he burned at the stake. Referring to this quotation from Mosiah 17:13, Robert J. Matthews wrote: “Three words in the foregoing sentence should be noted. The first is that they bound him. That seems self-explanatory. The second is that they scourged him. To scourge means to whip, flail, or beat. The third term is faggots. . . A faggot is a bundle of sticks or twigs, used for fuel. This passage seems to say that Abinadi’s tormentors took burning torches and poked him with these, burning his skin until he died” (“Abinadi: The Prophet and Martyr,” The Book of Mormon: Mosiah, Salvation Only Through Christ, Provo, Utah, 102-03). Then Abinadi “fell, having suffered death by fire” (verse 20). Brother Matthews further speculates: “In my mind I see Abinadi bound, possibly supported by something, and his fiendish executioners (probably the priests) gathered about him with burning torches (faggots) in their hands, jabbing him and rubbing him with these until they caused him to die. They actively, eagerly, and physically caused his death; they were not merely passive, interested bystanders watching a bonfire. I can imagine their dancing and cavorting about Abinadi, and hear their shouting, exulting, and gloating over what they were doing. And during it all, Abinadi was pronouncing prophecies of God’s vengeance upon them—prophecies that were literally fulfilled. The noise, the din, the stench would be awful! Wickedness and righteousness, life and death, are real, and Abinadi’s martyrdom really did happen” (Ibid., 103).

Brant Gardner has described an ancient Aztec practice of punitive beatings with “firebrands” or flaming sticks. In the Codex Mendoza, a richly illustrated ethnographic record of Aztec daily life that was produced in Mexico City around AD 1541, he discovered a painting which depicts two men beating a youth with burning firebrands. Although this Aztec practice of beating transgressors with firewood followed more than one thousand years after the death of Abinadi, it provides an interesting parallel to the method of Abinadi’s execution (FARMS Insights, volume 21, 2001, 3).

Royal Skousen has suggested that the word scourged in this verse probably represents a scribal error, and should rather have read scorched (FARMS Update, number 154, volume 22, 2002). The word scourged is found in the printer’s manuscript, but unfortunately the original manuscript is not extant for this passage. Elsewhere in the Book of Mormon, Abinadi is consistently referred to as having been burned to death (Mosiah 17:18, 20; Alma 25:9, 11). The reader should note that the following verse refers to the flames scorching Abinadi (for other uses of the word scorch, see Alma 15:3; 32:38). This scribal error might have occurred during the dictation of the text, or perhaps in creating the printer’s manuscript from the original. Dr. Skousen concludes: This “reasonable emendation permits the text to read consistently and plausibly—and without [having to hunt] for evidence that people can be scourged to death with faggots” (Ibid.).

14 And now when the flames began to scorch him, he cried unto them, saying:
15 Behold, even as ye have done unto me, so shall it come to pass that thy seed shall cause that many shall suffer the pains that I do suffer, even the pains of death by fire; and this because they believe in the salvation of the Lord their God.
16 And it will come to pass that ye shall be afflicted with all manner of diseases because of your iniquities.
17 Yea, and ye shall be smitten on every hand, and shall be driven and scattered to and fro, even as a wild flock is driven by wild and ferocious beasts.

18 And in that day ye shall be hunted, and ye shall be taken by the hand of your enemies, and then ye shall suffer, as I suffer, the pains of death by fire.

verses 15-18 Even as Abinadi was suffering death by fire, he prophesied: (1) that the descendants of his tormentors will yet execute others by fire for their beliefs. This occurrence is documented in Alma 25:5 when the seed or descendants of Noah's priests exercised unrighteous dominion over a group of Lamanites and burned some of them because of their beliefs. (2) Abinadi also prophesied that Noah and his priests would be afflicted with diseases, smitten, driven, scattered, hunted, and suffer death by fire. Noah himself will eventually be executed by fire at the hands of his own people (Mosiah 19:20). Many of the priests of Noah will be hunted and put to death by Nephites (Alma 25:3-4) and by the Lamanites (Alma 25:7-12).

19 Thus God executeth vengeance upon those that destroy his people. O God, receive my soul.

20 And now, when Abinadi had said these words, he fell, having suffered death by fire; yea, having been put to death because he would not deny the commandments of God, having sealed the truth of his words by his death.

verse 20 "having sealed the truth of his words by his death" Abinadi's death would serve as a witness or testimony against those who did not accept his teachings. Also, it is likely that Abinadi's martyrdom planted or "sealed," in the hearts of those who heard him, an abiding suspicion or fear that Abinadi was in fact speaking the truth.

Mosiah Chapter 18

Scripture Mastery

Mosiah 18:8-10 The senior Alma's exhortation to his people at the waters of Mormon: As ye are desirous to come into the fold of God, and to be called his people, and are willing to bear one another's burdens, that they may be light; Yea, and are willing to mourn with those that mourn; yea, and comfort those that stand in need of comfort, and to stand as witnesses of God at all times and in all things, and in all places that ye may be in, even until death, that ye may be redeemed of God, and be numbered with those of the first resurrection, that ye may have eternal life. If this be the desire of your hearts, what have you against being baptized?

The author or first person now becomes the prophet Mormon. Alma is referred to in the third person.

1 And now, it came to pass that Alma, who had fled from the servants of king Noah, repented of his sins and iniquities, and went about privately among the people, and began to teach the words of Abinadi—verse 1 It seems likely, living as one of Noah's priests, that Alma had much of which to repent (see Mosiah 23:9). His story is certainly one of true and complete repentance.

2 Yea, concerning that which was to come, and also concerning the resurrection of the dead, and the redemption of the people, which was to be brought to pass through the power, and sufferings, and death of Christ, and his resurrection and ascension into heaven.

verse 2 "concerning that which was to come" Undoubtedly this phrase includes the essential doctrine—the mortal advent and atonement of Jesus Christ.

3 And as many as would hear his word he did teach. And he taught them privately, that it might not come to the knowledge of the king. And many did believe his words.

4 And it came to pass that as many as did believe him did go forth to a place which was called Mormon, having received its name from the king, being in the borders of the land having been infested, by times or at seasons, by wild beasts.

verse 4 This verse suggests that the place called Mormon was named after a previous Nephite king named Mormon of which we have no account. We will later learn that the prophet / compiler of the Book of Mormon—the prophet Mormon himself—was named after this land to which Alma has now fled (3 Nephi 5:12).

“being in the borders of the land” This phrase suggests that the land of Mormon was just outside the borders of the smaller land of Nephi. We gain the impression that it was quite near the city of Nephi—perhaps not more than a two or three day journey.

In 1 Nephi, we interpreted the word “borders” as mountains, though there seems little reason for that interpretation here.

“by times or at seasons” The use of this phrase in this verse is unique in all the scriptures. It seems to mean from time to time at certain seasons of the year.

5 Now, there was in Mormon a fountain of pure water, and Alma resorted thither, there being near the water a thicket of small trees, where he did hide himself in the daytime from the searches of the king.

verse 5 “a fountain of pure water” A fountain is most commonly interpreted as a spring or source of water from the earth. It may also include a reservoir or lake wherein the water collects.

6 And it came to pass that as many as believed him went thither to hear his words.

7 And it came to pass after many days there were a goodly number gathered together at the place of Mormon, to hear the words of Alma. Yea, all were gathered together that believed on his word, to hear him. And he did teach them, and did preach unto them repentance, and redemption, and faith on the Lord.

verse 7 “after many days there were a goodly number gathered” We will learn in verse 16 that there were just over two hundred people gathered there.

verse 8-10 These verses contain five promises a person desiring to enter the kingdom of God must make and four promises which the Lord makes in turn to those who endure righteously in his kingdom. This two-way promise or covenant is the “baptismal covenant.”

The promises made by the individual are that they are willing (they promise) to:

1. Enter the fold of God.
2. Be called by his name.
3. Bear the burdens of their fellow sojourners—suffer vicariously the pains of others and provide comfort to them—including their willingness to “mourn with those that mourn.” We must love as he loves (with infinite charity).
4. Stand as witness of God (Jesus Christ) at all times and in all places.
5. Serve God.
5. Keep his commandments (2 Nephi 31:6-17; Moroni 6:2-4; D&C 20:37).

In turn the Lord promises that those baptized will:

1. Be redeemed—be cleansed by the purifying fire of the Holy Ghost (3 Nephi 12:2).
2. Be numbered with those of the first resurrection.
3. Have eternal life.
4. Pour out his Spirit more abundantly upon you.

8 And it came to pass that he said unto them: Behold, here are the waters of Mormon (for thus were they called) and now, as ye are desirous to come into the fold of God, and to be called his people, and are willing to bear one another's burdens, that they may be light;

9 Yea, and are willing to mourn with those that mourn; yea, and comfort those that stand in need of comfort, and to stand as witnesses of God at all times and in all things, and in all places that ye may be in, even until death, that ye may be redeemed of God, and be numbered with those of the first resurrection, that ye may have eternal life—

verse 9 “stand as witnesses of God at all times and in all things, and in all places” Alma's counsel is a reminder to all of us of the importance of being willing to bear witness of Jesus Christ at any time and in any place. The recounting of one's witness clearly strengthens the faith of the testifier as well as the faith of those who receive his testimony.

“be numbered with those of the first resurrection” Review the commentary for Mosiah 16:11. In the Book of Mormon, the phrase “first resurrection” refers to those who are resurrected to inherit the celestial glory or eternal life. We now refer to this resurrection as “the morning of the first resurrection.”

10 Now I say unto you, if this be the desire of your hearts, what have you against being baptized in the name of the Lord, as a witness before him that ye have entered into a covenant with him, that ye will serve him and keep his commandments, that he may pour out his Spirit more abundantly upon you?

verse 10 The ordinance of baptism is the witness before God that a person has entered into the baptismal covenant.

Alma is given credit for being the founder of a truly covenant church. Here he organizes not a loose association of interested people but rather a committed congregation bound to one another and to their God in a covenant relationship. See a discussion of the three periods of an organized Church of Jesus Christ in the Book of Mormon in the commentary for 2 Nephi 6:2.

11 And now when the people had heard these words, they clapped their hands for joy, and exclaimed: This is the desire of our hearts.

verse 11 Dr. Joseph L. Allen related a charming anecdote pertinent to this verse: “On one of our tours, my wife and I were walking through the market place in Chichicastenango, Guatemala. Our group was shopping when a native Quiche woman came up to us and said, ‘May I be your guide to take you through the church?’ The church is the place where the native document, the Popol Vuh, was discovered, so we were eager to take the tour. On the tour, our guide not only explained about things in the church but also took us through the little museum. We joked a little with her, and she got so excited that several times she said something and then laughed and laughed. I asked my wife, ‘Do you see what she’s doing? Do you remember reading in Mosiah, when Alma baptized at the waters of Mormon, that all of the people clapped their hands for joy? Look at what she’s doing every time she laughs.’ We smiled and agreed. ‘That’s right. She swings her hands together so they meet about eye level. She then gives a little jump and laughs.’ I then recalled that I had seen this behavior hundreds of times in Mesoamerica. Dona Sofia at the black pottery shop in Woxaca does the very same thing. We concluded, ‘I guess that makes more sense than applauding like we do or giving high fives like the athletes do’” (Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon, 173-74).

12 And now it came to pass that Alma took Helam, he being one of the first, and went and stood forth in the water, and cried, saying: O Lord, pour out thy Spirit upon thy servant, that he may do this work with holiness of heart.

13 And when he had said these words, the Spirit of the Lord was upon him, and he said: Helam, I baptize thee, having authority from the Almighty God, as a testimony that ye have entered into a covenant to serve him until you are dead as to the mortal body; and may the Spirit of the Lord be poured out upon you; and may he grant unto you eternal life, through the redemption of Christ, whom he has prepared from the foundation of the world.

verse 13 This verse is either a baptismal prayer or a bit of counsel from Alma to Helam.

“having authority from the Almighty God” We have discussed previously the possible origin of Alma’s priesthood (see the commentary for Mosiah 11:5). We know that he did have the priesthood from this verse and from verse 18 of this chapter. It is not clearly stated in the Book of Mormon whether or not Zeniff or any of his priests were properly ordained to the Melchizedek priesthood. We would presume that the priesthood authority did reside with Zeniff and his priests. It seems unlikely the prophet Abinadi had an opportunity to ordain Alma before Abinadi’s martyrdom. Thus, it is likely that Alma and the other priests of King Noah did trace their authority back to Zeniff’s court.

“ye have entered into covenant to serve him until you are dead as to the mortal body” This phrase refers to this mortal probationary period.

“may the Spirit of the Lord be poured out upon you” The ordinance of baptism carries with it a promise of the gift of the Holy Ghost.

Baptism has been mentioned previously in the Book of Mormon text and has been acknowledged to be an essential step for salvation (2 Nephi 31:9, 17-18). However, the context in which this ordinance is regarded in verses 13 through 17 is unique. This is the first time that baptism is represented as a necessary initiatory rite for entrance into the church.

14 And after Alma had said these words, both Alma and Helam were buried in the water; and they arose and came forth out of the water rejoicing, being filled with the Spirit.

verse 14 “both Alma and Helam were buried in the water” This is a remarkable and unusual event. It is without precedent in all scripture. Was Alma baptizing both himself and Helam here? Joseph Fielding Smith taught that he was not (Answers to Gospel Questions, 3:203-4). Alma already held the priesthood, and it is therefore presumed that he had been previously baptized.

Perhaps his going down into the water with Helam was merely a token of his humility and full repentance and his desire to share in the first baptism in this new church. Perhaps he wished to recommit himself to God and to set the example for all who were to follow. Again, the Holy Spirit manifests himself following the ordinance of baptism.

We also learn that the proper method of baptism is to be “buried in the water” (Romans 6:3-6).

15 And again, Alma took another, and went forth a second time into the water, and baptized him according to the first, only he did not bury himself again in the water.

16 And after this manner he did baptize every one that went forth to the place of Mormon; and they were in number about two hundred and four souls; yea, and they were baptized in the waters of Mormon, and were filled with the grace of God.

verse 16 “they were baptized in the waters of Mormon, and were filled with the grace of God” The phrase “grace of God” here simply means the love of God and his willingness to extend to mankind blessings that are not fully merited. The word grace is virtually always associated with the blessings of God received by virtue of his atonement. Yet Christ would not atone for the sins of mankind for another 170-180 years. Here is another manifestation of the infinite nature of Christ’s atonement. Two of the obvious blessings received at the time of baptism are the forgiveness of sins and the gift of the Holy Ghost. Both of these blessings can only be received by virtue of the Lord’s atoning sacrifice.

17 And they were called the church of God, or the church of Christ, from that time forward. And it came to pass that whosoever was baptized by the power and authority of God was added to his church.

verse 17 “And they were called the church of God, or the church of Christ” Actually Alma is organizing here the second Nephite church. He is restoring the Church of Christ to the land.

The first Nephite church was brought to the New World by Lehi and his traveling company. The apostasy occurred in the land of Nephi just prior to the time of the first Mosiah. This apostasy made necessary Mosiah’s departure out of the land in about 210 BC. This was apparently an incomplete apostasy since the priesthood authority did remain among the people.

The prophet Mormon will later refer to Alma’s church as “the first church which was established among them after their transgression” (3 Nephi 5:12). Mosiah needed to find a new land, Zarahemla, where the church may one day again be established and be able to flourish. The instrument through which the church was restored was Alma (Mosiah 23:16; 29:47; Alma 5:3), and ironically that restoration occurred in the very land of Nephi where the apostasy had occurred decades previously. The date of this restoration is about 145 BC. Though the church certainly existed at the time of Lehi and Nephi and Jacob, the first specific reference in the Book of Mormon to a church as an organized body of believers is here in connection with these events in the land of Nephi. There is no specific mention of the church’s actually existing in the New World in the small plates of Nephi.

We will learn that after the arrival of Alma back in the land of Zarahemla in 121 BC, King Mosiah, the son of King Benjamin and grandson of the older Mosiah, will grant Alma permission to set up branches of the church throughout the land of Zarahemla (Mosiah 25:19-22). References to the church are actually quite common in and after the book of Mosiah.

The conversion of Alma’s people and the later conversion of king Benjamin’s people in 124 BC were the two great enabling events that prepared the way for the establishment of the church among the Nephites ruled by King Mosiah.

18 And it came to pass that Alma, having authority from God, ordained priests; even one priest to every fifty of their number did he ordain to preach unto them, and to teach them concerning the things pertaining to the kingdom of God.

verse 18 “Alma, having authority from God” See the commentary for Mosiah 11:5 for a discussion of the possible origin of Alma’s priesthood.

“Alma . . . ordained priests; even one priest to every fifty” We will later learn that there were also “teachers” ordained among them (Mosiah 25:21-22). We should not suppose that these “priests” or “teachers” correspond to the office of priest or teacher in the Aaronic priesthood. There is no evidence the Aaronic or Levitical priesthood existed among the Book of Mormon peoples. These priests may have assisted in the rituals of the law of Moses, but the text suggests they were mainly involved in teaching the people.

19 And he commanded them that they should teach nothing save it were the things which he had taught, and which had been spoken by the mouth of the holy prophets.

20 Yea, even he commanded them that they should preach nothing save it were repentance and faith on the Lord, who had redeemed his people.

verse 20 “he commanded them that they should preach nothing save it were repentance and faith on the Lord” We might use this scripture to justify a failure to study the scripture and gospel principles and doctrines. “After all,” we might rationalize, “if we understand repentance and faith, then that should suffice.” Certainly, this was not Alma’s intent. To “preach repentance” is to teach of Jesus Christ, the fall, the atonement, resurrection, obedience to the ordinances and principles of the gospel, repentance, and the possibility of exaltation. Indeed, it is to teach all the principles of the gospel.

21 And he commanded them that there should be no contention one with another, but that they should look forward with one eye, having one faith and one baptism, having their hearts knit together in unity and in love one towards another.

verse 21 Unity was to be their watchword. “By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another” (John 13:35). This verse also contains the idea that there is only one faith, one Lord, one baptism, one true church (Ephesians 4:5-6).

22 And thus he commanded them to preach. And thus they became the children of God.

verse 22 “they became the children of [Christ]” We are all, of course, children of God the Father. Through the fall, however, we have all become in a sense alienated from him. By accepting Christ and his atonement, and through repentance and righteous living, we are restored to full membership in the family of the Father and the Son. Our membership in the family of Jesus Christ applies to our mortal sojourn and beyond.

23 And he commanded them that they should observe the sabbath day, and keep it holy, and also every day they should give thanks to the Lord their God.

verse 23 “every day they should give thanks to the Lord their God” Here is a reminder that one day in church does not compensate for six days of spiritual carelessness.

24 And he also commanded them that the priests whom he had ordained should labor with their own hands for their support.

25 And there was one day in every week that was set apart that they should gather themselves together to teach the people, and to worship the Lord their God, and also, as often as it was in their power, to assemble themselves together.

26 And the priests were not to depend upon the people for their support; but for their labor they were to receive the grace of God, that they might wax strong in the Spirit, having the knowledge of God, that they might teach with power and authority from God.

verse 26 “for their labor they were to receive the grace of God” See the commentary for verse 16 above. The blessings promised to the priests for their labors would have included closer association with the Spirit, greater knowledge of spiritual truths (D&C 121:42), and the ability to speak and teach with authority.

verses 27-29 It is apparent that Alma sought to establish among his people a Zion society in which the people would live the law of consecration and stewardship.

We have previously studied Benjamin’s counsel to the effect that we cannot be free of sin lest we voluntarily impart of our substance as we are able for the care of those less fortunate (Mosiah 4:26). For those of us who might be inclined to hoard our excesses, these verses contain another reminder that this principle is not going to go away.

27 And again Alma commanded that the people of the church should impart of their substance, every one according to that which he had; if he have more abundantly he should impart more abundantly; and of him that had but little, but little should be required; and to him that had not should be given.

28 And thus they should impart of their substance of their own free will and good desires towards God, and to those priests that stood in need, yea, and to every needy, naked soul.

29 And this he said unto them, having been commanded of God; and they did walk uprightly before God, imparting to one another both temporally and spiritually according to their needs and their wants.

verse 29 “according to their needs and their wants” The proper relationship between needs and wants has been clarified in this dispensation when the Lord taught, in referring to the claim each person has upon the goods in the bishop’s storehouse:

“You are to have equal claims on the properties . . . every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just” (D&C 82:17, italics added).

30 And now it came to pass that all this was done in Mormon, yea, by the waters of Mormon, in the forest that was near the waters of Mormon; yea, the place of Mormon, the waters of Mormon, the forest of Mormon, how beautiful are they to the eyes of them who there came to the knowledge of their Redeemer; yea, and how blessed are they, for they shall sing to his praise forever.

verse 30 The first “they” in this verse has, as its antecedent, the waters and forest of Mormon. The other two “they’s” seem to refer to those converted and baptized at the place called Mormon.

31 And these things were done in the borders of the land, that they might not come to the knowledge of the king.

verse 31 The phrase “in the borders of the land” may mean “in the outskirts of the land,” or perhaps in the mountains of the land. In either case, it implies that Alma wanted to be far enough away from Noah, and sufficiently inaccessible, so that Noah would not discover Alma’s doings.

32 But behold, it came to pass that the king, having discovered a movement among the people, sent his servants to watch them. Therefore on the day that they were assembling themselves together to hear the word of the Lord they were discovered unto the king.

verse 32 “they were discovered unto the king” The use of the word discovered here is an archaic one and means their presence was made known to or revealed to the king.

33 And now the king said that Alma was stirring up the people to rebellion against him; therefore he sent his army to destroy them.

34 And it came to pass that Alma and the people of the Lord were apprised of the coming of the king’s army; therefore they took their tents and their families and departed into the wilderness.

verse 34 The duration of Alma’s sojourn in the place called Mormon is not known. A few weeks to several months seems reasonable.

35 And they were in number about four hundred and fifty souls.

verse 35 Obviously, as Alma sojourned in Mormon, people continued to gather with the saints (see verse 16).

Mosiah Chapter 19

1 And it came to pass that the army of the king returned, having searched in vain for the people of the Lord.

2 And now behold, the forces of the king were small, having been reduced, and there began to be a division among the remainder of the people.

verse 2 “the forces of the king were small, having been reduced” What factors caused a reduction in the number of soldiers in the army of the king? Obviously, some had been converted by Alma and had joined him in the place called Mormon. Others may have been caught up in the “division among the remainder of the people,” joined with the minority opposition, and deserted the army.

It is possible that an increasing awareness of the king’s profligate and cruel ways among the people, perhaps partly precipitated by Abinadi’s preachings and Noah’s treatment of Abinadi, resulted in the growing opposition to king Noah among his people.

3 And the lesser part began to breathe out threatenings against the king, and there began to be a great contention among them.

4 And now there was a man among them whose name was Gideon, and he being a strong man and an enemy to the king, therefore he drew his sword, and swore in his wrath that he would slay the king.

5 And it came to pass that he fought with the king; and when the king saw that he was about to overpower him, he fled and ran and got upon the tower which was near the temple.

6 And Gideon pursued after him and was about to get upon the tower to slay the king, and the king cast his eyes round about towards the land of Shemlon, and behold, the army of the Lamanites were within the borders of the land.

verse 6 It is difficult, of course, to know the exact geography of the greater land of Nephi from the sketchy account we have in the Book of Mormon text. At this period of time there are three important lesser lands in the area. These are the lands of Nephi (or Lehi-Nephi), Shilom, and Shemlon. How are these lands oriented with respect to one another? It is not possible to know for certain. One can only create a plausible model that fits the text. We do know that the Nephites were allowed by the Lamanites to occupy the lands of Lehi-Nephi and Shilom (Mosiah 9:6). It would seem likely that these lands bordered upon one another. The Lamanites occupied the nearby land of Shemlon. It is also likely that this land borders one or both of the Nephite lands. Your author favors a model which locates the land of Shilom to the immediate south and sharing a common border with the land of Lehi-Nephi. Shemlon would be located to the south and perhaps to the west of both lands and perhaps sharing a common border with both Shilom and Lehi-Nephi (see the Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands).

7 And now the king cried out in the anguish of his soul, saying: Gideon, spare me, for the Lamanites are upon us, and they will destroy us; yea, they will destroy my people.

8 And now the king was not so much concerned about his people as he was about his own life; nevertheless, Gideon did spare his life.

9 And the king commanded the people that they should flee before the Lamanites, and he himself did go before them, and they did flee into the wilderness, with their women and their children.

verse 9 Contrast Noah's handling of this Lamanite advance with that of King Benjamin who, in similar circumstances, "gathered together his armies, and he did stand against them; and he did fight with the strength of his own arm, with the sword of Laban" (Words of Mormon 1:13).

10 And it came to pass that the Lamanites did pursue them, and did overtake them, and began to slay them.

11 Now it came to pass that the king commanded them that all the men should leave their wives and their children, and flee before the Lamanites.

verse 11 It seems likely that Noah issued this appalling and ignoble order in his own self interest. In his headlong rush to escape, he abandoned his own wife and family and then sought to legitimize his cowardliness by issuing an official mandate.

12 Now there were many that would not leave them, but had rather stay and perish with them. And the rest left their wives and their children and fled.

13 And it came to pass that those who tarried with their wives and their children caused that their fair daughters should stand forth and plead with the Lamanites that they would not slay them.

14 And it came to pass that the Lamanites had compassion on them, for they were charmed with the beauty of their women.

15 Therefore the Lamanites did spare their lives, and took them captives and carried them back to the land of Nephi, and granted unto them that they might possess the land, under the conditions that they would deliver up king Noah into the hands of the Lamanites, and deliver up their property, even one half of all they possessed, one half of their gold, and their silver, and all their precious things, and thus they should pay tribute to the king of the Lamanites from year to year.

verse 15 Here Limhi, a son of king Noah (see verses 16-17, 26) and his people were brought into bondage as Abinadi had previously prophesied (Mosiah 11:20-21; 12:2). Every other segment of Nephites who lived in the land of Nephi when Abinadi made his prophesy will eventually spend some time living in bondage. These included the people of Alma (Mosiah 23:25-24:15) and the descendants of Amulon (Alma 25:1-12). Amulon was one of the priests of Noah who became the leader of that wicked renegade group (Mosiah 23:32).

“they should pay tribute to the king of the Lamanites from year to year” It is helpful to have in mind a concept of time in connection with these events. It is felt that Alma and his converts left the land of Nephi for the land of Mormon in about 147 BC. They probably departed the land of Mormon for the land of Helam in about 146 or 145 BC. They remained in the land of Helam until they returned to Zarahemla in 121 BC. Noah and his people were chased out of the city of Nephi and then placed in bondage in about 145 BC. The Nephites would live in bondage with Limhi as their king until they were rescued by Ammon in 121 BC. They were led back to Zarahemla the same year that Alma and people arrived there. Apparently Limhi and his people arrived in Zarahemla a few weeks or months before the people of Alma.

16 And now there was one of the sons of the king among those that were taken captive, whose name was Limhi.

17 And now Limhi was desirous that his father should not be destroyed; nevertheless, Limhi was not ignorant of the iniquities of his father, he himself being a just man.

18 And it came to pass that Gideon sent men into the wilderness secretly, to search for the king and those that were with him. And it came to pass that they met the people in the wilderness, all save the king and his priests.

verse 18 Gideon sent his men into the wilderness but did not accompany them.

19 Now they had sworn in their hearts that they would return to the land of Nephi, and if their wives and their children were slain, and also those that had tarried with them, that they would seek revenge, and also perish with them.

verse 19 The “they”s in this verse refer those men who had initially followed King Noah’s orders to abandon their wives and children and flee before the Lamanites. However, they had had second thoughts, had left the King and his priests, and were returning home to the land of Nephi to rejoin their wives and children, if their families were still alive. They had also executed king Noah, as we will learn in the following verse.

20 And the king commanded them that they should not return; and they were angry with the king, and caused that he should suffer, even unto death by fire.

verse 20 Abinadi had warned King Noah that his life should be “valued even as a garment in a hot furnace” (Mosiah 12:3).

21 And they were about to take the priests also and put them to death, and they fled before them.

verse 21 The priests of Noah had fled before this repentant group.

22 And it came to pass that they were about to return to the land of Nephi, and they met the men of Gideon. And the men of Gideon told them of all that had happened to their wives and their children; and that the Lamanites had granted unto them that they might possess the land by paying a tribute to the Lamanites of one half of all they possessed.

23 And the people told the men of Gideon that they had slain the king, and his priests had fled from them farther into the wilderness.

24 And it came to pass that after they had ended the ceremony, that they returned to the land of Nephi, rejoicing, because their wives and their children were not slain; and they told Gideon what they had done to the king.

verse 24 “after they had ended the ceremony” This is the only use of the word ceremony in the Book of Mormon text. It seems to imply that the meeting between the men of Gideon and the exiled Nephites was friendly and polite and perhaps formal.

25 And it came to pass that the king of the Lamanites made an oath unto them, that his people should not slay them.

verse 25 Obviously Gideon or Limhi relayed the account of the fate of Noah to the Lamanite king who was satisfied that Noah was dead (see verse 15).

26 And also Limhi, being the son of the king, having the kingdom conferred upon him by the people, made oath unto the king of the Lamanites that his people should pay tribute unto him, even one half of all they possessed.

verse 26 “Limhi . . . having the kingdom conferred upon him by the people” Limhi became the king because he was the son of Noah. The role of “the people” was purely confirmatory.

27 And it came to pass that Limhi began to establish the kingdom and to establish peace among his people.

28 And the king of the Lamanites set guards round about the land, that he might keep the people of Limhi in the land, that they might not depart into the wilderness; and he did support his guards out of the tribute which he did receive from the Nephites.

29 And now king Limhi did have continual peace in his kingdom for the space of two years, that the Lamanites did not molest them nor seek to destroy them.

verses 25-29 In these verses Limhi and his people enter into a treaty with the Lamanites. In making this treaty both parties swore an oath that they would not break the treaty. This treaty will soon be ruptured by the “stealing” of 24 Lamanite maidens by the priests of Noah. This rupture was so severe that it will bring about military reprisal against Limhi and his Nephite people.

It is easy to understand this anger on the part of the Lamanites. Not only were their daughters the victims of a sexual crime, but conquered Nephite subjects appeared to be rising in defiance. Moreover, in the ancient world, including in ancient Israel, oaths and treaty-covenants were of such importance that breaking one's oath could literally become a matter of life and death. Since breaking a treaty sworn in God's name was seen as nothing less than blasphemy, such oaths or covenants were often accompanied with threats of divine and temporal curses (including death) for breaking such (cf. Exodus 20:7; Deuteronomy 30:15–20; Ruth 1:16–17; 1 Samuel 20:13; Jeremiah 34:18–20; Zechariah 5:1–4; Daniel 9:11) (Menachem Elon, "Oath," in Encyclopedia Judaica; Bernhard W. Anderson, "Covenant," in The Oxford Companion to the Bible, ed. Bruce M. Metzger and Michael D. Coogan, New York, NY: Oxford University Press, 1993, 138–139; James McKeown, Ruth, The Two Horizons Old Testament Commentary, Grand Rapids, MI: William B. Eerdmans, 2015, 28).

Mosiah Chapter 20

1 Now there was a place in Shemlon where the daughters of the Lamanites did gather themselves together to sing, and to dance, and to make themselves merry.

verse 1 It is interesting to learn that in ancient Israel there was a widely-celebrated holiday or festival which occurred for several centuries. It occurred on the 15th day of the fifth month, called Av. It was a matrimonial holiday during which the maidens of Israel gathered to dance. Their purpose was to attract prospective husbands. In turn, the young men attended this event to watch the dancing and hunt for a suitable bride. Noah's priests may well have known of the time and place of this event in advance. Perhaps this explains the fact that the young Lamanite women were not terribly unwilling to become the priests' wives. There is no indication that any of them tried to escape. And after all, they would have been dancing to attract husbands. All of them later pled with their brothers and fathers not to kill their husbands (Mosiah 23:33) (Based on research by John W. Welch, Robert F. Smith, and Gordon C. Thomasson. "Dancing Maidens and the Fifteenth of Av" in Reexploring the Book of Mormon, 139-41).

2 And it came to pass that there was one day a small number of them gathered together to sing and to dance.

3 And now the priests of king Noah, being ashamed to return to the city of Nephi, yea, and also fearing that the people would slay them, therefore they durst not return to their wives and their children.

4 And having tarried in the wilderness, and having discovered the daughters of the Lamanites, they laid and watched them;

5 And when there were but few of them gathered together to dance, they came forth out of their secret places and took them and carried them into the wilderness; yea, twenty and four of the daughters of the Lamanites they carried into the wilderness.

verse 5 How many priests of Noah had he maintained in his court? Although the number is never given, some have regarded this verse as evidence that there had been twenty-five counting, of course, Alma.

It has been pointed out by critics of the Book of Mormon that this story of the kidnapping of young Lamanite women is similar to a story in the Bible in which men of the tribe of Benjamin kidnapped daughters of Israel at Shiloh (Judges 21:19-21). Following a civil war among the Israelites, most of the tribe of Benjamin was destroyed. It was recognized by other Israelites that this tribe was in danger of extinction. In order to preserve and rejuvenate the tribe, wives were needed by the Benjaminites. The other tribes, however, had vowed not to allow their daughters to marry the Benjaminites. To get around this vow, a plan was devised. The Benjaminites were instructed to kidnap some young Israelite women who lived at Shiloh while these young women danced in the vineyards. As these young women danced, the Benjaminites lay hidden. They then emerged from hiding, and each caught a wife and retreated to the land of Benjamin. While some may see this story of the kidnapper Amulonites as one which Joseph Smith plagiarized as he wrote the Book of Mormon, one LDS scholar sees it as a purposeful and effective re-emphasis of the lessons taught in the biblical story (Alan Goff, "The Stealing of the Daughters of the Lamanites" in Rediscovering the Book of Mormon, 67-74). The author of this story in Mosiah 20:1-5 probably did know of the similar story in Judges to which he had access from the brass plates. He likely included this story of the Amulonites as a parallel account intended to emphasize the important negative lessons which we may learn from these former priests of Noah.

6 And it came to pass that when the Lamanites found that their daughters had been missing, they were angry with the people of Limhi, for they thought it was the people of Limhi.

7 Therefore they sent their armies forth; yea, even the king himself went before his people; and they went up to the land of Nephi to destroy the people of Limhi.

verse 7 The Lamanites felt the Nephites had broken the treaty. The reason they reacted so strongly was they thought the Nephites had broken an oath. Indeed, "they sent their armies forth; yea, even the king himself went before his people; and they went up to the land of Nephi to destroy the people of Limhi."

As explained by S. Kent Brown, "In general, when a treaty has evidently been broken, the question is, "How flagrant must a violation be before the sovereign could legitimately muster his military forces and attack the recalcitrant vassal?" The Lamanite king must have seen a series of misdeeds in the abduction of the young women. First, it was an act of stealing—a clear breach of law; the people there were not in a state of war or national tension. Second, any marriages that might result would consequently be illegal or, at the very least, extremely odious. Third, the kidnapping was evidence, as he perceived the matter, of the breaking of solemn pledges made only two years earlier. It would appear that he had no choice except to bring down the weight of the Lamanite army on the Nephite colonists" (S. Kent Brown, "Marriage and Treaty in the Book of Mormon," in From Jerusalem to Zarahemla: Literary and Historical Studies of the Book of Mormon, Provo, UT: Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, 1998, 103).

Perhaps one reason this story was included in the Book of Mormon is that it sets up the later accounts of the priests of Noah and their descendants (Alma 25:4, 12; 43:13). By understanding where those descendants came from (the captured Lamanite maidens) the rest of Mormon's account of the Nephite / Lamanite wars makes more sense. Also, it shows how firmly anchored the Book of Mormon is in biblical culture. Even the Lamanites appear to have retained this honorable part of their cultural heritage. The harsh reaction of the Lamanites to a perceived broken oath makes perfect sense in light of the well established cultural practices of biblical oath-making.

8 And now Limhi had discovered them from the tower, even all their preparations for war did he discover; therefore he gathered his people together, and laid wait for them in the fields and in the forests.

9 And it came to pass that when the Lamanites had come up, that the people of Limhi began to fall upon them from their waiting places, and began to slay them.

10 And it came to pass that the battle became exceedingly sore, for they fought like lions for their prey.

11 And it came to pass that the people of Limhi began to drive the Lamanites before them; yet they were not half so numerous as the Lamanites. But they fought for their lives, and for their wives, and for their children; therefore they exerted themselves and like dragons did they fight.

verse 11 The simile of “fighting like dragons” is unique to the Book of Mormon. It is found also in Alma 43:44.

12 And it came to pass that they found the king of the Lamanites among the number of their dead; yet he was not dead, having been wounded and left upon the ground, so speedy was the flight of his people.

13 And they took him and bound up his wounds, and brought him before Limhi, and said: Behold, here is the king of the Lamanites; he having received a wound has fallen among their dead, and they have left him; and behold, we have brought him before you; and now let us slay him.

14 But Limhi said unto them: Ye shall not slay him, but bring him hither that I may see him. And they brought him. And Limhi said unto him: What cause have ye to come up to war against my people? Behold, my people have not broken the oath that I made unto you; therefore, why should ye break the oath which ye made unto my people?

verse 14 We have discussed previously the sacred and binding nature of oaths in this ancient culture even when made by the wicked. Apart from the one in this verse, there are no other instances of broken oaths in the Book of Mormon. We will read in the next verse the Lamanite king’s justification for breaking his oath in this instance.

15 And now the king said: I have broken the oath because thy people did carry away the daughters of my people; therefore, in my anger I did cause my people to come up to war against thy people.

16 And now Limhi had heard nothing concerning this matter; therefore he said: I will search among my people and whosoever has done this thing shall perish. Therefore he caused a search to be made among his people.

17 Now when Gideon had heard these things, he being the king's captain, he went forth and said unto the king: I pray thee forbear, and do not search this people, and lay not this thing to their charge.

verse 17 To “forbear” means to stop what you are doing. This word is not to be confused with a “forebear” which is an ancestor.

18 For do ye not remember the priests of thy father, whom this people sought to destroy? And are they not in the wilderness? And are not they the ones who have stolen the daughters of the Lamanites?

19 And now, behold, and tell the king of these things, that he may tell his people that they may be pacified towards us; for behold they are already preparing to come against us; and behold also there are but few of us.

verse 19 Gideon urgently counsels King Limhi to explain the situation immediately to the Lamanite king—including informing him of the situation of the priests of Noah. Gideon’s military intelligence had informed Gideon that the Lamanites had already regrouped and were approaching again the city of Nephi to do battle.

20 And behold, they come with their numerous hosts; and except the king doth pacify them towards us we must perish.

21 For are not the words of Abinadi fulfilled, which he prophesied against us—and all this because we would not hearken unto the words of the Lord, and turn from our iniquities?

verse 21 “are not the words of Abinadi fulfilled, which he prophesied against us” It is helpful for the reader to pause here and reread Mosiah 12:1-7 wherein Abinadi prophesies what fate will befall the people of King Noah because of their iniquities.

22 And now let us pacify the king, and we fulfil the oath which we have made unto him; for it is better that we should be in bondage than that we should lose our lives; therefore, let us put a stop to the shedding of so much blood.

23 And now Limhi told the king all the things concerning his father, and the priests that had fled into the wilderness, and attributed the carrying away of their daughters to them.

24 And it came to pass that the king was pacified towards his people; and he said unto them: Let us go forth to meet my people, without arms; and I swear unto you with an oath that my people shall not slay thy people.

verse 24 “the king was pacified towards his people” The Lamanite king was satisfied with Limhi’s explanation of the likely culprits in the kidnapping of the Lamanite girls, and he was therefore “pacified towards his [Limhi’s] people.” The Lamanite king then proposed that he, Limhi, Gideon, and perhaps a few others who were present disarm themselves and go forth together to meet the attacking Lamanites. The Nephites must have been comforted by the Lamanite king's swearing an oath that no harm would come to them.

25 And it came to pass that they followed the king, and went forth without arms to meet the Lamanites. And it came to pass that they did meet the Lamanites; and the king of the Lamanites did bow himself down before them, and did plead in behalf of the people of Limhi.

verse 25 The Lamanite king bowed down before his own people and plead for them to spare the people of Limhi.

26 And when the Lamanites saw the people of Limhi, that they were without arms, they had compassion on them and were pacified towards them, and returned with their king in peace to their own land.

Mosiah Chapter 21

Scripture Mastery

Mosiah 21:25-28 King Limhi had sent, previous to the coming of Ammon, a small number of men to search for the land of Zarahemla; but they could not find it .

1 And it came to pass that Limhi and his people returned to the city of Nephi, and began to dwell in the land again in peace.

2 And it came to pass that after many days the Lamanites began again to be stirred up in anger against the Nephites, and they began to come into the borders of the land round about.

3 Now they durst not slay them, because of the oath which their king had made unto Limhi; but they would smite them on their cheeks, and exercise authority over them; and began to put heavy burdens upon their backs, and drive them as they would a dumb ass—

4 Yea, all this was done that the word of the Lord might be fulfilled.

verse 4 If you still have not reread the persecutions of the Nephites by the Lamanites that were prophesied by Abinadi in Mosiah 12:1-7, then please do so now.

5 And now the afflictions of the Nephites were great, and there was no way that they could deliver themselves out of their hands, for the Lamanites had surrounded them on every side.

verse 5 “the Lamanites had surrounded them on every side” It seems likely that the Nephites were now largely confined to the city of Nephi and perhaps the area immediately around the city. The Lamanites seemed to occupy much of the surrounding land of Nephi.

6 And it came to pass that the people began to murmur with the king because of their afflictions; and they began to be desirous to go against them to battle. And they did afflict the king sorely with their complaints; therefore he granted unto them that they should do according to their desires.

7 And they gathered themselves together again, and put on their armor, and went forth against the Lamanites to drive them out of their land.

verse 7 The subject of armor in the Book of Mormon is an interesting one. The Book of Mormon uses eight terms for armor: breast-plates, shields, armor, head-plates, arm-shields, animal skins, thick clothing, and bucklers (a type of shield). The standard system of armor described in the Book of Mormon consists of a basic cloak or vest of thick fabric or animal skin, a breastplate, a headplate, and a shield, which broadly corresponds with artistic and archaeological evidence of pre-Columbian armor from Mesoamerica. Book of Mormon armor also differs from the biblical descriptions of armor. Although coats of mail or scale (small overlapping pieces of metal sewn onto a leather jacket), greaves (leg armor), and helmets are conspicuous in biblical accounts of warfare (1 Samuel 17:5-6), they are absent from the Book of Mormon. Likewise, scale or mail armor and greaves are not found in early classic artistic and archaeological records in the New World (Hamblin, William J. "Armor in the Book of Mormon." Warfare in the Book of Mormon. Edited by Stephen D. Ricks and William J. Hamblin. Salt Lake City: Deseret Book, 1990).

8 And it came to pass that the Lamanites did beat them, and drove them back, and slew many of them.

9 And now there was a great mourning and lamentation among the people of Limhi, the widow mourning for her husband, the son and the daughter mourning for their father, and the brothers for their brethren.

10 Now there were a great many widows in the land, and they did cry mightily from day to day, for a great fear of the Lamanites had come upon them.

11 And it came to pass that their continual cries did stir up the remainder of the people of Limhi to anger against the Lamanites; and they went again to battle, but they were driven back again, suffering much loss.

12 Yea, they went again even the third time, and suffered in the like manner; and those that were not slain returned again to the city of Nephi.

13 And they did humble themselves even to the dust, subjecting themselves to the yoke of bondage, submitting themselves to be smitten, and to be driven to and fro, and burdened, according to the desires of their enemies.

14 And they did humble themselves even in the depths of humility; and they did cry mightily to God; yea, even all the day long did they cry unto their God that he would deliver them out of their afflictions.

15 And now the Lord was slow to hear their cry because of their iniquities; nevertheless the Lord did hear their cries, and began to soften the hearts of the Lamanites that they began to ease their burdens; yet the Lord did not see fit to deliver them out of bondage.

16 And it came to pass that they began to prosper by degrees in the land, and began to raise grain more abundantly, and flocks, and herds, that they did not suffer with hunger.

17 Now there was a great number of women, more than there was of men; therefore king Limhi commanded that every man should impart to the support of the widows and their children, that they might not perish with hunger; and this they did because of the greatness of their number that had been slain.

verse 17 It is interesting to see how the Book of Mormon people dealt with the situation of having more women than men (see also verse 10). Historically their Israelite ancestors had been commanded to practice the principle of polygamy—the taking of more than one wife and concubines—in order to adequately care for these women (Numbers 31:9; Deuteronomy 21:11). However, in the New World the situation was apparently different. The Lord had commanded that these people not practice plural marriage (Jacob 2:27). Rather they were simply to care for the widows' temporal needs, and they established a type of welfare system to accomplish that end.

18 Now the people of Limhi kept together in a body as much as it was possible, and secured their grain and their flocks;

19 And the king himself did not trust his person without the walls of the city, unless he took his guards with him, fearing that he might by some means fall into the hands of the Lamanites.

20 And he caused that his people should watch the land round about, that by some means they might take those priests that fled into the wilderness, who had stolen the daughters of the Lamanites, and that had caused such a great destruction to come upon them.

21 For they were desirous to take them that they might punish them; for they had come into the land of Nephi by night, and carried off their grain and many of their precious things; therefore they laid wait for them.

22 And it came to pass that there was no more disturbance between the Lamanites and the people of Limhi, even until the time that Ammon and his brethren came into the land.

verse 22 We have already studied a more detailed account of the arrival of Ammon and his men and their sojourn among the people of Limhi. It is found in Mosiah chapters 7 and 8. It might be well to review both of those chapters before continuing on.

23 And the king having been without the gates of the city with his guard, discovered Ammon and his brethren; and supposing them to be priests of Noah therefore he caused that they should be taken, and bound, and cast into prison. And had they been the priests of Noah he would have caused that they should be put to death.

24 But when he found that they were not, but that they were his brethren, and had come from the land of Zarahemla, he was filled with exceedingly great joy.

25 Now king Limhi had sent, previous to the coming of Ammon, a small number of men to search for the land of Zarahemla; but they could not find it, and they were lost in the wilderness.

26 Nevertheless, they did find a land which had been peopled; yea, a land which was covered with dry bones; yea, a land which had been peopled and which had been destroyed; and they, having supposed it to be the land of Zarahemla, returned to the land of Nephi, having arrived in the borders of the land not many days before the coming of Ammon.

27 And they brought a record with them, even a record of the people whose bones they had found; and it was engraven on plates of ore.

verse 25-27 The account in these verses, though briefly told both here and in Mosiah 8:7-11, gives us considerable insight into the size of the Book of Mormon lands. An exploring party of forty-three men (Mosiah 8:7) was sent out by King Limhi and was given the charge of finding the city of Zarahemla. Limhi wanted to ask for help from those in Zarahemla to assist in the escape of him and his people from Lamanite captivity in the land of Nephi. Apparently, the route of this exploring party inadvertently bypassed Zarahemla, their intended destination, and took them instead through the “narrow neck of land.” There they believed they had arrived in Zarahemla. However, they were actually in the land Desolation, the final battle ground of the Jaredites. Here they found ruins and a set of twenty-four gold plates left by the final Jaredite prophet, Ether (Ether 15:33). Sorrowfully, the explorers returned to their home in the land of Nephi to report to King Limhi that the remains they found must have been those of Zarahemla destroyed.

28 And now Limhi was again filled with joy on learning from the mouth of Ammon that king Mosiah had a gift from God, whereby he could interpret such engravings; yea, and Ammon also did rejoice.

verse 28 “Mosiah had a gift from God” We have already learned that Mosiah, the son of Benjamin, had not only been designated by God to translate ancient records, but he also possessed the Urim and Thummim or, as they are called in the Book of Mormon, the “interpreters” (see Mosiah 8:13-14 and the commentary for those verses).

One of the more interesting changes between the original Book of Mormon manuscript and our present edition is found in this passage and in Ether 4:1. The original manuscript had “Benjamin” where “Mosiah” now appears. King Benjamin would not likely have still been living at the time of this interaction between Limhi and Ammon. The year of this meeting between the two was 120 BC. Benjamin died three years following his turning the kingship over to his son Mosiah in 124 BC. Thus, Benjamin had probably been dead less than a year. The Prophet Joseph changed the 1837 edition reading of this verse. The change in Ether was made in the 1849 edition.

We can only speculate about who made the original “error” and included Benjamin’s name in this passage. Dr. Sidney B. Sperry asked, “Was it an inadvertent slip of the tongue on the part of Joseph Smith as he dictated his translation to Oliver Cowdery, or did he translate correctly enough an original error on the part of Mormon, the abridger of the Book of Mormon? The latter of these two suggestions is probably the correct one” (Problems of the Book of Mormon, 203).

Perhaps the name Benjamin in these two passages isn't really problematic. Hugh Nibley was one of the first to suggest that Benjamin and his son Mosiah both had access to the Jaredite records, and so Nibley asked: "Was it necessary to change the name of Benjamin (in the first edition) to Mosiah in later editions of Mosiah 21:28 and Ether 4:1?" Nibley goes on to say, "Probably not." Brother Nibley wrote: "For though it is certain that Mosiah kept the records in question, it is by no means certain that his father, Benjamin, did not also have a share in keeping them. It was Benjamin who displayed the zeal of a life-long book lover in the keeping and studying of records; and after he handed over the throne to his son Mosiah he lived on and may well have spent many days among his beloved records. And among these records could have been the Jaredite plates, which were brought to Zarahemla early in the reign of Mosiah when his father could still have been living (Mosiah 8:9-15)" (Since Cumorah: The Book of Mormon in the Modern World, Salt Lake City: Deseret Book Co., 1967, 7).

Brother Royal Skousen followed Nibley's suggestion reasoning that, "King Benjamin could have still been alive when the people of Limhi arrived in the land of Zarahemla, and he could have later had access to the records, including the Jaredite record." In other words, the issue may boil down to a matter of how to read the Book of Mormon's chronology. "Prior to his death, King Benjamin still had access to the records, and the Lord could have told him that the prophesies in those records were not to be revealed at that time" (Royal Skousen, Analysis of Textual Variants of the Book of Mormon: Part 3, Mosiah 17–Alma 20, Provo, UT: FARMS, 2006, 1420). If this is so, then Joseph Smith's 1837 and Orson Pratt's 1849 textual emendations would have been unnecessary.

29 Yet Ammon and his brethren were filled with sorrow because so many of their brethren had been slain;

verse 29 "Their brethren" here does not refer to men in Ammon's rescue party. Rather it refers to those among the Zeniffite / Nephites who had been killed. Those that came up to the land of Nephi with Ammon to rescue the Zeniffites were obviously a caring and empathetic group.

30 And also that king Noah and his priests had caused the people to commit so many sins and iniquities against God; and they also did mourn for the death of Abinadi; and also for the departure of Alma and the people that went with him, who had formed a church of God through the strength and power of God, and faith on the words which had been spoken by Abinadi.

31 Yea, they did mourn for their departure, for they knew not whither they had fled. Now they would have gladly joined with them, for they themselves had entered into a covenant with God to serve him and keep his commandments.

verse 31 “they did mourn for their departure” Ammon’s group of rescuers sorrowed for Alma and the people that had followed him, assuming that they were lost in the wilderness.

32 And now since the coming of Ammon, king Limhi had also entered into a covenant with God, and also many of his people, to serve him and keep his commandments.

33 And it came to pass that king Limhi and many of his people were desirous to be baptized; but there was none in the land that had authority from God. And Ammon declined doing this thing, considering himself an unworthy servant.

verse 33 “Ammon declined doing this thing, considering himself an unworthy servant” The reasons for Ammon’s considering himself unworthy to baptize are not clear. He likely did hold the priesthood. The text leaves no doubt that proper authority is necessary to perform the ordinances of salvation.

34 Therefore they did not at that time form themselves into a church, waiting upon the Spirit of the Lord. Now they were desirous to become even as Alma and his brethren, who had fled into the wilderness.

35 They were desirous to be baptized as a witness and a testimony that they were willing to serve God with all their hearts; nevertheless they did prolong the time; and an account of their baptism shall be given hereafter.

verse 35 It is apparent that Limhi’s people had repented of their previous iniquities and were now fully committed to serve God. Their period of bondage and persecution at the hands of the Lamanites was likely intended by the Lord to teach them dependence upon him. The phrase “they did prolong the time” may be a bit misleading. If Limhi and his people had had their way, it would seem they would certainly would have been baptized there and then without delay. As it turns out, they will later be baptized by Alma in the land of Zarahemla (Mosiah 25:18) probably a few to several months later. Perhaps “they did prolong the time” simply means they decided to wait.

“an account of their baptism shall be given hereafter” This phrase has been pointed out by John A. Tvedtnes as being an example of one of Mormon’s “editorial promises” (“Mormon’s Editorial Promises” in Rediscovering the Book of Mormon, 29-31). Brother Tvedtnes points out that an author may promise in the course of writing to return to a subject later to supply further details, but actually keeping such promises can prove difficult. Even with modern writing aids, memory can betray a person into failing to tuck in the corners of plot or information. Mormon, the editor of much of the Book of Mormon, made these types of promises several other times. In each case, he or his son Moroni followed through perfectly. In this particular case Mormon makes good his promise about a hundred verses later when he describes the baptism of Limhi’s people (Mosiah 25:17-18).

Rather than mentioning the other examples in context, we will summarize them here:

1. In Mosiah 28:9, 19-20, Mormon says that he will later describe the mission of the sons of Mosiah. Eighteen chapters later, in Alma 17-26, he does describe that mission.

2. In Alma 35:13, Mormon promises to describe the Nephite-Lamanite war that began in the eighteenth year. But, since he wanted to first report Alma's teachings to his sons, he postponed the story of the war until Alma 43, where in verse three he introduced the topic with the words, "And now I return to an account of the wars."

3. Writing in Mosiah 28:11-19, Mormon said that he would later provide the reader with the story of the Jaredites. He made this statement at the point where he mentioned that King Mosiah had translated the record of that people. Apparently, the problems he faced in his role as commander of the Nephite armies prevented him from including the Jaredite record. But, his son Moroni later fulfilled this promise by engraving onto the plates of Mormon the Book of Ether. Moroni doubtless included the Jaredite record at the bidding of his father.

4. In Helaman 2:12-14, Mormon said that he would speak more of Gadianton and his secret band "hereafter." Indeed, he did. The problems caused by the robbers and much about their characteristics were detailed in Helaman 6; 3 Nephi 1:27-29; 2:11-18; 3:1 through 4:29; and 4 Nephi.

In 1829 Joseph Smith dictated to Oliver Cowdery most of the scripture attributed to Mormon within the period of a few weeks, without reviewing, proofreading, or revising. Under these circumstances, if Joseph were the original author, then leaving no gaps in the promised materials would have been a remarkable achievement. This makes it much more likely that Joseph was translating rather than creating, and that the editorial consistency is Mormon's work. The internal consistency of the Book of Mormon is remarkable and most complex!

36 And now all the study of Ammon and his people, and king Limhi and his people, was to deliver themselves out of the hands of the Lamanites and from bondage.

verse 36 The phrase "all the study" might be alternatively rendered: "the sole intent and purpose."

verses 1-8 The Book of Mormon contains a number of passages that condemn drunkenness or intoxication, or otherwise portray drunkards as foolish or easily exploitable. At the very beginning of the Book of Mormon, for example, Nephi slew the treacherous Laban when the latter was found drunk and passed out in the dark streets of Jerusalem (1 Nephi 4:5–7). King Noah and his priests were depicted as immoral and lazy “wine-bibbers” who preyed upon and oppressed their subjects (Mosiah 11:13–15). A group of Captain Moroni's Nephite soldiers was freed when he tricked their Lamanite guards into getting drunk (Alma 55:7–16), and the army of Coriantumr was ambushed by the brother of Shamed “as they were drunken” (Ether 14:5; cf. 15:22).

The account in Mosiah 22 depicts how the people of Limhi escaped Lamanite bondage by exploiting Lamanite drunkenness. This plan was suggested by Gideon. After consulting on the situation (Mosiah 22:1–4), Limhi approved Gideon's scheme to deliver a tribute of wine to the Lamanite guards to incapacitate them (Mosiah 22:6–10). Once the guards were drunk and in a drunken stupor, “the people of King Limhi did depart by night into the wilderness” by slipping through “the back wall, on the back side of the city” (Mosiah 22:6).

The people of Limhi were highly motivated by their covenants and wanted to escape in order to be baptized (Mosiah 21:32–34). Faith and reason combined to increase Limhi's confidence that the Lord would open a way for the deliverance of His people. The escape was executed only after a careful study of all the possible ways of deliverance (Mosiah 21:36) and after careful planning in advance with Ammon (Mosiah 22:1).

1 And now it came to pass that Ammon and king Limhi began to consult with the people how they should deliver themselves out of bondage; and even they did cause that all the people should gather themselves together; and this they did that they might have the voice of the people concerning the matter.

2 And it came to pass that they could find no way to deliver themselves out of bondage, except it were to take their women and children, and their flocks, and their herds, and their tents, and depart into the wilderness; for the Lamanites being so numerous, it was impossible for the people of Limhi to contend with them, thinking to deliver themselves out of bondage by the sword.

verse 2 The only plausible way for the people of Limhi to escape was to find a way in which they could depart quietly. It would not be possible to fight their way out.

The meaning of the final phrase in this verse is somewhat clearer if the word “thinking” is replaced with “hoping.”

3 Now it came to pass that Gideon went forth and stood before the king, and said unto him: Now O king, thou hast hitherto hearkened unto my words many times when we have been contending with our brethren, the Lamanites.

4 And now O king, if thou hast not found me to be an unprofitable servant, or if thou hast hitherto listened to my words in any degree, and they have been of service to thee, even so I desire that thou wouldst listen to my words at this time, and I will be thy servant and deliver this people out of bondage.

5 And the king granted unto him that he might speak. And Gideon said unto him:

6 Behold the back pass, through the back wall, on the back side of the city. The Lamanites, or the guards of the Lamanites, by night are drunken; therefore let us send a proclamation among all this people that they gather together their flocks and herds, that they may drive them into the wilderness by night.

7 And I will go according to thy command and pay the last tribute of wine to the Lamanites, and they will be drunken; and we will pass through the secret pass on the left of their camp when they are drunken and asleep.

8 Thus we will depart with our women and our children, our flocks, and our herds into the wilderness; and we will travel around the land of Shilom.

verse 8 “we will travel around the land of Shilom” Please refer to the commentary for Mosiah 19:6 which contains some speculation regarding the geography of the area. By this time the Lamanites occupied parts, if not all, of the land of Shilom as well as the land of Shemlon, and Limhi and his people were confined to the land of Nephi. On planning their escape, Gideon planned to skirt the land of Shilom, probably to its north and east, so as to avoid attracting the attention of the Lamanites.

9 And it came to pass that the king hearkened unto the words of Gideon.

10 And king Limhi caused that his people should gather their flocks together; and he sent the tribute of wine to the Lamanites; and he also sent more wine, as a present unto them; and they did drink freely of the wine which king Limhi did send unto them.

11 And it came to pass that the people of king Limhi did depart by night into the wilderness with their flocks and their herds, and they went round about the land of Shilom in the wilderness, and bent their course towards the land of Zarahemla, being led by Ammon and his brethren.

12 And they had taken all their gold, and silver, and their precious things, which they could carry, and also their provisions with them, into the wilderness; and they pursued their journey.

13 And after being many days in the wilderness they arrived in the land of Zarahemla, and joined Mosiah’s people, and became his subjects.

14 And it came to pass that Mosiah received them with joy; and he also received their records, and also the records which had been found by the people of Limhi.

verse 14 Mosiah received not only the twenty-four gold plates—the record of the Jaredites, which Limhi’s people had found in the land Desolation—but he received also the plates containing the record of the Zeniffites (Mosiah 8:5) which had been begun by Zeniff (Mosiah 9:1) and continued by people of the courts of Noah and Limhi. The account of Abinadi and the records of Alma’s people in the lands of Mormon and Helam was not, of course, included with these records, but was with Alma and his people who will arrive back in Zarahemla later the same year.

15 And now it came to pass when the Lamanites had found that the people of Limhi had departed out of the land by night, that they sent an army into the wilderness to pursue them;

16 And after they had pursued them two days, they could no longer follow their tracks; therefore they were lost in the wilderness.

verse 16 “they were lost in the wilderness” We will learn that the pursuing Lamanites did indeed become “lost in the wilderness,” and we will read more about this lost group in the following chapter (Mosiah 23:25-39).

The story of the ministries of Zeniff, Noah, and Limhi in the land of Nephi is one of those stories that occurred simultaneously with the story of the ministry of the elder Mosiah, Benjamin, and the younger Mosiah in the land of Zarahemla. The former story, of course, includes the story of the ministry of Abinadi and the conversion of the elder Alma and his sojourn in the wilderness for nearly 30 years with his fellow converts. The correlations between these two major stories are often little appreciated by readers of the Book of Mormon. For example, are you aware that the story of the wars fought against the Lamanites by King Benjamin and his people and the ministry of King Noah occurred at about the same time—in about 160 BC. Are you also aware that the sojourn of the people of Alma in the wilderness after leaving the land of Nephi during Noah’s ministry lasted nearly 30 years? See the illustration, Book of Mormon History Diagram, 1 Nephi 1 through Mosiah 22.

Mosiah Chapter 23

Scripture Mastery

Mosiah 23-24 The senior Alma and his people in the wilderness

Mosiah 23:21 The Lord seeth fit to chasten his people; yea, he trieth their patience and their faith.

An account of Alma and the people of the Lord, who were driven into the wilderness by the people of King Noah. Comprising chapters 23 and 24.

1 Now Alma, having been warned of the Lord that the armies of king Noah would come upon them, and having made it known to his people, therefore they gathered together their flocks, and took of their grain, and departed into the wilderness before the armies of king Noah.

verse 1 Alma and his people left the place called Mormon.

2 And the Lord did strengthen them, that the people of king Noah could not overtake them to destroy them.

3 And they fled eight days' journey into the wilderness.

4 And they came to a land, yea, even a very beautiful and pleasant land, a land of pure water.

verse 4 Alma's group was a covenant-community of believers in the wilderness initially near the waters of Mormon (Mosiah 18). They later moved to a land they called Helam. This community, in keeping with the covenants they had made at baptism, did "not esteem one flesh above another," nor did any man "think himself above another" (Mosiah 23:7). Each member was patient to "love his neighbor as himself" (Mosiah 23:15; cf. Leviticus 19:18). Their consecrated leaders, priests and teachers, were all "just men" (Mosiah 23:17). They were not a frightened people (Mosiah 23:27), and they prayed for their enemies (Mosiah 23:28).

Life was relatively good at first for members of Alma's fledgling church. Eventually, though, Alma and his people came under bondage to Amulon, the leader of the now-exiled priests of Noah who had joined forces with the Lamanites (Mosiah 23:35). Amulon will eventually "set guards round about the land of Helam, over Alma and his brethren" (Mosiah 23:37).

Geographical note: The land to which Alma and his party fled, the land of Helam, was probably off the usual trail between the land of Nephi and Zarahemla since the Lamanite army will later stumble onto it while they are lost in the wilderness (see Mosiah 23:30, 35).

5 And they pitched their tents, and began to till the ground, and began to build buildings; yea, they were industrious, and did labor exceedingly.

verses 6-9 Notice in these next four verses how Alma's experience with King Noah, and undoubtedly divine revelation, had turned him into an ardent anti-monarchist. He voices two major objections to having a king. First, he believed that it was not right that one man should be esteemed above another as a king is esteemed more highly than his subjects. Second, a wicked king might tend to spawn wickedness and iniquity in his subjects. Alma could personally testify of this danger since Noah had succeeded in leading him into wickedness. It is clear from examples in the Old Testament and in the Book of Mormon that kings set the moral tone for their people. Their potential influence over their people was profound. Alma perceived that the monarch's power and influence over his people was significant whether he chose to do good or whether he elected to do evil.

6 And the people were desirous that Alma should be their king, for he was beloved by his people.

verse 6 "the people were desirous that Alma should be their king" The people were not in a position to appoint Alma to be their king. Mosiah would have had to do that. This expression merely suggests that the people were willing to confirm Alma as their king.

7 But he said unto them: Behold, it is not expedient that we should have a king; for thus saith the Lord: Ye shall not esteem one flesh above another, or one man shall not think himself above another; therefore I say unto you it is not expedient that ye should have a king.

8 Nevertheless, if it were possible that ye could always have just men to be your kings it would be well for you to have a king.

9 But remember the iniquity of king Noah and his priests; and I myself was caught in a snare, and did many things which were abominable in the sight of the Lord, which caused me sore repentance;

verse 9 The phrase "sore repentance" is a reminder that there is no true repentance without suffering.

10 Nevertheless, after much tribulation, the Lord did hear my cries, and did answer my prayers, and has made me an instrument in his hands in bringing so many of you to a knowledge of his truth.

11 Nevertheless, in this I do not glory, for I am unworthy to glory of myself.

12 And now I say unto you, ye have been oppressed by king Noah, and have been in bondage to him and his priests, and have been brought into iniquity by them; therefore ye were bound with the bands of iniquity.

verse 12 What does it mean to be “bound with the bands of iniquity”? The bondage in which the Nephites lived in the land of Nephi under the tyrannical leadership of King Noah, and later in captivity to the Lamanites, was apparently the direct result of their own sins. A misuse of one’s agency leads to a loss of freedoms. See Agency and Freedom in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 13.

13 And now as ye have been delivered by the power of God out of these bonds; yea, even out of the hands of king Noah and his people, and also from the bonds of iniquity, even so I desire that ye should stand fast in this liberty wherewith ye have been made free, and that ye trust no man to be a king over you.

verse 13 “stand fast in this liberty wherewith ye have been made free” Do not risk losing your new-found freedom or liberty by misusing your agency. Do not fail to distinguish clearly between the concepts of agency and freedom (liberty). See Agency and Freedom, in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 13.

14 And also trust no one to be your teacher nor your minister, except he be a man of God, walking in his ways and keeping his commandments.

15 Thus did Alma teach his people, that every man should love his neighbor as himself, that there should be no contention among them.

verse 15 One New Testament account of the Last Supper gives the impression that the “golden rule” was a new commandment given during Christ’s mortal ministry. John 13:34 reads: “A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you” (italics added). This is a misimpression. For one thing, Christ had earlier in his ministry taught the golden rule to his disciples (Matthew 7:12). We know that the golden rule was actually part of the Ten Commandments given to Moses on Sinai (Leviticus 19:18).

16 And now, Alma was their high priest, he being the founder of their church.

verse 16 It was the pattern of ancient Israel that a single high priest should preside over the whole church or at least a region of the church. The high priest ordained priests and teachers and later, elders (Alma 4:7, 16; 6:1; Moroni 3:1; 4:1; 6:1, 7) to assist him in directing the affairs of the church. Since there is no evidence that the Aaronic or Levitical priesthood existed in the New World at that time, all of these positions are presumed to be offices of the Melchizedek priesthood.

17 And it came to pass that none received authority to preach or to teach except it were by him from God. Therefore he consecrated all their priests and all their teachers; and none were consecrated except they were just men.

verse 17 “none received authority to preach or to teach except it were by him from God” The wording here is a bit awkward, but the meaning is clear. It is apparent that Alma possessed not only the priesthood, but also the keys of the priesthood—the right of presidency.

The word “consecrated” in this verse may be interpreted as ordained or set apart.

The Book of Mormon has much to say about priesthood authority, especially in the book of Mosiah. The term “priest” appears 125 times in Mosiah, either by itself or as part of a compound word, such as “priesthood” (Eldin Ricks’s Thorough Concordance of the LDS Standard Works, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1995, 597–99). The word “authority” appears 44 times, often referring to priesthood, or ecclesiastical, authority. The words “priest” or “priesthood” appear only four times in the books that precede Mosiah, a total of only 3.2 percent of the total mentions in a section of the book that makes up 27 percent of the whole (Not counting Isaiah’s usage in 2 Nephi 18:2 and the four uses of the word “priestcraft.” Daniel C. Peterson, “Authority in the Book of Mosiah,” The FARMS Review 18/1, 2006). In Mosiah, the text repeatedly asserts that Alma the Elder, and his son Alma after him, acted in their church duties with “authority from God” (see, e.g., Mosiah 13:6; 18:13, 17, 18, 26; 21:33; 23:16–17; 26:7–8; 29:42). Why this emphasis on priesthood authority? Where did this authority come from?

These questions become especially poignant when we remember that there were no Levites among the children of Lehi. The Levites were the tribe of Israel who, by lineal descent, were official bearers of the priesthood. They had the right, by birth, to officiate in the lesser, or Aaronic, priesthood, which is why it is often called the Levitical Priesthood.

This priesthood was passed from father to son within the tribe of Levi, down to the time of Christ, and beyond. However, this was not the only way for a man to be given authority by God. Prophets such as Abraham and Elijah, and the priest Melchizedek, spoke and acted in the name of God, although they were not Levites.

The Book of Mormon begins essentially with two families, that of Lehi and Ishmael. Both were descendants of Joseph (1 Nephi 5:14; 2 Nephi 3:4; Ether 13:7), with Lehi being a descendant of Manasseh (Alma 10:3) and Ishmael said to be of Ephraim. Thus, none of the descendants of Lehi could have had access to the Levitical Priesthood that officiated in the temple and performed sacrifices in Jerusalem at the time of Lehi. However, the Book of Mormon narrative depicts, early on, the Nephites building temples (2 Nephi 5:16) and living the Law of Moses, with all its rituals and ordinances (2 Nephi 5:10; 25:24–25, 30).

Although the Book of Mormon says nothing about Lehi’s or Nephi’s being ordained to the priesthood, the Nephites apparently did have a priesthood order with authority that they believed was given to them by God. Nephi consecrated his younger brothers as priests (2 Nephi 5:26), and Jacob clearly considered his consecration as priest to be “after [God’s] holy order” (2 Nephi 6:2). The Book of Mosiah presents a similar situation when Alma the Elder as high priest, specified “that none received authority to preach or to teach except it were by him from God” (Mosiah 23:16–17).

Alma the Younger later taught that this priesthood order was the high priesthood “after the order of [God’s] Son,” an order the great priest-king Melchizedek exemplified (Alma 13:1–19). The Melchizedek Priesthood did not need to be passed in succession from father to son, as did the Levitical Priesthood, although it often was (see, e.g., Mosiah 2:11; 6:3).

The Levitical Priesthood was passed on from generation to generation within the tribe of Levi. The Melchizedek Priesthood, however, was given only to “just men” (Mosiah 23:17), “on account of their exceeding faith and good works” (Alma 13:3). Lehi, a just man and prophet of God, apparently brought this priesthood authority with him from Jerusalem and passed it on to Nephi, who subsequently ordained his brothers, Jacob and Joseph (See Rodney Turner, “Three Nephite Churches of Christ,” in The Book of Mormon: The Keystone Scripture, edited by Paul R. Cheesman, Provo, UT: BYU Religious Studies Center, 1988, 100–126, at 101).

With this factual background, one can understand why the book of Mosiah talks so much about priesthood authority. Mormon’s abridgment of the Nephite record in Mosiah depicts a variety of political conflicts and priestly situations. As these events progress, the questions of who has authority and the proper use of priesthood authority come to the foreground. For this reason, Mormon seeks opportunities to emphasize the way in which the Nephite priesthood, being based on the example of Melchizedek, functioned in righteousness.

As he looked back over the history of his people, Mormon knew of the importance of being ordained by those in authority, as he knew how the Savior had ordained priesthood leaders in 3 Nephi 11:21, and gave them power in 3 Nephi 18:37 and Moroni 2:1-3:4.

The fact that the Nephites possessed the Melchizedek priesthood proved to be a blessing to them. The Israelites sometimes suffered under wicked and corrupt priests of the Levitical order because these had a lineal right to their office (see, for example, 1 Samuel 2:12–17; Jeremiah 5:30–31; Ezekiel 22:26; Zephaniah 3:4; Malachi 1:6–14). In Nephite history, however, the priesthood authority of one wicked lineage or leader would end and pass to a more righteous and faithful one. For example, priesthood authority passed through the lineage of Jacob, which ended when Jacob’s lineage had become “wicked” (Omni 1:2). It was then transferred to Benjamin, because he was “a just man before the Lord” (Omni 1:25).

In the middle of the book of Mosiah, although the righteous leader Zeniff had apparently been given authority to consecrate priests, his son Noah abused that privilege, dismissing his father's priests and appointing corrupt ones in their stead (Mosiah 11:5). The narrative depicts, on the one hand, the swift downfall of the Zeniffite line of authority, with Limhi considering himself without authority to baptize, and on the other hand, the god-protected rise of a righteous lineage in the person of Alma and his descendants. Although Alma had been part of Noah's council of wicked priests, he repented and God validated the priesthood to which he had legitimately been ordained (Mosiah 18:13, 17–18). The book of Mosiah also makes a point of mentioning that Alma's authority to organize and regulate the covenant communities in Zarahemla was recognized by King Mosiah (Mosiah 26:12) and confirmed by the voice of the Lord (Mosiah 26:14).

verses 18-24 The reader may be surprised to learn that these few verses represent the passage of nearly thirty years in the wilderness during which time Alma and his people lived and prospered.

18 Therefore they did watch over their people, and did nourish them with things pertaining to righteousness.

19 And it came to pass that they began to prosper exceedingly in the land; and they called the land Helam.

20 And it came to pass that they did multiply and prosper exceedingly in the land of Helam; and they built a city, which they called the city of Helam.

verse 20 We are reminded again that the word “city” in the Book of Mormon must be interpreted with caution. While we may see, in our mind's eye, a city as the center of a large population of people, we know that Alma and his company comprised only four hundred and fifty people (Mosiah 18:35). This “city” was more of a village.

verses 21-24 These verses comprise an editorial note written by the prophet Mormon. It has an ominous tone and indicates that Mormon is about to teach us an important lesson about trusting in the Lord. He will use as his text for this lesson the example of the experiences of the people of Alma.

21 Nevertheless the Lord seeth fit to chasten his people; yea, he trieth their patience and their faith.

verse 21 “the Lord seeth fit to chasten his people” To chasten is to punish; to correct by punishment; to inflict pain for the purpose of teaching an offender. It is fundamental, of course, to this mortal experience that we be tried and chastened (Helaman 12:3; D&C 95:1; 136:31). There can be no growth without trial and pain.

22 Nevertheless—whosoever putteth his trust in him the same shall be lifted up at the last day. Yea, and thus it was with this people.

verse 22 To be “lifted up at the last day” is to be eventually saved or exalted in the celestial kingdom. On a more practical level, he who puts his trust in God will ultimately emerge the victor, though the Lord’s timetable for that victory may be different from man’s.

23 For behold, I will show unto you that they were brought into bondage, and none could deliver them but the Lord their God, yea, even the God of Abraham and Isaac and of Jacob.

24 And it came to pass that he did deliver them, and he did show forth his mighty power unto them, and great were their rejoicings.

25 For behold, it came to pass that while they were in the land of Helam, yea, in the city of Helam, while tilling the land round about, behold an army of the Lamanites was in the borders of the land.

verse 25 “an army of the Lamanites was in the borders of the land” We will learn in verse 30 that this is the Lamanite army which had become lost in the wilderness while pursuing the people of Limhi, who had escaped from the city of Nephi.

26 Now it came to pass that the brethren of Alma fled from their fields, and gathered themselves together in the city of Helam; and they were much frightened because of the appearance of the Lamanites.

27 But Alma went forth and stood among them, and exhorted them that they should not be frightened, but that they should remember the Lord their God and he would deliver them.

28 Therefore they hushed their fears, and began to cry unto the Lord that he would soften the hearts of the Lamanites, that they would spare them, and their wives, and their children.

29 And it came to pass that the Lord did soften the hearts of the Lamanites. And Alma and his brethren went forth and delivered themselves up into their hands; and the Lamanites took possession of the land of Helam.

30 Now the armies of the Lamanites, which had followed after the people of king Limhi, had been lost in the wilderness for many days.

31 And behold, they had found those priests of king Noah, in a place which they called Amulon; and they had begun to possess the land of Amulon and had begun to till the ground.

32 Now the name of the leader of those priests was Amulon.

33 And it came to pass that Amulon did plead with the Lamanites; and he also sent forth their wives, who were the daughters of the Lamanites, to plead with their brethren, that they should not destroy their husbands.

34 And the Lamanites had compassion on Amulon and his brethren, and did not destroy them, because of their wives.

35 And Amulon and his brethren did join the Lamanites, and they were traveling in the wilderness in search of the land of Nephi when they discovered the land of Helam, which was possessed by Alma and his brethren.

36 And it came to pass that the Lamanites promised unto Alma and his brethren, that if they would show them the way which led to the land of Nephi that they would grant unto them their lives and their liberty.

verse 36 It is interesting to note that the Nephites and Lamanites seemed to have no trouble communicating with one another, particularly so since we will later learn that the language of the Nephites was different than the language of the Lamanites (Mosiah 24:4). Perhaps they did speak different languages, and Amulon was able to translate for both groups.

37 But after Alma had shown them the way that led to the land of Nephi the Lamanites would not keep their promise; but they set guards round about the land of Helam, over Alma and his brethren.

38 And the remainder of them went to the land of Nephi; and a part of them returned to the land of Helam, and also brought with them the wives and the children of the guards who had been left in the land.

verse 38 The wives and children of those Lamanite guards who had been left in Helam to keep watch over Alma and his people were brought from the area of the land of Nephi to be with their husbands and fathers.

39 And the king of the Lamanites had granted unto Amulon that he should be a king and a ruler over his people, who were in the land of Helam; nevertheless he should have no power to do anything contrary to the will of the king of the Lamanites.

verse 39 “a ruler over his people, who were in the land of Helam” Amulon was installed by the Lamanites as a puppet king over Alma’s people, Amulon’s “fellow Nephites”—“his people.”

Mosiah Chapter 24

1 And it came to pass that Amulon did gain favor in the eyes of the king of the Lamanites; therefore, the king of the Lamanites granted unto him and his brethren that they should be appointed teachers over his people, yea, even over the people who were in the land of Shemlon, and in the land of Shilom, and in the land of Amulon.

verse 1 Amulon and the former priests of Noah were granted favored status in the kingdom of the Lamanite king, not only in Helam but in the land of Lehi-Nephi. They became teachers of the Lamanites in secular matters. The antecedent of “his people” is apparently the Lamanite king Laman.

2 For the Lamanites had taken possession of all these lands; therefore, the king of the Lamanites had appointed kings over all these lands.

verse 2 “the king of the Lamanites had appointed kings over all these lands” Here we get a glimpse of the unusual political system of the Lamanites. Please see Alma 20:8 and its commentary to learn more.

3 And now the name of the king of the Lamanites was Laman, being called after the name of his father; and therefore he was called king Laman. And he was king over a numerous people.

4 And he appointed teachers of the brethren of Amulon in every land which was possessed by his people; and thus the language of Nephi began to be taught among all the people of the Lamanites.

verse 4 We have previously commented on the fact that the Nephites and the Lamanites do not seem to have any trouble communicating with one another (see Mosiah 23:33, 36). Perhaps in this verse these Lamanites were actually being taught how to write (see Mosiah 24:6). It is also possible that the ordinary Lamanite might have been unable to communicate with the average Nephite and that most of the communication which took place occurred between the leaders of the groups who may have shared a common language.

5 And they were a people friendly one with another; nevertheless they knew not God; neither did the brethren of Amulon teach them anything concerning the Lord their God, neither the law of Moses; nor did they teach them the words of Abinadi;

6 But they taught them that they should keep their record, and that they might write one to another.

7 And thus the Lamanites began to increase in riches, and began to trade one with another and wax great, and began to be a cunning and a wise people, as to the wisdom of the world, yea, a very cunning people, delighting in all manner of wickedness and plunder, except it were among their own brethren.

verse 7 “the Lamanites . . . began to . . . wax great” One of the definitions of wax in Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language is, “To increase in size; to grow; to become larger.”

“delighting in all manner of wickedness and plunder, except it were among their own brethren” John L. Sorenson sees in this verse some evidence that the Lamanites were not simply a homogeneous group—one in which all descended from a common ancestor or ancestors (Laman and Lemuel):

Mosiah 24:7 reports the Lamanites’ practicing “all manner of wickedness and plunder, except it were among their own brethren.” Now, given this verse’s context, those plundered do not appear to have been Nephites. Who is referred to? Possibly the statement means that the Lamanites considered it acceptable to plunder any community other than those involving immediate relatives or neighbors, but such a limited sense of “their own brethren” is without precedent in the text. Rather it seems to me that this expression tells us that certain portions of the Lamanites classified other segments of the population in their lands as being of different origin and thus subject to less protection. That is, Mosiah 24:7 could mean that Lamanites were plundering “Lamanites” not of that bloodline, and vice versa. Amulonites and Amalekites [actually Amlicites—see the commentary for Alma 21:2] could have fallen into the target category as well as the Zeniffites, who certainly were “plundered” (see Mosiah 9:14). Yet it seems to me that the plunderable “others,” of non-Lehite stock, may have been at odds with “the [real] Lamanites” and thus have come into conflict with them (compare Mormon 8:8) (Journal of Book of Mormon Studies: “When Lehi’s Party Arrived in the Land, Did They Find Others There,” 31).

8 And now it came to pass that Amulon began to exercise authority over Alma and his brethren, and began to persecute him, and cause that his children should persecute their children.

9 For Amulon knew Alma, that he had been one of the king’s priests, and that it was he that believed the words of Abinadi and was driven out before the king, and therefore he was wroth with him; for he was subject to king Laman, yet he exercised authority over them, and put tasks upon them, and put task-masters over them.

verse 9 “he was wroth with him” Amulon was angry with Alma.

“for he was subject to king Laman” This might be more clearly rendered “for even though Amulon was subject to king Laman, Amulon was able to exercise authority over Alma and his people” (cf. Mosiah 23:39).

10 And it came to pass that so great were their afflictions that they began to cry mightily to God.

11 And Amulon commanded them that they should stop their cries; and he put guards over them to watch them, that whosoever should be found calling upon God should be put to death.

verse 11 In later generations the descendants of Amulon (the Amulonites) will retain their specific identity even though they will integrate with the Lamanites. They will become noted for their wickedness, extreme hatred, and impenetrable hearts (see Alma 21:3; 23:14; 24:1-2, 20-22, 28-30).

12 And Alma and his people did not raise their voices to the Lord their God, but did pour out their hearts to him; and he did know the thoughts of their hearts.

13 And it came to pass that the voice of the Lord came to them in their afflictions, saying: Lift up your heads and be of good comfort, for I know of the covenant which ye have made unto me; and I will covenant with my people and deliver them out of bondage.

14 And I will also ease the burdens which are put upon your shoulders, that even you cannot feel them upon your backs, even while you are in bondage; and this will I do that ye may stand as witnesses for me hereafter, and that ye may know of a surety that I, the Lord God, do visit my people in their afflictions.

15 And now it came to pass that the burdens which were laid upon Alma and his brethren were made light; yea, the Lord did strengthen them that they could bear up their burdens with ease, and they did submit cheerfully and with patience to all the will of the Lord.

verse 15 “the burdens which were laid upon Alma and his brethren were made light” The question has been asked as to why the Lord allowed Alma’s people to be placed in bondage since they had repented and made covenants with the Lord. The answer is that it was necessary to fulfill the prophecy of Abinadi. When Abinadi first came among the Zeniffites in the land of Nephi, he warned that if they did not repent they would be brought into bondage (Mosiah 11:21). Two years later, however, his warning and prophecy was different. Then he proclaimed that they would be placed in bondage (Mosiah 12:2). It was too late to avoid being placed into bondage. Furthermore, he added that if they continued to refuse to repent, they would be destroyed (Mosiah 12:8).

It is instructive to compare the degree of bondage under which the Lord allowed Alma’s people to be placed with that of the people of Limhi. In this verse, for example, we learn that the Lord himself did ease the burdens placed upon those in Alma’s group. For Limhi’s people, the Lord acted more indirectly. He did soften the hearts of the Lamanite captors, so that they eased the burdens on the people of Limhi (Mosiah 21:15). Among Alma's people there was no bloodshed, whereas among Limhi's people there was considerable (Mosiah 21:8-9). The Lord was quick to hear the cries of Alma's people (Mosiah 24:13) but slow to respond to those of Limhi's people (Mosiah 21:15). For the actual deliverance of Alma's people from bondage the Lord acted directly. He delivered them without their having to devise a plan for their own deliverance (Mosiah 24:16). He put the guards to sleep (Mosiah 24:19). He led them to Zarahemla (Mosiah 24:23-25). On the other hand, Limhi's people had to devise their own plan of escape (Mosiah 22:9). They had to ensure themselves that the guards were asleep from drunkenness (Mosiah 22:7, 10), and Ammon had to lead them back to Zarahemla (Mosiah 22:11).

“they did submit . . . with patience to all the will of the Lord” It is interesting to note that Hebrew is decidedly lacking in adverbs. Instead of adverbs, it frequently uses the prepositions meaning “in” or “with.” Here, for example, we read “with patience” instead of patiently. Another example is found in 1 Nephi 18:11 where we read with much harshness instead of very harshly.

16 And it came to pass that so great was their faith and their patience that the voice of the Lord came unto them again, saying: Be of good comfort, for on the morrow I will deliver you out of bondage.

17 And he said unto Alma: Thou shalt go before this people, and I will go with thee and deliver this people out of bondage.

18 Now it came to pass that Alma and his people in the night-time gathered their flocks together, and also of their grain; yea, even all the night-time were they gathering the flocks together.

19 And in the morning the Lord caused a deep sleep to come upon the Lamanites, yea, and all their task-masters were in a profound sleep.

verse 19 We have commented upon the contrasting methods of escape of the people of Limhi and the people of Alma. Limhi's people had to provide wine to the Lamanites to ensure that they would be in a drunken stupor. There was no wine involved, however, in Alma's escape. The Lord simply, yet miraculously, caused a deep sleep to come upon the Lamanites.

20 And Alma and his people departed into the wilderness; and when they had traveled all day they pitched their tents in a valley, and they called the valley Alma, because he led their way in the wilderness.

21 Yea, and in the valley of Alma they poured out their thanks to God because he had been merciful unto them, and eased their burdens, and had delivered them out of bondage; for they were in bondage, and none could deliver them except it were the Lord their God.

22 And they gave thanks to God, yea, all their men and all their women and all their children that could speak lifted their voices in the praises of their God.

verse 22 It doesn't take long while reading the Book of Mormon before encountering followers of Christ who gave heartfelt thanks unto God. For example, when reaching a valley which contained flowing water (For a proposal of the physical location of this valley, see George D. Potter, "A New Candidate in Arabia for the 'Valley of Lemuel,'" Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 8, no. 1, 1999: 54–63, 79; S. Kent Brown, "New Light from Arabia on Lehi's Trail," in Echoes and Evidences of the Book of Mormon, ed. Donald W. Parry, Daniel C. Peterson, and John W. Welch, Provo, UT: FARMS, 2002, 60–62; S. Kent Brown, "The Hunt for the Valley of Lemuel," Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 16, no. 1, 2007: 64–73, 86–88) after escaping Jerusalem, and hiking through the desert for a time, Lehi's family must have felt immensely grateful. To show their gratitude, they "built an altar of stones, and made an offering unto the Lord, and gave thanks unto the Lord [their] God" (1 Nephi 2:7) (See David Rolph Seely, "Lehi's Altar and Sacrifice in the Wilderness," Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 10, no. 1, 2001: 62–69, 80; Brown, "New Light from Arabia on Lehi's Trail," 62–63; S. Kent Brown, "What Were Those Sacrifices Offered by Lehi?" in From Jerusalem to Zarahemla: Literary and Historical Studies of the Book of Mormon, Provo, UT: Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, 1998, 2; Hugh Nibley, An Approach to the Book of Mormon, The Collected Works of Hugh Nibley: Volume 6, Provo: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1988, 245–246). This touching account is just the first of many faithful demonstrations of gratitude to God, which becomes a major theme throughout the Book of Mormon.

Book of Mormon peoples showed gratitude in a variety of contexts, but most frequently after experiencing some sort of divine rescue. Lehi's family showed thanks because they had escaped the dangers of Jerusalem and had been led to a safe and habitable location, one with both food and fresh running water (Hugh Nibley, "Lehi in the Desert—Part VI," Improvement Era 53, no. 6, June 1950: 517–518; Hugh Nibley, "Lehi in the Desert—Part VII," Improvement Era 53, no. 7, July 1950: 566–567, 587–588; reprinted in Hugh Nibley, Lehi in the Desert / The World of the Jaredites / There Were Jaredites, The Collected Works of Hugh Nibley: Volume 5, Salt Lake City / Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1988, 84–92).

Similarly, when the people gathered to hear King Benjamin's speech, they offered sacrifice and burnt offerings "that they might give thanks to the Lord their God" (Mosiah 2:4) (For information about sacrifices in the Book of Mormon, see Donald W. Parry, "Service and Temple in King Benjamin's Speech," Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 16, no. 2, 2007: 45–47; Matthew Roper, "A Black Hole That's Not So Black," Review of Books on the Book of Mormon 6, no. 2, 1994: 169–174). Through these offerings they showed gratitude for the Lord who, among other things, had "brought them out of the land of Jerusalem," and "delivered them out of the hands of their enemies,” (verse 4). King Benjamin then reaffirmed the importance of this doctrine in his famous sermon, explaining that if he, as a mortal king, merited any thanks from his people, then “O how you ought to thank your heavenly King!” (verse 19).

At the waters of Mormon, Alma the Elder taught the people that “every day they should give thanks to the Lord their God” (Mosiah 18:23). Sometime later, after being freed from the oppressive bondage caused by Amulon and the Lamanites, Alma’s people recognized that “none could deliver them except it were the Lord their God” (Mosiah 24:21). And because of this humble recognition, “they gave thanks to God, yea, all their men and all their women and all their children that could speak lifted their voices in the praises of their God” (verse 22).

When the great destructions recorded in 3 Nephi eventually ceased, the people’s “mourning was turned into joy, and their lamentations into the praise and thanksgiving unto the Lord Jesus Christ” (3 Nephi 10:10) (For more information concerning this profound transformation, see Clifford P. Jones, “The Great and Marvelous Change: An Alternate Interpretation,” Journal of the Book of Mormon and Other Restoration Scripture 19, no. 2, 2010: 50–63). After Jesus arrived at the temple in Bountiful, He affirmed the importance of giving thanks by showing gratitude to His Father in prayer: “Father, I thank thee that thou hast given the Holy Ghost” (3 Nephi 19:20) and “hast purified those whom I have chosen, because of their faith” (verse 28) (For a treatment of Christ’s prayers among the people at Bountiful, see Robert L. Millet, “The Praying Savior: Insights from the Gospel of 3 Nephi,” in Third Nephi: An Incomparable Scripture, ed. Andrew C. Skinner and Gaye Strathearn, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2012, 131–146. See also, Donald W. Parry, “Pray Always’: Learning to Pray as Jesus Prayed,” in The Book of Mormon: 3 Nephi 9–30, This Is My Gospel, Book of Mormon Symposium Series, Volume 8, ed. Monte S. Nyman and Charles D. Tate, Provo, UT: Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, 1993, 137–148).

These various examples help demonstrate the profound importance that the Book of Mormon places on gratitude. Its stories repeatedly emphasize the Lord’s power which blesses the world and His children in many ways—in delivering them from suffering and bondage, in lending them breath from day to day, and in providing them with a Redeemer who will restore them and give them eternal life. Then it depicts their heartfelt praise, worship, and thanksgiving in response to these wondrous blessings.

Mormon’s faithful record emphasizes the Lord’s hand in the stories of his people as well as their worthy responses of sacrifice, humble worship, and prayers of thanks. Carefully studying these stories can inspire readers to similarly recognize the Lord’s influence in their own lives and find cause for their own expressions of heartfelt gratitude. They too will come to recognize the blessings of God’s deliverance from trials, trouble, and tribulation.

President Henry B. Eyring, for example, taught, “The times we will pass through will have in them hard trials, as they did for the people of Alma under the cruel Amulon, who put burdens on their backs too heavy for them to bear” (Henry B. Eyring, “Gratitude on the Sabbath Day,” Ensign, November 2016, online at lds.org). Like the people of Alma, readers in the latter days can have faith that the Lord will similarly deliver them from their own burdens and trials, and even help them to be “cheerful as well as strong” while enduring them (Eyring, “Gratitude on the Sabbath Day,” online at lds.org). As similar blessings flow into their own lives, they can follow the example of Alma’s people who collectively “lifted their voices in the praises of their God” (Mosiah 24:22).

In the Book of Mormon narratives preceding Christ’s visitation, those who escaped from their enemies or experienced miraculous deliverances often offered animal sacrifices as a sign of their gratitude. When Jesus Christ fulfilled the Law of Moses, however, such sacrifices were no longer acceptable as an appropriate form of gratitude and worship. Christ taught that now “ye shall offer for a sacrifice unto me a broken heart and a contrite spirit” (3 Nephi 9:20).

Such a sacrifice is especially meaningful in the context of Sabbath Day observance (see Doctrine and Covenants 59:8–9). President Eyring described the Sabbath as a day of “gratitude and love” (Eyring, “Gratitude on the Sabbath Day,” online at lds.org). He further explained, “As we partake of the bread and water, we remember that He suffered for us. And when we feel gratitude for what He has done for us, we will feel His love for us and our love for Him” (Eyring, “Gratitude on the Sabbath Day,” online at lds.org).

Finally, the Book of Mormon itself is a priceless treasure that should evoke a response of sincere gratitude. Elder Russell M. Nelson taught that “we have had the Book of Mormon for nearly 200 years. . . . Because of these and other precious scriptures, we know that God is our Eternal Father and that His Son, Jesus Christ, is our Savior and Redeemer. For these spiritual gifts, thanks be to God!” (Russell M. Nelson, “Thanks Be to God,” Ensign, May 2012, 79, online at lds.org).

23 And now the Lord said unto Alma: Haste thee and get thou and this people out of this land, for the Lamanites have awakened and do pursue thee; therefore get thee out of this land, and I will stop the Lamanites in this valley that they come no further in pursuit of this people.

24 And it came to pass that they departed out of the valley, and took their journey into the wilderness.

25 And after they had been in the wilderness twelve days they arrived in the land of Zarahemla; and king Mosiah did also receive them with joy.

verse 25 By combining the information in this verse to that in Mosiah 23:3 and Mosiah 24:20, we learn that the trip from the Waters of Mormon to Zarahemla was twenty-one days. The Waters of Mormon were probably not more than a few days’ journey from the city of Nephi (Mosiah 18:4). Note that when the sixteen strong men led by Ammon in search of the Zeniffites had traveled this route in reverse (Mosiah 7:4), they took some forty days to make the journey. This might well have been because they “knew not the course they should travel in the wilderness to go up to the land of Lehi-Nephi.” Alma’s party which included women, children, and “flocks” would probably not have traveled more than ten or eleven miles per day. Thus, the distance from the city of Nephi to Zarahemla, then was probably about 250 miles. The distance as the crow flies would probably be more like 180 miles (John L. Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, 8).

Alma’s people arrived in Zarahemla somewhat after the arrival of Limhi and his people probably by at least a few months. This is suggested by the phrase “king Mosiah did also receive them with joy” (italics added). Also, the same Lamanite army that pursued the people of Limhi into the wilderness happened onto the people of Alma and kept them captive for probably a few months.

We are not told what eventually became of this special covenant group of people. Did they merge back into Nephite society? Did they remain apart from the other Nephites? They were likely happy to be in Zarahemla where they could enjoy the blessings of the temple. They had, after all, lived in the wilderness for nearly thirty years.

Please see the illustration Book of Mormon History Diagram 1 Nephi 1 through Mosiah 22. It is well worth committing to memory.

Chapter 25 reports the reactions of the people of Zarahemla as they listened to the accounts of Zeniff and his people and to the account of Alma and his people and the afflictions they suffered. It also recounts Alma's labors in establishing the church in Zarahemla.

One latter-day church scholar observed: "Some Christians have criticized members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints for being church-centered instead of Christ-centered in worship. Perhaps this belief comes from repeated testimonies of members that the Church is true, as they attempt to bear witness of the truth of the restoration. Chapters 25-27 of Mosiah reveal the true relationship between Christ and his Church. One must come to Christ through faith and repentance of all sin, and then receive the ordinances of salvation provided by the Church" (Dennis L. Largey, "Lessons from the Zarahemla Churches" in The Book of Mormon: Mosiah, Salvation Only Through Christ, 61).

1 And now king Mosiah caused that all the people should be gathered together.

2 Now there were not so many of the children of Nephi, or so many of those who were descendants of Nephi, as there were of the people of Zarahemla, who was a descendant of Mulek, and those who came with him into the wilderness.

verse 2 Obviously the people of Zarahemla or "Mulekites" significantly outnumbered the Nephites. The "Nephites" in Zarahemla at this time are obviously not all literal "descendants of Nephi." Numbered among the Nephites were certainly some who were also descendants of Nephi's brothers Sam, Jacob, and Joseph, as well as some who descended from Zoram. While King Zarahemla himself was apparently a literal descendant of Mulek, the Mulekites or people of Zarahemla were descendants of the mixed group that came to the New World aboard ship with Mulek, including the ship's crew who may well have been non-Israelites.

This is the first mention in the Book of Mormon text of the name "Mulek," even though we have discussed the people of Zarahemla previously (Omni 1:13-20). Mulek was a son of King Zedekiah of Judah. His name is of interest. In the printer's manuscript of the Book of Mormon it appeared as Muloch and as Mulok in editions from 1830 to 1852. Then it became Mulek (Book of Mormon Critical Text: A Tool for Scholarly Reference, Volume 2: Mosiah-Alma, 1st ed. [Provo, Utah: FARMS, 1989], 483). It seems clear, regardless of how we spell it, that we are dealing with the Hebrew root mlk, as in Hebrew melek, which means "little king" or simply "king."

Some research by Mormon scholars Robert F. Smith, Benjamin Urrutia, and John L. Sorenson has brought to light some truly exciting information about Mulek. To summarize this information, I will quote from the article “Mulek, Son of the King” found in the publication Reexploring the Book of Mormon, edited by John W. Welch, 142-44:

Mulek, the son of Zedekiah, is mentioned several times in the Book of Mormon (see Mosiah 25:2; Helaman 6:10; 8:21) but not in the Bible—at least not in a way that people have recognized, until just recently. Biblical scholarship now bears out this Book of Mormon claim: King Zedekiah had a son named Mulek.

In the summer of 586 BC, when the troops of King Nebuchadnezzar breached the walls of Jerusalem, King Zedekiah of Judah and a large company of warriors attempted to escape by night to the East. Babylonian troops caught up with them in the plains of Jericho. Many presumably escaped, but Zedekiah himself was seized and taken to Nebuchadnezzar’s operational headquarters at Riblah (in what is now Syria). There, as punishment for breaking his sacred oath of fealty to King Nebuchadnezzar, the Babylonians forced Zedekiah to witness the execution of his captured sons, had his own eyes put out, and took him in bronze fetters to Babylon (see 2 Kings 25:4-7; 2 Chronicles 36:13).

According to the Book of Mormon, that was not the end of the matter. One son named Mulek was not killed by the Babylonians. He had escaped (see Omni 1:15-16; Helaman 8:21), even though the details remain shadowy.

The first biblical clue to the existence and escape of Mulek, son of Zedekiah, can be found in 2 Kings 25:1-10, which reports that Nebuchadnezzar and “all his host” scattered “all the men” and “all [the king’s] army” and burnt “all the houses of Jerusalem,” and with “all the army” they destroyed the walls. In the midst of all this, however, 2 Kings 25:7 omits the word all when it reports only that “the sons” of Zedekiah were killed, leaving open the question whether all of his sons were slain.

Biblical scholars have recently had interesting things to say about a person named Malchiah. Jeremiah 38:6 speaks of a “dungeon of Malchiah the son of Hammelech . . . in the court of the prison.” [this name in the Hebrew is pronounced Malkiyahu ben hamelek. The name Malkiyahu was reasonably rendered into English as “Malchiah” by the King James scholars, and the word ben was accurately translated as son. But the King James term Hammelech—pronounced ha’-melek—is not really a name; it is a transliteration. In Hebrew, hamelek means “the king” (ha is the definite article “the,” and melek is the word for “king.” Thus, accurately translated, Jeremiah 38:6 refers to “Malkiyahu son of the king.” Noted biblical scholar John Bright translates the phrase as “Prince Malkiah”—the term prince referring to a royal son—in his Anchor Bible commentary on Jeremiah.]

Was this MalkiYahu a son of King Zedekiah? Several factors indicate that he was. For one thing, the title “son of the king” was used throughout the ancient Near East to refer to actual sons of kings who served as high officers of imperial administration. The same is certainly true of the Bible, in which kings’ sons ran prisons (see 1 Kings 22:26-27; Jeremiah 36:26; 38:6) or performed other official functions (see

2 Kings 15:5; 2 Chronicles 28:7). Moreover, in view of the fact that the name MalkiYahu has been found on two ostraca from Arad (in southern Judah), the late head of the Department of Archaeology at Tel Aviv University, Yohanan Aharoni, said that "MalkiYahu is a common name and was even borne by the contemporary son of King Zedekiah."

But was the MalkiYahu the same person as Mulek? Study of these names tells us he may very well be. In the case of Baruch, scribe of Jeremiah, for example, the long form of his name, BerekhYahu, has been discovered on a seal impression by Nahman Avigad of the Hebrew University in Jerusalem. The full name has been shortened in Jeremiah's record to "Baruch." [In like manner, then, we might suppose that the name MalkiYahu might be shortened to Mulek.]

In view of this shortening, as in many other biblical names, there is no reason why a short form such as Mulek might not be possible.

A prominent non-Mormon ancient Near Eastern specialist declared recently of the Book of Mormon's naming "Mulek" as a son of Zedekiah, "If Joseph Smith came up with that one, he did pretty good!" He added that the vowels in the name could be accounted for as the Phoenician style of pronunciation. He found himself in general agreement that "MalkiYahu, son of the King" might very well be a son of King Zedekiah, and that the short-form of the name could indeed be Mulek (references may be found in original article).

But was Malkiyahu the son of the specific king Zedekiah? Since the passage in Jeremiah 38:6 does not specifically stipulate that Zedekiah was the king to whom Malkiyahu was related, we may only assume that this was so. But there are strong points of evidence for this assumption. The first point is the context of Jeremiah 38, where Zedekiah is the king with whom Jeremiah and his opponents are interacting. Because Zedekiah is mentioned by name in Jeremiah 38:5, it is probable that the scribe composing the text in the subsequent reference to Malkiyahu (verse 6) used the term ben hamelek rather than awkwardly repeating the royal name Zedekiah in a phrase like son of Zedekiah. It appears that this was an acceptable way of referring to a royal son and his kingly father without specifically using the father's name. Indeed, if Jeremiah 38:6 refers to any king other than Zedekiah, we should expect that king to be specifically named in the course of the story, for such was the care taken by Judean scribes. That no other monarch's name was recorded in Jeremiah 38 suggests very strongly that the king who was the father of Malkiyahu was Zedekiah.

A major question would be the age of Malkiyahu in Jeremiah 38, the chapter that records events during the Babylonian siege of Jerusalem in 586 BC, not long before the fall of the city. Was he old enough to have his name mentioned in the context described in Jeremiah 38? In this chapter, Jeremiah was put into confinement: "Then took they Jeremiah, and cast him into the dungeon of Malchiah the son of Hammelech, that was in the court of the prison: and they let down Jeremiah with cords. And in the dungeon, there was no water, but mire: so Jeremiah sunk in the mire” (verse 6). A problem with this verse is the misconceptions which arise from certain incorrect terms used by the King James translators. Not only should Hammelech be rendered as “the king,” but the Hebrew word that they translated as “dungeon” does not mean “dungeon.” Rather, the Hebrew word means “pit,” and in the context of Jeremiah 38 it means a pit for water storage, properly a cistern. Note that there was no water in the “dungeon” (cistern) and that “Jeremiah sunk in the mire” (mud). Also, the King James use of the word prison in Jeremiah 38:6 cannot be correct either. The Hebrew term is matarah and does not really mean prison, but rather “aim,” “objective,” or “target.” A more accurate rendition of Jeremiah 38:6 suggests that within a palace courtyard used by the royal guard for, among other things, archery practice (as in 1 Samuel 20:20), was the wellhead of a cistern connected with his name.

So how old would a royal son have to be in order to have a cistern connected with his name? What was the connection? And how old could Malkiyahu have been, as the son of King Zedekiah, in the context of Jeremiah 38? It is reported in the Bible that Zedekiah was 21 years old when he began to reign (see 2 Kings 24:18). His reign began in 597 B.C. and ended eleven years later in 586 B.C., when Jerusalem fell to the Babylonians and Zedekiah was captured. It was during Zedekiah’s eleventh year that the events of Jeremiah 38 occurred, which would make Zedekiah 32 years old at that point. Taking into consideration that a young man in the royal family could marry and father children as early as 15 or 16 year of age, it is perfectly conceivable [no pun intended] that Zedekiah could, at age 32, have had a son who was 15 or 16 years old by 586 BC. If, therefore, Malkiyahu were the first son of Zedekiah, and thus the heir apparent to the throne, as the owner of the title ben hamelek might well be, he could have been as old as 15 or 16 years himself in the context of Jeremiah 38. A teenage crown prince might very well have been assigned his own personal wing or apartment in the royal palace complex, whether he had married or not, and that wing or apartment could have abutted a courtyard where the royal guard held archery practice. One cistern (there might have been more) that was accessed by a wellhead in that courtyard could easily have stretched underneath the princely quarters, so that it was designed as the “cistern of Malkiyahu son of the king.” In other words, it is entirely plausible that the Malkiyahu of Jeremiah 38:6 could have been the teenage son of Zedekiah and that a cistern in a courtyard of the royal palace could have carried his name. And if that is true, it is entirely possible that Malkiyahu the son of Zedekiah could have been the Mulek of whom the Book of Mormon reports.

Other options for Mulek’s age at the fall of Jerusalem have been suggested. John L. Sorenson, in his detailed BYU Studies article on the “Mulekites,” seems to have preferred a model in which Mulek was much younger: “We do not know that Mulek was more than an infant. The younger he was, the greater the likelihood that he could have escaped the notice of the Babylonians and subsequent slaughter at their hands.

Whatever his age, he may have been secreted away to Egypt by family retainers and close associates of the king along with the king's daughters (Jeremiah 43:6-7)."

Probably the only way that an infant or a teenage Mulek could have gone undetected by the Babylonians was that he was not in Judah at the Jerusalem fall. In 589 BC Zedekiah rebelled against Babylon, apparently in a conspiracy with Phoenicia and Ammon, to aid Egypt's efforts to take control of western Asia. Young Prince Mulek (Malkiyahu), perhaps barely 13, could have been sent to Egypt by his father either as part of an ambassadorial mission or as part of the liaison that would coordinate Judah's role in the rebellious coalition. Another scenario, perhaps more likely, is that a 15-year-old Mulek was sent to Egypt during 587 BC, when the Babylonian siege, which had commenced early in 588, was lifted so that Nebuchadnezzar's forces could deal with an Egyptian advance in the south (see Jeremiah 37:5-8). Others evidently traveled safely to Egypt during this time, and it may be that Mulek did as well, either to bear messages to Egypt and help coordinate the war or to secure his safety as heir to the throne of Judah, or both. In any case, the choice of Egypt as a safe haven for Mulek was also suggested by Sorenson, who maintained: "It is obvious that in order to leave by sea for America, he would have to reach a port. Since the Babylonians controlled the ports of Israel and Phoenicia at the time, going south to Egypt (among his father's allies) would be about the only possibility."

What does the Book of Mormon say about Mulek? Would the model of a teenage Mulek going to Egypt at the behest of his father, King Zedekiah, before the actual fall of Jerusalem fit with the references to Mulek in the Book of Mormon? There are only three places in the Book of Mormon that mention Mulek, and one of them (Helaman 6:10) is not germane to the discussion of his movements.

A passage in Omni alludes to Mulek's travel party without naming him specifically. Key phrases from these pertinent passages are of interest:

"The people of Zarahemla came out from Jerusalem at the time that Zedekiah, king of Judah, was carried away captive into Babylon. And they journeyed in the wilderness, and were brought by the hand of the Lord across the great waters" (Omni 1:15-16).

"The people of Zarahemla, who was a descendant of Mulek, and those who came with him into the wilderness . . ." (Mosiah 25:2).

"The sons of Zedekiah were . . . slain, all except it were Mulek [and] . . . the seed of Zedekiah are with us, and they were driven out of the land of Jerusalem" (Helaman 8:21).

Addressing these passages in reverse order, Helaman 8:21 suggests that Mulek and his people "were driven out of the land of Jerusalem." In a technical sense, whether Mulek was an infant or a teenage prince acting on behalf of his father, his travel to Egypt would not have been the result of having been "driven out." Rather, it was an escape. The passage does not address whether Mulek escaped from Jerusalem earlier than the party that eventually cross the ocean with him or whether they all left Jerusalem at once. It is worth noting that the very next verse (verse 22) maintains that “Lehi was driven out of Jerusalem,” which is also technically incorrect—Lehi, too, made an orderly and planned departure from Jerusalem. The inaccurate idea of the parties of Lehi and Mulek being “driven out” of Jerusalem may have developed late in Nephite thought. In any case, Helaman 8 says nothing that would contradict the idea of a teenage Mulek leaving Jerusalem for Egypt before the city’s fall to the Babylonians.

The reference in Mosiah 25:2 is of interest because it specifically identifies Zarahemla as a descendant of Mulek. In other words, had the Judean monarch survived, a direct heir to the throne of Jerusalem, Zarahemla, would ironically have been found in ancient America. A key phrase in the verse mentions Mulek’s party going “into the wilderness.” This theme also appears in Omni. But, again, nothing in Mosiah 25:2 contradicts the proposition that Mulek went to Egypt before Jerusalem’s fall.

Omni 1:15-16 gives the most specific information. Written upon the small plates of Nephi (not the plates of Mormon), the words of Amaleki in Omni represent a far earlier record of events than the other two references. Curiously, Mulek is not mentioned by name in Omni. The passage correctly specifies that “the people of Zarahemla came out [not “were driven out”] from Jerusalem at the time that Zedekiah, king of Judah, was carried away captive into Babylon.” This would place the departure from Jerusalem of at least some of Mulek’s party, perhaps the bulk of it, sometime in late 586 BC, more than a year after the point suggested for teenage Mulek himself to have gone to Egypt.

However, since Omni 1:15 does not specifically mention Mulek by name, it does not contradict the proposal that he went to Egypt earlier than the party with whom he eventually came across the sea. It is certainly possible that the party included some of the people who left Jerusalem in Jeremiah 43, as Sorenson suggested. And with the later reference in Mosiah 25:2, Omni 1:16 specifies that the group “journeyed in the wilderness.” That wilderness might have been the trail across northern Sinai from Judah to Egypt, as also suggested by Sorenson (“The Mulekites,” BYU Studies, 30/3 [1990], 9), or it could even refer to a subsequent trip from Egypt westward across the desert of North Africa (Ibid., 9). But returning to the subject at hand, nothing in Omni contradicts the model of a teenage Mulek going to Egypt a year before the fall of Jerusalem.

There is yet another biblical reference which some have interpreted as referring to Mulek. In Ezekiel 17:1-21, the Lord gave to Ezekiel a parable concerning the king of Judah and his seed being taken into Babylon. As an apparent addendum to this prophecy the Lord said: “Thus saith the Lord God; I will also take of the highest branch of the high cedar, and will set it; I will crop off from the top of his young twigs a tender one, and will plant it upon an high mountain and eminent: In the mountain of the height of Israel will I plant it: and it shall bring forth boughs, and bear fruit, and be a goodly cedar: and under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing; in the shadow of the branches thereof shall they dwell” (Ezekiel 17:22- 23).

Elder Orson Pratt, to whom the Lord had given the gift of prophecy (D&C 34:10), interpreted these verses as a prophecy concerning the Mulekites:

When Zedekiah, king of Judah, was carried away captive into Babylon, the Lord took one of his sons, whose name was Mulok [sic], with a company of those who would hearken unto his words, and brought them over the ocean, and planted them in America. This was done in fulfillment of the 22nd and 23rd verses of the seventeenth chapter of Ezekiel . . . By reading this chapter, it will be seen that the Jews were the “high cedar,” that Zedekiah the king was the “highest branch,” that the “tender one” cropped off from the top of his young twigs, was one of his sons, whom the Lord brought out and planted him and his company upon the choice land of America, which he had given unto a remnant of the tribe of Joseph for an inheritance, in fulfillment of the blessing of Jacob and Moses upon the head of that tribe (Orson Pratt’s Works, compiled by Parker Pratt Robinson [Salt Lake City: Deseret News Press], 1945).

Recently, an ancient Judean stamp seal has been identified as bearing the Hebrew form of the name “Malchiah son of Hammelech” (Jeffrey R. Chadwick, “Has the Seal of Mulek Been Found?” in Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, 12/2, 2003, 72-83). A stamp seal is a small stone, usually about the size of a jelly bean, with at least one side that is flat or slightly convex, engraved with a name, a title, a design, or some combination of these in mirror image so that it might be used as a stamp. The stamp seal might be encased in a ring to be worn on the finger or might be perforated with a single hole through which a string was passed, allowing the seal to be worn around the neck. The function of the seal was to be pressed into wet clay to leave an impression of the name, title, or design of the seal’s owner. Ancient documents were often sealed by tying them with string and then pressing a stamp seal into a marble-sized ball of clay on the string ends to bond them together. Clay seal impressions are often called bullae (the singular form is bulla) by scholars. The stamp seal might also be impressed into the wet clay of a newly made ceramic jar before kiln firing, on either one or more of the jar handles, or even on the shoulder of the jar. Archaeologists have discovered numerous stamp seals, stamped jar handles, and clay bullae in excavations throughout the land of Israel. Those with names or titles upon them provide valuable data for many fields of biblical and Near Eastern studies.

The oval-shaped stamp seal of Malkiyahu ben hamelek was fashioned of bluish green malchite stone and is very small, measuring just 15 mm long by 11 mm wide (smaller than a dime) and only 7 mm thick. The printing face of the seal is convex, which leaves a concave image on imprinted clay.

Just where and when the seal was originally found is not known. It was probably excavated illegally or kept (stolen) by a workman at a legitimate excavation in Jerusalem during the 1980s. Work was still being carried out then in the city of David, the southern Temple Mount, and the Jewish Quarter areas. The seal first appeared on the international antiquities market in a 1991 catalog of Numismatic Fine Arts Inc. of New York. It was purchased by Jewish millionaire Shlomo Moussaieff, of London, who has a large collection of ancient stamp seals and other antiquities. The first scholarly reference to the seal appeared in 1995 in an article in French by Andre Lemaire. The initial English-language publication of the seal appeared in 1997 in the magnum opus of Israeli scholars Nahman Avigad and Benjamin Sass, entitled Corpus of West Semitic Stamp Seals, which included a photo of a modern impression from the seal. A subsequent publication in English appeared in 2000 in Biblical Period Personal Seals in the Shlomo Moussaieff Collection, by Robert Deutsch and Andre Lemaire, which included photos of the seal as well as a modern impression.

The authenticity of the Malkiyahu seal is supported by the existence of a number of other seals of similar design and content. Also, it is of interest that the Hebrew Bible contains thirteen occurrences of the term ben hamelek in the singular form, referring to eight different men. Eight of the thirteen of these references (referring to four of the eight men) are known for certain to refer to be biologic sons of the mentioned king. The biological veracity of the titles in the others are uncertain. Of the five biblical ben hamelek references in the Bible that do not clearly identify a son-to-father relationship to the king, not a single one indicates that any man called ben hamelek was a son of someone other than the king. There is simply no positive evidence that ben hamelek meant anything other than a biological son of the king.

So was Mulek the “Malkiyahu the son of the king” mentioned in Jeremiah 38:6? Nothing in the Bible or the Book of Mormon negates this identification. And the evidence rehearsed above lends significant support to it. the m-l-k basis of both Hebrew names is clear, and the case of Berekhyahu / Baruch demonstrates that there is theoretical precedent for a person being called both Malkiyahu and Mulek—the one a longer, more formal version of the name with a theophoric yahu element, and the other a shorter form lacking that element but featuring a different vowel vocalization. Malkiyahu / Mulek would not have been killed by the Babylonians before Zedekiah’s eyes, as were his brothers (all younger than himself), because as the king’s eldest son and heir to the throne, he was likely sent to Egypt by his father well before the fall of Jerusalem and the capture of the royal family. Whether Mulek was sent to Egypt as a royal messenger or ambassador or in an effort to ensure his safety, it is unlikely that he could have taken all of his possessions with him to Egypt. Other men in Judah with the ben hamelek title are known to have possessed multiple stamp seals, and if Malkiyahu / Mulek did also it would have been easy for him to have left one behind. Some 2,570 years or so later, that seal was found by someone digging in Jerusalem and was surreptitiously sold. The stamp seal of “Malkiyahu son of the king” now in the London collection of Shlomo Moussaieff seems to be authentic. It is quite possible that an archaeological artifact of a Book of Mormon personality has been identified. It appears that the seal of Mulek has been found.

3 And there were not so many of the people of Nephi and of the people of Zarahemla as there were of the Lamanites; yea, they were not half so numerous.

verse 3 As Mormon discusses here the relative numbers of Nephites, Mulekites, and Lamanites, one might get the impression that Lamanites joined in this gathering—see verse 1. This is unlikely, however, in view of the following verse.

During most of the Book of Mormon history, the Lamanites far outnumbered the Nephites. The probability exists that the descendants of Laman and Lemuel intermarried with the native inhabitants of the land who already lived in the area when Lehi and his group landed, thus adding to their numbers (see also 4 Nephi 1:40).

4 And now all the people of Nephi were assembled together, and also all the people of Zarahemla, and they were gathered together in two bodies.

verse 4 When the Nephites originally arrived in Zarahemla (210 BC) and found the people of Zarahemla, they joined with them under the leadership of Mosiah as king. It is interesting to note that in spite of this political amalgamation, here the people of Zarahemla are still numbered separately from the people of Nephi. Some ninety years have passed, yet they still “gathered together in two bodies.” The differences between the two groups are interesting to consider. They likely spoke two different languages, though they apparently did have at least one language in common. They probably lived in different sections of the city of Zarahemla and the land of Zarahemla. We know nothing about how much, if any, intermarriage might have occurred between the two groups. We will learn that the Mulekites will never combine with the Nephites to form a completely homogenized population. “The Mulekites seemed to remain a separate social and ethnic group responsible for civil wars within the land of Zarahemla, led by Amlici (Alma 2-4) and Zerahemnah (Alma 43-44), both of whom appear to have Mulekite names and support” (John W. Welch, “Finding Answers to B. H. Roberts’ Questions and an Unparallel,” a FARMS reprint, 9).

There is a most interesting archaeological correlate of this particular verse. The archaeological site known forty years ago as Santa Rosa, which sat beside the Grijalva River in the Mexican state of Chiapas (the ruin now lies beneath waters impounded by a large dam), meets all the geographical requirements for the Nephite city of Zarahemla (see Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, 46-47, 153-57). Test excavations in a limited portion of Santa Rosa were made in 1958. An exact chronology and full picture of life there could not be determined in detail, but it was concluded that a “tremendous amount of building activity” likely took place in about the first century BC. In addition to earthen mound foundations up to more than 40 feet high, a huge platform built in the center of the place measured over 150 feet wide by 180 feet long and 22 feet high; this platform lay directly on the center line through the site. Presumably, various public buildings had once been built on top of the giant platform, although no search was made for evidence of such structures. At some point, likely in the first century BC (approximately when Mosiah, son of Benjamin, was alive) this platform was newly covered with a layer of gravel, and a plaster floor was laid over that. The gravel on either side of a line that ran exactly through the middle of this “temple” was found to be of distinct composition, half from one geological source, the other half of a different origin. The excavator suggested that the divided floor “may be taken to imply two separate groups, each working on its section” in a ceremonial context. The surrounding residential area was also divided into two sections that were separated along an extension of the line between the gravels. The archaeologist involved thought that a division of the community into two social groups had prevailed and that the gravel laying had been a ceremonial act acknowledging the social separation (See Donald L. Brockington, The Ceramic History of Santa Rosa, Chiapas, Mexico, Papers of the New World Archaeological Foundation, BYU, no. 23 [1967], especially 1, 2, 60, and 61. The archaeologists who produced these results were not Latter-day Saints).

This dual pattern recalls the situation in the city of Zarahemla at the time of King Mosiah when his subjects, who spoke two different languages, assembled to hear him—“all the people of Nephi . . . and also all the people of Zarahemla, and they were gathered together in two bodies.” At the least, Santa Rosa provides an example of the type of ethnically or linguistically divided Mesoamerican community reflected in this particular verse, whether or not it was the actual scene of the historical event reported there.

5 And it came to pass that Mosiah did read, and caused to be read, the records of Zeniff to his people; yea, he read the records of the people of Zeniff, from the time they left the land of Zarahemla until they returned again.

6 And he also read the account of Alma and his brethren, and all their afflictions, from the time they left the land of Zarahemla until the time they returned again.

verse 6 “the account of Alma . . . from the time they left the land of Zarahemla” The “records of Zeniff” and the “account of Alma” were presumably identical until Alma’s people departed the land of Nephi for the waters of Mormon.

7 And now, when Mosiah had made an end of reading the records, his people who tarried in the land were struck with wonder and amazement.

8 For they knew not what to think; for when they beheld those that had been delivered out of bondage they were filled with exceedingly great joy.

9 And again, when they thought of their brethren who had been slain by the Lamanites they were filled with sorrow, and even shed many tears of sorrow.

verse 9 There had been no bloodshed among the people of Alma. Those “who had been slain by the Lamanites” were all among the people of Noah and Limhi.

10 And again, when they thought of the immediate goodness of God, and his power in delivering Alma and his brethren out of the hands of the Lamanites and of bondage, they did raise their voices and give thanks to God.

11 And again, when they thought upon the Lamanites, who were their brethren, of their sinful and polluted state, they were filled with pain and anguish for the welfare of their souls.

12 And it came to pass that those who were the children of Amulon and his brethren, who had taken to wife the daughters of the Lamanites, were displeased with the conduct of their fathers, and they would no longer be called by the names of their fathers, therefore they took upon themselves the name of Nephi, that they might be called the children of Nephi and be numbered among those who were called Nephites.

verse 12 Presumably the ignoble Amulon and his fellow priests of Noah were Nephites. Hence their children, whom they had left behind in the city of Nephi when they panicked and fled from their Lamanite attackers, were also Nephites by descent. Here the offspring of these cowardly priests disown them. The children did not wish to be known as “Amulonites.” Rather they will go by the more general title Nephites.

13 And now all the people of Zarahemla were numbered with the Nephites, and this because the kingdom had been conferred upon none but those who were descendants of Nephi.

verse 13 We have already discussed the concept that the Nephites and Mulekites will never completely unite (see the commentary for verse 4). Rightful leadership of this combined group will always remain in the hands of the Nephites.

14 And now it came to pass that when Mosiah had made an end of speaking and reading to the people, he desired that Alma should also speak to the people.

15 And Alma did speak unto them, when they were assembled together in large bodies, and he went from one body to another, preaching unto the people repentance and faith on the Lord.

16 And he did exhort the people of Limhi and his brethren, all those that had been delivered out of bondage, that they should remember that it was the Lord that did deliver them.

verses 15-16 Grant R. Hardy in his helpful article “Mormon as Editor” (in Rediscovering the Book of Mormon, edited by John L. Sorenson and Melvin J. Thorne, 15-28) has suggested that these verses may show an interesting example of the biases of the prophet Mormon as he edited the large plates of Nephi. Brother Hardy points out two major tendencies Mormon evidenced as he made his editorial choices. First, he interpreted political events in spiritual terms, and he highlighted the distinction between the obedient and the disobedient.

Two assumptions about this passage seem reasonable: Limhi and his brethren made up one of these large bodies of people, and Mormon had access to records of Alma's words to each of these groups. Mormon mentioned general preachings of repentance and faith, but the only specific instruction he recounted was the exhortation to Limhi's people to remember that the Lord was responsible for their deliverance. This editorial choice is puzzling when we recall that Limhi's people had freed themselves by getting their Lamanite guards drunk (see Mosiah 22). We even know the name of the man who concocted the scheme—Gideon. We also remember the conference in which Ammon and Limhi "began to consult with the people how they should deliver themselves out of bondage" (Mosiah 22:1). Their liberation seemed to be the result of sheer cunning—chapter twenty-two does not mention God once. And yet here in chapter twenty-five, Mormon's editing stresses that, despite appearances, God delivered Limhi's people just as much as he did Alma's people who had made a genuinely miraculous escape (Mosiah 24:16-25).

We thus see evidence of the point behind Mormon's editing—no matter what we may think about our own resourcefulness, decisiveness, and timing, God is still in charge. Mormon tends to interpret political and historical events in spiritual terms. This inclination is evident in his editing as well as in his direct "thus we see" comments.

Further evidence of Mormon's editing can be seen in this chapter. Look again at verses 7-11. Notice how Mormon probably takes some license with the reaction of the crowd to their being read the records of Zeniff and Alma. He has them all shifting back and forth simultaneously, from joy in verse eight to sorrow in verse nine, to praise in verse ten, and back to pain and anguish in verse eleven. In each case the pains of the disobedient contrast sharply and immediately with the joys of the obedient. The exposition of God's justice is clear, simple, and concise, and it owes its striking form to Mormon's editorial hand.

This type of editing is characteristic of the entire Book of Mormon. Mormon's motives for what he includes and what he does not are clear. His goal is not to give us a detailed historical account of ancient Nephite culture. Rather it is to turn our hearts to God. One of the ways Mormon does this is by emphasizing that those who follow God are blessed, while those who reject him suffer. The problem however, is that life is more complicated than this. We all know of instances in which good people suffer while the evil go unpunished. And most people are neither entirely righteous nor wholly wicked. Yet because the principle of God's justice is ultimately true, Mormon helps us out in the Book of Mormon by simplifying stories so that we can clearly see the results of good and bad behavior. Because of Mormon's editing, there is no question as to who is righteous and who is wicked, and that the bad things that happen are truly terrible, while the good things are wondrous indeed.

In some of Mormon's interpolations, Mormon identifies himself (see Words of Mormon; 3 Nephi 5:8-26; 26:6-12; 28:24; 4 Nephi 1:23), but more often he uses signals such as "thus we see," and "behold," and "I will show you" in an attempt to stress matters of particular spiritual importance to his readers (see Alma 24:19, 27; 50:19-23; Helaman 3:27-30; 12:1-2).

17 And it came to pass that after Alma had taught the people many things, and had made an end of speaking to them, that king Limhi was desirous that he might be baptized; and all his people were desirous that they might be baptized also.

18 Therefore, Alma did go forth into the water and did baptize them; yea, he did baptize them after the manner he did his brethren in the waters of Mormon; yea, and as many as he did baptize did belong to the church of God; and this because of their belief on the words of Alma.

verses 17-18 You will recall that King Limhi and his people had wanted to be baptized while they were still in the land of Nephi. Yet there was no one with the proper authority available to baptize them (Mosiah 21:33-35).

verse 18 "as many as he did baptize did belong to the church of God" Here is a teaching that we have learned since childhood. Baptism is necessary for entry into the church and required in order to take upon oneself the name of Christ (see verse 23).

19 And it came to pass that king Mosiah granted unto Alma that he might establish churches throughout all the land of Zarahemla; and gave him power to ordain priests and teachers over every church.

verse 19 "king Mosiah granted unto Alma . . . power to ordain priests and teachers over every church" Previously the right to administer the church and to ordain priests and teachers had belonged solely to the Nephite king who obviously held the priesthood keys or right of presidency. Here is the first instance in the Book of Mormon of separation of church and state.

Alma will preside over the church in Zarahemla for about thirty years, from his arrival in Zarahemla in about 122 BC until his death in 91 BC at the age of 82. He is considered to be the great builder of the church in the Book of Mormon, and is given credit for founding the church both in Mormon (at the "waters of Mormon") and in Zarahemla.

"granted unto Alma that he might establish churches throughout all the land of Zarahemla" Each of the Nephite congregations is referred to as a "church." The church likely already existed in Zarahemla, but Alma was called to divide it into congregations and bring to it more organization and leadership.

We will learn that in spite of delegating the responsibility of administering the church to Alma, Mosiah maintained his own council of priest advisers (Mosiah 27:1). This should not be surprising. These priests, notwithstanding their ecclesiastical designation, were likely the best educated and most astute men in the kingdom, and might be expected to form a body well qualified to counsel the king, even on political matters.

We have already concluded that these priests and teachers held the Melchizedek priesthood (Joseph Fielding Smith, Doctrines of Salvation, 3:87). Elder McConkie has added to our understanding of these offices: “In general terms, a priest is a minister.” While a priest must hold the priesthood, the “designation [priest] . . . has no reference to any particular office in the priesthood” (Mormon Doctrine, 598). “Among the Nephites, brethren holding the Melchizedek priesthood were consecrated teachers and given teaching and administrative powers and responsibilities. . . They had jurisdiction over the churches [congregations] and, along with the priests, were ‘to preach and to teach the word of God’ (Alma 23:4)” (Ibid., 776).

20 Now this was done because there were so many people that they could not all be governed by one teacher; neither could they all hear the word of God in one assembly;

21 Therefore they did assemble themselves together in different bodies, being called churches; every church having their priests and their teachers, and every priest preaching the word according as it was delivered to him by the mouth of Alma.

22 And thus, notwithstanding there being many churches they were all one church, yea, even the church of God; for there was nothing preached in all the churches except it were repentance and faith in God.

verses 21-22 The church consisted of many “churches” or congregations, yet they all taught the same doctrine.

verse 22 “even the church of God” Elder Bruce R. McConkie’s definition of the church of God is beautiful in its simplicity. The church is, he said, “God’s kingdom, the kingdom of God on earth, and as such is designed to prepare men for an inheritance in the kingdom of God in heaven, which is the celestial kingdom. Our Lord Jesus Christ is the Eternal King” (A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, 335).

“there was nothing preached in all the churches except it were repentance and faith in God” To preach “repentance” is to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is to teach of Christ’s atonement and resurrection and their implications in our eternal lives.

23 And now there were seven churches in the land of Zarahemla. And it came to pass that whosoever were desirous to take upon them the name of Christ, or of God, they did join the churches of God;

verse 23 “seven churches” In Zarahemla there was one “church,” but it was made up of subordinate local units also called “churches.” For a discussion of the possible significance of the number seven, see the commentary for Jacob 1:13.

24 And they were called the people of God. And the Lord did pour out his Spirit upon them, and they were blessed, and prospered in the land.

Mosiah Chapter 26

This chapter reports the difficulties encountered by the church due to the unbelief of the rising generation. It also describes Alma's struggle to appropriately deal with the transgressions of church members.

verses 1-4 If the people of King Benjamin, who were all converted by his preaching, diligently taught the gospel to their children, why did many of those children fall away? After all, 2 Nephi 4:5 teaches us the doctrine that "If ye are brought up in the way ye should go ye will not depart from it." We must be careful to keep in mind that this statement from 2 Nephi is not actually a doctrinal pronouncement. Rather it is an expression of faith and hope which will not always, unfortunately, hold true.

1 Now it came to pass that there were many of the rising generation that could not understand the words of king Benjamin, being little children at the time he spake unto his people; and they did not believe the tradition of their fathers.

verse 1 "being little children at the time he spake unto his people" Benjamin delivered his speech in 124 BC. This verse probably refers to a time about 100 BC when the children who listened to King Benjamin would have grown to adulthood.

"tradition of their fathers" We have encountered this expression previously (Mosiah 10:12; 26:1). It refers to the unwritten "lore" or beliefs passed along by word of mouth from generation to generation. In this particular case, it refers to the tradition of righteousness, the principles of the gospel of Christ, being passed along by the Nephites in Zarahemla.

2 They did not believe what had been said concerning the resurrection of the dead, neither did they believe concerning the coming of Christ.

3 And now because of their unbelief they could not understand the word of God; and their hearts were hardened.

verse 3 The process is as old as the earth itself. Sin leads to a loss of the Spirit of God. Without the influence of the Spirit, it is simply impossible to comprehend spiritual truths. Such an individual who does not possess the influence of the Holy Spirit is said to have a "hardened heart." In the non-believer's heart, things of the world—carnality in all its forms—displace all matters of a spiritual nature. See the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

4 And they would not be baptized; neither would they join the church. And they were a separate people as to their faith, and remained so ever after, even in their carnal and sinful state; for they would not call upon the Lord their God.

5 And now in the reign of Mosiah they were not half so numerous as the people of God; but because of the dissensions among the brethren they became more numerous.

verse 5 Obviously, there became a growing wave of dissent among these young people in Zarahemla, though they were not yet in the majority.

The meaning of the phrase “dissensions among the brethren” is not entirely clear. We have not been told of any major dissensions among the brethren of Mosiah who held positions of leadership. It is likely that the phrase is simply intended to refer to inter-generational dissension.

6 For it came to pass that they did deceive many with their flattering words, who were in the church, and did cause them to commit many sins; therefore it became expedient that those who committed sin, that were in the church, should be admonished by the church.

verse 6 “For it came to pass that they did deceive many with their flattering words” The spiritless and unbelieving younger generation were vocal in their godlessness and worldliness. Flattery, as it is used in the Book of Mormon, is a negative characteristic. It is the inclination and the ability of an unrighteous individual to bring others to his way of thinking. Such an individual who desires to so influence others is oft times attractive and prominent and honored by the world. He appeals to those worldly desires and needs which each of us possesses. Jesus taught that worldly individuals are likely to be loved by the world, while true disciples of Christ are more likely to be hated by the world (John 15:19). Jesus further warned, “Woe unto you, when all men shall speak well of you!” (Luke 6:26).

For a discussion of the various forms of the word flatter, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 28:22.

Obviously, some of the non-believers at this particular time in Book of Mormon history were similarly charismatic and persuasive and had the ability to lead others away from the Church. One such was the son of the prophet Alma, the younger Alma (Mosiah 27:8).

“it became expedient that those who committed sin, that were in the church, should be admonished by the church” We are taught here an important principle—that those who sin and pose a danger to the spiritual welfare of others in the church should be “admonished by the church.” To admonish is to reprove or to express warning or disapproval. It has been suggested that if we were to tolerate blatant sin and divisiveness in the church today, the brightness of the church as a beacon or light to the world would dim, and the Spirit would cease to strive with the church as it otherwise might. President George Q. Cannon, in speaking of apostasy within the church, said: “Now, such a condition of things if permitted to continue in our midst, unchecked, would be productive of the most terrible consequences. The Spirit of God would undoubtedly be so grieved that it would forsake not only those who are guilty of these acts, but it would withdraw itself from those who would suffer them to be done in our midst unchecked and unrebuked; and from the president of the church down, throughout the entire ranks of the priesthood, there would be a loss of the Spirit of God, a withdrawal of his gifts and blessing and his power, because of their not taking the proper measures to check and to expose their iniquity” (JD, 26:139).

Modern-day scriptures suggest that we may offend God lest we judge the sinners within the church: “And him that repenteth not of his sins, and confesseth them not, ye shall bring before the church, and do with him as the scripture saith unto you, either by commandment or by revelation. And this ye shall do that God may be glorified—not because ye forgive not, having not compassion, but that ye may be justified in the eyes of the law, that ye may not offend him who is your lawgiver—verily I say, for this cause ye shall do these things” (D&C 64:12-14). This is a subject that might provoke some debate among thoughtful individuals. Obviously, each individual case must be considered on its own merits, and there is certainly much room in the church for repentance and forgiveness (verses 28-30). President Harold B. Lee taught, “The gospel is to save men, not to condemn them; but to save, it is sometimes necessary to confront and to discipline as the Lord has directed (The Teachings of Harold B. Lee, Edited by Clyde J. Williams, Salt Lake City: Bookcraft, 1996, 118).

In addition to helping transgressors repent, formal church discipline serves to cleanse the church. When sin goes unchecked in the church, the Spirit of the Lord withdraws, and the entire institution is adversely affected (Cannon, George Q., JD, 26:139). The Lord’s authorized leaders have a solemn obligation to protect the church from such danger (Alma 4:10; 5:59-60; D&C 20:83; 107:72). Christ taught his disciples that those who will not repent “shall not be numbered among my people, that [they] may not destroy my people, for behold I know my sheep, and they are numbered” (3 Nephi 18:31). “Nevertheless,” Jesus continued, “ye shall not cast [them] out of your synagogues . . . for unto such shall ye continue to minister; for ye know not but what they will return and repent . . . and I shall heal them” (3 Nephi 18:32). Jesus’s instructions, which teach intolerance of sin and yet compassion for the transgressor, echo his words to the prophet Joseph Smith: “For I the Lord cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance; nevertheless, he that repents and does the commandments of the Lord shall be forgiven” (D&C 1:31-33).

Alma’s implementation of the Lord’s instructions will be a blessing to individuals and to the church, for “they began again to have peace and to prosper exceedingly in the affairs of the church, walking circumspectly before God, receiving many, and baptizing many” (verse 37).

“those who committed sin . . . should be admonished by the church” Some definitions of the word admonished found in Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language include, “to warn or notify of a fault; to reprove with mildness; to counsel against wrong practices; to caution or advise; in ecclesiastical affairs, to reprove a member of the church for a fault, either publicly or privately.” For an alternate meaning of admonished, see the commentary for Omni 1:13.

7 And it came to pass that they were brought before the priests, and delivered up unto the priests by the teachers; and the priests brought them before Alma, who was the high priest.

8 Now king Mosiah had given Alma the authority over the church.

9 And it came to pass that Alma did not know concerning them; but there were many witnesses against them; yea, the people stood and testified of their iniquity in abundance.

verse 9 “Alma did not know concerning them” It appears that when these dissenters were brought before Alma, he had no prior first-hand knowledge of their offenses. Accordingly, he required the testimony of “many witnesses against them.”

10 Now there had not any such thing happened before in the church; therefore Alma was troubled in his spirit, and he caused that they should be brought before the king.

11 And he said unto the king: Behold, here are many whom we have brought before thee, who are accused of their brethren; yea, and they have been taken in divers iniquities. And they do not repent of their iniquities; therefore we have brought them before thee, that thou mayest judge them according to their crimes.

verse 11 “And they do not repent of their iniquities” This phrase implies that these dissenters had already been admonished or warned, yet they had not heeded the warning. They had failed to repent.

12 But king Mosiah said unto Alma: Behold, I judge them not; therefore I deliver them into thy hands to be judged.

verses 10-12 It is interesting that Alma would turn to the king for assistance in solving this troublesome ecclesiastical problem. Alma, after all, had expressed firm anti-monarchical views (Mosiah 23:6-9). Perhaps old habits die hard. Mosiah, however, refuses to become involved in this purely religious issue, and he places the issue back on Alma’s shoulders: “I judge them not; therefore I deliver them into thy hands to be judged.” Obviously, Mosiah is even more committed to the principle of separation of church and state than is Alma. We will learn that Mosiah is also a firm anti-monarchist himself (Mosiah 29:13, 16-18).

13 And now the spirit of Alma was again troubled; and he went and inquired of the Lord what he should do concerning this matter, for he feared that he should do wrong in the sight of God.

verse 13 Now Alma is in a quandary. Previously in Nephite culture, the king had been the last word and final resort in all religious questions. It is obvious, however, that Mosiah had given up such a role.

14 And it came to pass that after he had poured out his whole soul to God, the voice of the Lord came to him, saying:

verse 14 This is a most exciting verse. In response to Alma's sincere and earnest prayer, he was privileged to hear the voice of the Lord! One is left to wonder as to the mechanism by which Alma received this important revelation on church discipline (verses 15-32). Was, for example, the will of the Lord made known to him by the Spirit? Did he hear the audible voice of the Lord? Was he favored to see and hear the Lord in open vision? Enos had a similar experience after he had prayed "all the day long" and into the night (Enos 1:4-5). We will later learn that Alma wrote down this counsel from the Lord so that he would not forget it and so that he might judge members of the Church fairly and according to the commandments of the Lord (verses 29-30, 32- 33). The Lord will teach Alma that this pattern of judgment in the church was parallel to what would occur at the final judgment (verse 20-28).

15 Blessed art thou, Alma, and blessed are they who were baptized in the waters of Mormon. Thou art blessed because of thy exceeding faith in the words alone of my servant Abinadi.

16 And blessed are they because of their exceeding faith in the words alone which thou hast spoken unto them.

verses 15-16 What is the significance of the word "alone" in these verses? Alma had believed the preaching of Abinadi without the help of any particular divine manifestation and without the testimony of other witnesses except for the whispering of the Spirit. The Lord in our dispensation has called such believing souls "blessed" (D&C 50:36).

17 And blessed art thou because thou hast established a church among this people; and they shall be established, and they shall be my people.

verse 17 "they shall be established" The Lord here still has reference to those "who were baptized in the waters of Mormon." This phrase appears to mean, "they shall become established members of the church here in Zarahemla."

18 Yea, blessed is this people who are willing to bear my name; for in my name shall they be called; and they are mine.

verse 18 In this verse the Savior states that the members of his church will be called "in my name" rather than "by my name." He is not giving us his name. Rather he is saying that when we are called up to receive eternal life, he will be our advocate.

Those who know and love him will be called up. We will be called in his name (see also verse 24).

19 And because thou hast inquired of me concerning the transgressor, thou art blessed.

verse 19 “Thou art blessed,” and therefore you shall learn the answer to your entreaty.

20 Thou art my servant; and I covenant with thee that thou shalt have eternal life; and thou shalt serve me and go forth in my name, and shalt gather together my sheep.

verse 20 Alma is sealed up by the Lord to eternal life. His calling and election is made sure. For a discussion of this remarkable covenant between God and man, see the commentary for Helaman 10:4-7 and also the Calling and Election Made Sure in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 16.

verses 21-32 These verses contain the divine pattern for church disciplinary action. This information was revealed to Alma by the Lord after Alma’s sincere prayer for direction (verse 14) and is still pertinent today in the Lord’s Church.

21 And he that will hear my voice shall be my sheep; and him shall ye receive into the church, and him will I also receive.

22 For behold, this is my church; whosoever is baptized shall be baptized unto repentance. And whomsoever ye receive shall believe in my name; and him will I freely forgive.

verses 21-22 The first principle of church discipline is prevention. The best form of prevention is to baptize only truly repentant converts who had accepted Jesus Christ. Accordingly, only those who hear and believe the word of the Lord will be received into the church.

“him shall ye receive into the church, and him will I also receive” Alma was to judge whether or not the prospective member was a truly repentant believer committed to a Christ-like life. The Lord would then ratify Alma’s decision. The Lord thus confirms that Alma held the keys of the kingdom. And how does he confirm this fact? The Lord said to Joseph Smith in our dispensation: “I have conferred upon you the keys and power of the priesthood, wherein I restore all things, and make known unto you all things in due time. And verily, verily, I say unto you, that whatsoever you seal on earth shall be sealed in heaven; and whatsoever you bind on earth, in my name and by my word, saith the Lord, it shall be eternally bound in the heavens” (D&C 132:45-46).

“For behold, this is my church” Here is an important doctrine. Christ is head of the church, and he directs his church through revelation to his prophet (verse 14).

“him will I freely forgive” The Lord extends a generous offer of forgiveness to those who are baptized with sincere intent. It is comforting to know that this same offer applies to us today in the Church. It is vital that each of us has been “baptized unto repentance.”

23 For it is I that taketh upon me the sins of the world; for it is I that hath created them; and it is I that granteth unto him that believeth unto the end a place at my right hand.

verse 23 The Lord reiterates his qualifications as our Savior.

What is the antecedent of the pronoun “them” in this verse? It certainly is not the “sins of the world.” It is, from the previous two verses, “he that will hear my voice,” “him shall ye receive into the church,” and “whosoever is baptized.”

Is Jesus our creator? Wasn’t it the Father who created us? In what sense is Jesus referred to here as having “created them”? We know that the Father of our spirits is God the Father. Christ participated with his Father in creating the earth and all things upon the face of the earth including the mortal materials of the earth—the dust of the earth—of which the bodies of man are comprised. “And I, God, said unto mine Only Begotten, which was with me from the beginning: Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and it was so” (Moses 2:26-27, italics added; see also Isaiah 45:12; 2 Nephi 29:7; Jacob 2:21; Alma 1:4). Additionally, the Savior may be speaking here for God the Father according to the principle of “divine investiture of authority.” See also the commentary for Alma 5:15.

“a place at my right hand” This phrase refers to exaltation in the celestial kingdom.

24 For behold, in my name are they called; and if they know me they shall come forth, and shall have a place eternally at my right hand.

verse 24 “and if they know me” What does it mean to know God? It is the same as to love God. It is to obey his commands—to follow his counsel. It is only in this way that we will come home to him.

verses 25-28 These verses apparently refer to those who will eventually go with Satan and become sons of perdition.

25 And it shall come to pass that when the second trump shall sound then shall they that never knew me come forth and shall stand before me.

verse 25 “when the second trump shall sound” Keep in mind the fact that the doctrine of the after-life, as taught to and understood by the Book of Mormon prophets, was apparently simplified and incomplete relative to our present-day understanding. The expression “second trump” here seems to signal the time between the resurrection of those who will inherit the telestial glory and the resurrection of those who will become sons of perdition. In the only other usage of the phrase “second trump” in the scriptures (D&C 88:99), the expression refers instead to the moment between the morning and afternoon of the first resurrection. This is the interval following the resurrection of the celestial souls and just before the resurrection of those bound for the terrestrial kingdom. Please review the doctrine of the resurrection in the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:15.

26 And then shall they know that I am the Lord their God, that I am their Redeemer; but they would not be redeemed.

verse 26 Even the sons of perdition will know that Christ is the Savior, though they will confess that knowledge only grudgingly, and their confession will imply no acceptance or submission.

27 And then I will confess unto them that I never knew them; and they shall depart into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels.

verse 27 “I will confess unto them that I never knew them” Certainly the Lord knows, in fact is intimately acquainted with, every creature. How then could the Lord say of the wicked, “I never knew them.” John W. Welch has provided a possible explanation: “The Hebrew word ‘know’ (yada) has a broad range of meanings. One of them is covenantal. [Speaking to Israel, the Lord said through the prophet Amos] “You only have I known of all the families on earth: therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities (Amos 3:3). . . Yahweh had recognized only Israel as his legitimate servants; only to them had he granted the covenant” (Illuminating the Sermon at the Temple & Sermon on the Mount, Copublished by FARMS: Provo, Utah and Deseret Book: Salt Lake City, Utah, 95-96). Certainly, the Lord is aware of every being upon the earth, but he covenants with or “knows,” in the special sense of these two verses (26 and 27), only those who do good works in his name and by the Spirit of God.

28 Therefore I say unto you, that he that will not hear my voice, the same shall ye not receive into my church, for him I will not receive at the last day.

29 Therefore I say unto you, Go; and whosoever transgresseth against me, him shall ye judge according to the sins which he has committed; and if he confess his sins before thee and me, and repenteth in the sincerity of his heart, him shall ye forgive, and I will forgive him also.

verse 29 “him shall ye judge according to the sins which he has committed” The judgment of a person must be commensurate with the violation. Certain priesthood officers in the church then and now are appointed judges in Israel. Then, it included Alma the high priest and perhaps others. Today it includes bishops, stake presidents, mission presidents, and general authorities. The judgments that might be meted out by these officers are strictly restricted. Today our doctrine on this subject is: “We believe that all religious societies have a right to deal with their members . . . provided that such dealings be for fellowship and good standing; but we do not believe that any religious society has authority to try men on the right of property or life, to take from them this world’s goods, or to put them in jeopardy of either life or limb, or to inflict any physical punishment upon them. They can only excommunicate them from their society, and withdraw from them their fellowship” (D&C 134:10).

“if he confess his sins before thee and me” A vital step toward repentance is that the transgressor confess his sins before God and, when appropriate, before an authorized church leader.

There are certain serious sins which may affect an individual’s standing in the church and his ability to hold office in the church. Examples would include such sins as murder, certain instances of apostasy, incest, other serious moral transgressions, and serious criminal acts. These sins require two kinds of forgiveness, the forgiveness of the Lord and the forgiveness of the church. They also require confessions both to God and to the “common judges” of the church.

“repenteth in the sincerity of his heart” True repentance requires more than “worldly sorrow.” It also requires “godly sorrow” (2 Corinthians 7:9-11). Worldly sorrow consists of that sorrow born of fear of social ostracism, the fear of having to suffer the practical and often humiliating consequences of one’s actions. In contrast, godly sorrow consists in the knowledge that one has offended God, broken the divine law, strayed from the strait and narrow path, and jeopardized his eternal future. An individual who “in the sincerity of his heart” suffers godly sorrow is eager and anxious to receive any punishment required to right himself before the Lord. He is not inclined to dictate the terms of his own punishment. He possesses “a broken heart and a contrite spirit” (2 Nephi 2:7; 3 Nephi 9:20). He is devoid of hypocrisy, pretense, and deception. The prophet Joel described him as one who is apt to “rend [his] heart and not [his] garments” (Joel 2:12-13). One cannot come to experience true godly sorrow lest it be personally revealed by the Holy Spirit. It does not come easily. It is a precious gift of the Spirit. And how does one acquire this gift of the Spirit? The formula for acquiring any gift of the Spirit is always the same. First one must summon from within himself a genuine desire to obtain the gift—in this case to repent. One must then evidence this desire by “experimenting upon the words.” That is, one must strive with one’s conscious and purposeful thoughts and behavior to recognize one’s errors and feel remorse for them. One must plead for forgiveness from the Lord in humble prayer. One must make amends where possible by asking the forgiveness of any who might have been offended. One must also contemplate the excruciating suffering which the Lord willingly agreed to suffer and the gratitude which each of us should have to him. Once sufficient effort has been expended, then the Lord may see fit to bestow the gift of godly sorrow, a heartfelt desire and determination to repent—to change one’s life. Only when one possesses true godly sorrow does that individual have the strength and ability to complete the process of true repentance or change.

Exactly what are the characteristics of the spiritual gift of godly sorrow? Figuratively it may be understood as being equivalent to a personal interview with the Savior himself in which the Lord addressed himself to the particular sin of the individual. The love and concern of the Savior for the sinner would prevail at this interview. The individual would be brought to a clear understanding of his sins and the consequences of remaining unrepentant, yet the Savior would plainly manifest to the individual the road to repentance and the real hope of forgiveness. A genuine remorse would result from a yearning to remain or return to the warm and loving presence of the Lord and the possibility that a failure to repent of one's sins may render that hope forever untenable. The overall effect of this "personal interview" would be to engender in the individual a compelling urge to do whatever it takes to be forgiven and start anew.

There are many forms of counterfeit godly sorrow. A person may be sorry he has lost a blessing, or he may be unhappy that he is not permitted to continue "to take happiness in sin" (see Alma 41:10; Mormon 2:13). His sorrow may be only because of the embarrassment of being caught. That type of "repentance" will not cleanse a soul of its unrighteousness. Indeed, Paul indicated that some "repentance" itself needs to be repented of: "Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance: for ye were made sorry after a godly manner. . . . For godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of: but the sorrow of the world worketh death. For behold this selfsame thing, that ye sorrowed after a godly sort, what carefulness it wrought in you, yea, what clearing of yourselves" (2 Corinthians 7:9-11). True repentance follows when a person has deep remorse that he has offended God by breaking his laws and being disobedient. He is sorry because of the alienation from God that the sin has brought into his life. Repentance then is "of the godly sort," and he learns that "wickedness never was happiness" (Alma 41:10). Because repentance requires a broken heart and a contrite spirit, nothing less will bring permanent relief. Mormon lamented that the Nephites were sorrowful, but not for the right reasons: "Their sorrowing was not unto repentance, because of the goodness of God; but it was rather the sorrowing of the damned" (Mormon 2:13). Even though the scripture says the blood of Jesus Christ "was shed for the remission of your sins" (D&C 27:2), because nothing but genuine remorse for having offended God can bring forgiveness, the Lord has said that "my blood shall not cleanse them if they hear me not" (D&C 29:17).

30 Yea, and as often as my people repent will I forgive them their trespasses against me.

verse 30 Is it possible to abuse the principle of repentance by repeatedly sinning and repenting as seems convenient? Keep in mind that the Lord knows intimately the heart of each man.

31 And ye shall also forgive one another your trespasses; for verily I say unto you, he that forgiveth not his neighbor's trespasses when he says that he repents, the same hath brought himself under condemnation.

verse 31 The doctrine of forgiveness without qualification is clearly laid out in the scriptures and is sobering to contemplate: “For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your Heavenly Father will also forgive you; But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses” (Matthew 6:14-15; 3 Nephi 13:14-15; see also D&C 64:8-10).

32 Now I say unto you, Go; and whosoever will not repent of his sins the same shall not be numbered among my people; and this shall be observed from this time forward.

verse 32 “Now I say unto you, Go” The command “Go” or “Go to” in the scriptures means “Go to it” or “Get to work.”

“whosoever will not repent of his sins the same shall not be numbered among my people” Here is introduced the concept of excommunication. This likely was a new idea to Alma. Nephite culture had held the idea that merely being born a Nephite numbered one among the people of the Lord, and one could not be excommunicated from being a Nephite (see the commentary for Alma 5:57).

33 And it came to pass when Alma had heard these words he wrote them down that he might have them, and that he might judge the people of that church according to the commandments of God.

verse 33 In what context did Alma hear “these words”? See the commentary for verse 14.

34 And it came to pass that Alma went and judged those that had been taken in iniquity, according to the word of the Lord.

35 And whosoever repented of their sins and did confess them, them he did number among the people of the church;

verse 35 Here we again are taught the importance of confessing, when appropriate, one's sins to the Lord and to proper church authority or even to oneself. The Lord said, “Behold, he who has repented of his sins, the same is forgiven, and I, the Lord, remember them no more. By this ye may know if a man repenteth of his sins—behold, he will confess them and forsake them” (D&C 58:42-43).

36 And those that would not confess their sins and repent of their iniquity, the same were not numbered among the people of the church, and their names were blotted out.

verse 36 Blotted out, of course, means removed. According to the Lord's word, "the names of the wicked shall not be mingled with the names of my people" (Alma 5:57). Transgressors who fail to humble themselves, confess their sins, and repent, have their names removed, or blotted out, from the records of the Church. The corollary to "not [being] numbered among the people of Christ" is excommunication (Moroni 6:7). The removal of the names of rebellious and unrepentant church members from church records is a formal measure reflecting a loss that has already taken place in the heart. King Benjamin taught that the name of Christ, received by those who enter the gospel covenant will "never shall be blotted out, except it be through transgression" (Mosiah 1:12; cf. 5:7-8, 11). In an ultimate sense, the names of the wicked are blotted out of the Lord's book of life. The book of life contains the names of those who will receive an inheritance at the Lord's right hand (Alma 5:57-58).

It might also be added that those who are "blotted out" or excommunicated should still be received and welcomed in church meetings in case they should one day return to the fold (3 Nephi 18:32).

37 And it came to pass that Alma did regulate all the affairs of the church; and they began again to have peace and to prosper exceedingly in the affairs of the church, walking circumspectly before God, receiving many, and baptizing many.

verse 37 "walking circumspectly before God" Circumspectly means cautiously; with watchfulness or attention.

38 And now all these things did Alma and his fellow laborers do who were over the church, walking in all diligence, teaching the word of God in all things, suffering all manner of afflictions, being persecuted by all those who did not belong to the church of God.

39 And they did admonish their brethren; and they were also admonished, every one by the word of God, according to his sins, or to the sins which he had committed, being commanded of God to pray without ceasing, and to give thanks in all things.

verse 39 Here is an appropriate comment on life in general. As we labor in life, we find ourselves in a position to admonish others around us, whether they be children, employees, or fellow church members. But it never ceases to be true that we ourselves are constantly "admonished, every one by the word of God, according to [our] sins."

Mosiah Chapter 27

Scripture Mastery

Mosiah 27 The rebellion and conversion of the younger Alma and the four sons of Mosiah

This chapter is the first account of the conversion of the younger Alma and the four sons of King Mosiah and the beginning of their labors for the church. We will yet read two additional accounts of this miraculous conversion related by the younger Alma to his sons Helaman and Shiblon.

1 And now it came to pass that the persecutions which were inflicted on the church by the unbelievers became so great that the church began to murmur, and complain to their leaders concerning the matter; and they did complain to Alma. And Alma laid the case before their king, Mosiah. And Mosiah consulted with his priests.

verse 1 In any era, it is inevitable that persecution will be felt by members of the church of Christ. Paul wrote, “All that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution” (2 Timothy 3:12). Joseph Smith taught, “The enemies of this people will never get weary of their persecution against the church, until they are overcome” (TPJS, 259).

“Mosiah consulted with his priests” Apparently, Mosiah maintained a group of priests that functioned at times as a council to which he could go for advice and counsel (see also Alma 23:16). Even King Noah had utilized his priests for this function (Mosiah 12:17). Presumably Mosiah’s priests also had ecclesiastical functions when they were not counseling the king.

Mosiah had previously refused to become involved when Alma requested that Mosiah judge a group of Nephite sinners (Mosiah 26:10-12). Mosiah had apparently felt that the matter was purely a religious one and should be handled by Alma and the church. On this particular occasion, however, Mosiah obviously felt that there were civil issues involved, and he did become involved.

2 And it came to pass that king Mosiah sent a proclamation throughout the land round about that there should not any unbeliever persecute any of those who belonged to the church of God.

3 And there was a strict command throughout all the churches that there should be no persecutions among them, that there should be an equality among all men;

verse 3 “that there should be an equality among all men” This phrase suggests that among the persecutions leveled against the church members, there might have been something of social or socioeconomic discrimination or class prejudice.

4 That they should let no pride nor haughtiness disturb their peace; that every man should esteem his neighbor as himself, laboring with their own hands for their support.

5 Yea, and all their priests and teachers should labor with their own hands for their support, in all cases save it were in sickness, or in much want; and doing these things, they did abound in the grace of God.

verses 4-5 Notice here how Alma emphasizes the need for equality in the church. This is, of course, a clear contrast to the practices of King Noah and his priests (Mosiah 11:6, 14).

verse 5 The expression “much want” may be alternatively rendered “extraordinary need.”

6 And there began to be much peace again in the land; and the people began to be very numerous, and began to scatter abroad upon the face of the earth, yea, on the north and on the south, on the east and on the west, building large cities and villages in all quarters of the land.

verse 6 “The people began to be very numerous, and began to scatter abroad upon the face of the earth . . . in all quarters of the land” This refers to the land of Zarahemla. It is interesting that Book of Mormon writers commonly spoke of their land as being divided into four quarters (“north,” “south,” “east,” and “west”—see also Alma 43:26; 52:10; 56:1; 58:30). They similarly thought of the earth as being divided into four quadrants (see 1 Nephi 19:16; 22:25; 2 Nephi 10:8; 21:12; 3 Nephi 5:24; 5:26; 16:5; Ether 13:11). Research by Diane E. Wirth and Steven L. Olsen has shown that similar ideas existed in pre-Columbian America and also in the Old World. For details of this concept see the article, “Four Quarters” in Reexploring the Book of Mormon, edited by John W. Welch, pages 145-47.

7 And the Lord did visit them and prosper them, and they became a large and wealthy people.

verse 7 “And the Lord did visit them” When the Lord “visits” a people, he exerts his influence over them and exercises his will among them. This may be for the purpose of blessing them (as it is in this verse); for comforting them (Alma 17:10); for judging them (Omni 1:7); or for expressing his anger at them (Ether 14:25).

“and prosper them” This may refer to material prosperity and / or spiritual prosperity.

“they became a large and wealthy people” How do you interpret the adjective “large”? The previous verse has already mentioned that they had become “numerous.” Perhaps “large” refers to manifesting an ideal nutritional state and being healthy and strong.

verses 8-37 Here is the Book of Mormon’s first of three accounts of the conversion of Alma and the sons of Mosiah. Alma will later recount his conversion story on two additional occasions, to his son Helaman in Alma 36:4-26 and to his son Shiblon in Alma 38:6-8.

John W. Welch in his article “Three Accounts of Alma’s Conversion” (Reexploring the Book of Mormon, 150-53) has made some interesting observations as he compared these three texts. He points out that it is apparent that all three accounts originated from the same man. Evidence for this includes the fact that the accounts contain the same distinctive phrases such as “destroy the church of God,” “lead astray,” “rebellng against God,” “he spake as it were with a voice of thunder,” “fell to the earth,” “born of God,” “the gall of bitterness,” “marvelous light,” “racked with eternal torment,” and “pained no more.” Also, the details of the three accounts are remarkably consistent. “Even what superficially appears to be a difference is not. Alma 36:16 states that Alma was racked for three days and three nights. Mosiah 27:23, however, says the priests fasted for two days and two nights in pleading with the Lord for the soul of Alma. This disparity is easily explained. According to the Nephite practice, the fast would not have begun until the morning of the next day after the decision to fast, and Alma had suffered for a day before the fast began (Helaman 9:10).”

The account here in Mosiah 27 gives more emphasis to the sons of Mosiah than do the other two accounts. This is likely because king Mosiah is the one reporting the events in Mosiah 27, whereas Alma is speaking in the other accounts.

“The three accounts also consistently reflect different vantage points in Alma’s life. In Mosiah 27, Alma is a young man, spontaneously overwhelmed by the power of the angel and terrified by the prospect of the day of judgment (see verse 31). Later in Alma’s life, it is clear that the older man has faithfully and successfully served his Lord and his people all the rest of his days (see Alma 36:26-27) so that he now emphasizes his longing to be present with God (see Alma 36:22)” (Ibid.).

The first person here is obviously the prophet Mormon. He is telling the story, using as his resource, records written by, most probably, the younger Alma himself, though Mosiah or the senior Alma may have also written on this event.

8 Now the sons of Mosiah were numbered among the unbelievers; and also one of the sons of Alma was numbered among them, he being called Alma, after his father; nevertheless, he became a very wicked and an idolatrous man. And he was a man of many words, and did speak much flattery to the people; therefore he led many of the people to do after the manner of his iniquities.

verse 8 Just how wicked were the younger Alma and the sons of Mosiah? Obviously, they were more than simply rebellious youngsters passing through a temporary period of defiance of authority. Here Alma is described as “a very wicked and an idolatrous man,” and the sons of Mosiah will later be described as “the very vilest of sinners” (Mosiah 28:4). The experience of these four men should give hope to those today who feel hopelessly mired in sin.

The word “nevertheless” is a poignant one here, particularly for those of us who have reared children who have not been responsive to the gospel teachings. The younger Alma was reared in the home of one of the world’s great prophets and was even named after him. “Nevertheless, he became a very wicked and an idolatrous man.”

The younger Alma was obviously charismatic, persuasive, and had exceptional personal power and influence. He is described as “a man of many words, and did speak much flattery to the people.” For a discussion of the various forms of the word flatter, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 28:22.

The names of Alma’s mother and any siblings are unknown. He himself might have been born in the colony established by his father in the land of Helam or even earlier (see Alma 5:5).

“he being called Alma, after his father” See the commentary on “patristic names’ in the supplemental article, Names in the Book of Mormon.

9 And he became a great hinderment to the prosperity of the church of God; stealing away the hearts of the people; causing much dissension among the people; giving a chance for the enemy of God to exercise his power over them.

verse 9 This is the only instance in all the scriptures where Satan is referred to with the specific phrase “enemy of God.”

10 And now it came to pass that while he was going about to destroy the church of God, for he did go about secretly with the sons of Mosiah seeking to destroy the church, and to lead astray the people of the Lord, contrary to the commandments of God, or even the king—verse 10 Alma and the four sons of Mosiah were not only guilty of breaking the commandments, they were also engaged in activities forbidden by King Mosiah’s proclamation mentioned in verse 2. They were guilty of breaking the law of the land.

11 And as I said unto you, as they were going about rebelling against God, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto them; and he descended as it were in a cloud; and he spake as it were with a voice of thunder, which caused the earth to shake upon which they stood; verse 11 “the angel of the Lord appeared unto them” We obviously do not know the name of this angel, but it is provocative that he is referred to as “the angel” rather than an angel.

One might well ask the questions: Why were these apostate sinners granted the privilege of a miraculous heavenly manifestation? Is there a danger that this remarkable story might teach those who read it the wrong lesson? Are we to learn that if a young person who has misgivings about the truth of the gospel gives vent to his doubts by actively and maliciously campaigning against the church, then he will be rescued by a heavenly manifestation from a merciful God? Perhaps it is not entirely appropriate to even ask these questions. Who are we, after all, to question our God and his agenda? Why was the apostle Paul, for example, so honored on the road to Damascus? Obviously, there was a far-reaching purpose for this remarkable experience had by Alma and the sons of Mosiah. While there may be no simple answer to these questions, consider the following thoughts:

1. We certainly can assume that Alma and his brethren were among the very spiritually elect of those who have come to earth. They likely were valiant in the pre-existence as evidenced by their mortal performance after their conversions. It is to their eternal credit that they were indeed converted by this experience. It is obvious that not all of those who are favored with extraordinary spiritual experiences like this one will be completely converted by them. Consider for example Laman and Lemuel (1 Nephi 3:29) and even some individuals from our own dispensation such as Martin Harris, Oliver Cowdery, or David Whitmer.

2. We are also given to ponder the potential power of the earnest and persistent prayers of a loving parent (James 5:16). We can be sure that the senior Alma and King Mosiah were praying fervently and daily for their wayward sons (see verse 14).

“he spake as it were with a voice of thunder” The Lord reveals himself to his children “after the manner of their language, that they might come to understanding” (Doctrine and Covenants 1:24; cf. 2 Nephi 31:3). It is important to remember that “language is not limited to the words we use,” but that “it also entails signs, symbols, and bodily gestures that are imbued with meaning by the cultures that produced them.” Further, “As with spoken language, symbolic and gestural languages are culturally specific and can be fully understood only by those entrenched within that particular culture” (Mark Alan Wright, “According to Their Language, unto Their Understanding’: The Cultural Context of Hierophanies and Theophanies in Latter-day Saint Canon,” Studies in the Bible and Antiquity 3, 2011: 51-52). Hence, hierophanies (manifestations of the divine) are culturally embedded phenomena” (Ibid., 55).

From an ancient Near Eastern, cultural perspective, the voice of the angel being as thunder would have been understood as a manifestation of the terrifying power of the storm god or divine warrior. From a Mesoamerican perspective, the voice of the angel being as thunder could be understood as associating the angel with fertility, regeneration, and even resurrection.

Understanding this illuminates why the angel spoke in a voice that sounded like thunder. Essentially, the angel wanted to shake up and stop Alma in his tracks; to show him that his life was on a shaky foundation. He spoke like thunder so that Alma would know that this heavenly messenger spoke with power and authority. This hierophany forced Alma to recognize that if he continued in his course he would himself be cast off and destroyed in divine judgment (Mosiah 27:16; Alma 36:9, 11).

12 And so great was their astonishment, that they fell to the earth, and understood not the words which he spake unto them.

verse 12 It is interesting that the angel had to repeat his message to make himself understood. It seems likely that the recipients of this divine manifestation were initially so distracted by the experience itself, that they were not receptive to the message. A similar situation will occur at the time of the Lord's personal appearance to the people in the land Bountiful following his resurrection (3 Nephi 11:3-6).

13 Nevertheless he cried again, saying: Alma, arise and stand forth, for why persecutest thou the church of God? For the Lord hath said: This is my church, and I will establish it; and nothing shall overthrow it, save it is the transgression of my people.

verse 13 Among those who were traveling about and persecuting the church, Alma was singled out and addressed by the angel. It seems likely that he was the ring leader in this group of dissenters.

“why persecutest thou the church of God?” Paul was asked a similar question on the road to Damascus—“Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?” (Acts 9:4).

“the Lord hath said: This is my church” The Lord had previously made it clear, in speaking to the elder Alma, that the church was his—it belong to the Lord (Mosiah 26:22).

“nothing shall overthrow it, save it is the transgression of my people” This seems to be an important principle which has held true since the earth began. The church is not vulnerable to destruction by external influences so long as its people are diligent and righteous. Only corruption and error within the Church is capable of destroying it.

14 And again, the angel said: Behold, the Lord hath heard the prayers of his people, and also the prayers of his servant, Alma, who is thy father; for he has prayed with much faith concerning thee that thou mightest be brought to the knowledge of the truth; therefore, for this purpose have I come to convince thee of the power and authority of God, that the prayers of his servants might be answered according to their faith.

15 And now behold, can ye dispute the power of God? For behold, doth not my voice shake the earth? And can ye not also behold me before you? And I am sent from God.

16 Now I say unto thee: Go, and remember the captivity of thy fathers in the land of Helam, and in the land of Nephi; and remember how great things he has done for them; for they were in bondage, and he has delivered them. And now I say unto thee, Alma, go thy way, and seek to destroy the church no more, that their prayers may be answered, and this even if thou wilt of thyself be cast off.

verse 16 “Now I say unto thee: Go” Here, again, is that heavenly command, alternately “Go to,” which might be interpreted as “Go to it” or “Get to work.”

“remember the captivity of thy fathers” The angel refers to the previous captivity of the two major divisions of the Zeniffites—those who followed Alma to the land of Helam and those who remained behind in the land of Nephi under the leadership of Limhi.

“and remember how great things he has done for them” The interesting expression “how great things” is found elsewhere in the scriptures (1 Samuel 12:24; Mark 5:19, 20; Luke 8:39; Acts 9:16) and is also found in other Book of Mormon verses (2 Nephi 1:1; Alma 62:50; Ether 4:14; 6:30).

“and this even if thou wilt of thyself be cast off” Here the angel delivers to Alma a naked threat. He says, in effect, “Cease this campaign to destroy the church even if you yourself leave the church and are cast off eternally.” The implication to Alma must have been a sobering one. It was, “We don’t particularly need you in the church, but you will stop trying to destroy it for others, or else.”

17 And now it came to pass that these were the last words which the angel spake unto Alma, and he departed.

verse 17 The angel departed with his threat ringing in Alma’s ears.

18 And now Alma and those that were with him fell again to the earth, for great was their astonishment; for with their own eyes they had beheld an angel of the Lord; and his voice was as thunder, which shook the earth; and they knew that there was nothing save the power of God that could shake the earth and cause it to tremble as though it would part asunder.

verse 18 “Alma and those that were with him” We are never told exactly who was with him. We know that four of them were the sons of Mosiah—Ammon, Aaron, Omner, and Himni. Verse 34 of this chapter implies that there may have been others as well who were blessed with this marvelous spiritual experience.

“asunder” From Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language, we read the definition of asunder: “Apart, into parts; separately; in a divided state.”

19 And now the astonishment of Alma was so great that he became dumb, that he could not open his mouth; yea, and he became weak, even that he could not move his hands; therefore he was taken by those that were with him, and carried helpless, even until he was laid before his father.

verse 19 “he became weak, even that he could not move his hands” The verse suggests that in fact he couldn’t move any of his extremities! It is of interest that only Alma was so profoundly afflicted physically, or at least there is no mention of the others’ being so affected.

20 And they rehearsed unto his father all that had happened unto them; and his father rejoiced, for he knew that it was the power of God.

21 And he caused that a multitude should be gathered together that they might witness what the Lord had done for his son, and also for those that were with him.

verse 21 Father Alma was quick to recognize an incomparable teaching moment.

22 And he caused that the priests should assemble themselves together; and they began to fast, and to pray to the Lord their God that he would open the mouth of Alma, that he might speak, and also that his limbs might receive their strength—that the eyes of the people might be opened to see and know of the goodness and glory of God.

verse 22 Fasting under these circumstances may be referred to as petitionary fasting. A precedent for this petitionary fasting is found in the Bible as when David “fasted, and went in, and lay all night upon the earth” as he prayed to the Lord to spare the life of his first son with Bathsheba (2 Samuel 12:16-23; cf. Nehemiah 1:4; Psalm 69:10; 109:24; Daniel 6:18; 9:3).

Perhaps some further comments about the habits of fasting in the Book of Mormon are appropriate. Fasting is mentioned in a few settings and apparently was used for a few different specific purposes. These include (1) fasting to mourn the death of a public figure (see the commentary for Helaman 9:10); (2) fasting in association with petitioning the Lord for certain blessings as in this verse; (3) fasting in preparation for receiving certain blessings or gifts from the Lord (see the commentary for Alma 17:3; and (4) fasting as a religious exercise or rite (see the commentary for 3 Nephi 27:1).

As the reader turns to these appointed verses, he will note that there is a biblical precedent for each of these types of fasting and that the settings in the Book of Mormon in which fasting is mentioned are wholly appropriate.

23 And it came to pass after they had fasted and prayed for the space of two days and two nights, the limbs of Alma received their strength, and he stood up and began to speak unto them, bidding them to be of good comfort:

verses 24-31 These verses have been considered a “psalm of Alma.”

24 For, said he, I have repented of my sins, and have been redeemed of the Lord; behold I am born of the Spirit.

verse 24 As we consider the experiences of both the younger Alma and Saul of Tarsus, it would seem that the only scriptural account in any way tantamount to their experience was the experience of the Savior in Gethsemane and at Calvary. Apparently, the Lord has the ability, just as the Father will later manifest in Gethsemane and Calvary, to pointedly produce, in the life of a mortal, the same suffering which might be produced by a specific adverse experience, or even a series of adverse experiences. In other words, he can cause suffering, in an individual, that corresponds to any adverse experience he chooses? This is the “suffering of sanctification” discussed in the section titled “How might we categorize adversities and sufferings?” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 1, Adversity and Suffering. Pay particular attention to the discussion of type 3 suffering—that suffering orchestrated deliberately by the Lord for the purpose of schooling us. This is the same type of suffering the Father imposed upon his firstborn Son during the atoning experience. Please also read and understand The Essence of the Lord’s Atonement, volume 1, chapter 19 of Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine.

Now let us consider some important questions regarding this type of experience orchestrated by the Lord Jehovah and the Father. First, was the experience forcibly imposed upon Alma and Paul? Or, did they have some say in the matter? It seems clear that Deity would not, nor indeed could not, neglect or override the agency of any individual and force them to experience the suffering associated with this experience. Just as Jesus agreed to his awful atoning experience (“not as I will, but as thou wilt”—Matthew 26:39), so must Alma and Paul have agreed to experience this suffering. They first experienced a personal epiphany from a divine personage, either an angel or the Lord himself. Undoubtedly their spiritual plight was explained to them. There can be no question that both Alma Paul were exceptional in the premortal world and were foreordained to a great work here in mortality. But both had lost their way. Now they needed rescuing, and perhaps there was only one way back. They had to voluntarily suffer (see Alma 36:17-18).

Another important question is: What was accomplished by their suffering? Simply stated, as they suffered well the imposed sufferings, they “earned,” and the Lord mercifully granted them, by personal revelation, gifts of the Spirit including the perquisite gifts associated with those gifts. These perquisites resulted in the conversion of Alma and Paul. Please see the section “Perquisite Gifts of the Spirit” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 8, The Blessings of Spiritual Gifts.

The result was their conversion to the Lord and to his gospel in the fullest sense of the word. Alma will later utter eloquent evidence for his conversion: “Behold . . . I could remember my pains no more; yea, I was harrowed up by the memory of my sins no more. And oh, what joy, and what marvelous light I did behold; yea, my soul was filled with joy as exceeding as was my pain! Yea, I say unto you, my son, that there could be nothing so exquisite and so bitter as were my pains. Yea, and again I say unto you, my son, that on the other hand, there can be nothing so exquisite and sweet as was my joy” (Alma 36:19-21).

Alma and Paul were also inducted into what Paul will call “the fellowship of his [Christ’s] suffering” (Philippians 3:10). Please see the section entitled “The Atonement Principle” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 2, The Roles of Suffering in Our Lives. An important effect of this suffering, aside from the conversion to the Lord and his purposes, is empathy and charity for all mankind.

We may assume that the four sons of Mosiah shared in a similar experience with their friend Alma, and evidence for their impressive empathy is found in Mosiah 28:3: “Now they were desirous that salvation should be declared to every creature, for they could not bear that any human soul should perish; yea, even the very thoughts that any soul should endure endless torment did cause them to quake and tremble.”

“I have . . . been redeemed of the Lord” Obviously, it is only because of the Savior’s eventual atonement, in addition to the suffering which he himself experienced, that Alma was able to be forgiven of his sins. Again, we see an illustration of how the atonement benefited those in Old Testament times even hundreds of years before the event of Christ’s suffering in Gethsemane and on the cross.

25 And the Lord said unto me: Marvel not that all mankind, yea, men and women, all nations, kindreds, tongues and people, must be born again; yea, born of God, changed from their carnal and fallen state, to a state of righteousness, being redeemed of God, becoming his sons and daughters;

26 And thus they become new creatures; and unless they do this, they can in nowise inherit the kingdom of God.

verses 25-26 People must be “born again . . . born of God . . . changed from their carnal and fallen state, to a state of righteousness . . . [changed] to new creatures.” At this point, please reread the commentary for Mosiah 3:19 on the “natural man.” Read also the section “Baptism of Fire and of the Holy Ghost in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 18, Baptism, the Ordinance that Brings Spiritual Growth.

Every man is a “natural man” and in bondage to the flesh. In order for a man to have a chance at exaltation, it is necessary that he be repeatedly justified and sanctified by the Holy Ghost. By the Spirit's influence, the sins of the obedient are forgiven (justification). Then increments of the iniquity, carnality, sensuality, and every other evil thing can be "burned out" of the repentant soul as if by fire. Also, he receives an increment of the pertinent gifts of the Spirit. These two events comprise the phenomenon of sanctification. The person who has been thus cleansed (justified and sanctified) becomes a "new creature" of the Holy Ghost. It may be said of him that he is "born again." Such a man is fundamentally and profoundly changed.

27 I say unto you, unless this be the case, they must be cast off; and this I know, because I was like to be cast off.

verse 27 "I was like to be cast off" Alma was about to be cast off. In light of modern revelation, we might be tempted to interpret the phrase "cast off" here as meaning that the individual is no longer a considered candidate for exaltation in the celestial kingdom. The actual meaning is more likely that Alma felt he was about to be cast off into hell or everlasting fire as a son of Perdition (see verse 28). Keep in mind the simplified doctrine of the post mortal life taught in the Book of Mormon: Man will be exalted in heaven or be cast into outer darkness with Satan. By virtue of the added insight afforded us by modern revelation, we know that the younger Alma, in spite of his "wickedness," in all likelihood, would not have qualified to be cast into outer darkness. He might certainly, however, have been "cast off" temporarily into hell—the spirit prison.

28 Nevertheless, after wading through much tribulation, repenting nigh unto death, the Lord in mercy hath seen fit to snatch me out of an everlasting burning, and I am born of God.

verse 28 "repenting nigh unto death" Punishment must be commensurate with the gravity of the sin. It is obvious that Alma's sins had been grievous. And he had to suffer commensurate with those sins.

"to snatch me out of an everlasting burning" To snatch is to seize hastily or abruptly. It is a bit ironic to note that here the label "everlasting burning" is used to describe a place akin to hell or to outer darkness. We know also that the phrase "everlasting burnings" is also a name for the place God dwells (JD, 4:54; DHC, 6:366).

29 My soul hath been redeemed from the gall of bitterness and bonds of iniquity. I was in the darkest abyss; but now I behold the marvelous light of God. My soul was racked with eternal torment; but I am snatched, and my soul is pained no more.

verse 29 "gall of bitterness and bonds of iniquity" Gall is a bitter and poisonous herb. "Its juice is commonly thought to be the 'hemlock' poison which Socrates drank" (Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible). When the word is used in the Bible, it is usually interpreted to mean poison. In the Old Testament gall is often mentioned in association with wormwood which is a plant with a bitter taste. It is interesting that the specific phrase “gall of bitterness” is found in only one scriptural verse outside the Book of Mormon—Acts 8:23. Perhaps both Alma and Paul were quoting the phrase from an unknown Old Testament period source. Here the phrase “gall of bitterness” seems to refer to the embittered spirit that Alma had held regarding the church.

Alma’s “eternal torment” lasted only about seventy-two hours. We learn in modern revelation that “eternal” and “endless” are names given to God. Therefore “eternal” or “endless” punishment is simply God’s punishment. “Eternal” here says nothing about its duration. Eternal or endless punishment does not go on forever (D&C 19:6-12).

“the darkest abyss” An abyss is a vast, immeasurable void often associated with hell, darkness, and misery. The term signifies a state far from God and his light. The gospel of Jesus Christ redeems repentant individuals from the abyss of rebellion and apostasy as well as that of ignorance and false traditions (cf. Alma 26:3).

“I am snatched” The verse footnote commentary in the 1989 version of the Book of Mormon points out that the word “snatched” likely comes from the Hebrew word natzal which means to snatch away from danger, to save. Notice that the same verb was also used in verse 28.

30 I rejected my Redeemer, and denied that which had been spoken of by our fathers; but now that they may foresee that he will come, and that he remembereth every creature of his creating, he will make himself manifest unto all.

verse 30 A careful reading of this verse leaves one wondering about the meaning of the phrase “but now that they may foresee that he will come.” The meaning is clearer if the phrase is rendered, “but now I understand that they truly are able to foresee that he will come.” Here Alma states that he had previously rejected the Savior and the messianic prophecies and testimonies of all the Nephite prophets. But now, following his harrowing process of conversion, he understands that Christ will indeed come and that the Nephite prophets foresaw and spoke of that blessed event.

“he remembereth every creature of his creating, he will make himself manifest unto all” Here is an important principle. Every person born into the world is provided with the necessary tools and exposure to the Spirit to enable them to accept Christ. Each person is thus responsible for his own eternal destiny. No competent member of the human family will be kept sufficiently ignorant as to give them a valid excuse for not accepting Christ. It certainly is true that many on the earth may not have an opportunity to learn about his church or to hear the teachings of contemporary prophets, but the “light of Christ” exists within all of us. “And the Spirit giveth light to every man that cometh into the world; and the Spirit enlighteneth every man through the world, that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit” (see D&C 84:46; see also Moroni 7:16 and the commentary for that verse).

31 Yea, every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess before him. Yea, even at the last day, when all men shall stand to be judged of him, then shall they confess that he is God; then shall they confess, who live without God in the world, that the judgment of an everlasting punishment is just upon them; and they shall quake, and tremble, and shrink beneath the glance of his all-searching eye.

verse 31 “every knee shall bow and every tongue confess before him”

Review the discussion of this phrase in the commentary for Mosiah 16:1. Can you imagine the drama which will surround this event? It will likely occur after all have been resurrected, even those destined to go with Satan into outer darkness. Then will each and every member of the human family kneel and acknowledge Jesus Christ as the Savior and concede that his judgments are just (D&C 84:104). Certainly a few will either refuse to confess or make this concession grudgingly and through clenched teeth. For these, this will be less a real confession of Christ, and more a grudging acknowledgment of who he is. These few will therefore remain “filthy still” (D&C 88:35).

Those “who live without God in the world” are those who never respond to the light of Christ within them. They never heed the subtle promptings which try to teach them of their eternal identity. Most have long since choked off that small divine pipeline by their worldliness.

“then shall they confess, who live without God in the world” In biblical Hebrew the relative clause (usually introduced by who or which) often follows, rather than precedes the word or phrase to which it refers. This unique aspect of the Hebrew language is seen in this particular phrase which has the relative clause following the word confess. More common English would be “then shall they who live without God in the world shall confess.” Another example is found in 1 Nephi 17:27 where we read, “The Egyptians were drowned in the Red Sea, who were the armies of Pharaoh” instead of “The Egyptians who were the armies of Pharaoh were drowned in the Red Sea.”

“the glance of his all-searching eye” Christ’s knowledge of us is intimate and complete. He comprehends our every strength, failing, and motive. He understands our every desire, both noble and ignoble. He knows our hearts completely. No one can escape his insight.

32 And now it came to pass that Alma began from this time forward to teach the people, and those who were with Alma at the time the angel appeared unto them, traveling round about through all the land, publishing to all the people the things which they had heard and seen, and preaching the word of God in much tribulation, being greatly persecuted by those who were unbelievers, being smitten by many of them.

verse 32 “Alma began from this time forward to teach the people, and those who were with Alma at the time the angel appeared unto them” This passage introduces a little-known mission to the Nephites by Alma and Mosiah’s sons, seemingly between one and eight years in duration.

“being greatly persecuted by those who were unbelievers” Again, persecution of the saints is inevitable (see the commentary for verse 1 of this chapter). Now it’s the turn of the younger Alma and the four sons of Mosiah to be persecuted.

33 But notwithstanding all this, they did impart much consolation to the church, confirming their faith, and exhorting them with long-suffering and much travail to keep the commandments of God.

verse 33 “confirming their faith” Undoubtedly these five or more missionaries told the story of their miraculous conversion many times. Undoubtedly the story was a source of strength to the members of the church.

“exhorting them with long-suffering and much travail” Apparently, it was the missionaries themselves who exercised “long-suffering” and who experienced “much travail” as they traveled about doing their missionary work. Travail is painful labor; severe toil.

34 And four of them were the sons of Mosiah; and their names were Ammon, and Aaron, and Omner, and Himni; these were the names of the sons of Mosiah.

35 And they traveled throughout all the lands of Zarahemla, and among all the people who were under the reign of king Mosiah, zealously striving to repair all the injuries which they had done to the church, confessing all their sins, and publishing all the things which they had seen, and explaining the prophecies and the scriptures to all who desired to hear them.

verse 35 It is sound doctrine that the diligent proclaiming of the gospel and the bearing of testimony is one way in which a sinner can be forgiven of his shortcomings. In D&C 84:61 the Lord said, “For I will forgive you of your sins with this commandment—that you remain steadfast in your minds in solemnity and the spirit of prayer, in bearing testimony to all the world of those things which are communicated unto you” (see also James 5:20).

“Himni” For commentary on the Hebrew origins of the name Himni, see the supplemental article, Names in the Book of Mormon.

36 And thus they were instruments in the hands of God in bringing many to the knowledge of the truth, yea, to the knowledge of their Redeemer.

37 And how blessed are they! For they did publish peace; they did publish good tidings of good; and they did declare unto the people that the Lord reigneth.

verse 37 As we have learned previously (see the commentary for Mosiah 12:21) “peace” and “good tidings of good” are all terms that refer to the good news of the everlasting gospel. To “publish” is to announce, proclaim, or promulgate.

Mosiah Chapter 28

Scripture Mastery

Mosiah 28:3 The sons of Mosiah could not bear that any human soul should perish.

1 Now it came to pass that after the sons of Mosiah had done all these things, they took a small number with them and returned to their father, the king, and desired of him that he would grant unto them that they might, with these whom they had selected, go up to the land of Nephi that they might preach the things which they had heard, and that they might impart the word of God to their brethren, the Lamanites—verse 1 “after the sons of Mosiah had done all these things” Mosiah’s four sons had just traveled throughout the land of Zarahemla, declaring Jesus Christ to the people and trying to repair the damage they had done to the church.

“they took a small number with them” We do not know, of course, just who or how many the four sons of Mosiah took with them on their mission to the Lamanites (see also Alma 17:8).

2 That perhaps they might bring them to the knowledge of the Lord their God, and convince them of the iniquity of their fathers; and that perhaps they might cure them of their hatred towards the Nephites, that they might also be brought to rejoice in the Lord their God, that they might become friendly to one another, and that there should be no more contentions in all the land which the Lord their God had given them.

verse 2 Note that the goals of the sons of Mosiah included not only to preach the gospel to the Lamanites (“bring them to the knowledge of the Lord their God”), but also to “convince them of the iniquity of their fathers.” Please refer back to the discussion of the important concept of the “founding myth” tradition of the Lamanites, found in the commentary for Jacob 3:3-9. The sons of Mosiah were not only going to preach the gospel, but they also were going to attack head-on the primary source of Lamanite animosity, the traditional hatred of the Nephites held by the Lamanites, the “traditions of their [the Lamanites’] fathers.” They hoped to disabuse some of the Lamanites of this heinous tradition. Thus, in a sense, this was also a diplomatic mission intended to try to establish peace between the two peoples. We will learn later that they were, in some measure, successful in this crusade.

3 Now they were desirous that salvation should be declared to every creature, for they could not bear that any human soul should perish; yea, even the very thoughts that any soul should endure endless torment did cause them to quake and tremble.

verse 3 To declare “salvation” to a people is, of course, to preach Jesus Christ to them.

“the very thoughts that any soul should endure endless torment did cause them to quake and tremble” It is likely that the anguish of soul, which the sons of Mosiah experienced in the hours and days after the angel appeared to them, was excruciating. Like Alma, they also had waded through tribulation and had been “nigh unto death” during their process of repentance (Mosiah 17:28). The suffering they had endured had surely taught them empathy for others who were also called upon to “endure endless torment.” Again, “endless torment” does not mean torment which goes on forever. It is simply a term which means God’s suffering—the suffering God intends or feels appropriate (D&C 19:10-12).

4 And thus did the Spirit of the Lord work upon them, for they were the very vilest of sinners. And the Lord saw fit in his infinite mercy to spare them; nevertheless they suffered much anguish of soul because of their iniquities, suffering much and fearing that they should be cast off forever.

verse 4 “And thus did the Spirit of the Lord work upon them” This verse explains how the Spirit schooled the sons of Mosiah and caused them to become the fully converted and fully committed saints which they had become (see verses 1-3 above).

“they suffered much anguish of soul because of their iniquities” Here is a reminder that true repentance involves more than merely apologizing. It may also involve the necessity of experiencing the godly sorrow discussed in the commentary for Mosiah 26:29. Apparently, the insight necessary to feel true godly sorrow can be experienced only with the help of the Spirit through personal revelation and personal travail.

5 And it came to pass that they did plead with their father many days that they might go up to the land of Nephi.

6 And king Mosiah went and inquired of the Lord if he should let his sons go up among the Lamanites to preach the word.

7 And the Lord said unto Mosiah: Let them go up, for many shall believe on their words, and they shall have eternal life; and I will deliver thy sons out of the hands of the Lamanites.

verse 7 Who is it that is promised eternal life in this verse, the sons of Mosiah or the Lamanites to whom they will preach the gospel? It would seem that it is most likely the former.

As we follow the sons of Mosiah on their fourteen-year mission to the Lamanites in the land of Nephi, we will see that the Lord will be kept busy keeping his promise to protect the missionaries. On several occasions, they will find themselves in harm's way, yet they will never walk alone.

8 And it came to pass that Mosiah granted that they might go and do according to their request.

9 And they took their journey into the wilderness to go up to preach the word among the Lamanites; and I shall give an account of their proceedings hereafter.

verse 9 The date for this verse in the 1981 edition of the Book of Mormon is given as "about 92 BC" It probably ought to be changed to 91 BC based on the information in Alma 17:6 and Mosiah 29:44.

"I shall give an account of their proceedings hereafter" Who is the first person in this verse? It is the prophet Mormon, of course. He will provide an account of the fourteen-year mission of the sons of Mosiah in Alma chapters 17 through 26.

10 Now king Mosiah had no one to confer the kingdom upon, for there was not any of his sons who would accept of the kingdom.

11 Therefore he took the records which were engraven on the plates of brass, and also the plates of Nephi, and all the things which he had kept and preserved according to the commandments of God, after having translated and caused to be written the records which were on the plates of gold which had been found by the people of Limhi, which were delivered to him by the hand of Limhi;

verse 11 Notice that this verse is not a complete sentence. The thought begun in this verse is not completed until verse 20, as verses 12-19 form an eight-verse parenthetical expression. Here we learn that Mosiah gathers up the sacred records and other objects which he holds in his possession. We are not told why he is gathering them up until verse 20.

The "plates of brass" are, of course, the brass plates of Laban.

What are the "plates of Nephi"? These consist of two separate sets of plates: (1) the "small" plates of Nephi, now a completed set, which were begun in 570 BC, and (2) the collection of plates we refer to as the "large" plates of Nephi begun earlier in 589 BC. If you are not "fresh" in your understanding of the plates of the Book of Mormon, please review the article, Those Confusing Book of Mormon Plates.

"all the things which he had kept and preserved according to the commandments of God" These things would include the sword of Laban, the Urim and Thummim or interpreters, the Liahona, and perhaps other sacred objects.

Also included were the twenty-four gold plates containing the writings of the prophet Ether which were found in the land Desolation by the expedition sent out by King Limhi. In addition, Mosiah had made and included in his gathering a translation of these plates. Here is a question to contemplate: Do we today have access to Mosiah's translation of these twenty-four gold plates? The answer will be given below in the commentary for verse 19.

12 And this he did because of the great anxiety of his people; for they were desirous beyond measure to know concerning those people who had been destroyed.

verse 12 The word “anxiety” is used here somewhat differently than we tend to use it today. Today we are inclined to use the word to mean uneasiness or apprehension. In this verse its meaning seems to be more eagerness, determination, concern, or even curiosity.

13 And now he translated them by the means of those two stones which were fastened into the two rims of a bow.

verse 13 “those two stones which were fastened into the two rims of a bow” These two stones are the “interpreters” or the Urim and Thummim. Please review the commentary for Mosiah 8:13. Joseph Smith described the Urim and Thummim as “two transparent stones set in the rim of a silver bow fastened to a breast plate” (HC, 1:35). Please see the description of this device in The Process of Translating the Book of Mormon in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, Appendix A.

14 Now these things were prepared from the beginning, and were handed down from generation to generation, for the purpose of interpreting languages;

verse 14 “These things” are, of course, the interpreters.

15 And they have been kept and preserved by the hand of the Lord, that he should discover to every creature who should possess the land the iniquities and abominations of his people;

verse 15 “that he should discover to every creature who should possess the land the iniquities and abominations of his people” The word “discover” means uncover or reveal. The Urim and Thummim is one medium through which the Lord may reveal to his prophet a comprehensive look of the world from beginning to end. This sweeping vision might include the “iniquities and abominations” of the world's people. It is then the prophet's responsibility to warn the people that they must repent of their iniquities.

16 And whosoever has these things is called seer, after the manner of old times.

verse 16 Whoever possesses the Urim and Thummim is a “seer”—one who sees. The terms seer and the prophet are not necessarily synonymous (see the commentary for Mosiah 8:15-16).

17 Now after Mosiah had finished translating these records, behold, it gave an account of the people who were destroyed, from the time that they were destroyed back to the building of the great tower, at the time the Lord confounded the language of the people and they were scattered abroad upon the face of all the earth, yea, and even from that time back until the creation of Adam.

18 Now this account did cause the people of Mosiah to mourn exceedingly, yea, they were filled with sorrow; nevertheless it gave them much knowledge, in the which they did rejoice.

19 And this account shall be written hereafter; for behold, it is expedient that all people should know the things which are written in this account.

verse 19 “And this account shall be written hereafter” Where can we find Mosiah’s translation of the twenty-four plates of Ether found by Limhi’s people? Do we have access to it? Perhaps we do. The book of Ether, written by Mormon’s son Moroni, is possibly Moroni’s abridgment of Mosiah’s translation. It is also possible that the book of Ether is Moroni’s independent translation of the twenty-four plates (see Ether 1:1-2).

20 And now, as I said unto you, that after king Mosiah had done these things, he took the plates of brass, and all the things which he had kept, and conferred them upon Alma, who was the son of Alma; yea, all the records, and also the interpreters, and conferred them upon him, and commanded him that he should keep and preserve them, and also keep a record of the people, handing them down from one generation to another, even as they had been handed down from the time that Lehi left Jerusalem.

verse 20 “and also the interpreters” For a discussion of the interpreters, see the commentary for Mosiah 8:13.

“and commanded him that he should . . . also keep a record of the people” Alma’s record will be recorded on plates—the “large plates of Nephi.”

Mosiah Chapter 29

Beginning at the time Lehi and his group left Jerusalem, the government of the people was patriarchal in nature. Lehi was the leader until his death. Then Nephi was appointed king, and the succession of Nephite kings began. After Nephi, his successors “were called by the people, second Nephi, third Nephi, and so forth, according to the reigns of the kings” (Jacob 1:11). This system was perpetuated until the time of Mosiah, the son of Benjamin. The only four kings over the main body of Nephites of whom we have specific knowledge are Nephi, Mosiah, Benjamin, and Mosiah, the son of Benjamin.

In this chapter the younger Mosiah will propose abolishing the monarchy and instituting instead a system of judges. These judges are to be appointed and then confirmed by the “voice of the people.” The judges would govern and pass judgment based upon the traditional or religious laws found in their scriptures.

An interesting suggestion has been made by John A. Tvedtness (“King Mosiah and the Judgeship,” Insights: A Window on the Ancient World 20, no. 11, 2000). Brother Tvedtness feels that Mosiah’s justifications about discontinuing the kingship among the Nephites may have been influenced, at least in part, by his recent translation of the record of the Jaredites (Mosiah 28:11). While the reader of the book of Mosiah has not yet encountered the Jaredite history, Mosiah as translator, and Mormon and Moroni as abridgers and record keepers, knew this tragic epic all too well.

Right after mentioning the twenty-four plates of gold, Mormon explained Mosiah’s solution to his succession crisis (his four sons had declared their intention to fulfill a mission to the Lamanites in the Land of Nephi). Mosiah gave a number of justifications for eliminating the kingship altogether, yet it has been observed that “most of the reasons Mosiah gave his people had no precedents in Nephite history” (Ibid. 2). As mentioned, John A. Tvedtnes proposed that these reasons were “prompted by Mosiah’s knowledge of the Jaredite history that he had recently translated.” Tvedtnes gave several insightful examples. For instance, Mosiah expressed the fear that should he confer the kingdom onto someone besides his heir, “my son, to whom the kingdom doth belong, should turn to be angry and draw away a part of this people after him,” leading to the “shedding much blood and perverting the way of the Lord, yea, and destroy the souls of many people” (Mosiah 29:7). This kind of scenario played itself out several times in the Jaredite record (see Ether 7:4–5, 15–17; 8:2–3; 9:11–12; 10:3, 8–10, 14, 32; 11:4, 15–18). Mosiah also appealed to the damage that a wicked king can do (Mosiah 29:16–17). While King Noah served as a prime example of this in recent Nephite memory (Mosiah 29:18–19), “this is also a common theme in the book of Ether” (Tvedtnes, “King Mosiah and the Judgeship,” 2.). The Brother of Jared warned the early Jaredites that kingship would lead to captivity (Ether 6:22–23), and this is borne out in several stories in Ether (see Ether 7:5, 7, 17; 8:3–4; 10:14–15, 30–31; 11:9, 18–19, 23; 13:23). Mosiah made a clear allusion to the Jaredite saga when warning his people of their fate, should the “voice of the people” choose iniquity: “then is the time he will visit you with great destruction even as he has hitherto visited this land” (Mosiah 29:27, emphasis added). This could only allude to the Jaredites, whom “the Spirit of the Lord had ceased striving with,” and thus, “Satan had full power over the[ir] hearts” so they were “destroyed” (Ether 15:19).

Why might the inclusion of influence of the Jaredite material on Mosiah be arresting for skeptics today? “Joseph Smith did not dictate the story of the Jaredites until long after he dictated the book of Mosiah,” Tvedtnes reasoned, “so during that earlier effort he could not have known the historical details of Jaredite kingship.” Tvedtnes concluded, “That these two widely separated records agree in such details evidences the authenticity of the account of Mosiah’s having translated the book of Ether and becoming acquainted with its contents. It also is further evidence of the internal consistency of the Book of Mormon” (On the order of translation, see John W. Welch, “The Miraculous Translation of the Book of Mormon,” in Opening the Heavens: Accounts of Divine Manifestations, ed. John W. Welch with Erick B. Carlson, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and BYU Press, 2005, 113 n.91, 115–117 n.111.). For Mosiah, with access to actual historical records, however, this is not a problem. As Tvedtnes pointed out, the subtle ways Mosiah appears to be drawing on Jaredite precedent illustrates the consistency and complexity of the Book of Mormon. Yet there is insight here beyond the role of affirming evidence. These connections also explain why Mormon interrupts the narrative about the succession crisis to relate the translation of the Jaredite record.

Let us consider a few definitions and then try to classify this new Nephite government. A theocracy is government by someone who is considered divine, or at least divinely inspired. An example of a theocracy might be the period when the Israelites were governed by Moses. A Nephite prophet-king such as Benjamin or Nephi is another example. An autocracy is government in which one mortal man or woman possesses unlimited power. Kingship is an example of this kind of government. A democracy is government by the people themselves. Generally, in a democracy, the people exercise their will through a system of representation and through free elections. This would be classed as a republic or a parliamentary form of government.

The Book of Mormon has been criticized for containing “nineteenth century” concepts. Some of these critics have suggested that the book was actually written by Joseph Smith or someone else in the nineteenth century, and it is not in fact an account of an ancient civilization. This chapter contains a case in point. Book of Mormon critics have suggested that Mosiah, in this chapter, is dissolving the kingship and forming a representative or republican form of government. After all, they contend, a nineteenth century American author would certainly be expected to know something about this form of government, since the American Constitution was one of the world's prototype blue prints for democratic government. A close look at this new Nephite form of government, however, shows that most of the principles contained in the American Constitution are missing (see the commentary for Mosiah 29:25). In fact, Mosiah himself taught that the ideal form of government consisted of a righteous king (see Mosiah 29:13). Some "deficiencies" of the Nephite government relative to the American Constitution include:

1. The people could not remove the chief judge at the polls, as he stood for election only once and subsequently enjoyed a life tenure.

2. There were not three branches of government to check one another, since a single office encompassed all governmental powers. The chief judge was judge, executive, and legislator. In war time, he raised the army, armed them, and arranged provisions for them (see Alma 46:34; 60:1-9). He served interchangeably as chief judge and governor (see Alma 2:16; 50:39; 60:1; and 3 Nephi 3:1). He was also a lawmaker (see Alma 2:2-7; 4:6; 51:1-7).

3. There was no legislature in the Book of Mormon. The only "representation" was in the choice of judges, not in the selection of legislators.

4. There was no taxation by a popular assembly.

Actually, Book of Mormon political attitudes have more of an Old Testament flavor. Biblical peoples raised up kings among themselves. In the anointing of Saul, for example, a Book of Mormon theme is exemplified directly: The people demanded of Samuel a king, but Samuel tried to persuade them otherwise, warning them of the possible hazards (see 1 Samuel 8:1-22; 10:18-25; Deuteronomy 17:14). Earlier, the Israelites had requested Gideon to be their king, and he had refused because, he said, "the Lord will rule over you" (Judges 8:22-23). In a similar way, Alma and Mosiah warned of the dangers of a king.

Another clear biblical tradition is the reliance on traditional law instead of a representative legislature. We have already mentioned the indifference to the separation of powers.

1 Now when Mosiah had done this he sent out throughout all the land, among all the people, desiring to know their will concerning who should be their king.

verse 1 Mosiah had appointed Alma high priest over the church. He had handed on the responsibility for the religious affairs of the people. He now turned his attentions to the secular governance of his people.

2 And it came to pass that the voice of the people came, saying: We are desirous that Aaron thy son should be our king and our ruler.

verse 2 Why was it that among the sons of Mosiah, the people selected Aaron? Was he the eldest of the brothers? Usually when the four sons of Mosiah are listed by name, the order is Ammon, Aaron, Omner, and Himni (Mosiah 27:34; Alma 22:35; 25:17; 31:6). This might lead one to assume that Ammon and not Aaron was the eldest of the brothers. It is likely, however, that Aaron was the eldest, and that the people were assuming that their next king would be Mosiah's eldest son by the law of primogeniture. In verse 6 of this chapter, Aaron is referred to as "he to whom the kingdom doth rightly belong." In a few other places in the Book of Mormon text, the sons of Mosiah are referred to as "Aaron and his brethren" (Alma 22:1; 23:4; 25:6). Again, we see that the "voice of the people" was not looked upon to elect or select the king. Rather, the voice of the people was purely confirmatory.

3 Now Aaron had gone up to the land of Nephi, therefore the king could not confer the kingdom upon him; neither would Aaron take upon him the kingdom; neither were any of the sons of Mosiah willing to take upon them the kingdom.

verse 3 Apparently Aaron and the other sons of Mosiah were simply not interested in becoming king. Their present endeavor (mission to the Lamanites) was consuming all of their energies.

4 Therefore king Mosiah sent again among the people; yea, even a written word sent he among the people. And these were the words that were written, saying:

verse 4 "even a written word sent he among the people" Mosiah composed a letter which was distributed among his people. In verses 5 through 36, Mormon quotes part of this letter and paraphrases other parts of it.

5 Behold, O ye my people, or my brethren, for I esteem you as such, I desire that ye should consider the cause which ye are called to consider—for ye are desirous to have a king.

6 Now I declare unto you that he to whom the kingdom doth rightly belong has declined, and will not take upon him the kingdom.

verse 6 "he to whom the kingdom doth rightly belong" Aaron has refused the kingship (see verse 2).

7 And now if there should be another appointed in his stead, behold I fear there would rise contentions among you. And who knoweth but what my son, to whom the kingdom doth belong, should turn to be angry and draw away a part of this people after him, which would cause wars and contentions among you, which would be the cause of shedding much blood and perverting the way of the Lord, yea, and destroy the souls of many people.

8 Now I say unto you let us be wise and consider these things, for we have no right to destroy my son, neither should we have any right to destroy another if he should be appointed in his stead.

9 And if my son should turn again to his pride and vain things he would recall the things which he had said, and claim his right to the kingdom, which would cause him and also this people to commit much sin.

verses 7-9 Mosiah, exercising divinely inspired foresight, perceived that it would prove to be disastrous to appoint another king instead of his own eldest son Aaron. He apparently felt it possible that Aaron might, at some future time, change his mind and decide that he wanted the kingship. After all, the office of king belonged to him by the law of primogeniture. If that were to occur, then Aaron and his adherents would do battle against the king and his supporters. This would result in much bloodshed including the death of the king or Aaron. Unwholesome and unrighteous motives would abound resulting in the eternal condemnation of many.

10 And now let us be wise and look forward to these things, and do that which will make for the peace of this people.

11 Therefore I will be your king the remainder of my days; nevertheless, let us appoint judges, to judge this people according to our law; and we will newly arrange the affairs of this people, for we will appoint wise men to be judges, that will judge this people according to the commandments of God.

verse “let us appoint judges” Here is Mosiah’s inspired recommendation to his people. The governmental judicial system that Mosiah establishes here will later be referred to as the “law of Mosiah” (Alma 11:1).

“to judge this people according to our law . . . according to the commandments of God” Mosiah desired to establish a free society, but he was fully aware that for people to exist successfully together there must be order based on law. Laws do, in some measure, abridge a people’s freedom. They punish those acts which, if unchecked, would prove the sure destruction of a society. Thus, the Lord holds individuals accountable for their acts in relation to the laws—not only for obeying them, but for making them and administering them (D&C 134:1).

The “commandments of God” are intended to form an absolute and unchanging standard for the laws against which the Nephites would be judged. This divine standard is vital. A godless society has no such standard. If a people believe there is no God, then there are no absolutes in their laws. They eventually come to believe they can choose their actions. Morality becomes a relative thing which can be altered to fit the whims of the majority. In a godless democracy, the will of the majority becomes supreme, and it answers to no outside standard. This type of government is based on a philosophy which may be said to be humanistic.

How do you assess the direction the United States of America is taking today? Can the voice of the people always be depended upon to decide issues in righteousness? Do we base our system of laws on the commandments of God? There are some who feel the political future of the United States is gloomy, judging by the directions we are now following. The prophet Moroni will later warn, “Behold, this is a choice land, and whatsoever nation shall possess it shall be free from bondage, and from captivity, and from all other nations under heaven, if they will but serve the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ” (Ether 2:12).

12 Now it is better that a man should be judged of God than of man, for the judgments of God are always just, but the judgments of man are not always just.

13 Therefore, if it were possible that you could have just men to be your kings, who would establish the laws of God, and judge this people according to his commandments, yea, if ye could have men for your kings who would do even as my father Benjamin did for this people—I say unto you, if this could always be the case then it would be expedient that ye should always have kings to rule over you.

verses 12-13 These verses imply that the ideal form of government is a theocracy where the head of government is also the righteous head of the kingdom of God—even Jesus Christ himself. The next best is a theocracy in which the autocrat or king is a good and righteous man called by God to lead the people. He would establish and uphold the laws of God, and the people would be judged according to the commandments of God. Every other form of government formed by man is therefore a compromise and less than ideal. There are certain fundamental principles and safeguards that must be protected, however, in any acceptable form of government. Among the most important of these is the allowing of the “voice of the people” to be heard and to prevail.

What is the saints’ responsibility when living under a government where the civil authority of that government comes into conflict with the authority of God? While the Lord may not always require submission to evil secular authority, we do “believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates, in obeying, honoring, and sustaining the law” (Article of Faith 12). Jesus offered a valuable guideline when he said, “Render . . . unto Caesar the things which are Caesar’s; and unto God the things that are God’s” (Luke 20:21-25). Peter added the counsel, “Honour all men, love the brotherhood, fear God. Honour the king” (1 Peter 2:13-17). Elder Bruce R. McConkie pointed out that, “Subjection to secular power does not constitute an endorsement or approval of the governmental system involved” (A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, 687). The object of submission to secular authority is to maintain a peaceful life so that the people may be free to live their religion. Elder James E. Talmage counseled, “It is the duty of the saints to submit themselves to the laws of their country. Nevertheless, they should use every proper method, as citizens or subjects of their several governments, to secure for themselves and for all men the boon of freedom in religious service. . . Their protests should be offered in legal and proper order” (The Articles of Faith, 422-23).

14 And even I myself have labored with all the power and faculties which I have possessed, to teach you the commandments of God, and to establish peace throughout the land, that there should be no wars nor contentions, no stealing, nor plundering, nor murdering, nor any manner of iniquity;

verse 14 Just as a wicked king such as Noah can foster wickedness among his people, so can a righteous king do much to inspire righteous behavior among his followers.

15 And whosoever has committed iniquity, him have I punished according to the crime which he has committed, according to the law which has been given to us by our fathers.

16 Now I say unto you, that because all men are not just it is not expedient that ye should have a king or kings to rule over you.

17 For behold, how much iniquity doth one wicked king cause to be committed, yea, and what great destruction!

18 Yea, remember king Noah, his wickedness and his abominations, and also the wickedness and abominations of his people. Behold what great destruction did come upon them; and also because of their iniquities they were brought into bondage.

verse 18 Mosiah's reference to King Noah suggests the possibility that Alma had been at least partly instrumental in converting Mosiah to his anti-monarchical position. Alma had likely discussed his negative experiences with King Noah, and this discussion had been deeply influential in producing Mosiah's new position. Undoubtedly another factor was Mosiah's experience translating the Jaredite record.

19 And were it not for the interposition of their all-wise Creator, and this because of their sincere repentance, they must unavoidably remain in bondage until now.

verse 19 "the interposition of their all-wise Creator" One of the definitions of interposition in Webster's 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language is, "intervention." The text suggests that the Lord had a role in deposing the wicked Noah and in Mosiah's dispatching Ammon and his men to rescue the people of Limhi. And this because of sincere repentance among the people of Limhi.

20 But behold, he did deliver them because they did humble themselves before him; and because they cried mightily unto him he did deliver them out of bondage; and thus doth the Lord work with his power in all cases among the children of men, extending the arm of mercy towards them that put their trust in him.

21 And behold, now I say unto you, ye cannot dethrone an iniquitous king save it be through much contention, and the shedding of much blood.

22 For behold, he has his friends in iniquity, and he keepeth his guards about him; and he teareth up the laws of those who have reigned in righteousness before him; and he trampeth under his feet the commandments of God;

23 And he enacteth laws, and sendeth them forth among his people, yea, laws after the manner of his own wickedness; and whosoever doth not obey his laws he causeth to be destroyed; and whosoever doth rebel against him he will send his armies against them to war, and if he can he will destroy them; and thus an unrighteous king doth pervert the ways of all righteousness.

verses 21-23 To dethrone an unrighteous king requires considerable social unrest and even civil war. Also, the refusal to obey his unrighteous laws also leads to destruction of the people.

24 And now behold I say unto you, it is not expedient that such abominations should come upon you.

verse 24 “it is not expedient that such abominations should come upon you” Here Mosiah utilizes a peculiar form of speech called antenantiopsis which is discussed in the commentary for Jacob 4:8. In this figure of speech an expression is stated in terms of its negated opposite. The result is to emphasize the positive to a very high degree. His intent is not merely to say that it is not a good idea to commit or allow such abominations. Rather he is forcefully admonishing the people to prevent them.

25 Therefore, choose you by the voice of this people, judges, that ye may be judged according to the laws which have been given you by our fathers, which are correct, and which were given them by the hand of the Lord.

Verse 25 “choose you by the voice of this people” Modern readers should not make the mistake of assuming that “the voice of the people” was the equivalent to modern democratic voting processes. The “voice of the people” was purely a confirmatory function. Actually, the “voice of the people” had previously played a role in confirming the king (see Mosiah 7:9; 19:26; 29:2; cf. 2 Nephi 5:18; Omni 1:19; Mosiah 2:11; 23:6). With Judges, successors were still “selected” (see Alma 4:16 wherein Alma appoints Nephihah to be the next chief judge. Also, see Alma 50:39 wherein Nephihah appointed his son Pahoran as the next chief judge. Also, see Helaman 2:2 wherein Helaman appointed his son Helaman to succeed him as chief judge.). Most often the new chief judge was the previous judge’s sons (Helaman 1:2–4). Mosiah took all the emblems of kingship and “conferred them upon Alma” before he was selected (actually confirmed) by the people, suggesting he was actually pre-selected by Mosiah (Mosiah 28:20).

In short, the changes from kingship to chief judgeship were “more nominal and cosmetic than substantive,” as John W. Welch has put it (John W. Welch, The Legal Cases in the Book of Mormon, Provo, UT: BYU Press and Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2008, 215). Judges and kings appear to be chosen by, more or less, the same process.

There were other differences between the Nephite form of government and the government of the United States. In the Nephite government, there was no parliamentary system, no constitution, no separate branches of government (no “checks and balances”), and the elected officers served for life.

Although some modern readers have assumed that judges in the Book of Mormon were democratically elected in ways no different than those of contemporary America, careful analyses by Richard Bushman and others suggest otherwise (Richard L. Bushman, “The Book of Mormon and the American Revolution,” in Book of Mormon Authorship: New Light on Ancient Origins, ed. Noel B. Reynolds, Provo, UT: Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, 1982; reprinted by FARMS, 1996, 201. This was originally published in BYU Studies 17, no. 1, 1976). “In the context of nineteenth-century political thought,” Bushman concluded, “the Book of Mormon people are difficult to place” (Ibid., 203). It therefore naturally followed, “The Book of Mormon is not a conventional American book. Too much Americana is missing” (Bushman, “The Book of Mormon and the American Revolution,” 205).

Moreover, understanding Mosiah’s political reforms and the social factors which led to them is important for understanding the conflicts that emerge in the books of Alma and Helaman (Welch, Legal Cases, 211–215). With a system of ruling (and often times, competing) lineages providing “judges” that must lead together in council, the setting was ripe for some to seek greater control. Powerful lineages which had been repressed during the reign of Mosiah’s lineage now sought to capitalize (Alma 2:1–7; 51:5–8). These tensions would define much of Nephite political history for the next four decades.

26 Now it is not common that the voice of the people desireth anything contrary to that which is right; but it is common for the lesser part of the people to desire that which is not right; therefore this shall ye observe and make it your law—to do your business by the voice of the people.

27 And if the time comes that the voice of the people doth choose iniquity, then is the time that the judgments of God will come upon you; yea, then is the time he will visit you with great destruction even as he has hitherto visited this land.

verses 26-27 In these profound verses, the Lord’s criterion for allowing the destruction of a people is clearly set forth. Having a “free” form of government, which allows the voice of the people to be expressed, is a privilege which must be continually earned by the people. They do so by exercising personal responsibility. Constant vigilance must be maintained in order to preserve this freedom. When the majority of a people come to choose iniquity, then that people will be destroyed. Such a nation is said to have “ripened in iniquity” (Ether 2:9; 9:20). In this circumstance, societal destruction is the inevitable and just consequence. This warning is pertinent to all who read the Book of Mormon. It has special relevance to those people who inhabit the “mighty nation among the Gentiles,” the United States of America (1 Nephi 22:7).

28 And now if ye have judges, and they do not judge you according to the law which has been given, ye can cause that they may be judged of a higher judge.

29 If your higher judges do not judge righteous judgments, ye shall cause that a small number of your lower judges should be gathered together, and they shall judge your higher judges, according to the voice of the people.

verses 28-29 While this new Nephite form of government does not contain the complete system of checks and balances found in a fully democratic form of government, these verses outline a system of judges which provides a limited strategy for checks and balances.

In spite of this reasonable form of government with built in checks and balances, we will eventually learn that wicked judges will combine with some who will seek to restore a system of kings. Their motivation is nobility and privilege for themselves. This group will ruin the government and bring destruction upon their society (Alma 10:27; 3 Nephi 6).

30 And I command you to do these things in the fear of the Lord; and I command you to do these things, and that ye have no king; that if these people commit sins and iniquities they shall be answered upon their own heads.

verse 30 Here Mosiah makes it clear that his intention in writing this letter to his people is not to suggest that they change their form of government, but rather to “command” them in the name of the Lord that they do so.

To be “in the fear of the Lord” is to be aligned with his will.

This verse implies what is made explicit in the following verse: that a king may absolve in some measure a people of some personal responsibility for their sins. These sins may be moral sins or political sins. An unrighteous king, as stated previously, may foster unrighteous behavior among his subjects, and then the king himself will bear some of the responsibility for his subjects’ sins.

31 For behold I say unto you, the sins of many people have been caused by the iniquities of their kings; therefore their iniquities are answered upon the heads of their kings.

verse 31 Sometimes iniquitous kings result in iniquitous societies. The Lord sees the “inequality” between the autocratic king and the common people as causative of this problem (see verse 32). In these cases, the Lord will hold the wicked kings responsible for the sins of the people. The Lord favors a system wherein there is no possibility that a wicked autocrat will lead his people astray. He prefers a system of equality (“a land of liberty”) in which no leader can be to blame for the sins of the people (again, see verse 32). In that more ideal society, the people are responsible for their own sins.

32 And now I desire that this inequality should be no more in this land, especially among this my people; but I desire that this land be a land of liberty, and every man may enjoy his rights and privileges alike, so long as the Lord sees fit that we may live and inherit the land, yea, even as long as any of our posterity remains upon the face of the land.

verse 32 “I desire that this inequality should be no more in this land”

Mosiah decries the “inequality” in the land—that is, the difference between the king and the common man. This inequality is the root cause of a wicked autocrat’s being able to adversely affect the moral performance of his people. The solution to this “inequality” is “a land of liberty,” a land without a monarch. In such a land, “every man may enjoy his rights and privileges alike.” There is a downside to such a land: Every man is therefore responsible for his own sins. There is a profound implication in this verse. It is that in a land of liberty the people are at greater eternal risk. They are free to make personal choices, but then they must individually answer for their own sins. There is no absolute leader who compels them to do this or that and thus spare them that responsibility (see verse 34).

33 And many more things did king Mosiah write unto them, unfolding unto them all the trials and troubles of a righteous king, yea, all the travails of soul for their people, and also all the murmurings of the people to their king; and he explained it all unto them.

verses 33 “And many more things did king Mosiah write unto them”

Obviously the prophet Mormon did not quote or paraphrase Mosiah’s entire proclamation (see verse 4).

“unfolding unto them all the trials and troubles of a righteous king, yea, all the travails of soul for their people” It is interesting that part of Mosiah’s anti-monarchical stance is based in part on the unfair burden that is placed on a righteous king—his “travails of soul” and the “murmurings” which he must endure.

The pronoun their in this phrase seems to have as its antecedent the word kings in verse 31. This phrase would probably read a bit better if the word king were changed to kings (“all the trials and troubles of righteous kings”) or if the plural pronoun their were changed to his.

34 And he told them that these things ought not to be; but that the burden should come upon all the people, that every man might bear his part.

verse 34 “the burden should come upon all the people, that every man might bear his part” It would seem that when a form of government grants agency to a society, then it becomes essential that the people within that society assume more individual responsibility if that form of government is to be successful. A free society creates a better milieu for testing of a people against the gospel standard. But such a free society also comes with the possibility for abuse of individuals within that society.

In an article “Government by the Voice of the People,” Byron R. Merrill observed: “The history of civilization is a continual balancing act between anarchy (freedom taken to its extreme) and tyranny (order taken to its extreme), with the pendulum swinging back and forth at different times. Freedom by law to act out one’s choices requires enormous self-restraint, for without self-discipline freedom is so readily abused that external controls must be employed to maintain order and prevent chaos” (The Book of Mormon: Mosiah, Salvation Only Through Christ, 118). Brother Merrill quotes the Irish political theorist Edmund Burke: “Men are qualified for civil liberty in exact proportion to their disposition to put moral chains upon their own appetites. . . Society cannot exist, unless a controlling power upon will and appetite be placed somewhere; and the less of it there is within, the more there must be without. It is ordained in the eternal constitution of things, that men of intemperate minds cannot be free. Their passions forge their fetters” (The Works of Edmund Burke. 12 volumes, Boston: Little, 4:51-52).

35 And he also unfolded unto them all the disadvantages they labored under, by having an unrighteous king to rule over them;

verse 35 It would seem likely that the prophet / abridger Mormon still has the wicked king Noah in mind as he writes this verse and the following verse.

36 Yea, all his iniquities and abominations, and all the wars, and contentions, and bloodshed, and the stealing, and the plundering, and the committing of whoredoms, and all manner of iniquities which cannot be enumerated—telling them that these things ought not to be, that they were expressly repugnant to the commandments of God.

verse 36 Here are examples of the types of iniquities to which a people might be exposed because of having to live under an unrighteous monarch. In this verse, of course, Mosiah is “telling them that these things ought not to be.”

37 And now it came to pass, after king Mosiah had sent these things forth among the people they were convinced of the truth of his words.

verse 37 Mosiah’s letter had been persuasive, and the people were convinced.

38 Therefore they relinquished their desires for a king, and became exceedingly anxious that every man should have an equal chance throughout all the land; yea, and every man expressed a willingness to answer for his own sins.

verse 38 It is clear that there was a positive spirit of freedom brooding over the Nephites. The Nephites had lived under the authority of a king, albeit mostly righteous ones, for centuries. We might have expected them to be hesitant to give up their submissive security and jump right into a system where they had to determine their own future by their own choices. Much to their credit, they were obviously enthusiastically willing to do so.

39 Therefore, it came to pass that they assembled themselves together in bodies throughout the land, to cast in their voices concerning who should be their judges, to judge them according to the law which had been given them; and they were exceedingly rejoiced because of the liberty which had been granted unto them.

verse 39 “to cast in their voices concerning who should be their judges” As has been pointed out previously the Nephite people were not empowered to select or “vote in” the new chief judge. They were simply allowed to express their voices by confirming or not confirming the appointed judge.

“according to the law which had been given them” Apparently, these judges did not have the power to create the law. Rather, the law that they applied was “given them” by Mosiah. The judicial system established by Mosiah will later be referred to as the “law of Mosiah” (Alma 11:1), and the individual laws that Mosiah gave to them will be remembered several generations later as the “laws of Mosiah” (Helaman 4:22). These were the laws “which the Lord commanded him to give unto the people” (Ibid.). The laws of Mosiah likely did not make any radical changes in the tenets of the law of Moses, but more likely they consisted of mainly procedural changes (see verses 22-23)—mainly abolishing the kingship and establishing a system of judges. We will later learn that these judges were to be salaried (Alma 11:1). The law of Mosiah also will establish a system of legal monetary exchange equivalents (Alma 11:7). We will also learn that the laws of Mosiah dealt with other issues such as abolishing slavery (Alma 27:9), defining debtors as thieves (Alma 11:2), and giving the governor alone the jurisdiction over capital offenses (3 Nephi 6:22).

40 And they did wax strong in love towards Mosiah; yea, they did esteem him more than any other man; for they did not look upon him as a tyrant who was seeking for gain, yea, for that lucre which doth corrupt the soul; for he had not exacted riches of them, neither had he delighted in the shedding of blood; but he had established peace in the land, and he had granted unto his people that they should be delivered from all manner of bondage; therefore they did esteem him, yea, exceedingly, beyond measure.

verse 40 The word esteem in this verse means to prize; to set a high value on; to regard with reverence, respect, or friendship.

Lucre is profit obtained in a negative sense. The word has the sense of something base or unworthy.

41 And it came to pass that they did appoint judges to rule over them, or to judge them according to the law; and this they did throughout all the land.

verse 41 “they did appoint judges to rule over them” The “appointing” done in this and in the next verse was done by the vote of the people.

42 And it came to pass that Alma was appointed to be the first chief judge, he being also the high priest, his father having conferred the office upon him, and having given him the charge concerning all the affairs of the church.

verse 42 Even though Mosiah’s people had previously “relinquished their desires for a king,” the younger Alma is asked to assume both sacred and secular authority which gives him authority similar to that of a king.

Kingship had obviously been a popular institution among the Nephites, and some Nephites will have trouble letting go of it. This desire to have a king will persist among some Nephites. We will read in Alma chapters 51 through 62 of the struggles of the so-called “king-men” who will seek to reestablish the monarchical order among the Nephites (see also 3 Nephi 6:30; 7:9-10).

43 And now it came to pass that Alma did walk in the ways of the Lord, and he did keep his commandments, and he did judge righteous judgments; and there was continual peace through the land.

44 And thus commenced the reign of the judges throughout all the land of Zarahemla, among all the people who were called the Nephites; and Alma was the first and chief judge.

verse 44 “thus commenced the reign of the judges” There are three different chronological or dating systems built into the Book of Mormon text. The first involves the number of years since Lehi’s company left Jerusalem. The second begins here in 91 BC, the years of the judges. The third to be used will be the years since Christ’s birth.

We will learn that Mosiah’s great experiment with freedom will eventually fail. Nephite civilization will come to a tragic end because eventually the voice of the people will choose iniquity (see verse 27). One might well, then, ask the question: “Why did Mosiah recommend this change in the Nephite’s form of government?” It seems clear that the Lord is best able to test the mettle of a people here in mortality when the responsibility for moral decisions is placed squarely upon their own shoulders. Mosiah was clearly inspired by God to recommend this change. For this same reason, centuries later, the Lord will inspire men to create the Constitution of the United States of America (D&C 101:80) so that a people may be free to begin to prepare themselves for the second coming of the Savior.

45 And now it came to pass that his father died, being eighty and two years old, having lived to fulfil the commandments of God.

46 And it came to pass that Mosiah died also, in the thirty and third year of his reign, being sixty and three years old; making in the whole, five hundred and nine years from the time Lehi left Jerusalem.

47 And thus ended the reign of the kings over the people of Nephi; and thus ended the days of Alma, who was the founder of their church.

The Book of Alma The Son of Alma

The account of Alma, who was the son of Alma, the first and chief judge over the people of Nephi, and also the high priest over the Church. An account of the reign of the judges, and the wars and contentions among the people. And also an account of a war between the Nephites and the Lamanites, according to the record of Alma, the first and chief judge.

The book of Alma consists of the writings of three different writers: the younger Alma (chapters 1-44) and his sons Helaman (chapters 45-62) and Shiblon (chapter 63). It covers the period of time from approximately 91 BC to 52 BC. Therefore, the book chronicles about forty years of Nephite history—years of growth, internal contention, and war. The book also contains some of the most important doctrinal discourses in the Book of Mormon.

In making the abridgment, Mormon at times entered the original discourse into his narrative. Sometimes he condensed and summarized, and at other times he provided transitional commentary.

Alma Chapter 1

Scripture Mastery

Alma 1 The beginning of the reign of judges. The Antichrist Nehor kills Gideon and is executed on top of Hill Manti.

Not long after the establishment of the reign of the Nephite judges, a crisis arose that called into the question to viability of the Nephite church and government. "In the first year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi" a dissenter named Nehor went "about among the people, preaching to them that which he termed to be the word of God, bearing down against the church" (Alma 1:3).

1 Now it came to pass that in the first year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi, from this time forward, king Mosiah having gone the way of all the earth, having warred a good warfare, walking uprightly before God, leaving none to reign in his stead; nevertheless he had established laws, and they were acknowledged by the people; therefore they were obliged to abide by the laws which he had made.

verse 1 This verse essentially states: From the first year of the reign of judges onward, the people were obliged to abide by the laws of Mosiah. All other material in the verse is simply parenthetical. We will subsequently learn that the governmental system of judges will be referred to as the law of Mosiah. The set of laws codified by Mosiah, which are based on the law of Moses, are referred to as the laws of Mosiah.

“in the first year of the reign of the judges” This era began 509 years after the departure of Lehi from Jerusalem (see Mosiah 29:46-47) and will extend for one hundred years. This era will run concomitantly with the era based on Lehi’s departure from Jerusalem (see 2 Nephi 5:28, 34). Both will end nine years after the signs of the Messiah’s birth were seen. After that, the Nephites began to reckon time from the time of the sign of the Savior’s birth (3 Nephi 2:5-8).

2 And it came to pass that in the first year of the reign of Alma in the judgment-seat, there was a man brought before him to be judged, a man who was large, and was noted for his much strength.

verse 2 Here we are introduced to Nehor, one of the arch-enemies of religious truth in the Book of Mormon. We have already met the anti-Christ Sherem (Jacob 7), and we will yet meet additional individuals whose characteristics are similar to those of Nehor. These are Amlici (Alma 2), Zeezrom (Alma 11-15), Korihor (Alma 30), and Amalickiah (Alma 46-51). Though we will not meet him in person, we will encounter the adherents of another anti-Christ, Zoram (Alma 31-35).

It is of interest to note that the name Nehor likely has Jaredite origins (See the supplemental article, Names in the Book of Mormon).

All of these individuals are learned, fluent in language, charismatic, and aggressive. They attempt to lead the people astray, deny Christ, and deny that any prophet can foretell the future. Their stories are also strikingly similar in that they are confronted by the Nephite leaders, are hesitant to answer when asked about their belief in scripture, ask for a sign, are accused of blasphemy, finally offer a confession, and all but one eventually suffer an ignominious death (Zeezrom eventually repents of his sins and is converted). After their deaths, the people return to righteousness.

How do we explain the apparently similar religious and political philosophies of these men? The matter turns out to be quite simple. All belonged to the same religious order founded by Nehor—the order of the Nehors. It was apparently based in Ammonihah (which was known as the “desolation of Nehors” after its destruction) and was popular among the Mulekites—particularly their learned and professional class (see Alma 14:18). These are the people who feel that the people should be governed by a king and not by the common people. They are the elite, the learned, the sophisticated, the aristocracy, those who seek for power. It is specifically stated that Zeezrom belonged to this order (Alma 14:16). Although it is never specifically mentioned that Korihor was of this persuasion, it seems likely he was. When Korihor decried Nephite traditions, for example, he did not refer to them as the traditions of “our” fathers. Rather, he called them traditions of “your” or traditions of “their” fathers (Alma 30:27,31).

This religious order will later be given another name—the “king-men” (Alma 51:5). The common people who rise up against this malignant political movement will later be called the “freemen” (Alma 51:6). The conflict between people of these two movements will continue throughout the Book of Mormon and will yet be one of the most important factors that result in the destruction of the Nephite people.

Brother S. Michael Wilcox, a CES instructor, has shed interesting insight onto the anti-Christians whom he prefers to call “faith shakers.” He sees four Book of Mormon characters as the principle anti-Christians or faith shakers, and he characterizes each slightly differently:

1. Sherem (Jacob 7) feels that the law of Moses is adequate and there was no need for a Savior or a new law.

2. Nehor (Alma 1) teaches that everyone will be saved.

3. Korihor (Alma 30) is the professed atheist who claims that sin is a relative thing and that no one really has a need to be saved from their sins.

4. Zoram (Alma 31-35) will teach that “We are saved, but you are not.”

Brother Wilcox feels that the secret to understanding and neutralizing these trouble makers lies in the following five steps:

1. The first is to understand the strategies or tactics they use in tearing down the truth. These strategies are:

- a. The “first-temptation” strategy. This is the same tactic used by Satan in tempting Eve in the garden. In introducing Adam and Eve to the Garden of Eden and in outlining the “house rules,” the Father said, “Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat, but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it, nevertheless, thou mayest choose for thyself, for it is given unto thee; but, remember that I forbid it, for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die” (Moses 3:16-17). Notice how the Father emphasized the many trees in the garden of which they were allowed to partake. Then he gave a warning of that one forbidden tree. His emphasis was clearly on the many trees. Lucifer, on the other hand, was not inclined to mention the many trees of which they could partake. Rather, he focused only on the forbidden tree and focused Eve’s attentions on it by asking, “Hath God said—Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden?” (Moses 4:7). He wanted Eve to feel restricted or bound down by the one tree in the garden of which she was commanded not to partake. In a similar way, the faith shakers or anti-Mormons today make no mention of the many wonderful blessings and opportunities afforded by the gospel of Jesus Christ. Their wont is rather to point out those commandments which warn us of danger. They want us to focus our attentions on those few. It is then easy for them to imply or directly say, “Isn’t this a restriction of your freedom? They want us to feel that those few commandments are an intolerable infringement on our rights. “Aren’t you mature enough to decide what is best for you without having some else tell you what to do?” A good example is the law of chastity which they may well challenge as being old fashioned. “After all,” they may say, “isn’t each of us capable of deciding for ourselves how we should live without having someone else prying into our lives and counseling us in these very private matters? As long as two mature adults agree and do not offend anyone else by their actions, is it anyone else’s business?”

b. The debunking strategy. To debunk is to ridicule, scoff, scorn, or make fun of. If something is wonderful or sacred, the debunking anti-Mormon tries to take all the glory out of it through a patronizing, scornful attitude.

2. Learn thoroughly and cling to your doctrine. The prophet Joseph Smith said, “Truth will always cut its own swath.” A person’s righteous behavior is best underpinned by true doctrine. Remove the doctrine, and a person’s behavior suffers. Ask yourself this question: If you had no belief in an afterlife or in religion, would your behavior deteriorate? For most of us, our knowledge of the doctrine and the principle of accountability helps us live more righteously. Consequently, Satan and his minions, the faith shakers, will consistently attack the doctrine.

3. Be wise. You don’t always have to give audience to, or reply to the faith shaker. We will read that when Korihor took his faith-shaking strategies among the people of Ammon, they wisely refused to listen. Instead, they bound him and carried him before Ammon who was a high priest. The false doctrines of the faith shakers are often pleasing to the carnal mind, and it may at times be dangerous to pay close attention to them.

4. Turn the tables on the faith shaker. Go on the offensive. A good question to ask is, “What evidence do you have that there is no God?” Put the burden of proof on the other guy. The simple fact is that there exists no evidence that there is no God or that the Book of Mormon is not true.

5. Make certain that your own testimony is firmly based on both a spiritual witness, and also on evidence or “substance.” The apostle Paul so counseled when he wrote, “Now faith is [in part] the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen” (Hebrews 11:1). The evidence you acquire for yourself will be based on experiences, study, and reason. You will then be able to speak with authority.

3 And he had gone about among the people, preaching to them that which he termed to be the word of God, bearing down against the church; declaring unto the people that every priest and teacher ought to become popular; and they ought not to labor with their hands, but that they ought to be supported by the people.

verse 3 “every priest and teacher ought to become popular” “they ought to be supported by the people” Nehor preached that teachers of religion ought to be recognized, acknowledged, and paid by the people for their preaching. Today we would refer to this as “priestcraft.” For a definition of priestcraft, see the commentary for verse 12.

4 And he also testified unto the people that all mankind should be saved at the last day, and that they need not fear nor tremble, but that they might lift up their heads and rejoice; for the Lord had created all men, and had also redeemed all men; and, in the end, all men should have eternal life.

verse 4 Nehor preached two separate ideas here:

1. The first is that one need not worry. You're going to be all right in the end. God did not put you here to fail. You're going to be saved. A version of this idea is found today in the Evangelicals' doctrine that all one need do is confess Christ, and you will be saved. For a thorough discussion of this idea see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 4, chapter 10, The Afterlife and chapter 11, Faith and Works.

2. The second is the humanistic and insidiously hedonistic philosophy that all individuals should be free to gratify their own carnal desires, to set their own moral standards, to live for the pleasure of the moment, and to do all of this without guilt, so long as other people are not injured by your thoughts, words, and actions. What you think, speak, and say is no one else's business and cannot be considered a sin. It is not difficult to understand how this erroneous philosophy might appeal to many people.

“the people . . . need not fear nor tremble, but that they might lift up their heads and rejoice” According to this philosophy, people need not feel obligated to follow the strict commandments of God. If one is careful not to injure others, there is no sin or need for repentance. One need only rejoice.

Regarding a need for man to repent of his sins, there are two philosophical extremes seen in the world today, both of them false:

1. God loves us and will forgive us for whatever we do that is “only human.” Those who espouse this philosophy tend to ignore God until they want something. Then they feel free to call upon God to fulfill whatever desire they possess at the time. Repentance, if it should be ever needed, is taken care of with an “I’m sorry.” If their self-perceived breach of the laws of God is serious, they may add, “I’ll never do it again.” And they won’t, that is until circumstances warrant. God is a god of mercy, and repentance is a slap on the hand.

2. The opposite false view of repentance sees God as a stern taskmaster who sets up laws that violate all natural instincts. His laws are strict and arbitrary, and he eagerly awaits the opportunity to punish those who sin. According to this view, the laws of God are merely an obstacle course which tests our obedience. God is angered by anyone who would dare break the law, and he metes out punishment to them to frighten them into forsaking sin. Repentance satisfies or placates God and thus frees the sinners from further punishment. The trick is to learn those actions that offend God, and avoid them. Then hopefully repentance is unnecessary. Those who fail in this approach are consigned to the everlasting fires of hell, a fate that mollifies God. God is a God of justice and vindictiveness, who intends to instill fear into the hearts of men so that they will obey him.

As is true with most false doctrines, there is in these two extreme views a mixture of truth and error. God loves his children beyond their ability to comprehend, and he wants nothing more than to see them return to him, to possess all that he possesses, and to become as he is. His laws exist to allow his people to grow and progress so that they may be happy in his presence forever. He is a God of justice, as no unclean thing can exist in the presence of God. He is also a God of mercy who is willing to extend forgiveness to his people but only after they have earnestly strived to live the law and repent of their sins. He is patient and long suffering with his children, but if they ultimately fail in their obedience, he takes no delight in the suffering they will inevitably encounter.

God's laws are not arbitrary rules designed to test our obedience. They are guidelines by which we may achieve the ultimate happiness in this life and in the life to come. If obeyed, his laws help us enjoy the abundant life Christ promised to those who adhere to his gospel and, ultimately, they help us to become like him. We read in scripture that "there is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated—And when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated" (D&C 130:20-21). God's law provides us access to his blessings, and obedience to those laws assures us of these blessings. God knows us intimately, and he knows perfectly the potential vicissitudes of this mortal experience. His laws are designed to protect us, to uplift us, to enlighten our minds, and to enlarge our souls. God's laws then are not arbitrary rules. Nor are they merely helpful suggestions which can be disregarded at will. "And again, verily I say unto you, that which is governed by law is also preserved by law and perfected and sanctified by the same" (D&C 88:34-35). Mae Blanch provides us with an instructive analogy of this principle. Speaking personally about herself, she writes:

I am a diabetic; my doctor gives me certain laws—do's and don'ts—which I must obey to control my illness. I must avoid excessive fats and sugars in my diet and eat only moderate amounts of other foods. I must exercise regularly. I must take insulin injections twice a day and test my blood sugar three times a day. I must avoid undue exertion, get proper rest, and watch carefully for any minor infections, especially on my feet. I need to check in with my doctor on a regular basis to monitor the progress of my disease. If I follow these "commandments," I may control my illness and receive the blessing of health. If, however, I yield to the temptation of a hot fudge sundae or a Kara chocolate truffle, or decide to stay in bed an extra hour rather than rise and jog, I do not say my doctor is punishing me when my blood sugar climbs to unacceptable levels. And if I continue to ignore his instructions and wind up in the hospital, I don't expect to say, "I'm sorry; please forgive me; and have my health immediately restored. My repentance must involve both ceasing to break the doctor's "laws" and changing my attitude, not resenting the restrictions placed on my license to do as I please. . . Thus . . . the laws . . . are given to me for my well-being and to help me achieve my goals, not to complicate my life or deny me pleasure (“Repentance: The Gift of Love” in The Book of Mormon: 3 Nephi 9-30, This Is My Gospel, 76-77.)

5 And it came to pass that he did teach these things so much that many did believe on his words, even so many that they began to support him and give him money.

verse 5 Nehor obviously made some converts among the Nephites. His doctrines were “pleasing unto the carnal mind” (Alma 30:53).

6 And he began to be lifted up in the pride of his heart, and to wear very costly apparel, yea, and even began to establish a church after the manner of his preaching.

verse 6 Nehor’s teachings caught on among the Nephites, and soon his followers “began to establish a church after the manner of his preaching.”

7 And it came to pass as he was going, to preach to those who believed on his word, he met a man who belonged to the church of God, yea, even one of their teachers; and he began to contend with him sharply, that he might lead away the people of the church; but the man withstood him, admonishing him with the words of God.

verse 7 “he met a man . . . and he began to contend with him sharply” Apparently Nehor accosted Gideon and engaged him in a public debate hoping to humiliate the older man in front of the people and thus “lead away the people of the church.”

8 Now the name of the man was Gideon; and it was he who was an instrument in the hands of God in delivering the people of Limhi out of bondage.

verse 8 Gideon was an old and greatly respected member of the Nephite society. He is the same Gideon who chased king Noah onto a high tower and would have killed him if a Lamanite army had not been seen marching upon the Nephites in the land of Nephi. He also chased the wicked priests of Noah when they deserted their wives and families and when they fled into the wilderness to save themselves. He later became king Limhi’s captain, and he saved his people from the Lamanites’ wrath when the Nephites were accused of kidnaping the daughters of the Lamanites. It was also Gideon who conceived the plan of getting the Lamanite guards drunk so that Limhi and his people could escape from the city of Nephi.

9 Now, because Gideon withstood him with the words of God he was wroth with Gideon, and drew his sword and began to smite him. Now Gideon being stricken with many years, therefore he was not able to withstand his blows, therefore he was slain by the sword.

verse 9 “he was wroth with Gideon” Nehor had a lot to lose if Gideon were successful in exposing him for the false teacher he was. He would lose his wealth and his popularity which were the basis of his power and influence. Apparently, Gideon had begun to “carry the day” in their public debate.

If Nehor had not murdered Gideon, he would have been allowed to continue his wicked proselyting, since under the Nephite law, no one could be condemned for preaching his or her beliefs.

10 And the man who slew him was taken by the people of the church, and was brought before Alma, to be judged according to the crimes which he had committed.

11 And it came to pass that he stood before Alma and pleaded for himself with much boldness.

12 But Alma said unto him: Behold, this is the first time that priestcraft has been introduced among this people. And behold, thou art not only guilty of priestcraft, but hast endeavored to enforce it by the sword; and were priestcraft to be enforced among this people it would prove their entire destruction.

verse 12 “priestcraft” This colorful word has a specific definition. If a man represents himself as a priesthood or church leader, yet his primary motive is personal popularity, power, or financial gain rather than the selfless serving of his fellow man, then he is guilty of practicing priestcrafts or priestcraft (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 10:5).

“thou hast endeavored to enforce it by the sword” This accusation certainly applies to Nehor’s actions relative to Gideon. It is logical to suppose that Nehor was guilty in other instances of trying to force his beliefs on to others so that they would strengthen his numbers and contribute financially to his cause.

“were priestcraft to be enforced among this people it would prove their entire destruction” If sufficient people were forced “by the sword” to join in Nehor’s movement, it would result in the destruction of the people. It is easy to see why spiritual destruction of a people would result from involvement with Nehor. The practitioner of priestcraft sets himself up in competition with the Lord. For those who would adhere to their teachings, they define the terms of salvation for man. Elder Bruce R. McConkie wrote, “Priesthood and priestcraft are two opposites; one is of God, the other of the devil” (Mormon Doctrine, 2nd edition, 593).

13 And thou hast shed the blood of a righteous man, yea, a man who has done much good among this people; and were we to spare thee his blood would come upon us for vengeance.

14 Therefore thou art condemned to die, according to the law which has been given us by Mosiah, our last king; and it has been acknowledged by this people; therefore this people must abide by the law.

verse 14 “the law which has been given us by Mosiah . . . has been acknowledged by this people” By acknowledging the law, the people committed themselves to obey it and to accept the consequences established for disobedience of the law. Obviously capital punishment is a tenet of the law of Mosiah (see verse 18).

15 And it came to pass that they took him; and his name was Nehor; and they carried him upon the top of the hill Manti, and there he was caused, or rather did acknowledge, between the heavens and the earth, that what he had taught to the people was contrary to the word of God; and there he suffered an ignominious death.

verse 15 “he . . . did acknowledge . . . that what he had taught to the people was contrary to the word of God” The concept of having a condemned man confess his sins before being executed is intriguing. Since the man is doomed, why would he cooperate with the authorities by detailing his crime? With no hope of leniency for confessing, what could he possibly gain? The answer may lie in the regulations followed by Jewish religious authorities in the time of Christ. The Mishnah is a collection of Jewish teachings compiled by Rabbi Judah the Prince from oral traditions in AD 137-219. One of the tractates of the Mishnah describes in detail the procedures used by the Sanhedrin in capital cases. A major provision concerning confession is described thus: “When he [the condemned man] was about ten cubits from the place of stoning they used to say to him, “Make thy confession,” for such is the way of them that have been condemned to death to make confession, for every one that makes his confession has a share in the world to come” (M Sanhedrin 6.2). The passage then cites Joshua 7:19 as precedent for this provision. When Achan was condemned to be stoned for his sin, “Joshua said unto Achan, My son, give, I pray thee, glory to the Lord God of Israel, and make confession unto him; and tell me now what thou hast done; hide it not from me. And Achan answered Joshua, and said, Indeed I have sinned against the Lord God of Israel, and thus and thus have I done.”

The Mishnah makes it clear that although the confession would not alter the decision of the court, it would be taken into consideration in the final judgment that would be made by God. Because the Mishnah was not compiled until the second century AD, it seems clear that we should not expect all of its provisions to have existed in the ancient kingdom of Judah, from which the prophet Lehi fled more than seven centuries earlier. But the close parallels between these Book of Mormon accounts and the Mishnah suggest that the legal procedures discussed here may have predated the Babylonian captivity.

This seems to be the reasoning in another Book of Mormon account, in which Sherem was guilty of teaching falsehood (see the commentary for Jacob 7:16-19).

“between the heavens and the earth” The location of Nehor’s execution atop a hill may be behind the statement that he made his confessions “between the heavens and the earth.” But this expression may also have something to do with calling heaven and earth to witness.

“there he suffered an ignominious death” “Ignominious” is defined in this context as shameful, dishonorable, reproachful, or infamous. A number of factors, according to John W. Welch, contributed to Nehor’s ultimately being given an “ignominious death.” These include the recent social reforms of Mosiah and the establishment of the Nephite judgeship at the end of the book of Mosiah, all of which Nehor sought to undermine with violence. Nehor’s trial, therefore, was not a mere triviality.

Brother Welch wrote, “When Nehor was brought before Alma to be judged, his trial was a major test of Alma’s political and judicial power in the fledgling reign of the judges. How would the new system of judges work? What would the power of the chief judge be? . . . How would the recently enunciated principle of equality and the rubric that a person could not be punished for his beliefs be interpreted and applied in actual practice? . . . All these were open questions that would be tested and settled, intentionally or unintentionally, by the precedent-setting trial of Nehor (The Legal Cases in the Book of Mormon, Provo, UT: Brigham Young University Press and the Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2008, 220).

The seriousness of Nehor’s (seditious) challenges to the Nephite social order, to say nothing of his murder of Gideon, is undoubtedly what prompted his “ignominious” death on the hill Manti. Brant A. Gardner commented that, at its core, Nehor’s execution “remove[d] personal honor from him” (Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 4:30). Not only did Nehor have to be “carried” to his place of execution, suggesting that he resisted his fate in an undignified manner, but both Brothers Welch and Gardner posit that he was likely stoned, a method of execution known from both ancient Israel and ancient Mesoamerica, and one that would’ve “connoted shame” (Gardner, Second Witness, 4:30; Welch, Legal Cases, 231–232).

While we don’t know for certain the nature of the ignominious death that Nehor suffered, as already mentioned, stoning is most likely. It is notable that, with stoning, the Mishnaic requirement was that the place of stoning be at least twice as high as a man so that the culprit could be pushed over the edge before being stoned (M Sanhedrin 6.4). It is interesting that Nehor was brought to the top of the hill to be executed. Of the various approved methods of execution, stoning was required for him “that beguiles [others to idolatry], and [him] that leads [a whole town] astray” (M Sanhedrin 7.3).

16 Nevertheless, this did not put an end to the spreading of priestcraft through the land; for there were many who loved the vain things of the world, and they went forth preaching false doctrines; and this they did for the sake of riches and honor.

verse 16 Unfortunately the priestcraft Nehor had introduced did not end with his execution, but it continued to spread throughout the land.

All worldly things are “vain things” including material possessions, physical pleasures, desire for power, and popularity or influence. Vain things have no enduring or eternal value.

17 Nevertheless, they durst not lie, if it were known, for fear of the law, for liars were punished; therefore they pretended to preach according to their belief; and now the law could have no power on any man for his belief.

verse 17 “they pretended to preach according to their belief” Here we are taught that the preaching of “religious principles” by the purveyors of priestcraft is more a function of their business than a reflection of the beliefs of their hearts.

“the law could have no power on any man for his belief” The Nephite law guaranteed them freedom of conscience. It protected the right of personal belief. A person could not be punished for his beliefs regardless of how far from the truth their beliefs were. A person was also allowed to teach his beliefs to others as long as others were not forced or injured.

18 And they durst not steal, for fear of the law, for such were punished; neither durst they rob, nor murder, for he that murdered was punished unto death.

verses 17-18 Apparently the basis of Nephite law, the laws of Mosiah, was the Mosaic law since lying, stealing, robbing, and murder were forbidden, and the penalty for murder was death. Again, we see evidence a conceptual difference between stealing and robbing. Stealing, theft, or thieving involved an individual’s taking things that belong to his neighbor. This is a civil crime and is dealt with by the judge. Robbing or plundering involved attacking an individual for the purpose of obtaining things of value.

19 But it came to pass that whosoever did not belong to the church of God began to persecute those that did belong to the church of God, and had taken upon them the name of Christ.

verse 19 We will learn that this persecution of the church from without the church will turn out to be both a curse and a blessing to the church depending upon how the members responded to it. Some of the members will be led away from the church (verses 22-24), while others will be strengthened (verse 25).

20 Yea, they did persecute them, and afflict them with all manner of words, and this because of their humility; because they were not proud in their own eyes, and because they did impart the word of God, one with another, without money and without price.

verse 20 All pronouns in this verse except the first “they” refer to the members of the Church of Jesus Christ.

21 Now there was a strict law among the people of the church that there should not any man, belonging to the church, arise and persecute those that did not belong to the church, and that there should be no persecution among themselves.

verse 21 Here is the secret for dealing with persecution. It is simply to be living examples of Christ’s teachings, to love their enemies, to return good for evil. Also the church members were to forgive and support one another in times of persecution.

In our day, the First Presidency has counseled us in dealing with persecutions from without the Church (First Presidency letter 1 December 1983). They have suggested that we not “challenge” or “enter into debates” with those who are critical of the Church. We are advised to deal with our detractors “without resentment and without malice.” We should prepare to answer them with “prayer” and “humility.” Our approach should be to explain the doctrines and practices of the Church in a “positive” manner, pointing out “the high standards expected of members of the Church.” We should stress positive values such as “temperance . . . morality . . . fidelity in marriage [and] . . . worthy citizenship.” We should also emphasize the “dedication and faithfulness of members . . . [in] taking care of [members] who are in need, in service to others, in missionary work, in the payment of tithes, [and] in keeping their covenants and obligations. “Above all [we should] . . . bear testimony of the restoration of the gospel, that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, the only begotten of the Father, and that ‘There is none other name under heaven, given among men whereby we may be saved.’”

It seems that we are to look upon external persecution of the Church as a blessing and opportunity to teach the doctrines and practices of the gospel.

22 Nevertheless, there were many among them who began to be proud, and began to contend warmly with their adversaries, even unto blows; yea, they would smite one another with their fists.

verse 22 Even though the members of the church were committed not to retaliate against those without the church who were persecuting them, the pressure of persecution was too much for some of them. Rather than remain humble and submissive, they became “proud,” and they began to fight back. As we will learn in verse 24, this resulted in the excommunication and apostasy of many members of the church.

23 Now this was in the second year of the reign of Alma, and it was a cause of much affliction to the church; yea, it was the cause of much trial with the church.

24 For the hearts of many were hardened, and their names were blotted out, that they were remembered no more among the people of God. And also many withdrew themselves from among them.

verse 24 “the hearts of many were hardened” See the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

“their names were blotted out, that they were remembered no more among the people of God” They were excommunicated from the church.

“many withdrew themselves from among them” Many also left the church of their own accord.

verses 25-31 Those who were able to successfully endure “with patience the persecution” heaped upon them, however, were strengthened and blessed. They “began to be exceedingly rich, having abundance of all things whatsoever they stood in need.”

25 Now this was a great trial to those that did stand fast in the faith; nevertheless, they were steadfast and immovable in keeping the commandments of God, and they bore with patience the persecution which was heaped upon them.

verse 25 Oh that we could all be “steadfast and immovable in keeping the commandments of God”!

26 And when the priests left their labor to impart the word of God unto the people, the people also left their labors to hear the word of God. And when the priest had imparted unto them the word of God they all returned again diligently unto their labors; and the priest, not esteeming himself above his hearers, for the preacher was no better than the hearer, neither was the teacher any better than the learner; and thus they were all equal, and they did all labor, every man according to his strength.

27 And they did impart of their substance, every man according to that which he had, to the poor, and the needy, and the sick, and the afflicted; and they did not wear costly apparel, yet they were neat and comely.

verses 26-27 When the people saw that their priest was just like them—a working man who labored just like they did—they were inclined to also leave their labors to hear and consider his preachings. They identified with him. There is a natural human tendency for people to separate themselves into socioeconomic and intellectual strata.

If the preacher is thought by his congregation to live on a separate and higher spiritual and intellectual plain, then his preachings may not be considered applicable by his hearers. These verses imply a warning that is pertinent in the church today.

“Comely” implies attractive but appropriately so—not gaudy or ostentatious.

28 And thus they did establish the affairs of the church; and thus they began to have continual peace again, notwithstanding all their persecutions.

29 And now, because of the steadiness of the church they began to be exceedingly rich, having abundance of all things whatsoever they stood in need—an abundance of flocks and herds, and fatlings of every kind, and also abundance of grain, and of gold, and of silver, and of precious things, and abundance of silk and fine-twined linen, and all manner of good homely cloth.

verse 29 “silk and fine-twined linen” This phrase has invited some comments from Book of Mormon critics who maintain that neither silk nor linen was known in pre-Columbian America (see also the commentary for Alma 4:6).

Linen is defined as a cloth, usually quite stiff and hard-wearing, made of fibers from the flax plants prepared by soaking and pounding. Although the flax plant is apparently not known in pre-Spanish America, several fabrics were made from vegetable fibers that look and feel like European linen. These include fabrics made from the leaf of the maguey plant; from the fibers of the yucca plant; and bark cloth, made by stripping bark from the fig tree and soaking and pounding it.

Most commonly silk is defined as “a fine, lustrous fiber produced by the larvae of certain insects,” especially an Asian moth, Bombix Mori. However, there are several ancient American cloths that provide a close parallel with silk. These include silk from cocoons gathered wild in Mexico and spun into expensive cloth at the time of the Spanish conquest; cloth made from the silk-like fiber from the pod of the Ceiba (or “silk-cotton”) tree found in the Yucatan; cloth from the silky fiber of the wild pineapple plant; a silk-like fabric made by the Aztecs from fine rabbit hair; and even a cotton cloth was found by the Spaniards at Teotihuacan was characterized as being “of irreproachable evenness, woven . . . exceedingly fine,” and “of gossamer thinness.” (“Possible ‘Silk’ and ‘Linen’ in the Book of Mormon,” based on research by John L. Sorenson, November 1988, in Reexploring the Book of Mormon, 162-64).

“Homely” implies plain and functional.

30 And thus, in their prosperous circumstances, they did not send away any who were naked, or that were hungry, or that were athirst, or that were sick, or that had not been nourished; and they did not set their hearts upon riches; therefore they were liberal to all, both old and young, both bond and free, both male and female, whether out of the church or in the church, having no respect to persons as to those who stood in need.

verse 30 “they were liberal to all” They were generous or gave liberally.

31 And thus they did prosper and become far more wealthy than those who did not belong to their church.

32 For those who did not belong to their church did indulge themselves in sorceries, and in idolatry or idleness, and in babblings, and in envyings and strife; wearing costly apparel; being lifted up in the pride of their own eyes; persecuting, lying, thieving, robbing, committing whoredoms, and murdering, and all manner of wickedness; nevertheless, the law was put in force upon all those who did transgress it, inasmuch as it was possible.

verse 32 One gains the impression that the Nephites had become a widely diverse group given to various excesses, yet the secular law was able to keep them in check—though with some difficulty.

“in idolatry or idleness” Actually idleness is a form of idolatry. See the discussion on idolatry in the commentary for Omni 1:20.

“wearing costly apparel” For a discussion of this universal inclination of the proud and worldly, see the commentary for Jacob 2:13 (cf. verse 4).

“being lifted up in the pride of their own eyes” For a discussion of the concept of pride, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 5, The “Natural Self” and “Spiritual Self.”

33 And it came to pass that by thus exercising the law upon them, every man suffering according to that which he had done, they became more still, and durst not commit any wickedness if it were known; therefore, there was much peace among the people of Nephi until the fifth year of the reign of the judges.

verse 33 “they became more still” When the wicked were forced to suffer the consequences of their wickedness according to the law, the effect was for them to become even more wicked. So it is in mortality. When the forces of evil and the forces for good operate along side one another, the tendency is for the good to become stronger in their commitment, and for the wicked to become more so. Herein lies the essence and the very purpose of this mortal trial in which we are now involved.

During the first five years of the reign of judges, the majority of the people were righteous. Thus, Alma as chief judge was able to deal with the problems that arose and maintain the form of government Mosiah had instituted. When the people living under the rule of judges were righteous, then the judgments rendered were just and fair and allowed the people to live in peace and security. When some of them began to be wicked, as in this verse, the law could still control them. We will learn that when the majority of the people become wicked, then the government will become corrupt and fail.

Alma Chapter 2

Scripture Mastery

Alma 2 Amlici conspires to be king. He is defeated in an election; brings an army against the Nephites and joins with the army of the Lamanites. The Nephites defeat Amlici's army and the Lamanites army, and Amlici is slain by Alma.

1 And it came to pass in the commencement of the fifth year of their reign there began to be a contention among the people; for a certain man, being called Amlici, he being a very cunning man, yea, a wise man as to the wisdom of the world, he being after the order of the man that slew Gideon by the sword, who was executed according to the law—verse 1 “in the commencement of the fifth year” There is reason to believe that the Nephite year began in the month we call April (3 Nephi 8:5).

Here we are introduced to another threat to the Nephite reign of judges in the form of Amlici, a follower of Nehor. This was a crucial time for the Alma and his fledgling government. Amlici likely had Mulekite roots (see the commentary for Mosiah 25:2). Dr. John L. Sorenson has observed that the Mulekites probably “constituted a numerous population with their own history and cultural features whom the intruding Nephite elite ruled only with difficulty. The Amlicites may have been broadly categorized together with ‘the people of Zarahemla,’ [the Mulekites] although residing at a distance from the city of Zarahemla and so never headed by the chief (Zarahemla) whom the senior Mosiah encountered and coopted when he led the Nephites from the land of Nephi to the land of Zarahemla. The Amlicites . . . seem not to have traced any connection with Mulek but set themselves apart only under their current leader’s name, Amlici. Perhaps they were a local group or set of groups derived in part from Jaredite ancestry or perhaps from ancestors other than Mulek who arrived with his party” (“When Lehi’s Party Arrived in the Land, Did they Find Others There?” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, 1/1, 12).

An interesting task, as you study this segment of the Book of Mormon, is to try to draw correlations between the ministry of Alma the Younger and the simultaneous ministry of the sons of Mosiah among the Lamanites. Alma chapter 1 begins the account of the fourteen-year ministry of the younger Alma (Alma 1-16) which occurred simultaneously with the fourteen-year ministry of the sons of Mosiah among the Lamanites (Alma 17-26). Traditionally, it has been difficult to tie these two ministries together. The only concrete touchstone between the two has been the Lamanites’ marching to destroy Ammonihah in the 11th year of judges as told by Alma in Alma 16:2-9 and its twin narrative in Alma 25:2-3. One of the perplexing questions has been why there is not a correlation in the sons of Mosiah account (Alma 17-26) with the large movements of Lamanite armies led by the Nephite dissenter Amlici, and involving a Lamanite king (see verses 32-33), here in the fifth year of the reign of judges (the fifth year of both ministries). At this same time, we will learn that Ammon (Alma 18-19) and Aaron (Alma 22) had been dealing with Lamanite kings in the land of Nephi, but the account of the sons of Mosiah mentions nothing of this threatening alliance with the Amlicites.

This problem has now been solved through the careful study of the Book of Mormon text by J. Christopher Conkling and others. Brother Conkling has suggested that the Amlici and his adherents the Amlicites, whose exploits we encounter here in this chapter are the same as the Amalekites whom we will encounter in Alma 21-24 (see especially the Alma 21:2-5; 22:7; 24:28-29). The description by Ammon and Aaron of the Amalekites in these verses correlates with Alma's description of the Amlicites in the fifth year of the reign of judges. For a discussion of the reasons why the Amlicites are very likely identical with the Amalekites, see the commentary for Alma 21:2.

Note the long sentences used by Alma (or Mormon) that contain multiple parenthetical expressions. Verses 1 and 2 combine to form one complex sentence. We will learn more about this technique of writing in the commentary for Alma 3:1.

2 Now this Amlici had, by his cunning, drawn away much people after him; even so much that they began to be very powerful; and they began to endeavor to establish Amlici to be king over the people.

verse 2 Among his own people, perhaps largely concentrated in a separate area outside the city of Zarahemla, Amlici was apparently regarded essentially as king. This is perhaps the first instance in the Book of Mormon where we encounter a particular political entity among the Nephites, the "king-men." For a discussion of the "king-men" see the introductory comments for Alma 46.

3 Now this was alarming to the people of the church, and also to all those who had not been drawn away after the persuasions of Amlici; for they knew that according to their law that such things must be established by the voice of the people.

verse 3 This rebellious faction of people led by Amlici posed a real threat to the Nephite system of judges and free elections. Those who accepted the latter recognized this threat and were alarmed by it. Only a majority vote could change the form of government and re-establish a king among the people. Amlici posed the threat of being able to persuade a majority of the people to vote for him.

4 Therefore, if it were possible that Amlici should gain the voice of the people, he, being a wicked man, would deprive them of their rights and privileges of the church; for it was his intent to destroy the church of God.

5 And it came to pass that the people assembled themselves together throughout all the land, every man according to his mind, whether it were for or against Amlici, in separate bodies, having much dispute and wonderful contentions one with another.

verse 5 This verse describes the excited controversy that existed because of this vital issue. We might interpret the word “wonderful” as amazing, exciting, astonishing, astounding, or remarkable.

6 And thus they did assemble themselves together to cast in their voices concerning the matter; and they were laid before the judges.

verse 6 “they were laid before the judges” The people cast their votes, and the judges tallied them.

7 And it came to pass that the voice of the people came against Amlici, that he was not made king over the people.

verse 7 Amlici lost the election. It is notable that even though the new Nephite government was fighting for its very existence, it refrained from contravening the law. “The principle of observing and honoring law duly instituted by the people seems to be an earmark of those who would follow God” (Mae Blanch in Studies in Scripture, Volume Seven, 1 Nephi to Alma 29, 288).

This verse provides evidence that at this point in time, the majority of the Nephites were righteous. What is that evidence? The fact that the “voice of the people” made the correct decision.

8 Now this did cause much joy in the hearts of those who were against him; but Amlici did stir up those who were in his favor to anger against those who were not in his favor.

verse 8 What is Amlici’s response to his defeat? We will learn in the following verses that he will consolidate his people, be consecrated as their king, arm them, and incite them to come against the Nephites in open civil war.

9 And it came to pass that they gathered themselves together, and did consecrate Amlici to be their king.

10 Now when Amlici was made king over them he commanded them that they should take up arms against their brethren; and this he did that he might subject them to him.

11 Now the people of Amlici were distinguished by the name of Amlici, being called Amlicites; and the remainder were called Nephites, or the people of God.

12 Therefore the people of the Nephites were aware of the intent of the Amlicites, and therefore they did prepare to meet them; yea, they did arm themselves with swords, and with cimeters, and with bows, and with arrows, and with stones, and with slings, and with all manner of weapons of war, of every kind.

verse 12 “the people of the Nephites” (italics added) This is the first usage of this phrase in the Book of Mormon text. It will be found seventeen additional times. Some have seen in the expression evidence of a complex social structure among the Nephites. The expression suggests that there existed a social stratum called “the Nephites” while another category was “people” who were “of,” that is, subordinate to, the “Nephites,” even though they all existed under the same central government (John L. Sorenson, “When Lehi’s Party Arrived in the Land, Did They Find Others There?” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 1/1, 12).

From the standpoint of the Nephites, this was clearly a “righteous war.” That is, they were fighting in self defense, and the Lord was with them. However, this fact did not prevent them from experiencing the devastation and loss of war. We will learn that thousands of the Nephites, including men, women, and children, will be slain in battle. Also, they will suffer devastating losses of flocks and herds and fields of grain.

13 And thus they were prepared to meet the Amlicites at the time of their coming. And there were appointed captains, and higher captains, and chief captains, according to their numbers.

14 And it came to pass that Amlici did arm his men with all manner of weapons of war of every kind; and he also appointed rulers and leaders over his people, to lead them to war against their brethren.

15 And it came to pass that the Amlicites came upon the hill Amnihu, which was east of the river Sidon, which ran by the land of Zarahemla, and there they began to make war with the Nephites.

verse 15 “the river Sidon, which ran by the land of Zarahemla” The phrase “land of Zarahemla” likely has reference to either the city of Zarahemla or perhaps to the local land of Zarahemla which immediately surrounds the city. The river Sidon apparently ran on the east of the city of Zarahemla. If reference to the greater land of Zarahemla were intended, then it might be more appropriate to say “the river Sidon, which ran through the land of Zarahemla.”

While it is not possible to know the precise setting for incidents in the Book of Mormon story, it is helpful for a student of the book to have a geographic model in mind as he attempts to follow the specific happenings. Picture, if you will, the River Sidon running, as the Nephites reckoned directions, from south to north through the land of Zarahemla. The river runs within a broad river basin several miles across. This basin is bordered on the west by a range of mountains. In and beyond these mountains is the wilderness called Hermounts. On the east, the river basin is bordered by a lower, less rugged range of hills or mountains. Within the basin, the city of Zarahemla is located on the west bank of the river. Across the river to the east is a gradual incline sloping upward toward the bordering hills. This slope is known as the hill Amnihu. Beyond the bordering hills to the east is a valley, the valley of Gideon. Up river from the city of Zarahemla, and beyond the river basin is the land of Minon, a smaller land within the greater land of Zarahemla. From Minon there are two ways to reach the city of Zarahemla. One could travel to the east of the hills bordering the Sidon basin to the valley of Gideon and then enter the basin across the river from the city of Zarahemla. Or, one may travel directly down the west bank of the River Sidon to the city of Zarahemla. See the illustration, Geography of Hill Amnihu.

16 Now Alma, being the chief judge and the governor of the people of Nephi, therefore he went up with his people, yea, with his captains, and chief captains, yea, at the head of his armies, against the Amlicites to battle.

17 And they began to slay the Amlicites upon the hill east of Sidon. And the Amlicites did contend with the Nephites with great strength, insomuch that many of the Nephites did fall before the Amlicites.

18 Nevertheless the Lord did strengthen the hand of the Nephites, that they slew the Amlicites with great slaughter, that they began to flee before them.

19 And it came to pass that the Nephites did pursue the Amlicites all that day, and did slay them with much slaughter, insomuch that there were slain of the Amlicites twelve thousand five hundred thirty and two souls; and there were slain of the Nephites six thousand five hundred sixty and two souls.

20 And it came to pass that when Alma could pursue the Amlicites no longer he caused that his people should pitch their tents in the valley of Gideon, the valley being called after that Gideon who was slain by the hand of Nehor with the sword; and in this valley the Nephites did pitch their tents for the night.

verse 20 One of the minor points made in criticism of the Book of Mormon is the claim that there is no evidence of a tent-making or tent-using tradition in Mesoamerica. Actually, Mesoamerican literature makes it clear that tents were in regular use by Aztec armies at the time of the Spanish conquest. The Spanish called them “tiendas.” These might have been constructed of straw, grass, or some type of cloth (John L. Sorenson, FARMS Update in Insights [May 1994], 2).

21 And Alma sent spies to follow the remnant of the Amlicites, that he might know of their plans and their plots, whereby he might guard himself against them, that he might preserve his people from being destroyed.

22 Now those whom he had sent out to watch the camp of the Amlicites were called Zeram, and Amnor, and Manti, and Limher; these were they who went out with their men to watch the camp of the Amlicites.

23 And it came to pass that on the morrow they returned into the camp of the Nephites in great haste, being greatly astonished, and struck with much fear, saying:

24 Behold, we followed the camp of the Amlicites, and to our great astonishment, in the land of Minon, above the land of Zarahemla, in the course of the land of Nephi, we saw a numerous host of the Lamanites; and behold, the Amlicites have joined them;

25 And they are upon our brethren in that land; and they are fleeing before them with their flocks, and their wives, and their children, towards our city; and except we make haste they obtain possession of our city, and our fathers, and our wives, and our children be slain.

26 And it came to pass that the people of Nephi took their tents, and departed out of the valley of Gideon towards their city, which was the city of Zarahemla.

27 And behold, as they were crossing the river Sidon, the Lamanites and the Amlicites, being as numerous almost, as it were, as the sands of the sea, came upon them to destroy them.

verse 27 “the Lamanites and the Amlicites, being as numerous almost, as it were, as the sands of the sea” This verse is obvious hyperbole and simply indicates that a relatively large body of soldiers is involved.

28 Nevertheless, the Nephites being strengthened by the hand of the Lord, having prayed mightily to him that he would deliver them out of the hands of their enemies, therefore the Lord did hear their cries, and did strengthen them, and the Lamanites and the Amlicites did fall before them.

verse 28 This must have been a most dramatic moment. Observing the onslaught of an almost innumerable fighting force coming against them, the Nephites must have been overwhelmed with the feeling that they had little chance for victory. Yet they summoned the courage to pray “mightily” to the Lord for help.

29 And it came to pass that Alma fought with Amlici with the sword, face to face; and they did contend mightily, one with another.

30 And it came to pass that Alma, being a man of God, being exercised with much faith, cried, saying: O Lord, have mercy and spare my life, that I may be an instrument in thy hands to save and preserve this people.

verse 30 Here is another exceedingly dramatic moment. Even Alma who was about to contend with the leader of the opposing force in hand to hand combat experienced some element of self doubt. It may well have been that Amlici was younger and stronger than Alma. Alma likely sensed that the outcome of this individual battle might determine the outcome of the larger battle. He was moved to cry out to the Lord, “O Lord, have mercy and spare my life, that I may be an instrument in thy hands to save and preserve this people.”

31 Now when Alma had said these words he contended again with Amlici; and he was strengthened, insomuch that he slew Amlici with the sword.

32 And he also contended with the king of the Lamanites; but the king of the Lamanites fled back from before Alma and sent his guards to contend with Alma.

33 But Alma, with his guards, contended with the guards of the king of the Lamanites until he slew and drove them back.

34 And thus he cleared the ground, or rather the bank, which was on the west of the river Sidon, throwing the bodies of the Lamanites who had been slain into the waters of Sidon, that thereby his people might have room to cross and contend with the Lamanites and the Amlicites on the west side of the river Sidon.

35 And it came to pass that when they had all crossed the river Sidon that the Lamanites and the Amlicites began to flee before them, notwithstanding they were so numerous that they could not be numbered.

36 And they fled before the Nephites towards the wilderness which was west and north, away beyond the borders of the land; and the Nephites did pursue them with their might, and did slay them.

37 Yea, they were met on every hand, and slain and driven, until they were scattered on the west, and on the north, until they had reached the wilderness, which was called Hermounts; and it was that part of the wilderness which was infested by wild and ravenous beasts.

verse 37 “the wilderness, which was called Hermounts”This wilderness called Hermounts was a country of wild beasts. It is interesting to note that in Egyptian Hermonthis is the God of wild places (Hugh Nibley, Encyclopedia of Mormonism, “Book of Mormon Near Eastern Background”). Brother Nibley wrote:

We have always thought that the oddest and most disturbing name in the Book of Mormon was Hermounts, since there is nothing either Classical or Oriental about it. So, we avoided it, until . . . a student from Saudi Arabia asked point blank what the funny word was. Well, what does the Book of Mormon say it is? Hermounts in the Book of Mormon is the wild country of the borderlands, the hunting grounds, “that part of the wilderness which was infested by wild and ravenous beasts.” The equivalent of such a district in Egypt is Hermonthis, the land of Month, the Egyptian Pan—the god of wild places and things. Hermounts and Hermonthis are close enough to satisfy the most exacting philologist (Since Cumorah, 169; see also Nibley, Prophetic Book of Mormon, 246-47, 281).

See also the supplemental article, Names in the Book of Mormon.

“wild and ravenous beasts” Your author has previously defended the view that Central America is the most likely setting for the Book of Mormon story. It is interesting to learn that the jaguar, a carnivorous member of the cat family, is endemic to the jungles of that region.

38 And it came to pass that many died in the wilderness of their wounds, and were devoured by those beasts and also the vultures of the air; and their bones have been found, and have been heaped up on the earth.

Alma Chapter 3

Scripture Mastery

Alma 3:6-8 The skins of the Lamanites were dark, according to the mark which was set upon their fathers. And this was done that the Lord might preserve his people, that they might not mix and believe in incorrect traditions.

Alma 3:27 Every man receiveth wages of him whom he listeth to obey.

1 And it came to pass that the Nephites who were not slain by the weapons of war, after having buried those who had been slain—now the number of the slain were not numbered, because of the greatness of their number—after they had finished burying their dead they all returned to their lands, and to their houses, and their wives, and their children.

verse 1 This verse illustrates an interesting literary device found in ancient texts known as epanalepsis. It occurs where an author, following a parenthetical aside, repeats certain words previously stated in a lengthy sentence to return the reader's attention to the original train of thought. This is also called "resumptive repetition," and it was apparently helpful in ancient texts since those texts did not have the benefit of modern punctuation or paragraphing. The parenthetical aside in this verse is "now the number of the slain were not numbered, because of the greatness of their number." Just prior to this aside, Mormon had stated, "after having buried those who had been slain." Therefore, following the parenthetical aside, in order to return the reader's attention back to that thought, he says, "after they had finished burying their dead." One Mormon scholar, Larry Childs has identified eighty-four such occurrences of epanalepsis in the Book of Mormon ("Epanalepsis in the Book of Mormon," Reexploring the Book of Mormon, 165-66). A prior example is found in Alma 2:1-2. The "resumptive repetition" in this example is the initial phrase in verse 2: "Now this Amlici."

2 Now many women and children had been slain with the sword, and also many of their flocks and their herds; and also many of their fields of grain were destroyed, for they were trodden down by the hosts of men.

3 And now as many of the Lamanites and the Amlicites who had been slain upon the bank of the river Sidon were cast into the waters of Sidon; and behold their bones are in the depths of the sea, and they are many.

verses 4-19 In your study of these verses, bear in mind that Alma is discussing two separate marks placed upon the Lamanites and those that associate with them—a dark skin and a red mark upon the forehead. Each may be referred to as a "curse," though we know that the marks themselves are not the curse. Rather they identify those with the curse as is additionally discussed in the commentary for verses 6-8 of this chapter.

4 And the Amlicites were distinguished from the Nephites, for they had marked themselves with red in their foreheads after the manner of the Lamanites; nevertheless they had not shorn their heads like unto the Lamanites.

verse 4 This red mark on the foreheads of the Amlicites may have been in part in imitation of the Lamanites who had similarly marked themselves for battle. It also had the practical purpose distinguishing the Amlicites from the Nephites. This would prevent the Lamanites from mistakenly killing their new allies. This mark is also perhaps an unintended fulfillment of a prior prophecy of the prophet Nephi: “Cursed shall be the seed of him that mixeth with their seed; for they shall be cursed even with the same cursing” (2 Nephi 5:23; see also Alma 3:4, 13-19).

5 Now the heads of the Lamanites were shorn; and they were naked, save it were skin which was girded about their loins, and also their armor, which was girded about them, and their bows, and their arrows, and their stones, and their slings, and so forth.

verse 5 “and they were naked, save it were skin which was girded about their loins, and also their armor, which was girded about them” The Lamanites initially had armor which was inferior to that of the Nephites (see the discussion of armor in the Book of Mormon in the commentary for Mosiah 21:7). Eventually, however, they will begin to copy the style of Nephite armor (see Alma 49:6).

verses 6-8 We already know that another mark had been set upon the Lamanites and the descendants of the sons of Ishmael to keep them apart from the Nephites, that of the dark skin. The dark skin was not, in and of itself, a curse. There is nothing inherently good or evil about the color of one’s skin. It is not only racist but completely false doctrine to believe that white skin is “good” or righteous and that black skin is somehow less than that. The dark skin here is only a mark or symbol which functioned to identify those who had separated themselves from God and his Spirit. That separation is the actual curse. It is apparent that the Lamanites would still have become what they did become even if they had never been marked with the “skin of blackness.” See the commentary from 2 Nephi 5:20-21. We have speculated previously that this dark skin may have resulted from the intermarriage between the indigenous peoples of the New World and the families of Laman, Lemuel, and Ishmael (see verse 9).

6 And the skins of the Lamanites were dark, according to the mark which was set upon their fathers, which was a curse upon them because of their transgression and their rebellion against their brethren, who consisted of Nephi, Jacob, and Joseph, and Sam, who were just and holy men.

7 And their brethren sought to destroy them, therefore they were cursed; and the Lord God set a mark upon them, yea, upon Laman and Lemuel, and also the sons of Ishmael, and Ishmaelitish women.

verse 7 Note that “their brethren” in this verse has a different reference than “their brethren” in the previous verse. In this verse “their brethren” and the pronoun “they” refer to the Lamanites. The first use of the pronoun “them” refers to the descendants of Nephi, Jacob, Joseph, and Sam; while the second “them” refers to the descendants of Laman, Lemuel, and the sons of Ishmael.

8 And this was done that their seed might be distinguished from the seed of their brethren, that thereby the Lord God might preserve his people, that they might not mix and believe in incorrect traditions which would prove their destruction.

verse 8 “Their seed” refers to the Lamanites. The “seed of their brethren” refers to the descendants of Nephi, Jacob, Joseph, and Sam. The pronouns “they” and “their” refer to the Nephites.

“incorrect traditions which would prove their destruction” We have previously commented upon these false “traditions of the Lamanites” (see the commentary for Enos 1:14 and Mosiah 10:12-17). These are the false oral traditions handed down by the Lamanites from generation to generation which formed the basis of the hatred which the Lamanites held toward the Nephites. All Lamanitish children were doubtless indoctrinated with these traditions from the time they were able to understand. I will again summarize them: Lehi used unrighteous dominion in forcing his family to leave behind their choice possessions and their beloved home and land travel into the wilderness. Once in the wilderness, the family was unfairly dominated not only by their father Lehi, but also by their younger brother Nephi. The birthright or the right to govern, after all, rightfully belonged to the oldest son Laman and not to Nephi. When Laman and Lemuel expressed fear of boarding a ship and sailing into the unknown sea, they received no understanding or sympathy. Rather they were forced to board the boat against their will. Once in the New World in the land of their first inheritance, Nephi continued to rule over them. When they tried to resist, Nephi stole their brass plates and departed into the wilderness.

Based on modern standards, it would be easy enough to claim the Book of Mormon is racist, or exhibits antipathy towards a person or group based on skin pigmentation. If read uncritically, Alma 3 could be seen as saying dark skin pigmentation is a sign of divine punishment, or as disapproving of any kind of exogamy (marriage outside of a cultural or racial group) or interracial marriage. However, this fails to take into consideration the context of Alma 3.

At this point in Nephite history, ethnic and religious strife between the Nephites and Lamanites / Amlicites was so severe that war and bloodshed resulted. It was a politically vulnerable moment for the Nephite people, who were transitioning from a monarchy to an unprecedented rule of judges (Mosiah 29). The murderous Nehor and his followers exacerbated the insecurities of a regime change by exploiting the situation to further their apostate ends, plaguing the Nephites with persecution, priestcrafts, and other crimes (Alma 1). Having inherited Nehor's teachings and penchant for violence, and wanting to overthrow the Nephite judges and revert to a monarchy, Amlici and his followers pushed Nephite tolerance to the breaking point by joining forces with the Lamanites.

From a Nephite perspective, then, intermarriage with the Lamanites or Amlicites at a time of war would have been unthinkable. It may have even been perceived as a form of treason, or seen as showing support to Amlici and his attempted coup of the Nephite government. In order to ensure national survival, exogamy (marriage outside a specific tribe or social unit) was out of the question. The Nephites would have to coalesce and unite to defeat this new threat.

The Nephite reluctance towards exogamy also makes sense in light of ancient Israelite marriage culture. At an equally volatile time in their history, the children of Israel were forbidden from intermarrying with Canaanites as they came to repossess the land of promise, lest they abandon their covenants with the Lord. "Thou shalt smite them, and . . . make no covenant with them, nor shew mercy unto them," the Lord commanded, as the Israelites and Canaanites were at war. "Neither shalt thou make marriages with them; thy daughter thou shalt not give unto his son, nor his daughter shalt thou take unto thy son" (Deuteronomy 7:2–3).

Moses' successor Joshua repeated this prohibition, warning that intermarriage with Canaanites or other non-Israelites would result in "snares and traps" for the Israelites (Joshua 23:11–13). This warning was given even long before the Israelite conquest of Canaan, as the Lord undoubtedly foresaw the potential problems that would face Abraham's seed (Genesis 24:3; 26:34–35; 27:46; 28:6–9).

To be clear, this is not to say that interracial or intercultural marriage is inherently sinful or dangerous (the Church today "disavows" any teachings that "mixed-race marriages are a sin." See "Race and the Priesthood," online at LDS.org). If this were so, then the Lord's promises to repentant Lamanites who rejoined the Nephites would be self-defeating. Rather, readers should recognize that the Book of Mormon describes instances where intermarriage was not expedient because of specific moments of political tension, ethnic strife, inter-cultural contention, and outright warfare between the Nephites and Lamanites.

As one Book of Mormon scholar put it, "The prohibition against intermarriage" in Alma 3 was "to protect the Nephites from these dangerous false traditions." It is clear that "the danger the Book of Mormon prophets preach[ed] against [was] not the problem of origins, but the attractiveness of culture. Adopting what ha[d] become Lamanite lifestyles would destroy Nephite cultural ideals.” This included the Lamanite values involving “kings, social stratification, and fine clothing,” which would have undermined “the egalitarian Nephite” ideal (Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 4:74).

9 And it came to pass that whosoever did mingle his seed with that of the Lamanites did bring the same curse upon his seed.

verse 9 Note from the previous verse that the Lord’s reasons for not wanting his people to intermarry with other peoples centers on his wanting to perpetuate righteous and not false teachings among his people. Thus, those Nephites who do intermarry with the Lamanites bring upon themselves and their progeny the curse of false beliefs and traditions. The mark of the curse, the dark skin, will naturally be placed upon the offspring of those who thus intermarry.

10 Therefore, whosoever suffered himself to be led away by the Lamanites was called under that head, and there was a mark set upon him.

verse 10 The word “head” means title. To be “called under that head” means to be called by that title.

By this time lineal descent was less important in determining whether one was a “Nephite” or “Lamanite” than whether or not one was willing to follow the prophets.

11 And it came to pass that whosoever would not believe in the tradition of the Lamanites, but believed those records which were brought out of the land of Jerusalem, and also in the tradition of their fathers, which were correct, who believed in the commandments of God and kept them, were called the Nephites, or the people of Nephi, from that time forth—

12 And it is they who have kept the records which are true of their people, and also of the people of the Lamanites.

13 Now we will return again to the Amlicites, for they also had a mark set upon them; yea, they set the mark upon themselves, yea, even a mark of red upon their foreheads.

14 Thus the word of God is fulfilled, for these are the words which he said to Nephi: Behold, the Lamanites have I cursed, and I will set a mark on them that they and their seed may be separated from thee and thy seed, from this time henceforth and forever, except they repent of their wickedness and turn to me that I may have mercy upon them.

15 And again: I will set a mark upon him that mingleth his seed with thy brethren, that they may be cursed also.

16 And again: I will set a mark upon him that fighteth against thee and thy seed.

17 And again, I say he that departeth from thee shall no more be called thy seed; and I will bless thee, and whomsoever shall be called thy seed, henceforth and forever; and these were the promises of the Lord unto Nephi and to his seed.

verses 14-17 We learn that in marking their foreheads with red, both the Lamanites and the Amlicites fulfilled a prophecy made by the prophet Nephi. This mark which the Amlicites unwittingly placed upon themselves is later referred to as “the curse.”

Other than these verses, we have no other record of this interesting revelation of the Lord to the Nephi. It is not found in the writings of Nephi from the small plates and might have been in the book of Lehi, which was at that time part of the large plates of Nephi. Perhaps this revelation was included on the plates of Mormon and thus might have been found on the 116 pages of lost manuscript.

18 Now the Amlicites knew not that they were fulfilling the words of God when they began to mark themselves in their foreheads; nevertheless they had come out in open rebellion against God; therefore it was expedient that the curse should fall upon them.

19 Now I would that ye should see that they brought upon themselves the curse; and even so doth every man that is cursed bring upon himself his own condemnation.

verse 19 Here Mormon (or Alma) draws an analogy between the Amlicites' willfully placing a red mark on their own foreheads and the fact that every man will be accountable for what he does with his spiritual opportunities.

20 Now it came to pass that not many days after the battle which was fought in the land of Zarahemla, by the Lamanites and the Amlicites, that there was another army of the Lamanites came in upon the people of Nephi, in the same place where the first army met the Amlicites.

verse 20 This second attack apparently occurred in or around the land of Minon.

21 And it came to pass that there was an army sent to drive them out of their land.

22 Now Alma himself being afflicted with a wound did not go up to battle at this time against the Lamanites;

23 But he sent up a numerous army against them; and they went up and slew many of the Lamanites, and drove the remainder of them out of the borders of their land.

24 And then they returned again and began to establish peace in the land, being troubled no more for a time with their enemies.

25 Now all these things were done, yea, all these wars and contentions were commenced and ended in the fifth year of the reign of the judges.

26 And in one year were thousands and tens of thousands of souls sent to the eternal world, that they might reap their rewards according to their works, whether they were good or whether they were bad, to reap eternal happiness or eternal misery, according to the spirit which they listed to obey, whether it be a good spirit or a bad one.

verse 26 Again we encounter the Book of Mormon's simplified version of man's post-mortal destiny consisting of either heaven or outer darkness.

27 For every man receiveth wages of him whom he listeth to obey, and this according to the words of the spirit of prophecy; therefore let it be according to the truth. And thus endeth the fifth year of the reign of the judges.

verse 27 Here is a most eloquently stated and profound verse well worth committing to memory!

“And thus endeth the fifth year” In order to provide something of a chronological structure to the Book of Mormon, the prophet Mormon, who inscribed his record on the plates of Mormon, included several different phrases which signify the end of a year. These have been called “year-end marking phrases” (Randall P. Spackman, “Introduction to Book of Mormon Chronology: The Principal Prophecies, Calendars, and Dates,” a FARMS reprint), and include such expressions as: “making in the whole . . . years,” “also ended,” “had ended,” “thus ended,” “thus endeth,” “passed away,” and “pass away.”

Other units of time used in the Book of Mormon include “day” or “days” (over five-hundred times), “week” (three times—Mosiah 18:25, Alma 31:12; 32:11), and “month,” “months,” or “moons” (seventeen times).

Alma Chapter 4

1 Now it came to pass in the sixth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi, there were no contentions nor wars in the land of Zarahemla;

2 But the people were afflicted, yea, greatly afflicted for the loss of their brethren, and also for the loss of their flocks and herds, and also for the loss of their fields of grain, which were trodden under foot and destroyed by the Lamanites.

3 And so great were their afflictions that every soul had cause to mourn; and they believed that it was the judgments of God sent upon them because of their wickedness and their abominations; therefore they were awakened to a remembrance of their duty.

verses 2-3 “they believed that it was the judgments of God sent upon them because of their wickedness and their abominations” The reader is likely to view this conflict between Alma and Amlici and their respective armies as simply good versus evil—the righteous versus the unrighteous. It is interesting to note that the Nephites did not regard this military conflict in that way. Rather they saw themselves as deserving of God’s punishment because of their own wickedness. In a sense the very occurrence of war in the Book of Mormon betrays the unrighteousness of the Nephites since the Lord had indicated to Nephi that the Lamanites would have “no power over thy seed except they shall rebel against me also” (1 Nephi 2:23).

4 And they began to establish the church more fully; yea, and many were baptized in the waters of Sidon and were joined to the church of God; yea, they were baptized by the hand of Alma, who had been consecrated the high priest over the people of the church, by the hand of his father Alma.

5 And it came to pass in the seventh year of the reign of the judges there were about three thousand five hundred souls that united themselves to the church of God and were baptized. And thus ended the seventh year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi; and there was continual peace in all that time.

verses 4-5 The missionary work of Alma and his co-workers in the church was tremendously successful during this seventh year of the reign of Judges. Some 3,500 people were baptized into the church “by the hand of Alma.” Presumably Alma did not personally perform all these baptisms himself.

6 And it came to pass in the eighth year of the reign of the judges, that the people of the church began to wax proud, because of their exceeding riches, and their fine silks, and their fine-twined linen, and because of their many flocks and herds, and their gold and their silver, and all manner of precious things, which they had obtained by their industry; and in all these things were they lifted up in the pride of their eyes, for they began to wear very costly apparel.

verse 6 “the people of the church began to wax proud” In this verse we are introduced to the downward cycle with which we will become all too familiar as we continue our study of the Book of Mormon. Initially the people obey the counsel of their leaders and keep the commandments of God. As a result of their obedience and their industry they prosper and are blessed with riches. However, some become caught up and begin to lust after these riches. They begin wearing costly apparel and become proud, fancying themselves better than others. Their hearts then become set on riches and the vain things of the world. They become scornful toward one another and begin to persecute those who do not believe as they do or have as much as they do.

An element of class consciousness and inequality begins. Thus, there occur envyings, strife, malice, persecutions, and great contentions among members of the church. Those who remain faithful have to endure great afflictions and persecutions even from within the church. Some turn their backs on the needy, the naked, the sick, and the afflicted. Some church members become even more proud than those who are not members of the church. President Ezra Taft Benson succinctly warned: “God will have a humble people. Either we can choose to be humble or we can be compelled to be humble” (CR, April 1989, 3-7). For further discussion of the concept of pride, Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 5, The “Natural Self” and “Spiritual Self.”

Those “afflicted” with material wealth are said to be faced with the “test of prosperity.”

The Book of Mormon prophets often point to an early sign among the people that signals the beginnings of apostasy. It is the wearing of “costly apparel” (Jacob 2:13; Alma 1:6, 27, 32; 5:53; 31:28; 4 Nephi 1:24, Mormon 8:35- 37). This trait is seen among both men and women and is inevitably associated with pride and wickedness. Why is this so? Mae Blanch in her article, “Challenges to the Reign of the Judges” (Studies in Scripture, volume seven, 1 Nephi to Alma 29, 292), observed:

An analysis of the attitudes that lead to and are involved with this habit [the wearing of costly apparel] indicates why it is associated with wickedness. First, it promotes idleness and vanity. One who spends many hours coveting, shopping, spending, and adorning oneself becomes increasingly self-absorbed and uninterested in anything requiring that attention to be diverted from self. Accumulation and adornment become the prime concern. This practice is also a way of displaying wealth in a prideful manner, a manifestation of what has been called the “conspicuous consumption” of the rich, which leads to despising the poor as somehow inferior, a separation of people into “us” and “those kinds of people.” And when money and possessions become the chief marks of distinction in society, then the pursuit of money becomes the only action worthwhile. And if this pursuit requires the sacrifice of honesty, integrity, compassion, and all the other virtues, then so be it, for the love of money is indeed the root of all evil. Thus the wearing of costly apparel involves the soul as much as the body.

“fine silks” “fine-twined linen” More than a thousand years earlier the Jaredites also had “silks, and fine-twined linen” (Ether 10:24). However, when European conquerors arrived in the Americas, they found neither Old World silkworms nor flax. Critics have charged Joseph Smith with arbitrarily inserting into the Book of Mormon text the names of those two textiles, and they say that the presence of the two fibers cannot be substantiated by the cultural record for pre-Columbian America. In recent years, however, several fabrics that have been identified in ancient Mesoamerica deserve to be called “silk” and “linen.” Please see the previous commentary for Alma 1:29. Additional commentary in the issue is provided here.

Normal usage today limits the term silk to the fabric made of thread exuded by the Japanese silkworm (actually the larva of an Asian moth, Bombyx mori). However, the term embraces meanings that extend beyond the Japanese reference. For instance, Aristotle and other classical Greek writers referred to “silk” in use in their world that had no entomological connection with the Far East. Two types of silkworm native to southeastern Europe yielded cocoons from which a fine thread comparable to Asian silk was obtained (W. T. M. Forbes, “The Silkworm of Aristotle,” Classical Philology 25 [1930]: 22-26; and Gisela M. A. Tichtler, “Silk in Greece,” American Journal of Archaeology 33 [1929]: 27-33). Thus, a legitimate sense of the term silk is “a cloth having characteristics like Japanese silk,” regardless of whether it originated from the Japanese insect.

Various fabrics in use among the inhabitants of Mexico and Central America when the Spaniards arrived were considered silk or its equivalent by the invaders. One of these fabrics was, indeed, made from cocoons that were gathered from trees in the wild in Mexico and spun into costly cloth. Although the insect involved is not the Japanese one, the procedure of gathering the fine thread is essentially the same as for Japanese silk (Irmgard W. Johnson, “Basketry and Textiles,” in Archaeology of Northern Mesoamerica, ed. Ekholm and Bernal, 312). There were also a number of other silk-like fabrics reported by the Spaniards. In Yucatan, fiber from inside the pod of the ceiba tree, called kapok, was gathered and spun. Bishop Diego de Landa compared the resulting cloth to imported silk (Alfred M. Tozzer, ed., Landa’s Relacion de las Cosas de Yucatan: A Translation, Papers of the Peabody Museum of American Archaeology and Ethnology, Harvard University, vol. 18 [Cambridge, Mass.: Peabody Museum, 1941], 201, 205), while Father Clavigero described it as “soft and delicate, and perhaps more so, than [Jananese] silk” (History of Mexico 1, trans. Charles Cullen [Philadelphia: Thomas Dobson, 1817], 41). Silky fiber from the wild pineapple plant was also used to weave a fine textile. Moreover, a silk-like fabric was woven by the Aztecs from delicate rabbit hair. Even cotton cloth could be woven so fine that specimens excavated at Teotihuacan, in central Mexico, and dating the fourth century AD have been characterized as “exceedingly fine” and “of gossamer thinness” (William E. Safford, “Food Plants and Textiles of Ancient America,” in Proceedings of the 19th International Congress of Americanists [Washington, 1917], 17). These examples provide sufficient evidence that the Book of Mormon references to “silk” are plausible, even though Joseph Smith could not have known any of these historical facts on his own.

“Fine-twined linen” is mentioned three times and “fine linen” three more in the records of the Jaredites and Nephites (e.g., Mosiah 10:5). Yet the flax plant from which our familiar linen is made did not grow in America. On this count too, the Book of Mormon has been charged with error. Again, please see the commentary for Alma 1:29. Again, I will add further commentary here.

The word linen has a broad dictionary meaning in addition to the narrow meaning of cloth made from flax. A textile may be called linen if it has the characteristics of linen. Linen is prepared by soaking and pounding fibers from the flax or hemp plant until they congeal into a strong, solid sheet. In pre-Spanish America, native peoples made two kinds of cloth by a similar process. The leaves of the ixtle, maguey, or agave plants were soaked and pounded in the same manner as flax was treated in Europe. The resulting thread and fabric, known as henequen, was the most commonly used cloth, especially among people of the lower economic classes in central Mexico. The Spanish conquistador Bernal Diaz explicitly described this cloth as “like linen” (The Discovery and Conquest of Mexico [New York: Farrer, Straus, and Cudahy, 1956], 24). Another cloth made of vegetable fiber is bark cloth. The bark of the fig tree was stripped off in large sheets, then soaked, pounded, and dried until the matted material was soft. The resulting “cloth” feels a good deal like henequen or linen (see Johnson, “Basketry and Textiles,” 312).

Joseph Smith had no way of knowing about the history of silk and linen, yet the record he translated, the Book of Mormon, turns out to agree with modern evidence that textiles with these labels were used in Mesoamerica.

“all manner of precious things, which they had obtained by their industry”

It is interesting to note that these people worked for their riches. They obtained them by their “industry.” Though hard work and industry are positive virtues, the riches so obtained can still lead to being lifted up and proud.

7 Now this was the cause of much affliction to Alma, yea, and to many of the people whom Alma had consecrated to be teachers, and priests, and elders over the church; yea, many of them were sorely grieved for the wickedness which they saw had begun to be among their people.

verse 7 “Teachers” and “priests” have been mentioned previously in the Book of Mormon, but this verse is the first mention of the “elders.” Previously the terms “teachers” and “priests” have referred largely to the function of those called to labor (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 5:26). In this verse, however, it is clear that all three terms refer to offices within the church, indeed, offices in the Melchizedek priesthood.

8 For they saw and beheld with great sorrow that the people of the church began to be lifted up in the pride of their eyes, and to set their hearts upon riches and upon the vain things of the world, that they began to be scornful, one towards another, and they began to persecute those that did not believe according to their own will and pleasure.

verse 8 “they began to be scornful, one towards another” An individual who is “lifted up in the pride of [his] eyes” and who has “set [his] heart upon riches and upon the vain things of the world” is inevitably “scornful” towards others. Such a person sees others as competitors rather than brothers and sisters. Rather than being naturally inclined to lift and assist others and revel with them in their successes, he is wont to tear down and undermine them and then exult in their failures. C. S. Lewis wrote: “Pride gets no pleasure out of having something, only out of having more of it than the next man” (Mere Christianity, 109).

9 And thus, in this eighth year of the reign of the judges, there began to be great contentions among the people of the church; yea, there were envyings, and strife, and malice, and persecutions, and pride, even to exceed the pride of those who did not belong to the church of God.

10 And thus ended the eighth year of the reign of the judges; and the wickedness of the church was a great stumbling-block to those who did not belong to the church; and thus the church began to fail in its progress.

verse 10 If the Spirit withdraws from the church because of the wickedness within the church, then it is virtually impossible for the church to successfully discharge its responsibility to proclaim the gospel to others and encourage them in their conversion. Thus, for those seeking for truth who might have wished to be baptized, the “wickedness of the church was a great stumbling-block.”

11 And it came to pass in the commencement of the ninth year, Alma saw the wickedness of the church, and he saw also that the example of the church began to lead those who were unbelievers on from one piece of iniquity to another, thus bringing on the destruction of the people.

verse 11 The church, lacking the Spirit of God, had deteriorated to the point where some unbelievers who looked to the church for an example were only taught greater wickedness.

12 Yea, he saw great inequality among the people, some lifting themselves up with their pride, despising others, turning their backs upon the needy and the naked and those who were hungry, and those who were athirst, and those who were sick and afflicted.

verse 12 How important is it to impart of one's substance to the poor and needy? It is a central and vital doctrine in the gospel of Jesus Christ. The reader may wish to review Mosiah 4:26 wherein king Benjamin places this doctrine in its proper perspective.

13 Now this was a great cause for lamentations among the people, while others were abasing themselves, succoring those who stood in need of their succor, such as imparting their substance to the poor and the needy, feeding the hungry, and suffering all manner of afflictions, for Christ's sake, who should come according to the spirit of prophecy;

verse 13 "Now this was a great cause for lamentations among the people" There were many factors which might well have produced lamentations and suffering among the people. These included the "contentions," "strife," "malice," "persecutions," and the ignoring of the needy.

Yet in the midst of all this suffering, there were those who were still willing to succor the needy and endure the persecutions heaped upon them for their steadfast beliefs.

14 Looking forward to that day, thus retaining a remission of their sins; being filled with great joy because of the resurrection of the dead, according to the will and power and deliverance of Jesus Christ from the bands of death.

verse 14 It seems clear that even though the Savior would not be born for another eighty or so years, the faithful members of the church in Alma's day had a good understanding of the concepts of atonement and resurrection. They had learned of these concepts from their scriptures and from their contemporary prophets.

15 And now it came to pass that Alma, having seen the afflictions of the humble followers of God, and the persecutions which were heaped upon them by the remainder of his people, and seeing all their inequality, began to be very sorrowful; nevertheless the Spirit of the Lord did not fail him.

verse 15 "the Spirit of the Lord did not fail him" Alma had undoubtedly prayed for divine guidance as he desired to know how he might best serve the Lord in helping to cleanse the church. The "Spirit of the Lord did not fail him," and the answer came. What was that answer? We will read of it in verses 16-18. Alma is inspired to resign his job as chief judge or governor of the people that he might spend his full time in his priestly labors. He knew that bringing people to repentance would require all his time and effort serving in his role as high priest.

16 And he selected a wise man who was among the elders of the church, and gave him power according to the voice of the people, that he might have power to enact laws according to the laws which had been given, and to put them in force according to the wickedness and the crimes of the people.

verse 16 “he selected a wise man . . . and gave him power according to the voice of the people” The Nephite’s governmental system did not allow Alma to appoint his own successor. A new chief judge could only be elected by popular vote. It is likely that Alma recommended his successor to the people and then asked for their ratification.

“that he might have power to enact laws . . . and to put them in force according to the wickedness and the crimes of the people” We also are reminded of the extensive power of the office of chief judge or governor. He had both legislative and judicial functions.

17 Now this man’s name was Nephihah, and he was appointed chief judge; and he sat in the judgment-seat to judge and to govern the people.

verse 17 “Nephihah” The “hah” ending is common in proper names and in the names of cities in the Book of Mormon. Consider, for example, Moronihah and Ammonihah. “Hah” means something like “house of” or “place of.” Presumably a man who bears such a name likely is of a family which is associated with that place.

Apparently, the “hah” ending performs the same function as the Hebrew word “beth” and means “house of” or “place of.” Examples in Hebrew include Bethel, meaning the place of God and Bethlehem, meaning the house of bread. Other Hebrew examples include Bethany, Bethsaida, Bethphage, and Bethabara.

Interestingly, the “ha” ending is also common in the Mayan language and implies the same meaning—house or place of. Examples of Mayan places include Xelha, Balamha, Altunha, and Pulsiha. As we might expect, a Mayan who bore one of these names was likely of a family who were associated with that place.

18 Now Alma did not grant unto him the office of being high priest over the church, but he retained the office of high priest unto himself; but he delivered the judgment-seat unto Nephihah.

19 And this he did that he himself might go forth among his people, or among the people of Nephi, that he might preach the word of God unto them, to stir them up in remembrance of their duty, and that he might pull down, by the word of God, all the pride and craftiness and all the contentions which were among his people, seeing no way that he might reclaim them save it were in bearing down in pure testimony against them.

verse 19 Never again would a Nephite serve as both spiritual and secular leader of his people. The secular office of chief judge will continue almost to the end of Nephite civilization. The high priest will preside over all religious affairs until the coming of Christ. Then, after the coming of Christ, the office of high priest will disappear, and priesthood functions will be performed by the disciples or the “elders of the church” (Moroni 3:1).

“seeing no way that he might reclaim them save it were in bearing down in pure testimony against them” One of the grand themes of the entire book of Alma is that the preaching of the word of God in pure testimony is mightier than politics or the sword in establishing peace and goodness among a people.

Alma realized that the solution to the wickedness within the church was for the members to either sincerely repent or to be removed from the church. In either case the church would be cleansed. This basic solution is as applicable today in the church as it was in Alma’s day. Alma’s approach was to bear “pure testimony” before the sinners, or, as the text states “against the sinners.” In this way, he could then stand aside and allow the Spirit of God to try to touch the souls of his hearers. He could then challenge them to know their position. If they were receptive to the Spirit and accepted his testimony, they would remain in the church. If they did not, they were excommunicated, and the church was thus cleansed.

Regarding the concept of “pure testimony,” Joseph Fielding McConkie and Robert L. Millet have taught: “The Holy Ghost is the converter, and the gospel teacher must never forget this. He or she must never seek to usurp the role of the Spirit nor upstage him . . . The person who bears pure testimony never seeks for cheap substitutes for the Spirit. He never relies upon methodologies which might confuse sentimentality with spirituality, emotional display with edification. . . . He ‘tries the virtue of the word of God’ (Alma 31:5), trusts in the power of the scriptures and the words of the prophets to penetrate to the heart of his listeners, and bears witness of his message with sincerity and with soberness” (The Holy Ghost, 119-20).

Alma will spend the remainder of his life in laboring, bearing “pure testimony” to bring his people to repentance, and regulating the affairs of the church.

20 And thus in the commencement of the ninth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi, Alma delivered up the judgment-seat to Nephihah, and confined himself wholly to the high priesthood of the holy order of God, to the testimony of the word, according to the spirit of revelation and prophecy.

verse 20 For about eight years, Alma had functioned as both high priest and chief judge. It is also likely that he held the position of chief captain of the Nephite army (Alma 2:16). Perhaps, then, he really split his chief judgeship into three separate offices—chief judge, high priest, and chief captain.

Alma 5 The process of spiritual growth

Alma 5:14-15 Have ye spiritually been born of God? Have ye received his image in your countenances?

Alma 5:26 And now behold, I say unto you, my brethren, if ye have experienced a change of heart, and if ye have felt to sing the song of redeeming love, I would ask, can ye feel so now?

It may be suggested that in a way, the subject or theme of this chapter is the spiritual growth or spiritual progress we are all expected by the Lord to make here in mortality. Spiritual growth may be defined simply as our growth toward godhood—our gradual and incremental acquisition of the characteristics or attributes of God the Father and his Son Jesus Christ. There exists a state of spiritual development, attainable by each person here in mortality, in which that individual stands fully qualified for exaltation. What characterizes this state? How do we refer to it? How can we achieve it?

In his address to the people of Zarahemla, recorded here in Alma 5, Alma will eventually concentrate on the covenantal promises the Nephites had entered into with the Lord and now must renew. The end result of keeping these covenants is spiritual growth toward godhood, a requirement for entry into the celestial heaven.

Certainly, the amount of spiritual progress the Lord expects each of us to make here on earth, in absolute terms, varies considerably from person to person. We arrive in mortality at different stages of our spiritual development. Our spiritual growth does not begin here on earth. We spent considerable time in the premortal world, perhaps centuries, millennia, or even more, as we reckon time, living with our heavenly parents. In that sphere we were subject to law, and we had our agency. Some of us were more valiant and obedient than others. Obedience to law in that sphere resulted, as it does here in mortality, in spiritual growth—in the incremental acquisition of the attributes of God. By the time we arrive, then, here in mortality, some have made more progress in their spiritual growth, and some have made less. Those who have made more progress in that pre-earthly sphere may well be expected by the Lord to make more here in mortality (D&C 82:3; Luke 12:48). The veil through which we pass as we enter mortality is not fully occlusive. Those characteristics we brought with us may well manifest themselves here in this premortal experience.

As we are born here on earth we also encounter differing circumstances. We are presented with differing opportunities for spiritual growth. To some are given relatively few, and to others, abundant opportunities are extended. For example, some are born into primitive third-world cultures where their "religion" is also primal and makes no mention of Jesus Christ. Others are born into wholesome, God-fearing cultures. Some may be born into dysfunctional families where they are neglected or even abused. Others are reared in supportive and loving family environments. The Lord's expectations of those who are blessed with the greater opportunities for growth are doubtless higher (D&C 82:3). It is clear that while the amount of progress we are expected to make differs from person to person, there is an amount of growth, in absolute terms, which the Lord expects of each of us. There is a level attainable by each individual person according to his spiritual attainments and capacities which he brought into mortality and according also to those circumstances he encounters here on earth. It may be presumed that once an individual has reached this level, the Lord will judge that individual worthy to live forever in the celestial heaven. This exciting process of spiritual growth is the subject of Alma 5. Read on!

Some background is necessary before proceeding. The concept of spiritual growth is intimately related to other basic doctrinal concepts. These include the law of justice, the fall, the atonement, the concepts of faith, and man's natural self and spiritual self. Indeed, as one learns about the basic concepts of the gospel it becomes readily apparent they are all closely interrelated.

Ideally, the reader will take the time to read and study detailed discussions of each of these topics. These can be found in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine. In volume 1, see chapter 5, The "Natural Self" and "Spiritual Self," chapter 6, The Gospel and the Two Natures of Man, chapter 9, Revealed Faith, chapter 10, Deliberate Faith and Revealed Faith, chapter 11, Other Notes on Faith, chapter 12, The Law of Justice and chapter 19, The Essence of the Lord's Atonement. In volume 2, see chapter 1, Understanding the Eden Experience—the Fall and chapter 2, Consequences of the Savior's Atonement.

If the reader prefers to proceed immediately with this discussion of Alma 5, I have provided a brief discussion of these concepts:

The Law of Justice

This law sets a standard for all of God's actions relative to the eternal fate of each of his creatures. It holds that in their quest for their eternal reward, none of his creatures—none of his intelligences—will ever be unfairly accorded an advantage over another. And, no one of his creations will ever be penalized without that penalty's being fully deserved and wholly appropriate. In all God's giving and taking there will be no biases, no favoritisms, no discriminations, no prejudices, no prepossessions, no inconsistencies, and no partialities.

The law of justice requires that whenever a divine commandment is broken, there must be a punishment imposed and compensation made to restore the balance in natural law that was upset by the violation (see Alma 42). A violation of God's law renders the sinner unworthy to enter the presence of God. He will remain unworthy until recompense is made. This law is very exact. If even one sin is committed, and that sin is not forgiven or removed, the individual guilty of the sin does not qualify for entry back into God's presence. Hence the scriptural statement to the effect that "no unclean thing can enter into the kingdom of God" (1 Nephi 10:21; 15:34; Alma 11:37; 40:26; 3 Nephi 27:19; Moses 6:57). The positive side of the law of justice assures us that God must grant blessings to those who obey the commandments (D&C 130:20-21).

Justification. A man is said to be "justified" or "reconciled to God" when all his sins are forgiven. He is then brought into perfect harmony with God to the point where he can be exalted. The following statement is absolute and must be understood to be absolute: No man can be exalted in the celestial kingdom without being justified.

Corollaries to the law of justice. There are a few vital corollaries:

1. Men are punished only for those things of which they themselves are guilty. It is unjust to punish one man for another's sin.

2. In order to violate the law, one must be capable of understanding the law—in other words the individual must be "accountable."

3. Ignorance of the law is not an excuse for violation of the law, but a man may be judged lightly until he has a chance to receive the law and understand it. All accountable people will eventually have the opportunity to adequately understand the law to the point where their subsequent behavior, relative to the law, will either cause spiritual growth or lead to their condemnation.

Payment of the debt to the law of justice. Since each of us has sinned and is therefore in debt to the law of justice, it is vital to learn how appropriate payment for sins can be made. In theory, there are three ways to meet the demands of the law of justice and be exalted:

1. A man may keep the law perfectly and never break the law. This is referred to as being "justified by the law." Obviously, no man except Jesus Christ has ever lived without sin, therefore we know that it is impossible for the rest of us to become justified by the law.

2. A man may pay the debt produced by his sins by suffering himself. It is apparently possible for a man to contribute partial compensation for his own sins through personal suffering. In the next sphere of our lives, the spirit world, many will be required to do just that. We are taught, however, that man is incapable of paying his own debt completely—to the point of complete justification or exaltation. Therefore, every man is in desperate need of help (Mosiah 13:28).

3. Thus there is only one practically valid way for a man to meet the demands of the law of justice. It is to get help. No man can save himself. Each man must allow another qualified individual to intercede for him and to plead his cause. This is made possible by a law which is closely related to the law of justice. This is the law of mercy.

The law of mercy. The law of mercy may be summarized as follows: Whenever a law of the gospel is transgressed, a debt is incurred and the transgressor is unworthy of eternal glory (a restatement of the law of justice). The individual who transgressed the law is not hopelessly lost, however. The law of mercy provides that under certain specific conditions, exceptions can be to the law of justice on behalf of the sinner. The law of mercy allows that an intercessor may request these exceptions. However, the intercessor must be perfectly qualified to intercede. If he becomes perfectly qualified, this person will then be allowed to appeal to the law of justice for these exceptions on behalf of the sinner. And his appeals will be granted. Obviously that qualified individual is the Savior. He completed his qualification during the agony of his atoning sacrifice. The law of mercy does not subtract from the law of justice, rather it is an essential addition to it (Alma 42:24-25).

When an unrepentant sinner dies, he finds himself outside the atoning power of Jesus Christ. He must then reside in that part of the spirit world referred to as the spirit prison. There, we presume, he will suffer the “hell” of beginning to pay the debt himself. It must be emphasized that the suffering experiences as a part of God’s plan is not arbitrary or purely punitive. Pain and suffering will be experiences by every sinner as he works to overcome his natural self and adapt his behaviors to the Lord’s commandments.

Even though it is impossible for him to make complete payment or restitution himself, his efforts and motivation for doing so will then be judged. Most such people will eventually repent and acknowledge Jesus Christ as their Savior. Then Christ’s atoning influence will produce a degree of justification which will enable them to inherit a kingdom of glory—either the terrestrial or telestial kingdom. Those few who refuse to repent and acknowledge the Savior are said to remain “filthy still.” They will go with Satan to become sons of perdition forever (2 Nephi 9:8-9).

The Fall of Man

To properly understand the atonement of Jesus Christ, one must first grasp the concept of the fall of man. To understand the fall, one must first understand its dual nature—its two major aspects. The first is “the fall of Adam.” The second is the fall of each individual.

The fall of Adam. Because of the transgression of Adam and Eve, each of us will be cut off from the presence of God while here in mortality. This spiritual death is called the “first death” as opposed to the “second death” (see below). Each man will also suffer physical death, the separation of his spirit from his body. Both these penalties are temporary because, as we will learn, their effects have, automatically and without any effort on our part, been reversed. No man will be permanently cut off from the presence of God or live permanently without a physical body because of Adam and Eve. No one will be eternally punished for Adam’s transgression (Article of Faith 2).

The fall of you. The second major aspect of the fall is “the fall of each individual”—the fall of you and me! No one, save for the Savior himself, will ever live without sin. Thus, no man is qualified based on his own merits to remain in the presence of God. Because of his own sins each man “falls” or cuts himself off from the presence of God. In contrast to the effects of Adam’s transgression, this self-induced spiritual death experienced by each man is “permanent.” That is, it will remain in force for eternity unless its causes are reversed.

The Atonement

The next vital concept is the atonement. It is probably not given to man, at this point of our progression, to understand all the reasons why or how the Savior is qualified to be our Mediator or Redeemer. We only know that he is qualified. We may, however, make the observations that:

1. His central motivation for volunteering to be the Savior was his unequivocal love for us. He had no thought of self aggrandizement. Was the Father capable of discerning Jesus’s deepest motives? Of course! And would the Father have picked Jesus for this ultimate calling had not his motives been pure? His love for us—particularly that aspect of his love that inclines him to be merciful to us, undeserving as we are, is referred to in scriptures as the “grace of God.”

2. He was “justified by the law.” That is, he kept the laws of God perfectly, and he thus avoided the debt altogether.

3. By some incompletely process called the atonement, which he endured from the time he entered Gethsemane until his death, he somehow satisfied the requirements to become our Savior, to be able to intercede and plead for us. He experienced a unique and exquisite suffering that only he was capable of enduring. This suffering satisfied the law of justice. To review what we are given to know about the process of Jesus’s atonement, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, chapter 19, volume 1, “The Essence of the Lord’s Atonement.”

What are the effects of Christ’s atonement? There are “unconditional” and “conditional” effects of the atonement. Man is automatically the beneficiary of the unconditional benefits without any effort on his part. By these unconditional effects, the consequences of the fall of Adam are completely overcome. Keep in mind that the law of justice includes the concept that it is unjust to punish one man for another’s sins. Thus, all men will be resurrected, and also no man will be excluded from the presence of God because of Adam’s sin. At some point in time every man will be returned to the presence of God, at least long enough to be judged. No matter how wicked or unrepentant, each person will, after the resurrection, be brought back into the presence of God for judgment. This returning to God’s presence of every man is proof that no one suffers a permanent spiritual death because of Adam’s transgression. The effects of Adam’s transgression (temporary spiritual death and physical death) are unconditionally and completely overcome by the Savior's atonement. But what about the "permanent spiritual death" due to a man's own sins?

The conditional effects of the Savior's atonement will overcome the consequences of the fall of each individual person but only on condition of that person's repentance and obedience to the laws of God, the gospel of Jesus Christ. Once in God's presence each person is judged. All will either be admitted to the celestial kingdom of God and remain in his presence, or they will suffer the "second death" (as opposed to the "first death" spoken of above) wherein they will be sent out from the presence of God a second time, this time forever. These will be consigned to one of the lower two kingdoms or they will suffer the complete second death and go to live with Satan forever as sons of perdition.

Nothing that man can do for himself will result in his admission to a kingdom of glory. The presence of an intercessor or advocate is essential. Ultimately, therefore, admission to a kingdom of glory is a gift and is not earned. We qualify to receive this gift by accepting Christ, obeying him, and repenting of our sins.

The Natural Self

In this discussion so far, we have provided some needed background. Now let us turn to "the problem" each of us faces as we are born into mortality. As we enter mortality, we are all inclined toward being "natural" men and women. A "natural man" is one who has not been touched by the influence of the Holy Ghost. He tends to be attracted by and seek for things of the world. These worldly or earthly things which provide the primary motivation for the natural man are not necessarily evil in and of themselves. Yet, the natural man is motivated only by them. He does not respond to any eternal or spiritual invitations. Also, these earthly motivators—these influences of the world—are usually indulged in to excess. The natural man is an "enemy to God" (Mosiah 3:19) because his nature is alien to things of a spiritual or eternal nature. His perspective is limited to the carnal and worldly, and he is incapable of understanding spiritual things. "[Spiritual truths] are foolishness unto him" (1 Corinthians 2:14). The essential truth is that only the Spirit of God can teach spiritual or eternal truths, and an individual can learn these truths only if he is responsive to the Spirit on account of his own desires and behaviors. The natural man is blind and deaf to matters of the Spirit. He is independent and proud rather than submissive and humble, though, ironically, he usually ends up conforming to the worldly trends of the day. He is competitive and driven by rewards of the world. His behavior is likely to be influenced by his animal passions. It is important to reiterate that all of us in mortality are inclined toward being natural men or women. Each of us has the capacity and the inclination to be attracted to influences in the world which appeal to the "natural" within us.

The Spiritual Self

In addition, however, each of us is a spiritual being with characteristics befitting that noble title. We all possess a combination of “natural” and “spiritual” characteristics. None of us is either wholly natural or wholly spiritual. Each of us is constantly embroiled in a conflict. Our natural or worldly side pulls this way, while our spiritual self attempts to pull us in another direction. Which part of us will come out victorious—the natural or the spiritual?

As pointed out previously, in order to earn our exaltation, each of us must achieve significant spiritual growth. Each must rise from this “natural” condition to a spiritual plateau where we are worthy to return to our celestial home. This is not only possible in mortality, but it is expected of each one of us. Unfortunately, however, it appears that a majority will not achieve this goal. What is this mysterious plateau? By what name is it referred to in the scriptures? How do we go about achieving it? How does one know if one has achieved it? This state is referred to variously in the scriptures by several different names. Individuals who have achieved this lofty level are said, for example, to be “totally converted,” “justified,” “reconciled to God,” “born again,” “born of the Spirit,” “born of God,” and “quickenened in the inner man.” They might also be said to have “experienced a mighty change” or to have “received his image in [their] countenances” or to have “entered into the rest of God.” They might be referred to as “new creatures.” They may even be called “perfect” or “perfect in Christ.” Can a mortal really ever be perfect? While perfection in absolute terms must follow progress over eons of time, an individual who is born of the Spirit or totally converted is indeed referred to in the scriptures as being “perfect” (JST Genesis 17:1; Matthew 5:48; 19:21; Colossians 4:12; 1 Peter 5:10). He may not be just like Christ and is certainly not immune from committing sin. Yet his spiritual progress has earned him the right to be considered “justified before God” and “perfect in Christ” (Moroni 10:32-33).

First Principles of the Gospel

What is the formula for achieving this state? You will likely not be surprised to learn that the secret lies in adhering to the first principles of the gospel. These are:

Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Once an individual has manifest his desire to believe in Christ and develop an eternal relationship with him, that individual must then manifest his faith through deliberate obedience and diligence in “experimenting upon the words [commandments] of Christ.” This basic form of faith is deliberate faith, as there is invariably an element of deliberate-ness that is required as we seek to overcome our natural self and obey the Lord’s commandments. Then that individual will be rewarded by the Spirit of God with gifts of the Spirit, or incremental attributes of God and Christ. These attributes, received through the process of personal revelation may be referred to as revealed faith. They are the sum total of all gifts of the Spirit (increments of the attributes of God) for which the individual has qualified and received through his obedience to the Lord's commandments. Hence, when we say of an individual, "he is a man of faith," we can mean two separate things. First, he is a man of strong character—able to deny his natural self and obey the Lord's commandments when it is difficult to do so. We may also mean that he is a man who has received many gifts of the Spirit, many increments of the attributes of God as a result of his history of manifesting his deliberate faith by deliberately obeying the Lord's commandments.

As we grow spiritually and acquire the attributes of God, we become inclined toward gratitude to God, humility, submissiveness, and a desire for seeking out righteousness. Spiritual growth provides further impetus or motivation to strive to become more like our Father in Heaven and our Savior.

Repentance. The essence of this principle is obedience and a willingness to change and improve. It consists of a man's repeatedly and thoughtfully analyzing his behavior against the standard which the Savior has set—against the commandments of the gospel of Jesus Christ—and then altering his behavior, as is appropriate.

Baptism. More discussion on this vital gospel principle follows. In order to become eligible for celestial resurrection, it is necessary for one to experience the complete or total ordinance of baptism. The reader is encouraged to read carefully the important discussion of the ordinance of baptism in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 18, Baptism, the Ordinance that Brings Spiritual Growth.

The gift of the Holy Ghost. This is the second part of the ordinance of baptism, the baptism of the Spirit.

Enduring to the end. We might include the "fifth principle of the gospel"—enduring to the end and living by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God (2 Nephi 31:20-21; 3 Nephi 27:19-22; Matthew 7:21).

The words which Alma, the High Priest according to the holy order of God, delivered to the people in their cities and villages throughout the land. Comprising chapter 5.

As has been mentioned previously, the headnotes or superscriptions preceding some of the chapters in the Book of Mormon are not the product of modern editors but rather are part of the original ancient record and were written by the prophet Mormon. They are a type of colophon or editorial explanatory paragraph (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:1-3). The phrase "comprising chapters . . ." added to some of the headnotes is, of course, the product of modern-day editors. This phrase appeared for first time in the 1981 edition of the Book of Mormon.

1 Now it came to pass that Alma began to deliver the word of God unto the people, first in the land of Zarahemla, and from thence throughout all the land.

verse 1 It is clear that Alma regarded the "word of God" to be a powerful antidote for a sinful society (see Alma 31:5). Governmental legislation of the laws of God, however, is not effective. The word of God has to be received into the hearts of the people before it has any effect in reclaiming the sinners.

2 And these are the words which he spake to the people in the church which was established in the city of Zarahemla, according to his own record, saying:

verse 2 The prophet Mormon is about to quote from Alma's own record which is recorded on the large plates of Nephi.

3 I, Alma, having been consecrated by my father, Alma, to be a high priest over the church of God, he having power and authority from God to do these things, behold, I say unto you that he began to establish a church in the land which was in the borders of Nephi; yea, the land which was called the land of Mormon; yea, and he did baptize his brethren in the waters of Mormon.

verse 3 "I, Alma, having been consecrated by my father, Alma, to be a high priest over the church of God" This father-to-son pattern of succession to the priesthood was first instituted at the time of Adam and applied during the times of the ancient patriarchs. "The order of this priesthood was confirmed to be handed down from father to son, and rightly belongs to the literal descendants of the chosen seed, to whom the promises were made. This order was instituted in the days of Adam" (D&C 107:40-41).

"in the land which was in the borders of Nephi" This phrase could mean that the land of Mormon was near (just outside) the smaller land of Nephi—that land surrounding the city of Nephi (see the commentary for Mosiah 7:5). It might also mean that the land of Mormon was in the mountains—the "borders"—of the larger land of Nephi (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 2:5 for a discussion of the relationship of the word borders and the word mountains).

4 And behold, I say unto you, they were delivered out of the hands of the people of king Noah, by the mercy and power of God.

5 And behold, after that, they were brought into bondage by the hands of the Lamanites in the wilderness; yea, I say unto you, they were in captivity, and again the Lord did deliver them out of bondage by the power of his word; and we were brought into this land, and here we began to establish the church of God throughout this land also.

verse 5 The events mentioned in this verse are contained in Mosiah 23 and 24. Note here that the younger Alma seems to include himself in the group of colonists that fled Helam to travel to Zarahemla ("we were brought into this land, and here we began to establish the church of God" (italics added). This suggests that he may have born in Helam or even earlier.

6 And now behold, I say unto you, my brethren, you that belong to this church, have you sufficiently retained in remembrance the captivity of your fathers? Yea, and have you sufficiently retained in remembrance his mercy and long-suffering towards them? And moreover, have ye sufficiently retained in remembrance that he has delivered their souls from hell?

verse 6 As mentioned previously, the majority of Alma's audience consisted of baptized members of the church while there were also some among them who were not members (verse 62).

"he has delivered their souls from hell" See the commentary on the "bands of death" and the "chains of hell" in the following verse.

7 Behold, he changed their hearts; yea, he awakened them out of a deep sleep, and they awoke unto God. Behold, they were in the midst of darkness; nevertheless, their souls were illuminated by the light of the everlasting word; yea, they were encircled about by the bands of death, and the chains of hell, and an everlasting destruction did await them.

verse 7 "the light of the everlasting word" This is the gospel or eternal truth. Can you name three sources from which we receive eternal truths? They are (1) scripture, (2) the teachings of living prophets, and (3) the inspiration of the Holy Ghost.

What are the "bands of death" and the "chains of hell"? Alma will teach in Alma 12:9-11 that those who harden their hearts to the word of God are given ever diminishing portions of the word until eventually they know nothing of the doctrine or word of God. Then they are inevitably taken captive by Satan and led down to destruction. This is what is meant by the "bands of death" and the "chains of hell." The mechanism of this captivity is simple. The individual who repeatedly gives in to the pulls of the natural man within him, and commits sin, experiences a diminution of the light of Christ. Consequently, the Spirit of the Lord becomes a bit more distant—his influence a bit more difficult to feel. Hence, matters of the eternities become less compelling and less important. Such an individual becomes more inclined, the next time he is tempted by things of the world, to respond to that temptation. This is the vicious cycle of sin, wherein committing a sin leads to an increased inclination to sin again. Eventually sin becomes a habit, an addiction, and thus the individual becomes trapped—bound by "the chains of hell." An individual so captivated by his sins is devoid of the influence of the Spirit of God. Not only is he not interested in matters of the Spirit, they seem silly, naive, ridiculous, and foolish to him (1 Corinthians 2:14).

In D&C 123 Joseph wrote from liberty jail that a world of people without a knowledge of eternal truths is ripe for a takeover by the devil. He then goes on to describe this spiritual bondage as "an iron yoke, a strong band, handcuffs, chains and shackles, and fetters of hell" (D&C 123:7-8). The antidote, then, for captivity by the devil is the word of God. God's word is a weapon which can cut through the "bands of death” and the “chains of hell.” But the word of God is effective only if the individual is willing to actually respond to the word of God and deliberately obey. The word of God is no antidote for the individual who fails to manifest his deliberate faith and obey the tenets of the word.

We must also keep in mind that while the devil is persuasive and beguiling, he has no influence over the righteous man. Additionally, he is not the source or cause of man’s inclination to sin. For that, we may blame each man’s own natural self. We hand over influence to Satan only when we commit sin. Much of his influence comes to the sinner in the form of comfort and self justification. The devil delights in the disobedience of man, and he is skillful in pointing out to the sinner all of the reasons why he was justified in committing sin.

It is clear that this discourse of Alma’s was delivered to a congregation who mostly were already members of the church through baptism. There were some listeners, however, who were not baptized (see verse 62). It is clear from Alma’s remarks that simply being baptized does not produce immediate spiritual rebirth. Otherwise, it would not have been necessary for Alma to work so hard to “stir [his people] up in remembrance of their duty” (Alma 4:19). Alma’s approach is to remind them of their fathers some of whom were baptized but only afterward being “awakened . . . out of a deep sleep . . . unto God.”

8 And now I ask of you, my brethren, were they destroyed? Behold, I say unto you, Nay, they were not.

9 And again I ask, were the bands of death broken, and the chains of hell which encircled them about, were they loosed? I say unto you, Yea, they were loosed, and their souls did expand, and they did sing redeeming love. And I say unto you that they are saved.

verse 9 “the bands of death broken, and the chains of hell which encircled them about, were they loosed?” The younger Alma frequently used the expression “bands of death” (Alma 4:14; 5:7, 9–10; 7:12; 11:41). We first encountered this phrase as it was used by the prophet Abinadi (Mosiah 15:8-9, 20,23; 16:7; 23:12; Alma 4:14; 5:7,9,10; 7:12; 11:41-42; 22:14). How does Alma the Younger use the expression as compared with Abinadi?

Abinadi generally spoke about the “bands of death” in terms of the deliverance of mankind from the grasp of physical death through Christ’s Resurrection. Alma perpetuated this understanding in the majority of his uses of the phrase, and here in Alma 5 he speaks not only of deliverance from physical death (“the bands of death”) but of the deliverance from the spiritual death (“the chains of hell”) that otherwise results from sin during this mortal life. Alma’s metaphorical use of “bands of death” and “chains of hell” is very much akin to how these phrases are used in the Hebrew of Psalms 18 and 107. Alma explained his understanding of what the “chains of hell” signify in

Alma 12:11: “And they that will harden their hearts, to them is given the lesser portion of the word until they know nothing concerning his mysteries; and then they are taken captive by the devil, and led by his will down to destruction. Now this is what is meant by the chains of hell.”

Alma does not simply echo Abinadi’s doctrinal understanding of the “bands of death” and that phrase’s relationship to their understanding of the suffering and resurrection of Christ, but he shows that he understands the phrase in great depth and its connection with associated concepts in the Hebrew psalms.

“sing redeeming love” Here is an expression that is unique in all the scriptures to the Book of Mormon, indeed unique to the prophet Alma. He describes the thoroughly converted individual as one who is apt to “sing the song of redeeming love” or more simply “sing redeeming love” (see also Alma 5:26; 26:13). It would seem that when a person “sings redeeming love,” he deeply feels profound gratitude for the Savior’s atonement, and his heart bursts forth with a hymn of gratitude to him.

“they are saved” They are saved from spiritual death, hell, and the devil. In other words, they are admitted to the celestial heaven. See the commentary for 2 Nephi 28:23.

10 And now I ask of you on what conditions are they saved? Yea, what grounds had they to hope for salvation? What is the cause of their being loosed from the bands of death, yea, and also the chains of hell?

verse 10 Alma asks the question: “Exactly how were your fathers converted? What were the conditions which had to be fulfilled in order for them to become converted and hence “saved”? In the next three verses of this chapter, verses 11 through 13, Alma will answer his own question. He will mention four conditions essential for complete conversion and salvation.

11 Behold, I can tell you—did not my father Alma believe in the words which were delivered by the mouth of Abinadi? And was he not a holy prophet? Did he not speak the words of God, and my father Alma believe them?

verse 11 Here is the first of Alma’s four conditions: (1) Follow the living prophet and believe on his words. Their fathers had believed the words of Abinadi and subsequently had followed another prophet, the senior Alma. We might extend this “condition” somewhat by including the necessity of receiving the “light of the everlasting word” from whatever source it may come (see the commentary for verse 7). Again, to truly receive the word of God or believe in the words of a living a prophet, the individual must act on those words. He must deliberately obey even when it is difficult to do so.

12 And according to his faith there was a mighty change wrought in his heart. Behold I say unto you that this is all true.

verse 12 Here is Alma's second condition: (2) Experience a mighty change of heart. How does one judge whether or not a mighty change of heart has occurred? Consider the people of king Benjamin who were converted following his great sermon. They were changed from their carnal and fallen state to a state of righteousness. They had "no more disposition to do evil, but to do good continually" (Mosiah 5:2) and they were "willing to enter into a covenant with [their] God to do his will, and to be obedient to his commandments in all things" (Mosiah 5:5). These changes can only come through the influence of the Spirit of God. And the Spirit of God extends this marvelous blessing only to those inclined to obey the Lord's commands. Individuals who experience this "mighty change" are afforded the redeeming powers of the atonement. Hence, they become new creatures and are called "the sons and daughters of Christ" (Mosiah 5:7).

"According to his faith there was a mighty change wrought in his heart" Conversion or spiritual rebirth cannot occur without faith. A heart and a mind inclined to act on a belief, regardless of the strength of the belief, is the fundamental pre-requisite to the process of conversion. Faith is more than an inclination to belief held in the mind of man. Deliberate faith is manifest only when that belief is acted upon. This faith is fundamental to the process of conversion or the process of spiritual growth. Faith is the very power which makes spiritual growth happen. Becoming spiritually reborn, or converted, without having faith is a bit like trying to run a three-hour marathon without being able to walk. The "faith" necessary to produce spiritual rebirth must be based upon an inclination to submit to the will of the Savior. But faith is actual obedience to his commands. This faith is not a non-specific thing. Rather, it is specifically faith in the Lord Jesus Christ (see verse 15).

13 And behold, he preached the word unto your fathers, and a mighty change was also wrought in their hearts, and they humbled themselves and put their trust in the true and living God. And behold, they were faithful until the end; therefore they were saved.

verse 13 Alma's final two conditions which must be satisfied for an individual to experience complete conversion and salvation are found in this verse. They are: (3) Trust in the true and living God. and (4) Endure to the end.

A trust in God is the very evidence of faith. An individual who has trust in God is inclined to defer satisfaction of his worldly wants and needs and appetites and adhere instead to the directives of the unseen God.

We must not only obtain a mighty change in our hearts and a forgiveness of our sins, but we must retain them as well.

verses 14-30 These verses contain what may be called a "spiritual checklist" that allows us to measure our behavior and attitudes against those of the Savior. Alma's people, of course, had to assess themselves based upon the characteristics of the prophesied Christ.

verses 14-62 As part of one of the greatest sermons in the Book of Mormon here in Alma 5, in these verses Alma posed a total of some fifty questions to the members of the Church in Zarahemla. These fifty questions are meant to help the people of the Church evaluate their spiritual progress and be able to clearly determine which of the “two ways” they are following: the path to eternal life or the path to eternal damnation (See Mack C. Stirling, “The Way of Life and the Way of Death in the Book of Mormon,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 6, no. 2, 1997: 152–204).

Alma’s objective with this speech was, apparently, to help the Nephites renew the covenant that was established not only by his father, Alma, at the Waters of Mormon, but also by King Benjamin at the great Nephite gathering that he convened in Zarahemla.

When Alma asked the question “can ye look up to God at that day with a pure heart and clean hands” (Alma 5:19), he was quoting Psalm 24:4. Psalm 24 is a temple entry psalm that presents worshippers desiring to pass through the gates of the temple as being presented with moral requirements for entry. The worshippers ask the guardians of the gates these two questions: “Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? Or who shall stand in his holy place?” The answer is then given: “He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully” (Psalm 24:3–4).

Biblical scholar Sigmund Mowinckel explained that ancient temples had “their own special leges sacrae or ‘laws of the sanctuary’, their special rules and special demands as to the qualifications of those to be admitted” (The Psalms in Israel’s Worship, trans. D.R. Ap-Thomas, 2 vols., Oxford: Basil Blackwell, 1962, 1:177).

The ancient Israelites were directed to renew the covenant every seven years (sabbatical year) at the Feast of Tabernacles, when they would hear the law read to them and recommit to observe it faithfully (Deuteronomy 31:10–13).

This information helps explain why Alma asks fifty questions in Alma 5. It is reasonable that Alma’s powerful address to the Nephites in the land of Zarahemla was given in connection with the observation of a sabbatical year, as called for under Israelite tradition. As such, Alma presented his series of introspective questions as part of a covenant renewal ceremony, possibly involving admission into the temple precinct. Alma’s speech came in the ninth year of the reign of the judges, 42 years after King Benjamin’s covenant renewal address, or in the sixth sabbatical year since then. That would have been the final sabbatical year before the Nephite celebration of the jubilee year, the fiftieth year after King Benjamin’s speech. This is conceivably why Alma was keen to quote and echo Benjamin in his speech, and this may also explain why there were exactly fifty questions—as a means of spiritual preparation for the jubilee.

Moreover, Psalm 15, as discussed, presents ten “worthiness” standards, which are stated in both positive (verses 2, 4) and negative conditions (verses 3, 5). Psalms scholars Peter C. Craigie and Marvin E. Tate explain the purpose for this: “Both the positive and negative [conditions] are important, for the person who would enter God’s presence must have a life characterized not only by active goodness, but also by the absence of evil” (Peter C. Craigie and Marvin E. Tate, Psalms 1–50, vol. 19 of Word Biblical Commentary, second edition; Nashville: Nelson, 2004, 151). As Craig Broyles stated, the nature of these questions, or standards, is to help the follower define which of the “two ways” he will follow. In addition, most of Alma’s fifty questions call either for a strongly positive reply or a decisively negative determination.

Alma’s fifty questions were both timely and timeless. They caused the church members in Zarahemla to reflect on the goodness of God in the past, with the desired effect of helping them to have faith in God’s promises and desire to be faithful to their covenants. They also caused the people to reflect on their current spiritual condition and help them to look forward to the day that they would stand before God to be judged of Him. What would that day look like for them? How did the current status of their faithfulness compare to their desired eternal destiny? These powerful and pressing queries could have been readily applied to any subsequent covenant renewal, and they can just as well apply to readers of Alma’s words today.

14 And now behold, I ask of you, my brethren of the church, have ye spiritually been born of God? Have ye received his image in your countenances? Have ye experienced this mighty change in your hearts?

verse 14 Here is a “classic” Book of Mormon verse well worth committing to memory. Alma has just summarized the process by which his people’s forebears earned excellent prospects for exaltation. Since unapplied history is of little value, Alma now attempts to put those lessons learned from the past into perspective. He asks three questions and thus attempts to give those lessons present application.

“have ye spiritually been born of God” We have already discussed the fact that Alma’s audience is largely made up of baptized members of the church. Haven’t all members of the church who have been baptized by water been spiritually reborn? From our discussions of this chapter, it is obvious that they have not. Alma’s question is appropriately asked.

“Have ye received his image in your countenances” The key words in this phrase are rich in meaning. “Image” is more than just an outward visual impression. Rather it is a total likeness and clear representation. “Countenance” implies more than merely a facial expression or appearance. The word has French origins and originally denoted “behavior,” “demeanor,” or “conduct.” The essence of this question seems to be: “Are you just like Christ in your attitudes and behavior? Have you learned to think as he thinks, believe as he believes, feel as he feels, and do as he does.” In scripture, this process has been referred to by Paul as obtaining “the mind of Christ” (1 Corinthians 2:16), and by Peter as partaking of “the divine nature” (2 Peter 1:4).

On another level, it is true that the radiance of one’s appearance reflects one’s spiritual state. The light that emanates from a Christlike individual is discernable in that individual’s countenance.

“Have ye experienced this mighty change in your hearts?” Alma implies that this change must be “experienced.” It is a difficult concept to communicate with words. It was never intended to be understood passively or merely intellectually. We learned that those who do experience this “mighty change” experience a sense of joy and satisfaction to the point where they “have felt to sing the song of redeeming love” (Alma 5:26).

15 Do ye exercise faith in the redemption of him who created you? Do you look forward with an eye of faith, and view this mortal body raised in immortality, and this corruption raised in incorruption, to stand before God to be judged according to the deeds which have been done in the mortal body?

verse 15 “Do ye exercise faith in the redemption of him who created you?”

To exercise faith in the Savior and in his atoning sacrifice, one must simply obey his commandments.

“him who created you” Is Jesus Christ really our Creator? The essence of man was never created and is co-eternal with God (D&C 93:29). The Father may be said to be our Creator in the sense that he sired our spirit bodies. Under the supervision of the Father, Jesus is the supreme Creator of heaven and earth. He is our Creator in the sense that he created all of the earthly materials of which our mortal bodies are formed. He is also our Creator and our Father by the principle of divine investiture of authority. We know that perhaps Jesus did participate in the organization of the spirit bodies wherein the intelligences were clothed with bodies of spirit matter (D&C 93:10), even though these bodies were begotten of the Father and an Eternal Mother by a divine procreative process. See also the commentary for Mosiah 26:23.

“an eye of faith” To have an “eye of faith” is to see the hand of God in all things and thus patiently anticipate the fulfillment of all that God has declared and promised. Elder Boyd K. Packer taught that to see with the eye of faith is “to see with the eyes [you] possessed before [you] had a mortal body . . . to hear with ears [you] possessed before [you] were born . . . to push back the curtains of mortality and see into the eternities” (“The Great Plan of Happiness” in Doctrine and Covenants / Church History Symposium Speeches, Salt Lake City: The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1993, 6).

“this corruption raised in incorruption” For a discussion of the terms corruption and incorruption, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 2:11.

verses 16-18 Here Alma divides all people into three categories. These are (1) The “blessed” (verse 16)—these have repented and been faithful. Their “works have been the works of righteousness upon the face of the earth.” (2) The liars (verse 17)—these are unrepentant but would have others believe that they are righteous. Indeed, they have often even fooled themselves, believing themselves to be among the righteous. How ludicrous to think they can lie to an omniscient Savior! (3) The guilty (verse 18)—these are also unrepentant, but they admit it; they are well aware of their guilt.

16 I say unto you, can you imagine to yourselves that ye hear the voice of the Lord, saying unto you, in that day: Come unto me ye blessed, for behold, your works have been the works of righteousness upon the face of the earth?

verse 16 “in that day” This is the day of judgment and will be referred to several times in the next few verses.

“can you imagine to yourselves that ye hear the voice of the Lord, saying . . . Come unto me ye blessed” Do you have confidence in your own eventual judgment and resurrection? As you persist in righteous acts, you will be blessed to receive increments of the attributes of Jesus Christ in the form of gifts of the Spirit. Along with this spiritual growth, there will also come a growing reassurance and confidence that your efforts are adequate before the Lord and that he will, indeed, welcome you to your celestial home. This is the gift of hope. See further discussion of this important requisite gift in “Two Little-Appreciated Gifts of the Spirit” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 10, Deliberate Faith and Revealed Faith and in “The Fruits of Faith” in chapter 11, Other Notes on Faith. Still further discussion of this topic is found in “The Rest of the Lord—the Gift of Hope” in volume 1, chapter 17, Justification and Sanctification.

Certainly, one of the crowning achievements of an individual’s total conversion is the coming to grips with one’s own eventual death, particularly when a significant illness has occurred and makes that death an imminent possibility. A successful adjustment to this reality can only occur when an individual has earned the right to feel that he is regarded as righteous or justified by the Father (D&C 42:46-47). He may then even come to relish the eventuality of his death as a release from physical trials and a just reward for his efforts in mortality.

17 Or do ye imagine to yourselves that ye can lie unto the Lord in that day, and say—Lord, our works have been righteous works upon the face of the earth—and that he will save you?

18 Or otherwise, can ye imagine yourselves brought before the tribunal of God with your souls filled with guilt and remorse, having a remembrance of all your guilt, yea, a perfect remembrance of all your wickedness, yea, a remembrance that ye have set at defiance the commandments of God?

19 I say unto you, can ye look up to God at that day with a pure heart and clean hands? I say unto you, can you look up, having the image of God engraven upon your countenances?

verse 19 After outlining his categories of mortal men, Alma now asks, in effect: “In which category are you?” His question and wording are reminiscent of Psalm 24:3-4 wherein David asks: “Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully.”

“pure heart and clean hands” The “pure heart” includes one’s thoughts, feelings, attitudes, resolves, motivations. “Clean hands” reminds us of the necessity of subjecting our flesh to our will. Consider the untenable and indefensible position of those who maintain that it is natural and good to acquiesce to all “God-given” appetites of the flesh so long as that acquiescence occurs between “consenting adults.” If one maintains a pure heart, then one’s hands will remain clean, as unrighteous acts are generally not performed without being previously rehearsed in the mind’s fantasy.

This phrase is almost certainly a biblical quote from Psalm 24. For further consideration of this biblical reference, see the commentary on the phrase “pure heart and clean hands” in 2 Nephi 25:16.

20 I say unto you, can ye think of being saved when you have yielded yourselves to become subjects to the devil?

21 I say unto you, ye will know at that day that ye cannot be saved; for there can no man be saved except his garments are washed white; yea, his garments must be purified until they are cleansed from all stain, through the blood of him of whom it has been spoken by our fathers, who should come to redeem his people from their sins.

verse 21 “there can no man be saved except his garments are washed white” Here is direct reference to the sacred and vital phenomenon of the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost.” When any man is judged sufficiently valiant in mortality relative to the eternal law of God and in his testimony of Jesus Christ. Then the Spirit will extend to that individual the grace of God—the cleansing power of the atonement. He will then be cleansed and justified. He will be “perfect in Christ” (Moroni 10:32-33). Other symbolic scriptural references to this process include such expressions as “robes of righteousness” (2 Nephi 9:14; Revelation 19:8), “garments of salvation” (Isaiah 61:10), or “clothed with salvation” (D&C 109:80). The same symbolism is found in our temples wherein we are taught, utilizing a largely symbolic presentation, how we may return to God’s presence.

Brother Hugh Nibley added insight to this verse:

Alma is obsessed with the image of the white garment: “There can no man be saved except his garments are washed white” [see also Alma 13:11, 12; 7:25] . . . Such expressions forcibly call to mind the work of Professor [Erwin] Goodenough, in which he shows that the white garment had a special significance for the early Jews. God himself may be represented in the earliest Jewish art as one of three men clothed in white. . . This image [from the Dura Europos synagogue] wasn’t even known to exist until 1958, but every time Goodenough goes back into the earliest Jewish pictorial representations he can find, there are the three men in white, or a single figure, the prophet in white. The symbol of the chosen prophet, an emissary from God, is always the white robe, which is reserved for heavenly beings. Nephi says that the righteous shall be “clothed with purity, yea, even with the robe of righteousness” (2 Nephi 9:14) (Temple and Cosmos, 238-39).

22 And now I ask of you, my brethren, how will any of you feel, if ye shall stand before the bar of God, having your garments stained with blood and all manner of filthiness? Behold, what will these things testify against you?

verse 22 The symbolism “stained with blood,” of course, means tainted by sin. All who have sinned are filthy, and only those who have been washed through the blood of the Savior will be found clean.

23 Behold will they not testify that ye are murderers, yea, and also that ye are guilty of all manner of wickedness?

verse 23 It seems likely that Alma’s reference to “murderers” here is intended to refer to sins less specific than the actual taking of human life. Alma will later refer to his behavior prior to his conversion by saying, “I had murdered many of his children, or rather led them away unto destruction” (Alma 36:14).

24 Behold, my brethren, do ye suppose that such an one can have a place to sit down in the kingdom of God, with Abraham, with Isaac, and with Jacob, and also all the holy prophets, whose garments are cleansed and are spotless, pure and white?

verse 24 This verse serves as a reminder that there is no social caste system in heaven. Even the most lowly and meek will sit down with the likes of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob and will receive the same reward those holy prophets receive.

25 I say unto you, Nay; except ye make our Creator a liar from the beginning, or suppose that he is a liar from the beginning, ye cannot suppose that such can have place in the kingdom of heaven; but they shall be cast out for they are the children of the kingdom of the devil.

verse 25 In the resurrection mercy will not rob justice. Abundant scriptural evidence so testifies (Alma 42:22).

26 And now behold, I say unto you, my brethren, if ye have experienced a change of heart, and if ye have felt to sing the song of redeeming love, I would ask, can ye feel so now?

verse 26 Alma now asks: “If you have been totally converted, are you still totally converted?” His question is an obvious reminder of the necessity of enduring to the end. Conversion is a dynamic and ongoing process. In mortality man has a constant tendency to drift spiritually downward. His spiritual health requires continuous nourishment. He cannot rest for long on spiritual plateaus—there are no plateaus in spiritual growth!

27 Have ye walked, keeping yourselves blameless before God? Could ye say, if ye were called to die at this time, within yourselves, that ye have been sufficiently humble? That your garments have been cleansed and made white through the blood of Christ, who will come to redeem his people from their sins?

28 Behold, are ye stripped of pride? I say unto you, if ye are not ye are not prepared to meet God. Behold ye must prepare quickly; for the kingdom of heaven is soon at hand, and such an one hath not eternal life.

verses 27-28 A humble man sees himself in his eternal perspective. His view of himself extends beyond this mortal sojourn. His thoughts and actions are true to this perspective. A proud man, in contrast, has lost the eternal perspective. He is consumed by the need to attain things of the world and compete for these things against others in the world.

“the kingdom of heaven is soon at hand” The duration of our mortal life is short and unpredictable. The “kingdom of heaven” is, of course, God’s heaven kingdom—the celestial kingdom.

29 Behold, I say, is there one among you who is not stripped of envy? I say unto you that such an one is not prepared; and I would that he should prepare quickly, for the hour is close at hand, and he knoweth not when the time shall come; for such an one is not found guiltless.

verse 29 The child of pride is envy. If a man’s attentions are riveted solely upon things of the world, he cannot help but experience envy as he views the worldly holdings of others.

30 And again I say unto you, is there one among you that doth make a mock of his brother, or that heapeth upon him persecutions?

31 Wo unto such an one, for he is not prepared, and the time is at hand that he must repent or he cannot be saved!

verses 30-31 “is there one among you that make a mock of his brother, or that heapeth upon him persecutions” “To mock is to humiliate, ridicule, insult, revile, make fun of, deride, sneer at, scorn, or hold in contempt. . . Occasions for mockery usually occur in the context of real or imagined differences. Differences in beliefs, wealth, learning, social position, physical characteristics, group membership, and behavior may be used as pretexts for the justification of mockery” (Bunker, Gary L. “Mocking Our Brother.” Ensign [April 1975] 5:36-41).

32 Yea, even wo unto all ye workers of iniquity; repent, repent, for the Lord God hath spoken it!

33 Behold, he sendeth an invitation unto all men, for the arms of mercy are extended towards them, and he saith: Repent, and I will receive you.

verse 33 “he sendeth an invitation unto all men” The opportunity to be cleansed and redeemed by the atonement of Christ is available to all.

34 Yea, he saith: Come unto me and ye shall partake of the fruit of the tree of life; yea, ye shall eat and drink of the bread and the waters of life freely; verse 34 Jesus is both the “tree of life” and the “bread and water of life.” We come unto him as we follow him and commit ourselves to strive to be like him through submitting our will to his and obeying him.

35 Yea, come unto me and bring forth works of righteousness, and ye shall not be hewn down and cast into the fire—

36 For behold, the time is at hand that whosoever bringeth forth not good fruit, or whosoever doeth not the works of righteousness, the same have cause to wail and mourn.

37 O ye workers of iniquity; ye that are puffed up in the vain things of the world, ye that have professed to have known the ways of righteousness nevertheless have gone astray, as sheep having no shepherd, notwithstanding a shepherd hath called after you and is still calling after you, but ye will not hearken unto his voice!

verse 37 The “vain things of the world” are all worldly things. Those who seek after them to the exclusion of spiritual things are said to be proud or “puffed up.”

Those who “have professed to have known the ways of righteousness [but who] nevertheless have gone astray” are guilty of hypocrisy.

38 Behold, I say unto you, that the good shepherd doth call you; yea, and in his own name he doth call you, which is the name of Christ; and if ye will not hearken unto the voice of the good shepherd, to the name by which ye are called, behold, ye are not the sheep of the good shepherd.

verse 38 When we are baptized into the Church we enter into a covenant with God. We announce our candidacy and our desire to be exalted in the celestial kingdom. At the time of our baptism, however, we are not guaranteed that exaltation. If, over our lifetime, we diligently persist in our efforts to become like the Savior, then we may eventually qualify for that highest of all eternal rewards. At that time, we shall have the name of Christ sealed upon us forever. Recall that King Benjamin pleaded with his people: “I would that ye should be steadfast and immovable, always abounding in good works, that Christ, the Lord God Omnipotent, may seal you his, that you may be brought to heaven, that ye may have everlasting salvation and eternal life” (Mosiah 5:15).

39 And now if ye are not the sheep of the good shepherd, of what fold are ye? Behold, I say unto you, that the devil is your shepherd, and ye are of his fold; and now, who can deny this? Behold, I say unto you, whosoever denieth this is a liar and a child of the devil.

verse 39 Ultimately all men will either accept Christ and his atonement and be rewarded with a kingdom of glory or will refuse to accept him and serve Satan forever.

40 For I say unto you that whatsoever is good cometh from God, and whatsoever is evil cometh from the devil.

verse 40 The writers of ancient scripture sometimes formed sharp contrasts between consecutive lines or stanzas. This is the form of Hebrew poetry known as antithetical parallelism. It was intended to make clear the meaning of the lines and emphasize their importance. This verse is an excellent example of antithetical parallelism (see the supplemental article, The Hebrew Language and the Book of Mormon):

Whatsoever is good cometh from God, and whatsoever is evil cometh from the devil.

Note the italicized antonyms. The contrast in these lines is clearly established (Donald W. Parry, “Antithetical Parallelism” in Reexploring the Book of Mormon, 167-69).

Moroni will teach: “Every thing which inviteth to do good, and to persuade to believe in Christ, is sent forth by the power and gift of Christ; wherefore ye may know with a perfect knowledge it is of God. But whatsoever thing persuadeth men to do evil, and believe not in Christ, and deny him, and serve not God . . . is of the Devil” (Moroni 7:16-17). Some thoughtful people have urged caution with this concept, suggesting that it may be too pat and simplistic, and that it may lead to our becoming overly judgmental. It would seem logical that there are many features of our mortal world which we might use for good or for ill. These have been placed in mortality by God to help ensure that this mortal experience is a rich and ample test. These features might include, for example, a desire for material possessions, a need for recognition and affirmation, a yearning for sexual satisfaction, and others. If we seek after things of the world in an entirely appropriate fashion—only when they are necessary and timely—then we do not misuse them. In this instance, Satan has little power over us. It is when we begin to seek after things of the world to the exclusion of things of the spirit that we give over control to Satan.

The phrase “whatsoever is evil cometh from the devil,” while an effective counterpoint to the phrase which precedes it—“Whatsoever is good cometh from God,” is not, strictly speaking, true. While Satan is an active and effective cheerleader for evil in the world, and he rushes to comfort those who elect things of the world and exclude from their lives things of the eternities, the major source of evil is not Satan himself. Rather, it is the “natural” inclinations of each and every human being. Each of us is variably inclined to seek after things of the world instead things of the spirit. This is the quality of our being which we may refer to as the natural man or the natural self.

41 Therefore, if a man bringeth forth good works he hearkeneth unto the voice of the good shepherd, and he doth follow him; but whosoever bringeth forth evil works, the same becometh a child of the devil, for he hearkeneth unto his voice, and doth follow him.

42 And whosoever doeth this must receive his wages of him; therefore, for his wages he receiveth death, as to things pertaining unto righteousness, being dead unto all good works.

verse 42 “for his wages he receiveth death” It certainly is possible to become in this life spiritually dead or unresponsive to promptings of the Spirit. Such an individual will define his life in purely worldly terms. He is not likely to perform righteous acts lest they happen to benefit him in immediate and tangible ways. We also, of course, reap eternal rewards for our good or for our evil acts.

verses 43-44 We learn in these verses that Alma was commanded by God to deliver this testimony to his people. It was his priesthood calling—“according to the holy order of God.”

43 And now, my brethren, I would that ye should hear me, for I speak in the energy of my soul; for behold, I have spoken unto you plainly that ye cannot err, or have spoken according to the commandments of God.

verse 43 It would seem that “and” would be a more suitable conjunction here than “or.”

44 For I am called to speak after this manner, according to the holy order of God, which is in Christ Jesus; yea, I am commanded to stand and testify unto this people the things which have been spoken by our fathers concerning the things which are to come.

verse 44 “I am called to speak . . . and testify unto this people” Alma teaches here the importance of bearing testimony to those gospel truths we teach. President Ezra Taft Benson taught: “Now, after we teach the great plan of the eternal God, we must personally bear our testimonies of its truthfulness” (Ensign [May 1987] 85).

“the things which have been spoken by our fathers” This phrase refers to the Nephites’ scriptures.

45 And this is not all. Do ye not suppose that I know of these things myself? Behold, I testify unto you that I do know that these things whereof I have spoken are true. And how do ye suppose that I know of their surety?

46 Behold, I say unto you they are made known unto me by the Holy Spirit of God. Behold, I have fasted and prayed many days that I might know these things of myself. And now I do know of myself that they are true; for the Lord God hath made them manifest unto me by his Holy Spirit; and this is the spirit of revelation which is in me.

verse 46 “I say unto you they are made known unto me by the Holy Spirit of God” This testimony Alma is delivering to his people in Zarahemla was revealed to him through the Spirit. Indeed, a testimony can come to an individual in no other way. The apostle John said “The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy” (Revelation 19:10). Alma teaches here an important principle of testimony bearing. After we bear our testimony, we must testify also as to how we know. We must give credit to the Holy Spirit of God.

“I have fasted and prayed many days that I might know these things of myself” There is obviously no “free lunch” in gaining a testimony. Even after having a dramatic experience with an angel of God (Mosiah 27:11-17), Alma had to fast and pray to gain his witness. This fact and the events surrounding the conversion of Alma certainly present us with a clear picture of the relationship between miraculous events and genuine conversion. Miraculous events simply do not, in and of themselves, produce conversion.

47 And moreover, I say unto you that it has thus been revealed unto me, that the words which have been spoken by our fathers are true, even so according to the spirit of prophecy which is in me, which is also by the manifestation of the Spirit of God.

verse 47 “the words which have been spoken by our fathers” By the time of Alma, the Nephite tradition concerning Jesus Christ would have been available through the spoken traditions and through the Nephite scriptures wherein are recorded the inspired prophecies of the Book of Mormon prophets.

The “spirit of prophecy” is the testimony of Jesus Christ (Revelation 19:10) as communicated to man through the Spirit of God. Though Alma had been stopped in his tracks through the intervention of an angel (Mosiah 27), his testimony was grounded not alone in this dramatic encounter but also in quiet, personal, spiritual experience over time and through significant effort.

48 I say unto you, that I know of myself that whatsoever I shall say unto you, concerning that which is to come, is true; and I say unto you, that I know that Jesus Christ shall come, yea, the Son, the Only Begotten of the Father, full of grace, and mercy, and truth. And behold, it is he that cometh to take away the sins of the world, yea, the sins of every man who steadfastly believeth on his name.

verse 48 “the Only Begotten of the Father” Begotten is to have been sired (generated as offspring by a male parent) or to have been produced. This term is used most frequently, as here, to describe the unique, divine parentage of Jesus’s physical body. The children of God are “spiritually begotten” of Christ when they covenant to do his will, keep his commandments, and are born of the Spirit (Mosiah 5:5-7).

49 And now I say unto you that this is the order after which I am called, yea, to preach unto my beloved brethren, yea, and every one that dwelleth in the land; yea, to preach unto all, both old and young, both bond and free; yea, I say unto you the aged, and also the middle aged, and the rising generation; yea, to cry unto them that they must repent and be born again.

verse 49 “this is the order after which I am called” Alma says, in effect, “This is my priesthood calling.”

50 Yea, thus saith the Spirit: Repent, all ye ends of the earth, for the kingdom of heaven is soon at hand; yea, the Son of God cometh in his glory, in his might, majesty, power, and dominion. Yea, my beloved brethren, I say unto you, that the Spirit saith: Behold the glory of the King of all the earth; and also the King of heaven shall very soon shine forth among all the children of men.

verse 50 “for the kingdom of heaven is soon at hand” What event is being referred to here? This verse is actually a bit problematic. The reader should be reminded to distinguish between the kingdom of God on the earth (his earthly church or kingdom) and the kingdom of God in heaven, the kingdom of heaven (his heavenly kingdom, the celestial kingdom). Here the kingdom of heaven is characterized by the “Son of God [coming] in his glory [splendor, radiance], in his might, majesty, power, and dominion.” The event which fits this description best is the Savior’s second coming, though you might well argue that it was hardly “soon at hand” in Alma’s day. Thus, we learn that in a limited sense the millennial (terrestrial) earthly kingdom of God may be considered to be the “kingdom of heaven.” This phrase might also have reference, in even a more limited sense, to Jesus’s earthly ministry which was indeed “soon at hand.” Or, this phrase might be referring to the death of each person within earshot of Alma’s message. Some time after death each person will enter the kingdom of heaven, at least briefly, to stand before the judgment bar of God.

51 And also the Spirit saith unto me, yea, crieth unto me with a mighty voice, saying: Go forth and say unto this people—Repent, for except ye repent ye can in nowise inherit the kingdom of heaven.

52 And again I say unto you, the Spirit saith: Behold, the ax is laid at the root of the tree; therefore every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit shall be hewn down and cast into the fire, yea, a fire which cannot be consumed, even an unquenchable fire. Behold, and remember, the Holy One hath spoken it.

verse 52 “the ax is laid at the root of the tree” This is a most interesting warning which the Lord apparently reserves for very particular circumstances. He is obviously warning a people that they are about to be destroyed because they are failing to bring forth good fruit—they are in danger of being cut down and cast into the figurative fires of hell. But it is interesting to study the circumstances in which the Lord has tendered this warning to a people in the scripture.

Here, this warning is given to Alma’s people who have great need to repent of their sins and have before them the great Lamanite wars which threaten great risk of destruction. The same warning was addressed to the faltering saints in this final dispensation. In 1833 the saints in Independence, Missouri, had brought on themselves threatening circumstances through their own unrighteous and unwise actions. They were in imminent danger of being attacked and routed by the Missourians, in fact persecutions had already begun (see D&C 97:7 and its commentary). In New Testament times, the same warning was delivered to the apostate and wicked Pharisee and Sadducee Jews who will soon be destroyed by their failed revolt against Rome (Matthew 3:10; Luke 3:9). In all of these cases deliverance is still possible if the rebellious individuals will only repent.

We may conclude that the Lord reserves this particular warning for a people who have brought upon themselves, through their own unrighteousness, devastatingly dangerous circumstances. There is still time to escape, but the need to repent is urgent.

Trees can’t move; they can’t run away or hide from the woodsman’s axe. Their only defense against being cut down for firewood lies in producing valuable fruit.

“every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit shall be hewn down and cast into the fire” An interesting question is raised by this phrase. Is it possible that our exaltation will depend upon more than merely resisting evil? Perhaps we also take a pro-active approach to life and look for ways to “bringeth . . . forth good fruit.”

“a fire which cannot be consumed, even an unquenchable fire” This phrase seems to reflect the simplified and incomplete version of our post-mortal life taught in the Book of Mormon: If we die righteous, we will live with God in heaven. If we do not, then we will live forever with Satan and suffer everlastingly.

53 And now my beloved brethren, I say unto you, can ye withstand these sayings; yea, can ye lay aside these things, and trample the Holy One under your feet; yea, can ye be puffed up in the pride of your hearts; yea, will ye still persist in the wearing of costly apparel and setting your hearts upon the vain things of the world, upon your riches?

verse 53 “can ye withstand these sayings” Alma asks, in effect, “Are you going to continue as you are, or are you going to change your hearts as I have suggested?”

54 Yea, will ye persist in supposing that ye are better one than another; yea, will ye persist in the persecution of your brethren, who humble themselves and do walk after the holy order of God, wherewith they have been brought into this church, having been sanctified by the Holy Spirit, and they do bring forth works which are meet for repentance—

verse 54 “sanctified by the Holy Spirit” At least some of the members of the Church of Jesus Christ in Alma’s day (the “holy order of God”) had put off the “natural man” and had truly become converted. For a discussion of why the “natural man” must become “sanctified by the Holy Spirit,” see the commentary for Mosiah 3:19. Also for a discussion of the sanctifying function of the Holy Ghost and the baptism of fire, see the introductory commentary for this chapter.

“they do bring forth works which are meet for repentance” The meaning of the adjective “meet” in this context is an archaic one. It means consistent with or indicative of.

55 Yea, and will you persist in turning your backs upon the poor, and the needy, and in withholding your substance from them?

56 And finally, all ye that will persist in your wickedness, I say unto you that these are they who shall be hewn down and cast into the fire except they speedily repent.

57 And now I say unto you, all you that are desirous to follow the voice of the good shepherd, come ye out from the wicked, and be ye separate, and touch not their unclean things; and behold, their names shall be blotted out, that the names of the wicked shall not be numbered among the names of the righteous, that the word of God may be fulfilled, which saith: The names of the wicked shall not be mingled with the names of my people;

verse 57 “come ye out from the wicked, and be ye separate, and touch not their unclean things” The implication of Alma’s counsel is that one should avoid even a curious and casual association with evil things lest that casual association lead to a more intimate one. One cannot partake of sin without first “touching” it. To avoid even the “touching” creates a reserve of safety.

“their names shall be blotted out” The reference here is to the “book of life” mentioned in the next verse. This book is a record kept in heaven containing the names of those who will inherit eternal life. The names of the faithful are entered while they are yet in mortality (D&C 76:68; 88:2; 128:6-7; 132:19; Psalm 69:28; Daniel 12:1-4; Luke 10:20; Hebrews 12:23; Philippians 4:3; Revelation 3:5; 21:27). These names may be blotted out of the book in the event of wickedness (Revelation 13:8; 17:8; 22:19).

One might also regard this verse as referring to the process of excommunication of those members of the church whose misbehavior merits such action. Regarding the necessity of excommunication when it is appropriate, Elder Dean L. Larsen has written:

We have been assured that in this last dispensation of the fulness of times, there will be no universal apostasy. When the Lord appears again in his glory, he will find a people who will have remained faithful and who will be ready to receive him and join with him in the completion of his work.

But the fact that there will not be a complete apostasy in this last dispensation does not mean all who have received the gospel and become members of the Church will remain faithful. Prophetic references to our own day, in fact, seem to indicate that there will be many who have known the truth and have tasted of the Lord’s goodness that will then allow themselves to be tempted away from the course the Lord has marked out for them. . . .

Historically, the drifting away from the course of life marked out by the Lord has occurred as individuals begin to make compromises with the Lord’s standard. This is particularly true when the transgression is willful and no repentance occurs. . . [This drifting away begins] as individual members of the Church knowingly [begin] to make compromises with the Lord’s standard. They [seek] the association of those who are willing to drift with them along this path of self-delusion. . . .

As the number of drifting individuals increases, their influence becomes more powerful. . . The drifting is the more dangerous when its adherents continue to overtly identify with and participate with the group that conforms to the Lord’s way. Values and standards that were once clear become clouded and uncertain. The norm of behavior begins to reflect this beclouding of true principles. Conduct that would once have caused revulsion and alarm now becomes somewhat commonplace. . . .

Within the framework of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Savior has provided a refuge from the evils of the world. Wherever a congregation or community of saints is found, there should be the sustaining influence of the gospel and the assurance that those who identify themselves as saints are applying themselves to gospel principles (The Book of Mormon: Alma, the Testimony of the Word, edited by Monte S. Nyman and Charles D Tate, Jr., 5, 8).

58 For the names of the righteous shall be written in the book of life, and unto them will I grant an inheritance at my right hand. And now, my brethren, what have ye to say against this? I say unto you, if ye speak against it, it matters not, for the word of God must be fulfilled.

verse 58 “the names of the righteous shall be written in the book of life”
See the commentary for the previous verse.

59 For what shepherd is there among you having many sheep doth not watch over them, that the wolves enter not and devour his flock? And behold, if a wolf enter his flock doth he not drive him out? Yea, and at the last, if he can, he will destroy him.

60 And now I say unto you that the good shepherd doth call after you; and if you will hearken unto his voice he will bring you into his fold, and ye are his sheep; and he commandeth you that ye suffer no ravenous wolf to enter among you, that ye may not be destroyed.

verses 59-60 Alma is not promising that belonging to the church or “fold” of the Savior will prevent us from having to contend with “wolves,” but he does promise that we will not be “devoured” or “destroyed.”

61 And now I, Alma, do command you in the language of him who hath commanded me, that ye observe to do the words which I have spoken unto you.

verse 61 Again, we learn that Alma was “assigned” or called to deliver this sermon by the Lord himself.

62 I speak by way of command unto you that belong to the church; and unto those who do not belong to the church I speak by way of invitation, saying: Come and be baptized unto repentance, that ye also may be partakers of the fruit of the tree of life.

verse 62 It is interesting to learn that Alma directed his writings in Alma 5 to members of the church as well as to those who were not members. Is his counsel pertinent to members of the Church today? Indeed, it is.

“partakers of the fruit of the tree of life” These will live with Christ forever. Christ is the tree of life. President David O. McKay has described a sublime personal vision which he beheld in a dream. He saw a beautiful city, the Savior, and a great concourse of people dressed in white. He said:

The city, I understood, was his. It was the City Eternal; and the people following him were to abide there in peace and eternal happiness. But who were they? As the Savior read my thoughts, he answered by pointing to a semicircle that then appeared above them, and on which were written in gold the words: These are they who have overcome the world—who have truly been born again! When I awoke, it was breaking day” (Cherished Experiences from the Life of President David O. McKay, 59-60).

Alma Chapter 6

Scripture Mastery

Alma 6:6 Alma commanded the people that they should join in fasting and mighty prayer in behalf of the welfare of the souls of those who knew not God.

1 And now it came to pass that after Alma had made an end of speaking unto the people of the church, which was established in the city of Zarahemla, he ordained priests and elders, by laying on his hands according to the order of God, to preside and watch over the church.

verse 1 “he ordained priests and elders” While it is clear that Alma ordained brethren to help lead the church, it is not clear that “priests” and “elders” were specific offices in the priesthood as we know them today. We do know that the Aaronic priesthood was not to be found among them (Joseph Fielding Smith, Doctrines of Salvation 3:87), thus the office of “priest” in Alma’s day was likely more akin to what we would term “high priest” today. These were priests of the higher or Melchizedek priesthood.

“The order of God” is the priesthood. Note that Alma ordained these men “by laying on his hands.”

2 And it came to pass that whosoever did not belong to the church who repented of their sins were baptized unto repentance, and were received into the church.

3 And it also came to pass that whosoever did belong to the church that did not repent of their wickedness and humble themselves before God—I mean those who were lifted up in the pride of their hearts—the same were rejected, and their names were blotted out, that their names were not numbered among those of the righteous.

verse 3 “the same were rejected, and their names were blotted out” Reference is made here to the practice of excommunication.

4 And thus they began to establish the order of the church in the city of Zarahemla.

verse 4 The “order of the church” refers to the authorized structure and procedures according to the priesthood.

Alma the Elder established his covenant community around 140 BC at the Waters of Mormon in the land of Nephi (Mosiah 18:17–18). When his group rejoined the Nephites in Zarahemla after 120 BC, King Mosiah “granted unto Alma that he might establish churches throughout all the land of Zarahemla; and gave him power to ordain priests and teachers over every church” (Mosiah 25:19) . Soon “there were seven churches in the land of Zarahemla” (Mosiah 25:23).

By about 83 BC, the very time of this verse, however, Alma the Younger had to once again “establish the order of the church in the city of Zarahemla.” A careful review of the many events leading up to this time of reordering explains why the church had to be reconstituted in Zarahemla so soon—only about 35 years after its founding there.

Initially, “many of the rising generation” in the land of Zarahemla had forgotten or “could not understand the words of king Benjamin” and several of them would not be baptized (Mosiah 26:1, 4). Dissensions arose “among the brethren,” and some people, eventually including Alma the Younger and the sons of Mosiah, “deceived many with their flattering words” (Mosiah 26:6; 27:8). Some dissenters were excommunicated (Mosiah 26:36), and the unbelievers began persecuting members of the church (Mosiah 27:1).

Alma the Elder took steps to “regulate all the affairs of the church” (Mosiah 26:37). King Mosiah issued a public proclamation prohibiting persecution of church members (Mosiah 27:2), and Alma required church members to esteem their neighbors as themselves (verses 3–4). These measures were effective for a while, but undercurrents continued to swirl. A turning point came when Alma the Younger and the sons of Mosiah were stunned by an angel of the Lord (verses 18–19). Being converted, they worked zealously among all of Mosiah’s people, trying “to repair all the injuries that they had done” (verse 35), but apparently not everyone was placated.

Amidst this stormy religious and political context, the sons of Mosiah slipped away for a fourteen-year missionary sojourn (Mosiah 28:9). Consequently, King Mosiah abdicated the kingship, a legal reform was adopted, and Alma the Younger, who was also the High Priest over the church, was installed as the first Chief Judge under the new legal regime (Mosiah 29:41). Also during this time, the Mulekites outnumbered the Nephites (Mosiah 25:5), thereby creating a significant political force.

Against this turbulent background, more serious troubles started with Nehor in the very first year of Alma’s reign (Alma 1:2). In conscious opposition to Alma, Nehor taught that all men would be saved without any intervention of an atonement, that the priests should be paid by the people, and he even “began to establish a church after the manner of his preaching” (verses 3–6).

Even though Nehor was soon executed for enforcing priestcraft by the sword (Alma 1:12), “this did not put an end to the spreading of priestcraft through the land.” In fact, it led to the persecution of “those that did belong to the church of God” (verses 16, 19, cf. verses 19–20). That persecution then led to more apostasy (verse 24).

Although church leaders made diligent efforts to restore order within the Church (Alma 1:28), Nehor’s disruption was only just the beginning. Four years later, a Nehorite disciple named Amlici was “intent to destroy the church of God” (Alma 2:4). His rebellion led to vicious armed conflicts (Alma 2–3). In the ensuing four years, the persecution against the church became so great that Alma felt compelled to give up the judgment seat to focus on the ministry (Alma 4:15–17).

At that point, Alma began by addressing the members of the church in Zarahemla (see Alma 5). In the wake of that very powerful speech, “he ordained priests and elders . . . to preside and watch over the church.” He received new converts and he excommunicated those who would not repent (Alma 6:1–3). In these ways, Alma the Younger “began establishing the order of the church in the city of Zarahemla” (verse 4).

These events during the early years of the reign of judges are reflective of many larger tensions going on within Zarahemla. Understanding these pressures is crucial because they shape and impact Nephite history for the next one hundred years. Alma successfully drew upon his personal and professional awareness of both sides of these political, social, legal, military, and religious pressures, as he wisely led his people and strengthened the church “according to the order of God” (Alma 6:1).

At the same time, Nephite society as a whole also was undergoing major transitions. Not only was there the change from kings to judges, but also a separation, to some degree, of church and state (On this separation, see Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical and Cultural Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 3:423–425), something that was uncommon in the ancient world. It was rare for a reason: it created societal strains that were difficult to manage within ancient worldviews. Stated simply, in archaic cultures, “there was no science separate from religion. All explanations of how the world worked were religious” (Ibid., 119).

LDS anthropologist Brother Brant A. Gardner saw the implications of this division at work here in Alma’s diverse and divided society: “Zarahemla housed two incompatible ways of viewing ‘reality,’ a conceptual split that was more divisive than two political parties. The tensions between these incompatible worldviews in Zarahemla . . . might be held in check for a while, but they begin to escalate over the next several years.” Nehor, Amlici, and the waves of apostasy they created are manifestations of these difficulties.

The prophet Alma recognized all these problems and took action accordingly. “Alma [was] trying to heal this ideological separation by converting the entire population to” the Lord’s way. Alma understood the best way to accomplish unity was through the gospel of Jesus Christ. So, he gave everyone in his land an equal opportunity to be able “to hear the word of God” (Alma 6:5). Thus, they each had “an equal chance throughout all the land . . . to answer for his own sins” (Mosiah 29:38).

While not everyone was converted, Alma and his priests and elders did have a measure of success, and “thus they began to establish the order of the church” again in Zarahemla (Alma 6:4). To enable this order as the Lord would have it, Alma commanded the faithful to “gather themselves together oft, and join in fasting and mighty prayer in behalf of the welfare of the souls of those who knew not God” (verse 6).

When carefully considered, valuable lessons for today can be found. First, while questions and struggles are the molecules of a stronger faith, antagonistic apostasy isn't simply an individual matter, but affects whole communities. The Lord promised that the Nephites would prosper in the land only as they were faithful, as a people. If a community, church, or country is not unified in their ideologies, rifts and conflicts in other areas are to be expected.

Another important lesson is that apostasy, whether individual or collective, does not happen in a vacuum. It is shaped and influenced by larger societal trends and cultural factors. Identifying the factors influencing people to leave the Church or abandon the gospel is crucial in stemming the tides of apostasy and in kindly and spiritually leading people back into the way of the Lord.

5 Now I would that ye should understand that the word of God was liberal unto all, that none were deprived of the privilege of assembling themselves together to hear the word of God.

verse 5 Here is a reminder that no sincere person, regardless of their social standing or any other categorization, is to be turned away from the congregations of the church.

6 Nevertheless the children of God were commanded that they should gather themselves together oft, and join in fasting and mighty prayer in behalf of the welfare of the souls of those who knew not God.

verse 6 “Oft” means often. The “children of God” here are members of the church. They are commanded to do some missionary work.

7 And now it came to pass that when Alma had made these regulations he departed from them, yea, from the church which was in the city of Zarahemla, and went over upon the east of the river Sidon, into the valley of Gideon, there having been a city built, which was called the city of Gideon, which was in the valley that was called Gideon, being called after the man who was slain by the hand of Nehor with the sword.

verse 7 For a model of the possible relationships between the city of Zarahemla, the River Sidon, and the valley of Gideon, see the Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands.

8 And Alma went and began to declare the word of God unto the church which was established in the valley of Gideon, according to the revelation of the truth of the word which had been spoken by his fathers, and according to the spirit of prophecy which was in him, according to the testimony of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who should come to redeem his people from their sins, and the holy order by which he was called. And thus it is written. Amen.

verse 8 Again, “the holy order by which he was called” refers to Alma’s priesthood.

Alma Chapter 7

The words of Alma which he delivered to the people in Gideon, according to his own record. Comprising chapter 7.

Just as Alma 5 was a record of the preachings of the prophet Alma to the people of Zarahemla, Alma 7 is Alma's teachings to the people of Gideon. For a model of the possible geographic relationship of the valley of Gideon to Zarahemla, see the Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands.

Scripture Mastery

Alma 7:11-12 (compare Hebrews 2:18) He suffered that he may know according to the flesh how to succor his people according to their infirmities.

Alma 7:23-24 I would that ye should be humble, submissive, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of patience, long-suffering, and temperate in all things.

1 Behold my beloved brethren, seeing that I have been permitted to come unto you, therefore I attempt to address you in my language; yea, by my own mouth, seeing that it is the first time that I have spoken unto you by the words of my mouth, I having been wholly confined to the judgment-seat, having had much business that I could not come unto you.

verse 1 The phrases “in my language” and “by my own mouth” have reference to Alma's having the opportunity to speak in person to the people in Gideon. Previously, any correspondence with these people had to be by letter.

2 And even I could not have come now at this time were it not that the judgment-seat hath been given to another, to reign in my stead; and the Lord in much mercy hath granted that I should come unto you.

3 And behold, I have come having great hopes and much desire that I should find that ye had humbled yourselves before God, and that ye had continued in the supplicating of his grace, that I should find that ye were blameless before him, that I should find that ye were not in the awful dilemma that our brethren were in at Zarahemla.

verse 3 “the supplicating of his grace” This is the only place in all the scriptures where this phrase is found. We might alternatively render this thought “the humble pleading for the redemptive power of his atonement to be extended to you.”

4 But blessed be the name of God, that he hath given me to know, yea, hath given unto me the exceedingly great joy of knowing that they are established again in the way of his righteousness.

verse 4 “They,” of course, refers to the people of Zarahemla. Alma’s teachings to the people of Zarahemla had borne fruit!

5 And I trust, according to the Spirit of God which is in me, that I shall also have joy over you; nevertheless I do not desire that my joy over you should come by the cause of so much afflictions and sorrow which I have had for the brethren at Zarahemla, for behold, my joy cometh over them after wading through much affliction and sorrow.

verse 5 Alma tells the people of Gideon in effect: I hope that here in Gideon I may see an already righteous people begin to perfect themselves, rather than having to see an unrighteous people endure the painful agony of repentance from grievous sins.

6 But behold, I trust that ye are not in a state of so much unbelief as were your brethren; I trust that ye are not lifted up in the pride of your hearts; yea, I trust that ye have not set your hearts upon riches and the vain things of the world; yea, I trust that you do not worship idols, but that ye do worship the true and living God, and that ye look forward for the remission of your sins, with an everlasting faith, which is to come.

verse 6 Alma’s “trust” in the people of Gideon has certainly been granted to him by personal revelation from the Spirit. He has discerned that these people are healthier spiritually than those in Zarahemla (see also verses 19-20).

The idol worship in Zarahemla to which Alma refers likely refers to the idols of worldliness—materialism, lust for power, lust for sexual satisfaction, etc.

7 For behold, I say unto you there be many things to come; and behold, there is one thing which is of more importance than they all—for behold, the time is not far distant that the Redeemer liveth and cometh among his people.

verse 7 “there is one thing which is of more importance than they all” This phrase refers to the mortal advent of Jesus. The very essence of the gospel is that Jesus Christ lives and that he is our Mediator. He stands ready to mercifully extend to us the fruits of his atoning sacrifice—he longs to forgive our sins and satisfy the law of justice as it applies to each of us (3 Nephi 27:13-16).

8 Behold, I do not say that he will come among us at the time of his dwelling in his mortal tabernacle; for behold, the Spirit hath not said unto me that this should be the case. Now as to this thing I do not know; but this much I do know, that the Lord God hath power to do all things which are according to his word.

verse 8 “Now as to this thing I do not know” Alma seems to be unsure as to exactly whether or not, or when, the Savior will appear to the people in the western hemisphere. He does feel that it will probably not be while the Savior is in his mortal condition. It is puzzling that Alma seems unclear on this point as the prophet Nephi had clearly taught that the resurrected Christ would appear to the Book of Mormon people (2 Nephi 26:1).

9 But behold, the Spirit hath said this much unto me, saying: Cry unto this people, saying—Repent ye, and prepare the way of the Lord, and walk in his paths, which are straight; for behold, the kingdom of heaven is at hand, and the Son of God cometh upon the face of the earth.

verse 9 Royal Skousen suggests that the original text of the Book of Mormon had “repent ye” repeated twice in this verse, but the second occurrence was accidentally deleted by the typesetter (See Royal Skousen, Analysis of Textual Variants of the Book of Mormon, Part Three: Mosiah 17–Alma 20, Provo, UT: FARMS, 2006, 1717. See also notes for Alma 7:19 on pp. 1724–1725).

“walk in his paths which are straight” Note that the paths of the Lord—the route by which we achieve our exaltation—are “straight” or undeviating. However, the gate through which we must enter the kingdom of heaven is “strait” which means narrow, strict, difficult to enter (Matthew 7:13-14; 3 Nephi 14:13-14; 27:33).

The use of the word straight (rather than strait) in this verse is appropriate and related to the word straight in Isaiah 40:3. See the supplemental article, Strait and Straight in the Book of Mormon.

“the kingdom of heaven is at hand” For a discussion of the possible meanings of this phrase, see the commentary for Alma 5:50. Here the reference seems to be to the beginning of Christ’s mortal ministry, though that is certainly an atypical usage of the phrase “kingdom of heaven.”

10 And behold, he shall be born of Mary, at Jerusalem which is the land of our forefathers, she being a virgin, a precious and chosen vessel, who shall be overshadowed and conceive by the power of the Holy Ghost, and bring forth a son, yea, even the Son of God.

verse 10 “he shall be born of Mary, at Jerusalem which is the land of our forefathers” Of course Joseph Smith knew that Jesus was born in the town of Bethlehem. In writing this particular sentence, has Joseph Smith made an error? This passage is not an error. In fact, it may well be another evidence that Joseph was the translator of the Book and not its author. Here Jerusalem is referred to as a land and not a city. It was the custom of the day to refer to the area surrounding a large city, such as Jerusalem as the land of Jerusalem. Any small town or village located near the major city was referred to as being in that city’s land. Thus, Bethlehem was located in the land of Jerusalem. Joseph Smith could not have known, from his study of the Bible, about this concept of lands and cities since it is not clearly elucidated in the Bible. Modern sources, however, have confirmed the fact that anciently the town of Bethlehem was considered to be located in the “land of Jerusalem” (John Bright, A History of Israel, 3rd edition, 221-22. See also Dan Barag, Israel Exploration Journal 29 [1979]:1997-217). A recently released text from the Dead Sea Scrolls, a text claiming to have originated in the days of Jeremiah (and, therefore, in Lehi’s time), says that the Jews of that period were “taken captive from the land of Jerusalem” (Robert Eisenman and Michael Wise, The Dead Sea Scrolls Uncovered [Shaftesbury, England: Element, 1992]: 57-58). Texts discovered earlier in the twentieth century seem to include Bethlehem within that “land.”

The expression “land of Jerusalem” is not found in the Bible. It is, however, found several times in the Book of Mormon (1 Nephi 3:9,10; 5:6; 7:2,7; 16:36; 17:14,20,22; 18:24; 2 Nephi 1:1,3,9,30; 25:11; Jacob 2:25,31,32; Omni 1:6; Mosiah 1:11; 2:4; 7:20; 10:12, etc.)

A similar situation in the Bible has actually been pointed out by an Evangelical scholar, Craig L. Blomberg (How Wide the Divide?, 46). There is a seeming discrepancy between Mark 5:1 (and Luke 8:26) and Matthew 8:28. Did Jesus exorcise the demoniac in the region of the Gadarenes or of the Gergesenes? Biblical scholars suggest that Jesus likely did minister in the area of Gadara, just east of the Galilee and the home of the Gadarenes, but that he did not reach as far east as Gerasa, the home of the Gergesenes, a city of Roman Arabia in the mountains of Gilead. Blomberg suggests that Jesus was likely near Khersa, a town that in Greek transliteration could easily turn into Gerasa, in the larger territory of Gadara named after the more prominent city by that name within the region. Thus, Mark (and Luke) likely used the name of a larger city Gadara to refer to the land surrounding it which included a smaller city, Khersa.

This passage also states that Jesus was born “at” Jerusalem not in Jerusalem. One definition of at is “close by” or “near.” Thus “at Jerusalem” might well mean “near Jerusalem.” See also the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:4.

“she being . . . a precious and chosen vessel” Please review the discussion of the scriptural word chosen in the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:19-20.

“who shall be overshadowed and conceive by the power of the Holy Ghost” We have previously learned that Jesus was conceived “after the manner of the flesh” (1 Nephi 11:18). Here we learn that as Mary miraculously conceived the Christ child, the Holy Ghost was in some way involved.

President Ezra Taft Benson taught: “The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints proclaims that Jesus Christ is the Son of God in the most literal sense. The body in which he performed his mission in the flesh was sired by that same holy being we worship as God, our Eternal Father. Jesus was not the son of Joseph, nor was he begotten by the Holy Ghost. He is the son of the Eternal Father!" (Come Unto Christ, 4).

11 And he shall go forth, suffering pains and afflictions and temptations of every kind; and this that the word might be fulfilled which saith he will take upon him the pains and the sicknesses of his people.

verse 11 "And he shall go forth, suffering pains and afflictions and temptations of every kind" Elder Neil A. Maxwell taught: "Can we, even in the depths of disease, tell him anything at all about suffering? . . . The very weight of our combined sins caused him to descend below all. We have never been, nor will we be, in depths such as he has known. Thus, his [life and his] atonement made perfect his empathy and his mercy and his capacity to succor us, for which we can be everlastingly grateful as he tutors us in our trials" (Even As I Am, 116). It is certainly also true that we can teach him nothing about temptations.

"and this that the word might be fulfilled which saith he will take upon him the pains and the sicknesses of his people" Alma seems to be quoting the prophecy of a previous prophet. Who is that prophet? The gospel writer Matthew will identify him as "Esaias." Matthew wrote: "That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses" (Matthew 8:17). Esaias is the New Testament form of Isaiah. Isaiah wrote of the future Messiah: "Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows" (Isaiah 53:4, Mosiah 14:4).

Brother Thomas A. Wayment has postulated that Alma 7:11, Isaiah 53:4, and Matthew 8:17 were all taken from the identical Hebrew text. He further postulates that Alma 7:11 was taken from the brass plates version of Isaiah which he feels must have been written in Hebrew. There is some feeling that some of the materials on the brass plates of Laban were written in some form of Egyptian (see Mosiah 1:3-4 and the commentary for those verses). Brother Wayment, a Hebraist, has made the most interesting observation that of the three scriptural quotations, the one which most accurately reflects the original Hebrew is Alma 7:11. He concludes that Joseph Smith used neither the KJV of Isaiah or the KJV of Matthew in writing Alma 7:11. Rather he translated the Hebrew from the brass plates ("The Hebrew Text of Alma 7:11," Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, 2005, 14:98). This suggests that some of the materials on the brass plates was written in Hebrew.

While the speculative assumption has been made that Joseph Smith utilized his KJV in making the larger block quotes from the scriptures from Isaiah and Malachi, and writing them into the Book of Mormon (Daniel H. Ludlow, A Companion to Your Study of the Book of Mormon, 141-42), we actually have no direct evidence whatever that he ever used his KJV Bible. It is notable, however, that when this same quotation discussed in the previous paragraph appears in the Book of Mormon a second time (Mosiah 14:4), a translation identical to the KJV is given. This does support the supposition that the KJV made have played some role in the translation of the Book of Mormon.

12 And he will take upon him death, that he may loose the bands of death which bind his people; and he will take upon him their infirmities, that his bowels may be filled with mercy, according to the flesh, that he may know according to the flesh how to succor his people according to their infirmities.

verse 12 “he will take upon him death, that he may loose the bands of death which bind his people” To review: The fall of man has a dual nature or two major and quite separate aspects.

1. Because of Adam’s transgression in the garden, all mankind suffers a temporary spiritual death—that is, man is separated from God—and a temporary physical death—each man will eventually die wherein his spirit will separate from this body.

2. Because of a man’s own sins, the law of justice dictates he will suffer a “permanent” spiritual death.

Two specific benefits each man derives from Jesus’s atonement are: (1) Through his experience in Gethsemane and on the cross, Jesus qualified himself to completely and unconditionally absolve each man from the effects of Adam’s transgression. (2) Also, he earned the right to forgive each man of his sins, on condition of that man’s repentance, thus giving him the opportunity to be redeemed from his self-induced spiritual death.

“he will take upon him their infirmities, that his bowels may be filled with mercy” Here is a little known yet most precious doctrine and another specific benefit obtained by each man through Jesus’s atonement. Jesus suffered the agony of the atonement, not only that he might forgive the sins of all mankind but also in order that his own empathy and compassion for his brothers and sisters might be perfected! Regardless of what we are called upon to suffer in this life, he hears our cries and understands our vicissitudes because of his own personal experience in Gethsemane and on the cross. And regardless of the depths to which a man might sink—in despair, suffering, pain, remorse, fear or any other extreme of the human experience—Jesus has qualified himself to fully understand, to succor, and to comfort. He will never ask any of us to suffer any adversity that he has not suffered himself. The compassion and empathy which Jesus has for us as we suffer the travail of this mortal life is not the abstract compassion and empathy of a sinless individual who would never so suffer. Rather, it is the compassion and empathy of one who has suffered more than all of us. We cannot teach him a thing about suffering! For a more detailed discussion of this topic see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 19, The Essence of the Lord’s Atonement.

“that he may know according to the flesh how to succor his people according to their infirmities” The phrase “according to the flesh” is rich with meaning. It generally denotes the conditions and laws that govern in mortality (see 1 Nephi 19:6; 22:18, 27; 2 Nephi 2:8, 27; 9:53; 10:2; 31:7). In this particular verse, the phrase has even richer meaning. Here Alma uses the phrase to teach that cognitive understanding was not sufficient for Christ to accomplish the atonement. He had to actually experience “according to the flesh” the suffering, pain, afflictions, and temptations of every kind so that he would know by his own experience how to best help and judge his people.

Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines succor as, “Literally, to run to, or run to support; hence to help or relieve when in difficulty, want or distress; to assist and deliver from suffering.” One of the blessings of the atonement is that we can receive of the Savior’s succoring. Isaiah spoke repeatedly of the Lord’s healing, calming influence. He testified that the Savior was “a strength to the needy in his distress, a refuge from the storm, a shadow from the heat” (Isaiah 25:4). As to those who sorrow, Isaiah declared that the Savior possessed the power to “comfort all that mourn” (Isaiah 61:2), and “wipe away tears from off all faces” (Isaiah 25:8; see also Revelation 7:17); “revive the spirit of the humble” (Isaiah 57:15); and “bind up the brokenhearted” (Isaiah 61:1; see also Luke 4:18; Psalm 147:3). So expansive was his succoring power that he could exchange “beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness” (Isaiah 61:3).

His spirit heals; it refines; it comforts; it breathes new life into hopeless hearts. It has the power to transform all that is ugly and vicious and worthless in life to something of supreme and glorious splendor. He has the power to convert the ashes of mortality to the beauties of eternity. So sweeping is the Savior’s healing balm that Isaiah promised, “Sorrow and sighing shall flee away” (Isaiah 35:10). While the Savior knew all things in the Spirit (Alma 7:13), he also came to know the pains, infirmities, and temptations of man as experienced in the flesh. He never allowed godly power to insulate him when he walked the path of mortals. He chose to let every pain and affliction and weakness of man traverse and engulf his physical frame.

Elder Neal A. Maxwell gave this insight into the relationship between the atonement and the Savior’s succoring powers: “His empathy and capacity to succor us—in our own sicknesses, temptations, or sins—were demonstrated and perfected in the process of the great atonement” (Plain and Precious Things, 99). He also said, “The marvelous atonement brought about not only the immortality but also the final perfection of Jesus’s empathetic and helping capacity” (Ibid., 42). Subsequent to the atonement, he was able to comfort with empathy, not merely with sympathy.

13 Now the Spirit knoweth all things; nevertheless the Son of God suffereth according to the flesh that he might take upon him the sins of his people, that he might blot out their transgressions according to the power of his deliverance; and now behold, this is the testimony which is in me.

verse 13 “the Spirit knoweth all things; nevertheless the Son of God suffereth according to the flesh that he might take upon him the sins of his people” The “Spirit” referred to here is not the Holy Ghost. Rather it is the Spirit of the Son of God. The pre-mortal Jesus Christ, who lived with a spirit body, was the great Jehovah, the God of the Old Testament, and as such knew “all things.” Yet, he still needed to come to earth and experience some things first hand “according to the flesh.”

“his people” Alma will define this blessed group in the three following verses 14-16.

14 Now I say unto you that ye must repent, and be born again; for the Spirit saith if ye are not born again ye cannot inherit the kingdom of heaven; therefore come and be baptized unto repentance, that ye may be washed from your sins, that ye may have faith on the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sins of the world, who is mighty to save and to cleanse from all unrighteousness.

verse 14 “if ye are not born again ye cannot inherit the kingdom of heaven” For a review of the process of being “born again,” see Baptism, the Ordinance that Bring’s Spiritual Growth, in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 18.

15 Yea, I say unto you come and fear not, and lay aside every sin, which easily doth beset you, which doth bind you down to destruction, yea, come and go forth, and show unto your God that ye are willing to repent of your sins and enter into a covenant with him to keep his commandments, and witness it unto him this day by going into the waters of baptism.

16 And whosoever doeth this, and keepeth the commandments of God from thenceforth, the same will remember that I say unto him, yea, he will remember that I have said unto him, he shall have eternal life, according to the testimony of the Holy Spirit, which testifieth in me.

17 And now my beloved brethren, do you believe these things? Behold, I say unto you, yea, I know that ye believe them; and the way that I know that ye believe them is by the manifestation of the Spirit which is in me. And now because your faith is strong concerning that, yea, concerning the things which I have spoken, great is my joy.

verse 17 Note here the method used by the master teacher Alma. After bearing testimony to the people of Gideon, he felt the Spirit come upon his audience. He then bore their testimony back to them. Elder W. Grant Bangerter taught: “We need confidence in the Holy Ghost; believe in him and expect his presence . . . and be able to help others to feel the influence that he brings. One of our great missionaries said: I bear them my testimony. Then I bear them their testimony. And then I have them bear their testimony back to me. That's the process" (CR, [April 1980], 65-68).

18 For as I said unto you from the beginning, that I had much desire that ye were not in the state of dilemma like your brethren, even so I have found that my desires have been gratified.

verse 18 Early in his sermon to the people of Gideon, Alma had told them that he hoped and desired they were more righteous than their Nephite brethren in the land of Zarahemla had been when Alma first preached to them (verses 3-6). In the course of speaking to the people of Gideon, Alma has learned through the medium of the Holy Spirit that what he had hoped was in fact the case—"my desires have been gratified."

19 For I perceive that ye are in the paths of righteousness; I perceive that ye are in the path which leads to the kingdom of God; yea, I perceive that ye are making his paths straight.

verse 19 The people of the city of Gideon were "not in a state of so much unbelief as were [their] brethren" in Zarahemla (Alma 7:6). Hence, in Alma 7, the Chief Priest Alma delivered words that spoke openly to the people of Gideon about the paths of the Lord and the coming of the Son of God. In speaking profoundly and prophetically, Alma alludes to three uses of the word "path" from the Israelite temple tradition found especially in the Psalms and in Isaiah: (1) that these people "are in the paths of righteousness," the paths that lead to him (2) that they are walking "in the path which leads to the kingdom of God"—the path or sacred way that leads to the temple and (3) that they are "making [God's] paths straight"—the path that the Lord will use in coming upon the face of the earth.

These three images of the "paths" or "ways" evoke strong biblical precedents and relevant spiritual messages:

"paths of righteousness" This phrase is found once in the Bible, in Psalm 23:3. The only other place it appears besides here in verse 19 and Psalm 23:3 is in 1 Nephi 16:5. The unforgettable Psalm 23 praises the Lord as the personal Shepherd who "restoreth my soul and leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake." This path leads back to him.

"the path which leads to the kingdom of God" This path, which leads to the kingdom of God, is likely a recollection of, or a reference to, the ancient path that led to the temple in Jerusalem. See, for example, Psalm 84:5. Why would Alma have wanted the people in the city of Gideon to remember to be "in the path" or on the road that leads to the temple and the kingdom of God. At the time that Alma spoke to the people in Gideon, he had only recently stepped down from being the Chief Judge and was now focusing his efforts solely on his position and authority as the High Priest in the church and temple of God in the land of Zarahemla (Alma 4:17-18). Thus, he commends these people, living in a valley some distance from Zarahemla, for journeying to the holy temple in Zarahemla.

“ye are making his paths straight” The highway to Zion, or to the temple of Jerusalem, was also the path that Jehovah was to take as he came to Jerusalem to save (or after he had saved) his people. The people of the land were expected to build up this path in preparation for his coming.

What exactly does it mean to make “straight” the paths of the Lord? The practice of preparing paths or roads for the victorious advance of a conqueror or king by clearing them of obstacles was certainly known anciently. As we live the gospel and urge others to do the same, we prepare the earth for the Savior’s triumphal return to the earth. The scriptures contain several examples of prophetic counsel warning us to “make straight” the pathway of the Lord (Isaiah 40:3; Matthew 3:5; Mark 1:3; Luke 3:4). We are also counseled to make the “crooked” or uneven paths “straight” or unobstructed (Luke 3:5).

The use of the word straight in this verse is appropriate and related to the word straight in Isaiah 40:3. See the supplemental article, Strait and Straight in the Book of Mormon.

The passage that Alma likely had in mind when he used this phrase in here in verse 19 (“making his paths straight”) is Isaiah 40:3–4: “The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God. Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain.”

Here in Gideon Alma directly discloses that the Son of God “shall be born of Mary at Jerusalem, which is the land of our forefathers,” and then reveals information about the temptations, death, and atoning sacrifice that Jesus would perform there in the land of Jerusalem (Alma 7:10-13). Just as the prophetic highway led to the temple, Alma then welcomed all the worthy people of Gideon to come unto the Lord, to be baptized, washed, saved, and cleansed, to lay aside every sin and enter into a covenant to keep the commandments. They were expected to hear the words that they “shall have eternal life” (Alma 7:14-16). Alma wanted the people of Gideon to have confidence and faith that they had found that path, were being led by the Good Shepherd, and that they were helping to prepare the way both for the coming of the Lord and for others to follow that path.

20 I perceive that it has been made known unto you, by the testimony of his word, that he cannot walk in crooked paths; neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; neither hath he a shadow of turning from the right to the left, or from that which is right to that which is wrong; therefore, his course is one eternal round.

verse 20 “his course is one eternal round” Alma perceives that the people of Gideon have been taught by the Spirit of God the vital concept that “his course is one eternal round.” This is a vital and rich concept: God is absolutely dependable and constant, as is his law. We are governed by his law. It is absolute, completely reliable, unvarying, and its consequences are inescapable. For every action there is an identical result. These results follow without respect to person. It has always been thus in Adam’s day, just as in ours, and in the eternities to come. Thus, “the course of the Lord is one eternal round.”

An alternate explanation has been offered for this phrase. We belong to “one round” of the Father’s creations. This includes our earth and the innumerable worlds created by Jehovah. It also includes Jesus as our Savior and will include all things in our post mortal world. After this round of creation, the Father will organize another, and another, etc.

21 And he doth not dwell in unholy temples; neither can filthiness or anything which is unclean be received into the kingdom of God; therefore I say unto you the time shall come, yea, and it shall be at the last day, that he who is filthy shall remain in his filthiness.

verse 21 “he doth not dwell in unholy temples” The Spirit of the Lord will not abide with those who are guilty of sin.

“neither can filthiness or anything which is unclean be received into the kingdom of God” Here is a simple restatement of the law of justice spoken of in the introduction to Alma chapter 5 (see 1 Nephi 15:34; Alma 11:37).

“he who is filthy shall remain in his filthiness” This is a reference to the sons of perdition.

22 And now my beloved brethren, I have said these things unto you that I might awaken you to a sense of your duty to God, that ye may walk blameless before him, that ye may walk after the holy order of God, after which ye have been received.

verse 22 “that ye may walk after the holy order of God, after which ye have been received” That you may abide by the principles of the Melchizedek priesthood by which you are governed.

23 And now I would that ye should be humble, and be submissive and gentle; easy to be entreated; full of patience and long-suffering; being temperate in all things; being diligent in keeping the commandments of God at all times; asking for whatsoever things ye stand in need, both spiritual and temporal; always returning thanks unto God for whatsoever things ye do receive.

verse 23 “easy to be entreated” To entreat is to earnestly ask for something; to beseech; to beg; to make an earnest request or petition. Here this phrase means that when the Lord implores us to live the gospel and obey the commandments, we are readily submissive; eager to respond; willing to grant what is desired—responsive to the Lord's commands.

24 And see that ye have faith, hope, and charity, and then ye will always abound in good works.

verses 23-24 These wonderful verses describes the “fruits of the Spirit”—the characteristics of the individual who has been “born of the Spirit.” See “The Fruits of Faith” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 11, Other Notes on Faith. See also a detailed discussion of the concept of charity in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapters 6, Charity as Empathy, and 7, Charity as a Revealed Sense of Others.

verses 25-27 Before Alma leaves the people of Gideon, he will establish the priesthood order of the church among them (Alma 8:1). Additionally, because of these people's relative righteousness, he is able to pronounce upon them a special blessing contained in these verses.

25 And may the Lord bless you, and keep your garments spotless, that ye may at last be brought to sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and the holy prophets who have been ever since the world began, having your garments spotless even as their garments are spotless, in the kingdom of heaven to go no more out.

verse 25 As a person undergoes the sanctifying “baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost,” he becomes a little more like God. It is said that his “garments are made white or spotless.” Not only will such a person be worthy to enjoy the company of the great prophets of the earth, but he will be confident and comfortable in their presence as well (D&C 121:45).

“to go no more out” This expression is unique to the Book of Mormon (see also Alma 34:36; Helaman 3:30; and 3 Nephi 28:40) and means, of course, to dwell in the celestial heaven for eternity.

26 And now my beloved brethren, I have spoken these words unto you according to the Spirit which testifieth in me; and my soul doth exceedingly rejoice, because of the exceeding diligence and heed which ye have given unto my word.

27 And now, may the peace of God rest upon you, and upon your houses and lands, and upon your flocks and herds, and all that you possess, your women and your children, according to your faith and good works, from this time forth and forever. And thus I have spoken. Amen.

verse 27 “the peace of God” A genuine confidence in one's eternal future is associated with an incomparable peace of mind. This is an earned blessing or fruit of the Spirit which comes to those who are spiritually born again. It is related, if not identical, to the gift of hope. Possessed with this peace an individual is able to face not only the vicissitudes of life with calm and perspective, but he can anticipate his own death with eagerness and excitement rather than with fear and uncertainty. The Savior spoke of this blessing: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid" (John 14:27).

Alma Chapter 8

Scripture Mastery

Alma 8-15 The ministry of Alma and Amulek

Alma 8:10 When Alma was rejected in Ammonihah, he labored much in the spirit, wrestling with God in mighty prayer.

1 And now it came to pass that Alma returned from the land of Gideon, after having taught the people of Gideon many things which cannot be written, having established the order of the church, according as he had before done in the land of Zarahemla, yea, he returned to his own house at Zarahemla to rest himself from the labors which he had performed.

verse 1 “having taught the people of Gideon many things which cannot be written” Why could Mormon not write these things? It seems likely that he chose not to record some of Alma’s teachings because of practical considerations such as time or limited space on the plates. His abridgment of the “large plates of Nephi” was certainly a constant process of discerning and prioritizing. It is also possible that some of Alma’s teachings to the good people of Gideon included such sacred truths that Mormon was constrained not to include them. Isn’t it tantalizing and exciting to ponder over additional spiritual truths that one day may be made available to us?

“having established the order of the church” Generally speaking the Book of Mormon text tells us little about the organization of the Nephite church (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 6:2).

“he returned to his own house at Zarahemla to rest himself” Modern scripture wisely counsels us: “Do not run faster or labor more than you have strength” (D&C 10:4; Mosiah 4:27).

2 And thus ended the ninth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi.

3 And it came to pass in the commencement of the tenth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi, that Alma departed from thence and took his journey over into the land of Melek, on the west of the river Sidon, on the west by the borders of the wilderness.

verse 3 It is helpful to have in mind a plausible geographic model as we follow the travels of Alma. For a suggestion as to the “lay of the land,” see the Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands.

“on the west by the borders of the wilderness” The reader should keep in mind that the word borders may refer to boundary lines or it may refer to mountains (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 2:5).

4 And he began to teach the people in the land of Melek according to the holy order of God, by which he had been called; and he began to teach the people throughout all the land of Melek.

5 And it came to pass that the people came to him throughout all the borders of the land which was by the wilderness side. And they were baptized throughout all the land;

6 So that when he had finished his work at Melek he departed thence, and traveled three days' journey on the north of the land of Melek; and he came to a city which was called Ammonihah.

verse 6 Alma arrives at the fourth city on his missionary travels. This will be the most difficult city which he will encounter on his missionary journey.

7 Now it was the custom of the people of Nephi to call their lands, and their cities, and their villages, yea, even all their small villages, after the name of him who first possessed them; and thus it was with the land of Ammonihah.

verse 7 A statement on Mesoamerica by the 16th-century Mexican author Fernando de Alva Ixtlilxochitl is pertinent in this context: “In each place where the Chichimecatl settled, whether it be a large city or a small village, it was their custom to name it according to the first king or leader who possessed the land. . . . This custom was prevalent in naming other cities and villages throughout the land” (Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon, Joseph L. Allen, 41). See the commentary for Alma 4:17.

The record is silent about the first possessor of the land of Ammonihah whose name was apparently Ammonihah. See the supplemental article, Names in the Book of Mormon.

8 And it came to pass that when Alma had come to the city of Ammonihah he began to preach the word of God unto them.

verse 8 The city of Ammonihah has particular significance. It was likely the center of a school of religious and political thought—the order of the Nehors (Alma 14:16; 15:15). Its founder was Nehor the man who introduced priestcraft among the Nephites (Alma 1:1-16). For a review of the concept of “priestcraft” see the commentary on Alma 1:12 and 2 Nephi 10:5. Members of this order were purveyors of priestcraft and the arch-enemies of religious truth. We have met or will yet meet additional individuals belonging to this same order including Amlici (Alma 2), Zeezrom (Alma 11-15), Korihor (Alma 30), and Amalickiah (Alma 46). All of these individuals were learned in language, and they attempted to lead the people astray. They denied Christ and denied that any prophet can foretell the future (Alma 21:8). They believed that every priest and teacher ought not to labor with their hands but rather ought to be supported by the people (Alma

1:3). They believed that all people would be saved and hence there was no need for repentance (Alma 1:4; 15:15; 21:6). Apparently, this order was popular among the Mulekites—particularly their learned and professional class (see Alma 14:18), though doubtless this order included many also of Nephite ancestry.” These are the people who feel that the people should be governed by a king and not by the common people. They are the elite, the learned, the sophisticated, the aristocracy, those who seek for power. This religious order will later be given another name—the “king-men” (Alma 51:5). The common people who rise up against this malignant political movement will later be called the “freemen” (Alma 51:6). The conflict between people of these two movements will continue throughout the Book of Mormon and will yet be one of the most important factors that result in the destruction of the Nephite people.

9 Now Satan had gotten great hold upon the hearts of the people of the city of Ammonihah; therefore they would not hearken unto the words of Alma.

10 Nevertheless Alma labored much in the spirit, wrestling with God in mighty prayer, that he would pour out his Spirit upon the people who were in the city; that he would also grant that he might baptize them unto repentance.

verse 10 This verse is a model for all missionaries who may have been called to work under difficult circumstances or who find little success.

11 Nevertheless, they hardened their hearts, saying unto him: Behold, we know that thou art Alma; and we know that thou art high priest over the church which thou hast established in many parts of the land, according to your tradition; and we are not of thy church, and we do not believe in such foolish traditions.

verse 11 “they hardened their hearts” See the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

12 And now we know that because we are not of thy church we know that thou hast no power over us; and thou hast delivered up the judgment-seat unto Nephihah; therefore thou art not the chief judge over us.

verses 11-12 The Mulekites were the dominant culture in Ammonihah. Notice the evidences of the rift that still exists between the Nephites and the Mulekites: “according to your tradition . . . we do not believe in such foolish traditions” and “we are not of thy church” (italics added). It is interesting to note that while they have openly disavowed the church, they still seem to recognize, at least publicly, the secular authority of the chief judge over them. We will learn that this “lip service” was probably offered to hide their seditious intentions (see verse 17). Generally speaking, they were not supportive of the idea of a chief judge, as predominantly they were “king men” and preferred to be ruled by a king.

13 Now when the people had said this, and withstood all his words, and reviled him, and spit upon him, and caused that he should be cast out of their city, he departed thence and took his journey towards the city which was called Aaron.

14 And it came to pass that while he was journeying thither, being weighed down with sorrow, wading through much tribulation and anguish of soul, because of the wickedness of the people who were in the city of Ammonihah, it came to pass while Alma was thus weighed down with sorrow, behold an angel of the Lord appeared unto him, saying:

verse 14 “an angel of the Lord appeared unto him” This is the same angel who appeared to Alma when Alma was converted (see the following verse). At least ten years had elapsed since Alma’s miraculous conversion.

15 Blessed art thou, Alma; therefore, lift up thy head and rejoice, for thou hast great cause to rejoice; for thou hast been faithful in keeping the commandments of God from the time which thou receivedst thy first message from him. Behold, I am he that delivered it unto you.

verse 15 This marvelous message of comfort was certainly needed by the discouraged Alma.

16 And behold, I am sent to command thee that thou return to the city of Ammonihah, and preach again unto the people of the city; yea, preach unto them. Yea, say unto them, except they repent the Lord God will destroy them.

verse 16 The message which the angel commanded Alma to deliver to the people of Ammonihah was a simple one: Repent or be spiritually damned and temporally destroyed! Clearly, the Lord intended that Alma’s preaching serve as a witness against this wicked people.

17 For behold, they do study at this time that they may destroy the liberty of thy people, (for thus saith the Lord) which is contrary to the statutes, and judgments, and commandments which he has given unto his people.

verse 17 As has been mentioned previously, many of the people of Ammonihah were “after the order and faith of Nehor” (Alma 14:16) or “of the profession of Nehor.” At this particular time they were actually plotting the political overthrow of the other Nephites.

Apparently, the Lord had given to the Nephite people “statutes,” “judgments,” and “commandments” urging them to be submissive to the righteous secular authority placed over them. Why are three different words used here in referring to the Nephite secular law (“statutes,” “judgments,” and “commandments”)? See the commentary for 2 Nephi 5:10.

18 Now it came to pass that after Alma had received his message from the angel of the Lord he returned speedily to the land of Ammonihah. And he entered the city by another way, yea, by the way which is on the south of the city of Ammonihah.

verse 18 Alma's face was known to many of the people of Ammonihah. He had to sneak back into the city.

19 And as he entered the city he was an hungered, and he said to a man: Will ye give to an humble servant of God something to eat?

20 And the man said unto him: I am a Nephite, and I know that thou art a holy prophet of God, for thou art the man whom an angel said in a vision: Thou shalt receive. Therefore, go with me into my house and I will impart unto thee of my food; and I know that thou wilt be a blessing unto me and my house.

verse 20 "I am a Nephite" Why did Amulek identify himself in this manner? Shouldn't it have been obvious to Alma? After all, Ammonihah was a Nephite city under Nephite control (verses 11-12, 24) in the land of Zarahemla. We might expect that it would have been largely inhabited by Nephites. If this were the case, we would not expect Amulek to say, "I am a Nephite." Clearly Amulek had recognized Alma as a Nephite, either by his speech, his appearance, or the content of his conversation. To what other social or ethnic category might Amulek have belonged? Amulek's statement makes sense only if most of the people of Ammonihah were not Nephites and also if Amulek's characteristics did not make it already apparent to Alma that he was a Nephite.

One possibility is that Amulek wanted Alma to know that he was a Nephite and not a Mulekite. Even though people of Mulekite origin who inhabited Ammonihah (see the commentary for verse 9) would have been loosely categorized as Nephites, they obviously did not really consider themselves Nephites in every sense. Another possibility is that Ammonihah was inhabited by a large number of unnamed people who were native to the land at the time the Lehites landed. For a discussion of this possibility, see the supplemental article, Book of Mormon Myths (see particularly myth number five).

21 And it came to pass that the man received him into his house; and the man was called Amulek; and he brought forth bread and meat and set before Alma.

22 And it came to pass that Alma ate bread and was filled; and he blessed Amulek and his house, and he gave thanks unto God.

verse 22 Today Latter-day Saints and other modern Christians are accustomed to offering a blessing before meals. Yet, "In Judaism, while a brief blessing is recited before eating, a series of longer blessings . . . follows the meal." It is "a central feature of the liturgical service in the Jewish home" (Michael Berenbaum and Fred Skolnik, eds., “Grace after Meals,” Encyclopaedia Judaica, 2nd edition, 26 vols., Detroit, MI: Macmillan Reference, 2007, 8:22).

In 1997, Angela M. Crowell and John A. Tvedtnes explained that in Jewish tradition different blessings were intended to be provided by the Lord after the consumption of bread. Also separate blessings, were offered following the consumption of other foods (Angela M. Crowell and John A. Tvedtnes, “Notes and Communications—The Nephite and Jewish Practice of Blessing God after Eating One’s Fill,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 6, no. 2, 1997: 252).

The practice is found in the Mishnah, which is the “Oral Torah,” first written around AD 200, and believed to contain much older oral traditions. It is also found among the Dead Sea Scrolls. The Jewish book of Jubilees (ca. 161–140 BC) even depicts the patriarchs engaging in the practice. The basis for the practice is found in Deuteronomy 8:10, which reads: “When thou hast eaten and art full, then thou shalt bless the Lord thy God for the good land which he hath given thee.”

Against this background, it is clear that Alma the high priest pronounced a blessing upon Amulek and his household because Amulek had fed and filled him. In contrast, it is interesting that, in a later Jewish story, “when Rabbi Zadok ate only a small portion of food, he didn’t say the blessing afterward, probably because Deuteronomy 8:10 calls for a blessing only if one has eaten and is full” (Crowell and Tvedtnes, “The Nephite and Jewish Practice of Blessing God after Eating One’s Fill,” 252, emphasis added). The Book of Mormon specifically says, “Alma ate bread and was filled” before he gave his blessing (Alma 8:22).

As the High Priest, Alma showed here his ample awareness of the law in Deuteronomy. In Deuteronomy, blessing the Lord after “thou hast eaten and art full” is mentioned as an expression of gratitude for leading the Israelites “into a good land” (Deuteronomy 8:7–10). For Alma, the expression came after the Lord had led him to Amulek, allowing Alma to find a safe haven in a land which had previously rejected him (Alma 8:14–22). In both settings, the blessing is an expression of gratitude and thanks for the Lord’s blessings of safety and prosperity.

The Savior followed a similar pattern during his first day among the Nephites at the temple in Bountiful. As the sacrament was administered to the people there in 3 Nephi 18, “they were filled” (verse 9), after which Jesus “blessed” them (verses 10, 14). He then taught them to keep the Father’s commandments and to pray always to the Father in the name of Jesus Christ (verses 14–20), so that their wives and children “may be blessed” (verse 21).

Finally, on the next day, the sacrament was again administered unto the people, and they “were filled with the Spirit; and they did cry out with one voice, and gave glory to Jesus, whom they both saw and heard” (3 Nephi 20:9) (John W. Welch, “From Presence to Practice: Jesus, the Sacrament Prayers, the Priesthood, and Church Discipline in 3 Nephi 18 and Moroni 2–6,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 5, no. 1, 1996: 134). Following that, the Savior went on to confirm in even richer abundance a host of blessings upon the people. These included: that the Father had given them their land for their inheritance (verse 14) and that God will establish and bless his people with his presence (verse 21–22). He also gave them the blessing of Abraham by which “all the kindreds of the earth [shall] be blessed” (verse 25).

Jesus then further “bless[ed them] in turning away every one ... from his iniquities” (3 Nephi 20:26), and after being so “blessed,” the people were ultimately “blessed—unto the pouring out of the Holy Ghost” to make them mighty through the fullness of the everlasting gospel (verse 27). It is possible that Mormon recognized the similar pattern found in 3 Nephi 18 and 20 and took delight in retaining this seemingly insignificant detail in Alma 8:22 as an allusion to the messianic pattern.

23 And after he had eaten and was filled he said unto Amulek: I am Alma, and am the high priest over the church of God throughout the land.

24 And behold, I have been called to preach the word of God among all this people, according to the spirit of revelation and prophecy; and I was in this land and they would not receive me, but they cast me out and I was about to set my back towards this land forever.

verse 24 “according to the spirit of revelation and prophecy” Alma’s priesthood calling was to preach the word by the power of the Holy Ghost.

Note the colorful expression “I was about to set my back towards this land forever.” It is found in no other place in all the scriptures.

25 But behold, I have been commanded that I should turn again and prophesy unto this people, yea, and to testify against them concerning their iniquities.

26 And now, Amulek, because thou hast fed me and taken me in, thou art blessed; for I was an hungered, for I had fasted many days.

verse 26 Do you suppose Alma had “fasted many days” on purpose for spiritual reasons, or had he gone without food because none had been offered to him? Perhaps the latter applies especially considering the reception he encountered in Ammonihah.

27 And Alma tarried many days with Amulek before he began to preach unto the people.

verse 27 Doubtless these “many days” were spent in tutoring Amulek. We will learn in Alma 10:6 that these “many days” were less than a month. Alma first encountered Amulek on the fourth day of the seventh month, and they went out preaching the same month.

28 And it came to pass that the people did wax more gross in their iniquities.

29 And the word came to Alma, saying: Go; and also say unto my servant Amulek, go forth and prophesy unto this people, saying—Repent ye, for thus saith the Lord, except ye repent I will visit this people in mine anger; yea, and I will not turn my fierce anger away.

30 And Alma went forth, and also Amulek, among the people, to declare the words of God unto them; and they were filled with the Holy Ghost.

verse 30 Alma and Amulek benefited from the gifts and powers of the Spirit as they preached. These might well have included personal revelation, discernment, and a feeling of charity or Christ-like love for the people. We will learn in the following verse that these also included marvelous physical powers.

31 And they had power given unto them, insomuch that they could not be confined in dungeons; neither was it possible that any man could slay them; nevertheless they did not exercise their power until they were bound in bands and cast into prison. Now, this was done that the Lord might show forth his power in them.

verse 31 Mormon previews a miraculous event that will be described in Alma 14:26-29.

32 And it came to pass that they went forth and began to preach and to prophesy unto the people, according to the spirit and power which the Lord had given them.

Alma Chapter 9

The words of Alma, and also the words of Amulek, which were declared unto the people who were in the land of Ammonihah. And also they are cast into prison, and delivered by the miraculous power of God which was in them, according to the record of Alma. Comprising chapters 9 to 14 inclusive.

1 And again, I, Alma, having been commanded of God that I should take Amulek and go forth and preach again unto this people, or the people who were in the city of Ammonihah, it came to pass as I began to preach unto them, they began to contend with me, saying:

verse 1 Note that Alma is now speaking in the first person. It is likely that Mormon is quoting directly from Alma's record.

verses 2-4 To this point, we have no record of what specific messages Alma might have preached to the people of Ammonihah. We only know that he had preached "the word of God unto them" (Alma 8:8). We do know that he had been instructed by the angel to warn them that "except they repent the Lord God will destroy them" (Alma 8:16). It would appear that Alma had already delivered this message to them. He had warned them that lest they repent, the Lord would destroy their city in only one day. Their response in effect is: "Who do you think you are, coming here and telling us that our city will be destroyed because of our sins? Do you really expect us to believe you? Never mind the city, why not tell us that because of our sins the whole earth will come to an end? We simply do not believe that our great city will be destroyed in one day."

2 Who art thou? Suppose ye that we shall believe the testimony of one man, although he should preach unto us that the earth should pass away?

verse 2 Undoubtedly one of the arguments leveled against Alma during his first visit to Ammonihah was that Alma was traveling alone and that his testimony was of only "one man." The same criticism is repeated in verse 6. This criticism will be answered when Amulek adds his testimony to Alma's in chapters 10 and 11.

3 Now they understood not the words which they spake; for they knew not that the earth should pass away.

verse 3 The "they's" here, of course, refer to the people of Ammonihah. In deriding Alma by using sarcastic hyperbole, the contenders had inadvertently hit upon a great truth. We know that the telestial earth will, in fact, one day "pass away" or be cleansed, just prior to the Lord's second coming, in preparation for its terrestrial phase—the Millennium.

4 And they said also: We will not believe thy words if thou shouldst prophesy that this great city should be destroyed in one day.

5 Now they knew not that God could do such marvelous works, for they were a hard-hearted and a stiffnecked people.

verse 5 “they were a hard-hearted and a stiffnecked people” See the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

6 And they said: Who is God, that sendeth no more authority than one man among this people, to declare unto them the truth of such great and marvelous things?

verse 6 Consider the blasphemy here. The people say in effect, “Who does your God think he is in sending only one man here to declare unto us these fantastic and unbelievable things? Does he really expect us to believe them?” We will later learn that they also will say of Ammonihah, “God could not destroy [Ammonihah], because of its greatness” (Alma 16:9). We will learn that it will be decimated in one day by Lamanites (Alma 16:10).

Thus far the people of Ammonihah had heard only Alma testify to them and warn them. The law of witnesses states: “One witness shall not rise up against a man for any iniquity, or for any sin, in any sin that he sinneth: at the mouth of two witnesses, or at the mouth of three witnesses shall the matter be established” (Deuteronomy 19:15; see also 2 Corinthians 13:1, italics added). Also, the Lord’s law of warning holds that he will never destroy a people “save it were foretold them by the prophets of the Lord” (2 Nephi 25:9, italics added). Note that the word “prophets” is plural.

7 And they stood forth to lay their hands on me; but behold, they did not. And I stood with boldness to declare unto them, yea, I did boldly testify unto them, saying:

8 Behold, O ye wicked and perverse generation, how have ye forgotten the tradition of your fathers; yea, how soon ye have forgotten the commandments of God.

verse 8 The people of Ammonihah were generally categorized “Nephites” though, as previously mentioned, many of them likely had Mulekite heritage. Beginning at the time Mosiah first brought his Nephite settlers into the land of Zarahemla, there occurred considerable amalgamation of Nephite and Mulekite cultures, though the integration never became complete.

verses 9-11 Alma reviews some of the main tenets of the Nephites’ “tradition of [their] fathers” in these verses.

9 Do ye not remember that our father, Lehi, was brought out of Jerusalem by the hand of God? Do ye not remember that they were all led by him through the wilderness?

10 And have ye forgotten so soon how many times he delivered our fathers out of the hands of their enemies, and preserved them from being destroyed, even by the hands of their own brethren?

11 Yea, and if it had not been for his matchless power, and his mercy, and his long-suffering towards us, we should unavoidably have been cut off from the face of the earth long before this period of time, and perhaps been consigned to a state of endless misery and woe.

12 Behold, now I say unto you that he commandeth you to repent; and except ye repent, ye can in nowise inherit the kingdom of God. But behold, this is not all—he has commanded you to repent, or he will utterly destroy you from off the face of the earth; yea, he will visit you in his anger, and in his fierce anger he will not turn away.

13 Behold, do ye not remember the words which he spake unto Lehi, saying that: Inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments, ye shall prosper in the land? And again it is said that: Inasmuch as ye will not keep my commandments ye shall be cut off from the presence of the Lord.

verse 13 “ye shall prosper in the land” What does it mean to “prosper in the land”? As it turns out, it does not mean to acquire or possess material wealth. Rather, it means to be empowered by the presence of the Lord.

The first and most detailed expression of this promise is found in 1 Nephi 2:20–24, where the Lord gave this promise to Nephi. In blessing his posterity, Lehi confirmed that this promise had also been given to him. “For the Lord God hath said: Inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments ye shall prosper in the land; but inasmuch as ye will not keep my commandments ye shall be cut off from my presence” (2 Nephi 4:4; 1:20).

Most expressions of the promise throughout the Book of Mormon best match Lehi’s simple declaration, rather than Nephi’s fuller description of the promise (See Jarom 1:9; Omni 1:6; Mosiah 1:7, 17; 2:22, 31; Alma 9:13; 36:1, 30; 37:13; 38:1; 50:20.). This suggests Lehi is the source from which later Nephites drew and Nephite tradition traced the promise back to him (Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 2:27, speculated, “This promise is cited at least thirteen more times in the Book of Mormon, but its quoters probably refer to the book of Lehi as a source.” Gardner also pointed out, “Alma clearly expects the Ammonihahites to recognize this reference, which tells us that they were culturally steeped in these ‘traditions of the fathers’”—4:157).

While prosperity is commonly associated with riches in today’s world, as it is, at times in both the Book of Mormon (Mosiah 27:7; Alma 1:30–31) and Bible (Psalms 73:12), this is not what is meant by “prosper in the land.” The promise is structured as an antithetical parallelism wherein two parallel phrases express opposite meanings. Thus, comparing the two conditions side-by-side provides an important clue to what Lehi meant by the word “prosper”:

Inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments, ye shall prosper in the land;
but inasmuch as ye will not keep my commandments, ye shall be cut off from my presence.

The parallel expressions “prosper in the land” and “cut off from [the Lord’s] presence” are clearly set up as opposites to each other. This indicates that prospering in the land is equivalent to having the Lord’s presence. That the Nephite record keepers understood this equivalence is shown by the way Amaron substitutes “ye shall be cut off from my presence” with “ye shall not prosper in the land” (Omni 1:6).

Though some commentators have called it the “Lehite covenant” (For use of this term, see Joseph M. Spencer, An Other Testament: On Typology, 2nd edition, Provo, UT: Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2016, 84, 88, 89, and 90), the essence of the covenantal promise is the same as that given to Israel as a whole. Variations of the promise “that ye may prosper in all that ye do” are frequently found in God’s covenant with the people of Israel, most notably in Deuteronomy (See Deuteronomy 5:33; 8:1; 28:15, 45, 63; 28:29; 29:7, 9; 30:8–10; 1 Kings 2:3; Isaiah 53:10.).

The blessings of “prosperity” are meant to belong to all who keep their covenantal commitments. Sixty years ago, Professor Eldin Ricks noted, “The idea was not new to Nephi. Hebrew prophets had taught this truth to their listeners for many generations. . . . It is particularly prominent in the writings of the seventh and eighth-century prophets” (Eldin Ricks, Book of Mormon Commentary, Volume 1: Comprising the Complete Text of The First Book of Nephi with Explanatory Notes, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret News Press, 1953, 49). Thus, the promise of prosperity to the faithful is extended to the Lord’s children in all ages.

The specific Book of Mormon formulation of this promise clarifies that prospering is being blessed with the Lord’s strengthening and supporting presence, not simply in order to get rich or be successful. Though wealth and success can be byproducts of the Lord’s prospering presence, they are not meant to be equated with it. At its core, the English word “prosper” comes from the Latin pro sperere, literally meaning “according to one’s hope” or “agreeable to one’s wishes,” meaning “fortunate” more than “wealthy.”

Indeed, behind the English word “prosper” in the King James Bible usually stands one of two Hebrew words, either tsalachor sakal, meaning such things as to push forward, overtake, succeed, or advance, or to be skillful, wise, circumspect, or prosperous. Thus, assuming that either of these Hebrew words stood behind Alma’s concept of his word for “prosper,” for several reasons readers should see a wider range of meanings behind that word here than the acquisition of wealth.

One may be fortunate in many ways. Wealth and success are not the only ways the Lord prospers his people, nor are they exclusively the product of the Lord’s blessing. It is misguided, therefore, to think that any and all who are rich or successful are being blessed by the Lord’s hand while the poor and disenfranchised are cut off from his presence.

14 Now I would that ye should remember, that inasmuch as the Lamanites have not kept the commandments of God, they have been cut off from the presence of the Lord. Now we see that the word of the Lord has been verified in this thing, and the Lamanites have been cut off from his presence, from the beginning of their transgressions in the land.

15 Nevertheless I say unto you, that it shall be more tolerable for them in the day of judgment than for you, if ye remain in your sins, yea, and even more tolerable for them in this life than for you, except ye repent.

verse 15 It is clear that God holds his children strictly accountable for the light and knowledge available to them. The people of Ammonihah were apostate “Nephites” (mostly Mulekites) and had received much light and knowledge. They had been given much for which they would be held accountable. The Lamanites would not be held to such a high standard.

16 For there are many promises which are extended to the Lamanites; for it is because of the traditions of their fathers that caused them to remain in their state of ignorance; therefore the Lord will be merciful unto them and prolong their existence in the land.

verse 16 “there are many promises which are extended to the Lamanites” The Lord promised to be merciful to the Lamanites and to judge them lightly because their sins were partly the result of incorrect “traditions of their fathers” (see the commentary for Mosiah 10:12-17; see also Helaman 7:24; 15:11-12). Do you suppose the Jews may be judged more lightly by the Lord for similar reasons? How about the Muslims, Hindus, Catholics, and Protestants?

17 And at some period of time they will be brought to believe in his word, and to know of the incorrectness of the traditions of their fathers; and many of them will be saved, for the Lord will be merciful unto all who call on his name.

verse 17 This prophecy will find fulfillment both in Book of Mormon times (Helaman 13:1) and in the dispensation of the fulness of times.

18 But behold, I say unto you that if ye persist in your wickedness that your days shall not be prolonged in the land, for the Lamanites shall be sent upon you; and if ye repent not they shall come in a time when you know not, and ye shall be visited with utter destruction; and it shall be according to the fierce anger of the Lord.

verse 18 This prophecy will be fulfilled some four years after it was delivered (Alma 16:1-3; 25:1-3).

"fierce anger of the Lord" It is most interesting how the Old Testament period prophets portray Jehovah's motives and emotions. We have learned, through abundant New Testament and modern-day scripture that the Lord seems to have been misrepresented. Today, we might speculate that rather than fierce anger, Jehovah is more likely to have felt disappointment and frustration. And, we would add, he was not without hope that the Ammonihahites would one day repent. Yet, here is the prophet Alma accusing him of feeling "fierce anger." It is not entirely clear to me why this "misimpression" of the Lord's emotions exists among the Nephites. Perhaps, the people (and the prophets) then were reared to believe that God was less patient, less long-suffering, less merciful. Or, perhaps God simply had to deal with the people of that age differently than he deals with us today. This latter explanation seems less likely given the extremes of wickedness to which we are exposed today.

Given the capacity for vindictiveness attributed to God then by his prophets, it is not surprising to read that they also felt him capable of orchestrating "utter destruction" of a people. While today, we would certainly have to allow him that ability, we would rather suspect that instead of deliberately arranging their destruction, he simply withdrew his protective veil and allowed the true nature of mortality and some mortals to take their course.

19 For he will not suffer you that ye shall live in your iniquities, to destroy his people. I say unto you, Nay; he would rather suffer that the Lamanites might destroy all his people who are called the people of Nephi, if it were possible that they could fall into sins and transgressions, after having had so much light and so much knowledge given unto them of the Lord their God;

verse 19 The meaning of this verse may be restated succinctly: When some Nephites become immersed in iniquity, they pose a threat to the spiritual integrity of other Nephites. The Lord would rather destroy the sinners rather than allow the righteous to be led astray (this is roughly the principle of 1 Nephi 4:13—It is better that one man should perish rather than a nation be led into unbelief).

verse 20-23 Here is yet another a restatement of the Nephites' "traditions of their fathers."

20 Yea, after having been such a highly favored people of the Lord; yea, after having been favored above every other nation, kindred, tongue, or people; after having had all things made known unto them, according to their desires, and their faith, and prayers, of that which has been, and which is, and which is to come;

21 Having been visited by the Spirit of God; having conversed with angels, and having been spoken unto by the voice of the Lord; and having the spirit of prophecy, and the spirit of revelation, and also many gifts, the gift of speaking with tongues, and the gift of preaching, and the gift of the Holy Ghost, and the gift of translation;

22 Yea, and after having been delivered of God out of the land of Jerusalem, by the hand of the Lord; having been saved from famine, and from sickness, and all manner of diseases of every kind; and they having waxed strong in battle, that they might not be destroyed; having been brought out of bondage time after time, and having been kept and preserved until now; and they have been prospered until they are rich in all manner of things—

23 And now behold I say unto you, that if this people, who have received so many blessings from the hand of the Lord, should transgress contrary to the light and knowledge which they do have, I say unto you that if this be the case, that if they should fall into transgression, it would be far more tolerable for the Lamanites than for them.

24 For behold, the promises of the Lord are extended to the Lamanites, but they are not unto you if ye transgress; for has not the Lord expressly promised and firmly decreed, that if ye will rebel against him that ye shall utterly be destroyed from off the face of the earth?

verse 24 “the promises of the Lord are extended to the Lamanites” See the commentary for verse 16.

25 And now for this cause, that ye may not be destroyed, the Lord has sent his angel to visit many of his people, declaring unto them that they must go forth and cry mightily unto this people, saying: Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is nigh at hand;

verse 25 What “angel,” and who are these “many . . . people”? Perhaps Alma has reference to his own miraculous conversion along with that of the sons of Mosiah and others (Mosiah 27:11-24). Their conversion by the angel apparently included a mandate, spoken or unspoken, to carry the gospel to others (Mosiah 27:32). This same angel stopped Alma on the road from Ammonihah to Aaron, and it may well have been the same angel who instructed Alma and Amulek in the home of Amulek (Alma 10:10).

Alma summarizes the angel’s message beginning in this verse and extending through verse 28 (see verse 29).

26 And not many days hence the Son of God shall come in his glory; and his glory shall be the glory of the Only Begotten of the Father, full of grace, equity, and truth, full of patience, mercy, and long-suffering, quick to hear the cries of his people and to answer their prayers.

verse 26 Alma's reference here, of course, is to Christ's mortal advent.

"his glory shall be the glory of the Only Begotten of the Father" During his mortal sojourn Christ was allowed unique access to the powers of the Father, though his "glory," during his mortal sojourn will not be evident to all, as it will be at the time of his second coming.

"grace . . . longsuffering" The godly attributes of Christ are spelled out. How would you define "grace"? It is the matchless love he has for us, particularly that aspect of this love that inclines him to be patient and merciful with us even when we don't, by our actions, merit that mercy.

"Equity" is a rich word with a unique meaning. Can one really distinguish between equity and justice? Intuitively we may define justice as "according to the law as it is written." What then is equity? Is it something in addition to justice? Elder Bruce R. McConkie has defined equity as "the principle which tempers the harshness of justice. Equity dictates that the law shall be administered according to its spirit and not merely its letter (D&C 102:16; 134:3; Helaman 3:20; 3 Nephi 6:4). It is an attribute of Deity (Psalm 98:9; 99:4; Alma 9:26)" ("Equity" in Mormon Doctrine, 231). See also the commentary for 3 Nephi 6:4 for a discussion of the meaning of "equity" as contrasted with the concept of "justice."

"quick to hear the cries of his people and to answer their prayers" Here it is made clear that though we pray to the Father, Jesus answers our prayers (see Bruce R. McConkie's Mortal Messiah, 4:74).

27 And behold, he cometh to redeem those who will be baptized unto repentance, through faith on his name.

28 Therefore, prepare ye the way of the Lord, for the time is at hand that all men shall reap a reward of their works, according to that which they have been—if they have been righteous they shall reap the salvation of their souls, according to the power and deliverance of Jesus Christ; and if they have been evil they shall reap the damnation of their souls, according to the power and captivation of the devil.

verse 28 "prepare ye the way of the Lord" This commandment is identical with that to "make straight" the pathway of the Lord (see the commentary for Alma 7:19).

"all men shall reap a reward of their works, according to that which they have been" Here is a reminder of the principle of accountability which is an integral part of the law of justice. It is also an elaboration of the "law of restoration" (see the introductory commentary for Alma 41).

“they shall reap the salvation of their souls, according to the power and deliverance of Jesus Christ” Remember that no man will be saved or exalted on his own merit.

“they shall reap damnation of their souls, according to the power and captivity of the devil” For a discussion of what it means to be damned, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:24.

We know it is the law of justice (see the introductory commentary for Alma 5), not Satan, that condemns the unrepentant sinner. What is the role of Satan in an individual’s damnation? As the Spirit may prompt a man to do good, so the influence of Satan may prompt him to do evil. One might well argue that the promptings of the devil are more ubiquitous and more readily accessible to man, as they require no effort or striving. They are provided to all mortals “free-of-charge.” On the other hand, one must strive to qualify for the promptings of the Spirit of God.

This verse is another beautiful example of “antithetical parallelism” (see the commentary for Alma 5:40 for a discussion of this interesting form of Hebrew poetry). Note the italicized antonyms in this verse:

If they have been righteous
 they shall reap the salvation of their souls, according to the power and deliverance
of Jesus Christ, and if they have been evil
 they shall reap the damnation of their souls, according to the power and captivity of the devil.

29 Now behold, this is the voice of the angel, crying unto the people.

verse 29 Verses 25 through 28 have contained the message of the angel probably delivered to Alma and Amulek while they prepared together in Amulek’s home (Alma 10:10). Who is this angel? See the commentary for verse 25.

30 And now, my beloved brethren, for ye are my brethren, and ye ought to be beloved, and ye ought to bring forth works which are meet for repentance, seeing that your hearts have been grossly hardened against the word of God, and seeing that ye are a lost and a fallen people.

verse 30 “ye ought to be beloved” You ought to love one another and me as well.

“ye ought to bring forth works which are meet for repentance” You ought to behave in a manner which provides evidence of your repentance.

“your hearts have been grossly hardened against the word of God” You are not responsive to promptings of the Spirit. See the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

“ye are a lost and fallen people” You are consumed by things of the world.

31 Now it came to pass that when I, Alma, had spoken these words, behold, the people were wroth with me because I said unto them that they were a hard-hearted and a stiffnecked people.

32 And also because I said unto them that they were a lost and a fallen people they were angry with me, and sought to lay their hands upon me, that they might cast me into prison.

33 But it came to pass that the Lord did not suffer them that they should take me at that time and cast me into prison.

verse 33 Notice how this verse illustrates Alma’s trusting his fate completely to the Lord.

34 And it came to pass that Amulek went and stood forth, and began to preach unto them also. And now the words of Amulek are not all written, nevertheless a part of his words are written in this book.

Alma Chapter 10

1 Now these are the words which Amulek preached unto the people who were in the land of Ammonihah, saying:

2 I am Amulek; I am the son of Giddonah, who was the son of Ishmael, who was a descendant of Aminadi; and it was the same Aminadi who interpreted the writing which was upon the wall of the temple, which was written by the finger of God.

verse 2 “Aminadi who interpreted the writing which was upon the wall of the temple” Here is a most tantalizing mention of a story, involving a Nephite holy man and one of the forebears of Amulek, to which we do not have access! This must have been a most interesting story and might well have been included on the large plates of Nephi. If so, then Mormon obviously chose not to include it on the plates of Mormon. Amulek’s reference to the story suggests that it was well known among the Nephites. This story is not to be confused with the account in Daniel 5 of Daniel’s interpreting writings on the temple wall for Belshazzar the king, though its mention here is reminiscent of the Daniel 5 story.

3 And Aminadi was a descendant of Nephi, who was the son of Lehi, who came out of the land of Jerusalem, who was a descendant of Manasseh, who was the son of Joseph who was sold into Egypt by the hands of his brethren.

verse 3 “Lehi . . . was a descendant of Manasseh, who was the son of Joseph who was sold into Egypt by the hands of his brethren.” It is an often-overlooked fact that there is an extensive ethnic mix found in the peoples of the Book of Mormon. Beginning with father Lehi, we already have a rich mixture of near eastern blood. Lehi was descended from Manasseh, therefore he was at least partly of Arabic blood. Manasseh’s mother was Egyptian, and Egyptians were a blend of nomads, cattle raisers, farmers, Africans, Asiatics, Semites, and Hamites. Egypt was a complete melting pot. Zoram was a servant or a slave and probably not an Israelite. Tradition in the Church has it that Ishmael was a descendant of ancient Joseph through Ephraim (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 7:1-5). Now stir in the Mulekites and especially the Jaredites. The Mulekites may well have been a heterogeneous group themselves, and they likely became mixed up with the indigenous native peoples that were already in the New World. The Jaredites came originally from the primal mixing center, the tower of Babel.

Once Lehi’s traveling party arrived in the New world, the mixing really began in earnest. There was mingling and undoubtedly intermarrying between the Nephites and Lamanites from time to time. The Lamanites were partly of Lehitish origin, but there may well have been some of the same indigenous native American blood mixed in, as we have speculated previously.

4 And behold, I am also a man of no small reputation among all those who know me; yea, and behold, I have many kindreds and friends, and I have also acquired much riches by the hand of my industry.

verse 4 Amulek gives us the feeling that he was very successful in a worldly way and that his orientation had previously been directed toward things of the world. This helps to understand why he had not been previously responsive to things of the Spirit and had “harden[ed his] heart” (see verse 6). His decision to receive Alma is all the more laudable if we keep in mind that he was not simply choosing to go out among the people of Ammonihah preaching with Alma. He was actually deciding to reject his former life. We will learn that he was not only forsaking “all his gold, and silver, and his precious things” (Alma 15:16), but he was also giving up “those who were once his friends and also . . . his father and his kindred” (Ibid.). It is even possible that he had to give up his wife and children (Alma 10:11).

5 Nevertheless, after all this, I never have known much of the ways of the Lord, and his mysteries and marvelous power. I said I never had known much of these things; but behold, I mistake, for I have seen much of his mysteries and his marvelous power; yea, even in the preservation of the lives of this people.

verse 5 “mysteries” For a review of the two definitions of the concept of the “mysteries of God” see the commentary for Alma 12:9.

“I have seen much of his mysteries and his marvelous power; yea, even in the preservation of the lives of this people” Amulek has reference to the Nephite people, and he likely had in mind the divine help his ancestors received in traversing the wilderness, crossing the ocean, and remaining secure under the constant Lamanite threat in the New World.

6 Nevertheless, I did harden my heart, for I was called many times and I would not hear; therefore I knew concerning these things, yet I would not know; therefore I went on rebelling against God, in the wickedness of my heart, even until the fourth day of this seventh month, which is in the tenth year of the reign of the judges.

verse 6 “I did harden my heart” To harden one’s heart is to willfully close one’s heart against the Holy Spirit, in rebellion against God, in order to accomplish one’s own will. The resulting hard-heartedness can result in the Spirit’s ceasing to strive with a person and in spiritual death. Hard-heartedness can lead progressively from indulging oneself somewhat in wrongdoing to gross wickedness. Hard-heartedness is associated with complaining or murmuring, unbelief, blindness of mind, anger, impenitence, stiffneckedness, pride and sexual sin, desire for vengeance, abominations, cruelty, and murder. Hard-heartedness restricts spiritual understanding and can eventually lead to “know[ing] nothing” concerning the mysteries of God, and then being “taken captive by the devil” (Alma 12:9-11). It resists the softening action of the Holy Spirit and its attendant virtues, like meekness, compassion, and humility. It renders one vulnerable to lies, and blind to divine signs and wonders. It flourishes in conditions of ease and prosperity.

“I was called many times and I would not hear; therefore I knew concerning these things, yet I would not know; therefore I went on rebelling against God”

Amulek had been repeatedly “called” or whispered to by the Spirit. His conscience had been pricked, and deep down he really knew the truth. Yet he had not fully responded. President Joseph F. Smith wrote: “I believe there are tens of thousands of people who have heard the truth and have been pricked in their hearts, but they are seeking every refuge they possibly can to hide themselves from their convictions of the truth” (Gospel Doctrine, 360-61).

Amulek “knew concerning these things.” This means he knew well what he should do. He knew what his behavior (thoughts, feelings, actions) should be according to the standard of the Lord’s commandments. He knew that he should deliberately summon the character to obey. But his natural self resisted. He goes on to say, “yet I would not know.” To truly learn (“know”) a spiritual truth requires deliberately obeying the Lord’s commandments—deliberately doing what you know is right. Then, through the process of personal revelation, you receive gifts of the Spirit which include increments of divine attributes and a testimony of spiritual truths. Amulek refers to a time when he “would not know” spiritual truths because he was not obey the Lord’s commandments.

“the fourth day of this seventh month” What time of the year did this event occur? How does the Nephite calendar correspond to our calendar today? For a discussion of this question, see the commentary for Alma 16:1. Amulek’s reference to “this seventh month” (italics mine) suggests that Alma and Amulek spent less than a month preparing before going out to preach to the people.

7 As I was journeying to see a very near kindred, behold an angel of the Lord appeared unto me and said: Amulek, return to thine own house, for thou shalt feed a prophet of the Lord; yea, a holy man, who is a chosen man of God; for he has fasted many days because of the sins of this people, and he is an hungered, and thou shalt receive him into thy house and feed him, and he shall bless thee and thy house; and the blessing of the Lord shall rest upon thee and thy house.

verse 7 Amulek’s visitation by an angel has caused some to ask the questions: “Why did Amulek receive such a marvelous blessing of the Lord? What did he do to merit such marvelous divine favor?” One might well ask the same questions about Alma (Mosiah 27) and Paul (Acts 9). Perhaps Amulek, as well as Alma and Paul, were foreordained to his calling. Alma will later speak of the principle of foreordination (Alma 13). We might suppose that Amulek was “called and prepared from the foundation of the world according to the foreknowledge of God, on account of [his] exceeding faith and good works” (Alma 13:3). Such valiance in the pre-existence may have rendered him worthy of this heavenly visitation even though he was temporarily caught up in things of the world here in mortality. It should be also noted that pre-earthly faithfulness and foreordination does not always guarantee obedience here on earth. It is to Amulek’s eternal credit that he did believe and cooperate with the angel.

What a blessed compliment to Alma, having the angel say of him, “He is a holy man . . . a chosen man of God.” For a discussion of the scriptural word chosen, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:19-20.

8 And it came to pass that I obeyed the voice of the angel, and returned towards my house. And as I was going thither I found the man whom the angel said unto me: Thou shalt receive into thy house—and behold it was this same man who has been speaking unto you concerning the things of God.

9 And the angel said unto me he is a holy man; wherefore I know he is a holy man because it was said by an angel of God.

10 And again, I know that the things whereof he hath testified are true; for behold I say unto you, that as the Lord liveth, even so has he sent his angel to make these things manifest unto me; and this he has done while this Alma hath dwelt at my house.

verse 10 “I say unto you, that as the Lord liveth, even so has he sent his angel” (italics added) Amulek not only bears testimony to the people but he swears a solemn oath that what he said about the angel was true. For more thoughts on the ancient practice of oath taking, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 4:31-33.

11 For behold, he hath blessed mine house, he hath blessed me, and my women, and my children, and my father and my kinsfolk; yea, even all my kindred hath he blessed, and the blessing of the Lord hath rested upon us according to the words which he spake.

verse 11 Amulek’s specifically mentioning his women, children, father, and kinsfolk as being part of his household provides interesting insight into the social structure of Book of Mormon societies and peoples. Far from the nuclear families prevalent today (consisting of parents and children), this added detail “suggests an interesting pattern of kin connections” known in many ancient cultures, including ancient Mesoamerica (Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 4:168).

“For kin-based societies,” one Book of Mormon scholar noted, “a literal house typically symbolizes the family. Groups of kin frequently live in compounds.” This is suggested by Amulek’s usage of “mine house” to describe his immediate and extended kindred.

Indeed, “It seems likely Amulek’s ‘house’ was a typical Mesoamerican compound. When Amulek speaks of Alma blessing his ‘house’ and then lists specific relatives, these are almost certainly people living in the same ‘house’ or compound, not a single structure” (Ibid., 4:169).

This picture in the Book of Mormon not only converges well with ancient Israelite and eastern Mediterranean family structures (Stephen D. Ricks, “A Note on Family Structure in Mosiah 2:5,” Interpreter: A Journal of Mormon Scripture 6, 2013: 9–10), but also the archaeological record, which verifies such household compounds existing during the pre-Classic Maya period (Gardner, Second Witness, 4:169).

One oddity in Amulek’s description is his mentioning “my women” as being part of his household. Could he have meant female relatives such as sisters or cousins? Perhaps, but a stronger possibility, as suggested by John A. Tvedtnes, is that Amulek was referring to his wives. As John A. Tvedtnes noted, the Book of Mormon uses the word “woman” to refer to a “wife” (“The Hebrew Background of the Book of Mormon,” in Rediscovering the Book of Mormon, ed. John L. Sorenson and Melvin J. Thorne, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1991, 91). If Alma 10:11 is read this way, then it would make Amulek a polygamist.

All of this makes sense. Amulek, after all, was said to have been “a man of no small reputation among” the people of Ammonihah who had “many kindreds and friends” and “much riches” (Alma 10:4). This is consistent with ancient polygamy, which was almost exclusively practiced by wealthy social elites who could afford to support large families, “a small fraction only making use of the privilege” (Ze’ev W. Falk, Hebrew Law in Biblical Times, 2d ed., Provo, UT: Brigham Young University Press, and Winona Lake, IN, 2001, 127–29, 190). It is also consistent with how the Book of Mormon elsewhere depicts polygamy (see the commentary on Jacob 2:30).

The description of Amulek’s household is not mere trivia. Later in the account, Alma and Amulek were forced to witness the horrendous execution of those who believed their preaching. This included women and children, and apparently, members of Amulek’s own family (Alma 14:8–15). By describing his family earlier in the account, the narrative deeply humanizes Amulek and his anguish.

Amulek went from being one of Ammonihah’s social elites to losing everything—his reputation, his social status, his riches, and even his family—for the gospel’s sake. The victims themselves were martyrs for the gospel. As John W. Welch explained, the rulers of Ammonihah “burn[ed] the women and children in Ammonihah . . . because they [themselves] had believed . . . having been taught to believe in Alma’s preaching of the word of God” (John W. Welch, The Legal Cases in the Book of Mormon, Provo, UT: Brigham Young University Press and The Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2008, 262).

By first coming to know Amulek and his family, we are able to empathize with them when the narrative makes a tragic turn for the worse. The stakes in this account are heightened, and Amulek's plea to Alma to save the victims—including his own family—from martyrdom is given far more compelling moral and emotional weight (Alma 14:10).

12 And now, when Amulek had spoken these words the people began to be astonished, seeing there was more than one witness who testified of the things whereof they were accused, and also of the things which were to come, according to the spirit of prophecy which was in them.

verse 12 Obviously, some among the people of Ammonihah were responsive to the Holy Ghost, the “spirit of prophecy.”

13 Nevertheless, there were some among them who thought to question them, that by their cunning devices they might catch them in their words, that they might find witness against them, that they might deliver them to their judges that they might be judged according to the law, and that they might be slain or cast into prison, according to the crime which they could make appear or witness against them.

verse 13 “by their cunning devices they might catch them in their words” We will learn hear that Amulek is referring to a group of articulate lawyers professionally trained in the techniques of debate. The first “their” refers to these lawyers, and the second “their” refers to Alma and Amulek.

“according to the crime which they could make appear or witness against them” Obviously these clever and wicked lawyers (see verse 14) were out to entrap Alma and Amulek by manipulating the circumstances and make them appear guilty of a crime so they might be delivered before a judge and be convicted of the crime.

14 Now it was those men who sought to destroy them, who were lawyers, who were hired or appointed by the people to administer the law at their times of trials, or at the trials of the crimes of the people before the judges.

verse 14 “it was those men who sought to destroy them” One aspect of these lawyers' motivation seems to have been simply a Satan-driven hatred for the things of God.

“lawyers, who were hired or appointed by the people to administer the law at their times of trials . . . before the judges” The meaning of the phrase “administer the law” is worth a moment's consideration. It would appear that the role of the lawyer in that day was much the same as it is today. They did not write, enforce, or interpret the law. Rather they simply represented the interests of people involved in legal conflict. This is referred to here as “administering” the law.

15 Now these lawyers were learned in all the arts and cunning of the people; and this was to enable them that they might be skillful in their profession.

verse 15 It has been noted, with amusement by some, that in almost every instance, “lawyers” are mentioned in a derogatory context in the Book of Mormon. Undoubtedly in Book of Mormon times, as in our day, lawyers played a valuable role in protecting the rights of the individual.

16 And it came to pass that they began to question Amulek, that thereby they might make him cross his words, or contradict the words which he should speak.

17 Now they knew not that Amulek could know of their designs. But it came to pass as they began to question him, he perceived their thoughts, and he said unto them: O ye wicked and perverse generation, ye lawyers and hypocrites, for ye are laying the foundation of the devil; for ye are laying traps and snares to catch the holy ones of God.

verse 17 “they knew not that Amulek could know of their designs” One of the gifts of the Spirit is the ability to discern the mind and intentions of others.

“ye lawyers and hypocrites, for ye are laying the foundation of the devil; for ye are laying traps and snares to catch the holy ones of God” It seems important to point out that these men were not wicked because they were lawyers. In Ammonihah it is likely that most of the lawyers were of the learned and wealthy class who espoused the teachings of Nehor. They were of the order of the Nehors. Thus, they were philosophical enemies of the prophets of God.

In a gospel sense, hypocrisy is the pretense of religious conviction in the absence of true conviction. It is the claim to religious commitment without the practice of religious principles. A hypocrite feigns belief, while the heart is really serving personal pride and vain ambition. The Greek word translated as “hypocrite” in the New Testament is the word for an actor in a play, one who portrays someone different from the person he or she really is. Hypocrisy is a manifestation of the carnal or “natural man” and not of the truly converted “saint.”

18 Ye are laying plans to pervert the ways of the righteous, and to bring down the wrath of God upon your heads, even to the utter destruction of this people.

19 Yea, well did Mosiah say, who was our last king, when he was about to deliver up the kingdom, having no one to confer it upon, causing that this people should be governed by their own voices—yea, well did he say that if the time should come that the voice of this people should choose iniquity, that is, if the time should come that this people should fall into transgression, they would be ripe for destruction.

verse 19 Amulek refers to a warning of King Mosiah recorded in Mosiah 29:27.

“well did Mosiah say” The word “well” here means appropriately, aptly or correctly. It also seems to carry the meaning of poignantly or penetratingly. Note the additional usage of this same meaning of the word “well” later in this verse and also in verses 20 and 21.

20 And now I say unto you that well doth the Lord judge of your iniquities; well doth he cry unto this people, by the voice of his angels: Repent ye, repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

verse 20 “the kingdom of heaven is at hand” For a discussion of the meaning of this phrase, see the commentary for Alma 5:50. Perhaps Amulek’s meaning here is that the duration of mortal life is short and unpredictable. One never knows when one’s death might occur, particularly if one lives in the city of Ammonihah (which will soon become a doomed city) and if one is unrepentant (see verse 23).

21 Yea, well doth he cry, by the voice of his angels that: I will come down among my people, with equity and justice in my hands.

verse 21 “with equity and justice in my hands” We never need question the absolute fairness of the Lord’s judgments.

verses 20-21 “well doth the Lord judge . . . well doth he cry unto this people” For a discussion of a unique meaning for the word “well” in these verses, see the commentary for verse 19.

22 Yea, and I say unto you that if it were not for the prayers of the righteous, who are now in the land, that ye would even now be visited with utter destruction; yet it would not be by flood, as were the people in the days of Noah, but it would be by famine, and by pestilence, and the sword.

verse 22 “if it were not for the prayers of the righteous, who are now in the land, that ye would even now be visited with utter destruction” Obviously not all of the people in Ammonihah were caught up in priestcraft and other false concepts. We will learn that after the preaching of Alma and Amulek, “many of them did believe . . . and began to repent, and to search the scriptures” (Alma 14:1). However, “the more part of them were desirous that they might destroy Alma and Amulek” (Alma 14:2).

23 But it is by the prayers of the righteous that ye are spared; now therefore, if ye will cast out the righteous from among you then will not the Lord stay his hand; but in his fierce anger he will come out against you; then ye shall be smitten by famine, and by pestilence, and by the sword; and the time is soon at hand except ye repent.

verse 23 “then will not the Lord stay his hand” A more conventional rendering would be “then the Lord will not stay his hand.”

24 And now it came to pass that the people were more angry with Amulek, and they cried out, saying: This man doth revile against our laws which are just, and our wise lawyers whom we have selected.

verse 24 “This man doth revile against our laws which are just” We will learn (in verse 26) that the people were incorrect in this criticism of Amulek. The law of the land was the “law of Mosiah” (Alma 12:1) consisting of the system of judges which governed the land. Amulek and Alma were, of course, supportive of the principles behind this form of government. Amulek, however, did take issue with how the people of Ammonihah interpreted or practiced this form of government. He had previously denounced the practice of government in Ammonihah when he said: “Mosiah [caused] that this people should be governed by their own voices—yea, well did he say that if the time should come that the voice of this people should choose iniquity, that is, if the time should come that this people should fall into transgression, they would be ripe for destruction. . . . If it were not for the prayers of the righteous . . . ye would even now be visited with utter destruction” (verses 19, 22). Obviously the “voice” or majority of the people in Ammonihah had chosen unwisely, and their “wise lawyers” were not in fact wise.

“This man doth revile against . . . our wise lawyers whom we have selected” They are accurate in this criticism. Amulek had reviled against their lawyers (see verse 17).

25 But Amulek stretched forth his hand, and cried the mightier unto them, saying: O ye wicked and perverse generation, why hath Satan got such great hold upon your hearts? Why will ye yield yourselves unto him that he may have power over you, to blind your eyes, that ye will not understand the words which are spoken, according to their truth?

verse 25 “Why will ye yield yourselves unto him that he may have power over you, to blind your eyes, that ye will not understand the words which are spoken, according to their truth?” For a discussion of how Satan may blind the eyes of a man and bind him with the chains of hell, see Alma 12:9-11 and its commentary. For a more complete discussion of Satan and his strategies, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 16, The Role of Satan.

26 For behold, have I testified against your law? Ye do not understand; ye say that I have spoken against your law; but I have not, but I have spoken in favor of your law, to your condemnation.

verse 26 “I have spoken in favor of your law, to your condemnation” The law of Mosiah was based upon righteous principles. These principles had been violated by the Ammonihahites.

27 And now behold, I say unto you, that the foundation of the destruction of this people is beginning to be laid by the unrighteousness of your lawyers and your judges.

verse 27 Again, the formula for destruction is spelled out in verse 19: “if the time should come that the voice of this people should choose iniquity . . . they would be ripe for destruction.”

28 And now it came to pass that when Amulek had spoken these words the people cried out against him, saying: Now we know that this man is a child of the devil, for he hath lied unto us; for he hath spoken against our law. And now he says that he has not spoken against it.

verse 28 Here is the age-old irony of Satan-inspired individuals accusing the righteous of being Satan-inspired.

29 And again, he has reviled against our lawyers, and our judges.

30 And it came to pass that the lawyers put it into their hearts that they should remember these things against him.

verse 30 Obviously, these lawyers were the learned, the charismatic, the influential, the leaders. They determined the ideological directions for the majority of the people.

31 And there was one among them whose name was Zeezrom. Now he was the foremost to accuse Amulek and Alma, he being one of the most expert among them, having much business to do among the people.

verse 31 Here we are introduced to Zeezrom, an intelligent, clever, and wicked lawyer. Make certain that you are pronouncing his name correctly. It has three syllables rather than two, and the middle syllable is emphasized—Zee-eh'-zrum—(see the Pronouncing Guide).

“having much business to do among the people” Zeezrom was one of the most successful and sought after of the lawyers. We will learn that he was “expert in the devices of the devil, that he might destroy that which was good” (verse 21).

32 Now the object of these lawyers was to get gain; and they got gain according to their employ.

verse 32 The primary motivation of the lawyers was not the welfare of the people. They were not idealists who sought primarily the promulgation of fairness and justice.

Alma Chapter 11

Scripture Mastery

Alma 11-15 Alma and Amulek contend with the clever and wicked lawyer Zeezrom, and Zeezrom is eventually converted.

Alma 11:37 Amulek's teaching that no unclean thing can inherit the kingdom of heaven.

Alma 11:40 He shall take upon him the transgressions of those who believe on his name, and salvation cometh to none else.

Alma 11:42-43 There is a death which is called a temporal death; and the death of Christ shall loose the bands of this temporal death.

1 Now it was in the law of Mosiah that every man who was a judge of the law, or those who were appointed to be judges, should receive wages according to the time which they labored to judge those who were brought before them to be judged.

verse 1 “the law of Mosiah” This refers to the Nephite governmental system of judges established by Mosiah before his death.

verses 3-19 The following chart shows the relative monetary values of the currency probably throughout the land of Zarahemla:

Gold	Silver	Measure of Grain	Day's Wage for a Judge
leah		0.125
shiblum		0.25
shiblon		0.5
senine	Senum	1.0	1.0
antion		1.5
seon	Amnor	2.0
shum	Ezrom	4.0
limnah	Onti	7.0

(Larry E. Dahl, “The Plan of Redemption—Taught and Rejected,” Studies in Scripture, Volume 7, 1 Nephi to Alma 29, 318.)

John W. Welch has pointed out the similarities between Mosiah's measures of exchange and those of an ancient Babylonian law code, the Code of Eshnunna. The following initial provisions stand at the head of this ancient law code:

1 kor of barley [she'um] is priced at 1 shekel of silver;

3 qa of “best oil” are priced at 1 shekel of silver;

1 seah and 2 qa of sesame oil are priced at 1 shekel of silver . . .

The hire for a wagon together with its oxen and its driver is 1 massiktu and 4 seah of barley. If it is paid in silver, the hire is one third of a shekel. He shall drive it the whole day (Martha T. Roth, Law Collections from Mesopotamia and Asia Minor [Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1995], 59; John W. Welch's "The Laws of Eshnunna and Nephite Economics," FARMS Update, Insights [December 1998]: 2).

Consider these parallels:

1. The basic legal form of these two texts is consistent. The standard phrasing "1 kor of barley is priced a 1 shekel of silver" resembles that in the Book of Mormon, "A senum of silver was equal to a senine of gold" (Alma 11:7).

2. The primary conversion in Babylonia was between silver and barley. Thus, precious metal and grain measures were convertible into each other. The law of Mosiah featured precisely the same conversion capability: the basic measure for either gold or silver was equated with "a measure of barley" (Alma 11:7).

3. In Babylonia the basic commodity valuation system allowed traders to deal in a variety of items, all convertible into silver or barley. Similarly, Mosiah's system covered transactions from silver into "a measure of every kind of grain" (Alma 11:7).

4. Both economic systems were announced by kings to have been instituted for similar reasons. The laws of Eshnunna began with a royal superscription that proclaimed this standardization as instrumental in establishing justice, eliminating enmity, and protecting the weak. Likewise, King Mosiah enacted his laws expressly to establish peace and equality in the land (see Mosiah 29:38, 40).

5. The practical motivation behind the laws of Eshnunna seems to have been to undergird the rental market and to standardize values on daily wages and the computation of various damages and penalties. Similarly, a motivation for the economic part of King Mosiah's reforms was to provide a standard system under the new reign of judges for the payment of judges on a daily basis: "a senine of gold for a day, or a senum of silver" (Alma 11:3).

In enacting his law, as the Book of Mormon takes pains to tell us, King Mosiah "did not reckon after the manner of the Jews who were at Jerusalem" (Alma 11:4). Evidently, he drew on some other system of weights and measures. Perhaps Mosiah obtained the legal form of his economic decree from the Mulekites, who had had contact with the Jaredites, who had left from Mesopotamia not long before the time of Eshnunna. Moreover, Mosiah's system is distinctively binary. That is, each unit of measure is half the size of the next large unit. Perhaps Mosiah found this binary manner of reckoning somewhere on the plates of brass, which, after all, were written in a type of Egyptian text. Indeed, as became known in the early twentieth century, the units in the ancient Egyptian grain measure were also binary in ratio (John W. Welch and J. Gregory Welch, Charting the Book of Mormon, [Provo, Utah: FARMS, 1999], chart 113). We cannot be sure how to explain the similarities between the laws of Mosiah and Eshnunna or between the Nephite and Egyptian grain measures, but this much can be said: Such similarities between the laws of Mosiah and Eshnunna and the Egyptian mathematical papyri (which were unknown in Joseph Smith's day) show yet another way in which the Book of Mormon presents specific details whose roots run unexpectedly deep in ancient societies.

2 Now if a man owed another, and he would not pay that which he did owe, he was complained of to the judge; and the judge executed authority, and sent forth officers that the man should be brought before him; and he judged the man according to the law and the evidences which were brought against him, and thus the man was compelled to pay that which he owed, or be stripped, or be cast out from among the people as a thief and a robber.

verse 2 “a thief and a robber” Please note the distinction between thief and robber, two terms which are essentially synonymous in our culture. See the commentaries for Mosiah 13:22 and 3 Nephi 3:12.

3 And the judge received for his wages according to his time—a senine of gold for a day, or a senum of silver, which is equal to a senine of gold; and this is according to the law which was given.

4 Now these are the names of the different pieces of their gold, and of their silver, according to their value. And the names are given by the Nephites, for they did not reckon after the manner of the Jews who were at Jerusalem; neither did they measure after the manner of the Jews; but they altered their reckoning and their measure, according to the minds and the circumstances of the people, in every generation, until the reign of the judges, they having been established by king Mosiah.

5 Now the reckoning is thus—a senine of gold, a seon of gold, a shum of gold, and a limnah of gold.

verse 5 It seems likely that these names for certain amounts of gold did not represent actual coins, but rather represented standard weights.

6 A senum of silver, an amnor of silver, an ezrom of silver, and an onti of silver.

7 A senum of silver was equal to a senine of gold, and either for a measure of barley, and also for a measure of every kind of grain.

verse 7 “a measure of barley” See the commentary for Mosiah 7:22. Obviously barley was a crop of primary importance to the Nephites.

8 Now the amount of a seon of gold was twice the value of a senine.

9 And a shum of gold was twice the value of a seon.
 10 And a limnah of gold was the value of them all.
 11 And an amnor of silver was as great as two senums.
 12 And an ezrom of silver was as great as four senums.
 13 And an onti was as great as them all.
 14 Now this is the value of the lesser numbers of their reckoning—
 15 A shiblon is half of a senum; therefore, a shiblon for half a measure of barley.
 16 And a shiblum is a half of a shiblon.
 17 And a leah is the half of a shiblum.
 18 Now this is their number, according to their reckoning.
 19 Now an antion of gold is equal to three shiblons.
 20 Now, it was for the sole purpose to get gain, because they received their wages according to their employ, therefore, they did stir up the people to riotings, and all manner of disturbances and wickedness, that they might have more employ, that they might get money according to the suits which were brought before them; therefore they did stir up the people against Alma and Amulek.

verse 20 This verse explains the essence of why the entire legal system of Ammonihah was corrupt. A “suit” may be defined as an action taken to secure justice in a court of law. The influential and self-serving lawyers had ulterior motives in fomenting conflict and animosity. They stood to gain from any form of civil strife, enmity, or hostility.

“Now, it was for the sole purpose to get gain, because they received their wages according to their employ” Brother David E. Bokovoy (“Repetitive Resumption in the Book of Mormon,” FARMS Update, no. 182, vol. 27, 2007) has pointed out that this phrase illustrates a common form of editorial activity utilized here in the book of Alma that is also found in the Bible. It is called repetitive resumption. Biblical scholarship has recognized this writing form only since the time of Joseph Smith.

Repetitive resumption refers to an editor’s return to an original narrative following a deliberate interlude. Old Testament writers accomplished this by repeating a key word or phrase that immediately preceded the textual interruption. For example, in Johsua 1:7, Moses’s successor, Joshua, counsels ancient Israel to be “strong and very courageous.” This admonition is then followed by a mandate to continually meditate upon the “book of the law” (verse 8). Since the reference to the “book of the law” alters the focus of Joshua’s account, most biblical scholars conclude that Joshua 1:8 represents a later editorial insertion. Directly following this interruption, the Hebrew redactor returns to the original narrative by restating the key words that immediately precede his textual interruption or insertion: “Have not I commanded thee? Be strong and of a good courage” (verse 9). Similar examples of this phenomenon have been identified throughout the Hebrew Bible.

Here in Alma 11:20, we see that the editor, presumably Mormon, has used repetitive resumption in just the same way. Mormon interrupts the account of Alma's confrontation with Zeezrom by interjecting an outline of the Nephite monetary system (verses 1-19). Prior to this insertion, the account reads, "Now the object of these lawyers was to get gain; and they got gain according to their employ" (Alma 10:32). After the editorial interruption that breaks the flow of the primary narrative, the editor returns to the original account by using repetitive resumption here in this verse: "Now, is was for the sole purpose to get gain, because they received their wages according to their employ." See another example of repetitive resumption in the Book of Mormon in Helaman 5:14.

This literary technique is significant not only because it supports the authenticity of the Book of Mormon (the technique had not yet been identified by biblical scholars in 1830) but also because it allows readers to identify the primary message that the original writers of the Book of Mormon wanted their audience to receive.

21 And this Zeezrom began to question Amulek, saying: Will ye answer me a few questions which I shall ask you? Now Zeezrom was a man who was expert in the devices of the devil, that he might destroy that which was good; therefore, he said unto Amulek: Will ye answer the questions which I shall put unto you?

22 And Amulek said unto him: Yea, if it be according to the Spirit of the Lord, which is in me; for I shall say nothing which is contrary to the Spirit of the Lord. And Zeezrom said unto him: Behold, here are six onties of silver, and all these will I give thee if thou wilt deny the existence of a Supreme Being.

verse 22 As one of Ammonihah's corrupt, wealthy lawyers (Alma 10:31–32), Zeezrom profited by stirring "up the people to riotings, and all manner of disturbances and wickedness . . . that [he] might get money according to the suits which were brought before [him]" (Alma 11:20). After gaining his consent, Zeezrom began questioning Amulek on doctrinal points in what was a transparent attempt to trap him in his words (vv. 21–46)

It is also not surprising that Zeezrom would offer Amulek bribe money to recant his testimony. After all, Zeezrom was of the order of Nehor (commentary on Alma 8:9; Alma 14:16; 15:15). Nehor had taught that priests and teachers ought to be popular, and that they ought not to labor with their hands. Rather they should be supported by the people (Alma 1:3). Thus, Zeezrom was indoctrinated with the idea that the priests and teachers of his land were primarily profit motivated.

One onti of silver was equivalent to seven days' wages for a judge. Therefore, six onties equaled a judge's wages for forty-two days (see commentary for Alma 11:3-19). Given Amulek's situation—having just lost all of his possessions—this was indeed a stern test.

Zeezrom's name itself may very well be a dysphemism, or a deliberately derogatory or unflattering word or name meant to disparage the intended recipient. This would follow known ancient Hebrew literary practice, which employs both euphemisms and dysphemisms as substitutes for, among other things, names (See Marvin H. Pope, "Euphemism and Dysphemism in the Bible," in The Anchor Bible Dictionary, ed. David Noel Freedman, 6 vols., New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1992, 1:720–725; Paul Y. Hoskisson, "Dysphemisms," Insights 31, no. 2, 2011: 2; "Euphemism and Dysphemism," online at jewishvirtuallibrary.org.) In this case, as explained by Stephen Ricks, "The Book of Mormon proper name Zeezrom . . . may have the meaning 'he of the Ezrom'." Ricks continued, "Ezrom/Ezrum is a Nephite word mentioned in Alma 11:6, 12, as a unit of silver measure. As a silver measure (which, in Hebrew, is kesep, 'silver; money'), it may be the equivalent of money as well, indicating the meaning 'he of silver, money,' suggesting Zeezrom's early obsession with money" (Stephen D. Ricks, "A Nickname and a Slam Dunk: Notes on the Book of Mormon Names Zeezrom and Jershon," Interpreter: A Journal of Mormon Scripture 8, 2014: 192; compare Gordon C. Thomasson, "What's in a Name? Book of Mormon Language, Names, and [Metonymic] Naming," Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 3, no. 1, 1994: 15–16).

This reinforces Mormon's intensely negative portrayal of the people of Ammonihah, who are, with the exception of Amulek and a few other believers, presented as corrupt, greedy, murderous, and blasphemous. Zeezrom was nothing but silver, inert and of the underworld. In casting this story as he does, Mormon's depiction of Zeezrom as weakly and unsuccessfully attempting to bribe Amulek ironically only strengthens the latter's character.

All of this serves to paint a vivid narrative picture in Alma 11. Zeezrom, a wealthy and corrupt lawyer, thought that his money could buy him anything. Having built a successful career on exploiting others (Alma 10:32), he thought he could get Amulek to deny his faith (and thus compromise his and Alma's crucial message) for just the right price. Beneath his wealth and smooth face, however, Zeezrom was evidently greatly insecure and completely unready to face the righteous Amulek in a doctrinal debate. His livelihood was being directly threatened by Alma and Amulek's preaching, and so Zeezrom resorted first to what he knew best: money. The avaricious Zeezrom could talk a big game, but ultimately proved to be little more than a poser, as Amulek spurned his bribe and deftly answered his questions.

23 Now Amulek said: O thou child of hell, why tempt ye me? Knowest thou that the righteous yieldeth to no such temptations?

verse 23 Amulek leaves no doubt as to who, he felt, was inspiring and motivating Zeezrom.

24 Believest thou that there is no God? I say unto you, Nay, thou knowest that there is a God, but thou lovest that lucre more than him.

verse 24 Amulek was inspired to be able to discern the mind of Zeezrom.

“thou lovest that lucre more than him” We might appropriately expand the definition of “lucre” to include all things of the world rather than simply money. Here then is the essence of this mortal trial. It is not sufficient to profess and even have some degree of love for the things of God. We must evidence in our lives that we love the things of God more than the things of the world. This is the spirit of sacrifice. See Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 17, The Law and Spirit of Sacrifice.

25 And now thou hast lied before God unto me. Thou saidst unto me—Behold these six onties, which are of great worth, I will give unto thee—when thou hadst it in thy heart to retain them from me; and it was only thy desire that I should deny the true and living God, that thou mightest have cause to destroy me. And now behold, for this great evil thou shalt have thy reward.

verse 25 Again, Amulek correctly discerns the mind and intentions of Zeezrom.

“for this great evil thou shalt have thy reward” Zeezrom’s reward will come in the form of mental anguish and suffering over his sins (see Alma 1:46; 12:1,7; 14:6; 15:3,5).

verses 26-33 In these verses Zeezrom engages Amulek in conversation. Zeezrom’s hope is obviously to catch Amulek contradicting himself and expose him to the listening audience.

26 And Zeezrom said unto him: Thou sayest there is a true and living God?

27 And Amulek said: Yea, there is a true and living God.

28 Now Zeezrom said: Is there more than one God?

29 And he answered, No.

verse 29 Amulek’s reference here is obviously only to Jehovah, the Lord Jesus Christ. Why did he not acknowledge the other two members of the godhead? Did he know about them? It seems certain that Amulek did understand the nature of the godhead as we understand it today (see the commentaries for verses 33 and 44). His emphasis that there is but one God might have been given to counter those who would worship many gods. This is the same spirit that is reflected in Deuteronomy 6:4: “Hear, O Israel: The Lord God is one Lord,” and in Mark 12:29: “And Jesus answered him, The first of all the commandments is, Hear, O Israel; The Lord our God is one Lord.” Amulek’s statement about one “true and living God” is also similar to one given in the New Testament by Paul in a similar context: “We know that an idol is nothing in the world, and that there is none other God but one” (1 Corinthians 8:4).

30 Now Zeezrom said unto him again: How knowest thou these things?

31 And he said: An angel hath made them known unto me.

verse 31 Amulek refers to the ministrations of the angel to Alma and Amulek in the latter's home (Alma 10:10).

32 And Zeezrom said again: Who is he that shall come? Is it the Son of God?

verse 32 In this verse Zeezrom's motives become transparent. Amulek has stated that there is but one God (verse 29). Now Zeezrom wants him to say that the God who shall come and dwell among his people is the Son of God, thus implying that there are at least two Gods. To his listening audience this would constitute an inconsistency or contradiction.

33 And he said unto him, Yea.

verse 33 Amulek seems to fall into Zeezrom's trap. He acknowledges that the Savior who will come is the Son of God. It seems evident that Amulek, who is obviously a capable and bright individual, could easily perceive the direction in which Zeezrom was trying to lead him. Thus, the verse provides evidence that Amulek did understand the relationship between God the Father and God the Son.

34 And Zeezrom said again: Shall he save his people in their sins? And Amulek answered and said unto him: I say unto you he shall not, for it is impossible for him to deny his word.

verse 34 Zeezrom, feeling that he has scored one victory, now attempts to trap Amulek again. Zeezrom asks the question: "Shall he save his people in their sins?" It is understandable that Zeezrom might ask this question since he was of the persuasion of the order of Nehor (see the commentary for Alma 8:9; Alma 14:16; 15:15). Nehor had taught that all people would be saved, therefore there was no need for repentance or for fear and trembling over their sins (Alma 1:4; 15:15). Perhaps he hoped to disguise the word "in" when he asked, "Shall he save his people in their sins?" Zeezrom was asking if God, by divine decree, can pardon sinners regardless of their failure to repent, simply because he wills it and wants it. Amulek immediately discerned his intent and answered in the negative "Ye cannot be saved in your sins" (verse 37). Amulek knew that the Savior would save his people from their sins, based on their repentance, and that he would not save his people in their sins. President John Taylor wrote: "It would be impossible for [God] to violate law, because in so doing he would strike at his own dignity, power, principles, glory, exaltation and existence" (Mediation and Atonement, 168).

35 Now Zeezrom said unto the people: See that ye remember these things; for he said there is but one God; yet he saith that the Son of God shall come, but he shall not save his people—as though he had authority to command God.

verse 35 Now believing that he has scored two victories over Amulek, Zeezrom says to the listeners, “See that ye remember these things.” He then misquotes Amulek: “He saith that the Son of God shall come, but he shall not save his people.” He also misconstrues Amulek’s intent by adding, “As though he had authority to command God.”

36 Now Amulek saith again unto him: Behold thou hast lied, for thou sayest that I spake as though I had authority to command God because I said he shall not save his people in their sins.

verse 36 Now Amulek takes the offensive. He first exposes Zeezrom’s obvious distortion of the truth in accusing him of intending to “command God.”

37 And I say unto you again that he cannot save them in their sins; for I cannot deny his word, and he hath said that no unclean thing can inherit the kingdom of heaven; therefore, how can ye be saved, except ye inherit the kingdom of heaven? Therefore, ye cannot be saved in your sins.

verse 37 Amulek then explains the important doctrinal error which those of the Order of the Nehors apparently espoused. If the reader wishes to review the essential elements of the atonement, please review the introductory commentary for Alma 5. The Savior cannot save people in their sins—that is while they are still unrepentant. He can save them from their sins. If man will come to him and repent, then he will extend the saving power of the atonement which will satisfy the law of justice (Helaman 5:10-11).

38 Now Zeezrom saith again unto him: Is the Son of God the very Eternal Father?
39 And Amulek said unto him: Yea, he is the very Eternal Father of heaven and of earth, and all things which in them are; he is the beginning and the end, the first and the last;

verses 38-39 Jesus Christ is God, the Creator or Father of heaven and earth. If we choose to refer to his other roles, then he is also the Son of God and the Savior of mankind. He is also the Eternal Father by the principle of divine investiture of authority and because he is the Father by adoption of those who accept the gospel (Mosiah 5:7).

40 And he shall come into the world to redeem his people; and he shall take upon him the transgressions of those who believe on his name; and these are they that shall have eternal life, and salvation cometh to none else.

verse 40 As in most every instance of the use of the word “salvation” in the Book of Mormon, the word here is identical in meaning to exaltation or eternal life.

“he shall take upon him the transgressions of those who believe on his name” All men, even those slow to repent, will benefit from his atonement. Only those who repent in a timely fashion and come to believe on his name, however, will enjoy the full benefits of the atonement—exaltation in the celestial kingdom.

“and salvation cometh to none else” We are again reminded of an absolute truth: Of the billions of people who have lived on earth, not one will be saved in a kingdom of glory lest he accept Jesus Christ and sincerely repent.

verses 41-45 What are the unconditional benefits of the atonement which will be extended without exception to every man and woman born into mortality? They are: (1) All will be resurrected, and (2) All will be brought back into the presence of God to be judged. The unworthy, of course, will not remain in the presence of God.

41 Therefore the wicked remain as though there had been no redemption made, except it be the loosing of the bands of death; for behold, the day cometh that all shall rise from the dead and stand before God, and be judged according to their works.

42 Now, there is a death which is called a temporal death; and the death of Christ shall loose the bands of this temporal death, that all shall be raised from this temporal death.

verse 42 The “temporal death” was, of course, brought upon all men because of Adam’s transgression. The phrase “bands of death” refers to the concept that death would hold all people captive forever if Jesus Christ had not triumphed over it through the Atonement. This expression may also refer to the bands of spiritual death (see Alma 5:7-10, 13).

43 The spirit and the body shall be reunited again in its perfect form; both limb and joint shall be restored to its proper frame, even as we now are at this time; and we shall be brought to stand before God, knowing even as we know now, and have a bright recollection of all our guilt.

verse 43 “The spirit and the body shall be reunited again in its perfect form . . . even as we now are at this time” The construction of the phrase seems awkward since the two nouns “spirit and the body” are the antecedents of the singular pronoun “its.” In the church today, we have a singular name for the combination of the spirit and body. It is the soul of man (D&C 88:15). In this phrase the “spirit and the body” are obviously regarded as a single entity, the soul.

The exact process and sequence in which the resurrection will occur may not be as yet fully revealed to us. However, this verse is helpful.

One feature of the doctrine of the resurrection is ambiguous. Is it a one-step process or a gradual process? For a discussion of this ambiguity, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 9, The Judgments. See particularly the subtitle “What is the role of the resurrection in the final judgment of us all—two views of resurrection?” under “The Great Final Judgment” in that chapter.

The “gradual” school of thought feels that at the instant of our resurrection, our body will be just as it was at our death. Joseph Smith taught: “As concerning the resurrection, I will merely say that all men will come from the grave as they lie down, whether old or young; there will not be ‘added unto their stature one cubit,’ neither taken from it; all will be raised by the power of God, having spirit in their bodies, and not blood” (TPJS, 199-200). President Joseph F. Smith added: “The body will come forth as it is laid to rest, for there is not growth or development in the grave. As it is laid down, so will it arise, and changes to perfection will come by the law of restitution” (Improvement Era, June 1904). President Joseph Fielding Smith later explained that this law of restitution will act “almost instantly” (Doctrines of Salvation, 2:293-94). Perhaps following the resurrection, within moments, our body will be restored to a state of immortal perfection and will be quickened by that glory which we are to inherit (D&C 88:28). According to the “gradual” theory, those who die as children will be resurrected as children and will subsequently grow to adulthood.

“and we shall be brought to stand before God” This standing before the judgment bar of God appears to be an eternal ordinance of the gospel. Perhaps he will not really render a judgment at that moment since that judgment may have already been made. We will stand before him clothed in the body that will reflect that judgment. The body we will possess on that occasion will be a celestial one or a terrestrial or telestial one. Or it may be a body characteristic of those who will live forever with Satan. He will at that time apparently pronounce our eternal destiny and confirm the validity and justice of our eternal fate.

“knowing even as we know now, and have a bright recollection of all our guilt” Brightness connotes vividness and precision. We will all at that moment be acutely aware of the fairness and justice of the judgment which has been rendered. Elder Neal A. Maxwell expanded our understanding of this “bright recollection”:

At the judgment, we will not only have the Book of Mormon’s prophesied “bright recollection” and “perfect remembrance” of our misdeeds (see Alma 5:18; 11:43). The joyous things will be preserved too. . . Among the “all things [that] shall be restored” (Alma 40:23) will be memory, including eventually the memory of premortal events and conditions. What a flood of feeling and fact will come to us when, at a time a loving God deems wise, this faculty is restored! Surely it will increase our gratefulness for God’s long-suffering and for Jesus’s atonement! Hence one of the great blessings of immortality and eternal life will be the joy of our being connected again with the memories of both the first and the second estates (Men and Women of Christ, 132).

44 Now, this restoration shall come to all, both old and young, both bond and free, both male and female, both the wicked and the righteous; and even there shall not so much as a hair of their heads be lost; but every thing shall be restored to its perfect frame, as it is now, or in the body, and shall be brought and be arraigned before the bar of Christ the Son, and God the Father, and the Holy Spirit, which is one Eternal God, to be judged according to their works, whether they be good or whether they be evil.

verse 44 The phrase “or in the body” is a reiteration of the phrase “as it is now.” Every thing shall be restored to our bodies just as those things are now. Again, might the complete sequence consist of an initial resurrection to a state just as we were before our death. Then the “restitution” spoken of by Joseph Fielding Smith above might occur within moments following the judgment. Our eternal body will then be changed to a state commensurate with the eternal kingdom in which we will live.

“the bar of Christ the Son, and God the Father, and the Holy Spirit” Here are named the three members of the godhead: Christ the Son, God the Father, and the Holy Ghost. Can there be any doubt that Amulek understood the nature of the godhead?

The judgment bar of God is here referred to as “the bar of Christ the Son, and God the Father, and the Holy Spirit, which is one Eternal God.” We are taught in the scriptures that the Father has committed all judgment unto the Son (John 5:22; 2 Nephi 9:41). Elder Bruce R. McConkie explained:

The scriptural assertion that all men “shall be brought and be arraigned before the bar of Christ the Son, and God the Father, and the Holy Spirit, which is one Eternal God, to be judged according to their works, whether they be good or whether they be evil” means simply that Christ’s judicial decisions are those of the other two members of the Godhead because all three are perfectly united as one. The ancient Twelve and the Nephite Twelve, and no doubt others similarly empowered, will sit in judgment, under Christ, on selected portions of the house of Israel; but their decrees will be limited to those who love the Lord and have kept his commandments, ‘and none else’ (D&C 29:12; 3 Nephi 27:27; Matthew 19:28)” (The Promised Messiah, 215-16).

“which is one Eternal God” See the commentary for Mormon 7:7.

45 Now, behold, I have spoken unto you concerning the death of the mortal body, and also concerning the resurrection of the mortal body. I say unto you that this mortal body is raised to an immortal body, that is from death, even from the first death unto life, that they can die no more; their spirits uniting with their bodies, never to be divided; thus the whole becoming spiritual and immortal, that they can no more see corruption.

verse 45 It is likely that most readers will read through this verse without realizing its importance. Consider for a moment that those who have read the entire Bible have never read an explanation or a definition of the concept of resurrection. The term “resurrection” is never mentioned in the Old Testament, and the only definition we have in the New Testament was given by Paul and is incomplete at best. Paul taught: “So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption: It is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power: It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body” (1 Corinthians 15:42-44). Here in verse 45 we have quite a clear definition of resurrection (see also Alma 40:23).

“thus the whole becoming spiritual and immortal, that they can no more see corruption” The word spiritual means not subject to death. Corruption means mortal, of the world, subject to death.

46 Now, when Amulek had finished these words the people began again to be astonished, and also Zeezrom began to tremble. And thus ended the words of Amulek, or this is all that I have written.

verse 46 In Zeezrom we again encounter an individual who, in spite of his worldly and wicked ways, was probably a choice individual in the pre-mortal world. We see evidence in this verse that the Spirit was beginning to reach him and that he was responsive to the Spirit.

“this is all that I have written” Here is a reminder that Mormon is the first person and is doing the redacting.

Alma Chapter 12

Scripture Mastery

Alma 12:9-11 Alma's teaching of the "chains of hell." He that will harden his heart, the same receiveth the lesser portion of the word and then they are taken captive by the devil.

Alma 12:14 For our words and our works will condemn us and we would fain be glad if we could command the rocks and the mountains to fall upon us to hide us from his presence.

Alma 12:24 Death comes upon mankind, nevertheless there was a space granted unto man in which he might repent.

Alma 12 and 13 consist of Alma's discourse to Zeezrom and to the people of Ammonihah.

1 Now Alma, seeing that the words of Amulek had silenced Zeezrom, for he beheld that Amulek had caught him in his lying and deceiving to destroy him, and seeing that he began to tremble under a consciousness of his guilt, he opened his mouth and began to speak unto him, and to establish the words of Amulek, and to explain things beyond, or to unfold the scriptures beyond that which Amulek had done.

verse 1 Zeezrom has become uncharacteristically quiet or silent. The Spirit had obviously touched him to know the truth of Amulek's teachings, and he was probably contemplating their significance in view of his sinful past.

"Amulek had caught him in his lying and deceiving to destroy him" Amulek had correctly perceived that Zeezrom was lying and deceiving in order to destroy Amulek in their ideological debate.

"to establish the words of Amulek, and to explain things beyond" Alma's intent in speaking to the Ammonihahites was to confirm the truth of Amulek's preaching and to teach additional truths ("things beyond") over and above those things Amulek had taught.

2 Now the words that Alma spake unto Zeezrom were heard by the people round about; for the multitude was great, and he spake on this wise:

3 Now Zeezrom, seeing that thou hast been taken in thy lying and craftiness, for thou hast not lied unto men only but thou hast lied unto God; for behold, he knows all thy thoughts, and thou seest that thy thoughts are made known unto us by his Spirit;

verse 3 “thou hast lied unto God; for behold, he knows all thy thoughts” It is impossible to remain undetected if we attempt to lie to God, yet we can deceive Satan, for “there is none else save God that knowest thy thoughts and the intents of thy heart” (D&C 6:16).

4 And thou seest that we know that thy plan was a very subtle plan, as to the subtlety of the devil, for to lie and to deceive this people that thou mightest set them against us, to revile us and to cast us out—

verse 4 By now, the reader perceives that “subtle” and “subtlety” are negative qualities. But do you recall exactly what they mean? Subtlety usually means having the ability to make fine distinctions. Here, however, “subtle” means crafty, sly, cunning, and devious.

5 Now this was a plan of thine adversary, and he hath exercised his power in thee. Now I would that ye should remember that what I say unto thee I say unto all.

verse 5 “he hath exercised his power in thee” Alma tells Zeezrom, “You have been used by the very adversary for his purposes.”

6 And behold I say unto you all that this was a snare of the adversary, which he has laid to catch this people, that he might bring you into subjection unto him, that he might encircle you about with his chains, that he might chain you down to everlasting destruction, according to the power of his captivity.

verse 6 A snare is anything by which one is entangled and brought into captivity and trouble.

7 Now when Alma had spoken these words, Zeezrom began to tremble more exceedingly, for he was convinced more and more of the power of God; and he was also convinced that Alma and Amulek had a knowledge of him, for he was convinced that they knew the thoughts and intents of his heart; for power was given unto them that they might know of these things according to the spirit of prophecy.

verse 7 The “spirit of prophecy” is, of course, the Holy Ghost.

8 And Zeezrom began to inquire of them diligently, that he might know more concerning the kingdom of God. And he said unto Alma: What does this mean which Amulek hath spoken concerning the resurrection of the dead, that all shall rise from the dead, both the just and the unjust, and are brought to stand before God to be judged according to their works?

verse 8 We witness a miraculous transformation of Zeezrom from vicious critic and heckler to honest investigator!

verses 9-11 These verses explain the basis on which eternal truths are taught to the human family.

9 And now Alma began to expound these things unto him, saying: It is given unto many to know the mysteries of God; nevertheless they are laid under a strict command that they shall not impart only according to the portion of his word which he doth grant unto the children of men, according to the heed and diligence which they give unto him.

verse 9 “mysteries of God” Harold B. Lee taught that a mystery is a spiritual truth which may be grasped only through divine revelation—a fact or concept that can truly be understood only with the help and influence of the Spirit of God. All spiritual truths are “bewildering mysteries” to those who are “hard-hearted” or “stiff-necked” as they simply are unable to understand them. This definition of mysteries seems to pertain in this particular verse and throughout the Book of Mormon (Ye Are the Light of the World, [Salt Lake City: Deseret Book, 1974], 211).

These mysteries are advanced concepts of spiritual understanding. There are essential requirements for receiving this type of mystery. They are received and understood only by those who have been prepared by learning the concepts of the gospel in a step-wise fashion, “line upon line” and “precept upon precept.” They are received only under the influence of the Holy Ghost, therefore only those righteous individuals who live worthy of the Holy Ghost’s influence qualify to receive them. Such concepts are sacred, and there is a measure of defilement in disclosing them to someone who is not prepared to receive them because of failure to meet the above qualifications. Such disclosure not only profanes the sacred concept, but in addition is a waste of time since it is not possible for one who is unprepared to spiritually comprehend it. For a more complete discussion of the concept of mysteries of God, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:1.

During his mortal ministry, Jesus used parables to conceal the mysteries of the kingdom from the unworthy and the spiritually unprepared. These parables were so effective at concealing the message that Jesus often had to explain the meaning afterward even to his disciples.

“they are laid under a strict command that they shall not impart only according to the portion of his word which he doth grant unto the children of men, according to the heed and diligence which they give unto him” Here is a commandment directed to those with an understanding—a spiritual witness—of some of the “mysteries of God.” To whom are they allowed to teach or to impart these mysteries? They are allowed to teach these sacred concepts only to those who have appropriately prepared themselves spiritually by seeking the help of the Holy Spirit through prayer, by study, and by obedience—they have given “proper heed and diligence . . . unto him.” They have acknowledged the Author of the mysteries by their obedience to him.

The Lord may reveal, through his Spirit, to some individuals particular morsels of understanding because of the diligence of their study or because of their particular circumstances. In these instances, the Lord may not intend that these morsels be taught to all members of the Church. They may, at times, not even be applicable to the general membership of the Church.

10 And therefore, he that will harden his heart, the same receiveth the lesser portion of the word; and he that will not harden his heart, to him is given the greater portion of the word, until it is given unto him to know the mysteries of God until he know them in full.

verse 10 “he that will harden his heart, the same receiveth the lesser portion of the word” For a discussion of this concept see the commentary for verse 11. See also the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

“to him is given the greater portion of the word until it is given unto him to know the mysteries of God until he know them in full” The promise is given only to the faithful and obedient: They will be given knowledge “line upon line, precept upon precept” until they receive, in “due time” a fulness of the Father (D&C 98:12; 93:19). They who receive light and continue in that light “receiveth more light: and that light groweth brighter and brighter until the perfect day” (D&C 50:24). Simply stated, they will receive all the knowledge the Father has. This concept is discussed also in the commentary for 2 Nephi 28:30. More is implied than the idea that knowledge is given to man a little at a time. The receiving of new knowledge is a matter of personal desire, personal worthiness, and personal readiness. Also implicit in this concept is the idea that in order to receive additional knowledge, one must prove oneself a faithful steward over the knowledge already received. If not, then even that which has been already received will be taken away.

The concept of a man’s coming to know a spiritual truth is far richer than a mere mental process of learning and understanding. “Knowledge” of each spiritual truth comes as a gift of the Spirit, an increment of an attribute of God. When a man comes to know a spiritual truth, he receives that truth by personal revelation, and his heart and mind are changed. He becomes a new creature. Such knowledge of spiritual truths comes less by reading and studying than through one’s obedience to gospel commandments. To learn gospel truths is to receive gifts of the Spirit. This same concept adds richness to the expression “the word of God.” Learning the word of God effects a change in an individual. That change may be termed spiritual growth. See Spiritual Growth—Gifts of the Spirit in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 7.

“mysteries of God” Again, see the discussion of mysteries in the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:1.

11 And they that will harden their hearts, to them is given the lesser portion of the word until they know nothing concerning his mysteries; and then they are taken captive by the devil, and led by his will down to destruction. Now this is what is meant by the chains of hell.

verse 11 In contrast to the previous verse wherein we are taught how an individual might receive a fulness of light or knowledge, this verse describes the phenomenon of a man’s losing all knowledge of eternal truths. Then, inevitably, the man is taken captive by the devil and led down to destruction. The concept of “the chains of hell” is particularly apt. The devil slips his chains around the neck of the unbeliever so subtly and shrewdly that he snares and binds them almost before they realize it. Nephi commented on this ability of Satan when he observed that the devil “leadeth them by the neck with a flaxen cord [a soft cord], until he bindeth them with his strong cords forever” (2 Nephi 26:22). These “chains” are referred to elsewhere in the scriptures as “awful chains” (2 Nephi 28:22), “everlasting chains” (2 Nephi 28:19), and “everlasting chains of death” (Alma 36:18).

Just as knowledge of spiritual truths comes through one’s obedience to the gospel commands and represents real spiritual growth, one will fail to grow and even lose the growth that one does possess through one’s disobedience to gospel law. Both the process of learning and the process of forgetting spiritual truths tend to be self-perpetuating. He who denies his natural self and obeys a commandment is rendered more likely to subsequently deny himself again and obey again. Contrariwise, the man to gives in to his natural self and fails to obey a commandment becomes more inclined to disobey the next time he is tempted. This latter individual becomes caught in a spiraling whirlpool which takes him down and down until he is irreversibly ensnared by the “chains of hell.”

12 And Amulek hath spoken plainly concerning death, and being raised from this mortality to a state of immortality, and being brought before the bar of God, to be judged according to our works.

verse 12 These words of Amulek are found in Alma 11:41-45.

13 Then if our hearts have been hardened, yea, if we have hardened our hearts against the word, insomuch that it has not been found in us, then will our state be awful, for then we shall be condemned.

verse 13 This verse is a reiteration of verse 11. The idea that the word of God “has not been found in us” does not refer so much to what we know. Rather, it refers to what we have become.

verses 14-18 Here Alma speaks of those who refuse to repent.

14 For our words will condemn us, yea, all our works will condemn us; we shall not be found spotless; and our thoughts will also condemn us; and in this awful state we shall not dare to look up to our God; and we would fain be glad if we could command the rocks and the mountains to fall upon us to hide us from his presence.

verse 14 The principle underlying this verse is accountability. Accountability is being responsible, or answerable, for one’s “thoughts,” “feelings,” “words,” and “works.” For mortals to be accountable to God, three conditions must exist. First, a law must be given which defines the boundary between good and evil (2 Nephi 2:13; Alma 42:17-22). Second, there must be a knowledge of the law, a knowledge of good and evil (2 Nephi 2:5); and third, there must be agency, the freedom to choose between obedience or disobedience, between good and evil (2 Nephi 2:26-27). God has created a mortal experience where all three of these essential elements are present.

Is it not true that a person’s “thoughts,” “feelings,” “words,” and “works” are but outward manifestations of what that person really is at his very core, in his very heart of hearts?

“we shall not dare to look up to our God; and we would fain be glad if we could command the rocks and the mountains to fall upon us to hide us from his presence” Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines fain as, “Gladly; willingly; with joy or pleasure.” Thus, the expression “fain be glad” is an odd, redundant phrase.

Can you think of a state that is the exact opposite of the one described in this verse? Consider, in the context of this verse, D&C 121:45: “Let virtue garnish thy thoughts unceasingly; then shall thy confidence wax strong in the presence of God.”

15 But this cannot be; we must come forth and stand before him in his glory, and in his power, and in his might, majesty, and dominion, and acknowledge to our everlasting shame that all his judgments are just; that he is just in all his works, and that he is merciful unto the children of men, and that he has all power to save every man that believeth on his name and bringeth forth fruit meet for repentance.

verse 15 “But this cannot be; we must come forth and stand before him” This phrase refers to the final thought in the previous verse, “we would fain be glad if we could command the rocks and the mountains to fall upon us to hide us from his presence.”

It is sobering to contemplate the inevitable consequences of maintaining an unrepentant attitude here in mortality. Except for those who go with Satan and become sons of perdition, each and every individual will (1) feel shame in God’s presence; (2) see himself with all sham and pretense stripped away and realize that God’s judgments are completely fair—indeed, more than fair; and (3) acknowledge that there is no other way to be saved in a kingdom of glory than acknowledging Jesus as their Savior and sincerely repenting of their sins.

One meaning of the word meet is “that which is suitable, fitting, and proper.” To bring “forth fruit meet for repentance” is to sincerely repent and then provide appropriate evidence of the completeness of that repentance.

16 And now behold, I say unto you then cometh a death, even a second death, which is a spiritual death; then is a time that whosoever dieth in his sins, as to a temporal death, shall also die a spiritual death; yea, he shall die as to things pertaining unto righteousness.

verse 16 “then cometh a death, even a second death” Again, we are considering the fate of him who remains unrepentant here in mortality. What exactly is this “second death”? To understand clearly the answer to this question, let us review part of the concept of the fall: Because Adam transgressed in the garden, all mankind will temporarily suffer two penalties: (1) Each person will be cut off from the presence of God while here in mortality, the so-called spiritual death. This may also be referred to as the “first death.” (2) Every man will also suffer physical death, the separation of his spirit from his body. These penalties are temporary because, as we will learn, their effects will automatically be some day reversed by virtue of the Lord’s atoning sacrifice and death. In other words, “No man will be eternally punished for Adam’s transgression” (Article of Faith 2). Remember, that the law of justice includes the concept that it is unjust to punish one man for another’s sins. Thus, all men will be resurrected, and also no man will be excluded from the presence of God because of Adam’s sin. At a point in time every man will be returned to the presence of God to be judged. It does not matter how wicked and unrepentant, every person will, after the resurrection, be brought back into the presence of God for judgment (Alma 40:11-14). This returning to God’s presence of every man is proof that no one suffers a permanent spiritual death because of Adam’s transgression.

Once in God’s presence each person is judged. They will either be exalted in the kingdom of God and thus remain in his presence or they will be sent out of his presence a second time and suffer the so-called “second death.” They will be cut off from the presence of God, and from his happiness and joy, forever. These will be consigned to one of the lower two kingdoms or they will suffer a complete second death and live with Satan forever as sons of perdition.

The term “second death” is used several times in the Book of Mormon. It sometimes seems to refer to that place of eternal damnation where Satan and his sons live, so-called outer darkness (see Jacob 3:11). The reader is reminded that the doctrine of the post-mortal phase of man’s existence is incomplete as taught in the Book of Mormon. Those who ultimately inherit the terrestrial or telestial glories also may be said to have suffered the “second death.”

“then is a time that whosoever dieth in his sins, as to a temporal death, shall also die a spiritual death” “Then” refers to the time when people will be consigned to suffer the second death. This tragic consignment occurs when an individual lives through mortality and dies unrepentant. After his physical death, he will consequently also die spiritually.

We must keep in mind that at our death, the “partial judgment” of each one of us is made by an all-knowing and all-seeing Lord. We will be judged worthy of a state of “paradise” or be placed in the spirit world in a non-paradisiacal state, a state of “prison.” Each of God’s children will finally live eternally where they are happy and fulfilled. If they are truly celestial people in their hearts—at their core—they will so be judged. If they would fit and be happiest in a lesser degree of glory, then that is where they will live for eternity. Hence, the individual “who dieth in his sins” simply means that during his mortal experience, he failed to become—through repeated repentance and obedience—a true celestial being. And, he will consequently be remanded to a lesser degree of glory or to outer darkness.

The phrase, “he shall die as to things pertaining to righteousness” suggests an aspect of permanence to the phenomenon of the “second death.”

17 Then is the time when their torments shall be as a lake of fire and brimstone, whose flame ascendeth up forever and ever; and then is the time that they shall be chained down to an everlasting destruction, according to the power and captivity of Satan, he having subjected them according to his will.

verse 17 “lake of fire and brimstone” This expression refers to those who suffer the second death. It does not, of course, describe the literal fate of anyone. Rather, it is a figurative or symbolic expression that is discussed more fully in the important commentary for 2 Nephi 9:16. If the reasons why the spirit world is referred to in scripture as “hell” are not fresh in your mind, please review that commentary for 2 Nephi 9:16.

“they shall be chained down to an everlasting destruction” Verse 11 and its commentary reviews the manner in which Satan uses the chains of hell to capture those with hardened hearts. These eventually come to have no knowledge of spiritual truths and have no choice but to respond to the will and logic of the devil. Only those who become sons of perdition are completely and eternally “chained down to an everlasting destruction.”

This “captivity of Satan” will also be experienced in some measure by those who eventually inherit a lesser degree of glory. They will be temporarily consigned in the world of spirits to “prison,” the place for all of those not blessed with the state of paradise. In the case of these individuals in prison, however, this captivity will come to a finite end at the moment they are resurrected with a terrestrial or a telestial body. For them this captivity is “eternal” or “everlasting” only in the sense that it is God’s punishment (see D&C 19:10-12). In their cases, it does not last forever.

18 Then, I say unto you, they shall be as though there had been no redemption made; for they cannot be redeemed according to God’s justice; and they cannot die, seeing there is no more corruption.

verse 18 This verse can only describe the sons of perdition. It is only they who “shall be as though there had been no redemption made” (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:8-9). It is only they who will not “be redeemed according to God’s justice.”

“they cannot die, seeing there is no more corruption” The word “corruption” in scripture means something like decay or deterioration. What a desperate plight awaits the sons of perdition! They will find themselves in outer darkness, subject to the devil and, initially at least, possessing an eternal body. There will, however, be no escape from their hopeless situation. Whether or not they will eventually experience dissolution of their resurrected body, they will remain in outer darkness forever. There is no way out!

The question as to the state of the body of those resurrected to inherit outer darkness is not completely settled. This verse may suggest that the “perdition body” will last for eternity. There is some speculation, however, that the resurrected body of those doomed to live in outer darkness forever will eventually undergo dissolution (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 1:22).

19 Now it came to pass that when Alma had made an end of speaking these words, the people began to be more astonished; verse 19 “the people began to be more astonished” Obviously some of the people were beginning to respond to the Spirit. They were beginning to believe the words of Amulek and Alma.

20 But there was one Antionah, who was a chief ruler among them, came forth and said unto him: What is this that thou hast said, that man should rise from the dead and be changed from this mortal to an immortal state that the soul can never die?

21 What does the scripture mean, which saith that God placed cherubim and a flaming sword on the east of the garden of Eden, lest our first parents should enter and partake of the fruit of the tree of life, and live forever? And thus we see that there was no possible chance that they should live forever.

verses 20-21 Antionah is critical of the possibility of immortality because God had placed cherubim before the tree of life to prevent Adam and Eve (or their posterity) from living forever.

What are cherubim? We have previously discussed this question. Allow me to remind you. Many animals and plants live in God's presence, and it is likely that we have never heard of or seen many of them. John the Revelator saw and heard such animals in God's presence (Revelation 5:8-14), and Joseph Smith recorded how these animals praised and glorified God (TPJS, 291-92). One such animal is the seraph (singular) or seraphim (plural). In D&C 109:79, Joseph Smith describes seraphs (alternately seraphim) in God's presence. Joseph refers to them as "bright, shining seraphs." Another type of winged heavenly creature is the cherub (singular) or cherubim (plural). Ezekiel teaches that cherubim also have hands and faces (Ezekiel 10:7, 14). Mesopotamian tradition and art represent them as winged bulls with human faces, but this need not necessarily correspond with the truth. An alternate explanation of seraphim and cherubim is that they are angels in the celestial presence of God who belong to the human family, and that the descriptions of their non human parts ("wings") is only figurative and symbolic. Perhaps their "wings" are figurative representations of their power to move and to act.

It is interesting to note that Antionah doubted the doctrine of the resurrection and perhaps the doctrine of an afterlife because of a misinterpretation of the account of "cherubim and a flaming sword" in the Garden of Eden. He had assumed that since Adam and Eve were prevented from eating the fruit of the tree of life, "there was no possible chance that they should live forever." His error is an understandable one and perhaps even a sincere one. Alma will explain his error, read on!

verses 22-27 There are three key points to understanding Alma's explanation to Antionah:

1. Adam's transgression brought about a temporary spiritual death or a temporary separation of man from God, and in addition every man will perpetuate this spiritual death and render it "permanent" by his own sins (Romans 3:23).

2. The plan of redemption holds that the only way to overcome this permanent separation from God is through obedience and repentance in a mortal state.

3. Once Adam and Eve had fallen from their immortal state and were mortal, it was necessary to prevent them from partaking of the fruit of the tree of life. The Bible tells that if they had partaken, they would have "live[d] forever" (Genesis 3:22). However, in neither Genesis nor the book of Moses are the implications of this situation clearly defined. We can be grateful to Alma for an explanation. Apparently, eating of the fruit of the tree of life, once they were mortal, would have simply perpetuated their “mortal” state forever. They would have existed forever in a sort of quasi-resurrected state. This quasi-resurrected body would not die, and somehow, in this condition, they would have been prevented from engaging in the real process of mortality. They could not have been properly tested. They could not have grappled with the tests of temptation, obedience, disobedience, and sin. They could not have repented of their sins. Apparently, they also could not have born children. There is obviously much we still do not know about the implications of the tree of life in Eden.

A period of ordinary mortality is absolutely necessary for our spiritual progress. If Adam and Eve had partaken of the tree of life, they would have been shut out from the presence of God forever. A most vital part of the plan of redemption is the relatively brief period we spend in mortality—our “moment” of probation.

We may thus more clearly understand why the Book of Mormon warns against wasting the days of our probation. If a person “wasteth the days of his probation, . . . awful is his state” (2 Nephi 9:27), for he finds himself in the same condition that would have prevailed if Adam and Eve had partaken of the tree of life immediately and continued forever in their sins, shut out from the presence of God. Those who waste the days of their probation exist as though there were no plan of redemption and no atonement.

22 Now Alma said unto him: This is the thing which I was about to explain, now we see that Adam did fall by the partaking of the forbidden fruit, according to the word of God; and thus we see, that by his fall, all mankind became a lost and fallen people.

verse 22 “by his fall, all mankind became a lost and fallen people” Do we really become a “lost and fallen people” because of Adam’s fall? Let us review the consequences of Adam’s transgression. They are:

1. All mankind became mortal. Our bodies are subject to “corruption” or deterioration, and all of us will eventually suffer a physical death. We are therefore temporarily “lost and fallen” in the sense that we are in need of being resurrected.

2. All mankind became separated from God, and we need to regain his presence, thus in another way we become temporarily “lost and fallen” because of Adam’s sin.

3. We came to know good from evil. That is, humankind was enabled to have a full knowledge of good and evil, sufficient to allow them to grow spiritually as they make moral choices. This effect of Adam’s fall may be regarded as positive and productive.

4. Mankind was enabled to procreate. This, also, is a positive and productive change.

Now, we do believe that no one of us will suffer eternally because of Adam’s transgression (Article of Faith 2). We are taught that consequences (1) and (2) of Adam's transgression (above) will be automatically removed or fixed. It is however by virtue of Christ's atonement that none of us will suffer eternally due to Adam's fall. Without being rescued or redeemed by that atoning sacrifice, each of us would indeed have remained permanently a "lost and fallen people."

Another consequence of the fall is that man, in his mortal state, is significantly reduced in power and in the ability to acquire knowledge compared to his living in a spirit body. In speaking of the reductions in ability that man experiences in this mortal sphere, Joseph F. Smith wrote: "I think that the spirit, before and after this probation, possesses greater facilities, aye, manifold greater, for the acquisition of knowledge, than while manacled and shut up in the prison-house of mortality" (Gospel Doctrine, 13).

23 And now behold, I say unto you that if it had been possible for Adam to have partaken of the fruit of the tree of life at that time, there would have been no death, and the word would have been void, making God a liar, for he said: If thou eat thou shalt surely die.

verse 23 This verse makes the point that if Adam and Eve had partaken of the fruit of the tree of life in the garden, then they never would have died. They would have lived forever in their fallen "mortal" state. This would have been, of course, a major problem.

"the word would have been void, making God a liar, for he said: If thou eat thou shalt surely die" This instruction and warning by God was given in the context of the tree of knowledge of good and evil. In Genesis 3:3, Eve implies that God had told Adam and Eve that if they partook of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, they would surely die. This death, and the mortal life that preceded it, of course, would be a good thing—a vital part of the God's plan. An untimely partaking of the fruit of the tree of life would have thwarted God's plan. Man would not experience mortality and then die and later be resurrected. In this sense, then, God would have been "a liar."

24 And we see that death comes upon mankind, yea, the death which has been spoken of by Amulek, which is the temporal death; nevertheless there was a space granted unto man in which he might repent; therefore this life became a probationary state; a time to prepare to meet God; a time to prepare for that endless state which has been spoken of by us, which is after the resurrection of the dead.

verse 24 The logic of this verse is that since death has come upon mankind, then obviously a functional and redemptive mortal probationary period has also come upon mankind.

"this life became a probationary state" Adam and Eve did not partake of the tree of life, and this life did become a valid probationary state.

It may be parenthetically noted that one doctrine not fully explained in the Book of Mormon is the complete truth of the “probationary state” or second estate through which each of us must pass. It includes not only our mortal lives on earth but also the period of time that some will spend in the “spirit prison.” Those who are blessed to go to “paradise” need no further probationary state since they have already completed their probation. The fact that it is possible to repent after this mortal phase is missing from the Book of Mormon (see the commentary for Mosiah 2:33).

“that endless state which has been spoken of by us, which is after the resurrection of the dead” This seems to refer to that eternal period when all, save the sons of perdition, will live in the kingdoms of glory.

25 Now, if it had not been for the plan of redemption, which was laid from the foundation of the world, there could have been no resurrection of the dead; but there was a plan of redemption laid, which shall bring to pass the resurrection of the dead, of which has been spoken.

verse 25 “from the foundation of the world” The period here referred to as the “foundation of the world” is that period in the premortal existence when preparations were made for the great mortal experience of the family of Adam and the plan of redemption by which members of that family might eventually return to their celestial home.

“the plan of redemption” This is another name for the plan of salvation (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:6).

26 And now behold, if it were possible that our first parents could have gone forth and partaken of the tree of life they would have been forever miserable, having no preparatory state; and thus the plan of redemption would have been frustrated, and the word of God would have been void, taking none effect.

verse 26 This verse proposes a hypothetical situation which did not, and indeed could not never have come to pass because the word of God stated otherwise. As we have discussed, if Adam and Eve had partaken of the fruit of the tree of life after they had secured their mortality by partaking of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, they would have lived forever in a sort of suspended state of eternal “mortal” agony where they were guilty of sin but unable to repent. They would have had a type of quasi-resurrected, “mortal” body which would not die. Though they had transgressed in the garden (partaken of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil) and fully knew right from wrong, there would be no mortal period of probation available to them. There would be no opportunity to be tried and to repent. They would be unable to earn their exaltation. The rest of us would also have suffered. We would have been stuck in our pre-existent unembodied state.

27 But behold, it was not so; but it was appointed unto men that they must die; and after death, they must come to judgment, even that same judgment of which we have spoken, which is the end.

verse 27 “it was appointed unto men that they must die” Intrinsic within this statement is the idea that it was appointed unto men that they must become mortal, live out their mortal probationary period, and then die a mortal death.

28 And after God had appointed that these things should come unto man, behold, then he saw that it was expedient that man should know concerning the things whereof he had appointed unto them;

verse 28 It is given unto man to know about the plan of salvation and other eternal truths. Every man should know fully that he will die and be judged by the Lord.

29 Therefore he sent angels to converse with them, who caused men to behold of his glory.

verse 29 At the time of Adam, the heavenly instructions to mortal man were delivered through angels (see Moses 5:6, 58 and D&C 29:42).

30 And they began from that time forth to call on his name; therefore God conversed with men, and made known unto them the plan of redemption, which had been prepared from the foundation of the world; and this he made known unto them according to their faith and repentance and their holy works.

verse 30 “from the foundation of the world” See the commentary for verse 25.

Since the time of Adam, spiritual knowledge has been bestowed upon mortals contingent upon their faithfulness—their “faith and repentance and their holy works.”

31 Wherefore, he gave commandments unto men, they having first transgressed the first commandments as to things which were temporal, and becoming as Gods, knowing good from evil, placing themselves in a state to act, or being placed in a state to act according to their wills and pleasures, whether to do evil or to do good—verse 31 “they having first transgressed the first commandments” The “first commandments” were those given to Adam and Eve in the Garden. Though the plural “commandments” is used in this verse, we regard this phrase as referring to the single commandment not to partake of the tree of knowledge of good and evil. When this commandment was transgressed, the act brought unto Adam and Eve knowledge of good and evil, placing them in a position to act “according to their wills . . . whether to do evil or to do good.” It also brought upon them a separation from God, mortality, and the inevitable eventuality of their own deaths.

For a discussion of the difficult questions raised by Adam and Eve's experiences in the Garden of Eden, see the commentary for Moses 3:17 in Learning to Love the Pearl of Great Price.

32 Therefore God gave unto them commandments, after having made known unto them the plan of redemption, that they should not do evil, the penalty thereof being a second death, which was an everlasting death as to things pertaining unto righteousness; for on such the plan of redemption could have no power, for the works of justice could not be destroyed, according to the supreme goodness of God.

verse 32 “Therefore God gave unto them commandments, after having made known unto them the plan of redemption” These are the “second commandments” spoken of in verse 37. These were given to Adam and Eve and their offspring. These commandments are the gospel of Jesus Christ or the plan of redemption. The penalty for breaking these commandments is the “second death,” an everlasting spiritual death. See the discussion of the meaning of the phrase “second death” in the commentary for verse 16 above.

“for on such the plan of redemption could have no power” Every individual who, at the final judgment, is judged unworthy to enter the presence of God suffers the “second death.” Once a person has been so judged, there is no provision in the plan of salvation for bringing him back into the presence of God.

“the works of justice could not be destroyed” This phrase refers to the law of justice. There is no appeal from the workings of this law.

33 But God did call on men, in the name of his Son, (this being the plan of redemption which was laid) saying: If ye will repent and harden not your hearts, then will I have mercy upon you, through mine Only Begotten Son;

verse 33 It is fundamental to the gospel plan that we do all that we do in the name of the Son. Everything redemptive is accomplished in the name of Christ, who mediates all transactions between God and man. “Wherefore, thou shalt do all that thou doest in the name of the Son, and thou shalt repent and call upon God in the name of the Son forevermore” (Moses 5:8).

34 Therefore, whosoever repenteth, and hardeneth not his heart, he shall have claim on mercy through mine Only Begotten Son, unto a remission of his sins; and these shall enter into my rest.

verse 34 “these shall enter into my rest” What is the “rest” of God? Alma will refer to this concept several times during his preaching to the people of Ammonihah (verses 36, 37; Alma 13:6, 12, 13, 16,29; 16:17). In brief, it is to rest or dwell in the presence of God for eternity. See the commentary for 2 Nephi 21:10. See also “The Rest of the Lord” in chapter 17, Justification and Sanctification in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1. See also a discussion of the closely related gift of hope in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine: see “Two Little-Appreciated Gifts of the Spirit” in volume 1, chapter 10, Deliberate Faith and Revealed Faith. See also “The Fruits of Faith” in volume 1, chapter 11, Other Notes on Faith.

35 And whosoever will harden his heart and will do iniquity, behold, I swear in my wrath that he shall not enter into my rest.

36 And now, my brethren, behold I say unto you, that if ye will harden your hearts ye shall not enter into the rest of the Lord; therefore your iniquity provoketh him that he sendeth down his wrath upon you as in the first provocation, yea, according to his word in the last provocation as well as the first, to the everlasting destruction of your souls; therefore, according to his word, unto the last death, as well as the first.

verse 36 “the rest of the Lord” Again, for the meaning of the “rest of the Lord,” see the commentary verse 34.

“first provocation” The “first provocation” was in the Garden of Eden. God was provoked by Adam and Eve’s transgression. As a result, he brought physical and spiritual death upon them and their posterity.

When the Israelites were in the wilderness, they were disobedient. Hence the Lord was provoked and withdrew his presence and swore in his wrath that they would not enter into his rest while in the wilderness (Psalm 95:8-11). This is the “last provocation.”

“last death” The “last death” is the same as the “second death.” The “first” death and the “second death” are defined in the commentary for verse 16 above.

The general meaning of verse 36 is since God was true to his word in earlier provocations, there is every reason to believe that he will be equally true to his word if we provoke him by our disobedience here in mortality.

37 And now, my brethren, seeing we know these things, and they are true, let us repent, and harden not our hearts, that we provoke not the Lord our God to pull down his wrath upon us in these his second commandments which he has given unto us; but let us enter into the rest of God, which is prepared according to his word.

verse 37 “his second commandments” For an explanation of the “second commandments” see the commentary for verse 32.

Alma Chapter 13

Alma 13 Alma's discourse on the Priesthood

Alma 13:3 Alma's teaching on the principle of foreordination.

In Alma 13, Alma provides us with an insightful and prophetic discussion of the higher priesthood, "the holy order of God." For a discussion of the doctrine of the priesthood and especially the rather confusing nomenclature having to do with matters of the priesthood see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 12, Priesthood.

Before undertaking a detailed consideration of each of the chapter's verses, it may be of interest to consider the history of the priesthood organization among the Israelites before the time of Lehi's family's departure from Jerusalem.

From Adam to Moses the high priesthood was administered through what we now refer to as the Patriarchal Order. The Patriarchal Order is a form of government in which worthy high priests preside over and govern their extended families in both civil and ecclesiastical matters. During this time period, the main office of the priesthood was that of patriarch. Adam, Enoch, Noah, and Abraham were patriarch's and administered the Lord's work righteously and by the inspiration of God. A patriarch could bless his offspring by calling upon the powers of heaven. As he gave the birthright blessing to one of his sons, for instance, the keys and powers of the priesthood were extended to that son for the governing of the next generation. By the law of primogeniture, these birthright blessings normally were given to the eldest son. However, from Abraham to Ephraim the birthright blessing went to younger sons because of their righteousness (Genesis 21, 27-28, 48-49).

When the children of Israel proved unworthy to bear the fulness of the high priesthood, it was taken from among them by Jehovah. He also took from among them Moses himself, who held the keys of the priesthood—the right of presidency. Even though the people were then limited largely to the ministrations of the Aaronic priesthood, rather than the higher priesthood, the Lord did leave a few men among them who held the Melchizedek priesthood. These included most prominently the Lord's prophets. In the New World, some of these included Nephi, Jacob, Mosiah, Benjamin, Alma, Samuel the Lamanite, Mormon, and Moroni. These men clearly held the higher or Melchizedek priesthood. There is no evidence that the Aaronic priesthood existed among the Nephites until after the coming of Jesus to the Americas. To what extent all other male Nephites held the priesthood, how and under what circumstances it was conferred, and the exact nature of the priesthood organization between 600 BC and AD 34 are not made clear in the Book of Mormon text.

Before proceeding with our consideration of Alma 13, it should be made clear that each and every blessing offered to a man through his possessing and honoring his priesthood is available also to the righteous woman. Men have no advantages over women in the process of striving to earn their exaltation. In fact, the highest blessings afforded to those in the covenant order of the Melchizedek priesthood can only be bestowed upon the union of the man and woman, not upon the man alone. While she may not be said to “hold” the priesthood, she is a vital part of the covenant order, the higher priesthood.

1 And again, my brethren, I would cite your minds forward to the time when the Lord God gave these commandments unto his children; and I would that ye should remember that the Lord God ordained priests, after his holy order, which was after the order of his Son, to teach these things unto the people.

verse 1 “my brethren” Alma is still speaking to Antionah, a chief ruler among the Ammonihahites and a few others of Ammonihah who had responded to the preachings of Amulek and Alma (see Alma 12:19-20).

“I would cite your minds forward to the time when the Lord God gave these commandments unto his children” To cite is to direct or urge. In this context, Alma is saying, “I would urge you to consider or think about . . .” In our terminology today we would say “I would cite your minds backwards or back in time.” The word forward here means toward the beginning, or toward the front, or earlier in time.

“These commandments” likely refer to those “second commandments” spoken of in Alma 12:32, 37. These were given “unto men” after Adam and Eve were cast out of the Garden of Eden. The commandments were basically the commandments of the gospel of Jesus Christ. The penalty for breaking these commandments consists of the second death, which was “an everlasting death as to things pertaining unto righteousness.”

“his holy order . . . the order of his Son” In our dispensation we have been instructed to refer to the higher priesthood as the Melchizedek priesthood. In the Book of Mormon, it is referred to as “the holy order,” “the holy order of God,” “the order of his Son,” or in some instances simply “the order.”

“the Lord God ordained priests, after his holy order, which was after the order of his Son” Alma seems to be speaking here of those prophet high priests from Adam to Moses about whom he doubtless learned as he studied the brass plates. These men were patriarchs or presiding high priests.

An interesting question is raised by this phrase “the Lord God ordained priests.” Since the time of Adam, has every priesthood ordination taken place by the laying of one mortal’s hands on the head of another mortal? Or, has God ever dispatched a heavenly messenger to take care of the ordination without the mediation of another mortal? Certainly, whenever a mortal priesthood holder has been available then the ordination has been handled from man to man. But has there ever been a time when no mortal priesthood holder was available to perform the ordinance? The restoration of the Aaronic and Melchizedek priesthoods in this dispensation are two examples, of course. But have there been other instances? It is difficult to be certain. Joseph Smith did teach on one occasion: “All the prophets had the Melchizedek priesthood and were ordained by God himself” (TPJS, 180-81). Joseph’s meaning is not clear. Perhaps he is referring to God’s ordaining his prophets through other mortals that represented God.

“to teach these things unto the people” “These things,” again, are the commandments of the gospel referred to in Alma 12:32.

2 And those priests were ordained after the order of his Son, in a manner that thereby the people might know in what manner to look forward to his Son for redemption.

verse 2 “ordained . . . in a manner that thereby the people might know in what manner to look forward to his Son for redemption” This is a most provocative passage (see also verse 16), and it has caused some to speculate. Is it possible that the ordinance of ordaining to the priesthood among the Nephites was not accomplished simply by the laying on of hands as it is today? These verses suggest that when high priests were ordained, the manner of ordination itself somehow communicated information that would cause the people to “know in what manner to look forward to his Son for redemption.” Perhaps the mechanism of ordination itself was more symbolic than the simple laying on of hands.

Perhaps another meaning was intended in verses 2 and 16. The patriarchs or prophets—those who were ordained to the office of high priest—were themselves to be considered types or symbols of the great high priest himself. Not only were they types, but also they were commissioned to teach of Christ and his gospel. “Those who preceded the Lord . . . pointed toward and anticipated his coming. . . All prophets are types and shadows of the Savior. He was called and prepared from before the foundations of this world. So were they. He speaks the truth. So do they. He offers the words of life. So do they. He preaches as one having authority. So do they. He offers his life as a final testament. Such also is required on occasion of those who stand in the prophetic office. Thus, the ancient prophets were living Messianic prophecies” (Robert L. Millet, The Book of Mormon: Alma, the Testimony of the Word, 65).

Yet another meaning may have been intended. The ordaining of a man to the priesthood is a type of the Savior as follows: In the great heavenly councils of the first estate, Jesus was called and ordained to his earthly ministry on account of his great faith and good works in that first estate. He had obeyed implicitly the will of his Father. He received the priesthood in the pre-existence, would receive it anew in mortality, and he will possess it for eternity. In like manner, we do not receive the priesthood capriciously or by chance. We were ordained to receive it because of our obedience and our good works in the first estate. Any ordination occurring during the premortal phase is referred to as foreordination. We may well have been foreordained then, will be ordained anew in this second estate, and we may possess it for eternity providing we are worthy.

We have previously discussed the importance of types or symbols of Christ. Perhaps Lehi summed up this topic best when he taught that “all things which have been given of God from the beginning of the world unto man are the typifying of him” (2 Nephi 11:4, italics added). These “things” include ordinances (verse 16), the law of Moses (Alma 25:15), and his prophets. Put in another way, all of God’s creations made available for the use of man are designed by him to help us recognize, understand, and appreciate the Son of God and his atonement (see Moses 6:63 which says, “all things are created and made to bear record of me”).

Perhaps this verse is best explained by its intention to teach that ordination to the priesthood is symbolic of Christ’s redemption in at least two ways. (1) Both (Christ and the priesthood) were “prepared from the foundation of the world according to the foreknowledge of God;” and (2) verses 11-12 (see below) will suggest that at the time of ordination, a number of these new priesthood holders undergo a redemptive experience. If verse 16 were to be placed following verse 12, it would fit perfectly, the phrase “these ordinances” referring to priesthood ordinations.

3 And this is the manner after which they were ordained—being called and prepared from the foundation of the world according to the foreknowledge of God, on account of their exceeding faith and good works; in the first place being left to choose good or evil; therefore they having chosen good, and exercising exceedingly great faith, are called with a holy calling, yea, with that holy calling which was prepared with, and according to, a preparatory redemption for such.

verse 3 An important general principle is illustrated in this verse, the doctrine of foreordination. Just as our behavior in this mortal phase of our existence—our “second estate”—influences our condition in the eternities—our “third estate”—so does our behavior in our pre-existent phase—our “first estate”—influence our condition here in mortality. Of all of God’s spirit children in the premortal world, some few distinguished themselves by their valiance, their obedience, and their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. These have been foreordained to have the greatest opportunities and blessings here in mortality. Foreordination implies no guarantees from God, but rather extra opportunities and often extra obligations and challenges. Foreordination is like all other blessings. It is a conditional bestowal subject to our faithfulness. Just as a prophet’s prophecies may accurately predict events without determining their outcome, so is foreordination a bestowal of a blessing or an opportunity which foresees but does not fix the outcome.

Some notable mortals have, of course, failed their trusts. David and Judas come to mind. In spite of his doubtless sublime foreordination, David saw Bathsheba from the balcony, lusted after her, and sent for her. God was obviously not pleased with David, but neither was he surprised, since he had perfect divine foreknowledge of David. Judas Iscariot was foreordained to a critical role in the dispensation of the meridian of time. He was to become one of Christ's chosen apostles during the Savior's mortal ministry. He received the testimony that Jesus was the Son of God. Yet, in the full light of that conviction, he turned against his Lord and betrayed him to death.

Foreordination is a powerful doctrine that must be understood carefully in context of other gospel principles. If misunderstood it can encourage a belief in fatalism, lead to a misunderstanding of our agency, cause us to focus on status or position in the kingdom rather than service, and prompt us toward a belief in predestination. Predestination is not a valid gospel concept. While some, because of their outstanding performances in the first estate, may be foreordained to great accomplishments here in mortality, no one is predestined to be exalted without regard to the quality of their mortal lives.

Elder Orson Hyde said of our premortal perspective, "We understood things better there than we do in this lower world." Given this heightened eternal perspective, Elder Hyde speculated about the agreements we made there, "It is not impossible that we signed the articles thereof with our own hands—which articles may be retained in the archives above, to be presented to us when we rise from the dead, and be judged out of our own mouths, according to that which is written in the books. . . Just because we have forgotten, our forgetfulness cannot alter the facts" (JD, 7:314-15). Our forgetting notwithstanding, on occasions there are inklings of remembrance that penetrate the veil, moments that Elder Neal A. Maxwell has referred to as "doctrinal deja vu's." President Joseph F. Smith said:

But in coming here, we forgot all, that our agency might be free indeed, to choose good or evil that we might merit the reward of our own choices and conduct. But by the power of the Spirit, and the redemption of Christ, through obedience, we often catch a spark from the awakened memories of the immortal soul, which lights up our whole being as with the glory of our former home (Gospel Doctrine, 13-14).

One might well ask, "Why have the prophets revealed to us the doctrine of foreordination?" It would seem that, surely, an understanding of the precious doctrine of foreordination can and should encourage us in good works here on earth.

This particular verse is a treatise on foreordination to the priesthood. Here we learn that our accountability began before this earthly phase of our existence. It began in the premortal phase. No man is called to the higher priesthood in the second estate (this mortal life) without being prepared, qualified, called, and foreordained in the first estate—the pre-existence. Thus, priesthood holders in this second estate are "doubly called."

We may expand the concept of foreordination to include other prerogatives of the Lord. Generally, the Lord eschews any interference with our agency. But he does reserve to himself one particular privilege—that of “staffing” the mortal earth. He seems to dispatch the premortal spirits to earth where and when he wishes. How else, for example, would prophets be able to prophesy of this final gospel dispensation—that it will not fail prior to the Lord’s second coming. He doesn’t, after all, force the kingdom of God to survive. He has rather “guaranteed” its success by virtue of those whom he has dispatched to earth during this period. Thus, by this staffing privilege (foreordination) he ensures the kingdom’s success until that splendid moment.

Doubtless the foreordination of individuals in the premortal world to accomplish particular things here in mortality is dependent upon the attributes they acquired through their obedience in that pre-existent sphere. Depending on their unique abilities, or combinations of abilities, hands are laid upon the spirit heads of pre-existent spirits, and they are foreordained to specific earthly tasks. They are thus called to specific earthly callings. These callings become—for those of us so called—stewardships or spiritual obligations here on earth (D&C 72:3-4). Those who magnify and accomplish these callings or these stewardships may then be chosen for exaltation. There is ample evidence in scripture, however, that many are called (foreordained) but only a few are chosen or exalted (see Matthew 7:13-14; 3 Nephi 27:33).

It would not be surprising to one day learn that these foreordained stewardships include even highly individual tasks the Lord would have us identify, prepare for, and accomplish here on earth for the benefit of his earthly kingdom. Each of us comes to earth with a unique combination of hard-won attributes earned in that “first place” by our obedience to the Lord’s laws. It is just possible that there await us here on earth opportunities that we alone might best fulfill. The stumbling block, however, to complete fulfillment of our stewardship here, may well be the necessity of identifying our latent abilities and redeveloping them to a point where they will be truly useful to the Lord and his earthly purposes.

“And this is the manner after which they were ordained” Alma seems to be referring here to the ancient patriarchs. Does this verse apply only to them or does it also apply to all those of us with lesser station in the church? It likely applies to the rest of us as well. Read on!

“being called and prepared from the foundation of the world” The phrase “from the foundation of the world” refers to man’s pre-existence or first estate.

“according to the foreknowledge of God” This calling and foreordination to the priesthood (and to other special stations in life) is not made capriciously. It is made “according to the foreknowledge of God.” Was our being foreordained a free gift to us, or did we have to earn it? The latter is true, of course. The first estate was an important period of testing to see if we would “choose good or evil.” Those who chose the good qualified to become foreordained to receive the higher priesthood and doubtless many other foreordinations here in mortality. Joseph Smith wrote: “Every man who has a calling to minister to the inhabitants of the world was ordained to that very purpose in the Grand Council of heaven before this world was. I suppose I was ordained to this very office in that Grand Council” (TPJS, 365). Referring to this statement of the prophet’s, J. Reuben Clark, Jr. said: “I do not know whether we have a right to interpret the prophet’s statement . . . but I like to think that it does include those of us of lesser calling and lesser stature. . . I like to think that perhaps in the Grand Council something at least was said to us indicating what would be expected of us, and empowering us, subject to the re-confirmation here, to do certain things in building up the kingdom of God on earth” (CR [Sept-Oct 1950] 170-71).

Referring to the foreknowledge of God, Elder James E. Talmage wrote:

Our heavenly Father has a full knowledge of the nature and disposition of each of his children, a knowledge gained by long observation and experience in the past eternity of our primeval childhood; a knowledge compared with which that gained by earthly parents through mortal experience with their children is infinitesimally small. By reason of that surpassing knowledge, God reads the future of child and children, of men individually and of men collectively as communities and nations. He knows what each will do under given conditions and sees the end from the beginning. His foreknowledge is based on intelligence and reason. He foresees the future as a state which naturally and surely will be; not as one which must be because he has arbitrarily willed that it shall be (Jesus the Christ, 29).

Both the Father and the Son have divine foreknowledge concerning all mortals regarding their responsiveness to the gospel message. Jesus said, “I am the good shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine” (John 10:14, italics added). On another occasion, he said, “My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me” (John 10:27, italics added). In this dispensation, he declared, “And ye are called to bring to pass the gathering of mine elect; for mine elect hear my voice and harden not their hearts” (D&C 29:7). It is no wonder that the Lord could say to Jeremiah, “Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee and I ordained thee a prophet to the nations” (Jeremiah 1:5). Paul said of God, “He hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world” (Ephesians 1:4). With our primitive mortal intellects, we cannot possibly understand, in full, this divine foreknowledge. In some way, the past, present, and future are before God simultaneously, though we certainly cannot understand just how. In a revelation to Moses, the Lord said, “And all things are present with me, for I know them all” (Moses 1:6). In a revelation to Joseph Smith, the Lord described himself as “The same which knoweth all things, for all things are present before mine eyes” (D&C 38:2).

We commonly observe in life some individuals with special limitations and challenges. These are all in the Lord’s hands, and he loves them perfectly. According to his divine foreknowledge, he has placed, or at least he has allowed to be placed—doubtless mostly through “mortal accident”—a “thorn in the flesh” (2 Corinthians 12:7). Like him who was “blind from birth,” (John 9:1-2) some will come to bring glory to God because of their infirmities. Certainly, we should not assume that all circumstances here on earth are micromanaged and dictated by the Lord, but he does, on occasion, direct circumstances in the spirit of divine tutorials. For these occasional instances, a proper understanding of the doctrine of foreordination can help us in understanding and coping with the vicissitudes of life. We can be more comfortable with the things allotted to us in life.

“on account of their exceeding faith and good works” Was it really necessary for us to exercise faith when we lived in the pre-existence—referred to here as “the first place”? After all, did we not live with our heavenly parents and see them with our eyes and converse with them? Was it really necessary for us to exercise faith in that setting? Did we not walk by knowledge and not by faith? We know that it was necessary to exercise faith as we all strove, with various degrees of success, to be obedient (see particularly the discussion of deliberate faith in Deliberate Faith and Revealed Faith in volume 1, chapter 10 of Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine). Based on that obedience some qualified for more blessings from the Father than did others. Abraham was allowed a vision of the individuals in the first estate, and he saw “many [who were] noble and great ones.” This implies that there were some there also who were not as noble and not as great. None of the talents or gifts we possess here on earth was given to us gratuitously. Rather, they were earned. For example, those born into this life with the gift of deliberate faith (the compelling inclination to obey even when circumstances make it difficult, or inconvenient) merit that blessing. We are taught that there is a law “irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated” (D&C 130:20-21). This eternal principle pertained in the first estate as well as in the second estate. It should not be surprising, then, that the Lord has selected certain individuals for particular assignments before they came here. These individuals have been foreordained to these assignments.

Those men who demonstrated “exceeding faith and good works” were ordained in that “first place” to receive the higher priesthood in this second estate. This is the doctrine of foreordination. A man’s foreordination is based upon his faithfulness in the pre-existence and God’s foreknowledge of that faithfulness and the man’s unique combination of spiritual gifts.

The reference made in this verse and the verses which follow to the first estate or pre-existence—the “first place”—is probably the first reference in modern scripture, made available in this dispensation, to our premortal phase. More specific references were eventually made available to the saints in the book of Moses.

Did righteous men hold the priesthood in the pre-existent world? Or is the priesthood saved for a man’s second estate? Joseph Fielding Smith wrote: “In regard to the holding of the priesthood in the pre-existence, I will say that there was an organization there just as well as an organization here, and men there held authority. Men chosen to positions of trust in the spirit world [the pre-existence] held priesthood” (Doctrines of Salvation, 3:81).

“in the first place being left to choose good or evil” The “first place,” again, is the premortal world. There the spirit children of our Father in Heaven had their agency and abundant opportunities to choose between good and evil.

“they having chosen good, and exercising exceedingly great faith, are called with a holy calling” Those who were valiant in the first estate were “called with a holy calling”—that is, they were foreordained to receive the higher priesthood. If it was possible to hold the priesthood in the premortal world, then perhaps this being “called with a holy calling” refers to actually receiving the higher priesthood in the first estate as well.

“that holy calling which was prepared with, and according to, a preparatory redemption for such” This phrase is at first a bit confusing. Let us consider its meaning carefully. “That holy calling” refers to the higher priesthood. The phrase “which was prepared with, and according to” means that the higher priesthood “was created for the purpose of.” Thus far, the meaning is that “the higher priesthood was created or prepared for the purpose of.” Of what? Why was the higher priesthood created? What is its essential purpose here on earth of those who bear this higher priesthood? Their purpose is to assist in the “preparatory redemption” of man. What is this “preparatory redemption”? The primary function of those called with this “holy calling” to the higher priesthood is to assist in the redemption of fallen man. Their calling is to aid, to strengthen, to encourage, to bless lives and ultimately to assist in the exaltation of their fellow mortals. Their work is preparatory in the sense that before Christ’s mortal advent, the work of the priesthood was to prepare the people for his coming. The work of those who have lived or are living in this final dispensation is to prepare the world for his second coming. Whom are these bearers of the higher priesthood supposed to assist in their redemption from the fall? They are to provide help “for such” people as those priesthood bearers encounter here on earth.

4 And thus they have been called to this holy calling on account of their faith, while others would reject the Spirit of God on account of the hardness of their hearts and blindness of their minds, while, if it had not been for this they might have had as great privilege as their brethren.

verse 4 This verse teaches the simple idea that some of those foreordained in the premortal world to receive the Melchizedek priesthood on earth will fail to live worthy of that privilege and miss out on the blessings they might have had.

“And thus they have been called to this holy calling on account of their faith” Once these faithful and foreordained men arrive on earth to live out their mortal experience some of them live up to their foreordination, accept the gospel, and receive the priesthood.

“while others would reject the Spirit of God on account of the hardness of their hearts and blindness of their minds” Others of these foreordained men may prove to be unresponsive to the promptings of the Spirit and never receive the gospel or the priesthood.

“if it had not been for this they might have had as great privilege as their brethren” If it had not been for the “hardness of their hearts” and the “blindness of their minds” they might well have received the same blessings here on earth as their brethren who lived up to their foreordination. The following verse reiterates this tragic irony.

5 Or in fine, in the first place they were on the same standing with their brethren; thus this holy calling being prepared from the foundation of the world for such as would not harden their hearts, being in and through the atonement of the Only Begotten Son, who was prepared—verse 5 “In fine” means in summary or in conclusion.

“in the first place they were on the same standing with their brethren” The “first place” is the premortal world. This refers to those potential priesthood holders who were valiant in the pre-existence and who thus were foreordained to receive the priesthood here on earth. Unfortunately, they were not valiant at some subsequent time in their progression—either later in their pre-existent sojourn or here on earth. In the pre-existence, they earned the “same standing” or the same foreordained blessings as did their brethren who later received the priesthood here on earth. Yet the “hardness of their hearts and blindness of their minds” caused them to lose the blessings of the priesthood.

Here, then, is the difference between the valid concept of foreordination and the false concept of predestination: If God had seen fit to pronounce a man predestined to receive the priesthood, then he would do so without regard to his obedience or valiance. On the other hand, those who are foreordained in the pre-existence may indeed lose their blessings through sin and ultimately “live beneath their privileges.” In the “first place” they qualify for marvelous earthly blessings, but, once in mortality, they fail to respond to the promptings of the Spirit, become lost in worldliness, and lose their rewards. President Harold B. Lee explained the meaning of a pertinent scripture in this regard: “Despite that calling which is spoken of in the scriptures as ‘foreordination,’ we have another inspired declaration: ‘Behold, there are many called, but few are chosen’ (D&C 121:34). This suggests that even though we have our agency here, there are many who were foreordained [“called”] before the world was, to a greater state than they have prepared themselves for here. Even though they might have been among the noble and great, from among whom the Father declared he would make his chosen leaders, they may fail of that calling here in mortality [they are not “chosen” for the priesthood calling on earth or for celestial glory] (CR, [Oct 1973] 3-10). For additional discussion of the scriptural word chosen, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:19-20.

An interesting aside as that while the Book of Mormon teaches the doctrine of the pre-existence, as in this verse, there is no mention in the Book of Mormon of the spirit creation of all things which is known from Moses 3:5 and D&C 29:31-34.

“being in and through the atonement of the Only Begotten Son” Here is a phrase that might at first cause confusion. For example, what is the antecedent of “being”? What does the phrase “in and through” actually mean? How does the atonement of the Savior tie in to our present topic?

The antecedent of this phrase seems to be the higher priesthood or at least a foreordination to this priesthood—“this holy calling.”

If one utilizes modern scripture-search technology to study the uses in scripture of the phrase “in and through,” it is interesting to note that it is found exclusively in the Book of Mormon. There are six other places where it is used (2 Nephi 2:6; 10:24; Mosiah 3:17, 18; 16:13; Alma 38:9). Its meaning in each of these instances is to show the absolute obligatory relationship between the salvation of man and the Savior’s atonement. Here in verse 5, then, we might conclude that this phrase “in and through” signifies an absolute obligatory relationship between the higher priesthood and something else. What is that something else? It is “the atonement of the Only Begotten Son.”

In what way is the higher priesthood obligatorily dependent upon the atonement? The covenant order of the higher priesthood could not exist had there been no atonement made. The very real blessings a man receives by virtue of his holding the priesthood are well out of proportion to his works in meriting those blessings. Had not the Savior atoned, he could not bestow those blessings. It would not be fair. It would not be just. The law of justice would be offended and would not allow it.

“who was prepared” Here is a reminder that the Savior himself, in the pre-existence and here on earth, had to progress line upon line, from grace to grace until he received the “fulness of the priesthood (D&C 124:28),” the “fulness” of his Father (D&C 93:11-14).

6 And thus being called by this holy calling, and ordained unto the high priesthood of the holy order of God, to teach his commandments unto the children of men, that they also might enter into his rest—verse 6 Those who had been foreordained to receive the higher priesthood—those “called by this holy calling”—who did not harden their hearts are then ordained to the “high priesthood of the holy order of God.” This verse speaks of the covenant order of the higher priesthood as the “holy order of God,” while the following verse refers to “the order of his Son.” We would presume that these two orders are one and the same.

We might define an “order” as a group of individuals who are distinguished by some particular characteristic. In this “order” the individuals are characterized by certain blessings and certain obligations.

It is apparent there are certain levels within this holy order of God. We gain entrance into this order when we receive the Melchizedek priesthood. Another level is achieved when we receive the ordinances of the temple—the endowment and the ordinance of eternal marriage. The ultimate level is reached when an individual is sealed up to eternal life or has his calling and election made sure, a state which the scriptures refer to as receiving the “fulness of the priesthood” (D&C 124:28) or gaining entrance into the “Church of the Firstborn” (Hebrews 12:23; D&C 76:54, 71, 94, 102). Joseph Smith taught: “If a man gets a fulness of the priesthood of God, he has to get it in the same way that Jesus Christ obtained it, and that was by keeping all the commandments and obeying all the ordinances of the house of the Lord” (TPJS, 308). He later added: “Those holding the fulness of the Melchizedek priesthood are kings and priests of the Most High God, holding the keys of power and blessings” (TPJS, 323).

Understanding this highest level of the Melchizedek priesthood sheds significant light on some choice scriptural references. For example, that priesthood order into which Enoch and his people were received (which is the same that was later conferred upon Melchizedek) is described in JST, Genesis 14:30-32: “For God having sworn unto Enoch and his seed with an oath by himself; that every one being ordained after this order and calling should have power, by faith, to break mountains, to divide the seas, to dry up waters, to turn them out of their course . . . to stand in the presence of God.” Some people were even taken from the earth because of their righteousness: “And men having this faith, coming up unto this order of God, were translated and taken up into heaven.”

Just as there are different degrees of blessings in the higher priesthood, there are also differing levels of obligation. As we receive more and higher blessings we place ourselves under increasing obligation to be true to the covenants of the priesthood. Every man who is introduced into this covenant order is provided an explanation of the “oath and covenant of the priesthood” as contained in D&C 84:33-42. Simply stated, when a man receives the higher priesthood, he must understand that he places himself under obligation to be true to the covenants he makes. If he is not true to them, then it would have been better for him in the eternities had he never entered into them in the first place. The more blessings he receives, the greater is his obligation. Ultimately, if he receives the highest blessing and is sealed up to eternal life, then his obligation is so sacred and binding, that a complete disavowal may even constitute grounds for being found guilty of committing the unpardonable sin or the so-called sin against the Holy Ghost.

The male does not make this ascent in the priesthood by himself. While an unmarried male may hold the higher priesthood, it is the completed eternal unit, the male and the female joined in eternal marriage, that may receive the blessings of the fulness of the priesthood and become exalted to the highest degree in the life to come. Certainly the Melchizedek priesthood is not an automatic ticket into the celestial kingdom. Each man and woman must painstakingly earn their own way by repeatedly repenting and striving to obey the commandments. Also, each must receive the full ordinance of baptism including the baptism of water, the baptism of the Spirit, and the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost. See Baptism, the Ordinance that Brings Spiritual Growth in volume 1, chapter 18, of Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine.

“to teach his commandments unto the children of men” The antecedent of “his” is, of course, “the Only Begotten Son” in verse 5. Certainly, one of the most important charges of those who hold the Melchizedek priesthood is to teach the doctrines of salvation. The Lord stated in D&C 84:19 that the “greater priesthood administereth the gospel and holdeth the key of the mysteries of the kingdom, even the key of the knowledge of God.” Joseph Smith taught that the Melchizedek priesthood “is the channel through which all knowledge, doctrine, the plan of salvation and every important matter is revealed from heaven” (TPJS, 166-67).

“that they also might enter into his rest” For a discussion of the rest of the Lord, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 21:10. See also “The Rest of the Lord” in chapter 17, Justification and Sanctification in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1. See also a discussion of the closely related gift of hope in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine: see “Two Little-Appreciated Gifts of the Spirit” in volume 1, chapter 10, Deliberate Faith and Revealed Faith. Moses, as he traveled with the Israelites in the wilderness wanted his beloved Israelites to share in the sacred privilege which he had had—that of seeing God face to face. He taught them that in order to have this privilege they had to possess the highest degree of the Melchizedek priesthood (the “fulness of the priesthood” spoken of above) which, of course, required them to be responsive, obedient, and worthy. Unfortunately they failed the test. Hence the higher priesthood was removed from them, and even Moses was taken from them. Read the account of this incident in D&C 84:19-25:

And this greater priesthood administereth the gospel and holdeth the key of the mysteries of the kingdom, even the key of the knowledge of God.

Therefore, in the ordinances thereof, the power of godliness is manifest.

And without the ordinances thereof, and the authority of the priesthood, the power of godliness is not manifest unto men in the flesh;

For without this [the power of godliness] no man can see the face of God, even the Father, and live.

Now this Moses plainly taught to the children of Israel in the wilderness, and sought diligently to sanctify his people that they might behold the face of God;

But they hardened their hearts and could not endure his presence; therefore, the Lord in his wrath, for his anger was kindled against them, swore that they should not enter into his rest while in the wilderness, which rest is the fulness of his glory.

Therefore, he took Moses out of their midst, and the Holy Priesthood also.

7 This high priesthood being after the order of his Son, which order was from the foundation of the world; or in other words, being without beginning of days or end of years, being prepared from eternity to all eternity, according to his foreknowledge of all things—verse 7 “in other words, being without beginning of days or end of years, being prepared from eternity to all eternity, according to his foreknowledge of all things” A similar expression is found in Hebrews 7:1-3 where it has caused much confusion. In Hebrews, in apparent reference to Melchizedek, king of Salem, we read that “Melchisedec” is: “Without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; but made like unto the Son of God; abideth a priest continually.” We learn from the JST and from this verse in the Book of Mormon that Hebrews 7:3 was not intended by Paul to say that Melchizedek was endless. Rather it was the priesthood to which he was ordained that is endless. The priesthood is from eternity past to eternity future. In further explanation of Hebrews 7:3, Joseph Smith wrote: “The Melchizedek priesthood holds the right from the eternal God, and not by descent from father and mother; and that priesthood is as eternal as God himself, having neither beginning of days nor end of life” (TPJS, 323).

Joseph Smith taught: “The priesthood is an everlasting principle, and existed with God from eternity, and will to eternity, without beginning of days or end of years” (TPJS, 157). President George Q. Cannon taught that the priesthood “had no beginning; [it will have] no end. It is [as] eternal as our Father and God, and it extends into the eternities to come, and it is as endless as eternity is endless, and as our God is endless: for it is the power and authority by which our Father and God sits upon his throne and wields the power he does throughout the innumerable worlds over which he exercises dominion” (JD, 26:245). Thus, we learn that the holy priesthood after the order of the Son of God was in operation in the first estate or pre-existence. It exists here in mortality. And, it will play a vital role in the spirit world and in the kingdoms of glory.

8 Now they were ordained after this manner—being called with a holy calling, and ordained with a holy ordinance, and taking upon them the high priesthood of the holy order, which calling, and ordinance, and high priesthood, is without beginning or end—verse 8 “they were ordained after this manner” They, again, refers to those who had been foreordained to receive the higher priesthood who did not harden their hearts and were ordained here on earth to the “high priesthood of the holy order of God.”

We have learned then from these verses in Alma 13 that in order to hold the priesthood one must be called of God (one cannot appoint oneself), be valiant in one’s loyalty to the Savior and his gospel, and then receive the priesthood according to the order of the Church, that is by the laying on of hands.

Here is a provocative question: Are women excluded from the opportunity of receiving “holy callings,” or foreordinations, from God? It seems clear they are not.

9 Thus they become high priests forever, after the order of the Son, the Only Begotten of the Father, who is without beginning of days or end of years, who is full of grace, equity, and truth. And thus it is. Amen.

verse 9 “Thus they become high priests forever” There are apparently two meanings of the title “high priest.” First, it is one of the ordained offices within the Melchizedek priesthood. Second, Elder Bruce McConkie taught that a high priest is “God’s chief representative on the earth, the one who holds the highest spiritual position in his kingdom in any age. . . This special designation of the chief spiritual officer of the church has reference to the administrative position which he holds rather than to the office to which he is ordained in the priesthood” (Mormon Doctrine, 355).

10 Now, as I said concerning the holy order, or this high priesthood, there were many who were ordained and became high priests of God; and it was on account of their exceeding faith and repentance, and their righteousness before God, they choosing to repent and work righteousness rather than to perish;

11 Therefore they were called after this holy order, and were sanctified, and their garments were washed white through the blood of the Lamb.

verse 11 The process of being sanctified has two separate parts. It occurs in response to an individual’s successfully obeying a commandment. First, it means to have an increment of the natural self burned out of one’s soul “as if by fire.” Second, sanctification refers also to the receiving of an increment of a gift of the Spirit—a portion of an attribute of Christ. Sanctification is an ongoing process that occurs as an ongoing reward for an individual’s obedience to the commandments of the gospel. For a more complete discussion of the principle of sanctification see Justification and Sanctification in volume 1, chapter 17 of Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine.

For a discussion on the sanctifying influence of the Holy Ghost and the so-called “baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost, see Baptism, the Ordinance that Brings Spiritual Growth, in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 18. The sanctified individual is worthy of a celestial reward. He earned this state through striving to conform to the principles of the gospel and through repeatedly repenting of imperfections and striving and striving again and again.

12 Now they, after being sanctified by the Holy Ghost, having their garments made white, being pure and spotless before God, could not look upon sin save it were with abhorrence; and there were many, exceedingly great many, who were made pure and entered into the rest of the Lord their God.

verses 10-12 Alma's repeated references to "they" as he spoke to the people of Ammonihah refers to those, in prior history, that had been ordained to the higher priesthood after being foreordained to such in the premortal world.

It seems that we human beings in any era tend to regard our own generation and our own people as enlightened and advanced and smugly regard those of other times and other cultures as less informed, less sophisticated, and less capable. It is humbling to note that Alma was inspired to report on "many, exceedingly great many" who lived between the time of Adam and his own day who were righteous souls who were ordained to the higher priesthood, sanctified by the blood of Christ, and who entered into the rest of the Lord. In like manner, President Joseph F. Smith in October 1918 saw in vision "an innumerable company" of righteous spirits who had assembled in paradise to greet the Christ who visited them between his crucifixion and resurrection (D&C 138).

13 And now, my brethren, I would that ye should humble yourselves before God, and bring forth fruit meet for repentance, that ye may also enter into that rest.

verse 13 "bring forth fruit meet for repentance" The meaning of the adjective "meet" in this context is an archaic one. It means consistent with or indicative of. "Fruits" of repentance implies tangible works and deeds rather than mere intentions or professions.

verses 14-19 The subject of these six verses is the man Melchizedek. To those whose sole source of information about Melchizedek is the Bible he is an enigmatic character about whom many traditions abound. For example, by some he is identified as Shem, the son of Noah. Others hold that he was a descendant of Shem. One tradition suggests that he was named Melchizedek by God when the priesthood was bestowed upon him (Louis Ginzberg, The Legends of the Jews. 2 volumes Philadelphia: The Jewish Publication Society of America, 1937, 1:233; 5:225-26). In the Bible Melchizedek suddenly appears on the scene at the time of Abraham. Abraham unhesitatingly recognizes him as a man of superior spiritual status, pays tithes to him, and receives from him a blessing. Melchizedek then disappears from the biblical record for a thousand years. King David then refers to the eternal "order of Melchizedek" (Psalm 110:4). Another thousand years passes, and then Paul refers to him in Hebrews 7.

His name is derived from two Hebrew roots, melekh (king), and tzedek (righteousness). Thus, the name Melchizedek literally means “righteous king.” Josephus explained that the city of Salem, over which Melchizedek reigned as king and presided as high priest, later became known as Jerusalem (Josephus Flavius, Josephus: Complete Works. Translated by William Whiston. Rapids: Kregel Publications, 1981, 1.10.3). In writing of Jerusalem and referring to Melchizedek, Josephus wrote: “He who first built it was a potent man among the Canaanites and in our tongue called the Righteous King, for such he really was; on which account he was [there] the first priest of God, and first built a temple [there]” (Ibid., 6.10.1).

What additional information do we in the Church have today about this interesting character? Quite a bit, as it turns out. Today we have an advantage in learning about Melchizedek. We are able to study these verses in Alma 13 along with the Joseph Smith Translation of Genesis 14, Joseph’s lectures on the priesthood, and the Joseph Smith Translation of Hebrews 5 and 7, all of which contain considerable information about this good man.

It is clear that Melchizedek was a remarkable type or symbol of Christ. His was a life of devotion to duty, a life that truly pointed people toward the Christ. The church in ancient days and the church today call the higher priesthood after his name. This is done both to honor the name of Melchizedek, because he so closely emulated Christ, and to avoid the too frequent repetition of the sacred name of Deity (D&C 107:3-4). Elder Franklin D. Richards reported that the prophet Joseph said that the power of Melchizedek was “not the power of a prophet, nor apostle, nor patriarch only, but of a king and priest to God, to open the windows of heaven and pour out the peace and law of endless life to man. And no man can attain to the joint heirship with Jesus Christ without being administered to by one having the same power and authority of Melchizedek” (Words of Joseph Smith 245; spelling and punctuation corrected). Melchizedek is the prototype of the righteous priesthood holder. He magnified his priesthood callings and chose righteousness.

Joseph Smith’s inspired translation of the Bible provides us with provocative insights into the man Melchizedek:

Now Melchizedek was a man of faith, who wrought righteousness; and when a child he feared God, and stopped the mouths of lions, and quenched the violence of fire. And thus, having been approved of God, he was ordained an high priest after the order of the covenant which God made with Enoch. It being after the order of the Son of God; which order came, not by man, nor the will of man; neither by father nor mother; neither by beginning of days nor end of years; but of God; And it was delivered unto men by the calling of his own voice, according to his own will, unto as many as believed on his name. For God having sworn unto Enoch and unto his seed with an oath by himself; that every one being ordained after this order and calling should have power, by faith, to break mountains, to divide the seas, to dry up waters, to turn them out of their course; to put at defiance the armies of nations, to divide the earth, to break every band, to stand in the presence of God; to do all things according to his will, according to his command, subdue principalities and powers; and this by the will of the Son of God which was from before the foundation of the world. And men having this faith, coming up unto this order of God, were translated and taken up into heaven. And now, Melchizedek was a priest of this order; therefore he obtained peace in Salem, and was called the Prince of peace. And his people wrought righteousness, and obtained heaven, and sought for the city of Enoch which God had before taken, separating it from the earth, having reserved it unto the latter days, or the end of the world; And hath said, and sworn with an oath, that the heavens and the earth should come together; and the sons of God should be tried so as by fire. And this Melchizedek, having thus established righteousness, was called the king of heaven by his people, or, in other words, the King of peace (JST, Genesis 14:26-36).

Also from the JST we learn that Melchizedek was the keeper of God's storehouse and that God had appointed him to receive tithes for the poor. "Wherefore, Abram paid unto him tithes of all that he had, of all the riches which he possessed, which God had given him more than that which he had need" (JST, Genesis 14:37-39).

Alma's discourse here in Alma 13 in some large measure also focused on repentance, a subject which he had been commanded by the Lord, through the voice of an angel, to preach to the people of that city (Alma 8:16).

Alma emphasized how Melchizedek used his position as high priest to help his people to humble themselves and to repent of their wickedness (Alma 13:13, 17–18). Perhaps bringing about the greatest priesthood miracle of all, Melchizedek preached repentance to his people, "and behold, they did repent" (verse 18). He pointed his people toward the Son of God through priesthood ordinances (verse 16) and brought peace to the land (verse 18). He was a shining example of a high priest after the order of the Son of God (verse 9), one of the greatest that ever lived, and for this reason he was particularly mentioned in the Hebrew scriptures (verse 19). The deepest wish of Alma's heart was that somehow he could do likewise and cry repentance in such a way that his people "should repent and come unto our God, that there might not be more sorrow upon all the face of the earth" (Alma 29:2).

Alma seized the opportunity to use the example of Melchizedek's people in hopes that the Ammonihahites would do likewise—that is, repent: "And now, my brethren, I would that ye should humble yourselves before God, and bring forth fruit meet for repentance, that ye may also enter into that rest. Yea, humble yourselves even as the people in the days of Melchizedek" (Alma 13:14).

Although the people of Ammonihah may have already been familiar with and recognized Alma's story of Melchizedek, Alma wanted his people to learn important new lessons from it. The book of Alma presents Alma, as high priest over the church, trying to bring the diverse Nephite communities into a unity of faith after a series of political and religious crises, including the rise of a false religion, which Nehor started. Alma went from city to city that he might preach the word of God unto them, to stir them up in remembrance of their duty, and that he might pull down, by the word of God, all the pride and craftiness and all the contentions which were among his people, seeing no way that he might reclaim them save it were in bearing down in pure testimony against them (Alma 4:19).

The people of Ammonihah, however, had embraced the religion of Nehor (see Alma 16:11), and thus they had utterly rejected Alma's authority as high priest when he tried to preach in their city (Alma 8:11–12). The Nehorite priests preached "for the sake of riches and honor" and despised the church of God (Alma 1:3, 16). They saw Alma as a threat, because the members—and leaders—of the church of God "were not proud in their own eyes, and because they did impart the word of God, one with another, without money and without price" (Alma 1:20). Alma and Amulek were given power and authority from God to call the Ammonihahites to repentance (Alma 8:29–32).

In this context, Alma's account of the story of Melchizedek served to legitimize his claims of authority from God by appealing to this ancient order of the holy priesthood. Similar to Alma, Melchizedek had been both a great political as well as religious leader. Melchizedek's story was one that people of Ammonihah probably knew and possibly still respected as canonical. If they respected the legacy of Melchizedek, they should have appreciated what he had done for his people. Alma made sure to emphasize the point that Melchizedek's people, too, had "waxed strong in iniquity and abomination . . . had all gone astray" and "were full of all manner of wickedness" before Melchizedek had led them to repent (Alma 13:17). Those of the profession of Nehor did not believe in the repentance of their sins (Alma 15:15), but they evidently did not have so low an opinion of scripture yet that they could ignore Melchizedek, so Alma drew a deliberate contrast between what their leaders were leading them to do (not repent and harden their hearts) with what a truly righteous leader such as Melchizedek would be doing. He argued that they should repent contrary to the Nehorite antipathy towards doing so.

Finally, Alma made extensive efforts to emphasize that the power by which this was accomplished was not Melchizedek's priesthood, but that it was God's "holy order, which was after the order of his Son." If they truly wanted to approach God and obtain His salvation, the people of Ammonihah would ultimately need to accept the Messiah, the Son of God, and the priesthood ordinances that came through His holy order.

14 Yea, humble yourselves even as the people in the days of Melchizedek, who was also a high priest after this same order which I have spoken, who also took upon him the high priesthood forever.

verse 14 “Melchizedek, who was also a high priest after this same order which I have spoken” This “same order” is the “holy order of God” or the “holy order of the Son of God.”

“who also took upon him the high priesthood forever” It is sobering to realize that those of us who are blessed with the priesthood, like Melchizedek, may be privileged to exercise it forever—for all time and eternity.

15 And it was this same Melchizedek to whom Abraham paid tithes; yea, even our father Abraham paid tithes of one-tenth part of all he possessed.

verse 15 This is an interesting bit of information about Melchizedek and dates Melchizedek’s sojourn on earth as being about 1900 BC. An old Jewish tradition states, “Melchizedek, the king of righteousness, priest of God Most High, and king of Jerusalem, came forth to meet [Abraham],” as Abraham was returning from war “with bread and wine. And this high priest instructed Abraham in the laws of the priesthood and in the Torah” (Ginzberg 1:233). Modern revelation teaches us that “Abraham received the priesthood from Melchizedek, who received it through the lineage of his fathers, even till Noah; And from Noah till Enoch, through the lineage of their fathers; And from Enoch to Abel, who was slain by the conspiracy of his brother, who received the priesthood by the commandments of God, by the hand of his father Adam, who was the first man” (D&C 84:14-16). Joseph Smith reported that Abraham said to Melchizedek: “I believe all that thou hast taught me concerning the priesthood and the coming of the Son of Man; so Melchizedek ordained Abraham and sent him away. Abraham rejoiced, saying, now I have a priesthood” (TPJS, 322-23).

16 Now these ordinances were given after this manner, that thereby the people might look forward on the Son of God, it being a type of his order, or it being his order, and this that they might look forward to him for a remission of their sins, that they might enter into the rest of the Lord.

verse 16 “these ordinances were given after this manner, that thereby the people might look forward on the Son of God” See the commentary for verse 2.

“it being a type of his order, or it being his order” This may be an example of a “typo,” and the correction of that typo, made during the engraving of the plates. It obviously is not possible to erase errors that are engraved onto the plates. The writer may have decided mid-sentence that the manner of priesthood ordinations is not just a type or symbol of God’s order; it is actually the order of God itself.

I mentioned previously that scholars have suggested that this verse is actually out of place and probably should have been placed between verses 12 and 13 of Alma 13 (Grant Hardy, “The Book of Mormon as a Written/Literary Artifact” in Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, 12/2, 2003, 107-09), and that it may well have been intended to fit between verses 12 and 13. Because of the dictated nature of the translation process

(see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, Appendix A, The Process of Translating the Book of Mormon), and the fact that this verse has always been placed just where it is now (including the original and printer's manuscript and all subsequent editions), the misplacement of the verse must have happened prior to its being recorded on metal plates.

The first clue to this verse's being out of place is that if it were omitted, we would never miss it. In fact, it interrupts the smooth flow of ideas in the discussion of Melchizedek (verses 14-20). The second clue is that the expected connections do not make sense. The phrase "these ordinances" in this verse must refer to some ordinances mentioned earlier, and the only possible antecedent that immediately precedes this verse is tithing. Though we might consider tithing as an ordinance, it is difficult to see how paying tithing encourages people to "look forward on the Son of God." Also, why would paying tithing be referred to by the plural form: these ordinances?

We have already drawn a connection between this verse and verse 2 of this chapter (see the commentary for that verse), and verse 16 certainly fits better if it is read in the context of the discussion on priesthood ordination in verses 1-12. Note also that the phrase "that rest" in verse 13 demands an antecedent, which it would have if it followed verse 16. Thus, if verse 16 were shifted to follow verse 12, it would fit better with both what comes before and what follows. The discussion of Melchizedek which follows, beginning in verse 14, then proceeds smoothly to the end of Alma's speech, save for the odd break in verse 16.

Is it possible that this apparent error might have been made by the prophet Mormon or someone working with him? It is entirely possible. Brother Hardy has pointed to a few examples in the Bible of verses generally thought to be out of place:

1. Judges 20:23 which should probably be moved to precede verse 22;
2. Isaiah 38:21-22 which should be moved between verses 6 and 7 (thus bringing Isaiah 38 in line with 2 Kings 20:6-11); and
3. A few manuscripts place 1 Corinthians 14:34-35 after verse 40.

The fact that such mistakes happen challenges scholars to try to determine the cause. How could a block of text come to be misplaced, and why would that error be carried forward? Generally, such errors are the result of (1) scribal additions; (2) editorial comments in the margins becoming part of text; or (3) mistakes by scribes as they looked back and forth from the manuscript they were copying to the one they were writing.

How could such an error have gotten into a text written on metallic plates? Errors might have crept in before the text was committed to the metal plates of Mormon (please make certain that you are familiar with the Book of Mormon plates by reading the supplemental article Those Confusing Book of Mormon Plates). Perhaps someone transcribing the passage onto the plates of Mormon from other plates forgot verse 16, caught his mistake three verses later, and then wrote in verse 16 with an arrow or similar sign—which Joseph did not reproduce in English—or in the margins. In this particular case, there is something that would immediately catch the attention of textual scholars. Verses 12 and 16 both end with virtually the same phrase: “enter(ed) into the rest of the Lord.” A copyist could have read verse 12 and looked down to write it out, but then as he looked back at the original, his eye could have skipped to the next rest of the Lord (at the end of verse 16, which may have been the next verse), resulting in the inadvertent deletion of an entire sentence. Realizing his mistake three verses later, he then copied what he had missed, out of order, so as not to lose any of the precious words. This very phenomenon has, in fact, occurred and is the explanation for an entire verse being omitted just after Alma 32:30 in the 1830 edition (the missing words were finally restored only in 1981—see Robert J. Matthews, “The New Publications of the Standard Works—1979, 1981,” BYU Studies, 22/4 [fall 1982]: 387-424). The latter example, however, was a mistake in the transmission of the English translation, whereas Alma 13:16 seems to be a problem that predated the translation. That is, it was on the plates of Mormon themselves.

There is, in this rather protracted discussion of the misplacement of Alma 13:16, an evidence of the authenticity of the Book of Mormon. The misplacement of Alma 13:16 appears to be the result of some kind of mechanical problem in copying at a particular time in the ancient history of the text. Such errors are fairly common when people are working with handwritten materials, but is it difficult to see how such shifts of textual blocks could have occurred if the work was originally an oral composition (as critics must assume of the Book of Mormon if they imagine that Joseph Smith was making it up as he went along). This particular irregularity in the text is best explained as the result of ancient copying of written materials, long before Joseph Smith ever came in contact with the plates. This particular mistake actually strengthens the book’s claim to be an ancient written text.

17 Now this Melchizedek was a king over the land of Salem; and his people had waxed strong in iniquity and abomination; yea, they had all gone astray; they were full of all manner of wickedness;

18 But Melchizedek having exercised mighty faith, and received the office of the high priesthood according to the holy order of God, did preach repentance unto his people. And behold, they did repent; and Melchizedek did establish peace in the land in his days; therefore he was called the prince of peace, for he was the king of Salem; and he did reign under his father.

verses 17-18 We learn that in the land of Salem the people were initially wicked, but through Melchizedek’s priesthood ministrations, his mighty faith, and his preachings he established peace and righteousness among his people. We are taught elsewhere that Melchizedek and his people established Zion and attained a level of transcendent righteousness, even as Enoch (JST, Genesis 14:33-34, 36).

“he was the king of Salem; and he did reign under his father” We are not given the name of Melchizedek’s father, but we learn that Melchizedek reigned “under” him. The term “under his father” appears to be a Hebrew idiom which means that he “takes the place of his father” or “reigns in his father’s stead”—literally he succeeds his father (John A. Tvedtnes, “The Hebrew Background of the Book of Mormon” in Rediscovering the Book of Mormon, 90-91).

19 Now, there were many before him, and also there were many afterwards, but none were greater; therefore, of him they have more particularly made mention.

verse 19 It is no wonder that Alma closes his discussion of Melchizedek with a tribute to that great man! “They” refers to the prophet-authors of the scripture.

20 Now I need not rehearse the matter; what I have said may suffice. Behold, the scriptures are before you; if ye will wrest them it shall be to your own destruction.

verse 20 “if ye will wrest them it shall be to your own destruction” To “wrest” the scriptures is to distort; pervert; twist their true meaning—to derive meaning from them that was not intended by the Lord.

There are a number of instances in original manuscript of the Book of Mormon where Dr. Royal Skousen feels that Oliver made a mistake in transcribing Joseph Smith’s dictation. If a word or a phrase was unknown to him, he substituted a more common word or phrase (but with varying degrees of success). In each of these cases, the substitution is found in the original manuscript and was later copied into the printer’s manuscript. It was then either corrected by the typesetter or appeared in the 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon. This particular phrase offers such an example. In the original and printer’s manuscripts, this phrase read “. . . if ye will arrest them it shall be to your own destruction.” The word arrest was allowed to stand by the typesetter, and it therefore appeared in the 1830 edition. By the 1837 edition, it was changed to wrest, as is found in our present edition. Dr. Skousen feels that the reading in the present edition is the correct one.

Who is it that is speaking in this verse? The text suggests that it is still Alma (see verse 21) though it might as well have been Mormon inserting an editorial comment directed at those in this final dispensation who are reading the Book of Mormon. In essence he says, “There, in a nutshell, is the doctrine of the priesthood. Be careful with it. For while it is the mechanism of the ultimate blessings, it may also result in your eternal destruction.

21 And now it came to pass that when Alma had said these words unto them, he stretched forth his hand unto them and cried with a mighty voice, saying: Now is the time to repent, for the day of salvation draweth nigh;

verse 21 What did Alma mean by “the day of salvation”? He may have been referring to the day of the Savior’s birth into mortality, or he might have been simply trying to emphasize the vital nature of this brief mortal trial.

22 Yea, and the voice of the Lord, by the mouth of angels, doth declare it unto all nations; yea, doth declare it, that they may have glad tidings of great joy; yea, and he doth sound these glad tidings among all his people, yea, even to them that are scattered abroad upon the face of the earth; wherefore they have come unto us.

verse 22 “doth declare it unto all nations” Consider, for a moment, the significance of this most provocative phrase. It is certainly one you might be likely to pass right by in casual reading. “It” refers to the good news of the Savior’s birth, the “glad tidings of great joy,” a testimony of the Savior. Prior to this great event, the announcement of his birth was made to “all nations”—to “all his people!” Does this include even the heathen and gentile nations? Most certainly!

And by what mechanism was this announcement made in all nations? Angels—both seen and unseen—declare the word of the Lord or “voice of the Lord” unto the Lord’s “chosen vessels” (Moroni 7:31). The angels teach of Christ’s birth and ministry and death and resurrection. These “chosen vessels” or prophets then in turn declare these teachings unto “the residue of men” (Moroni 7:32).

“to them that are scattered abroad upon the face of the earth” This phrase refers to scattered Israel.

“wherefore they have come unto us” Because we are scattered Israel, those angels have come unto us to make the announcement of the “glad tidings of great joy.”

23 And they are made known unto us in plain terms, that we may understand, that we cannot err; and this because of our being wanderers in a strange land; therefore, we are thus highly favored, for we have these glad tidings declared unto us in all parts of our vineyard.

verse 23 “they are made known to us in plain terms” This might be more simply rendered: “The angels are assigned to speak to us plainly.”

24 For behold, angels are declaring it unto many at this time in our land; and this is for the purpose of preparing the hearts of the children of men to receive his word at the time of his coming in his glory.

verse 24 “For behold, angels are declaring it unto many at this time in our land” Most of us who acquire a testimony of the Savior do so by means of personal revelation from the Spirit of God, the Holy Ghost. To some select few is extended the opportunity to enjoy the direct ministrations of angels (Moroni 10:14).

“at the time of his coming in his glory” It seems clear that Alma (and/or Mormon) are referring to Christ’s coming at the time of his mortal ministry. The phraseology in this verse (“coming in his glory”), however, is usually preserved to refer to his second coming—not when he is born in a lowly stable. Then he comes in glory for all to see.

25 And now we only wait to hear the joyful news declared unto us by the mouth of angels, of his coming; for the time cometh, we know not how soon. Would to God that it might be in my day; but let it be sooner or later, in it I will rejoice.

verse 25 The phrase “of his coming” might be rendered “that he has come.”

“For the time cometh, we know not how soon” How is it that Alma was not aware of the time of Christ’s coming? After all, had not the prophet Nephi predicted specifically that the Savior would be born “six hundred years” after Lehi and his family left Jerusalem (1 Nephi 10:4; 19:8; 2 Nephi 25:19)? It is possible that the prophet Alma was not even aware of Nephi’s prophecy! He did have in his possession the small plates of Nephi, but they existed among voluminous other records. The prophet Mormon seemed to be unaware of the small plates of Nephi until he “searched among the records which had been delivered into [his] hands” (Words of Mormon 1:3).

26 And it shall be made known unto just and holy men, by the mouth of angels, at the time of his coming, that the words of our fathers may be fulfilled, according to that which they have spoken concerning him, which was according to the spirit of prophecy which was in them.

verse 26 Wouldn’t it be fascinating to have a biographical sketch of all those “just and holy men” to whom the angels announced the blessed news, “He is born.” Apparently, some of the shepherds in the fields near Bethlehem were among them.

27 And now, my brethren, I wish from the inmost part of my heart, yea, with great anxiety even unto pain, that ye would hearken unto my words, and cast off your sins, and not procrastinate the day of your repentance;

28 But that ye would humble yourselves before the Lord, and call on his holy name, and watch and pray continually, that ye may not be tempted above that which ye can bear, and thus be led by the Holy Spirit, becoming humble, meek, submissive, patient, full of love and all long-suffering;

verse 28 How does an aggressive and carnal man become “humble, meek, submissive, patient, full of love and all long-suffering”? It is only by the gradual, painstaking, transformative influence of the Holy Ghost. See the important discussion of the ordinance of baptism in the chapter Baptism, the Ordinance that Brings Spiritual Growth, in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine referenced above. Pay particular attention to the “baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost.”

“watch and pray continually, that ye may not be tempted above that which ye can bear” Some confusion has arisen regarding the concept of temptation. The confusion probably originated with a verse of scripture written by Paul the apostle: “There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it” (1 Corinthians 10:13). The misconception that has arisen out of this verse might be expressed as follows: God will never allow us to be tempted beyond our ability to resist. We are thus safe from committing major sin. Even if we are a bit careless and find ourselves in compromising circumstances, we may be certain that God will never allow us to destroy ourselves spiritually. We may even flirt with sin a little and stray somewhat off the strait and narrow. It doesn’t matter. He will rescue us. The more complete truth is contained in this phrase here in verse 28. God will not rescue the indifferent sinner. The promise that Paul intended was that if we are careful, diligent, vigilant, indeed if we “watch and pray continually,” then there is no temptation from which he will not rescue us or at least empower us to rescue ourselves. Guarding against sin cannot be a passive exercise. Rather we must be most actively engaged.

29 Having faith on the Lord; having a hope that ye shall receive eternal life; having the love of God always in your hearts, that ye may be lifted up at the last day and enter into his rest.

verse 29 For a discussion of the “rest of the Lord” see the commentary for 2 Nephi 21:10. See also “The Rest of the Lord” in chapter 17, Justification and Sanctification in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1. See also a discussion of the closely related gift of hope in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine: see “Two Little-Appreciated Gifts of the Spirit” in volume 1, chapter 10, Deliberate Faith and Revealed Faith. See also “The Fruits of Faith” in volume 1, chapter 11, Other Notes on Faith.

30 And may the Lord grant unto you repentance, that ye may not bring down his wrath upon you, that ye may not be bound down by the chains of hell, that ye may not suffer the second death.

verse 30 “may the Lord grant unto you repentance” Does man repent of his sins, or does God grant him repentance? True repentance requires more than “worldly sorrow.” It also requires “godly sorrow” (2 Corinthians 7:10). See a discussion of this important concept in the commentary for Mosiah 26:29 and in Repentance in volume 3, chapter 4 of Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine. There, you will read that godly sorrow is a gift of the Spirit received from the Lord by personal revelation after a person qualifies himself by his behaviors (feelings, thoughts, words, and actions).

“second death” We have discussed previously this important concept (see the commentary for Alma 12:16). For the convenience of the reader I will repeat that discussion here. What exactly is this “second death”? To understand clearly the answer to this question, let us review part of the concept of the fall. Because Adam transgressed in the garden, all mankind will temporarily suffer two penalties: (1) Each person will be cut off from the presence of God while here in mortality, the so-called spiritual death. This may also be referred to as the “first death.” (2) Every man will also suffer physical death, the separation of his spirit from his body. These penalties are temporary because, as we will learn, their effects will automatically be some day reversed. No man will be eternally punished for Adam’s transgression (Article of Faith 2). Remember, that the law of justice includes the concept that it is unjust to punish one man for another’s sins. Thus, all men will be resurrected, and also no man will be excluded from the presence of God because of Adam’s sin. At a point in time every man will be returned to the presence of God to be judged. It mattereth not how wicked and unrepentant, after the resurrection every person will be brought back into the presence of God for judgment. This returning to God’s presence of every man is proof that no one suffers a permanent spiritual death because of Adam’s transgression. Once in God’s presence each person is judged. Each will either be exalted in the kingdom of God and thus remain in his presence or they will be sent out of his presence a second time—hence they will suffer the so-called “second death.” They will be cut off from the presence of God, and from his happiness and joy, forever. These will be consigned to one of the lower two kingdoms or they will suffer a complete second death and live with Satan forever as sons of perdition. The term “second death” is used several times in the Book of Mormon. Sometimes it refers to that place of eternal damnation where Satan and his sons live, so-called outer darkness (see Jacob 3:11).

31 And Alma spake many more words unto the people, which are not written in this book.

Alma Chapter 14

1 And it came to pass after he had made an end of speaking unto the people many of them did believe on his words, and began to repent, and to search the scriptures.

2 But the more part of them were desirous that they might destroy Alma and Amulek; for they were angry with Alma, because of the plainness of his words unto Zeezrom; and they also said that Amulek had lied unto them, and had reviled against their law and also against their lawyers and judges.

verse 2 “they also said that Amulek had lied unto them, and had reviled against their law and also against their lawyers and judges” The majority of the people of Ammonihah were right on one count. Amulek had reviled against their lawyers (see Alma 10:17). They also accused Amulek of lying and reviling against their law neither of which he had done. The law of the land was the “law of Mosiah” (Alma 12:1). It consisted of a system of judges which governed the land. Amulek and Alma were, of course, supportive of the principles behind this form of government. Amulek, however, did take issue with how the people of Ammonihah interpreted or practiced this form of government. He previously denounced the practice of government in Ammonihah when he said: “Mosiah [caused] that this people should be governed by their own voices—yea, well did he say that the time should come that the voice of this people should choose iniquity, that is, if the time should come that this people should fall into transgression, they would be ripe for destruction. . . . If it were not for the prayers of the righteous . . . ye would even now be visited with utter destruction” (Alma 10:19, 22). Obviously the “voice” or majority of the people in Ammonihah had chosen unwisely, and their “wise lawyers” were not in fact wise. When accused of speaking out against the laws of Ammonihah, Amulek stated that he had not, in fact, spoken out against their laws. Rather he maintained that he had spoken in favor of the law of Mosiah (Alma 10:26). For this denial, Amulek was accused of being a liar.

3 And they were also angry with Alma and Amulek; and because they had testified so plainly against their wickedness, they sought to put them away privily.

verse 3 “they sought to put them away privily” “Privily” means secretly or out of the public eye.

4 But it came to pass that they did not; but they took them and bound them with strong cords, and took them before the chief judge of the land.

5 And the people went forth and witnessed against them—testifying that they had reviled against the law, and their lawyers and judges of the land, and also of all the people that were in the land; and also testified that there was but one God, and that he should send his Son among the people, but he should not save them; and many such things did the people testify against Alma and Amulek. Now this was done before the chief judge of the land.

verse 5 “they . . . also testified that there was but one God, and that he should send his Son among the people, but he should not save them” These are charges previously made against Alma and Amulek by Zeezrom (See Alma 11:35). The charges are based upon misquoting and distortions.

6 And it came to pass that Zeezrom was astonished at the words which had been spoken; and he also knew concerning the blindness of the minds, which he had caused among the people by his lying words; and his soul began to be harrowed up under a consciousness of his own guilt; yea, he began to be encircled about by the pains of hell.

verse 6 We have already witnessed the evolution of the miraculous conversion of Zeezrom (Alma 11:46; 12:1, 7-8), and we have previously speculated that the fact that the Spirit was able to touch him while he was literally in the process of confronting the servants of God suggests that he was a choice and righteous individual in the pre-existence. We are reminded of the apostle Paul, the elder and younger Almas, and the sons of Mosiah.

“his soul began to be harrowed up under a consciousness of his own guilt”
The term “harrow up” or “harrowed up” is unique in all the scriptures to the Book of Mormon. It means vexed, tormented, distressed, afflicted, or tortured.

7 And it came to pass that he began to cry unto the people, saying: Behold, I am guilty, and these men are spotless before God. And he began to plead for them from that time forth; but they reviled him, saying: Art thou also possessed with the devil? And they spit upon him, and cast him out from among them, and also all those who believed in the words which had been spoken by Alma and Amulek; and they cast them out, and sent men to cast stones at them.

verse 7 “these men are spotless before God” Zeezrom pled before the people for the lives of Alma and Amulek.

“and they cast them out, and sent men to cast stones at them” Zeezrom and other men converted to the gospel by the preaching of Alma and Amulek were cast out of the city and stoned. They then fled to the neighboring city of Sidom. There, Alma and Amulek will later (Alma 15:2) bring them tragic news. Their wives and children who remained in Ammonihah are about to be cast into the fire and burned to death (verses 8 through 14).

8 And they brought their wives and children together, and whosoever believed or had been taught to believe in the word of God they caused that they should be cast into the fire; and they also brought forth their records which contained the holy scriptures, and cast them into the fire also, that they might be burned and destroyed by fire.

verse 8 “And they brought their wives and children together” “They” are the hard-hearted people of Ammonihah. “Their” refers to those men who believed in the words of Alma and Amulek and had been cast out of the city and stoned. Their wives and children who were left behind in Ammonihah were cast into the fire and killed.

Alma and Amulek had warned the people of Ammonihah that the wicked would be cast into a lake of fire and brimstone (see verse 14). The wicked response of the people was to make certain that the believers were the ones to suffer by fire.

“they also brought forth their records which contained the holy scriptures, and cast them into the fire also” Were scriptures in those days written on materials that would burn? Weren’t the significant records largely written on metal plates and stone monuments? While metal plates and stone monuments were used, another common type of record in Mesoamerica is the codex which is a record written on pages of tree bark or animal skins. This writing material was flattened so that the codices could be folded similar to the way in which a map folds.

In this verse the people of Ammonihah seal themselves up for destruction by shedding the innocent blood of those who believed in the word of God (Alma 10:23; 16:1-3).

9 And it came to pass that they took Alma and Amulek, and carried them forth to the place of martyrdom, that they might witness the destruction of those who were consumed by fire.

10 And when Amulek saw the pains of the women and children who were consuming in the fire, he also was pained; and he said unto Alma: How can we witness this awful scene? Therefore let us stretch forth our hands, and exercise the power of God which is in us, and save them from the flames.

verse 10 Just imagine the excruciating agony of watching this unimaginable scene. Amulek was obviously and justifiably shaken.

11 But Alma said unto him: The Spirit constraineth me that I must not stretch forth mine hand; for behold the Lord receiveth them up unto himself, in glory; and he doth suffer that they may do this thing, or that the people may do this thing unto them, according to the hardness of their hearts, that the judgments which he shall exercise upon them in his wrath may be just; and the blood of the innocent shall stand as a witness against them, yea, and cry mightily against them at the last day.

verse 11 God permits the wicked to inflict suffering upon the righteous “that the judgments which he shall exercise upon them in his wrath may be just; and the blood of the innocent shall stand as a witness against them, yea, and cry mightily against them at the last day” (see also Alma 60:13; D&C 103:3 101:78, 93).

12 Now Amulek said unto Alma: Behold, perhaps they will burn us also.

13 And Alma said: Be it according to the will of the Lord. But, behold, our work is not finished; therefore they burn us not.

verse 13 Undoubtedly, the Spirit had born witness to Alma that he and Amulek were in no immediate danger of being martyred.

14 Now it came to pass that when the bodies of those who had been cast into the fire were consumed, and also the records which were cast in with them, the chief judge of the land came and stood before Alma and Amulek, as they were bound; and he smote them with his hand upon their cheeks, and said unto them: After what ye have seen, will ye preach again unto this people, that they shall be cast into a lake of fire and brimstone?

verse 14 “lake of fire and brimstone” This expression, of course, does not describe the literal fate of anyone. Rather, it is a figurative or symbolic expression that is discussed more fully in the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:19.

15 Behold, ye see that ye had not power to save those who had been cast into the fire; neither has God saved them because they were of thy faith. And the judge smote them again upon their cheeks, and asked: What say ye for yourselves?

16 Now this judge was after the order and faith of Nehor, who slew Gideon.

verse 16 “after the order and faith of Nehor” People within the order of Nehor were learned in language, attempted to lead the people astray, denied Christ, and denied that any prophet could foretell the future. They believed that every priest and teacher ought not to labor with their hands but rather ought to be supported by the people (Alma 1:3) and that all people would be saved and hence there was no need for repentance (Alma 1:4; 15:15). For additional information on the order of the Nehors, see the commentary for Alma 8:8. It would be most useful to review this latter commentary before continuing.

“gnashing their teeth upon them, and spitting upon them” While we can easily understand the act of spitting upon a person as an act of ridicule or derision, we are not so intuitively familiar with the act of “gnashing” our teeth upon someone for the same purpose. Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines gnashing as, “a grinding or striking of the teeth in rage or anguish.” We are left to conjure up in our mind’s eye how this might have played out.

17 And it came to pass that Alma and Amulek answered him nothing; and he smote them again, and delivered them to the officers to be cast into prison.

18 And when they had been cast into prison three days, there came many lawyers, and judges, and priests, and teachers, who were of the profession of Nehor; and they came in unto the prison to see them, and they questioned them about many words; but they answered them nothing.

19 And it came to pass that the judge stood before them, and said: Why do ye not answer the words of this people? Know ye not that I have power to deliver you up unto the flames? And he commanded them to speak; but they answered nothing.

20 And it came to pass that they departed and went their ways, but came again on the morrow; and the judge also smote them again on their cheeks. And many came forth also, and smote them, saying: Will ye stand again and judge this people, and condemn our law? If ye have such great power why do ye not deliver yourselves?

verse 20 “If ye have such great power why do ye not deliver yourselves?” If you have great powers given you of your God, why don’t do deliver yourselves from this prison?

21 And many such things did they say unto them, gnashing their teeth upon them, and spitting upon them, and saying: How shall we look when we are damned?

verse 21 These leaders from the order of the Nehors did not believe, even for one moment, they would ever be damned. Having apparently no fear of retribution the people continue their mockery, saying in effect: “And how do you suppose we will look after we are damned?”

22 And many such things, yea, all manner of such things did they say unto them; and thus they did mock them for many days. And they did withhold food from them that they might hunger, and water that they might thirst; and they also did take from them their clothes that they were naked; and thus they were bound with strong cords, and confined in prison.

23 And it came to pass after they had thus suffered for many days, (and it was on the twelfth day, in the tenth month, in the tenth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi) that the chief judge over the land of Ammonihah and many of their teachers and their lawyers went in unto the prison where Alma and Amulek were bound with cords.

verse 23 What time of the year did this event occur? How does the Nephite calendar correspond to our calendar today? For a discussion of this question, see the commentary for Alma 16:1.

The “land of Ammonihah” is area surrounding the city of Ammonihah.

24 And the chief judge stood before them, and smote them again, and said unto them: If ye have the power of God deliver yourselves from these bands, and then we will believe that the Lord will destroy this people according to your words.

verse 24 “If ye have the power of God deliver yourselves . . . and then we will believe that the Lord will destroy this people” These words of the chief judge bring to mind the devil’s temptation of the Savior: “If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread” (Matthew 4:3). When Alma and Amulek do finally invoke the Lord’s strength to deliver themselves from this prison, you will see that the effect was anything but the conversion of the Ammonihahite leaders. Rather they will be filled with great fear, and flee (verse 26). Such is a universal truth regarding those who ask for signs. No number of signs will convince them.

25 And it came to pass that they all went forth and smote them, saying the same words, even until the last; and when the last had spoken unto them the power of God was upon Alma and Amulek, and they rose and stood upon their feet.

26 And Alma cried, saying: How long shall we suffer these great afflictions, O Lord? O Lord, give us strength according to our faith which is in Christ, even unto deliverance. And they broke the cords with which they were bound; and when the people saw this, they began to flee, for the fear of destruction had come upon them.

27 And it came to pass that so great was their fear that they fell to the earth, and did not obtain the outer door of the prison; and the earth shook mightily, and the walls of the prison were rent in twain, so that they fell to the earth; and the chief judge, and the lawyers, and priests, and teachers, who smote upon Alma and Amulek, were slain by the fall thereof.

28 And Alma and Amulek came forth out of the prison, and they were not hurt; for the Lord had granted unto them power, according to their faith which was in Christ. And they straightway came forth out of the prison; and they were loosed from their bands; and the prison had fallen to the earth, and every soul within the walls thereof, save it were Alma and Amulek, was slain; and they straightway came forth into the city.

29 Now the people having heard a great noise came running together by multitudes to know the cause of it; and when they saw Alma and Amulek coming forth out of the prison, and the walls thereof had fallen to the earth, they were struck with great fear, and fled from the presence of Alma and Amulek even as a goat fleeth with her young from two lions; and thus they did flee from the presence of Alma and Amulek.

verse 29 “the people having heard a great noise came running together by multitudes to know the cause of it” It is likely that some sort of divinely-timed earthquake caused both the walls of the prison to fall and caused also the great noise the people heard. “Apparently,” explained Brant A. Gardner, “the miraculous means of deliverance was a particularly violent earthquake: it ‘shook mightily.’” That such an event can happen is illustrated in an interesting parallel Gardner pointed out: “On February 4, 1976, an earthquake in Chiquimula, Guatemala, so demolished a prison that ‘the criminals that were in the jail escaped almost as if by miracle’” (Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical & Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 4:241, 242).

Earthquakes are caused by fault lines, and different kinds of fault lines cause different kinds of earthquakes. Earthquakes also have different intensity levels, measured in what is called the Mercalli scale. This scale is divided into twelve levels, with higher levels indicating more intense earthquakes (For a review of the different kinds of faults and the earthquakes they cause, see Jerry D. Grover Jr., Geology of the Book of Mormon, Vinyard, UT: self-published, 2014, 57–62; on the Mercalli Scale, see p. 63). According to Jerry Grover, a professional geologist, the collapse of the prison walls would require at least a level 8 earthquake on the Mercalli scale (Grover, Geology of the Book of Mormon, 201).

The “great noise” mentioned in this verse may have been the rumblings of the earthquake, or perhaps the sound of the walls collapsing (Alonzo L. Gaskill, Miracles of the Book of Mormon, Springville, UT: Cedar Fort, 2015, 181”). If earthquakes were a common occurrence in Book of Mormon lands (Gardner, Second Witness, 4:241, noted, “Mesoamerica is well known for its frequent earthquakes.”), however, these would hardly merit the response of the people—“running together by multitudes to know the cause of” the sound. Grover, therefore, suggested it was a peculiar feature unique to a specific kind of earthquake.

Grover proposed, “A phenomenon that has been historically identified as an ‘earthquake boom’ is indicated here.” Earthquake booms occur in what are called “supershear earthquakes.” These “are events in which the rupturing fault breaks faster than certain seismic waves can travel,” thereby “break[ing] the seismic sound barrier creating a sonic boom.” Grover noted, “These earthquakes have been observed almost exclusively in strike-slip faults because of higher rupture speeds that occur with strike-slip faulting” (Grover, Geology of the Book of Mormon, 200).

One important fruit that emerges from geological analysis of this narrative is that the events described are geologically possible. Nothing in the story is implausible based on historical and geological information about earthquakes. This includes the miraculous emergence of Alma and Amulek from the ruins of the prison. As discussed above, it even potentially identifies the type of earthquake involved with a high degree of specificity.

If Jerry Grover is correct, then Ammonihah must be located near a strike-slip fault line, in an area where level-8 (or higher) earthquakes happen. Such a detail adds another requirement Book of Mormon geographers can use to narrow down the list of potential locations for Ammonihah. Given the lack of consensus on Book of Mormon geography, additional factors which help clarify the picture are more than welcome (Grover, Geology of the Book of Mormon, 198–201 compares these requirements to Sorenson’s Mesoamerican model, and finds that Ammonihah is located in an ideal location. Other Mesoamerican models, pp. 214–216, fail this requirement. For a convenient summary of Grover’s criteria and how a handful of Mesoamerican models fair, see Neal Rappleye, “‘The Great and Terrible Judgments of the Lord’: Destruction and Disaster in 3 Nephi and the Geology of Mesoamerica,” Interpreter: A Journal of Mormon Scripture 15, 2015: 143–157. Work remains to be done to determine if any non-Mesoamerican models can satisfy this and other criteria, which Grover outlined throughout his book.).

Considering the natural scientific factors involved also illuminates how God works. Miracles are not always extraordinary and unexplainable events. Instead, God often uses well-timed natural phenomena to accomplish His purposes. For example, some biblical scholars argue that the plagues of Exodus followed a natural chain of events (See James K. Hoffmeier, Israel in Egypt: The Evidence for the Authenticity of the Exodus Tradition, New York, NY: Oxford University Press, 1997, 146–149; K. A. Kitchen, On the Reliability of the Old Testament, Grand Rapids, MI: Wm. B. Eerdmans, 2003, 249–254).

Learning and understanding the science behind miracles need not make them any less miraculous. Latter-day Saints and other modern Christians often see miracles in otherwise ordinary events which occur at just the right time. The miracle is often in the timing, the extremity or severity of the event, or the way the outcome accomplishes the Lord’s purposes. When individuals feel the touch of God in their lives, that is when a miracle has occurred.

Even if Alma and Amulek’s earthquake was a naturally-occurring phenomenon, important details remain remarkable and miraculous. All of Alma and Amulek’s captors are killed in the prison’s collapse, while Alma and Amulek themselves miraculously emerge unscathed. Furthermore, the supershear earthquake’s sonic boom created a particular noise that drew the people “together by multitudes” to behold the awe-inspiring power of God in preserving Alma and Amulek. Not only did this earthquake create a means for Alma and Amulek’s escape, but it created an opportunity for them to demonstrate their role as true messengers from God.

Alma Chapter 15

1 And it came to pass that Alma and Amulek were commanded to depart out of that city; and they departed, and came out even into the land of Sidom; and behold, there they found all the people who had departed out of the land of Ammonihah, who had been cast out and stoned, because they believed in the words of Alma.

verse 1 For a proposed location of the “land of Sidom” and its relationship to other neighboring lands and cities, see the Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands.

2 And they related unto them all that had happened unto their wives and children, and also concerning themselves, and of their power of deliverance.

verse 2 Don’t read this simple verse without pausing to consider the excruciating grief which the account of Alma and Amulek produced among those men. They had been stoned and driven out of Ammonihah, and now they learned they had lost their wives and children.

3 And also Zeezrom lay sick at Sidom, with a burning fever, which was caused by the great tribulations of his mind on account of his wickedness, for he supposed that Alma and Amulek were no more; and he supposed that they had been slain because of his iniquity. And this great sin, and his many other sins, did harrow up his mind until it did become exceedingly sore, having no deliverance; therefore he began to be scorched with a burning heat.

verse 3 “Zeezrom lay sick at Sidom, with a burning fever, which was caused by the great tribulations of his mind on account of his wickedness” There can be no doubt that Zeezrom was suffering extreme physical agony and mental remorse. We are reminded that the process of repentance and conversion may be exquisitely painful depending upon the convert’s behavior prior to his conversion.

As to the causative relationship between Zeezrom’s obvious mental anguish and his “burning fever” or “burning heat,” Mormon’s formulation is noted with interest but also with skepticism. A word of caution seems appropriate here. It is certainly not church doctrine that physical illness suffered by mortals is the result of sin. Joseph Smith wrote: “It is a false idea that the Saints will escape all the judgments, whilst the wicked suffer; for all flesh is subject to suffer, and ‘the righteous shall hardly escape.’ . . . It is an unhallowed principle to say that such and such have transgressed because they have been preyed upon by disease or death, for all flesh is subject to death; and the Savior has said, ‘Judge not, lest ye be judged’” (TPJS, 162).

The term “harrow up” means to vex, or torment, or cause mental distress.

4 Now, when he heard that Alma and Amulek were in the land of Sidom, his heart began to take courage; and he sent a message immediately unto them, desiring them to come unto him.

5 And it came to pass that they went immediately, obeying the message which he had sent unto them; and they went in unto the house unto Zeezrom; and they found him upon his bed, sick, being very low with a burning fever; and his mind also was exceedingly sore because of his iniquities; and when he saw them he stretched forth his hand, and besought them that they would heal him.

verse 5 “he stretched forth his hand, and besought them” Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines besought as, “Entreated; implored; sought by entreaty.” That same dictionary defines entreated as, “Earnestly supplicated, besought or solicited; importuned; urgently requested. Prevailed upon by urgent solicitation.”

6 And it came to pass that Alma said unto him, taking him by the hand: Believest thou in the power of Christ unto salvation?

7 And he answered and said: Yea, I believe all the words that thou hast taught.

8 And Alma said: If thou believest in the redemption of Christ thou canst be healed.

9 And he said: Yea, I believe according to thy words.

10 And then Alma cried unto the Lord, saying: O Lord our God, have mercy on this man, and heal him according to his faith which is in Christ.

11 And when Alma had said these words, Zeezrom leaped upon his feet, and began to walk; and this was done to the great astonishment of all the people; and the knowledge of this went forth throughout all the land of Sidom.

12 And Alma baptized Zeezrom unto the Lord; and he began from that time forth to preach unto the people.

verse 12 We may make an interesting observation from this verse. As with the two Almas, the apostle Paul, and the sons of Mosiah, once a previously wicked person is truly converted and has repented, they have a strong desire to bring repentance to others.

13 And Alma established a church in the land of Sidom, and consecrated priests and teachers in the land, to baptize unto the Lord whosoever were desirous to be baptized.

verse 13 To “consecrate” means to set apart as holy. In our day we might say “ordain” rather than “consecrate.”

We have discussed previously that there is no evidence that the Aaronic or Levitical priesthoods existed among the Book of Mormon peoples until the time of the resurrected Jesus’s appearance to them in the land Bountiful. Thus, these priests and teachers held the Melchizedek priesthood. The titles priests and teachers describe their church duties and functions and not offices to which they were ordained.

14 And it came to pass that they were many; for they did flock in from all the region round about Sidom, and were baptized.

15 But as to the people that were in the land of Ammonihah, they yet remained a hard-hearted and a stiffnecked people; and they repented not of their sins, ascribing all the power of Alma and Amulek to the devil; for they were of the profession of Nehor, and did not believe in the repentance of their sins.

verse 15 “of the profession of Nehor” Hopefully you have recently reviewed the commentary for Alma 8:8. If you have not, it would be well to do so now.

16 And it came to pass that Alma and Amulek, Amulek having forsaken all his gold, and silver, and his precious things, which were in the land of Ammonihah, for the word of God, he being rejected by those who were once his friends and also by his father and his kindred;

verse 16 Regarding the sacrifices Amulek had to make in order to accept the call to serve the Lord, please see the commentary for verse 18 below.

17 Therefore, after Alma having established the church at Sidom, seeing a great check, yea, seeing that the people were checked as to the pride of their hearts, and began to humble themselves before God, and began to assemble themselves together at their sanctuaries to worship God before the altar, watching and praying continually, that they might be delivered from Satan, and from death, and from destruction—verse 17 “seeing a great check” This refers to Alma’s and Amulek’s having observed a great cessation of worldly attitudes and behaviors.

“the people . . . began to assemble themselves together at their sanctuaries to worship God before the altar” Here we learn that one of the Nephite places of worship was the “sanctuary.” Altars for the offering of sacrifices were apparently found in both the temples and the sanctuaries. For a more complete discussion of the Nephite places of worship, see the commentary for Alma 16:13.

“that they might be delivered from Satan, and from death, and from destruction” Altars had many important functions in the worship of ancient Israelites and Nephites alike. Lehi built an altar in the wilderness to offer sacrifice (1 Nephi 2:6–7; cf. 5:9; 7:22), the primary function of altars in the Old Testament.

Altars were also a place of deliverance in Israelite religion. According to Old Testament scholar David Bokovoy, “The earlier laws of Exodus identify altars as places of refuge, retreat, or sanctualry where someone who had unintentionally committed manslaughter could seek asylum” (David Bokovoy, Authoring the Old Testament:

Genesis–Deuteronomy, Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2014, 14. See Bernard S. Jackson, Wisdom Laws: A Study of the Mishpatim of Exodus 21:1–22:16, New York, NY: Oxford University Press, 2006, 138–139. Also, see Alison P. Coutts, “Refuge and Asylum in the Ancient World,” M.A. Thesis in the David M. Kennedy Center, Provo, UT: Brigham Young University, 2001, 77–78). The specific law Bokovoy had in mind was Exodus 21:12–14: “He that smiteth a man, so that he die, shall be surely put to death. And if a man lie not in wait, but God deliver him into his hand; then I will appoint thee a place whither he shall flee. But if a man come presumptuously upon his neighbour, to slay him with guile; thou shalt take him from mine altar, that he may die.” This legal text was known to Nephi, and it was quoted to him by the Spirit when he was prompted to slay Laban (see 1 Nephi 4:11–12, 17) (See John W. Welch, “Legal Perspectives on the Slaying of Laban,” *Journal of Book of Mormon Studies*1, no. 1, 1992: 119–141). Interestingly, while Nephi did not flee to one of the six designated Levitical cities of refuge, he did flee generally from the land of Israel and specifically to his father’s camp, where an altar dedicated to the Lord had been made (1 Nephi 2:6–7; 5:9; 7:22).

Bokovoy noted that the altar in the tabernacle was used as a place of refuge or deliverance in 1 Kings 1:50–51 and 2:28, to which Solomon’s enemies Adonijah and Joab flee to “grab ‘hold on the horns of the altar’ in hopes of temporary asylum” (Bokovoy, Authoring the Old Testament, 14). He thus argued that it was “a long-held Israelite custom” to see “the altar as a location of deliverance from death” (Bokovoy, Authoring the Old Testament, 14).

Similarly, after Alma established the church at Sidom, when the people there “began to humble themselves before God, and began to assemble themselves together at their sanctuaries,” they approached the altar to worship God, and they did so “watching and praying continually, that they might be delivered from Satan, and from death, and from destruction” (Alma 15:17, emphasis added). Noticing this confluence of elements, Bokovoy remarked, “the Book of Mormon identifies the altar as a place where people could seek deliverance, albeit in a spiritual sense” (Bokovoy, Authoring the Old Testament, 14). Bokovoy first made this argument in David Bokovoy, “A Place of Deliverance: Altars in the Hebrew Bible and Book of Mormon,” *Insights: A Window on the Ancient World*21, no. 2, 2001: 2. It also appears in David E. Bokovoy and John A. Tvedtnes, Testaments: Links between the Book of Mormon and the Hebrew Bible, Tooele, UT: Heritage Press, 2003, 166–167).

Altars are mentioned only three times in the Book of Mormon (A fourth mention in 2 Nephi 16:6 is a quotation of Isaiah 6:6). The first is Lehi’s “altar of stones” (1 Nephi 2:7). Nephi fled to his father’s camp for refuge after killing Laban, where this altar was used for “sacrifice and burnt offerings” upon his return (1 Nephi 5:9) (S. Kent Brown has argued the “burnt offerings” here were offered as atonement for Nephi’s slaying of Laban. See S. Kent Brown, Voices from the Dust: Book of Mormon Insights, American Fork, UT: Covenant Communications, 2004, 9). The second is in the land of Sidom, where the people sought deliverance “from Satan, and from death, and from destruction” (Alma 15:17). The final mention of an altar is in reference to the converts of the sons of Mosiah coming “before the altar of God, to call on his name and confess their sins before him” (Alma 17:4).

In two of these three references, the altar appears to be connected with refuge and deliverance as in Exodus 21:12–14. In 1 Nephi, Lehi’s camp with its altar of stones becomes the place of safety for Nephi after he killed Laban, whom the Lord delivered into his hands. In Alma 15:17, the altar is portrayed as a place of spiritual deliverance from the forces of evil. As Bokovoy comments, this is “a subtlety that provides further evidence that the Book of Mormon clearly reflects the traditions of antiquity” (Bokovoy, “A Place of Deliverance,” 2; Bokovoy and Tvedtnes, Testaments, 167).

Understanding altars as places of both sacrifice and deliverance in the Book of Mormon leads to greater understanding of God’s love and protection of His children through the atonement of Jesus Christ. Whenever an injustice is about to be perpetrated, when a person has taken flight from an accuser who is wrongly pursuing and threatening them, God has designated for them a place of safety and deliverance. That place is an altar, a place of sacrifice, a “type and shadow” of the coming sacrifice of the Lamb of God unto “the power of his deliverance” (Mosiah 3:15; Alma 7:13).

Such an altar is in a holy place, administered by prophetic or priestly authority and supported by a righteous community that stands prepared to receive those who seek refuge and deliverance (see Alma 27:20–24). While God asks all who come before the altar to make personal sacrifices, once there He promises that those who seek His face and plead for His help will surely find refuge from the storms of life, deliverance from sin, relief from worldly concerns, victory over spiritual death, and a shield from the forces of destruction.

Later variants of this statute make clear that the places of refuge were cities appointed for that purpose (cf. Deuteronomy 19:1-7; Numbers 35:9-28; Joshua 20). In a city of refuge an accused person could find housing, food, and employment—none of which could be had at the altar. The original place of asylum, however, was the altar of God (see 1 Kings 1:50-51 and 2:28).

This information proves significant insight to an understanding of altars in Nephite society. The Nephites were obviously heirs to the customs and traditions of ancient Israel which have been preserved for us in the Hebrew Bible.

Note that this particular verse invokes Israelite custom by identifying the altar as a location of deliverance, a subtlety that provides further evidence that the Book of Mormon clearly reflects the traditions of antiquity.

18 Now as I said, Alma having seen all these things, therefore he took Amulek and came over to the land of Zarahemla, and took him to his own house, and did administer unto him in his tribulations, and strengthened him in the Lord.

verse 18 Mormon's use of the phrase "land of Zarahemla" here likely has reference to the city of Zarahemla.

The text does not mention that Amulek had any family with him in the land of Sidom and even suggests that in accepting the call to serve the Lord he may have even had to give up his wife, children, and other family (see verse 16 and Alma 10:11). If this be the case, then it is no wonder Alma "did administer unto him in his tribulations, and strengthened him in the Lord." Making righteous decisions does not always protect one from pain and suffering. Indeed, it may even cause pain. In Amulek's case, he was a man of the world (Alma 10:4) who doubtless had to pay a painful price made necessary by his previous behavior. He had sacrificed everything—home, family, friends, wealth—for his faith.

19 And thus ended the tenth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi.

Alma Chapter 16

Scripture Mastery

Alma 16 (compare Alma 25:2-3) The city of Ammonihah is destroyed by a Lamanite invasion.

1 And it came to pass in the eleventh year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi, on the fifth day of the second month, there having been much peace in the land of Zarahemla, there having been no wars nor contentions for a certain number of years, even until the fifth day of the second month in the eleventh year, there was a cry of war heard throughout the land.

verse 1 “the fifth day of the second month in the eleventh year, there was a cry of war heard throughout the land” There are several instances in the Book of Mormon, especially in the books of Mosiah, Alma, and Helaman, in which reference is made to wars being fought on specific dates. John L. Sorenson, in his article “Seasons of War, Seasons of Peace” (Rediscovering the Book of Mormon, 249-55) has suggested that these dates are not likely randomly distributed throughout the year. Rather, there were likely certain seasons when wars were fought and other times of the year when they were not. The wars seemed to be fought in a consistent and predictable seasonal pattern. Several reasons are proposed to account for this pattern:

1. Wars in “pre-technical” societies are usually launched at convenient and opportune times of the year.

2. The Nephite and Lamanite societies were largely agrarian. The soldiers were part-time warriors but full-time farmers. The armies were made up almost totally of the equivalent of today’s “reservists.” They were not available for war during the planting, cultivating, and harvest seasons. They had to labor in order to provide food for their families and for their armies (Alma 53:7). It follows then that war went on after the farm work was done and before the next planting season.

3. The Book of Mormon story likely took place in tropical Central America. The rainy season occurred at the same time as the North American summer and fall. These months were favorable for growing crops, but the rain made the land impassable. Hence, it would not have been possible to move soldiers and fight wars and live in field camps during these months. The months October through April were warmer and especially drier.

2 For behold, the armies of the Lamanites had come in upon the wilderness side, into the borders of the land, even into the city of Ammonihah, and began to slay the people and destroy the city.

verse 2 We will later learn that this attack on the Nephites in the city of Ammonihah was precipitated by events in the land of Nephi. As a result of the preaching of the sons of Mosiah and the group that went with them up to the land of Nephi, a large group of Lamanites had been converted. Those converts had also entered into a covenant not to take up arms against their fellow Lamanites. These “Anti-Nephi-Lehies” were attacked by the non-convert Lamanites and 1,005 of the Anti-Nephi-Lehies were killed as they prostrated themselves before their fellow Lamanites and refused to defend themselves. In their frustration and anger over having been, as they termed it, “manipulated” by the Nephite missionaries and “tricked” into killing their own brethren, the furious Lamanites decided to attack the Nephites in the land of Zarahemla.

Dr. John L. Sorenson has suggested a compelling model as to why the Lamanites “happened” to fall upon the city of Ammonihah. As one traveled from the land of Nephi to Zarahemla, according to Dr. Sorenson, there were at least two major routes (see the Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands). A traveler could pass northward through the mountainous wilderness past the head waters of the River Sidon through the land of Manti, down the river through the land of Gideon to Zarahemla. Or, one could descend westward to the pacific coastal plain and travel near the shore to the wilderness, west of Zarahemla. Following this latter route, entry into Zarahemla through the mountainous wilderness could only be made through a mountain pass. Dr. Sorenson postulates that Ammonihah might have been situated in the direct path of a Lamanite army entering Zarahemla by this latter route. Thus, those in Ammonihah caught the full brunt of the Lamanites’ vengeful anger.

3 And now it came to pass, before the Nephites could raise a sufficient army to drive them out of the land, they had destroyed the people who were in the city of Ammonihah, and also some around the borders of Noah, and taken others captive into the wilderness.

verse 3 “before the Nephites could raise a sufficient army to drive them out of the land, they had destroyed the people who were in the city of Ammonihah, and also some around the borders of Noah” One interesting feature of the Nephite armies is that, for the most part, they seem to have been formed from a militia mobilized from the general population and were not part of a standing army. “The bulk of the armed forces was probably drawn from the lower classes and was organized in ranks with fathers and brothers in similar units (see Mosiah 10:9). The captains likely were individuals with some special privileges. The chief captain over all the Nephite armies seems usually to have been of the tribe of Nephi. The militia was organized in response to a levy or request from the central government (see Alma 60:1-2)” (A. Brent Merrill, “Nephite Captains and Armies” in Warfare in the Book of Mormon, edited by Stephen D. Ricks and William J. Hamblin, 271-72).

4 Now it came to pass that the Nephites were desirous to obtain those who had been carried away captive into the wilderness.

5 Therefore, he that had been appointed chief captain over the armies of the Nephites, (and his name was Zoram, and he had two sons, Lehi and Aha)—now Zoram and his two sons, knowing that Alma was high priest over the church, and having heard that he had the spirit of prophecy, therefore they went unto him and desired of him to know whither the Lord would that they should go into the wilderness in search of their brethren, who had been taken captive by the Lamanites.

verse 5 “and his name was Zoram” There are three Zorams in the Book of Mormon. One was the servant of Laban who departed Jerusalem into the wilderness with the family of Lehi. Do not confuse the Zoram in this verse with the Nephite apostate who will later found the sect known as the Zoramites (see Alma 30:59; 31). The Zoram in this verse is a noble Nephite chief captain.

“And he had two sons, Lehi and Aha” It is interesting to note that the name Aha is Egyptian for “warrior” (Hugh Nibley, Encyclopedia of Mormonism, volume 1, “Book of Mormon Near Eastern Background”). See also the supplemental article, Names in the Book of Mormon.

6 And it came to pass that Alma inquired of the Lord concerning the matter. And Alma returned and said unto them: Behold, the Lamanites will cross the river Sidon in the south wilderness, away up beyond the borders of the land of Manti. And behold there shall ye meet them, on the east of the river Sidon, and there the Lord will deliver unto thee thy brethren who have been taken captive by the Lamanites.

verse 6 It has been suggested that perhaps Alma used the Nephite interpreters, the Urim and Thummim, in his inquiring of the Lord. We know that he possessed the interpreters (see Mosiah 28:20; Alma 37:24).

7 And it came to pass that Zoram and his sons crossed over the river Sidon, with their armies, and marched away beyond the borders of Manti into the south wilderness, which was on the east side of the river Sidon.

8 And they came upon the armies of the Lamanites, and the Lamanites were scattered and driven into the wilderness; and they took their brethren who had been taken captive by the Lamanites, and there was not one soul of them had been lost that were taken captive. And they were brought by their brethren to possess their own lands.

9 And thus ended the eleventh year of the judges, the Lamanites having been driven out of the land, and the people of Ammonihah were destroyed; yea, every living soul of the Ammonihahites was destroyed, and also their great city, which they said God could not destroy, because of its greatness.

verse 9 “Every living soul of the Ammonihahites was destroyed” An interesting correlation has been drawn between the destruction of the city of Ammonihah and an ancient Israelite law which pronounced the fate of apostate cities (Reexploring the Book of Mormon, 176-79). This law is found in Deuteronomy 13:12-16 and essentially it states: If, in a city inhabited by people of the house of Israel, certain apostate Israelites under the influence of Satan lead the people of the city astray, then you must investigate this tragic happening. If the fact is confirmed, then you must utterly destroy the city with swords and with fire. Also, the city shall not be built up again. According to Richard H. Hiers, “The Bible does not report that any Israelite cities, or their people or cattle actually were destroyed pursuant to this law” (Richard H. Hiers, “Reverence for Life and Environment Ethics in Biblical Law and Covenant,” Journal of Law and Religion 13, 1996–1998: 167. Likewise, Paul-Eugene Dion, “Deuteronomy 13: The Suppression of Alien Religious Propaganda in Israel during the Late Monarchical Era,” in Law and Ideology in Monarchic Israel, ed. Baruch Halpern and Deborah W. Hobson, Sheffield, Eng.: Sheffield Academic Press, 1991, 147–216). While the Bible may not, the Book of Mormon likely does.

It is likely Alma knew about this ancient tenet of the law of Moses. While he did not have the power or perhaps the desire to decree the destruction of Ammonihah by a righteous Nephite army, he was careful to include in his record the factors that qualified Ammonihah for destruction, and he documented the fact of its destruction. He also justified the destruction as being according to divine law. Consider the following:

1. This law pertained to apostates—“certain men [who] are gone out from among you” (Deuteronomy 13:13). Alma made it clear that those members of the order of the Nehors were apostate Nephites: “If this people, who have received so many blessings from the hand of the Lord, should transgress contrary to the light and knowledge which they do have . . . it would be far more tolerable for the Lamanites than for them” (Alma 9:23).

2. Alma made it clear that Ammonihah’s learned leaders, the followers of Nehor, had intended to lead their people away from the Lord (Alma 8:17).

3. Alma also placed the ultimate blame on Satan and his influence over the people of Ammonihah (Alma 8:9).

4. The law required a thorough investigation of the situation. Alma and Amulek accomplished this requirement. After once being rejected, Alma was commanded to return to warn the city that they would be destroyed if they did not repent (Alma 8:16). Then, acting as two witnesses (see Deuteronomy 17:6), Alma and Amulek were forced to watch the horrible burning of the innocent wives and children of the believers (Alma 14:9). And this travesty was made even more excruciating for both of them in that those killed likely included the wife /wives and children of Amulek. Painful as this experience was, it did serve to seal the fate of the wicked city (Alma 14:11).

5. The prescribed mode of execution was the sword. The Lamanites did “slay the people and destroy the city” (Alma 16:2) presumably by the sword.

6. Finally, the law stated that the destroyed city “shall not be built again” (Deuteronomy 13:16). As for Ammonihah: “The people did not go in to possess the land of Ammonihah for many years” (Alma 16:11). Apparently, this prohibition against re-establishing the city did expire after a ritual cleansing period of seven years, and people did eventually move back to the city (Alma 49:1-2). Indeed, the destruction of the city of Ammonihah seems to be a remarkable example of God’s wrath and judgment.

Recognizing the way this tragic story conforms to the law of apostate cities is evidence that both Alma and Mormon were familiar with the legal standards this section in the law of Moses required. Ammonihah was destroyed in fulfillment of the Israelite law governing the lands of promise. In observing the law of Moses strictly (Alma 30:3), Alma appears to have consciously acted according to each of its requirements, and then Mormon arranged his abridgement to emphasize the complete fulfillment of this law. This case both ties the text to the ancient world and indicates technical legal sophistication on the part of its authors.

This verse and the preceding one probably show evidence of Mormon’s editing style (see the commentary for Mosiah 25:15-16). Mormon’s editorial tendency is to consistently emphasize the fact that the righteous prosper and the wicked suffer. It would seem that he is inclined to edit his stories so that this message is not lost. In verses 8 and 9 he concludes the story of Ammonihah by saying that every person in that city was slain, and every innocent bystander taken captive by the Lamanites was rescued. Note how, in these two verses, he fails to mention those other innocent bystanders, mentioned in verse 3, who were killed “around the borders of Noah.” Mormon’s tendency is to emphasize the moral message and “clean up” the historical facts so as not to interfere with the precision of his message. Mormon will later explain the defeat around the city of Noah as being due to military weakness (Alma 49:15).

These observations are pointed out, not in the spirit of criticism, but only for the interest of the reader. Mormon’s moral message in this case, as they are throughout the Book of Mormon, is profoundly true. There can be no question that an act of God destroyed the Ammonihahites in retribution for their arrogance, brutality, and rejection of his prophets.

Our lives are often complicated jumbles of good and bad, fortune and failure. We have a tendency to attempt to make sense of them or to explain them. Perhaps a word of caution is appropriate about being overly simplistic. The prophet Mormon’s tendency is to always emphasize that those who follow God are blessed, while those who reject him suffer. In day-to-day reality, there does, however, seem to be some degree of “mortal arbitrariness” in our successes and failures even though we may strive to be obedient believers.

10 But behold, in one day it was left desolate; and the carcasses were mangled by dogs and wild beasts of the wilderness.

verse 10 Alma had predicted a Lamanite attack on Ammonihah (Alma 9:18).

It may be noted that today the acceptable spelling of “carcasses” is carcasses, though carcases is also acknowledged in today’s dictionaries.

11 Nevertheless, after many days their dead bodies were heaped up upon the face of the earth, and they were covered with a shallow covering. And now so great was the scent thereof that the people did not go in to possess the land of Ammonihah for many years. And it was called Desolation of Nehors; for they were of the profession of Nehor, who were slain; and their lands remained desolate.

verse 11 “it was called Desolation of Nehors” This name was given because so many of its inhabitants had been adherents to the false doctrines of Nehor.

For a discussion of the “profession of Nehor” see the commentary for Alma 8:8.

12 And the Lamanites did not come again to war against the Nephites until the fourteenth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi. And thus for three years did the people of Nephi have continual peace in all the land.

verse 12 A three-year period of peace, from the eleventh to the fourteenth years of the reign of judges, will end when a large Lamanite army attacks the land of Zarahemla. As with the Lamanite attack on Ammonihah, this attack early in the fifteenth year of the reign of judges will also be precipitated by events occurring in the land of Nephi (see Alma 28). Those Lamanites converted as a result of the efforts of the sons of Mosiah, the Anti-Nephi-Lehies or people of Ammon, will leave the land of Nephi to settle in the land of Zarahemla. They will be pursued by a Lamanite army who will attack Zarahemla (see the Narrative Historical Summary of the book of Alma 23 through 46).

13 And Alma and Amulek went forth preaching repentance to the people in their temples, and in their sanctuaries, and also in their synagogues, which were built after the manner of the Jews.

verse 13 “Preaching repentance” means preaching the principles of the gospel.

“temples . . . sanctuaries . . . synagogues” These are the Nephite places of worship.

Temples. We know of three temples in the Book of Mormon lands: (1) The temple in the city of Nephi was originally built under the direction of Nephi himself “after the manner of the temple of Solomon save it were not built of so many precious things”

(2 Nephi 5:16). Jacob preached his well-known sermons recorded in Jacob 2 and 3 in this new temple. This temple would later be restored by Zeniff and would serve the “Zeniffites” through the reigns of kings Noah and Limhi. (2) The temple in the city of Zarahemla is first referred to at the time King Benjamin was planning his speech from the tower (Mosiah 1:18) and was probably built during the reign of Mosiah, the father of Benjamin. (3) The temple in the land Bountiful is best known, of course, as the place where the resurrected Lord Jesus Christ will appear to the Nephites.

Sanctuaries. The “sanctuary” seems to have been a smaller version of the temple such as the one referred to in the city of Sidom (Alma 15:17). These likely contained an altar for the offering of sacrifices. They also functioned as refuges from danger and places of spiritual deliverance. We are told nothing further about these sanctuaries, but perhaps some speculation would not be harmful. When the Elder Alma returned to Zarahemla with his covenant group, he was given authority by the king to “establish churches throughout all the land of Zarahemla” (Mosiah 25:19). These “churches” or congregations met independently of one another. They likely did not have easy access to the temple in the city of Zarahemla. It might well have been that satellite temples or “sanctuaries” were established to give these outlying congregations the opportunity to enjoy the blessings of the temple under direction of ordained “priests.”

Synagogues. The word “synagogue” means “gather together.” Synagogue is Greek in origin, and basically means “assembly” or “gathering.” The word appears over two hundred times in the Greek Old Testament, often translated into English as “congregation.” While this word usually refers to the assembly itself, and not a building, it can on occasion have spatial connotations. The synagogues in the Book of Mormon were likely simply the places where the Nephites came together to be instructed in the gospel by their ordained “teachers.” They were the Nephite meetinghouses. See the commentary on the Book of Mormon’s use of the word synagogue or synagogues in the commentary for 2 Nephi 26:26 and Jacob 7:27.

“Owing to the paucity of sources, opinions have varied widely as to when, where, and why the synagogue developed” (Lee Levine, “Synagogue,” in The Oxford Companion to the Bible, ed. Bruce M. Metzger and Michael D. Coogan, New York, NY: Oxford University Press, 1993, 722). The structure and function of the modern synagogue appear to have evolved primarily during and after the time of Jesus. That being said, some scholars recognize earlier precedent for the basic idea, at least, of the synagogue (a place of assembly) ranging as far back as the time before the Babylonian captivity (586 BC) (See the overview provided by A. Keith Thompson, “Nephite Insights into Israelite Worship Practices Before the Babylonian Captivity,” Interpreter: A Journal of Mormon Scripture 3, 2013: 155–195. William J. Adams Jr., “Synagogues in the Book of Mormon,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 9, no. 1, 2000: 7).

Drawing on the body of non-Mormon academic work on this topic, one Latter-day Saint scholar, William J. Adams Jr., observed how “later synagogues closely mirror the architecture of the gate chambers” during this earlier time in Israelite history. A gate chamber is a room built into a city wall next to the city’s gate.“ These chambers may well have been the original synagogues.” Indeed, some “biblical passages . . . indicate that the city gate and its vicinity were the hub of a community’s life,” including the marketplace, the general court, the royal court, and places of worship (William J. Adams Jr., “Synagogues in the Book of Mormon,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 9, no. 1, 2000: 7).

As such, it’s possible that “before the [Babylonian] captivity, a town’s or city’s social activities centered around the city gate, and it seems reasonable that these social activities included Sabbath worship in a chamber of the gate that resembled later synagogues and functioned similarly” (Ibid.).

Synagogues in the Book of Mormon were vital to the worship culture of Book of Mormon peoples. However, they do not appear to have had much of a social function beyond this. As Adams explained, Book of Mormon synagogues focused primarily on providing places of public worship, teaching, and prayer.

A number of later passages [in the Book of Mormon] describe visitors preaching and teaching in synagogues. Public discussions of scripture topics in the synagogues were evidently a part of that teaching and preaching. Prayer apparently is also a part of the worship, for in Alma 31:12–14 Alma’s astonished reaction was to the form of the Zoramite prayers, not to the fact that they offered prayers in their synagogues (Adams, “Synagogues in the Book of Mormon,” 11, scripture citations removed).

14 And as many as would hear their words, unto them they did impart the word of God, without any respect of persons, continually.

verse 14 “without any respect of persons” Apparently all who would listen were invited into the congregations of the Nephites without regard to their ethnic background or social standing. Keep in mind the considerable ethnic mix found among the “Nephites” of Zarahemla. For a discussion of this topic, see the commentary for Alma 10:3.

15 And thus did Alma and Amulek go forth, and also many more who had been chosen for the work, to preach the word throughout all the land. And the establishment of the church became general throughout the land, in all the region round about, among all the people of the Nephites.

16 And there was no inequality among them; the Lord did pour out his Spirit on all the face of the land to prepare the minds of the children of men, or to prepare their hearts to receive the word which should be taught among them at the time of his coming—verse 16 “there was no inequality among them” The Nephite saints during this period had apparently achieved a state of social and economic equality which we do not have even today. Perhaps in some ways they were spiritually more sophisticated than are we!

“the Lord did pour out his Spirit on all the face of the land” Obviously, the period just prior to the Lord’s mortal sojourn was a time of special spiritual endowment for people on the earth. The Spirit literally poured out his influence upon those who were prepared to respond. The period in which we now live is another time of special spiritual endowment as the earth is being prepared for his second coming (D&C 133:16-17).

17 That they might not be hardened against the word, that they might not be unbelieving, and go on to destruction, but that they might receive the word with joy, and as a branch be grafted into the true vine, that they might enter into the rest of the Lord their God.

verse 17 “as a branch be grafted into the true vine” Christ is the vine. Men are the branches. If a man is grafted onto the true vine or accepts Christ and his gospel, then he brings forth much fruit. If the “branch” does not accept the Savior, then he withers and is cast into the fire (John 15:1, 5).

“that they might enter into the rest of the Lord their God” For a discussion of the concept of the “rest of the Lord,” see the commentary for 2 Nephi 21:10. See also “The Rest of the Lord” in chapter 17, Justification and Sanctification in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1. See also a discussion of the closely related gift of hope in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine: see “Two Little-Appreciated Gifts of the Spirit” in volume 1, chapter 10, Deliberate Faith and Revealed Faith. See also “The Fruits of Faith” in volume 1, chapter 11, Other Notes on Faith.

18 Now those priests who did go forth among the people did preach against all lyings, and deceivings, and envyings, and strifes, and malice, and revilings, and stealing, robbing, plundering, murdering, committing adultery, and all manner of lasciviousness, crying that these things ought not so to be—verse 18 If we can master things of the flesh, then the fruits or blessings of the Spirit will be ours. These include the flow of pure intelligence from God to man, godliness, and charity.

Note again the distinction between “stealing” and “robbing” (plundering). See the commentary for Mosiah 13:22.

19 Holding forth things which must shortly come; yea, holding forth the coming of the Son of God, his sufferings and death, and also the resurrection of the dead.

verse 19 “Holding forth” here means “prophesying or preaching of.”

20 And many of the people did inquire concerning the place where the Son of God should come; and they were taught that he would appear unto them after his resurrection; and this the people did hear with great joy and gladness.

verse 20 “he would appear unto them after his resurrection” The year is about 78 BC. It would be more than one hundred years before the Savior’s appearance to the Nephites. It would be the descendants of these Nephites rather than these Nephites themselves who would actually witness the Savior’s visit.

21 And now after the church had been established throughout all the land—having got the victory over the devil, and the word of God being preached in its purity in all the land, and the Lord pouring out his blessings upon the people—thus ended the fourteenth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi.

Mormon's Use of Flashbacks

One of the features of the Book of Mormon that is fun but can be a bit confusing is just how some of the stories relate to one another and how the prophet Mormon used the technique of “flashbacks” as he abridged the large plates of the Book of Mormon. An important example of that technique is encountered here in Alma 17.

In Alma chapters 1 through 16, we have read of Alma's ministry in the Land of Zarahemla. Alma, you will recall, dealt with the murderer Nehor, fought with the Nephite dissident Amlici, fought wars with the Lamanites, and then preached to the people of the city of Zarahemla. He then traveled to preach in Gideon. He returned to Zarahemla to rest, but soon left to teach in Melek and then in Ammonihah. There, he first preached alone, became discouraged, tried to leave, but was turned back by an angel. He then preached with Amulek in Ammonihah and had an experience that was both wonderful and awful. He and Amulek then preached to the lawyer Zeezrom who, you will remember, was eventually converted. Finally, Alma learns that the city of Ammonihah had been destroyed and all of its people killed by an attacking Lamanite army. This part of Alma's ministry lasted about fourteen years from 92 BC to 78 BC.

Beginning here in Alma 17, we are now going to begin to study an entirely different story. It is included here by Mormon as a flashback. This flashback begins in Alma 17:6 and ends in Alma 26. The story is that of the sons of Mosiah who travel up to the Land of Nephi and preach among the Lamanites. Their ministry also lasted fourteen years from 92 BC to 78 BC. Toward the end of this mission of the sons of Mosiah, an angry Lamanite army leaves the Land of Nephi to travel to the Land of Zarahemla intending to attack and destroy Nephites there. The first city they attack and destroy is Ammonihah. The destruction of Ammonihah provides the reader with a common event that occurred in both this story and that of the ministry of Alma just related.

Most readers of the Book of Mormon fail to realize that these two stories—that of Alma’s ministry in the Land of Zarahemla and that of the ministry of the sons of Mosiah among the Lamanites in the land of Nephi—occurred simultaneously. That fact is not immediately apparent as you read through the BOM. Mormon’s flashbacks are his technique for being enabled to include both stories even though they occurred simultaneously.

I have created a diagram that illustrates the temporal relationship of both of these stories. Please see the illustration, Book of Mormon History Diagram Alma 1 through Alma 26. Note that the story of Alma’s ministry in Alma 1-16 occurs simultaneously with the account of the ministry of the sons of Mosiah among the Lamanites in Alma 17-26. Most readers of the Book of Mormon fail to notice the few important interactions between these two stories.

I will provide you, the reader, with a bit more information regarding what events in the Land of Nephi preceded the attack upon and the destruction of the city of Ammonihah. This attack is described in Alma 25:2. In Alma chapters 23 and 24, we will read of the conversion of many Lamanites who will covenant to never again take up weapons of war and will begin to call themselves the Anti-Nephi-Lehies. Their fellow Lamanites will become so furious over their conversion to the gospel that they will attack them. Rather than fight or flee, the Anti-Nephi-Lehies will simply lie prostrate on the ground before their Lamanite attackers, and 1,005 of the Anti-Nephi-Lehies will be slain. The attacking Lamanites finally realize they have been killing their brother Lamanites and, predictably, they become furious at the Nephites for “making them” do such a reprehensible thing. As we might expect, they swear vengeance against the Nephites. They summon an army and set out for Nephite lands to seek revenge. Rather than marching to Zarahemla by the usual route—heading straight up through the wilderness and down the River Sidon basin, they skirt the wilderness on the coastal plain to the west and enter the land of Zarahemla from the northwest. Doubtless they wanted to fool the Nephites and make a surprise attack (see the illustration, Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands). It just so happens that the first city they come to is Ammonihah. They destroy the city and slaughter everyone in it. But, wait a moment! We have already read of the destruction of Ammonihah in Alma 16! Now you know the story behind the destruction of that city by the Lamanites.

An interesting feature of the flashback contained in Alma 17-26 is that it contains a flashback within a flashback—or what Grant Hardy calls “a subsidiary flashback”(Alma 20:30–Alma 21:14) (Grant Hardy, Understanding the Book of Mormon: A Reader’s Guide, New York, NY: Oxford University Press, 2010, 104). The end of Alma 20 recounts how Ammon and Lamoni rescued Ammon’s brother Aaron and his missionary companions from the king of the land of Middoni (Alma 20:28–30) by whom they were imprisoned. Then, Mormon immediately presents, in another flashback, Aaron’s record of his preaching, imprisonment, and rescue (Alma 21:1–17).

The first flashback we encountered in the Book of Mormon began in Mosiah chapter 9. The father of King Benjamin, Mosiah led the Nephites from the Land of Nephi to Zarahemla in about 210 BC. This Mosiah was succeeded as king of the Nephites by his son Benjamin who was later succeeded by his son Mosiah. We read of the ministries of these three kings in Omni 1 and in Mosiah chapters 1 through 6. The period of the ministries of these three Nephite kings lasted from 210 BC to 120 BC.

Beginning in Mosiah 9 and extending through Mosiah 24 we read a flashback that began with a man named Zeniff who, in 200 BC, finding himself in Zarahemla, yearned to return to his prior home in the Land of Nephi. He and other Nephites traveled from Zarahemla back up to the land of Nephi. There they established themselves. Zeniff was succeeded as king and leader of the Nephites by his son, King Noah, who was succeeded by his son Limhi. Finally, in 120 BC, Limhi and his people were led back to the Land of Zarahemla. This return is reported in Mosiah chapter 22.

Then for the next two chapters of Mosiah—chapters 23 and 24—we read of another flashback, actually another “flashback within a flashback.” The story returned to the time of King Noah and related the account of the people who followed the senior Alma out of the city of Nephi-Lehi into the wilderness and lived in bondage to another Nephite group led by Amulon, the leader of a bunch of King Noah’s wicked priests. Finally, in 120 BC, this group found their way out of captivity and back to the City of Zarahemla.

The sophistication and intricacy of Mormon’s record can easily be discerned in these chapters. Briefly said, “These flashbacks are yet another evidence of the complexity of the Book of Mormon. It is quite remarkable how these historical accounts fit so neatly together” (John W. Welch and J. Gregory Welch, Charting the Book of Mormon: Visual Aids for Personal Study and Teaching, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1999, chart 30.). There is no fumbling or confusion on Mormon’s part, who, despite the “twists and turns of [the] narrative . . . handles them smoothly” (Clyde J. Williams, “Instruments in the Hands of God,” in The Book of Mormon: Alma, the Testimony of the Word, ed. Monte S. Nyman and Charles D. Tate Jr., Provo, UT: Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, 1992, 89–105).

These flashbacks are yet another testimony of the authenticity of the Book of Mormon. Can you even imagine the twenty-three-year-old prophet Joseph’s trying to create these complex materials as he dictated the text to Oliver Cowdery completely without notes or reference materials!

1 And now it came to pass that as Alma was journeying from the land of Gideon southward, away to the land of Manti, behold, to his astonishment, he met with the sons of Mosiah journeying towards the land of Zarahemla.

verse 1 “journeying towards the land of Zarahemla” It is likely that Alma and the sons of Mosiah encountered each other in the greater land of Zarahemla.

Therefore, the expression “land of Zarahemla” here refers to either the local land of Zarahemla immediately surrounding the city of Zarahemla or it refers to the city of Zarahemla itself.

Who would have accompanied the sons of Mosiah as Alma encountered them on the road between Gideon and Manti? They were accompanied by the “few” Nephite missionaries who accompanied them on their mission to the Lamanites (see verse 8). Even though the sons of Mosiah had brought a group of their Lamanite converts, the Anti-Nephi-Lehies or people of Ammon out of the land of Nephi, they had left them in the wilderness near the city of Manti while they journeyed on to inquire about the appropriateness of bringing into the land of Zarahemla a large group of Lamanites (see Alma 27:14-16).

2 Now these sons of Mosiah were with Alma at the time the angel first appeared unto him; therefore Alma did rejoice exceedingly to see his brethren; and what added more to his joy, they were still his brethren in the Lord; yea, and they had waxed strong in the knowledge of the truth; for they were men of a sound understanding and they had searched the scriptures diligently, that they might know the word of God.

verse 2 “at the time the angel first appeared unto him” (italics added) Recall that the same angel who appeared to Alma and the sons of Mosiah as they traveled about persecuting the church (Mosiah 27) later appeared to Alma to encourage him and send him back to the city of Ammonihah (Alma 8:14-15).

“Alma did rejoice exceedingly to see his brethren” There appears to be a uniquely joyful reunion that occurs between servants of the Lord who are reunited after a period of being apart. The unusual joy is contingent upon both parties having remained true in the faith. One example that comes to mind is a reunion between Joseph Smith and several elders on the banks of the Missouri River. Joseph was returning from Independence, Missouri, to Kirtland, Ohio. The elders were traveling toward Independence, preaching the gospel as they went. After a joyful reunion, Joseph received a revelation from the Lord directed to the faithful missionaries. In it the Lord told them: “ye are blessed, for the testimony which ye have borne is recorded in heaven for the angels to look upon; and they rejoice over you, and your sins are forgiven you” (D&C 62:3). It would seem that this type of joyful earthly reunion is but a type of the greater reunion we will have one day with our Father in Heaven, with our Lord Jesus Christ, and with cherished friends and family members who have preceded us in death. In these reunions, the joy that may be experienced depends upon our ongoing faithfulness to the principles of the gospel.

“they had searched the scriptures diligently” The sons of Mosiah had been in the land of Nephi for fourteen years. Did they have the scriptures with them on their missionary journey? They certainly must have had copies with them. But in what form?

Written on what kind of material? Your author is aware of no information that might help to answer these questions, but obviously, the Nephites of that day had access to fully portable paper-like materials onto which copies of the scriptural materials from the brass plates of Laban were written.

3 But this is not all; they had given themselves to much prayer, and fasting; therefore they had the spirit of prophecy, and the spirit of revelation, and when they taught, they taught with power and authority of God.

verse 3 “they had given themselves to much prayer, and fasting” Fasting under these circumstances may be referred to as preparatory fasting and is done in preparation for obtaining blessings from God (cf. Alma 17:9; 5:46; 8:26). There is a biblical precedent for this type of fasting. Moses fasted on the mountain for forty days before receiving the Ten Commandments (Exodus 34:28; Deuteronomy 9:9).

“they had the spirit of prophecy, and the spirit of revelation” These are really one and the same. They both refer to the influence of the Holy Ghost which is invariably associated intimately with a testimony of Jesus. When the Spirit is teaching us spiritual truths, we are said to have the “spirit of revelation.” When we teach these truths to others, and they receive our teachings by the influence of the Spirit, then we are said to have the “spirit of prophecy.” With this latter spirit we are able to teach “with the power and authority of God.” Note how verses 2 and 3 together provide us with the formula for obtaining the “spirit of prophecy”: (1) Search the scriptures diligently. (2) Pray and fast frequently. (3) Obey the Lord’s commands. This obedience was evident among all those who encountered each other while on the Lord’s errand.

4 And they had been teaching the word of God for the space of fourteen years among the Lamanites, having had much success in bringing many to the knowledge of the truth; yea, by the power of their words many were brought before the altar of God, to call on his name and confess their sins before him.

verse 4 “many were brought before the altar of God” Mormon may have had either a figurative or a literal meaning in mind here. The altar was a place where an individual could enjoy the presence of God, perhaps in a temple or sanctuary (see the commentary for Alma 16:13). These were places of prayer, confession, covenant-making, safety, and sacrifice.

5 Now these are the circumstances which attended them in their journeyings, for they had many afflictions; they did suffer much, both in body and in mind, such as hunger, thirst and fatigue, and also much labor in the spirit.

verse 5 “also much labor in the spirit” This expression apparently refers to spiritual trials. The process of acquiring spiritual strength is not an easy one. In mortality, we are not buoyed up by the Spirit’s influence constantly. The required “labor” includes patience, long suffering, and doing good when we know in our minds that we should, but we may not necessarily feel like it in our hearts.

6 Now these were their journeyings: Having taken leave of their father, Mosiah, in the first year of the judges; having refused the kingdom which their father was desirous to confer upon them, and also this was the minds of the people;

verse 6 “having refused the kingdom which their father was desirous to confer upon them, and also this was the minds of the people” The text does not state explicitly until this verse that it was Mosiah’s desire that one of his sons accept his kingship. It was previously made clear that the people wanted Mosiah’s son Aaron to be their king (Mosiah 29:2).

7 Nevertheless they departed out of the land of Zarahemla, and took their swords, and their spears, and their bows, and their arrows, and their slings; and this they did that they might provide food for themselves while in the wilderness.

8 And thus they departed into the wilderness with their numbers which they had selected, to go up to the land of Nephi, to preach the word of God unto the Lamanites.

verse 8 “with their numbers which they had selected” We don’t know who or how many accompanied the four sons of Mosiah on their journey. We only know that it was a “small number” (see Mosiah 28:1).

9 And it came to pass that they journeyed many days in the wilderness, and they fasted much and prayed much that the Lord would grant unto them a portion of his Spirit to go with them, and abide with them, that they might be an instrument in the hands of God to bring, if it were possible, their brethren, the Lamanites, to the knowledge of the truth, to the knowledge of the baseness of the traditions of their fathers, which were not correct.

verse 9 “they journeyed many days in the wilderness, and they fasted much and prayed much that the Lord would . . . abide with them” Though it is not stated in this verse, subsequent verses suggest that at this time the missionaries were experiencing misgivings, discouragement, depression, and they were even considering turning back (see verses 10, 12; Alma 26:27).

“portion of his spirit” This expression, which is used commonly in our LDS culture today, originated largely in the Book of Mormon. Indeed, it is found only once in the Bible (2 Kings 2:9) and once in the Doctrine and Covenants (D&C 71:1). Other Book of Mormon references include Alma 18:35; 24:8; and 40:3. It refers simply to the influence of the Spirit.

“the baseness of the traditions of their fathers” See the commentary for Enos 1:14. Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines baseness as, “Meanness; vileness; worthlessness.”

We have learned that the Lamanites maintained a set of “traditions of their fathers” which included the idea that father Lehi exercised unrighteous dominion over his family in leading them out of Jerusalem. Later, Nephi treated Laman and Lemuel unfairly as they traveled in the wilderness and while they were crossing the sea. The Lamanites believed that the right to govern, the birthright, rightfully belonged to Laman and not to Nephi (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 16:37). They felt that when Nephi moved out of the land of their first inheritance and took with him the records of the people and the plates of Laban, he had robbed the Lamanites of what was rightfully theirs (see also Mosiah 10:12-17).

10 And it came to pass that the Lord did visit them with his Spirit, and said unto them: Be comforted. And they were comforted.

11 And the Lord said unto them also: Go forth among the Lamanites, thy brethren, and establish my word; yet ye shall be patient in long-suffering and afflictions, that ye may show forth good examples unto them in me, and I will make an instrument of thee in my hands unto the salvation of many souls.

verse 11 Here is a pertinent illustration of what we all might expect during our mortal sojourn. Obviously, the Lord was mindful of the sons of Mosiah, and obviously the Lord’s Spirit was with them and would protect them against mortal danger. Yet they are warned that they will experience hardship and affliction. So it is with all of us and even the most righteous among us.

12 And it came to pass that the hearts of the sons of Mosiah, and also those who were with them, took courage to go forth unto the Lamanites to declare unto them the word of God.

13 And it came to pass when they had arrived in the borders of the land of the Lamanites, that they separated themselves and departed one from another, trusting in the Lord that they should meet again at the close of their harvest; for they supposed that great was the work which they had undertaken.

verse 13 “when they had arrived in the borders of the land of the Lamanites” We have made the point previously that the borders of the land may refer to the mountains of the land.

“great was the work which they had undertaken” This statement refers to the immense challenge that lay before the sons of Mosiah and their companions.

14 And assuredly it was great, for they had undertaken to preach the word of God to a wild and a hardened and a ferocious people; a people who delighted in murdering the Nephites, and robbing and plundering them; and their hearts were set upon riches, or upon gold and silver, and precious stones; yet they sought to obtain these things by murdering and plundering, that they might not labor for them with their own hands.

verse 14 “And assuredly it was great” It was likely the prophet Mormon who inserted this subtle editorial comment. Referring to the phrase in the previous verse, “great was the work which they had undertaken,” Mormon betrays his admiration for these missionaries by saying, in effect, “They really had taken on themselves a formidable challenge!”

15 Thus they were a very indolent people, many of whom did worship idols, and the curse of God had fallen upon them because of the traditions of their fathers; notwithstanding the promises of the Lord were extended unto them on the conditions of repentance.

verses 14-15 It is interesting to observe how the Lamanites’ hatred of the Nephites festered over the centuries. While this hatred may have had its foundations in the false teachings of the Lamanites’ ancestors, it seems likely that its flames were fanned anew by each generation of Lamanites as they observed the Nephites’ superior culture and felt an inevitable inferiority. Also, it seems that evil is obliged to justify itself. The Lamanites justified their own greedy and evil deeds by pointing to a variety of supposed past wrongs done to them. See additional discussion of the Lamanites’ “traditions of their fathers” in the commentary for Enos 1:14 and Mosiah 10:12-17.

verse 15 Again, the “curse of God” was not the dark color of their skin. Rather it was the loss of the gospel and the priesthood with its attendant blessings, including the opportunity to associated with others who were committed to the Lord and his gospel.

The “promises of the Lord” unto the Lamanites included:

1. the extraordinary mercy which the Lord was willing to extend to the Lamanites because of the incorrect traditions passed on to them by their forbears;
2. a promise that they will not be annihilated as a people—their days will be “prolonged in the land”; and
3. an eventual opportunity, especially in the “latter times,” to accept the gospel and receive their salvation (Alma 9:16-17; Helaman 7:24; 15:11-12).

16 Therefore, this was the cause for which the sons of Mosiah had undertaken the work, that perhaps they might bring them unto repentance; that perhaps they might bring them to know of the plan of redemption.

17 Therefore they separated themselves one from another, and went forth among them, every man alone, according to the word and power of God which was given unto him.

verse 17 “every man alone” The reader should not pass by this verse without pausing to consider the fear that must have been in the heart of each of these missionaries as they ventured forth among these savage people without a companion!

18 Now Ammon being the chief among them, or rather he did administer unto them, and he departed from them, after having blessed them according to their several stations, having imparted the word of God unto them, or administered unto them before his departure; and thus they took their several journeys throughout the land.

verse 18 We have speculated previously that Aaron, and not Ammon, was the eldest of the sons of Mosiah (see the commentary for Mosiah 29:2). When the sons of Mosiah are listed, Ammon is usually mentioned first. Whether or not he was the eldest, he was certainly the natural leader of the group.

“according to their several stations” Ammon perceived their individual needs and blessed and taught or “administered” unto them accordingly.

19 And Ammon went to the land of Ishmael, the land being called after the sons of Ishmael, who also became Lamanites.

verse 19 There has been some interesting speculation regarding the land of Ishmael. Let us pose a question: What ever happened to the land and city of Lehi-Nephi after king Limhi and his people escaped from Lamanite bondage and abandoned it? It is clear that the Lamanites took it over. It may have become the Lamanite city of Nephi. Another idea, though, is that the Lamanites already had another chief city called the city of Nephi quite apart from the former Nephite city Lehi-Nephi (see the commentary for Jacob 2:28). They thus would not be likely to continue to call this abandoned Nephite city the city of Nephi. They would be more likely to change its name. Perhaps it became known as the land and city of Ishmael. It was a choice land, so the Lamanite king in the chief Lamanite city, the city of Nephi, may have given this land to his son Lamoni (who was a descendant of Ishmael) for his inheritance. So, when the four sons of Mosiah on their missionary journey came into the land of Nephi some thirty-one years after king Limhi and his people departed, Ammon, like Zeniff in 200 BC, may have headed straight for the “land of our father’s first inheritance,” the former land and city of Lehi-Nephi—now the land of Ishmael. He found this land now occupied by king Lamoni. This land will later be referred to as “the land of their inheritance,” referring to Ammon and Lamoni (see Alma 21:18).

20 And as Ammon entered the land of Ishmael, the Lamanites took him and bound him, as was their custom to bind all the Nephites who fell into their hands, and carry them before the king; and thus it was left to the pleasure of the king to slay them, or to retain them in captivity, or to cast them into prison, or to cast them out of his land, according to his will and pleasure.

21 And thus Ammon was carried before the king who was over the land of Ishmael; and his name was Lamoni; and he was a descendant of Ishmael.

22 And the king inquired of Ammon if it were his desire to dwell in the land among the Lamanites, or among his people.

23 And Ammon said unto him: Yea, I desire to dwell among this people for a time; yea, and perhaps until the day I die.

verse 23 I have regarded this verse as suggestive evidence that Ammon had not left behind a wife and children in Zarahemla. Though no mention is ever made, it is certainly also possible that the missionaries were accompanied by their wives and perhaps their children.

24 And it came to pass that king Lamoni was much pleased with Ammon, and caused that his bands should be loosed; and he would that Ammon should take one of his daughters to wife.

verse 24 “King Lamoni was much pleased with Ammon” On initially reading this verse, one may gain the impression that part of the story must have been left out here. In one moment a Nephite prisoner is brought before King Lamoni, and in the next moment Lamoni is offering him one of his daughters to marry. Ammon is offered the opportunity to become part of the royal family! It seems likely that the Spirit had a role here in witnessing to the heart of Lamoni the true goodness of Ammon, but there may have been omitted occurrences which endeared Ammon to Lamoni.

“he would that Ammon should take one of his daughters to wife” Again, the question of whether or not Ammon was accompanied by his wife surfaces. It is certainly possible that Lamoni had more than one wife, and he assumed that it would be appropriate for Ammon to take one of his daughters to wife.

25 But Ammon said unto him: Nay, but I will be thy servant. Therefore Ammon became a servant to king Lamoni. And it came to pass that he was set among other servants to watch the flocks of Lamoni, according to the custom of the Lamanites.

verse 25 “Nay, but I will be thy servant” Now it’s easy to become inappropriately light-minded here and say something like, “Naturally he would refuse—you should have seen his daughter!” Yet, a significant message is taught here. Positions of power and notoriety are not pursued by those who truly seek to emulate Christ. Rather, they seek ways to serve which will never attract public attention, avoiding the public eye. Even the Lord Jesus Christ, in the hour of his extremity on the eve of his crucifixion, washed his disciples’ feet. Such service has a profound influence on those who are privy to it, including the beneficiary, because the very service testifies of Jesus Christ!

26 And after he had been in the service of the king three days, as he was with the Lamanitish servants going forth with their flocks to the place of water, which was called the water of Sebus, and all the Lamanites drive their flocks hither, that they may have water—verse 26 Dr. Hugh Nibley has pointed out (in a lecture to the Sunstone Symposium delivered May 10, 1988) that there are Egyptian words similar to “Sebus” that have such meanings as “bandit” or “to divide property between two parties” or “to take a drink” or “a mingling, a rumble, or a gang fight.” Any of these meanings would offer an interesting parallel to the story which took place at the waters of Sebus.

27 Therefore, as Ammon and the servants of the king were driving forth their flocks to this place of water, behold, a certain number of the Lamanites, who had been with their flocks to water, stood and scattered the flocks of Ammon and the servants of the king, and they scattered them insomuch that they fled many ways.

28 Now the servants of the king began to murmur, saying: Now the king will slay us, as he has our brethren because their flocks were scattered by the wickedness of these men. And they began to weep exceedingly, saying: Behold, our flocks are scattered already.

29 Now they wept because of the fear of being slain. Now when Ammon saw this his heart was swollen within him with joy; for, said he, I will show forth my power unto these my fellow-servants, or the power which is in me, in restoring these flocks unto the king, that I may win the hearts of these my fellow-servants, that I may lead them to believe in my words.

30 And now, these were the thoughts of Ammon, when he saw the afflictions of those whom he termed to be his brethren.

31 And it came to pass that he flattered them by his words, saying: My brethren, be of good cheer and let us go in search of the flocks, and we will gather them together and bring them back unto the place of water; and thus we will preserve the flocks unto the king and he will not slay us.

verse 31 “he flattered them by his words” Ammon was able to convince the king’s servants and gain their confidence.

32 And it came to pass that they went in search of the flocks, and they did follow Ammon, and they rushed forth with much swiftness and did head the flocks of the king, and did gather them together again to the place of water.

verse 32 “they did head the flocks” Obviously, in this context, to head the flocks is to herd, drive, or lead them.

33 And those men again stood to scatter their flocks; but Ammon said unto his brethren: Encircle the flocks round about that they flee not; and I go and contend with these men who do scatter our flocks.

34 Therefore, they did as Ammon commanded them, and he went forth and stood to contend with those who stood by the waters of Sebus; and they were in number not a few.

35 Therefore they did not fear Ammon, for they supposed that one of their men could slay him according to their pleasure, for they knew not that the Lord had promised Mosiah that he would deliver his sons out of their hands; neither did they know anything concerning the Lord; therefore they delighted in the destruction of their brethren; and for this cause they stood to scatter the flocks of the king.

36 But Ammon stood forth and began to cast stones at them with his sling; yea, with mighty power he did sling stones amongst them; and thus he slew a certain number of them insomuch that they began to be astonished at his power; nevertheless they were angry because of the slain of their brethren, and they were determined that he should fall; therefore, seeing that they could not hit him with their stones, they came forth with clubs to slay him.

37 But behold, every man that lifted his club to smite Ammon, he smote off their arms with his sword; for he did withstand their blows by smiting their arms with the edge of his sword, insomuch that they began to be astonished, and began to flee before him; yea, and they were not few in number; and he caused them to flee by the strength of his arm.

38 Now six of them had fallen by the sling, but he slew none save it were their leader with his sword; and he smote off as many of their arms as were lifted against him, and they were not a few.

39 And when he had driven them afar off, he returned and they watered their flocks and returned them to the pasture of the king, and then went in unto the king, bearing the arms which had been smitten off by the sword of Ammon, of those who sought to slay him; and they were carried in unto the king for a testimony of the things which they had done.

verse 39 “went in unto the king, bearing the arms which had been smitten off by the sword of Ammon” Hugh Nibley observed, “The whole affair at the waters of Sebus must strike anyone as very strange” (Hugh Nibley, The Prophetic Book of Mormon, The Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, Volume 8, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1989, 539. See pp. 539–542 for Nibley’s discussion of this strange event in the context of Aztec sports. Brant A. Gardner, Traditions of the Fathers: The Book of Mormon as History, Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2015, 285–289 likewise discusses the strangeness of the episode and contextualizes it with a Mesoamerican background.). Few details are stranger, perhaps, than envisioning Ammon's fellow servants bringing a pile of severed arms to present to the king. Ammon had consciously "slew none with the sword save it were their leader" (Alma 17:38), but he "smote off their arms with his sword," seemingly with a single blow (verse 37) (Military historian William J. Hamblin, writing with Brent J. Merrill, described the technique required to sever an arm, and concluded, "Ammon's sword technique makes perfect sense." William J. Hamblin and Brent J. Merrill, "Swords in the Book of Mormon," in Warfare in the Book of Mormon, ed. Stephen D. Ricks and William J. Hamblin, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1990, 335–347, quote on p. 337, followed by a lengthy discussion of the razor-sharp obsidian bladed macuahuitl used in Mesoamerica in pre-Columbian times, esp. p. 341. In agreement is Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 4:280, who echoes, "Could a blow from a macuahuitl sever an arm? According to a report from Titulo C'oyoi, created by Quiché during the Spanish conquest, a blow of amacuahuitl severed a horse's head during battle sometime between 1523 and 1527. Certainly, decapitating a horse would have been more challenging than severing the human arm."). The servants then diligently took the arms "unto the king ... for a testimony of the things which they had done" (verse 39).

One recent reader has proposed that "arms" should be interpreted as weapons (See, for example, Alonzo L. Gaskill, Miracles of the Book of Mormon: A Guide to the Symbolic Messages, Springville, UT: Cedar Fort, 2015, 198–203; Alonzo L. Gaskill, "Ammon and the Arms of the Lamanites: Have we Been Misreading the Book of Mormon?" Restoration Studies 15, 2014: 82–94, 202), in part because "the image of a servant dragging a blood-soaked bag across the floor of the king's palace in order to show him the gory amputated limbs of his enemies seems somewhat fanciful." Yet, a pair of LDS scholars long ago noted, "The practice of cutting off the arms or other body parts of enemies, specifically as a testimony of the conquest of victims, is attested in the ancient Near East" (John M. Lundquist and John W. Welch, "Ammon and Cutting Off the Arms of Enemies," in Reexploring the Book of Mormon: A Decade of New Research, ed. John W. Welch, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1992, 180). The severed body parts (typically heads or hands) would then be "sent on as evidence and trophies of the success" of a warrior in battle.

Ancient depictions (C.L. Crouch, War and Ethics in the Ancient Near East: Military Violence in Light of Cosmology and History, Berlin: Walter de Gruyter, 2009, 120–121, notes that in ancient Near Eastern depictions, severed heads "are frequently shown held high in triumph" and "are presented to the king" as "war trophies or proofs of success.") show soldiers "heaping them up in triumph," in order to tally the dead or to entitle mercenaries to be paid. This was, according biblical scholars Cyrus Gordon and Gary Rendsburg, "a routine procedure all through the ancient Near East," and “symbolized victory in battle” (Cyrus Gordon and Gary Rendsburg, The Bible and the Ancient Near East, 4th edition, New York, NY: W.W. Norton, 1997, 179–180). Judges 7:25 and 8:6 indicate that the early Israelites engaged in such practices, which are well attested in Egyptian, Canaanite, and Mesopotamian sources (See Lundquist and Welch, “Ammon and Cutting Off the Arms,” 180–181; Gordon and Rendsburg, The Bible and the Ancient Near East, 179–180, 187 n.6; Crouch, War and Ethics in the Ancient Near East, 120–121).

Switching over to the New World (Bruce H. Yerman, “Ammon and the Mesoamerican Custom of Smiting Off Arms,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 8, no. 1, 1999: 44–47, 78–79), in the Popol Vuh, the ancient traditions of the Quiché Maya (Allen J. Christenson, trans. and ed., Popol Vuh, The Mythic Sections—Tales of First Beginnings From the Ancient K’iche’-Maya, Ancient Texts and Mormon Studies, no. 2, Provo, UT: FARMS, 2000, 25), the mythic hero twins fight the bird-demon Seven Macaw. During the conflict, one of the twins attempted to grab Seven Macaw, “but instead Seven Macaw tore off the arm” of the twin, went home and “hung the arm” over the fire, “until [the twins] come to take it back” (Christenson, Popol Vuh, The Mythic Sections, 59. Compare Dennis Tedlock, Popol Vuh, The Definitive Edition of the Mayan Book of the Dawn of Life and the Glories of Gods and Kings, New York, NY: Simon and Schuster, 1986, 92). This story is depicted on Izapa Stela 25, complete with hero twin’s severed arm, which dates to ca. 300–50 BC (See V. Garth Norman, Izapa Sculpture, Part 1: Album, NWA Papers, no. 30, Provo, UT: New World Archaeological Foundation, Brigham Young University, 1973, plates 41–42; V. Garth Norman, Izapa Sculpture, Part 2: Text, NWA Paper, no. 30, Provo, UT: New World Archaeological Foundation, Brigham Young University, 1976, 132–137). Although mythological, the tale likely reflects actual Maya attitudes and practices in war and conflict.

Although much later than the time of Ammon, there is also some indication of similar practices among the Aztecs (Bruce H. Yerman, “Ammon and the Mesoamerican Custom of Smiting Off Arms,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 8, no. 1, 1999: 44–47). In the account of the Mexican conquest left by conquistador Bernal Díaz, “Aztec warriors held aloft the severed arms of the victims as they taunted and threatened the Spanish and their native allies who were within earshot” (Yerman, “Ammon and the Mesoamerican Custom of Smiting Off Arms,” 46).

Like the ancient Near East, these Aztec and Maya sources portray the severed arms of an enemy as “a trophy of their valor” (Ibid., 47). The limbs are used to boast in one’s prowess as a warrior, taunt one’s enemies, and prove one’s bravery and achievements.

In light of these ancient Near Eastern and Mesoamerican practices, the servants bringing the severed arms to King Lamoni as “a testimony” of the events they witnessed seems far less fanciful than at first glance. Instead, it would appear that “the astounded servants of King Lamoni, who took the arms that Ammon had been cut off into the king” were acting conventionally, according to custom (Lundquist and Welch, “Ammon and Cutting Off the Arms,” 180). As one would expect, the pile of “war trophies” greatly impressed King Lamoni. He was “astonished exceedingly” to the point that he suspected Ammon was “more than a man” (Alma 18:2). The servants were convinced “he cannot be slain by the enemies of the king” (verse 3).

The unusual part of the story is that Ammon himself did not bring the arms to the king to prove how great a warrior he was. As Robert L. Millet and Joseph Fielding McConkie pointed out, “Ammon, whose power was heaven-sent, sought no honor for himself” (Robert L. Millet and Joseph Fielding McConkie, Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 4 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 1987–1992, 3:130). This fact is made all the more apparent by understanding the honor and glory he could have sought with the arms of his enemies as proof of his great strength. As John Lundquist and John Welch have further reasoned, “the fact that the evidence was presented to the king, which could have entitled him to payment, heightens all the more the fact that Ammon sought no recognition or reward” (Lundquist and Welch, “Ammon and Cutting Off the Arms,” 181).

With this background in mind, Ammon’s own words to his brother Aaron take on greater significance: “I do not boast in my own strength, . . . but I will boast in the strength of my God” (Alma 26:11–12). Ammon had ample opportunity to boast in his own strength after the episode at the Waters of Sebus. Instead, Ammon went about doing as he had been told, feeding the king’s horses, which further impressed King Lamoni (Alma 18:9–11).

The Lord’s blessings were poured out upon Ammon because he acknowledged God’s hand in all things. His humility, combined with the powerful impact of those arms as undeniable proof of his greatness in their cultural expectations, no doubt contributed to why Ammon was able to “convert a king and, through him, a people” (D. Kelly Ogden and Andrew C. Skinner, Verse by Verse: The Book of Mormon, 2 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 2011, 1:424).

verses 26-39 Brother Hugh Nibley wrote of this episode at the waters of Sebus:

All the Lamanites would drive their flocks to a particular watering place (verse 26). And when they got there, “a certain number of Lamanites, who had been with their flocks to water, stood and scattered the . . . [king’s] flocks.” After the flocks of the king “scattered . . . and fled many ways,” the servants lamented that as a matter of course, “now the king will slay us, as he has our brethren” (verse 28). And they began to weep. What insanity is this, the king kills his own servants for losing a contest that had been acted out before? In fact, “it was the practice of these Lamanites to stand by the waters of Sebus and scatter the flocks of the people,” keeping what they could for themselves, “it being a practice of plunder among them” (Alma 18:7). . . It should be clear that we are dealing with a sort of game; a regular practice, following certain rules. . . All this reminds us of those many ceremonial games in which the loser also lost his life, beginning with an Aztec duel in which one of the contestants was tethered by the ankle and bore only a wooden mace while his heavily armored opponent wielded a weapon with sharp obsidian edges. Then there were the age-old chariot races of the princes in which one was to be killed by the Taraxippus, and the equally ancient game of Nemi made famous by Frazer's Golden Bough. Add to these such vicious doings as the Platanist, the Krypteia, and old Norse brain-ball, the hanging games of the Celts, and so on. But the closest are those known to many of us here, namely the bloody fun of the famous basketball games played in the great ball courts of the ceremonial complexes of Mesoamerica. In these games either the captain of the losing team or the whole team lost their heads (Prophetic Book of Mormon, 539-41).

Alma Chapter 18

Scripture Mastery

Alma 18-19 Ammon and the conversion of King Lamoni and his household

1 And it came to pass that king Lamoni caused that his servants should stand forth and testify to all the things which they had seen concerning the matter.

2 And when they had all testified to the things which they had seen, and he had learned of the faithfulness of Ammon in preserving his flocks, and also of his great power in contending against those who sought to slay him, he was astonished exceedingly, and said: Surely, this is more than a man. Behold, is not this the Great Spirit who doth send such great punishments upon this people, because of their murders?

verse 2 “Surely, this is more than a man” Here is a profound lesson. A person who truly renders selfless and Christlike service becomes a type or symbol of Christ. He or she will seem to be “more than a man” to those who are blessed by the example of that service.

3 And they answered the king, and said: Whether he be the Great Spirit or a man, we know not; but this much we do know, that he cannot be slain by the enemies of the king; neither can they scatter the king’s flocks when he is with us, because of his expertness and great strength; therefore, we know that he is a friend to the king. And now, O king, we do not believe that a man has such great power, for we know he cannot be slain.

4 And now, when the king heard these words, he said unto them: Now I know that it is the Great Spirit; and he has come down at this time to preserve your lives, that I might not slay you as I did your brethren. Now this is the Great Spirit of whom our fathers have spoken.

5 Now this was the tradition of Lamoni, which he had received from his father, that there was a Great Spirit. Notwithstanding they believed in a Great Spirit they supposed that whatsoever they did was right; nevertheless, Lamoni began to fear exceedingly, with fear lest he had done wrong in slaying his servants;

verse 5 Apparently, this “Great Spirit,” according to Lamanite tradition, was not a god to be loved and revered for his benevolence. Rather he was one to be feared for his supposed proclivity for seeking vengeance. They sought more to appease him than to worship him.

“Notwithstanding they believed in a Great Spirit they supposed that whatsoever they did was right” Even though these Lamanites believed in this “Great Spirit,” that belief did not obligate them to any particular moral standard. This false God did not hold them to any particular standard of righteousness or wickedness. This pernicious belief may be referred to as the “we-are-above-sin” philosophy and existed at various time during Nephite history (2 Nephi 28:8; Alma 1:4; 30:17; Mormon 8:31). Because they related to this false god, it is likely that Lamoni received little instruction from his parents during his childhood regarding questions of right and wrong. Yet, because of Ammon’s Christ-like example, Lamoni was immediately moved by the Spirit to a sense of guilt or conscience over his past wrong doings.

6 For he had slain many of them because their brethren had scattered their flocks at the place of water; and thus, because they had had their flocks scattered they were slain.

7 Now it was the practice of these Lamanites to stand by the waters of Sebus to scatter the flocks of the people, that thereby they might drive away many that were scattered unto their own land, it being a practice of plunder among them.

8 And it came to pass that king Lamoni inquired of his servants, saying: Where is this man that has such great power?

9 And they said unto him: Behold, he is feeding thy horses. Now the king had commanded his servants, previous to the time of the watering of their flocks, that they should prepare his horses and chariots, and conduct him forth to the land of Nephi; for there had been a great feast appointed at the land of Nephi, by the father of Lamoni, who was king over all the land.

verse 9 “Behold, he is feeding thy horses” We have already discussed the problem of the horse in the Book of Mormon. Please see the commentary for Enos 1:21.

“chariots” A potential problem is raised by this verse. The mention of chariots conjures up the image of warriors driving two-wheeled, horse drawn war-chariots into battle. Critics of the Book of Mormon in the past have pointed out that this verse implies that a “chariot” must have wheels, especially a chariot drawn by a horse, and there is no firm evidence that the wheel was ever used in the Americas prior to the time of Columbus. “Ah-ha!” they say, “this must be evidence that the Book of Mormon is not historically accurate.”

Because of this criticism, proponents of the Book of Mormon have scrambled for evidence that the wheel was used. Let us review a few points of fact.

1. First, there can be little doubt that Lehi and company were well acquainted with the concept of the wheel. In the Old Testament wheels and chariots were mentioned as early as the time of Moses in Egypt. There are several references to wheels and chariots in the book of Isaiah.

2. Just because the early Book of Mormon peoples knew about the wheel didn’t necessarily mean that they made use of them.

3. In the Book of Mormon, however, chariots are never actually mentioned in a battle context (Brant A. Gardner, Traditions of the Fathers: The Book of Mormon as History, Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2015, 294).

4. Sifting out references to Old World quotations (2 Nephi 12:7, stating “neither is there any end of their chariots” is a quotation of Isaiah 2:7; 3 Nephi 21:14 is a quotation of Micah 5:10), there are only three occasions wherein chariots appear in the Book of Mormon:

- Alma 18:9–12: Ammon “made ready the horses and the chariots” (verse 12), in accordance with King Lamoni’s command that his servants “should prepare his horses and chariots, and conduct him forth to the land of Nephi” so that he could attend “a great feast” hosted by his father and overking (An “overking” is the term scholars use for kings in Mesoamerica which ruler over subordinate kings. See Simon Martin and Nikolai Grube, Chronicle of the Maya Kings and Queens, 2nd edition, London, Eng.: Thames and Hudson, 2008, 20–21.).

- Alma 20:4–7: Lamoni again had his servants “make ready his horses and his chariots” (verse 6), this time so that he could visit a political ally and “flatter” him into releasing Ammon’s brothers (verse 4).

- 3 Nephi 3:22: Chariots are included as part of a list of livestock and provisions taken by the Nephites when they left Zarahemla and withdrew for seven years into a more secure site as a defensive tactic against the Gadianton Robbers.

These few references all occur within a small window of time from ca. 90 BC–AD 16, suggesting that, overall, chariots were not widely or frequently used among Book of Mormon peoples (Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical & Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 4:286, suggested that chariots “seem to be something reserved for ... special occasions.”). Only two of these are in a definable context: both times when Lamoni asks for his chariots to be prepared, “the occasion is a formal state visit” (Gardner, Second Witness, 4:286), While “horses” are mentioned with chariots, chariots are never explicitly pulled by horses or any other animal.

5. There is only one mention of “wheels” in the Book of Mormon—in 2 Nephi 15:28 in a verse taken from Isaiah’s writings.

6. Due to the limited use and reference, it is hard to be certain about the nature of chariots in the Book of Mormon. Wheeled vehicles, as chariots are typically assumed to be, are thus far unattested for any part of pre-Columbian America.

7. In the late 19th century, pioneering archaeologist Désiré Charnay reported finding what he called “chariots” in central Mexico (See John L. Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex: An Ancient American Book, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2013, 350. To be sure, what Charnay found were wheeled figurines or “toys,” nothing that could actually be ridden on.

These were largely dated between AD 600–1250 (Diehl and Mandeville, “Tula and Wheeled Animal Effigies,” 240–241. John L. Sorenson, Images of Ancient America: Visualizing Book of Mormon Life, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1998, 59). Sorenson’s article reported, “Mexican specimens date from as early as the first century AD,” however Diehl and Mandeville explained that while some may pre-date AD 600, none can be dated to this period with certainty.

Careful study of these figurines “demonstrate that at least some Mesoamericans grasped not only the concept of the wheel but also the concept of actual wheeled vehicles” (Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex, 352. Sorenson similarly stated, “Mesoamericans conceptualized use of the wheel well in advance of their technological capability to take practical advantage of the idea,” pp. 354–355. For Sorenson’s full discussion of the data for wheels in Mesoamerica, see pp. 350–356.). According to a pair of non-LDS Mesoamericanists, these figurines demonstrate that “the principle of using wheels to facilitate horizontal movement was familiar to at least some peoples of Pre-Columbian Mesoamerica” (Diehl and Mandeville, “Tula and Wheeled Animal Effigies,” 239). In the ancient Near East, similar figurines are known to have “imitated full-scale wagons” (Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex, 351), suggesting, perhaps, that the same is true in Mesoamerica (Sorenson, Images of Ancient America, 59: “The usual interpretation of these objects by Mesoamericanist scholars is that while the prehistoric peoples obviously knew the principle of the wheel, for unknown reasons they never translated the idea into practical vehicles. Yet these same scholars celebrate the inventive capabilities of the early Americans. Would they have been familiar with these miniatures for at least fifteen hundred years without trying to make a practical vehicle?” It seems unlikely that a culture which clearly understood wheeled vehicles on a conceptual level for roughly 600 years never at least tried using more practical wheeled vehicles. This kind of argument is also made in Daniel Johnson, “‘Hard’ Evidence of Ancient American Horses,” BYU Studies Quarterly 54, no. 3, 2015: 154–157).

8. There is another possible meaning for the word chariot. The rare Hebrew word afiryon, meaning litter, palanquin, or sedan chair (Ludwig Koehler and Walter Baumgartner, The Hebrew and Aramaic Lexicon of the Old Testament, 2 vols., Leiden and Boston: Brill, 2001, 1:80), is translated as “chariot” in the KJV (Song of Solomon 3:9). This was a non-wheeled vehicle wherein a rider was carried by servants. Just such litters or palanquins were known among pre-Columbian Mesoamericans. “Maya kings were borne in litters, often made of simple rushes and carried by just two bearers” (Mary Miller and Karl Taube, An Illustrated Dictionary of the Gods and Symbols of Ancient Mexico and the Maya, London, Eng.: Thames and Hudson, 1993, 107).

John L. Sorenson noted, “This form of transport was reserved for nobility and others of the upper social levels” (Sorenson, Images of Ancient America, 58).

These litters were used for royal processions and nobles or dignitaries making a political visit. For instance, in 1542, after the Spanish conquest of the Maya region, “A throng of warriors escorting a young Maya lord seated in a palanquin” approached some Spanish sentries, “made signs that he had come in peace” and that he had brought food in what was apparently a diplomatic visit (Robert J. Sharer and Loa P. Traxler, The Ancient Maya, 6th edition, Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press, 2006, 771).

A Classic Maya vase depicting the sacrifice of war prisoners shows a “visiting dignitary” who was “brought to the event in a litter”(Dorie Reents-Budet, Painting the Maya Universe: Royal Ceramics of the Classic Period, Durham, NC: Duke University Press and Duke University Art Museum, 1994, 262).

The earliest known depiction of a Mesoamerican litter is Izapa Stela 21, dated to ca. 300–50 BC (See V. Garth Norman, Izapa Sculpture, Part 1: Album, NWA Papers, no. 30, Provo, UT: New World Archaeological Foundation, Brigham Young University, 1973, plates 33–34; V. Garth Norman, Izapa Sculpture, Part 2: Text, NWA Paper, no. 30, Provo, UT: New World Archaeological Foundation, Brigham Young University, 1976, 122–127).

With a litter, servants or bearers would “conduct [the king] forth” (Alma 18:9) in a royal procession. While no horse or draft animal was used to pull or carry the litter, an animal was commonly depicted traveling near the litter as part of the procession. For instance, LDS Mesoamericanist Mark Wright has pointed out that several Classic Maya vases depict a dog underneath the litter traveling as part of the entourage

Brant A. Gardner thus proposed, “The plausible underlying conveyance in the story of Ammon was a royal litter, accompanied in peacetime by the . . . animal associated with the king” (Gardner, Traditions of the Fathers, 297). In other words, Ammon would have prepared “horses” to travel with the king, while the servants “conduct him forth to the land of Nephi” (Alma 18:9) in his litter.

There are not always definitive answers to questions some may have about the Book of Mormon. These unsolved puzzles invite both faith and further learning if they are approached with patience, careful reading, and an open mind.

The current state of archaeological knowledge is limited (Mark Alan Wright, “The Cultural Tapestry of Mesoamerica,” Journal of the Book of Mormon and Other Restoration Scripture 22, no. 2, 2013: 6), and caution must be taken when evaluating negative evidence. LDS Mesoamerican archaeologist John E. Clark once explained: “Positive and negative evidence do not count the same,” because, “Given current means of verification, positive items are here to stay, but negative items may prove to be positive ones in hiding” (John E. Clark, “Archaeological Trends and the Book of Mormon Origins,” in The Worlds of Joseph Smith: A Bicentennial Conference at the Library of Congress, ed. John W. Welch, Provo, UT: BYU Press, 2006, 94).

Several things mentioned in the Book of Mormon once considered missing have since proven to be in the right place at the right time all along (For several examples, see Matthew Roper, “Howlers Index,” at Ether’s Cave, accessed May 24, 2016. Also see Kevin Christensen, “Hindsight on a Book of Mormon Historicity Critique,” FARMS Review 22, no. 2, 2010: 155–194). “It is in this light,” concluded Clark, “that we should consider many arguments against the Book of Mormon” (Clark, “Archaeological Trends,” 95).

Archaeology currently shows that some peoples in pre-Columbian Mesoamerica did understand the conceptual principles behind wheeled vehicles, although there is no evidence that these were actually put into practice. Still, over a 600-year period (ca. AD 600–1250), it is likely that at least some attempt, however limited and short lived, would have been made to put the wheel into practical use.

Perhaps the brief time-period (the first centuries BC and AD) wherein chariots are mentioned in the Book of Mormon represents just such a limited, short-lived attempt, albeit at a much earlier time than current evidence for the wheeled figurines. Then the Nephites and Lamanites abandoned the technology because it lacked any practical advantages. Scholars have long noted that the Mesoamerican topography and general lack of draft animals neutralized most advantages the wheel offered in other ancient settings (See Diehl and Mandeville, “Tula and Wheeled Animal Effigies,” 244–245. Also, see Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex, 354–356). These same reasons would explain why any knowledge of the wheel that the Lehites might have brought with them seems to have disappeared quickly. A brief attempt at using the wheel that is quickly abandoned would be very difficult to find in the archaeological record.

Exploring the possibilities for chariots also reinforces the importance of reading scripture with an open mind. It takes humility and maturity to step away from long-held assumptions and read the scriptural text from a fresh perspective. Nonetheless, doing so while exploring questions in a historical context can provide clarity and understanding to Book of Mormon passages. As Charnay and the KJV translation of afiryon demonstrate, “chariot” can have broader meaning than what might typically come to mind. That usage can include non-wheeled vehicles like the litters used all throughout Mesoamerica clear back into Book of Mormon times.

Although this paints a very different image than what most readers have come to expect, conventional use of litters in Mesoamerica is consistent with the uses of chariots in the Book of Mormon. Furthermore, if Ammon was expecting to be one of the bearers of King Lamoni’s litter, thus having to “conduct him forth to the land of Nephi” on his shoulders (Alma 18:9), such a visual adds another layer of humility to this great missionary. He was literally willing to bear and carry those he had been called to serve.

The above discoveries have blunted the criticism of some Book of Mormon detractors. Let us admit, however, that we may never find irrefutable evidence of the use of wheels for transportation in the Americas at the time of the Book of Mormon.

10 Now when king Lamoni heard that Ammon was preparing his horses and his chariots he was more astonished, because of the faithfulness of Ammon, saying:

Surely there has not been any servant among all my servants that has been so faithful as this man; for even he doth remember all my commandments to execute them.

11 Now I surely know that this is the Great Spirit, and I would desire him that he come in unto me, but I durst not.

12 And it came to pass that when Ammon had made ready the horses and the chariots for the king and his servants, he went in unto the king, and he saw that the countenance of the king was changed; therefore he was about to return out of his presence.

13 And one of the king's servants said unto him, Rabbanah, which is, being interpreted, powerful or great king, considering their kings to be powerful; and thus he said unto him: Rabbanah, the king desireth thee to stay.

verse 13 Ammon is addressed by the title "Rabbanah" which is interpreted as meaning "powerful or great king." This title is identical to "Rabboni" meaning "master," which was used by Mary Magdalene to address the resurrected Lord (John 20:16). The servant who so addressed Ammon knew he was not a king of any worldly kingdom and likely was suspicious he was more than merely a worldly king. Rabbanah resembles Hebrew words that derive from a common Semitic root rbb meaning "to be big or many." Even though the Lamanites had strayed culturally from their Nephite cousins, they apparently still preserved elements of their Hebrew/Semitic language. See also the supplemental article, Names in the Book of Mormon.

14 Therefore Ammon turned himself unto the king, and said unto him: What wilt thou that I should do for thee, O king? And the king answered him not for the space of an hour, according to their time, for he knew not what he should say unto him.

15 And it came to pass that Ammon said unto him again: What desirest thou of me? But the king answered him not.

16 And it came to pass that Ammon, being filled with the Spirit of God, therefore he perceived the thoughts of the king. And he said unto him: Is it because thou hast heard that I defended thy servants and thy flocks, and slew seven of their brethren with the sling and with the sword, and smote off the arms of others, in order to defend thy flocks and thy servants; behold, is it this that causeth thy marvelings?

17 I say unto you, what is it, that thy marvelings are so great? Behold, I am a man, and am thy servant; therefore, whatsoever thou desirest which is right, that will I do.

18 Now when the king had heard these words, he marveled again, for he beheld that Ammon could discern his thoughts; but notwithstanding this, king Lamoni did open his mouth, and said unto him: Who art thou? Art thou that Great Spirit, who knows all things?

19 Ammon answered and said unto him: I am not.

20 And the king said: How knowest thou the thoughts of my heart? Thou mayest speak boldly, and tell me concerning these things; and also tell me by what power ye slew and smote off the arms of my brethren that scattered my flocks—

21 And now, if thou wilt tell me concerning these things, whatsoever thou desirest I will give unto thee; and if it were needed, I would guard thee with my armies; but I know that thou art more powerful than all they; nevertheless, whatsoever thou desirest of me I will grant it unto thee.

22 Now Ammon being wise, yet harmless, he said unto Lamoni: Wilt thou hearken unto my words, if I tell thee by what power I do these things? And this is the thing that I desire of thee.

verse 22 “Ammon being wise, yet harmless” The word “harmless” here carries the connotation of meek, quiet, and inoffensive. Though he was wise and possessed important spiritual insights with which he could bless most anyone he met, he was humble and not overly aggressive.

23 And the king answered him, and said: Yea, I will believe all thy words. And thus he was caught with guile.

verse 23 “he was caught with guile” Lamoni responded as Ammon had planned when Ammon asked the question in verse 22. Thus, Ammon had cleverly, or “with guile,” committed the king to listen to him. Lamoni had been “caught” by Ammon’s “guile.” Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines guile as, “Craft, cunning, artifice, clever, with ingenuity.” The word guile, at the time of Joseph Smith did not carry the negative meaning we may apply to it today.

24 And Ammon began to speak unto him with boldness, and said unto him: Believest thou that there is a God?

25 And he answered, and said unto him: I do not know what that meaneth.

26 And then Ammon said: Believest thou that there is a Great Spirit?

27 And he said, Yea.

28 And Ammon said: This is God. And Ammon said unto him again: Believest thou that this Great Spirit, who is God, created all things which are in heaven and in the earth?

verse 28 “And Ammon said: This is God.” Ammon here is referring to the “Great Spirit” in verse 26. Some have felt that Ammon’s statement here is misleading to Lamoni. He teaches Lamoni that the Great Spirit is God. Technically speaking, he is correct. At that time Jehovah did not have a body of flesh and bone, and he was a spirit.

29 And he said: Yea, I believe that he created all things which are in the earth; but I do not know the heavens.

30 And Ammon said unto him: The heavens is a place where God dwells and all his holy angels.

31 And king Lamoni said: Is it above the earth?

32 And Ammon said: Yea, and he looketh down upon all the children of men; and he knows all the thoughts and intents of the heart; for by his hand were they all created from the beginning.

33 And king Lamoni said: I believe all these things which thou hast spoken. Art thou sent from God?

34 Ammon said unto him: I am a man; and man in the beginning was created after the image of God, and I am called by his Holy Spirit to teach these things unto this people, that they may be brought to a knowledge of that which is just and true;

verse 34 “just and true” The word “just” means in accordance with God’s law.

35 And a portion of that Spirit dwelleth in me, which giveth me knowledge, and also power according to my faith and desires which are in God.

36 Now when Ammon had said these words, he began at the creation of the world, and also the creation of Adam, and told him all the things concerning the fall of man, and rehearsed and laid before him the records and the holy scriptures of the people, which had been spoken by the prophets, even down to the time that their father, Lehi, left Jerusalem.

37 And he also rehearsed unto them (for it was unto the king and to his servants) all the journeyings of their fathers in the wilderness, and all their sufferings with hunger and thirst, and their travail, and so forth.

38 And he also rehearsed unto them concerning the rebellions of Laman and Lemuel, and the sons of Ishmael, yea, all their rebellions did he relate unto them; and he expounded unto them all the records and scriptures from the time that Lehi left Jerusalem down to the present time.

39 But this is not all; for he expounded unto them the plan of redemption, which was prepared from the foundation of the world; and he also made known unto them concerning the coming of Christ, and all the works of the Lord did he make known unto them.

verses 36-39 Using the scriptures, Ammon taught Lamoni the gospel including the concepts of the creation, the fall, and the atonement. Elder Bruce R. McConkie referred to these as “the three pillars of eternity” and the “greatest events that have ever occurred in all eternity.” Elder McConkie went on to say, “If we can get an understanding of them, then the whole eternal scheme of things will fall into place, and we will be in a position to work out our own salvation . . . These three are the foundations upon which all things rest. Without any one of them all things would lose their purpose and meaning, and the plans and designs of Deity would come to naught” (“The Three Pillars of Eternity,” BYU Devotional, February 17, 1981).

Ammon’s method of teaching Lamoni follows an astute logic: In order to realize the need for the Savior’s atonement, one must understand from what it is we need to be saved. This is, of course, the fall of man. To understand the fall it is necessary to understand from what it was that Adam fell. This is the paradisiacal state in which all things in the garden were created—thus a need to understand the creation.

verse 39 “from the foundation of the world” The period here referred to as the “foundation of the world” is that period in the premortal existence when preparations were made for the great mortal experience of the family of Adam and the plan of redemption by which members of that family might eventually return to their celestial home.

40 And it came to pass that after he had said all these things, and expounded them to the king, that the king believed all his words.

41 And he began to cry unto the Lord, saying: O Lord, have mercy; according to thy abundant mercy which thou hast had upon the people of Nephi, have upon me, and my people.

42 And now, when he had said this, he fell unto the earth, as if he were dead.

43 And it came to pass that his servants took him and carried him in unto his wife, and laid him upon a bed; and he lay as if he were dead for the space of two days and two nights; and his wife, and his sons, and his daughters mourned over him, after the manner of the Lamanites, greatly lamenting his loss.

verse 43 Lamoni’s comatose state began when he realized the identity of his Redeemer and his urgent need for his Redeemer’s mercy. This coma may be considered symbolic of the death of the natural man in preparation for being born again as a saint, a man of Christ. While Lamoni appeared to be in a coma for three days, his spirit was very much awake—all the time experiencing the pains of repentance and being taught the principles of salvation. Analogous experiences were had by the younger Alma (Mosiah 27:18-25) and by Paul who lost his sight for three days (Acts 9:8-9). Each of these three-day experiences may be considered symbolic of the death and resurrection of Christ whose body lay in the tomb for three days. An obvious difference between the experiences of these others and that of Christ, was that Christ was in no need of repentance and was the teacher and not the student.

Some have wondered about the dramatic conversion experiences of Lamoni, Paul, Enos, Alma, and the four sons of Mosiah. Can the rest of us ever hope for such an experience? Why can’t we have such an experience? Elder Bruce R. McConkie explained, “. . . except in a few isolated instances that are so miraculous they get written up in the scriptures. As far as the generality of the members of the Church are concerned, we are born again by degrees, and we are born again to added light and added knowledge and added desires for righteousness as we keep the commandments” (“Jesus Christ and Him Crucified,” Speeches of the Year, Provo, Utah: Brigham Young University Publications, 1976, 399). Though the dramatic experiences described in scripture “are real and powerful, they are the exception more than the rule (see the commentary for Alma 19:8, 34). For every Paul, for every Enos, and for every King Lamoni, there are thousands and hundreds of thousands of people who find the process of repentance much more subtle—much more imperceptible. Day by day they move closer to the Lord, little realizing they are building a godlike life” (Benson, Ezra Taft, “A Mighty Change of Heart,” Ensign 19 [October 1989]: 2-5).

Alma Chapter 19

1 And it came to pass that after two days and two nights they were about to take his body and lay it in a sepulchre, which they had made for the purpose of burying their dead.

2 Now the queen having heard of the fame of Ammon, therefore she sent and desired that he should come in unto her.

3 And it came to pass that Ammon did as he was commanded, and went in unto the queen, and desired to know what she would that he should do.

4 And she said unto him: The servants of my husband have made it known unto me that thou art a prophet of a holy God, and that thou hast power to do many mighty works in his name;

5 Therefore, if this is the case, I would that ye should go in and see my husband, for he has been laid upon his bed for the space of two days and two nights; and some say that he is not dead, but others say that he is dead and that he stinketh, and that he ought to be placed in the sepulchre; but as for myself, to me he doth not stink.

verse 5 “others say that he is dead and that he stinketh” Obviously this coma-like state of Lamoni’s appeared to most observers to be very much like death.

6 Now, this was what Ammon desired, for he knew that king Lamoni was under the power of God; he knew that the dark veil of unbelief was being cast away from his mind, and the light which did light up his mind, which was the light of the glory of God, which was a marvelous light of his goodness—yea, this light had infused such joy into his soul, the cloud of darkness having been dispelled, and that the light of everlasting life was lit up in his soul, yea, he knew that this had overcome his natural frame, and he was carried away in God—verse 6 “the light of the glory of God” The “light” spoken of here refers to eternal truths, doubtless emanating from the Lord Jesus Christ himself—the light of Christ. If the reader has an interest in the topic of light, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 15, The Concept of Light.

7 Therefore, what the queen desired of him was his only desire. Therefore, he went in to see the king according as the queen had desired him; and he saw the king, and he knew that he was not dead.

8 And he said unto the queen: He is not dead, but he sleepeth in God, and on the morrow he shall rise again; therefore bury him not.

verse 8 “He is not dead, but he sleepeth in God” Just what is the nature of this peculiar coma-like state into which king Lamoni had lapsed? What does it mean to “sleep in God?” Apparently, it is a state in which the body and its higher functions are suspended so the spirit may become free of the body and become focused completely on the Holy Spirit and the revelations which he brings from heaven. This trance is indeed a special gift of the Spirit which the Lord may use in order to provide important revelation to man. “Freed from the fetters of a mortal body, man’s spirit can be ushered into the divine presence; it can hear what otherwise could not be heard and see what otherwise could not be seen—even the visions of eternity and even the Almighty himself” (Joseph Fielding McConkie and Robert L. Millet, Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 140). See also the commentary for verse 34 of this chapter.

9 And Ammon said unto her: Believest thou this? And she said unto him: I have had no witness save thy word, and the word of our servants; nevertheless I believe that it shall be according as thou hast said.

10 And Ammon said unto her: Blessed art thou because of thy exceeding faith; I say unto thee, woman, there has not been such great faith among all the people of the Nephites.

verses 9-10 One LDS author has compared the queen’s reaction to the period of her husband’s coma to the incident when Jesus raised his friend Lazarus from the dead: “Martha, Lazarus’s sister, did not have the faith to understand what Jesus was teaching when he told her, ‘Thy brother shall rise again’(John 11:23). Not until she saw her brother walk out of the tomb did she realize that he was not referring to rising after the resurrection. Lamoni’s wife, on the other hand, established her beliefs after hearing only the testimony of Ammon and her servants. When Ammon told her that her husband would rise the next day, she responded, ‘I believe that it shall be according as thou hast said’ (Alma 19:9). It is not surprising that Ammon blessed her for her great faith” (Camille Fronk in “Show Forth Good Examples in Me,” Studies in Scripture Volume Seven 1 Nephi to Alma 29, 321-24).

11 And it came to pass that she watched over the bed of her husband, from that time even until that time on the morrow which Ammon had appointed that he should rise.

12 And it came to pass that he arose, according to the words of Ammon; and as he arose, he stretched forth his hand unto the woman, and said: Blessed be the name of God, and blessed art thou.

13 For as sure as thou livest, behold, I have seen my Redeemer; and he shall come forth, and be born of a woman, and he shall redeem all mankind who believe on his name. Now, when he had said these words, his heart was swollen within him, and he sunk again with joy; and the queen also sunk down, being overpowered by the Spirit.

verse 13 “I have seen my Redeemer; and he shall come forth, and be born of a woman, and he shall redeem all mankind who believe on his name” One of the characteristics inevitably found in those who have experienced a mighty change in their hearts or have been converted to the gospel is a profound faith in Jesus Christ and an irresistible desire to testify of him.

14 Now Ammon seeing the Spirit of the Lord poured out according to his prayers upon the Lamanites, his brethren, who had been the cause of so much mourning among the Nephites, or among all the people of God because of their iniquities and their traditions, he fell upon his knees, and began to pour out his soul in prayer and thanksgiving to God for what he had done for his brethren; and he was also overpowered with joy; and thus they all three had sunk to the earth.

15 Now, when the servants of the king had seen that they had fallen, they also began to cry unto God, for the fear of the Lord had come upon them also, for it was they who had stood before the king and testified unto him concerning the great power of Ammon.

verse 15 “for the fear of the Lord had come upon them also” It would seem that the “fear” which came upon these servants, undoubtedly communicated by the Spirit of the Lord, was more reverence and awe than dread, terror, and fright.

16 And it came to pass that they did call on the name of the Lord, in their might, even until they had all fallen to the earth, save it were one of the Lamanitish women, whose name was Abish, she having been converted unto the Lord for many years, on account of a remarkable vision of her father—verse 16 “even until they had all fallen to the earth” These servants also were privileged to participate in the experience of having a divinely-induced trance wherein they were taught and converted by the Spirit.

“Abish” Abish was remarkable for many reasons. First, she is one of the few named women in the Book of Mormon. In each story, the named women of the Book of Mormon played an integral role (Donna Lee Bowen and Camille S. Williams, “Women in the Book of Mormon,” in The Encyclopedia of Mormonism, 4 vols., ed. Daniel H. Ludlow, New York, NY: Macmillan, 1992, 4:1577–1580). Second, that Mormon retained this story, specifically mentioning Abish by name, likely signifies that the prophet-historian wanted readers to pay attention to several special or unique things about her.

The name Abish most likely derives from the Hebrew elements ab (“father”) and ish (“man”), and straightforwardly means “father (is a) man” (“Abish,” Book of Mormon Onomasticon, ed. Paul Y. Hoskisson, online at <https://onoma.lib.byu.edu>; Matthew L. Bowen, “Father Is a Man: The Remarkable Mention of the Name Abish in Alma 19:16 and Its Narrative Context,” Interpreter: A Journal of Mormon Scripture 14, 2015: 79–84). But more than just that, there appears to be a deliberate pun on her name in this passage that highlights an important doctrinal teaching. Right after Mormon wrote the name Abish (“father is a man”), he immediately follows with the detail that she had “been converted unto the Lord for many years, on account of a remarkable vision of her father” (Alma 19:16, emphasis added). The phrase “remarkable vision of her father” is obviously ambiguous. This could be understood as saying that Abish was converted by a vision that her earthly father had previously had, or that she had seen a vision of her earthly father perhaps after his death. Alternatively, and possibly most likely, it may signal that she herself had a vision of her Heavenly Father, or of Jesus Christ, the “Eternal Father” of heaven and earth, as He is called by Abinadi (Mosiah 15:1–4).

17 Thus, having been converted to the Lord, and never having made it known, therefore, when she saw that all the servants of Lamoni had fallen to the earth, and also her mistress, the queen, and the king, and Ammon lay prostrate upon the earth, she knew that it was the power of God; and supposing that this opportunity, by making known unto the people what had happened among them, that by beholding this scene it would cause them to believe in the power of God, therefore she ran forth from house to house, making it known unto the people.

verses 16-17 “having been converted unto the Lord for many years, on account of a remarkable vision of her father . . . and never having made it known”

One can only speculate as to Abish’s private thoughts over these “many years” since her conversion. Was there to be any purpose beyond her own conversion? Would she ever be able to share her joy with others? After all, aren’t visions usually given by the Lord for specific purposes? Seeing the condition of the king and his court, she may well have thought, “This is it! This is the purpose for which I have been converted!”

18 And they began to assemble themselves together unto the house of the king. And there came a multitude, and to their astonishment they beheld the king, and the queen, and their servants prostrate upon the earth, and they all lay there as though they were dead; and they also saw Ammon, and behold, he was a Nephite.

19 And now the people began to murmur among themselves; some saying that it was a great evil that had come upon them, or upon the king and his house, because he had suffered that the Nephite should remain in the land.

20 But others rebuked them, saying: The king hath brought this evil upon his house, because he slew his servants who had had their flocks scattered at the waters of Sebus.

21 And they were also rebuked by those men who had stood at the waters of Sebus and scattered the flocks which belonged to the king, for they were angry with Ammon because of the number which he had slain of their brethren at the waters of Sebus, while defending the flocks of the king.

22 Now, one of them, whose brother had been slain with the sword of Ammon, being exceedingly angry with Ammon, drew his sword and went forth that he might let it fall upon Ammon, to slay him; and as he lifted the sword to smite him, behold, he fell dead.

verse 22 Seeing Ammon completely defenseless, this Lamanite decided to gain retribution for his slain brother.

23 Now we see that Ammon could not be slain, for the Lord had said unto Mosiah, his father: I will spare him, and it shall be unto him according to thy faith—therefore, Mosiah trusted him unto the Lord.

verses 22-23 There can be no doubt that the Lord can and does intervene at times to lengthen or shorten our sojourns in mortality when it suits his purposes. Part of the message of comfort which the Lord revealed to the prophet Joseph while he was a prisoner in the jail at Liberty, Missouri, was: “Thy days are known, and thy years shall not be numbered less; therefore, fear not what man can do, for God shall be with you forever and ever” (D&C 122:9). However, we should probably not assume that every death suffered by a mortal was willed by God. A thoughtful consideration of the nature of this mortal existence seems to leave room for the occurrence of accidental deaths as well (“mortal accidents”). It would seem that the Lord only infrequently orchestrates or micro-manages the deaths of mortals, and that for his specific purposes. Most often our mortal death is left to be the result of the nature of this frail mortal experience.

24 And it came to pass that when the multitude beheld that the man had fallen dead, who lifted the sword to slay Ammon, fear came upon them all, and they durst not put forth their hands to touch him or any of those who had fallen; and they began to marvel again among themselves what could be the cause of this great power, or what all these things could mean.

25 And it came to pass that there were many among them who said that Ammon was the Great Spirit, and others said he was sent by the Great Spirit;

26 But others rebuked them all, saying that he was a monster, who had been sent from the Nephites to torment them.

27 And there were some who said that Ammon was sent by the Great Spirit to afflict them because of their iniquities; and that it was the Great Spirit that had always attended the Nephites, who had ever delivered them out of their hands; and they said that it was this Great Spirit who had destroyed so many of their brethren, the Lamanites.

verses 25-27 Isn't it true that here on earth among us mortals there is a wide divergence in our abilities to discern situations having eternal implications? It seems clear that the essential yet variable ingredient is receptiveness to the promptings of the Spirit. When the Spirit is lacking, a mortal looks upon the handiwork of God and inevitably finds nothing of God in it. Mortal logic and intellect is absolutely unable to discern and perceive spiritual meaning. Here, some of the Lamanites in their inability to understand spiritual things made incorrect conclusions about Ammon. It is interesting that at the time of Enoch, some people who did not understand him called him a “wild man” (Moses 6:38).

28 And thus the contention began to be exceedingly sharp among them. And while they were thus contending, the woman servant who had caused the multitude to be gathered together came, and when she saw the contention which was among the multitude she was exceedingly sorrowful, even unto tears.

verse 28 Abish cried in her disappointment. Many of the Lamanites present could not see the obvious profound spiritual meaning of this event that she could see.

29 And it came to pass that she went and took the queen by the hand, that perhaps she might raise her from the ground; and as soon as she touched her hand she arose and stood upon her feet, and cried with a loud voice, saying: O blessed Jesus, who has saved me from an awful hell! O blessed God, have mercy on this people!

verse 29 “she [Abish] went and took the queen by the hand, that perhaps she [Abish] might raise her [the queen] from the ground” The story of Abish was recorded by Mormon for many reasons. Ammon’s converts must have enjoyed retelling this foundational story for years to come; how a servant girl had faithfully and spontaneously served her king and queen. Only Abish understood what was truly happening, when others were puzzled and conflicted. Because this woman was not deterred by her fears, many people heard the queen’s testimony firsthand, as she bore witness that the Redeemer of the world would be born of a woman. Abish was specifically mentioned as having played a crucial role as a spiritual midwife at the turning point of this commencement of this first Nephite missionary success among the Lamanites.

It also seems apparent that Mormon strategically introduced Abish in his recounting of Lamoni’s conversion in order to reinforce an important Book of Mormon doctrine. In staying true to biblical custom (The Hebrew Bible is rife with puns and plays on words, including puns on names. For examples, see Samuel Thomas, “Adam/Adamah,” Bible Odyssey, online at <http://www.bibleodyssey.org>; Barry J. Beitzel, “Exodus 3:14 and the Divine Name: A Case of Biblical Paronomasia,” Trinity Journal 1. 1980: 5–20; Herbert Marks, “Biblical Naming and Poetic Etymology,” Journal of Biblical Literature 114, no. 1, 1995: 21–42; Gary A. Rendsburg, “Word Play in Biblical Hebrew: An Eclectic Collection,” in Puns and Pundits: Word Play in the Hebrew Bible and Ancient Near Eastern Literature, ed. Scott B. Noegel, Bethesda, MD: CDL Press, 2000, 137–162; Scott B. Noegel, “Paronomasia,” in Encyclopedia of Hebrew Language and Linguistics, ed. Geoffrey Khan, Leiden: Brill, 2013, 3:24–29), the Nephite record keepers created a pun on Abish’s name. Matthew Bowen understands Abish’s vision and name as conveying “the doctrinal truth that was revealed many years earlier in the remarkable ‘vision’ of their father Lehi and Nephi: that Jesus Christ, the Divine Warrior and ‘Eternal Father’ (1 Nephi 11:21, Original Text), condescended to become ‘man’—i.e., to ‘come forth, and be born of a woman’ and as Suffering Servant ‘redeem all mankind who believe on his name’ (Alma 19:13)” (Bowen, “Father Is a Man,” 92). Bowen continued: “The mention of the name Abish and the wordplay on her name in Alma 19:16 reinforces . . . the importance of the doctrinal truth that the Jesus Christ, the Eternal Father of heaven and earth would not simply remain a spirit forever (contrary to Zoramite belief, Alma 31:15), but would become “man,” so that we might become “divine” not only like our Savior (the Eternal Father of heaven and earth), but also like our Heavenly Father who once was “man,” as was revealed to and by the prophet Joseph Smith. All of this should make us grateful for righteous fathers and mothers who pass on correct traditions to us, and more anxious to discard ancestral traditions that could inhibit or stop our eternal progress (see especially D&C 93:19, 39) (Bowen, “Father Is a Man,” 92–93). Alternatively, if “the vision of her father” is understood as meaning Abish had a vision of her Heavenly Father, then her name (“father is a man”) could be viewed as reinforcing the truth revealed in Restoration scripture that God the Father is an exalted man of flesh and bone (cf. Doctrine and Covenants 130:22–23; Moses 6:57).

As the Prophet Joseph Smith taught in 1844, “God, who sits in yonder heavens, is a man like yourselves. . . [If] you were to see him today . . . you would see him like a man in form, like yourselves” (Discourse, 7 April 1844, as Reported by Wilford Woodruff, online at <http://www.josephsmithpapers.org/>, spelling and grammar standardized.).

This play on words adds doctrinal depth to the Book of Mormon and also strengthens the Nephite record’s ties with the world of ancient Israel. It also pays grateful respect and tribute to Abish, the servant woman, whose spiritual father would come to earth as a man.

30 And when she had said this, she clasped her hands, being filled with joy, speaking many words which were not understood; and when she had done this, she took the king, Lamoni, by the hand, and behold he arose and stood upon his feet.

verse 30 “speaking many words which were not understood” It is difficult to know, in the context of this phrase, whether the queen was speaking in tongues—in the Adamic language, the language of God—or whether she was speaking their language, but speaking of concepts by the inspiration of the Spirit which were not understood by her listeners because of their profound doctrinal meaning.

31 And he, immediately, seeing the contention among his people, went forth and began to rebuke them, and to teach them the words which he had heard from the mouth of Ammon; and as many as heard his words believed, and were converted unto the Lord.

verse 31 “as many as heard his words believed, and were converted unto the Lord” In the next verse we will learn that “there were many among them who would not hear his words.” We are not talking about acoustical phenomena here. Those who “heard his words” were not just those who were within earshot of his voice. They were those who chose to hear and accept his words. Similarly, those “who would not hear his words” were those who chose not to accept and believe them.

32 But there were many among them who would not hear his words; therefore they went their way.

33 And it came to pass that when Ammon arose he also administered unto them, and also did all the servants of Lamoni; and they did all declare unto the people the selfsame thing—that their hearts had been changed; that they had no more desire to do evil.

verse 33 “they had no more desire to do evil” A statement by President Joseph F. Smith, as he spoke of his own conversion, is pertinent here: “I felt that I would not injure the smallest insect beneath my feet. I felt as if I wanted to do good everywhere to everybody and to everything. I felt a newness of life, a newness of desire to do that which was right. There was not one particle of desire for evil left in my soul” (Gospel Doctrine, 96).

34 And behold, many did declare unto the people that they had seen angels and had conversed with them; and thus they had told them things of God, and of his righteousness.

verse 34 This remarkable story of the trance-like state that fell upon the household of Lamoni might seem to some to be peculiar. Is this a “teaching technique” or revelatory device unique to the Book of Mormon? Has the Lord employed this method for revealing information on other occasions to other people? Are similar experiences found elsewhere in the scriptures? There are indeed some anecdotes in the Bible that are more easily explained once we have read and understood the story of Lamoni and his household. On one occasion in the Old Testament Balaam fell “into a trance” and had “his eyes open[ed]” in order that he might see “the visions of the Almighty” (Numbers 24:16). The prophet Ezekiel reported that on one occasion as he sat in his house, “the hand of the Lord God fell there upon [him],” and he beheld “the visions of God” (Ezekiel 8:1-2). In the New Testament Peter “fell into a trance, and saw the heaven opened.” He then received the revelation in which the Lord extended the blessings of the gospel to the Gentiles as well as to the Jews (Acts 10:10-11). It is significant that Paul, the great missionary to the Gentiles, received his call to preach to the Gentiles under similar circumstances. “While I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance; and saw him saying unto me, make haste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem: for they will not receive thy testimony concerning me” (Acts 22:17-18).

35 And it came to pass that there were many that did believe in their words; and as many as did believe were baptized; and they became a righteous people, and they did establish a church among them.

verse 35 By what influence were Lamoni and his servants and many of the Lamanites converted? Was it the miraculous demonstrations of Ammon’s power that converted them? After all, they had been witness or at least had heard of Ammon’s phenomenal exploits at the waters of Sebus. They had seen the king and all his household fall into a trance and awaken converted to the gospel. They had watched as a would-be assassin fell dead as he raised his sword to kill the defenseless Ammon as he lay in a trance. Did all these miracles result in their conversion? Was it the angel who visited the younger Alma and the sons of Mosiah who converted them? Of course, it was not. It was simply and completely the influence of the Spirit of God who converted all these people as they observed “the goings on” (Alma 5:46).

36 And thus the work of the Lord did commence among the Lamanites; thus the Lord did begin to pour out his Spirit upon them; and we see that his arm is extended to all people who will repent and believe on his name.

Alma Chapter 20

1 And it came to pass that when they had established a church in that land, that king Lamoni desired that Ammon should go with him to the land of Nephi, that he might show him unto his father.

verse 1 Recall that king Lamoni reigned in the land of Ishmael. Lamoni's father who was king over all the land reigned in the "land of Nephi." The term "land of Nephi" has two possible meanings. It refers to the general land south of the land of Zarahemla in which the Lamanites lived. It was made up the smaller lands of Ishmael, Shilom, Shemlon, Middoni, Mormon, Nephi, and others. The term "land of Nephi" also refers to the more specific land around the city of Nephi. Lamoni is here proposing that Ammon accompany him to the smaller land of Nephi from where his father reigned over all the general land of Nephi.

2 And the voice of the Lord came to Ammon, saying: Thou shalt not go up to the land of Nephi, for behold, the king will seek thy life; but thou shalt go to the land of Middoni; for behold, thy brother Aaron, and also Muloki and Ammah are in prison.

verse 2 Muloki and Ammah are presumably two of the "small number" that accompanied the sons of Mosiah on their mission (Mosiah 28:1). We will later learn that perhaps they were the only two who accompanied the sons of Mosiah (Alma 23:1).

For commentary on the derivation of the name Muloki, see the supplemental article, Names in the Book of Mormon.

"Thou shalt not go up to the land of Nephi" As already mentioned, the Lamanite king over all the land, Lamoni's father, lived in the land and city of Nephi. See the commentary for Jacob 28:2 and for Alma 17:19 as to the plausible identity of this city and the identity of the former Nephite / Zeniffite city of Lehi-Nephi.

3 Now it came to pass that when Ammon had heard this, he said unto Lamoni: Behold, my brother and brethren are in prison at Middoni, and I go that I may deliver them.

4 Now Lamoni said unto Ammon: I know, in the strength of the Lord thou canst do all things. But behold, I will go with thee to the land of Middoni; for the king of the land of Middoni, whose name is Antiomno, is a friend unto me; therefore I go to the land of Middoni, that I may flatter the king of the land, and he will cast thy brethren out of prison. Now Lamoni said unto him: Who told thee that thy brethren were in prison?

5 And Ammon said unto him: No one hath told me, save it be God; and he said unto me—Go and deliver thy brethren, for they are in prison in the land of Middoni.

6 Now when Lamoni had heard this he caused that his servants should make ready his horses and his chariots.

verse 6 “make ready his horses and his chariots” If you wish to review the discussion of the “wheel” in the Book of Mormon, see the commentary for Alma 18:9.

7 And he said unto Ammon: Come, I will go with thee down to the land of Middoni, and there I will plead with the king that he will cast thy brethren out of prison.

8 And it came to pass that as Ammon and Lamoni were journeying thither, they met the father of Lamoni, who was king over all the land.

verse 8 “king over all the land” In the Lamanite political system, there was a “king over all the land” (Alma 18:9; 20:8) who “appointed kings over all ... lands” under his rule (Mosiah 24:2).

As political scientist Noel B. Reynolds noticed, the Lamanite government was “a very different system” than that of the Nephites. Among the Lamanites, the “tributary kings [were] appointed by the superior monarch, not by a prophet.” Brother Reynolds commented that this was “more like the system that appears to have prevailed in ancient Mesoamerica” (Noel B. Reynolds, “Nephite Kingship Reconsidered,” in Mormons, Scripture, and the Ancient World: Studies in Honor of John L. Sorenson, ed. Davis Bitton, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1998, 164). In fact, both Mesoamerica and the ancient Near East had systems of kings similar to that described among the Lamanites.

In the ancient Near East, this suzerain (a sovereign or a state exercising political control over a dependent state)—vassal relationship was typical when larger empires conquered smaller states (Raymond Westbrook, “Patronage in the Ancient Near East,” Journal of the Economic and Social History of the Orient 48, no. 2, 2005: 210–233). as happened to Israel and Judah (2 Kings 17:3; Lamentations 1:1). According to ancient Near Eastern legal scholar Raymond Westbrook, “Vassalage can entail many different degrees of political control, from province to sphere of influence” (Ibid., 223). This resulted in networks of subordinate kings (vassals) who had pledged allegiance to a “great king,” or suzerain.

Familial language is commonly used to describe the nature of these relationships—the suzerain is “father” to the subordinate king, who is described as his “son” (F. Charles Fensham, “Father and Son Terminology for Treaty and Covenant,” in Near Eastern Studies in Honor of William Foxwell Albright, ed. by Hans Goedicke, Baltimore, MD: The Johns Hopkins University Press, 1971, 121–135; J. David Schloen, The House of the Father as Fact and Symbol: Patrimonialism in Ugarit and the Ancient Near East, Winona Lake, IN: Eisenbrauns, 2001, 255–262). The relationship usually involved tribute payments to the suzerain. During the reigns of David and Solomon, for instance, Israel had vassals which “were expected to pay tribute to the Israelite king” and “even the simple failure to pay the yearly tribute, would be regarded ... [as] a direct challenge to the imperial claims” of the God of Israel (Roberts, Bible and the Ancient Near East, 328–329).

The Lamanite political hierarchy, in the words of John L. Sorenson, also “rings a Mesoamerican bell” (John L. Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1985, 230). In describing the political system of the Classic period (ca. AD 250–900), Mayanists Simon Martin and Nikolai Grube argued that the evidence “points to a pervasive and enduring system of ‘overkingship’ that shaped almost every facet of the Classic landscape” (Simon Martin and Nikolai Grube, Chronical of the Maya Kings and Queens: Deciphering the Dynasties of the Ancient Maya, 2nd edition, London, Eng.: Thames and Hudson, 2008, 19).

Political ties binding overkings with subordinate kings were at once very personal, yet highly tenuous (Martin and Grube, Chronical of the Maya Kings and Queens, 20). Professor Sergio Quezada explained, “Multiple factors may have led one Maya to accept another’s lordship . . . Such factors included protection, kinship, convenience, war, or the simple quest for recognition of a title” (Sergio Quezada, Maya Lords and Lordship: The Formation of Colonial Society in Yucatán, 1350–1600, trans. Terry Rugeley, Norman, OK: University of Oklahoma Press, 2014, 9). Vassal rulers were expected to make tribute payments to their overlords (Martin and Grube, Chronical of the Maya Kings and Queens, 21), and overkings did not hesitate to appoint rulers when local dynasties were uncooperative (Schele and David Freidel, A Forest of Kings: The Untold Story of the Ancient Maya, New York, NY: William Morrow, 1990, 157–158). Also, see the discussion in Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting, 230–231; Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 3:405–406).

In 2013, John L. Sorenson concluded, “At least for a century or more for the Mesoamerican Late Pre-Classic period (ca. 100 BC–AD 50) the Book of Mormon record portrays its peoples in a political situation that sounds very much like” that of major Mesoamerican centers at the time (John L. Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex: An Ancient American Book, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and the Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2013, 365). The Lamanites’ hierarchy of kings, as one scholar concluded, “fit[s] very comfortably into a Mesoamerican context” (Brant A. Gardner, Traditions of the Fathers: The Book of Mormon as History, Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2015, 302).

This context, along with the ancient Near Eastern background, illuminates the account of the confrontation between Lamoni and his father (Alma 20:8–16). Although typically understood as just a familial quarrel (See, for example, D. Kelly Ogden and Andrew C. Skinner, Verse by Verse: The Book of Mormon, 2 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 2011, 1:427, which describes the event strictly in familial terms: “Lamoni’s father ... became so furious at his son for being with a Nephite that he tried to kill him.”), the ancient reality is that it was a political dispute (Gardner, Second Witness, 4:315). Brother Brant Gardner wrote: “Lamoni’s father is not making only a paternal or personal request but issuing a political order as Lamoni’s overlord.” Given that the terms of kinship such as “father” and “son” could be used to represent the relationship of suzerain to vassal, it is possible that Lamoni and his “father” the overking were not actually family at all. Mesoamerican examples where the family of the high king are appointed as subordinate kings, however, certainly make it possible that a real father-son relationship existed between Lamoni and the unnamed overking. It is likely that the “great feast” Lamoni was supposed to attend was an occasion for him to pay tribute. Failure to attend was seen as both a breach of etiquette and a sign of rebellion (See Gardner, Traditions of the Fathers, 301–302; Gardner, Second Witness, 4:313–314). When the “king over all the land” saw that Lamoni was traveling with the prince of an enemy state, on his way to use his political clout to liberate others of Nephite nobility in captivity, his suspicions were intensified (Alma 20:10–13). In Brant Gardner’s Second Witness, 4:312, Brother Gardner wrote: “By calling Antiomno of Middoni ‘a friend,’ Lamoni is not just speaking of an associate who has cordial feelings toward him. They are both kings, and ‘friend’ here means ally. City-states in Mesoamerica were frequently at war with other cities. Alliances were forged and broken. Allied kings, however, paid each other frequent inter-city visits with strong political overtones. Thus, Lamoni is indicating that Antiomno is an ally of whom he has some expectations, just as Antiomno would also have expectations of him. Such formal state visits, during the Maya Classic period, would be recorded in stone. The ‘flattery’ Lamoni proposes is not just a friendly conversation but a delicate political negotiation aimed at persuading a fellow king to reverse his decision.” Lamoni’s father insisted that Lamoni prove his loyalty by slaying the enemy prince (verse 14). Lamoni’s refusal was nothing short of treason, in the high king’s mind, leaving him with no other choice but to exact capital punishment (verse 16). In Gardner’s, Second Witness, 4:315, Gardner wrote: “Lamoni’s father is not making only a paternal or personal request but issuing a political order as Lamoni’s overlord. He is forcing Lamoni to choose an allegiance—either to his overlord and father, or to this Nephite. Refusal would be rebellion against his father and all of his father’s allies. He would declare antagonism toward former allies and renounce political, kinship, and economic connections without having replaced them. In an ancient society, such a move could be literally fatal.”

Further indication of the political nature of the altercation can be seen when Ammon arose to defend Lamoni (Alma 20:17). In the king’s eyes, Ammon was no doubt fulfilling the role of Lamoni’s new suzerain. Upon his defeat, the king made several political concessions. He was prepared to relinquish half his kingdom to his new conqueror (verse 23), but all Ammon required was that he release his political control over Lamoni (v. 24–26). The king also granted the release of Ammon’s brethren (verse 27).

The king likely expected that if he lived, he would be Ammon’s prisoner, and be subject to torture and public humiliation. Yet, the “old king was escaping with not only his life but his political power intact—a complete reversal of his expectations after defeat.” This turned a highly volatile political moment into an opportunity for the Lord to use Ammon and Lamoni as “tools of positive change” (Ogden and Skinner, Verse by Verse: The Book of Mormon, 427).

Ammon’s refusal to seek power and take advantage of the situation, and instead show loyalty, love, and mercy softened the high king’s heart. He was “greatly astonished” (Alma 20:27) and had a strong desire to learn what could make a man pass up such great political power. When the opportunity came, he too was willing to give up all the political power he had attained to “receive [the] great joy” that comes from the gospel of Jesus Christ (Alma 22:15).

9 And behold, the father of Lamoni said unto him: Why did ye not come to the feast on that great day when I made a feast unto my sons, and unto my people?

verse 9 “Why did ye not come to the feast on that great day when I made a feast unto my sons, and unto my people” You will recall that at the time of the episode at the waters of Sebus, king Lamoni was preparing to go to his father’s feast in the land of Nephi (Alma 18:9).

10 And he also said: Whither art thou going with this Nephite, who is one of the children of a liar?

verse 10 “this Nephite, who is one of the children of a liar” See the commentary for verse 13.

11 And it came to pass that Lamoni rehearsed unto him whither he was going, for he feared to offend him.

12 And he also told him all the cause of his tarrying in his own kingdom, that he did not go unto his father to the feast which he had prepared.

verse 12 All of the events surrounding the conversion of king Lamoni and his household occurred as Lamoni was preparing to go to his father’s feast and prevented Lamoni from attending the feast.

13 And now when Lamoni had rehearsed unto him all these things, behold, to his astonishment, his father was angry with him, and said: Lamoni, thou art going to deliver these Nephites, who are sons of a liar. Behold, he robbed our fathers; and now his children are also come amongst us that they may, by their cunning and their lyings, deceive us, that they again may rob us of our property.

verse 13 Why did the father of Lamoni harbor such explicit negative feelings for the Nephites? We have discussed previously the concept of “the traditions of their fathers” in the commentary for Jacob 3:3-9. For the reader’s convenience, we will repeat that discussion here.

It is probably a mistake to think of the Lamanites as a benighted, hardened, indolent, and by nature a ferocious people. Certainly, many among them were basically good, loving, gentle, and morally upright. Why then do we tend to form a contrary opinion about them as we read the Book of Mormon? Why do we intuitively regard them as an evil and loathsome people who are almost without redeeming qualities? What is the quality of this people that makes us think so negatively about them?

To understand the answer to these questions, it is vital to understand the so-called founding myth of the Lamanites. The Lamanites had deeply rooted in their culture a tradition of hatred of the Nephites. This profound legacy of hatred began at the time of Laman, Lemuel, Lehi, and Nephi, and was passed along from father to son. From the Lamanites’ point of view, this basic founding myth probably was told something like this: Our Father Lehi and our younger brother Nephi stole from us everything we ever wanted. We wanted to remain at home in Jerusalem, among our friends, and enjoy our cherished possessions. We didn’t want to leave and embark on the rather ill-defined mission that our father Lehi had decided upon. Lehi and Nephi were oppressive and uncaring. They would not listen to us. They forced us to go with them. They virtually robbed us of our homes, and told us lies about some far-away supposedly “promised” Land. They would not allow us to decide for ourselves. They unjustly robbed us of the right to govern ourselves. When we arrived at the great ocean, they commanded us to help build a boat. We did not want to help because we were frightened to try to cross the great water. Again, we were forced, not only to help with the building but also to embark on this seemingly hopeless journey. Once on the boat, we tried to forget our fears by organizing a little lighthearted revelry. Nephi thought that this would offend the Lord and would not allow it! Again, he tried to rule over us. We believed that Nephi was leading us to some wilderness where he might dominate us and subject us to his will and pleasure. Just as Nephi tried to take away our freedoms and govern us against our will, so will all Nephites do the same to us. The only way we can stop them from doing this is to use force against them—to smite and kill them. It is our only hope for happiness!

This Lamanite tradition of hatred for the Nephites is often referred to in the Book of Mormon as “the tradition of their fathers” or “the iniquity of their fathers.” It dominated the relations between the two peoples throughout the Book of Mormon story. Lamanite children were doubtless indoctrinated with it from an early uncritical age. It was firmly imbedded in their very bones, and it dominated their feelings and thoughts about the Nephite peoples. It virtually represented the national identity of the Lamanites, and with it the Lamanite leaders could stir their people up to anger (see Alma 43:7). It fueled the virtually continuous wars the Lamanites made against the Nephites. As the Nephites experienced the expression of this tradition of hatred, they generally came to perceive the Lamanites as ferocious and hard. The Lamanites acted as if they felt nothing but hatred for the Nephites.

For an interesting exposition of this tradition of hatred uttered by a Lamanite king, read the letter written to Captain Moroni by Ammoron in 63 BC (Alma 54:15-24). Indeed, understanding the genesis of this heritage of hatred may even give us a measure of sympathy and understanding for the Lamanite peoples.

Perhaps king Lamoni was not a very apt pupil when all this indoctrinating was going on. Perhaps he had not learned to hate the Nephites quite as much as some other Lamanites did. Otherwise how would we explain his ready acceptance of Ammon, and why would he have been astonished that his father was angry with him for taking up with a Nephite?

14 Now the father of Lamoni commanded him that he should slay Ammon with the sword. And he also commanded him that he should not go to the land of Middoni, but that he should return with him to the land of Ishmael.

15 But Lamoni said unto him: I will not slay Ammon, neither will I return to the land of Ishmael, but I go to the land of Middoni that I may release the brethren of Ammon, for I know that they are just men and holy prophets of the true God.

16 Now when his father had heard these words, he was angry with him, and he drew his sword that he might smite him to the earth.

17 But Ammon stood forth and said unto him: Behold, thou shalt not slay thy son; nevertheless, it were better that he should fall than thee, for behold, he has repented of his sins; but if thou shouldst fall at this time, in thine anger, thy soul could not be saved.

verse 17 “if thou shouldst fall at this time, in thine anger, thy soul could not be saved” Is murder, the malicious and intentional shedding of innocent blood an unpardonable sin for which there is no forgiveness? Certainly, there is no complete forgiveness and exaltation possible for the murderer (1 John 5:16-17; D&C 42:79). It is, however, possible for the murderer to eventually repent and receive the forgiveness which allows them to inherit the telestial degree of glory (Bruce R. McConkie, Mormon Doctrine, 520). Murder is not the unpardonable sin or the sin against the Holy Ghost; rather it is said to be the unforgivable sin. Only that individual who has received the “fulness of the priesthood”—who has had his calling and election made sure—is capable of committing the unpardonable sin. This latter individual is guilty of the unpardonable sin if he receives the “fulness of the priesthood” then turns altogether from the church and wars against it. For a more complete discussion of these sins, see Three Most Abominable Sins, volume 3, chapter 18 of Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine.

18 And again, it is expedient that thou shouldst forbear; for if thou shouldst slay thy son, he being an innocent man, his blood would cry from the ground to the Lord his God, for vengeance to come upon thee; and perhaps thou wouldst lose thy soul.

verse 18 To “forbear” means to stop what you are doing. This is not to be confused with a “forebear” which is an ancestor.

“his blood would cry from the ground to the Lord his God” The very act of his murder would demand that justice be meted out to his murderer.

19 Now when Ammon had said these words unto him, he answered him, saying: I know that if I should slay my son, that I should shed innocent blood; for it is thou that hast sought to destroy him.

verse 19 The king says, in effect: “I do not intend to slay my son. I realize that he is innocent. It is you, Ammon, who is guilty of trying to destroy my son.”

20 And he stretched forth his hand to slay Ammon. But Ammon withstood his blows, and also smote his arm that he could not use it.

21 Now when the king saw that Ammon could slay him, he began to plead with Ammon that he would spare his life.

22 But Ammon raised his sword, and said unto him: Behold, I will smite thee except thou wilt grant unto me that my brethren may be cast out of prison.

23 Now the king, fearing he should lose his life, said: If thou wilt spare me I will grant unto thee whatsoever thou wilt ask, even to half of the kingdom.

24 Now when Ammon saw that he had wrought upon the old king according to his desire, he said unto him: If thou wilt grant that my brethren may be cast out of prison, and also that Lamoni may retain his kingdom, and that ye be not displeased with him, but grant that he may do according to his own desires in whatsoever thing he thinketh, then will I spare thee; otherwise I will smite thee to the earth.

25 Now when Ammon had said these words, the king began to rejoice because of his life.

26 And when he saw that Ammon had no desire to destroy him, and when he also saw the great love he had for his son Lamoni, he was astonished exceedingly, and said: Because this is all that thou hast desired, that I would release thy brethren, and suffer that my son Lamoni should retain his kingdom, behold, I will grant unto you that my son may retain his kingdom from this time and forever; and I will govern him no more—

27 And I will also grant unto thee that thy brethren may be cast out of prison, and thou and thy brethren may come unto me, in my kingdom; for I shall greatly desire to see thee. For the king was greatly astonished at the words which he had spoken, and also at the words which had been spoken by his son Lamoni, therefore he was desirous to learn them.

verse 27 “For the king was greatly astonished at the words which he had spoken” The king was undoubtedly moved and intrigued not only by Ammon’s obvious concern and affection for Lamoni and for his lack of personal greed (verse 24), but also by Ammon’s accusing him of being a sinner in dire need of repentance (verses 17-18).

“and also at the words which had been spoken by his son Lamoni” Lamoni had had an opportunity to explain some gospel principles and bear his testimony when he explained the reasons for not attending his father’s feast.

These events have resulted in a gospel principle that has come to be called the “Middoni Principle” (C. Robert Line, Religious Educator, volume 1, number 1, 2000, 47-52, Published by BYU Religious Studies).

The essence of this principle is that the Lord and a man may share a common spiritual goal, but the Lord may have a different (and always superior) way of achieving that goal than does the man. Hence, the man must be willing to completely trust in the Lord and do his bidding, even though the man may not perceive just how the Lord’s approach to achieving the goal will work. Allow me to summarize these events.

After much service and preaching among the people of King Lamoni, Ammon finally reaped the harvest of souls he had longed for. Among this harvest was the conversion of King Lamoni himself. As was the case in Lehi’s dream, Lamoni, after having tasted the precious “fruit” of the gospel, desired now to share that fruit (1 Nephi 8:12; see also Alma 36:24) with his family: “And it came to pass that when they had established a church in that land, that king Lamoni desired that Ammon should go with him to the land of Nephi, that he might show him unto his father” (Alma 20:1).

Lamoni’s father was the chief of all the kings in the land (Alma 20:8). So, here we the common goal. Both the Lord and Ammon desired that Lamoni’s father hear and be converted to the gospel. Ammon desired to go the land of Nephi, but the Lord had other ideas. When Ammon inquired of the Lord to receive approval for his traveling to the land of Nephi, his request was denied: “And the voice of the Lord came to Ammon, saying: Thou shalt not go up to the land of Nephi, for behold the king [the chief king] will seek thy life; but thou shalt go to the land of Middoni; for behold, thy brother Aaron, and also Muloki and Ammah are in prison” (Alma 20:2).

Ammon told Lamoni the details of this revelation, whereupon Lamoni gave his wholehearted support and even volunteered his personal services to Ammon in order to free his brethren from captivity.

At this point the story takes a strange turn. While on their journey to Middoni, Ammon and Lamoni encounter the chief king. Just as the voice of the Lord had warned, the chief king sought to take Ammon's life. His attempt, however, was unsuccessful. At first glance one wonders why the voice of the Lord would tell Ammon to go to Middoni and not visit Lamoni's father in Nephi, if they end up encountering him anyhow. The Lord knew that Ammon and Lamoni would meet the chief king. In light of what happened, maybe the issue with the Lord was not "what is the best way to protect Ammon?" but rather, "What is the best way to bring about the conversion of the chief king?" God does intervene to save and protect, but he can never force the conversion of the soul (Helaman 14:30-31; 2 Nephi 10:23-24; see also Hymns #240).

God does, however, take a hand in shaping the circumstances and events surrounding the conversion of the soul. It might well be that being away from the confines of his home, and all the security that comes with it, was precisely what King Lamoni's father needed in order for a change of heart to take place. Perhaps the initial trek toward Middoni and the subsequent meeting out in the wilderness was a more effective way for God to show the chief king "the great love [that Ammon] had for his son Lamoni." Furthermore, once Ammon withstood the king and the king had to listen, he "was greatly astonished at the words which [Ammon] had spoken, and also at the words which had been spoken by his son Lamoni, therefore he was desirous to learn them" (Alma 20:26-27). Sometimes the only way the Lord enters into our hearts is when he takes us out of our element—out of our "comfort zone."

King Lamoni's desire to share the gospel with his father was a righteous desire that was fulfilled in a peculiar manner. We all have moments in life when we want spiritually "to go to Nephi," as it were, for whatever righteous reason we might have. The real test comes when the Lord tells us "to go to Middoni" instead. When this happens, it is imperative that we not only do what the Lord says, but that we realize that by so doing it is quite likely that our original desired outcome just might be fulfilled, albeit in a better way. This is the Middoni principle. Isaiah wrote, "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord" (Isaiah 55:8).

As President Wilford Woodruff said, "We should begin to understand that God's ways are infinitely superior to our ways, and that His counsels, though they may seem to call for sacrifice, are always the best and the safest for us to adopt and carry out."

What we desire in righteousness is often what the Lord desires, although His method in achieving that desired outcome is often different from what we would expect.

Another example of the Middoni principle in Missouri in 1834. Various Saints in Kirtland and surrounding areas joined in the march of Zion's Camp in order to give relief to Saints in Zion and to help restore their property. The command of the Lord fueled their cause: "Behold, I say unto you, the redemption of Zion must needs come by power" (D&C 103:15). In the aftermath of several months of arduous and painful events, some would conclude that Zion's Camp was a failure. Those in Zions Camp were not even allowed to enter Missouri.

So, was Zion's Camp a failure? To those who understand "the Middoni principle" it was not. As President Wilford Woodruff later explained: "We gained an experience that we never could have gained in any other way. We had the privilege of beholding the face of the prophet, and we had the privilege of travelling [sic] a thousand miles with him, and seeing the workings of the Spirit of God with him, and the revelations of Jesus Christ unto him and the fulfilment of those revelations. And he gathered some two hundred Elders from throughout the nation in that early day and sent us . . . into the world to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Had I not gone up with Zion's Camp I should not have been here to-day, and I presume that would have been the case with many others. . . By going there, we were thrust into the vineyard to preach the gospel, and the Lord accepted our labors" (Journal of Discourses, 26 vols., Liverpool: F. D. Richards & Sons, 1851-86, 13:158). Elder Orson F. Whitney understood this principle as well. Concerning the redemption of Zion by power he stated: "The redemption of Zion is more than the purchase or recovery of lands, the building of cities, or even the founding of nations. It is the conquest of the heart, the subjugation of the soul, the sanctifying of the flesh, the purifying and ennobling of the passions" (The Life of Heber C. Kimball, Salt Lake City: Bookcraft, 1973, 65).

Interestingly, a revelation regarding the land in Zion states: "In time ye shall possess the goodly land" (D&C103:20). It is apparent that the Lord's plan for the redemption of Zion is different than what was expected by some of the Saints.

Similarly, many Jews at the time of Christ failed to recognize the promised Messiah, not because of lack of expectation, but due to their incorrect understanding of what type of Messiah would come. The Jews expected a political leader to free them from Roman oppression, not a suffering servant to free them from sin. When we lean on our own understanding and forget to trust in the Lord we are inherently insisting that our wisdom is above the Lord's. Elder Neal A. Maxwell wrote: "When we are unduly impatient with circumstances, we may be suggesting that we know what is best—better than does God. Or, at least, we are asserting that our timetable is better than His. Either way, we are questioning the reality of God's omniscience as if, as some seem to believe, God were on some sort of post-doctoral fellowship, trying to complete His understanding and, therefore, needing to use us as consultants" (Neal A. Maxwell, Notwithstanding My Weakness, Salt Lake City: Deseret Book Co., 1981, 59-60).

"The Middoni principle" entails more than mere obedience. It involves "intelligent" obedience, coupled with the knowledge that although the Lord may often want what we want, his method for realizing those wants is not always identical with our methods. Not only are his methods often different from ours, they are inevitably superior

28 And it came to pass that Ammon and Lamoni proceeded on their journey towards the land of Middoni. And Lamoni found favor in the eyes of the king of the land; therefore the brethren of Ammon were brought forth out of prison.

29 And when Ammon did meet them he was exceedingly sorrowful, for behold they were naked, and their skins were worn exceedingly because of being bound with strong cords. And they also had suffered hunger, thirst, and all kinds of afflictions; nevertheless they were patient in all their sufferings.

verse 29 From our comfortable armchairs, as we read the scriptures, we sometimes misconstrue, misinterpret, and misunderstand the persecutions heaped upon the Lord's servants and, indeed, even upon the Lord himself. In a subtle way we tend to glamorize these persecutions, assuming and picturing in our mind's eye that the Lord and his servants somehow maintained their dignity in their time of suffering. These, we imagine, were noble sufferings in the way they were dealt out and in the way they were endured. The real truth is that these afflictions were demeaning and insulting and degrading. During the Savior's mortal sojourn, many took the opportunity to embarrass and humiliate him. The Roman soldiers, the chief priests, the scribes, the Pharisees, the common people, and even one of the thieves who was crucified beside him jeered at him, spat on him, hit him, and spoke blasphemously against him and profanely to him (Matthew 27:29-31, 39-44; Luke 22:63-65; 23:35-39).

"they were patient in all their sufferings" Aaron, Muloki, and Ammah had been faithful and steady and longsuffering in their trials. They did not allow their sufferings to embitter them.

30 And, as it happened, it was their lot to have fallen into the hands of a more hardened and a more stiffnecked people; therefore they would not hearken unto their words, and they had cast them out, and had smitten them, and had driven them from house to house, and from place to place, even until they had arrived in the land of Middoni; and there they were taken and cast into prison, and bound with strong cords, and kept in prison for many days, and were delivered by Lamoni and Ammon.

verse 30 "it was their lot to have fallen into the hands of a more hardened and a more stiffnecked people" They had fallen into the hands of the Amalekites and the Amulonites (see Alma 21:1-4).

The Amulonites were the devotees of the late Amulon, one of the priests of king Noah and a Nephite dissenter (see Mosiah 23:31-32). They were thus of mixed parentage. They had Nephite fathers (the priests of Noah) and Lamanite mothers (the Lamanite maidens whom these priests kidnapped and took to wife). Because of their superior education, they became leaders among the Lamanites. We have discussed previously the observation that Nephite dissenters tended to be more hard hearted and refractory to the truth than were the Lamanites (Alma 24:30).

The text is silent concerning the origin of the Amalekites. We have encountered two "Amaleki's" thus far in our study of the Book of Mormon. One was the prophet-custodian of the plates at the time of King Benjamin (Omni 1:12, 23; Words of Mormon

1:3, 10). The other Amaleki was one of the men who traveled from Zarahemla with Ammon to rescue the people of king Limhi (Mosiah 7:6). It is unlikely the Amalekites descended from either of these Nephites. We have learned, through the efforts of modern scholars, that the Amalekites are the same as the Amlicites (see an important discussion of the Amalekites in the commentary for Alma 21:2). Both the Amalekites and the Amulonites were of the order of the Nehors (Alma 21:4; 24:28-29). For a discussion of the order of the Nehors, see the commentary for Alma 8:8.

Camille Fronk has concluded in her article “Show Forth Good Examples in Me” (Studies in Scripture, Volume Seven, 1 Nephi to Alma 29, 328-29), that Ammon may well be seen as a type of Christ. She points out that the temptations placed before Ammon were similar to those which would later be placed before Christ by Satan. Ammon was offered gifts which would satisfy his carnal appetites—Lamoni’s daughter and a life of ease (Alma 17:24). In an analogous way, so will Satan tempt the fasting Christ to turn stones into bread (Matthew 4:2-4). The Lamanites mistakenly thought that Ammon was a God. He could have taken advantage of their ignorance and become their ruler (Alma 18:21). Christ was tempted to show his power and gain instant popularity and worldly glory (Matthew 4:5-7). Ammon was offered worldly riches by the king over all the Lamanites (Alma 20:23). So did Satan offer Christ the wealth of all the earth if Christ would but worship him (Matthew 4:8-10). Obviously both Ammon’s and Christ’s eyes were fixed on a larger mission.

Alma Chapter 21

An account of the preaching of Aaron, and Muloki, and their brethren, to the Lamanites. Comprising chapters 21 to 26 inclusive.

We have read the account of Ammon's missionary experience to this point in the story. We now return to the point where the brothers separated from one another at the beginning of their mission, and we will follow Aaron as he goes forth to preach.

1 Now when Ammon and his brethren separated themselves in the borders of the land of the Lamanites, behold Aaron took his journey towards the land which was called by the Lamanites, Jerusalem, calling it after the land of their fathers' nativity; and it was away joining the borders of Mormon.

verse 1 "Jerusalem . . . was away joining the borders of [the land of] Mormon" For speculation as to the relationship of the various Lamanite lands, see the Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands. See also the article, Notes on the Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands.

2 Now the Lamanites and the Amalekites and the people of Amulon had built a great city, which was called Jerusalem.

verse 2 "the Amalekites and the people of Amulon" In a compelling article ("Alma's Enemies—The Case of the Lamanites, Amlicites, and Mysterious Amalekites," Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, volume 14, number 1, 2005, 108-117), J. Christopher Conkling has proposed and defended the idea that the Amalekites are not, in fact a new group. Rather, they are the same as the Amlicites (Alma 2-3). This observation is based on two types of evidences we will describe here. First, there exist heretofore little-noticed features of the text that suggest these groups are the same. Second, there are spelling variations in the original handwritten manuscripts written by Oliver Cowdery which suggests that beginning in Alma 21, the spelling of the name of this group changed from its original Amlicites.

The book of Alma begins with Nehor (Alma 1) and quickly moves to a major Nephite threat by the Nephite apostate Amlici, a devotee of Nehor. Amlici and his army are defeated, Amlici is killed, and this Amlicite army seems to disappear (Alma 2), but Alma spends the entire next chapter (Alma 3) telling about the threat and mark of the Amlicites, after their disappearance. This seems to be a lot of detail about a past threat. Alma 3 reads more like a warning and an introduction to a problem than a comment about a problem no longer present. Then 18 chapters later, here in this particular verse, Aaron runs into another group of apostate Nephite troublemakers, the Amalekites. As Alma mentions this group in this verse, he throws their name into the narrative almost casually as if the reader were already fully aware of who they are. Upon reading this verse for the first time, most readers are probably unaware that they have met yet another new group, one with no given origin. At first this casual introduction of a new group called Amalekites might not bother us since the Book of Mormon often takes a shotgun approach to its abbreviated historical record, where names are noted without introduction, including the crucial name Mormon itself (see Mosiah 18:4). However, there are no instances in the Book of Mormon text where a group is introduced without explanation or introduction—the Amalekites are the only exception.

Chronologically, the Amlicites and Amalekites fit together perfectly; they never overlap. Alma tells of his problems with a large group of obstinate Nephite dissenters called Amlicites, who are after the order of Nehor and allied with the Lamanites. We will read further of Aaron and Ammon, who are in the Lamanite lands at the same time period, telling of their problems with another formidable Lamanite ally after the order of Nehor, a people whose name—Amalekites—is spelled much like the name Amlicites. They both pursue the same kinds of goals during the same time period, and they cause the same problems. Both groups are Nephite dissenters. One group is introduced as if it will have ongoing importance. The other is first mentioned as though its identity has already been established. To be sure, the text reads more clearly if these groups are one and the same. John L. Sorenson recognized this strong similarity some years ago and speculated that “it is possible that they [Amalekites] constituted the Amlicite remnant . . . their new name possibly arising by ‘lamanitization’ of the original” (“Peoples of the Book of Mormon,” in Encyclopedia of Mormonism, ed. Daniel H. Ludlow et al., 194).

Dr. Royal Skousen, editor of the long-term Book of Mormon critical text project has also suggested that these two groups are the same. He has noted spellings in the original manuscripts which are intermediate between Amlicite and Amalekite such as Amalicite, Amaleckite, Amelekite, Amalickite, and Amelickite. Dr. Skousen commented that the spelling of this name is rather loose and that many of the common letters, especially the c and the k are interchanged freely. Overall, there is little support of the idea that the Amlicites and Amalekites were two separate groups.

What are the implications of this idea that the Amlicites and Amalekites are the same group? First, we can now see that Alma’s warnings in Alma 3 were concerning a threat and problem that Alma felt he was going to have to deal with for the rest of his life. Theoretically Alma could have begun his record with the travels of the sons of Mosiah, but he apparently felt the need to introduce the major conflict faced by both the missionaries sent to the Nephites (Alma and Amulek) and those sent to the Lamanites (the sons of Mosiah) before the record could adequately explain the trials of any group. The great battles during Alma’s reign were against Lamanite armies allied with or led by Nephite apostates such as the Amlicites. Alma 43:6 will state “As the Amalekites [Amlicites] were of a more wicked and murderous disposition than the Lamanites were, in and of themselves, therefore, [the dissenter] Zerahemnah appointed chief captains over the Lamanites, and they were all Amalekites [Amlicites] and Zoramites.” And Alma 43:13 ties all these groups together in the final battles before Alma’s departure: “Thus the Nephites were compelled, alone, to withstand against the Lamanites, who were a compound of Laman and Lemuel, and the sons of Ishmael, and all those who had dissented from the Nephites, who were Amalekites [Amlicites] and Zoramites, and the descendants of the priests of Noah [Amulonites].” Further, when we read of the atrocities encountered by the missionary sons of Mosiah among the Lamanites—including the slaughter of the 1,005 Anti-Nephi-Lehies (see Alma 24:21-22)—perhaps we will be more likely to notice that Alma’s mention of the true villains is in line with the book’s structure: “The greatest number of those of the Lamanites who slew so many of their brethren were Amalekites [Amlicites] and Amulonites, the greatest number of whom were after the order of the Nehors.” And among the converts to the truth “were none who were Amalekites [Amlicites] or Amulonites, or who were of the order of Nehor, but they were actual descendants of Laman and Lemuel” (Alma 24:28-29).

“Jerusalem” This wicked city of Jerusalem will be among those cities destroyed at the time of Christ’s crucifixion. The text will explain that Jerusalem and cities like it were destroyed “to hide their wickedness and abominations from before my face, that the blood of the prophets and the saints shall not come up any more unto me against them” (3 Nephi 9:7).

There is a subtle problem suggested by this verse when it is correlated with other verses in the Book of Mormon. Verse 1 of this chapter (Alma 21) suggests that the very first place Aaron traveled to do missionary work was to the city of Jerusalem. We would therefore assume that he traveled there during the first year of the reign of judges, which was the same year he and his brothers departed Zarahemla on their mission to the Land of Nephi. Aaron traveled to Jerusalem, a city which we are told in this verse, had been built in part by Amalekites (actually Amlicites). Yet we do not encounter Nehor (the spiritual father of Amlici and the Amlicites) until the first year of the reign of judges (Alma 1), and we do not encounter Amlici and the Amlicites until the fifth year of the reign of judges (Alma 2). How could the Amlicites have helped build the city of Jerusalem to which Aaron traveled during the first year of the reign of judges, if the Amlicites did not begin as a group until the fifth year of the reign of judges? There seem to be two possible answers, both of which may well be applicable:

1. The record tells of many activities of the missionaries before Aaron reached Jerusalem and never says that he arrived there in the very first year (see Alma 17:6-18). Perhaps he arrived there several years after the beginning of his mission to the Land of Nephi. After all, only a very few incidents are recorded from a mission lasting fourteen years.

2. It seems likely that the problems with both Nehor and Amlici may have been ongoing for several years by the first year of the reign of judges. It seems unlikely that Amlici could rise to prominence with almost half the population's support, undertake a lively national election, receive an illegitimate coronation, raise a large army, move major parts of the Nephite population, form alliances with the Lamanites, and manage three major battles all in one year (see Alma 2:2-3:25). Even modern dictators with advanced transportation and mass communications have not accomplished all that in a single year. It seems likely that the slow building up of a power base and the forging of foreign alliances may have been going on for years before.

I have received the following personal communication from Dr. John L. Sorenson regarding the modern-day geographic correlates between the city of Jerusalem and today's Lake Atitlan (the likely correlate of the "waters of Mormon"):

About 35 miles west of Guatemala City lies Lake Atitlan, at about 5100 feet elevation. Its position in relation to other Book of Mormon centers, its size, its scenic beauty, and associated traditions have led to a degree of consensus among serious students of the Book of Mormon that it can be identified as the "waters of Mormon" (Mosiah 8:4-8, 30; Alma 5:3; Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, 1985, 176-77, 223-25).

In the last few years this correlation has been strengthened in the light of new information. Benitez and Samayoa (2000) first reported ruins of stone buildings at an underwater site they dubbed "Samabaj." The remains were some 17 meters beneath the surface near the south shore. Subsequently, further ruins in the same area of the lake, some at a deeper level, were found. With support from the [Leon] Reinhard Foundation, the Scripps Institute of Oceanography has now (spring, 2007) completed a high-resolution map of the entire lakebed using advanced technology. A series of submerged village ruins can be seen arranged around a major portion of the lake at multiple levels. Several pyramids and at least three stelae [stone pillars or monuments] have also been located.

The suggestion has been made that volcanic intrusions beneath the lake have at times forced the bed, and thus the water, to rise with catastrophic suddenness. Ceramics recovered by divers suggest that these ruins date in part to the Late Preclassic period (probably around the time of Christ—personal communications to Dr. Sorenson from J. E. Clark, L. Reinhart, and T. Rollins). The position of the ruins means of course that the lake level was once much lower than any level known in modern times, and that ecological circumstances in the Lake Atitlan basin were drastically different at that time.

A Book of Mormon correlation to this phenomenon is reported in Alma 21:1-2 and 3 Nephi 9:7. Around 90 BC a "great city" named Jerusalem was built by Lamanites and dissident Nephites not far from the city of Nephi. An aquatic feature adjacent to this Jerusalem was apparently part of the body of water called at a different point on its shore the "waters of Mormon" (Mosiah 18:30; Alma 21:1). Around AD 30, during the catastrophic destruction that took place among the Lehites at the time of the death of Jesus Christ in Palestine, this city of Jerusalem was suddenly overwhelmed by “waters . . . [that came] up in the stead” of the city (3 Nephi 9:7). The geographical correlation that I follow (and have done for the past 35 years, long before any subsurface ruins had been discovered) places the Book of Mormon city of Jerusalem on the southwest shore of these “waters of Mormon,” within a few miles of “Samabaj.”

The agreement between the flooding of Book of Mormon Jerusalem and the rise of the waters of Lake Atitlan over the Lake Atitlan ruins is striking. There is no evidence of any comparable submergence phenomenon elsewhere in Mesoamerica. This correspondence is thus not simply a minor parallel between text and archaeology but actually is support for the overall geographical correlation that places the land of Nephi in highland southern Guatemala.

3 Now the Lamanites of themselves were sufficiently hardened, but the Amalekites and the Amulonites were still harder; therefore they did cause the Lamanites that they should harden their hearts, that they should wax strong in wickedness and their abominations.

verse 3 “the Amalekites and the Amulonites were still harder” These Nephite dissenters seem to be unable to contain their hatred for the believing Nephites and for the truth, both of which they had betrayed.

4 And it came to pass that Aaron came to the city of Jerusalem, and first began to preach to the Amalekites. And he began to preach to them in their synagogues, for they had built synagogues after the order of the Nehors; for many of the Amalekites and the Amulonites were after the order of the Nehors.

verse 4 “synagogues after the order of the Nehors” It is interesting that the Amalekites and Amulonites and the Lamanites among whom they lived had not rejected religion. They had their own religion, by means of which they promulgated their apostate doctrines.

5 Therefore, as Aaron entered into one of their synagogues to preach unto the people, and as he was speaking unto them, behold there arose an Amalekite and began to contend with him, saying: What is that thou hast testified? Hast thou seen an angel? Why do not angels appear unto us? Behold are not this people as good as thy people?

6 Thou also sayest, except we repent we shall perish. How knowest thou the thought and intent of our hearts? How knowest thou that we have cause to repent? How knowest thou that we are not a righteous people? Behold, we have built sanctuaries, and we do assemble ourselves together to worship God. We do believe that God will save all men.

verse 6 “We do believe that God will save all men.” This is the same philosophy that was taught by Satan in the pre-existence (Moses 4:1) and by the Nephite apostate Nehor (Alma 1:4). One might well wonder why they thought it was necessary to build synagogues and sanctuaries and assemble themselves to worship if all men would be saved without any effort. Why bother? Isn't it fascinating to observe that apostates tend to maintain the “form of godliness”?

Note the Amalekite's (Amlicite's) questions in verses 5 and 6. Is it not true even today that false religious groups maintain an ostensibly open-minded and ecumenical attitude. Yet, this same accommodating and considerate attitude is often not extended to the messengers of the true gospel.

7 Now Aaron said unto him: Believest thou that the Son of God shall come to redeem mankind from their sins?

8 And the man said unto him: We do not believe that thou knowest any such thing. We do not believe in these foolish traditions. We do not believe that thou knowest of things to come, neither do we believe that thy fathers and also that our fathers did know concerning the things which they spake, of that which is to come.

verse 8 Those who do not possess the Spirit of God inevitably deny the reality of prophecy and revelation. Even many who professionally function as Bible scholars today do not acknowledge the possibility of biblical prophets' being able to accurately foretell events in the future. A related phenomenon is often seen wherein false religions insist on a closed canon and deny that ongoing revelation is a possibility.

9 Now Aaron began to open the scriptures unto them concerning the coming of Christ, and also concerning the resurrection of the dead, and that there could be no redemption for mankind save it were through the death and sufferings of Christ, and the atonement of his blood.

10 And it came to pass as he began to expound these things unto them they were angry with him, and began to mock him; and they would not hear the words which he spake.

11 Therefore, when he saw that they would not hear his words, he departed out of their synagogue, and came over to a village which was called Ani-Anti, and there he found Muloki preaching the word unto them; and also Ammah and his brethren. And they contended with many about the word.

verse 11 “there he found Muloki . . . and also Ammah and his brethren” Other than the four sons of Mosiah (Ammon, Aaron, Omner, and Himni), Muloki, and Ammah, the names of the others in the missionary company, if indeed there were any others, are not given in the text. As mentioned previously, we also are not given to know exactly how many there were. This verse implies that Ammah might have had some type of special relationship or association with others of the group.

12 And it came to pass that they saw that the people would harden their hearts, therefore they departed and came over into the land of Middoni. And they did preach the word unto many, and few believed on the words which they taught.

13 Nevertheless, Aaron and a certain number of his brethren were taken and cast into prison, and the remainder of them fled out of the land of Middoni unto the regions round about.

14 And those who were cast into prison suffered many things, and they were delivered by the hand of Lamoni and Ammon, and they were fed and clothed.

15 And they went forth again to declare the word, and thus they were delivered for the first time out of prison; and thus they had suffered.

16 And they went forth whithersoever they were led by the Spirit of the Lord, preaching the word of God in every synagogue of the Amalekites, or in every assembly of the Lamanites where they could be admitted.

17 And it came to pass that the Lord began to bless them, insomuch that they brought many to the knowledge of the truth; yea, they did convince many of their sins, and of the traditions of their fathers, which were not correct.

verse 17 “the traditions of their fathers, which were not correct” See the commentary for Alma 20:13. Any Lamanite accepting the truth at that time would have to disavow these firmly held “traditions of their fathers.” It is therefore obvious that he ran the risk of rejection and persecution from both family and friends.

For the remainder of this chapter we will return to the account of Ammon. More about Aaron and his brethren later.

18 And it came to pass that Ammon and Lamoni returned from the land of Middoni to the land of Ishmael, which was the land of their inheritance.

verse 18 Why would the land of Ishmael be referred to as “the land of their inheritance,” referring to both Ammon and Lamoni? See the commentary for Alma 17:19. We know that the land of Ishmael had been originally established by the sons of Ishmael, and doubtless Lamoni was a descendant of those sons of Ishmael. Ammon was a son of King Mosiah. Ammon’s great grandfather was Benjamin’s father, Mosiah (sometimes referred to as Mosiah I). This is the Mosiah who, as king over the Nephites in the land of Nephi, first led the Nephites out of the land of Nephi to the land of Zarahemla (see Omni 1:12). We might be inclined to assume that this elder Mosiah was a descendant of Nephi, though we don’t really have sufficient information about the early kings of the Nephites in the land of Nephi to make that conclusion. It seems unlikely that the senior Mosiah was a literal descendant of the sons of Ishmael. Thus, we may conclude that the land of Ishmael was at least the literal land of Lamoni's inheritance and very possibly the literal land of Ammon's inheritance.

19 And king Lamoni would not suffer that Ammon should serve him, or be his servant.

verse 19 It is apparent that the Lamanite people in the land of Ishmael had come to respect Ammon even more than they did their own king, Lamoni (see Alma 18:13). It is instructive to observe Lamoni's reaction to this reverence given to his friend Ammon. Was he jealous? Did he seem to resent Ammon's popularity? After all, he could have demanded that Ammon become his servant. Compare the account of King Saul's jealousy when David became more beloved of the people than he (1 Samuel 18:14-16, 28-29). Here is a profound concept: Those who are truly converted to Christ and his gospel are disinclined to feel envy and jealousy for others of God's children. They are not threatened by another's talents and abilities. They are only interested in seeing the kingdom go forth and benefit by the talents and gifts of all who are willing to consecrate their strengths and abilities. They are also interested in the spiritual and temporal welfare of each of the other members of the kingdom to the exclusion of their own welfare. They strive to live the two "greatest commandments"—to love their God and their fellow men. They lose their desire for worldly recognition and reward. As they do so, they are often viewed as being "more than a man" (Alma 18:2) to those whom they love and serve.

20 But he caused that there should be synagogues built in the land of Ishmael; and he caused that his people, or the people who were under his reign, should assemble themselves together.

21 And he did rejoice over them, and he did teach them many things. And he did also declare unto them that they were a people who were under him, and that they were a free people, that they were free from the oppressions of the king, his father; for that his father had granted unto him that he might reign over the people who were in the land of Ishmael, and in all the land round about.

verse 21 "they were free from the oppressions of the king, his father" Prior to the encounter on the road to Middoni, apparently Lamoni ruled his people in the land of Ishmael under governance his father. As a result of Ammon's sparing the life of the king, Lamoni was given sovereign authority over his people by his father (see Alma 20:26).

22 And he also declared unto them that they might have the liberty of worshiping the Lord their God according to their desires, in whatsoever place they were in, if it were in the land which was under the reign of king Lamoni.

verse 22 Obviously Lamoni allowed complete freedom of religious expression to all under his direct rule.

23 And Ammon did preach unto the people of king Lamoni; and it came to pass that he did teach them all things concerning things pertaining to righteousness. And he did exhort them daily, with all diligence; and they gave heed unto his word, and they were zealous for keeping the commandments of God.

Alma Chapter 22

Scripture Mastery

Alma 22 Aaron and the conversion of the father of Lamoni who was king over all the land

1 Now, as Ammon was thus teaching the people of Lamoni continually, we will return to the account of Aaron and his brethren; for after he departed from the land of Middoni he was led by the Spirit to the land of Nephi, even to the house of the king which was over all the land save it were the land of Ishmael; and he was the father of Lamoni.

2 And it came to pass that he went in unto him into the king's palace, with his brethren, and bowed himself before the king, and said unto him: Behold, O king, we are the brethren of Ammon, whom thou hast delivered out of prison.

verse 2 The phrase “whom thou hast delivered out of prison” modifies, of course, “we . . . the brethren” and not Ammon.

3 And now, O king, if thou wilt spare our lives, we will be thy servants. And the king said unto them: Arise, for I will grant unto you your lives, and I will not suffer that ye shall be my servants; but I will insist that ye shall administer unto me; for I have been somewhat troubled in mind because of the generosity and the greatness of the words of thy brother Ammon; and I desire to know the cause why he has not come up out of Middoni with thee.

verse 3 “we will be thy servants” This willingness to serve is an earmark of the followers of Jesus Christ. See the commentary for Alma 17:25.

“I will not suffer that ye shall be my servants; but I will insist that ye shall administer unto me” Obviously, the heart of Lamoni's father had been softened and prepared since his initial encounter with Ammon and his son Lamoni. Webster's 1828 Dictionary defines the word administer as “to contribute; to bring aid or supplies; to add something; as, a shade administers to our comfort.” To administer, in this context, would also include to teach.

“I have been somewhat troubled in mind because of the generosity and the greatness of the words of thy brother Ammon” Obviously the king is still wondering and marveling over the incident on the road to Middoni when Ammon gained a clear advantage over him and could easily have killed him, yet he only asked for favors for Lamoni, the king's son, and for Ammon's brethren (Alma 20:20-24). He asked for nothing for himself, though clearly he was in a position to do so.

4 And Aaron said unto the king: Behold, the Spirit of the Lord has called him another way; he has gone to the land of Ishmael, to teach the people of Lamoni.

5 Now the king said unto them: What is this that ye have said concerning the Spirit of the Lord? Behold, this is the thing which doth trouble me.

verse 5 “this is the thing which doth trouble me” It seems likely that when Ammon and Lamoni encountered the old king on the road to the land of Middoni, that Lamoni’s account of his own conversion included reference to the Spirit of God (Alma 20:12), a concept with which the king was completely unfamiliar. This had troubled him, or caused him to wonder and seek for more knowledge, as the Spirit is often inclined to do to any spiritually responsive person.

6 And also, what is this that Ammon said—If ye will repent ye shall be saved, and if ye will not repent, ye shall be cast off at the last day?

verse 6 We do have record of Ammon’s making reference to the concept of salvation and damnation when Ammon and Lamoni encountered the king on the road to Middoni (Alma 20:17-18). We also have record of Ammon’s warning the king he should not kill his son Lamoni lest he lose his soul. We do not, however have record of Ammon’s specific warning to the king that if he did not repent he would be cast off. Obviously, though, the record we do have is an edited version of all that happened.

The “last day” is a term for the formal day of judgment.

The reader may wish to notice the example of antithetic parallelism contained in this verse (see the supplemental article, The Hebrew Language and the Book of Mormon):

If ye repent ye shall be saved, and if ye will not repent, ye shall be cast off at the last day

7 And Aaron answered him and said unto him: Believest thou that there is a God? And the king said: I know that the Amalekites say that there is a God, and I have granted unto them that they should build sanctuaries, that they may assemble themselves together to worship him. And if now thou sayest there is a God, behold I will believe.

verse 7 It should not be surprising to learn that the Amalekites, in a pattern characteristic of apostate religion, continued to worship God in their own way. They maintained the “form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof” (JS-H 1:19).

While the king here implies that he has not previously believed in God, we will learn that he does in fact believe in a “Great Spirit” according to Lamanite tradition (verse 9-11).

8 And now when Aaron heard this, his heart began to rejoice, and he said: Behold, assuredly as thou livest, O king, there is a God.

verse 8 In this setting Aaron's testimony was undoubtedly most poignant and powerful.

9 And the king said: Is God that Great Spirit that brought our fathers out of the land of Jerusalem?

10 And Aaron said unto him: Yea, he is that Great Spirit, and he created all things both in heaven and in earth. Believest thou this?

verse 10 Again, we may ask whether or not Aaron is misleading the king by agreeing that God is that "Great Spirit." At the time of this episode, Jesus Christ or Jehovah had not yet been resurrected and was, in fact, "a Great Spirit."

11 And he said: Yea, I believe that the Great Spirit created all things, and I desire that ye should tell me concerning all these things, and I will believe thy words.

12 And it came to pass that when Aaron saw that the king would believe his words, he began from the creation of Adam, reading the scriptures unto the king—how Gd created man after his own image, and that God gave him commandments, and that because of transgression, man had fallen.

verse 12 "he began from the creation of Adam, reading the scriptures unto the king" Again, we are reminded that Ammon and his fellow missionaries carried with them copies of those scriptures found on the brass plates of Laban.

13 And Aaron did expound unto him the scriptures from the creation of Adam, laying the fall of man before him, and their carnal state and also the plan of redemption, which was prepared from the foundation of the world, through Christ, for all whosoever would believe on his name.

verse 13 "laying the fall of man before him, and their carnal state" A careful study of the Book of Mormon text, infrequently reveals a grammatical inconsistency. If the word "man" in the first sentence of this verse is used in its singular sense, then the phrase ought to read "laying the fall of man before him, and his carnal state. If a plural meaning was intended, then this verse is correct, but the next verse should begin: "And since man had fallen they could not merit anything of themselves."

14 And since man had fallen he could not merit anything of himself; but the sufferings and death of Christ atone for their sins, through faith and repentance, and so forth; and that he breaketh the bands of death, that the grave shall have no victory, and that the sting of death should be swallowed up in the hopes of glory; and Aaron did expound all these things unto the king.

verses 12-14 Aaron used the same "missionary discussions or lessons" in teaching the king that his brother Ammon had used with the king's son Lamoni. That is he explained the creation of the earth, the fall of Adam, and the atonement of Jesus Christ (see Alma 18:36-39).

verse 14 Here in one verse is an eloquent explanation of the doctrines of the fall and the atonement. Keep in mind the dual meaning of the fall of man. It refers to the fall of Adam and the fall of each individual man. Here in this verse, the latter meaning is intended. Every man save one, who has lived on the earth, has sinned. Every man has violated the law of justice and is therefore unqualified, on his own merits, to return to God's presence. He may repent, but without help his repentance cannot fully satisfy the demands of the law. He is inextricably bound by the "bands of death." He is in a hopeless state. However, help is available. Through the atoning process, Christ was enabled to "make up the difference" between what the law demands and what man can do for himself. Our "works" are insufficient. Only through the grace of Christ—his willingness to bail us out when we are not fully deserving of his help—are we exalted. What must we do to qualify? We must believe on his name, repent constantly of our sins, join his church, accept his doctrine, and strive to live the commandments that are a vital part of his doctrine. Then we must endure to the end.

"the grave shall have no victory" This terminology—that of Christ's having "victory" over the grave—likely originated with the prophet Isaiah (Isaiah 25:8). If the grave were victorious, then man would never be resurrected, but would remain a spirit forever.

15 And it came to pass that after Aaron had expounded these things unto him, the king said: What shall I do that I may have this eternal life of which thou hast spoken? Yea, what shall I do that I may be born of God, having this wicked spirit rooted out of my breast, and receive his Spirit, that I may be filled with joy, that I may not be cast off at the last day? Behold, said he, I will give up all that I possess, yea, I will forsake my kingdom, that I may receive this great joy.

verse 15 In this verse the king asks a vital question then answers it himself! The question: "What shall I do that I may be born of God?" The answer: Forsake all things of the world and concentrate instead on matters of the eternities.

"having this wicked spirit rooted out of my breast" To root out is to eradicate; to extirpate; to remove; to exterminate.

"I will give up all that I possess, yea, I will forsake my kingdom" Do you recall the important concept or doctrine known as the "doctrine of Christ"? Take a few minutes and review this concept in the introductory comments for 2 Nephi 31. One of the important principles of this doctrine is desiring "with full purpose of heart . . . with real intent" to live in the celestial kingdom. See also the commentary for 2 Nephi 31:13. What a powerful lesson we can learn from the story of the conversion of Lamoni's father! Previously the king had been willing to give up half of his kingdom to Ammon to save his physical life (Alma 20:23). Now that he understands the concept of eternal life, he is willing to give up all his kingdom and all his possessions to obtain it. We will later learn that he was also willing to give away all his sins (verse 18). How often are our commitments to spiritual things cautious, tentative, measured, half-hearted, and wavering? Consequently, the blessings received by these half-committed individuals are only a shadow of what they might have been. Contrast this experience of Aaron's with the Savior's experience when he was approached by the rich young ruler (Luke 18:18-30).

16 But Aaron said unto him: If thou desirest this thing, if thou wilt bow down before God, yea, if thou wilt repent of all thy sins, and will bow down before God, and call on his name in faith, believing that ye shall receive, then shalt thou receive the hope which thou desirest.

verse 16 Here Aaron outlines the steps that the king must take in order to obtain a testimony of God and a testimony of the gospel.

There is a touch of irony in Aaron's counsel to the king. Undoubtedly the king has been bowed down to on numerous occasions but has never had to bow down to anyone.

"call upon his name in faith" This is a most specific command, and there is nothing vague about it. It means both to pray to him with the determined attitude to obey him.

"then shalt thou receive the hope which thou desirest" The hope of eternal life is a gift of the Spirit. It may be granted only by the Spirit through personal revelation, and it is given only to those who are deserving of it.

17 And it came to pass that when Aaron had said these words, the king did bow down before the Lord, upon his knees; yea, even he did prostrate himself upon the earth, and cried mightily, saying:

18 O God, Aaron hath told me that there is a God; and if there is a God, and if thou art God, wilt thou make thyself known unto me, and I will give away all my sins to know thee, and that I may be raised from the dead, and be saved at the last day. And now when the king had said these words, he was struck as if he were dead.

verse 18 Here is an example of a sincere prayer offered by an agnostic. He is praying to someone of whose existence he is not certain. He manifests the essential motivation which all who would be exalted must attain. They must want to be exalted so badly that they are willing to forsake all their sins to achieve it. To "give away all [one's] sins" is to take upon oneself a "broken heart and contrite spirit." For a discussion of this important concept, see the commentary for 3 Nephi 9:20.

"he was struck as if he were dead" For a discussion of this peculiar spiritual trance, see the commentaries for Alma 19:8 and Alma 19:34.

19 And it came to pass that his servants ran and told the queen all that had happened unto the king. And she came in unto the king; and when she saw him lay as if he were dead, and also Aaron and his brethren standing as though they had been the cause of his fall, she was angry with them, and commanded that her servants, or the servants of the king, should take them and slay them.

20 Now the servants had seen the cause of the king's fall, therefore they durst not lay their hands on Aaron and his brethren; and they pled with the queen saying: Why commandest thou that we should slay these men, when behold one of them is mightier than us all? Therefore we shall fall before them.

21 Now when the queen saw the fear of the servants she also began to fear exceedingly, lest there should some evil come upon her. And she commanded her servants that they should go and call the people, that they might slay Aaron and his brethren.

22 Now when Aaron saw the determination of the queen, he, also knowing the hardness of the hearts of the people, feared lest that a multitude should assemble themselves together, and there should be a great contention and a disturbance among them; therefore he put forth his hand and raised the king from the earth, and said unto him: Stand. And he stood upon his feet, receiving his strength.

verse 22 Again, this episode is symbolic of the death of the natural man and spiritual rebirth. The Spirit of God was the agent through which these things were accomplished.

23 Now this was done in the presence of the queen and many of the servants. And when they saw it they greatly marveled, and began to fear. And the king stood forth, and began to minister unto them. And he did minister unto them, insomuch that his whole household were converted unto the Lord.

24 Now there was a multitude gathered together because of the commandment of the queen, and there began to be great murmurings among them because of Aaron and his brethren.

verse 24 "Murmurings" are threats and complaints.

25 But the king stood forth among them and administered unto them. And they were pacified towards Aaron and those who were with him.

26 And it came to pass that when the king saw that the people were pacified, he caused that Aaron and his brethren should stand forth in the midst of the multitude, and that they should preach the word unto them.

verses 27-34 In these verses the prophet Mormon gives an overview of the geography of the lands of the Book of Mormon. While it is not possible to be certain of the exact location of the lands in absolute terms, it is instructive to learn of their relative locations.

John L. Sorenson, one of the foremost students on the subject, identified over 600 passages relevant to geography (Mormon's Codex: An Ancient American Book, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2013, 17, 119. For an annotated listing of every passage Sorenson deemed geographically relevant, see Sorenson, Geography of Book of Mormon Events, 215–315). Cross-referencing Sorenson's list with that of John E. Clark (John E. Clark, "A Key for Evaluating Nephite Geography," Review of Books on the Book of Mormon 1, 1989: 20–70; updated as John E. Clark, "Revisiting 'A Key for Evaluating Book of Mormon Geographies,'" Mormon Studies Review 23, no. 1, 2011: 13–43), Randall Spackman determined that there are upwards of 1000 passages of potential geographic significance (Randall P. Spackman, "Interpreting Book of Mormon Geography," FARMS Review 15, no. 1, 2003: 29).

Both Sorenson and Clark used hundreds of these passages to develop an internal reconstruction of Book of Mormon geography (Spackman, "Interpreting Book of Mormon Geography," 26–27, counts 637–725 references used by Sorenson and 318 by Clark.). They mapped out the general lay of the land, and the relationship between different lands and cities without tying it to any real-world location.

Theirs are two among many internal maps which, while having some differences, demonstrate the general geographic consistency found throughout the Book of Mormon (Compare Sorenson, Mormon's Map, inside front cover, with Clark, "Revisiting, 'A Key,'" 38, fig. 6; also see Sorenson, Geography of Book of Mormon Events, 49–50, 80, 103, 104, 121, 123, 125, 148, 173, 190, 202 for several other internal reconstructions.). A digital, interactive internal map is currently (2016) under development by a team led by Tyler Griffin, Taylor Halverson, and Seth Holladay, which is also broadly consistent with these other maps.

Amidst the hundreds of passages, Alma 22:27–34 is widely understood to be the most comprehensive statement available on the configuration of Book of Mormon lands. Sorenson explained: "The nearest thing to a systematic explanation of Mormon's geographical picture is given in Alma 22:27–34. In the course of relating an incident involving Nephite missionaries and the great king over the Lamanites, Mormon inserted a 570-word aside that summarized major features of the land southward. He must have considered that treatment full and clear enough for his purposes, because he never returned to the topic (Sorenson, Mormon's Map, 9).

Due to this, Alma 22:27–34 is highly discussed by Book of Mormon geographers. Mormon gives readers over a dozen points of geographical information, including: a land northward, a land southward, a small neck of land, between the north and the south, a sea along the western coast, a sea along the eastern coast, the land of first inheritance in the west of the land of Nephi by the seashore, Land of Nephi to the south of Zarahemla, a narrow strip of wilderness running east-west from sea-to-sea divides the lands of Nephi and Zarahemla, Manti in the south of the land of Zarahemla near the narrow strip of wilderness, head of the river Sidon by Manti in or near the narrow strip of wilderness, Bountiful is the northernmost part of the land southward, Bountiful bordered Desolation which was in the land northward, at least part of the boundary between Bountiful and Desolation was measured as 1.5 days travel (There is some disagreement as to what this may actually mean. For some of the discussion, see Clark, "Revisiting 'A Key'," 18; Sorenson, Mormon's Codex, 122–123; Allen and Allen, Exploring the Lands, 411–413; Neville, Moroni's America, 57–59; John L. Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: FARMS, 1985, 17; F. Richard Hauck, Deciphering the Geography of the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 1988, 34–40; Matthew Roper, "Travel across the 'Narrow Neck of Land,'" Insights: A Window on the Ancient World 20, no. 5, 2000: 2; John L. Sorenson, "A Day and a Half's Journey for a Nephite," in Reexploring, 187–188), the entire land southward (both the land of Zarahemla and the land of Nephi) was almost completely surrounded by water, and the Nephites controlled the northern part of the land southward (Manti, Zarahemla, and Bountiful) while the Lamanites controlled the southern part of the land southward.

What lay farther to the north, beyond Desolation, or farther to the south, past the land of Nephi, is left unsaid. Peoples of Lehiite descent likely migrated in both directions during and after Book of Mormon times. As a result, descendants of Lehi may be found throughout the Americas (For evidence of travel and trade to and from different regions of the Americas, see John L. Sorenson, "Mesoamericans in Pre-Spanish South America," in Reexploring the Book of Mormon: A Decade of New Research, ed. John W. Welch, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1992, 215–217; John L. Sorenson, "Mesoamericans in Pre-Columbian North America," in Reexploring, 218–220), even though the events in the Book of Mormon played out in a more limited sphere (On the limited size of Book of Mormon lands, see Sorenson, Mormon's Map, 55–81).

After disrupting the narrative with this "geography word map," as archaeologist V. Garth Norman has called it (Norman, Book of Mormon–Mesoamerican Geography, 5). Mormon said, "And now I, after having said this, return again to the account of Ammon and Aaron, Omner and Himni, and their brethren" (Alma 22:35). It is clear from this that Mormon knew he had interrupted the narrative flow. Given the limited space, and careful way Mormon crafted his text, he must have had good reasons for inserting these details, along with the hundreds of other references to geography found throughout the text.

One likely reason is that Mormon, who was both a historian and military leader, knew how important geography is to understanding historical events, especially military history. All the many hundreds of geographic details scattered throughout the text can get confusing. There had already begun to be some movements back and forth between the different lands: battles, dissensions, and migrations. Mormon was aware that there were about to be several more, including his detailed accounts of troop movements and battle strategies during the great fourteen years of war in Alma 43–62 (74 to 60 BC).

Amidst this dizzying array of details, the text's demonstrable geographic consistency shines forth as a powerful witness to the sophistication and complexity of the Book of Mormon (See John L. Sorenson, "How Could Joseph Smith Write So Accurately about Ancient American Civilization?" in Echoes and Evidences of the Book of Mormon, ed. Donald W. Parry, Daniel C. Peterson, and John W. Welch, Provo, UT: 2002, 267–269). Upon careful inspection, Grant Hardy, a professor of history, has found, "It requires considerable patience to work out all the details of chronology, geography, genealogy, and source records, but the Book of Mormon is remarkably consistent on all of this (Grant Hardy, Understanding the Book of Mormon: A Reader's Guide, New York: Oxford University Press, 2010, 6–7). From this observation, Hardy concluded: "The complexity is such that one would assume the author worked from charts and maps, though Joseph Smith's wife—the person who had the longest and closest view of the production of the text—explicitly denied that he had written something out beforehand that he either had memorized or consulted as he translated (Hardy, Understanding the Book of Mormon, 7). On the production process according to Emma and other eye-witnesses, see Neal Rappleye, "'Idle and Slothful Strange Stories': Book of Mormon Origins and the Historical Record," Interpreter: A Journal of Mormon Scripture 20, 2016: 29–32; Michael Hubbard Mackay and Gerrit J. Dirkmaat, "Firsthand Witness Accounts of the Translation Process," in The Coming Forth of the Book of Mormon: A Marvelous Work and a Wonder, ed. Dennis L. Largey, Andrew H. Peterson, "Editor's Introduction—Not So Easily Dismissed: Some Facts for Which Counter Explanations of the Book of Mormon Will Need to Account," FARMS Review 17, no. 2, 2005: xi–xxiv, xxx–xxxii. All 202 accounts from eye-witnesses and others are included in John W. Welch, "The Miraculous Translation of the Book of Mormon," in Opening the Heavens: Accounts of Divine Manifestations, 1820–1844, ed. John W. Welch, Provo, UT: BYU Studies, 2005, 118–213.

Mormon probably knew how confusing all the many details were getting. He realized that without some kind of broader picture of Nephite lands, ensuing narratives about missionary travels, commercial relationships, political divisions, and prophetic fulfillments would be difficult, if not impossible, to follow. As V. Garth Norman noted, “Mormon gave very specific geographic details at times . . . that could have no other purpose than to paint the landscape where these events occurred” (Norman, Book of Mormon—Mesoamerican Geography, iix).

All this geographical information not only adds another layer of complexity, but also strengthens the sense that the text describes a true historical reality. As John L. Sorenson pointed out in 2002, “Inconsistencies that might be expected of a fraudulent work . . . are notably absent in the Book of Mormon” (Sorenson, “How Could Joseph Smith Write So Accurately,” 267. Also, see John L. Sorenson, Images of Ancient America: Visualizing Book of Mormon Life, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1998, 188). John Sorenson concluded: “The consistency cannot be accounted for in terms of Joseph Smith, for his translation of the volume was dictated at such a pace and published with so little revision of content that he could not have accurately crafted the picture of spatial relations involved in the complex story. On the other hand, “It seems unlikely that this consistency could have been obtained unless the true author(s) had directly experienced some particular real-world setting, not an imaginary place” (Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex, 17, cf. p. 119: “This consistency of information indicates that the authors had firsthand experience of a specific physical scene.” He also made this same point in Sorenson, Images of Ancient America, 188: “The internal consistency of the geographical statements in the Book of Mormon . . . must be accounted for by assuming the primary author . . . had a definite mental map in mind.”).

As a youthful traveler, long-time military leader, and trusted steward over a library of sacred records, Mormon certainly had intimate and direct experience with the landscape and information about it. Despite the destructions reported in 3 Nephi 8–9, he knew and recognized many of the lands, rivers, valleys, mountains, waters, and seas mentioned in his historical sources. Having worked on this record with his father, Moroni also went out of his way to testify that their record is true and that they “lie not” (Moroni 10:26).

This was a land that Mormon knew, and no doubt a land that he loved, and a land which he was pained to see swept away in so much warfare, sin, and violence (Mormon 2:11–15). Here in Alma 22:27–34, and in the many other geographic details running throughout, Mormon and the other authors give today’s readers accurate glimpses of a promised land tragically lost.

To assist the reader in placing the hypothetical Book of Mormon maps into a real-world setting, please see the illustration “the Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands.” See also the Notes on the Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands.

27 And it came to pass that the king sent a proclamation throughout all the land, amongst all his people who were in all his land, who were in all the regions round about, which was bordering even to the sea, on the east and on the west, and which was divided from the land of Zarahemla by a narrow strip of wilderness, which ran from the sea east even to the sea west, and round about on the borders of the seashore, and the borders of the wilderness which was on the north by the land of Zarahemla, through the borders of Manti, by the head of the river Sidon, running from the east towards the west—and thus were the Lamanites and the Nephites divided.

verse 27 The phrase “running from the east towards the west” refers to the narrow strip of wilderness and not to the river Sidon. This wilderness is usually referred to in the Book of Mormon text as “the wilderness.” This is the only time it is referred to as the “narrow strip of wilderness.” In what way was this dividing line “narrow”? Presumably it is narrow as one might view it on a map. The narrow strip of wilderness is described as running not only from “the sea east even to the sea west,” but also “round about on the borders of the seashore.” This apparently implies that rather than being simply a narrow band of wilderness, this area fans out on the seashores as illustrated on the Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands.

Considerable effort has been expended in trying to correlate the lands of the Book of Mormon with the geography of the Americas and therefore attempt to locate a specific site that is most compatible with the lands of the Book of Mormon. At the time of this writing, the most widely accepted work is that of John Sorenson and his “limited geography” theory (John L. Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1990).

One objection to brother Sorenson’s work stems from the fact that the specific land he designates as Book of Mormon land is situated along a northwest / southeast axis rather than north / south as described in the Book of Mormon. Dr. Sorenson’s explanation of this “problem” may be capsulized as follows (please refer to the map Book of Mormon Lands, a Proposed Setting): Specific compass directions are obviously a problem as we deal with Dr. Sorenson’s proposed Central American site for the Book of Mormon. For example, as one proceeds from the area of Zarahemla through the narrow neck of land, one actually travels mostly to the west and northwest whereas the Book of Mormon text refers to that direction as “northward.” The solution is probably found in the Hebrew convention of naming directions. The Israelites of Palestine derived directions as though standing with their backs to the Mediterranean Sea, facing the desert to the east. “Yam” (“sea”) meant “seaward” or “west,” for the Mediterranean lay in that direction, while “qedem” (“fore” or “front”) meant “straight ahead” or “east.” Then “Yamin” (“right hand”) meant “south,” while “shemol” (“left hand”) denoted “north.” In fact, we don’t know what Laman, Lemuel, Sam, and Nephi did call their directions since the first terms for directions appear only hundreds of years after their first landing (Mosiah 7:5; 9:14). By the same convention as used in ancient Palestine, Lehi’s party may have referred to directions based on the seashore which runs northwest-to-southeast. Thus, by that convention, their directions would be forty-five or more degrees off the actual compass directions. What would they call “qedem,” intending eastward, would actually mean northeast or even almost north and so on. It is interesting that in the Mayan languages of Mesoamerica, “south” meant “on the right hand” and north “on the left,” corresponding to the Hebrew convention. Also in the ancient Mayan culture, the Gulf of Mexico was the “east sea” while the Pacific Ocean is the “west sea.”

Other interesting observations have recently been reported. If nothing else, these illustrate the relativism of directions in the ancient Near East. For example, The Egyptians oriented themselves by facing south, toward the source of the Nile. Not only were the Book of Mormon plates written according to the “learning of the Jews” but also in the “language of the Egyptians.” Thus, one of the terms for “south” (in Egyptian) is the term for “face,” and the word for “north” is probably related to a word which means “back of the head.” The word for east is the same as for left, and west is the same word as right (William J. Hamblin, “Directions in Hebrew, Egyptian, and Nephite Language,” Reexploring the Book of Mormon, 183-85).

28 Now, the more idle part of the Lamanites lived in the wilderness, and dwelt in tents; and they were spread through the wilderness on the west, in the land of Nephi; yea, and also on the west of the land of Zarahemla, in the borders by the seashore, and on the west in the land of Nephi, in the place of their fathers’ first inheritance, and thus bordering along by the seashore.

verse 28 “on the west of the land of Zarahemla, in the borders by the seashore” Just a reminder that the word borders means mountains. In the illustration titled “Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands” notice the way the narrow strip of wilderness between the Land of Nephi and the Land of Zarahemla fans out toward the west coast. I also fans out on the east, as well, but to a lesser extent (see verse 29).

“the place of their fathers’ first inheritance” This refers to the place of disembarkation and the original settlement of father Lehi’s family in about 589 BC.

Brother Hugh Nibley has added to our knowledge of the concept of a land of inheritance:

Eduard Meyer says that all [Israel’s] power and authority went back originally to the first land-allotments made among the leaders of the migratory host [tribes of Israel led in the wilderness by Moses and later Joshua] when they settled down in their land of promise. Regardless of wealth of influence or ability, no one could belong to the old aristocracy who did not still possess “the land of his inheritance.” This institution—or attitude—plays a remarkably conspicuous role in the Book of Mormon. Not only does Lehi leave “the land of his inheritance” (1 Nephi 2:4) but whenever his people wish to establish a new society they first of all make sure to allot and define the lands of their inheritance, which first allotment is regarded as inalienable. No matter where a group or family move to in later times, the first land allotted to them is always regarded as “the land of their inheritance,” thus Alma 22:28; 54:12-13; Ether 7:16—in these cases the expression “land of first inheritance” is used (Mormon 2:27-28; 1 Nephi 13:15; Alma 35:9, 14; 43:12; Jacob 3:4; Alma 62:42; Mormon 3:17). This is a powerful argument for the authenticity of the Book of Mormon both because the existence of such a system is largely the discovery of modern research and because it is set forth in the Book of Mormon very distinctly and yet quite casually (Approach to the Book of Mormon, 100).

29 And also there were many Lamanites on the east by the seashore, whither the Nephites had driven them. And thus the Nephites were nearly surrounded by the Lamanites; nevertheless the Nephites had taken possession of all the northern parts of the land bordering on the wilderness, at the head of the river Sidon, from the east to the west, round about on the wilderness side; on the north, even until they came to the land which they called Bountiful.

verse 29 Whither means “to what place?” Whithersoever has the same meaning.

“thus the Nephites were nearly surrounded by the Lamanites” Because there were wilderness areas inhabited by Lamanites both to the east and west of Zarahemla, the Nephites were indeed nearly surrounded by Lamanites. See the Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands.

30 And it bordered upon the land which they called Desolation, it being so far northward that it came into the land which had been peopled and been destroyed, of whose bones we have spoken, which was discovered by the people of Zarahemla, it being the place of their first landing.

verse 30 “it bordered upon the land which they called Desolation” “It,” here, refers to the land Bountiful.

“Desolation” This land was so named not because it was geologically desolate, but because it had become uninhabited as a result of the great Jaredite civil war.

“it being the place of their first landing” Here we learn that the land of Desolation, probably along its eastern coast, was the disembarkation site of the people of Zarahemla or the Mulekites (see also Helaman 6:10). Apparently, they did not settle in the north but traveled southward into the Land of Zarahemla where they were eventually found by the Nephites (Omni 1:14).

31 And they came from there up into the south wilderness. Thus the land on the northward was called Desolation, and the land on the southward was called Bountiful, it being the wilderness which is filled with all manner of wild animals of every kind, a part of which had come from the land northward for food.

verse 31 “they came from there up into the south wilderness” The word “they” refers to the Mulekites. From their disembarkation site, they migrated south, through the narrow neck of land, into the land to be later called the Land of Zarahemla.

32 And now, it was only the distance of a day and a half's journey for a Nephite, on the line Bountiful and the land Desolation, from the east to the west sea; and thus the land of Nephi and the land of Zarahemla were nearly surrounded by water, there being a small neck of land between the land northward and the land southward.

verse 32 “it was only the distance of a day and a half's journey for a Nephite, on the line Bountiful and the land Desolation, from the east to the west sea” The “narrow neck of land” is an important geographical feature of the Book of Mormon. There has been considerable speculation as to exactly how wide the land is at its narrow neck. Was it in fact sufficiently narrow that a Nephite, by walking or running, could cross it, from the sea on the east to the sea on the west, in thirty-six hours? There is some ambiguity in this phrase from verse 32. What, for example, exactly is “the line Bountiful and the land Desolation.” We might assume that it is the border between the land Bountiful in the south and Desolation in the north. Also, between exactly which two points is our hypothetical Nephite required to travel during this day and a half? The phrase does not say “from the east sea to the west sea.” Rather, it says “from the east to the west sea.” Let us consider a few facts that might be stirred into the speculation equation here.

1. First, one episode in the Book of Mormon story suggests that one might cross through the narrow neck and never realize that you are in, in fact, a narrow neck of land. At one point, when Limhi and his people were languishing in bondage in the land of Nephi, Limhi dispatched a group of men to find Zarahemla. In attempting to do so, they passed through the narrow neck without realizing they had done so. They assumed they were still on the route between the land of Nephi and Zarahemla (Mosiah 21:25-28). This suggests that the narrow neck was sufficiently wide that it was not immediately, visually obvious how narrow it was.

2. Second, it is apparent that a well-conditioned human can travel considerable distances on foot in thirty-six hours. Dr. John Sorenson has reported instances of men traveling up to five hundred miles in six days, and even up to 161 miles in twenty-four hours! (“A Day and a Half's Journey for a Nephite,” Reexploring the Book of Mormon, 187-88).

3. Finally, keep in mind that the distance across the narrow neck might be wider than the “day and a half's” distance, since we cannot be certain that the starting point on the east was at the sea. The journey might have begun some distance inland. See also the commentary for Helaman 4:7.

33 And it came to pass that the Nephites had inhabited the land Bountiful, even from the east unto the west sea, and thus the Nephites in their wisdom, with their guards and their armies, had hemmed in the Lamanites on the south, that thereby they should have no more possession on the north, that they might not overrun the land northward.

verse 33 “from the east unto the west sea” Here, again, is that same expression as expressed in the previous verse. Apparently, the borders of the land Bountiful extend “from the east unto the west sea.” This suggests that the eastern border of Bountiful was inland from the east sea coast. Also, could it have been this distance (from Bountiful’s eastern border to the west sea) that was a day and a half’s journey for a Nephite?

34 Therefore the Lamanites could have no more possessions only in the land of Nephi, and the wilderness round about. Now this was wisdom in the Nephites— as the Lamanites were an enemy to them, they would not suffer their afflictions on every hand, and also that they might have a country whither they might flee, according to their desires.

verses 33-34 Obviously, the Nephites did not want to be completely surrounded by their enemies for military and political reasons. Thus, the Nephite land Bountiful was fortified and did extend to cover all possible routes from the south (land of Zarahemla) to north (land of Desolation).

35 And now I, after having said this, return again to the account of Ammon and Aaron, Omner and Himni, and their brethren.

verse 35 We are reminded that the author or first person in these chapters is the prophet Mormon.

Alma Chapter 23

verse 1-3 The story of the king's conversion illustrates what great things can happen when the truth is first accepted by a nation's ruler. It is, of course, usually the poor and humble of the earth who embrace the gospel first.

1 Behold, now it came to pass that the king of the Lamanites sent a proclamation among all his people, that they should not lay their hands on Ammon, or Aaron, or Omner, or Himni, nor either of their brethren who should go forth preaching the word of God, in whatsoever place they should be, in any part of their land.

verse 1 "nor either of their brethren" This verse implies that only two missionaries accompanied the four sons of Mosiah on their mission. We learned previously that "a small number" accompanied them (Mosiah 28:1). If there were only two, then they were Muloki and Ammah (Alma 20:2).

The possessive pronoun in "their land" refers, of course, to "all his [the king's] people" and not the missionaries. The several pronouns in the next verse are easily sorted out.

2 Yea, he sent a decree among them, that they should not lay their hands on them to bind them, or to cast them into prison; neither should they spit upon them, nor smite them, nor cast them out of their synagogues, nor scourge them; neither should they cast stones at them, but that they should have free access to their houses, and also their temples, and their sanctuaries.

3 And thus they might go forth and preach the word according to their desires, for the king had been converted unto the Lord, and all his household; therefore he sent his proclamation throughout the land unto his people, that the word of God might have no obstruction, but that it might go forth throughout all the land, that his people might be convinced concerning the wicked traditions of their fathers, and that they might be convinced that they were all brethren, and that they ought not to murder, nor to plunder, nor to steal, nor to commit adultery, nor to commit any manner of wickedness.

verse 3 "the wicked traditions of their fathers" See the commentary for Alma 20:13.

4 And now it came to pass that when the king had sent forth this proclamation, that Aaron and his brethren went forth from city to city, and from one house of worship to another, establishing churches, and consecrating priests and teachers throughout the land among the Lamanites, to preach and to teach the word of God among them; and thus they began to have great success.

verse 4 The missionaries went about “establishing churches, and consecrating priests and teachers.” In other words, they were establishing and organizing new congregations of believers.

5 And thousands were brought to the knowledge of the Lord, yea, thousands were brought to believe in the traditions of the Nephites; and they were taught the records and prophecies which were handed down even to the present time.

verse 5 The “traditions of the Nephites” are reviewed in the commentary for Enos 1:14. Briefly they included the belief that father Lehi was brought out of Jerusalem, led through the wilderness, and brought to a choice and promised land—all by the hand of God. This land could be possessed only by those who keep the “commandments of God” which included the law of Moses (Alma 9:8- 14). The Nephite “traditions” included the concept that the birthright was rightly bestowed by Lehi upon Nephi rather than upon his eldest son, Laman. Also, contained in these traditions was a belief in the gospel or doctrine of Jesus Christ including a belief in his future mortal advent, atonement, and resurrection (Mosiah 25:12).

“the records and prophecies which were handed down even to the present time” Keep in mind that Mormon is the author here. The “present time” refers to his day. These “records and prophecies” included not only the brass plates of Laban but also the teachings and prophecies of the great Book of Mormon prophets Lehi, Nephi, Jacob, Abinadi, and Benjamin. Whether or not they carried with them the prophecies of these Book of Mormon prophets in written form is not known. Certainly, all of these scriptures were taught and well known among the believing Book of Mormon peoples.

6 And as sure as the Lord liveth, so sure as many as believed, or as many as were brought to the knowledge of the truth, through the preaching of Ammon and his brethren, according to the spirit of revelation and of prophecy, and the power of God working miracles in them—yea, I say unto you, as the Lord liveth, as many of the Lamanites as believed in their preaching, and were converted unto the Lord, never did fall away.

verse 6 The essential meaning of this verse is: “As sure as the Lord liveth . . . the converted Lamanites never did fall away.” The construction of this verse is interesting. It contains much parenthetical material between the phrases “as sure as the Lord liveth” and “many of the Lamanites . . . were converted unto the Lord [and] never did fall away.”

In a real sense, every conversion to the gospel is a “miracle”—that is, a phenomenon manifesting evidence of divine intervention. Each conversion involves direct personal revelation from God through the Spirit of God.

7 For they became a righteous people; they did lay down the weapons of their rebellion, that they did not fight against God any more, neither against any of their brethren.

8 Now, these are they who were converted unto the Lord:

9 The people of the Lamanites who were in the land of Ishmael;

10 And also of the people of the Lamanites who were in the land of Middoni;

11 And also of the people of the Lamanites who were in the city of Nephi;

12 And also of the people of the Lamanites who were in the land of Shilom, and who were in the land of Shemlon, and in the city of Lemuel, and in the city of Shimnilom.

13 And these are the names of the cities of the Lamanites which were converted unto the Lord; and these are they that laid down the weapons of their rebellion, yea, all their weapons of war; and they were all Lamanites.

verses 8-13 We learn that the “Anti-Nephi-Lehies” (see below in verse 17) hailed from seven different Lamanite lands or cities (Ishmael, Middoni, city of Nephi, Shilom, Shemlon, city of Lemuel, and city of Shimnilom).

14 And the Amalekites were not converted, save only one; neither were any of the Amulonites; but they did harden their hearts, and also the hearts of the Lamanites in that part of the land wheresoever they dwelt, yea, and all their villages and all their cities.

verse 14 We have previously discussed the fact that the “Amalekites” were really the Amlicites, Nephite dissenters discussed in Alma 2-3 (see the commentary on Alma 21:2). The Amulonites were descendants of the priests of Noah. Won't it be interesting to one day learn the identity and story of the one Amalekite (Amlicite) who was converted?

15 Therefore, we have named all the cities of the Lamanites in which they did repent and come to the knowledge of the truth, and were converted.

16 And now it came to pass that the king and those who were converted were desirous that they might have a name, that thereby they might be distinguished from their brethren; therefore, the king consulted with Aaron and many of their priests, concerning the name that they should take upon them, that they might be distinguished.

verse 16 The king consulted with Aaron and with several of the newly-converted and ordained Lamanite priests. Note well that not only were Lamanite lower-classes converted, but also their royalty (Alma 18:22–19:26; 22:1–26).

17 And it came to pass that they called their names Anti-Nephi-Lehies; and they were called by this name and were no more called Lamanites.

verse 17 “Anti-Nephi-Lehies” The precise meaning of this name is not known. Intuitively we might tend to interpret this name as meaning “against Nephi and Lehi.” This is because of the well-known Greek preposition anti-, meaning opposed to or against. Other meanings are, however, are possible and more likely:

1. The 1828 edition of the Webster’s Dictionary gives the meaning of anti as “like” or “mirror image of.” Hence, the name may mean something more like “with or like Nephi and Lehi.” This meaning of this name becomes ever more meaningful if you will take a moment to review the commentary for both Jacob 3:3-9 and Mosiah 28:2. These Lamanite converts sought to emulate or become like Nephi and Lehi.

2. Others have suggested that this group of convert Lamanites chose a name that would identify them as descendants of Lehi but not descendants of Nephi—hence, Anti-Nephi-Lehies. In other words, they were “Lehies” but not through Nephi.

3. Perhaps the most likely possibility is that the word “Anti” of “Anti-Nephi-Lehies” may be the same as an Egyptian relative adjective nty, which means “the one who,” “that,” or “which,” then the name would mean just the opposite; roughly, “that-which (-is-of-) Nephi-Lehi” or “the-one-who (-is-of-) Nephi-Lehi” (Stephen D. Ricks, “Anti-Nephi-Lehi,” in Book of Mormon Reference Companion, ed. Dennis L. Largey, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 2003, 67; compare Alan Gardiner, Egyptian Grammar, 3rd edition, Oxford: Griffith Institute, 1957, 150–151; James E. This proposal works especially well in light of what follows directly after the name is given. The text, as mentioned above, indicates that the Anti-Nephi-Lehies “were friendly with the Nephites” upon their conversion, and “did open a correspondence with them” (Alma 23:18). More than simply “friendly” in the common sense of the word, the Anti-Nephi-Lehies and Nephites entered into a covenant or treaty that gave the Anti-Nephi-Lehies land and Nephite protection (cf. Alma 27).

The fact that these two parties were “friendly” to each other is perhaps best understood to mean they created a political alliance. This would be consistent with other Book of Mormon passages. King Lamoni, for instance, spoke of Antiomno as “a friend unto me,” and as such was able to use a political favor by having Ammon’s brethren released from prison (Alma 20:4).

Allies used this kind of language in several ancient Near Eastern cultures. In treaties or political alliances (as seen in political correspondences from Mari, Ugarit, and Egypt), the participating powers often employed familial language to describe the diplomatic relationships between themselves, including “father,” “son,” and “brother” (F. Charles Fensham, “Father and Son Terminology for Treaty and Covenant,” in Near Eastern Studies in Honor of William Foxwell Albright, ed. by Hans Goedicke, Baltimore, MD: The Johns Hopkins University Press, 1971, 121–135; J. David Schloen, The House of the Father as Fact and Symbol: Patrimonialism in Ugarit and the Ancient Near East, Winona Lake, IN: Eisenbrauns, 2001, 255–262). Israel is called Jehovah’s covenant “son” in such places as the book of Hosea (cf. Hosea 11:1–4).

And in the Greco-Roman world, including in the New Testament (cf. Luke 23:12), the language of “friends” was used to describe political and economic alliances between Rome and other potentates. The same is also true of Book of Mormon peoples (Jacob 1:14; Mosiah 24:5; 28:2) (Raymond Westbrook, “Patronage in the Ancient Near East,” Journal of the Economic and Social History of the Orient 48, no. 2, 2005: 213. “Terms of affect such as ‘love’ are employed in servant-master / vassal-overlord relations—witness the biblical injunction that Israelites should love their god. Even terms for ‘friend’ may designate a commercial or professional relationship.”).

Taking the name Anti-Nephi-Lehi was a public statement made by this group of converts that they had independently stepped away from the well-established Lamanite political order. This bold step could not be kept secret for long. This coronation name may have served several purposes, one of which could have been to signal their solidarity with their new Nephite friends and allies.

By adopting this name, which included both Nephi and Lehi, this king and his people also implicitly recognized themselves as descendants of Lehi living in the land of Nephi.

Instead of following the traditions of their more recent fathers, these people now sought to look back to the times and teachings of Father Lehi, who had taught the true way to the tree of life and had promised all of his posterity the blessings of peace and prosperity based on their united obedience to the laws of the coming Messiah.

In bearing this name, the commitment and bravery of these Lamanite converts should not be overlooked. By taking upon them this new name (“the-one-who [-is-of-] Nephi-Lehi”), these Lamanites defied the traditions of their fathers and exposed themselves to retaliation.

Immediately after their conversion, they were attacked by their former Lamanite allies, who “were stirred up . . . to anger against their brethren” (Alma 24:1). Hatred against the Anti-Nephi-Lehies was so strong (verse 2), that many of the Anti-Nephi-Lehies were massacred by their former kindred (verses 20–22).

This entire episode makes the most sense of the Anti-Nephi-Lehies if they had done more than simply convert to another religion. Throughout the ancient world, where separation of church and state was practically unheard of, devotion to a deity, loyalty to political structures, and preservation of one’s cultural identity were wrapped up into a single essence. This was certainly true for many peoples in the Book of Mormon.

By converting to the gospel, taking the name Anti-Nephi-Lehi, adopting a Nephite identity, and becoming their “friends” (cf. Alma 27:20–27), the Lamanite converts undoubtedly recognized the risks they ran by signaling their complete and unflinching devotion to their newly embraced God.

This same group will later become known as “Ammonites” or the “people of Ammon” after the leader of the missionaries who had converted them. We will learn, as is suggested in verse 6, that this group remained faithful to the end and never did fall away (Alma 27:27).

18 And they began to be a very industrious people; yea, and they were friendly with the Nephites; therefore, they did open a correspondence with them, and the curse of God did no more follow them.

verse 18 “the curse of God did no more follow them” These converted Lamanites had the gospel and the priesthood, and they were no longer cut off from the presence of God. It might be presumed that over time the mark of the curse, the dark skin, would also be removed—a change that might be expected to take a few generations.

As we learn more of these Lamanites, we will learn that it is not necessary to wait until the millennium for a righteous people to form and enjoy the association of a peaceful, unified, and blessed society—indeed, a Zion society.

Alma Chapter 24

Scripture Mastery

Alma 24 The Anti-Nephi-Lehies bury their weapons and covenant not to make war. They are attacked by their fellow Lamanites and 1,005 are slain.

1 And it came to pass that the Amalekites and the Amulonites and the Lamanites who were in the land of Amulon, and also in the land of Helam, and who were in the land of Jerusalem, and in fine, in all the land round about, who had not been converted and had not taken upon them the name of Anti-Nephi-Lehi, were stirred up by the Amalekites and by the Amulonites to anger against their brethren.

verse 1 There is an unmistakable and inevitable tendency for the wicked to resent and hate the righteous and to contend against them. It is also perhaps somewhat ironic that the “Amalekites [Amlicites] and the Amulonites” were not, by heredity actually Lamanites. Rather they were both from the line of Nephite dissenters.

2 And their hatred became exceedingly sore against them, even insomuch that they began to rebel against their king, insomuch that they would not that he should be their king; therefore, they took up arms against the people of Anti-Nephi-Lehi.

3 Now the king conferred the kingdom upon his son, and he called his name Anti-Nephi-Lehi.

verse 3 Here is compelling evidence that the “diplomatic” part of the mission of the sons of Mosiah spoken of in the commentary for Mosiah 28:2 has been successful with the Lamanite king. He has overcome in his own life the traditions of his fathers. He is even giving his son, who is heir to his throne, a name which likely means “with Nephi and Lehi” (see commentary for Alma 23:17). The spiritual or gospel aspect of their mission was obviously successful with the Lamanite king as well.

4 And the king died in that selfsame year that the Lamanites began to make preparations for war against the people of God.

verse 4 “the Lamanites began to make preparations for war against the people of God” It is evident that the “Lamanites” consisted of both Nephite dissenters (Amlicites and Amulonites) and some hereditary Lamanites with the former goading the latter to hatred against the Anti-Nephi-Lehies.

5 Now when Ammon and his brethren and all those who had come up with him saw the preparations of the Lamanites to destroy their brethren, they came forth to the land of Midian, and there Ammon met all his brethren; and from thence they came to the land of Ishmael that they might hold a council with Lamoni and also with his brother Anti-Nephi-Lehi, what they should do to defend themselves against the Lamanites.

6 Now there was not one soul among all the people who had been converted unto the Lord that would take up arms against their brethren; nay, they would not even make any preparations for war; yea, and also their king commanded them that they should not.

verse 6 Here is evidence of the complete conversion of these people. Knowing that it might well cost them their mortal lives, they held firmly to their eternal convictions which included a love for their Lamanite brethren and a complete faith in the Lord's promises.

“also their king commanded them that they should not” This king is their new king, Anti-Nephi-Lehi, the brother of King Lamoni.

7 Now, these are the words which he said unto the people concerning the matter: I thank my God, my beloved people, that our great God has in goodness sent these our brethren, the Nephites, unto us to preach unto us, and to convince us of the traditions of our wicked fathers.

verse 7 “these are the words which he said unto the people” These are the words of the king, Anti-Nephi-Lehi.

“the traditions of our wicked fathers” See the commentary for Alma 20:13.

8 And behold, I thank my great God that he has given us a portion of his Spirit to soften our hearts, that we have opened a correspondence with these brethren, the Nephites.

verse 8 Here, again, is that expression unique to the Book of Mormon, “a portion of his Spirit.” It means simply the influence of the Holy Ghost.

9 And behold, I also thank my God, that by opening this correspondence we have been convinced of our sins, and of the many murders which we have committed.

10 And I also thank my God, yea, my great God, that he hath granted unto us that we might repent of these things, and also that he hath forgiven us of those our many sins and murders which we have committed, and taken away the guilt from our hearts, through the merits of his Son.

verse 10 “he hath forgiven us of those . . . murders which we have committed” We have discussed the question of whether or not a person can be forgiven for committing murder (see the commentary for Alma 20:17). The willful and premeditated taking of another human life has been referred to in the scriptures as the “sin unto death” (1 John 5:16). Today we refer to premeditated murder as the “unforgivable sin.” A person guilty of this type of murder may repent but he can never receive a kingdom higher than the telestial kingdom—he cannot be exalted. We therefore have good reason to believe that these new converts had been guilty of a lesser sin—such as slaying innocent people in unrighteous wars (see Three Most Abominable Sins, in volume 3, chapter 18, in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine. The remorse they felt, however, was so strong that they felt that complete repentance required a special offering to the Lord, “a testimony to God” (verse 8). Thus, they vowed to never again take up arms in combat.

We will learn that after these people travel with Ammon and the sons of Mosiah to Zarahemla, they will be granted an extraordinary exemption from active military duty on condition they would help to sustain the Nephite armies with provisions (see Alma 27:23-24). This is somewhat surprising since generally ancient peoples were absolutely obligated to take up arms in defense of their tribe or nations (see 1 Samuel 11:1-11; 15:4). However, we will learn that the exemption granted to the people of Ammon is consistent with ancient Israelite law which placed a high civic obligation on all citizens to contribute, as appropriate, to the defense of their country, their God, their religion, and their people. The laws of Deuteronomy afforded humanitarian exemptions for people under variable circumstances.

One of the circumstances that would excuse a man from being a soldier in war was if he was “fearful and fainthearted because of the transgressions he had committed” (Babylonian Talmud, Sotah VIII, 3, 4a). Even though the Talmud was written long after Lehi and his family departed Jerusalem, it often reflected older oral material, especially from Deuteronomy. Certainly, the Nephites would have recognized that the profound fears of the Ammonites who were afraid to break their oath rendered them unsuitable for military duty under such a rule. Consistent with ancient Israelite law, their exemption was granted only “on condition that they will give us [the Nephites] a portion of their substance to assist us that we may maintain our armies” (Alma 27:24).

11 And now behold, my brethren, since it has been all that we could do, (as we were the most lost of all mankind) to repent of all our sins and the many murders which we have committed, and to get God to take them away from our hearts, for it was all we could do to repent sufficiently before God that he would take away our stain—verse 12 Obviously, the blood stained swords of the Anti-Nephi-Lehies were symbolic of what they considered their sin-stained souls.

12 Now, my best beloved brethren, since God hath taken away our stains, and our swords have become bright, then let us stain our swords no more with the blood of our brethren.

Given the setting of the assembled people making a covenant with God, Corbin Volluz concluded that “this text [the burial of their swords] must be understood in a ceremonial context” (Corbin Volluz, “A Study in Seven: Hebrew Numerology in the Book of Mormon,” BYU Studies Quarterly 53, no. 2, 2014: 81). Dedication and termination ceremonies, representing the end of an old or the starting of a new way of life, are known in many cultures, and in Preclassic Mesoamerica these date from as early as 1500 BC. They often included burials of tools or other objects as a metaphor for sacrifice. This type of occasion would be fitting for the covenant and actions made by the Anti-Nephi-Lehies (See Brant A. Gardner, Traditions of the Fathers: The Book of Mormon as History, Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2015, 307–308. See also Jonathan B. Pagliaro, James F. Garber, and Travis W. Stanton, “Evaluating the Archaeological Signatures of Maya Ritual and Conflict” in Ancient Mesoamerican Warfare, ed. M. Kathryn Brown and Travis W. Stanton, Walnut Creek, CA: Alta Mire Press, 2003, 75–89).

As part of their new life going forward, the people began to live the law of Moses (Alma 25:15–16). Part of this law identified those who killed with instruments or weapons of iron, stone, and wood as “murderers” (Numbers 35:16–18). Thus, by getting rid of “all the weapons which were used for the shedding of man’s blood” (Alma 24:17), the Anti-Nephi-Lehi’s assured themselves and God that they would never again commit an unlawful, intentional murder.

On this occasion, King Anti-Nephi-Lehi gave a speech in which he repeated various forms of the term stain and also the words our swords seven times each (for stain: Alma 24:11, 12 [twice], 13 [twice], 15 [twice]; for our swords: Alma 24:12 [twice], 13 [twice], 15 [twice], and 16). In addition, blood is repeated seven times in the narrative about the covenant (Alma 24:12, 13 [twice], 15, 17, 18 [twice]). These repeated terms are tied tightly together: it is blood that stains swords, which are then made “bright” again through the cleansing power of the atonement (Alma 24:12–13, 15). If the swords were the Mesoamerican macuahuitl, this imagery could be even more powerful, since blood would literally stain and discolor the wooden shafts (See William J. Hamblin and A. Brent Merrill, “Swords in the Book of Mormon,” in Warfare in the Book of Mormon, ed. Stephen D. Ricks and William J. Hamblin, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1990, 342–343. Also see Matthew Roper, “On Cynics and Swords,” FARMS Review of Books 9, no. 1, 1997: 151–152; Matthew Roper, “Swords and ‘Cimeters’ in the Book of Mormon,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 8, no. 1, 1999: 39).

It is possible that the symbolism of the number seven had been maintained over the years in Lamanite traditions, or it could have entered this covenantal ceremony from Ammon’s teachings based on the frequent use of the number seven in the plates of brass. Either way, it would have communicated to the God of Israel the seven-fold completeness of the commitment of these Ammonites to never again stain their swords with blood.

Ritual actions of the Mosaic law often employed sevenfold repetitions, as on the Day of Atonement with the ritual of sprinkling blood seven times upon the altar and the mercy seat in the temple (Leviticus 16:14–19, 27). Volluz reasoned: “The sevenfold repetition of these words in these five verses [in Alma] invokes the memory of the sevenfold blood sacrifices, dippings, and sprinklings that accompanied purification and cleansing rituals and covenants under the law of Moses, which these Ammonites were especially careful to keep as they looked forward to the coming of Christ (Alma 25:15)” (Volluz, “A Study in Seven,” 81).

In the Anti-Nephi-Lehi narrative, blood is described as something that can be shed (Alma 24:17–18), something that stains (verses 12–13, 15), and washes clean through atonement (verse 13). This language and the rhetorical repetition and interaction of stains, swords, and blood provides poignant atonement imagery. Three occurrences of stains appear in a context where the reader expects sins. They “repent[ed] sufficiently before God that he would take away [their] stains” (verse 11; cf. verses 12, 15) (Skousen, The Earliest Text, 366). God removed their “stains,” making their “swords . . . [to] become bright” (verse 12) and the stain of their swords was “washed bright through the blood of the Son of our great God” (verse 15).

Just as ritual blood sprinkling on the Day of Atonement symbolized the atoning blood of Christ, the blood-stained swords of the Anti-Nephi-Lehi’s became symbolic of their sin-stained souls. Just as their swords were described as washed clean and made bright, so too were their sins washed away by the infinite atonement of Jesus Christ, and their lives were now brightened by the eternal light of the everlasting gospel.

They so treasured the purity gained through the atonement, they refused to take any chance that it might be lost again. So, as Elder Richard G. Scott observed, “The now-faithful people chose to succumb to the sword rather than risk their spiritual lives by taking up arms” (Elder Richard G. Scott, “Personal Strength through the Atonement of Jesus Christ,” Ensign, November 2013, 82). All who repent and come unto Christ may likewise have the stains of sin removed and cherish the blessings and purity of being washed clean by the blood of the Lamb.

13 Behold, I say unto you, Nay, let us retain our swords that they be not stained with the blood of our brethren; for perhaps, if we should stain our swords again they can no more be washed bright through the blood of the Son of our great God, which shall be shed for the atonement of our sins.

verse 13 Notice that the believers in that day were fully conversant with the concept of the atonement and they begged for forgiveness through Christ’s atoning blood. And through his precious blood, their sins were forgiven them, though that blood would not be shed for a century or so.

14 And the great God has had mercy on us, and made these things known unto us that we might not perish; yea, and he has made these things known unto us beforehand, because he loveth our souls as well as he loveth our children;

therefore, in his mercy he doth visit us by his angels, that the plan of salvation might be made known unto us as well as unto future generations.

verse 14 “he has made these things known unto us beforehand” “Beforehand” refers to before Christ’s mortal ministry (see Alma 39:17-19).

“by his angels” It seems likely here that the king is referring to Ammon and his brethren as “angels.”

“plan of salvation” For a discussion of this interesting term see the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:6.

15 Oh, how merciful is our God! And now behold, since it has been as much as we could do to get our stains taken away from us, and our swords are made bright, let us hide them away that they may be kept bright, as a testimony to our God at the last day, or at the day that we shall be brought to stand before him to be judged, that we have not stained our swords in the blood of our brethren since he imparted his word unto us and has made us clean thereby.

verse 15 “he imparted his word unto us and has made us clean thereby” It is clear that these Anti-Nephi-Lehies have come to an understanding that the Lord is willing to completely forgive them for their prior transgressions even though many of them had taken the lives of their brethren.

16 And now, my brethren, if our brethren seek to destroy us, behold, we will hide away our swords, yea, even we will bury them deep in the earth, that they may be kept bright, as a testimony that we have never used them, at the last day; and if our brethren destroy us, behold, we shall go to our God and shall be saved.

17 And now it came to pass that when the king had made an end of these sayings, and all the people were assembled together, they took their swords, and all the weapons which were used for the shedding of man’s blood, and they did bury them up deep in the earth.

18 And this they did, it being in their view a testimony to God, and also to men, that they never would use weapons again for the shedding of man’s blood; and this they did, vouching and covenanting with God, that rather than shed the blood of their brethren they would give up their own lives; and rather than take away from a brother they would give unto him; and rather than spend their days in idleness they would labor abundantly with their hands.

verse 18 Vouching is bearing witness; giving testimony or full attestation.

We learn that the covenant the Anti-Nephi-Lehies made with God included more than just their commitment never to take up their weapons in battle. They also committed themselves to “give unto” their brothers rather than “take away” from them; and to “labor abundantly with their hands” rather than “spend their days in idleness.”

19 And thus we see that, when these Lamanites were brought to believe and to know the truth, they were firm, and would suffer even unto death rather than commit sin; and thus we see that they buried their weapons of peace, or they buried the weapons of war, for peace.

verse 19 “thus we see that they buried their weapons of peace, or they buried the weapons of war, for peace” One wonders if this is not an example of a “typo” made by the prophet Mormon. It obviously was not possible to erase a mistake from the gold plates. Rather than cross out the error, he simply corrected himself and went on (see Daniel H. Ludlow, A Companion to Your Study of the Book of Mormon, [Salt Lake City: Deseret Book, 1976], 210).

It is instructive to note that the Book of Mormon writers speak positively of the steadfastly-maintained covenants of the Anti-Nephi-Lehies not to bear arms, yet it also teaches that military action taken in self defense is justifiable. The prophet Mormon will yet have something to say on this issue: “Know ye that ye must lay down your weapons of war, and delight no more in the shedding of blood, and take them not again, save it be that God shall command you” (Mormon 7:4).

20 And it came to pass that their brethren, the Lamanites, made preparations for war, and came up to the land of Nephi for the purpose of destroying the king, and to place another in his stead, and also of destroying the people of Anti-Nephi-Lehi out of the land.

21 Now when the people saw that they were coming against them they went out to meet them, and prostrated themselves before them to the earth, and began to call on the name of the Lord; and thus they were in this attitude when the Lamanites began to fall upon them, and began to slay them with the sword.

22 And thus without meeting any resistance, they did slay a thousand and five of them; and we know that they are blessed, for they have gone to dwell with their God.

23 Now when the Lamanites saw that their brethren would not flee from the sword, neither would they turn aside to the right hand or to the left, but that they would lie down and perish, and praised God even in the very act of perishing under the sword—

24 Now when the Lamanites saw this they did forbear from slaying them; and there were many whose hearts had swollen in them for those of their brethren who had fallen under the sword, for they repented of the things which they had done.

25 And it came to pass that they threw down their weapons of war, and they would not take them again, for they were stung for the murders which they had committed; and they came down even as their brethren, relying upon the mercies of those whose arms were lifted to slay them.

verse 25 This verse refers to the attacking Lamanites and not to the Anti-Nephi-Lehies.

“they came down even as their brethren” These attacking Lamanites were so disgusted at having slain many of their defenseless brethren, that they also discarded their weapons and prostrated themselves before the remainder of the force of invading Lamanites.

26 And it came to pass that the people of God were joined that day by more than the number who had been slain; and those who had been slain were righteous people, therefore we have no reason to doubt but what they were saved.

verse 26 The selfless actions of the Anti-Nephi-Lehies resulted in the conversion of many of the invading Lamanites—more than 1,005, the number of Anti-Nephi-Lehies who had been slain. This incident is a dramatic example of the compelling motivating power of “righteous suffering” (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 26:24).

27 And there was not a wicked man slain among them; but there were more than a thousand brought to the knowledge of the truth; thus we see that the Lord worketh in many ways to the salvation of his people.

28 Now the greatest number of those of the Lamanites who slew so many of their brethren were Amalekites and Amulonites, the greatest number of whom were after the order of the Nehors.

verse 28 Here it is confirmed that the real spirit of this attack was provoked by the Amlicites and Amulonites who were dissenting Nephites and not Lamanites by birth.

29 Now, among those who joined the people of the Lord, there were none who were Amalekites or Amulonites, or who were of the order of Nehor, but they were actual descendants of Laman and Lemuel.

verse 29 The new converts among the invading force of Lamanites were true Lamanites by birth, that is, descendants of Laman and Lemuel or perhaps the sons of Ishmael. They were not the apostate dissenter Nephites. The latter were actually descendants of Nephi or Jacob or Joseph or Sam or Zoram.

30 And thus we can plainly discern, that after a people have been once enlightened by the Spirit of God, and have had great knowledge of things pertaining to righteousness, and then have fallen away into sin and transgression, they become more hardened, and thus their state becomes worse than though they had never known these things.

verse 30 This verse is a comment by the prophet Mormon. In early church history, a member once vowed that he would never do the church any harm if he were to leave it. Joseph counseled him: “You don’t know what you would do. . . Before you joined the church, you stood on neutral ground. When the gospel was preached, good and evil were set before you. You could choose either or neither. There were two opposite masters inviting you to serve them. When you joined this church, you enlisted to serve God. When you did that, you left the neutral ground, and you never can get back on to it. Should you forsake the Master you enlisted to serve, it will be by the instigation of the evil one, and you will follow his dictation and be his servant” (Juvenile Instructor 27:492). When Ammon and his brethren taught the gospel to the Lamanites, those Lamanites had the advantage of being on neutral ground. They had the ability to be objective about the gospel message. They could choose to accept or reject it. The dissenting Nephites, the Amalekites and Amulonites, had no such advantage. They were disinclined to admit their own mistakes when their fellow Nephites taught them the poignant and discerning truths of the gospel.

An individual can never remain stagnant in his relationship to God once he has received a witness of the Spirit. At any subsequent moment, he must either be progressing toward light and eternal life or sinking into darkness toward spiritual death. President Harold B. Lee taught: “A testimony isn’t something you have today, and you are going to have always. A testimony is fragile. It is as hard to hold as a moonbeam. It is something you have to recapture every day of your life” (Church News, 15 July 1972, 4).

Alma Chapter 25

1 And behold, now it came to pass that those Lamanites were more angry because they had slain their brethren; therefore they swore vengeance upon the Nephites; and they did no more attempt to slay the people of Anti-Nephi-Lehi at that time.

verse 1 The attacking Lamanites had done something they knew in their hearts was wrong. Rather than admit their guilt, however, they sought to justify themselves by blaming the Nephites who had converted the Anti-Nephi-Lehies.

2 But they took their armies and went over into the borders of the land of Zarahemla, and fell upon the people who were in the land of Ammonihah, and destroyed them.

verse 2 The land of Ammonihah seems to have been in the northwest of the land of Zarahemla (see the Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands). Dr John L. Sorenson has suggested that the Lamanites seemed to have chosen to make a “flank” attack. They avoided coming straight north into the land of Zarahemla but traveled instead along the western coastal plain. They entered Zarahemla through the mountain pass connecting the coastal plain with the land of Zarahemla. Along this route, the first Nephite city they would have first encountered was Ammonihah (An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, 241). As you know this proved to be most unfortunate for the people of Ammonihah (see Alma 16:1-11).

This destruction of the wicked of Ammonihah is an example of a prophecy that will be written by the prophet Mormon: “It is by the wicked that the wicked are punished” (Mormon 4:5).

3 And after that, they had many battles with the Nephites, in the which they were driven and slain.

verse 3 Mormon’s account here of “many battles” (see also Alma 27:1) does not completely square with the account in Alma 16:6-9 wherein the Lamanites were defeated in one decisive battle. This discrepancy is probably the result of Mormon’s trying to edit the account of two complex interacting stories.
