Introduction

In the Church, our study and understanding of the Book of Mormon has undergone a most interesting evolution since the book's translation in 1829. As late as the early twentieth century our understanding of the book was not far advanced. Almost no serious studies of the book and its contents had been published, and the book was not heavily used in worship service discourse or in gospel instruction. There was even some skepticism about the literal divine origins of the Book within the LDS community, particularly among the more educated. By the mid 1900s, beginning with an acknowledged assumption of the book's divine origins, Sidney B. Sperry, Hugh W. Nibley, John L. Sorenson, and a few others had launched serious scholarly inquiries into the book. In the mid-1970s the rate of publications on Book of Mormon topics began to increase.

The rate of publications on the Book of Mormon particularly soared after President Ezra Taft Benson, soon after his ordination as president and prophet, called the Church to repentance in November of 1985 and at the April General Conference of the Church in 1986. The Church worked the Book of Mormon into the regular cycle of the new correlated curriculum for adults, and church leaders began using the Book of Mormon more frequently and systematically in speeches and instructional situations. Since then, the book's authenticity as an ancient scriptural record has become more firmly and generally established. Those who remain vocal doubters of the book's literal divine origins are no longer identified with the committed LDS community.

In the October General Conference in 1986, President Benson said:

We must make the Book of Mormon a center focus of our study [because] it was written for our day. The Nephites never had the book; neither did the Lamanites of ancient times. It was meant for us. . . Under the inspiration of God, who sees all things from the beginning, [Mormon] abridged centuries of records, choosing the stories, speeches, and events that would be most helpful to us. . . If they [the Book of Mormon writers] saw our day then chose those things which would be of greatest worth to us, is not that how we should study the Book of Mormon? We should constantly ask ourselves, "Why did the Lord inspire Mormon (or Moroni or Alma) to include that in his record? What lesson can I learn from that to help me live in this day and age?" (Conference Report, October 1986, 3-7).

President Benson would later write:

It is not just that the Book of Mormon teaches us truth, though it indeed does that. It is not just that the Book of Mormon bears testimony of Christ, though it indeed does that, too. But there is something more. There is a power in the book which will begin to flow into your lives the moment you begin a serious study of the book. You will find greater power to resist temptation. You will find the power to avoid deception. You will find the power to stay on the strait and narrow path. The scriptures are called the “words of life” (D&C 84:85), and nowhere is that more true than it is of the Book of Mormon. When you begin to hunger and thirst after those words, you will find life in greater and greater abundance (“The Book of Mormon—Keystone of Our Religion,” Ensign, November, 1986, 16:7).

Further:

I would like to speak about one of the most significant gifts given to the world in modern times. The gift I am thinking of is more important than any of the inventions that have come out of the industrial and technological revolutions. This is a gift of greater value to mankind than even the many wonderful advances we have seen in modern medicine. It is of greater worth to mankind than the development of flight or space travel. I speak of the gift of the Book of Mormon (The Teachings of Ezra Taft Benson [Salt Lake City: Bookcraft, 1988, 51]).

President Benson often reiterated the prophet Joseph Smith’s statement when Joseph referred to the Book of Mormon as “the keystone of our religion” (TPJS, 194). A keystone, sometimes called the headstone, is the central stone in an arch. It holds all the other stones in place, and if it is removed, the arch crumbles.

Your author has developed the habit, as I read the Book of Mormon, of reading slowly and actually looking for words or phrases or concepts whose meanings are unclear. I search for ideas that are not completely compatible with the framework of knowledge I already possess. I have been surprised to learn that I seldom have to read more than two or three verses before coming upon some puzzlement, large or small. On each occasion, I am left with an unsettled perplexity, a sort of uncomfortable disequilibrium. “Why are there so many verses in this basic scriptural work,” I have wondered, “that cause me to struggle so?” Disquieting as these feelings are, I have come to recognize them as a first step in learning some valuable new insight.

Once I come upon a phrase or verse I don’t understand, I begin my search for the answer by reading and re-reading the “offending” passage, by checking cross references, by reading supplemental explanatory materials, by sometimes asking help of my learned friends, and often praying about the verse. Mercifully, I have found that my efforts are most always fruitful. I am able to re-establish my equilibrium with the verse, and, at the same time, find myself possessing a greater insight on some particular point. With some satisfaction, I then continue on in my reading, only to find the process beginning again a verse or two later. I heartily recommend this same approach to my readers, and I have attempted in this commentary to spare you some of the pain of finding your answers. I hope I have anticipated many of your perplexities as you study the Book of Mormon, yet I suspect that each of us will encounter and be obliged to overcome our own unique set of questions. There is certainly a magic in enduring in this process, for certainly as we do so, we are “treasur[ing] up . . . the words of life” (D&C 84:85).

Your author prefers to think of this work as an “enrichment commentary.” I believe it may be read and enjoyed by the casual student of the Book of Mormon who might, for example, find use for it as a reference source. The book’s intended purpose, however, is to assist the serious student who would like to begin a thorough, intensive, and searching tour through the book. Though it may be useful to the student who wishes to skip from one verse here to another verse there, it is intended to be read sequentially. Some concepts discussed in earlier verses in the book or even earlier verses in a particular chapter may receive more casual attention when encountered later in the text.

This work consists of a rather comprehensive commentary on the verses of the Book of Mormon. Some may have reservations about the basic concept of this book. I am aware of Peter’s warning: “Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of men: but Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost” (2 Peter 1:20-21). I have endeavored in this project not to add or detract from the scripture, but only clarify. Some will say that such a comprehensive commentary is not possible without placing a “private interpretation” on some verses. I have earnestly attempted to avoid assigning any purely individual or private interpretations to the scriptural verses. Your author is a student of the Book of Mormon and in no wise an expert. To create this volume, I have prayerfully studied and utilized the thoughts and explanations of many authors and scholars whose explanations of the Book of Mormon verses might be generally considered to be “authoritative” and “scholarly.” I have collected materials from general authorities and from individuals with undeniable scholarly credentials who openly profess a spiritual witness of the book. When I have borrowed their ideas only, and have rephrased them for my purposes, no reference will be cited. When I have quoted another author’s wording, acknowledgment is provided. Indeed, I have begun and completed this project as a student who is simply trying to make it possible for myself and for others to understand the book’s sometimes difficult verses. I acknowledge the fact, however, that my private biases have not been completely eliminated.

I am also sensitive to the need to avoid proof-texting in a work such as this. That is, I have tried very hard to let the scriptures speak for themselves. An author guilty of proof-texting presupposes the doctrine and then seeks support from the scriptures. I have attempted to consider each verse in its historical and sequential context.

I have tried to include timely and necessary background information to make the book’s words, phrases, and verses really come alive. I have tried to avoid rhetoric and concentrate on the meat. It is not my purpose to preach about the principles contained in the book, rather my goal is to improve understanding. This work presupposes, in its reader, an “average” understanding of the Book of Mormon. I have tried to eliminate those commentary materials which would likely be redundant and unnecessary for my so-called average reader. It is my intent to explain, clarify, and enrich your study and understanding of the book.

The work includes a variety of “supplemental articles” to which reference is made appropriately in the text. Among these supplemental articles is a purely historical telling of the Book of Mormon story entitled, A Narrative Summary of the Book of Mormon. From this “historical” summary, doctrinal materials have been omitted, but all characters, events, and places are included. It is hope that this historical account may be useful to the student who wishes to quickly “brush up” on the historical narrative.

A few “housekeeping” notes about this work are pertinent. The text of the Book of Mormon is included in bold with a blue color to clearly distinguish it from the commentary. All commentary is colored black. The paragraphs of commentary material are often preceded by a quoted phrase, also of blue color, without any punctuation except for quotation marks. These are phrases taken directly from the verse of text immediately above the commentary paragraph. The commentary then follows these quoted phrases. Sometimes the verse commentary for a group of verses will precede, rather than follow, the actual text rendering of the verses. This is done if it felt that a word of explanation before reading a passage would be helpful. Most block quotes appear in red print and are not double-indented. Finally, in this current updated version of this commentary (2014) page numbers have been eliminated, as they are considered unnecessary.

In reading the Book of Mormon, often we tend to regard some of the materials contained therein as non-essential. We wonder, “Why was the report of this battle or that incident included in the book?” As we study the book, we will assume that there is no “filler” material in the Book of Mormon. Every item in the book was placed there for a reason and purpose. In making his abridgment of the sacred records of the Book of Mormon people, Mormon wrote, “I cannot write the hundredth part of the things of my people” (Words of Mormon 1:5). Hence, we must assume that all items in the book have been included following thoughtful and inspired consideration.

There is a miracle in the scriptures. If a person reads the scriptures regularly, he or she will invariably have his or her life touched by them eventually. “Whosoever believeth on my words,” the Lord said in reference to the Book of Mormon, “them will I visit with the manifestation of my Spirit” (D&C 5:16). Isaiah prophesied that the Book of Mormon would bring a spiritually blind generation to an understanding of the doctrine of Christ (2 Nephi 27:35; Isaiah 29:24). It has been suggested by those experienced in gospel study that no individual who studies the scriptures daily will be remiss in keeping the commandments.

Our scriptures advise us of several other books of scripture yet to come forth. One day, “all things shall be revealed unto the children of men which ever have been . . . and which ever will be” (2 Nephi 27:11). Perhaps, though, we will never be privileged to receive additional scriptures until we learn to appreciate fully those we already have.

Consider the following testimony of The Book of Mormon by President Ezra Taft Benson:

We invite all men everywhere to read the Book of Mormon, another testament of Jesus Christ.

The Bible sits on the pulpit of hundreds of different religious sects. The Book of Mormon, the record of Joseph, verifies and clarifies the Bible. It removes stumbling blocks, it restores many plain and precious things. We testify that when used together, the Bible and the Book of Mormon confound false doctrines, lay down contentions, and establish peace (see 2 Nephi 3:12).

We do not have to prove that the Book of Mormon is true. The Book is its own proof. All we need to do is read it and declare it! The Book of Mormon is not on trial—the people of the world, including the members of the Church, are on trial as to what they will do with this second witness for Christ” (Conference Report, October 1984, 7; Ensign November 1984, 8).

I am deeply committed to the book as an authentic ancient scripture. The Spirit has born witness to my soul on numerous occasions as I have studied and pondered its verses. I know with all my heart that the book was written by ancient prophets who intended for their writings to come forth to the world and be translated in our day by Joseph Smith, Jr., through the “gift and power of God.”

The Book of Mormon Another Testament of Jesus Christ

Subtitle

The official subtitle “Another Testament of Jesus Christ” was given to the Book of Mormon in October conference 1982. During that conference, Elder Boyd K. Packer announced: “You should know also that by recent decision of the brethren, the Book of Mormon will henceforth bear the title ‘The Book of Mormon,’ with the subtitle ‘Another Testament of Jesus Christ’” (Ensign, November 1982, 53). This subtitle highlights one of the central purposes of the Book of Mormon: “The convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations” (Title Page; cf. 2 Nephi 26:12). In a world where the biblical account of Christ’s divine status and mission is increasingly under attack in both academic and popular circles, the Book of Mormon’s witness is a cardinal addition to the witness of the Bible.

During the past two centuries, scholars have increasingly employed humanistic methods in biblical study that remove the idea of divine influence as the source of scripture. These methods have attacked the credibility of the biblical account of Jesus's birth, his miracles, his crucifixion, and his resurrection. Stripping Jesus of his divinity, some scholars have variously depicted him as a cynic philosopher, a peasant revolutionary, a magician, a Galilean rabbi, a Pharisee, or an eschatological prophet—anything but the Son of God. Biblical passages that support Jesus's divinity are understood by those scholars as the incursions of later Christians. The Book of Mormon witness confirms cherished Christian truths taught in the Bible, restores to skeptics the validity of those truths, and stands independent of the shifting sands of secular scholarly opinion.

President Ezra Taft Benson taught: “The word testament is the English rendering of a Greek word that can also be translated as covenant. Is this what the Lord meant when he called the Book of Mormon the ‘new covenant’? It is indeed another testament or witness of Jesus. This is one of the reasons why we have recently added the words ‘Another Testament of Jesus Christ’ to the title of the Book of Mormon” (Conference Report, October 1986, 4; Ensign, November 1986, 4).

THE BOOK OF MORMON

AN ACCOUNT WRITTEN BY THE HAND OF MORMON UPON PLATES TAKEN FROM THE PLATES OF NEPHI

Wherefore, it is an abridgment of the record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites—Written to the Lamanites, who are a remnant of the house of Israel; and also to Jew and Gentile—Written by way of commandment, and also by the spirit of prophecy and of revelation—Written and sealed up, and hid up unto the Lord, that they might not be destroyed—To come forth by the gift and power of God unto the interpretation thereof—Sealed by the hand of Moroni, and hid up unto the Lord, to come forth in due time by way of the Gentile—The interpretation thereof by the gift of God.

An abridgment taken from the Book of Ether also, which is a record of the people of Jared, who were scattered at the time the Lord confounded the language of the people, when they were building a tower to get to heaven—Which is to show unto the remnant of the House of Israel what great things the Lord hath done for their fathers; and that they may know the covenants of the Lord, that they are not cast off forever—And also to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that JESUS is the CHRIST, the ETERNAL GOD, manifesting himself unto all nations—And now, if there are faults they are the mistakes of men; wherefore, condemn not the things of God, that ye may be found spotless at the judgment-seat of Christ.

Translated by Joseph Smith, Jun.

The writings on the title page of the Book of Mormon were most likely written by Moroni directly onto the plates of Mormon. Joseph Smith explained: “I wish to mention here that the title-page of the Book of Mormon is a literal translation, taken from the very last leaf, on the left hand side of the collection or book of plates, which contained the record which has been translated, the language of the whole running the same as all Hebrew writing in general; and that said title page is not by any means a modern composition, either of mine or of any other man who has lived or does live in this generation” (HC, 1:71).

Dr. Sidney B. Sperry and others have speculated that Moroni wrote the two paragraphs of the title page at two different times of his life (A Book of Mormon Treasury, 123-25). He suggests that Moroni wrote the first paragraph after he had written Mormon 8:12-13 and the second after he had translated the account of the people of Jared. This translation of the Jaredite record was made apparently between the time he wrote the last verse in Mormon (Mormon 9:37) and the first verse in Moroni.

An alternate hypothesis for the authorship of the title page has been advanced by Daniel H. Ludlow. He suggests that Mormon himself may have written the first six lines of the first paragraph and that Moroni wrote the remainder of the title page (The Book of Mormon: First Nephi, the Doctrinal Foundation. Religious Studies Center, B.Y.U., Provo, Utah, 28-31). This suggestion is based on the fact that Mormon was qualified and might be expected to have written some sort of preface for his work. Also the construction of the final few lines of the paragraph is awkward and repetitious if we attribute it to one author. For example, compare the consecutive lines which I have here divided into numbered passages:

1. “Written and sealed up, and hid up unto the Lord, that they might not be destroyed, to come forth by the gift and power of God unto the interpretation thereof.”

2. “Sealed by the hand of Moroni, and hid up unto the Lord, to come forth in due time by way of the Gentile, the interpretation thereof by the gift of God.”

This repetitive, almost clumsy, style would be easier to explain if the two phrases were each written by separate authors.

The punctuation and paragraphing of the title page were not done by Joseph Smith. In fact, the entire title page was submitted to E.B. Grandin’s Publishing house in one unpunctuated paragraph, and the typesetter, John H. Gilbert, was responsible for punctuation and for the decision to publish it in two basic paragraphs. Those paragraphs in the original 1830 edition were practically the same as in our current edition except that the phrase “An abridgment taken from the Book of Ether” was placed at the end of the first paragraph in the 1830 edition rather than in its present position at the beginning of the second paragraph.

Some have felt that the current paragraphing is misleading in one sense. The present form suggests that the segment: “Which is to show unto the remnant of the house of Israel what great things the Lord hath done . . . that ye may be found spotless at the judgment seat of Christ,” applies only the abridgment of the Book of Ether and not to the entire Book of Mormon. It would seem that a new paragraph ought to be formed beginning at, “Which is to show unto . . .” This would serve to emphasize the application of this final segment of the title page to the entire book and not just to the Book of Ether.

It is interesting to note that at the bottom of the title page and in the testimony of the eight witnesses of the 1830 edition, Joseph Smith was identified as “Author and proprietor,” and the publisher’s line reads “Printed by E.B. Grandin, for the author.” We know, of course, that Joseph was not the author but rather the translator of the book. In listing himself as author, he was simply complying with the copyright laws of the early nineteenth century (based on research by John W. Welch and Miriam A. Smith reported in “Joseph Smith: Author and Proprietor” in Reexploring the Book of Mormon, 154-57). To prevent confusion, Joseph changes the word “author” to “translator” in the second edition of the Book of Mormon, printed in 1837. It has appeared that way ever since.

The title page mentions that the Book of Mormon is an abridgment of “the record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites” and the “record of the people of Jared.” An abridgment is an abbreviated, condensed, or shorter version of some larger work or text. In the case of the Book of Mormon, the abridgers also added their own editorial comments. Book of Mormon abridgers were limited in their writing to not even “a hundredth part” of their peoples’ history (Jacob 3:13; Words of Mormon 1:5; Helaman 3:14; 3 Nephi 5:8; 26:6; Ether 15:33). Their inspired abridgments reflect deliberate attention to their intended latter-day audience. The major abridgers of the Book of Mormon were, of course, Mormon (Nephite/Lamanite record) and Moroni (Jaredite record), but also authors of the small plates of Nephi also mention shortening their records (Jacob 3:13) or abridging the records of others (1 Nephi 1:16-17). The Book of Mormon promises to those who accept the abridged Book of Mormon record, future, additional, and perhaps even unabridged, records (3 Nephi 26 9-11; Ether 4:5-7).

“by way of the Gentile” Certainly the Book of Mormon came to us “by way of” the prophet Joseph Smith. But certainly, he was of the house of Israel and not a Gentile. How then might we explain this phrase? Elder Bruce R. McConkie wrote: “Joseph Smith (through whom the Book of Mormon was revealed) was of the tribe of Ephraim. At the same time the prophet was of the Gentiles, meaning that he was a citizen of [the great] Gentile nation [the United States of America] and also that he was not a Jew” (Mormon Doctrine, 311; for discussion of the phrase “great Gentile nation” see the commentary on 1 Nephi 10:14). Generally speaking, in the Book of Mormon, the term Gentile refers to a resident of a Gentile nation. Any nation that does not have prophets at its head, revelation as its constitution, and the Messiah as its king, is a Gentile nation.

The title page was officially recorded and published twice before the Book of Mormon itself was printed and made available to the public in March of 1830. When Joseph Smith applied for a copyright of the Book of Mormon on June 11, 1829, R. R. Lansing, the clerk of the Northern District of New York, recorded the title page with the notation, “Joseph Smith Junior of the said District, hath deposited in this Office the title of a Book . . . to wit.” The title page was also printed on June 26, 1829 in the Wayne Sentinel, a newspaper published at E. B. Grandin’s press, the same press that printed the first edition of the Book of Mormon. In both of these instances, the title page was written as one paragraph. In the first edition of the Book of Mormon, the title page was published as two paragraphs, a style followed in subsequent English editions but with a change in the point where the two paragraphs divide.

The Testimonies of the Witnesses

The Testimony of Three Witnesses

Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, unto whom this work shall come: That we, through the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, have seen the plates which contain this record, which is a record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites, their brethren, and also of the people of Jared, who came from the tower of which hath been spoken. And we also know that they have been translated by the gift and power of God, for his voice hath declared it unto us; wherefore we know of a surety that the work is true. And we also testify that we have seen the engravings which are upon the plates; and they have been shown unto us by the power of God, and not of man. And we declare with words of soberness, that an angel of God came down from heaven, and he brought and laid before our eyes, that we beheld and saw the plates, and the engravings thereon; and we know that it is by the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, that we beheld and bear record that these things are true. And it is marvelous in our eyes. Nevertheless, the voice of the Lord commanded us that we should bear record of it; wherefore, to be obedient unto the commandments of God, we bear testimony of these things. And we know that if we are faithful in Christ, we shall rid our garments of the blood of all men, and be found spotless before the judgment-seat of Christ, and shall dwell with him eternally in the heavens. And the honor be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost, which is one God. Amen.

The Testimony of Eight Witnesses

Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, unto whom this work shall come: That Joseph Smith, Jun., the translator of this work, has shown unto us the plates of which hath been spoken, which have the appearance of gold; and as many of the leaves as the said Smith has translated we did handle with our hands; and we also saw the engravings thereon, all of which has the appearance of ancient work, and of curious workmanship. And this we bear record with words of soberness, that the said Smith has shown unto us, for we have seen and hefted, and know of a surety that the said Smith has got the plates of which we have spoken. And we give our names unto the world, to witness unto the world that which we have seen. And we lie not, God bearing witness of it.

When the Book of Mormon came forth in this dispensation, the Lord made it known to Joseph Smith that two sets of witnesses should publicly testify of the book. It is informative, perhaps profoundly so, to note the differences between these two groups. The experience of the first group, the three witnesses, is supernatural or spiritual in its basic character. An “angel” (doubtless Moroni) laid the plates before the witnesses. They were shown the plates “by the power of God, and not of man.” The “voice of the Lord” commanded the witnesses to bear witness of the record. The experience of the eight witnesses, in contrast, was an entirely “natural” event. They were shown the plates by a man, Joseph Smith. They were allowed and encouraged to turn the pages and heft the record. They were simply eight men being shown the plates by Joseph. They described the plates’ color, their weight, their individual leaves with their engraved writings, and their careful craftsmanship.

It has been suggested that the two distinct types of testimonies were intended by the Lord to teach us an important lesson. How should we seek to acquire an abiding testimony of the Book of Mormon—by natural or by spiritual means? With the mind or with the heart? Can we gain a testimony by laboring over the text, by memorizing its passages, by studying scholarly articles about its historicity, its linguistics, its archeology, its geography, its evidences? Or is a testimony more surely gained by praying for a spiritual confirmation and then spending little time with the book itself? An intellectual testimony is not a durable testimony. A spiritual witness of the book is essential. Yet, there must be something in the mind of which the Spirit might testify.

It would seem that the strongest and most abiding testimony is gained when both mind and intellect, as well as the heart and Spirit, are applied. Reason and revelation must work together. The Lord said, “Seek ye diligently . . . seek learning, even by study and also by faith” (D&C 88:118). Elder Boyd K. Packer said: “Each of us must accommodate the mixture of reason and revelation in our lives. The gospel not only permits but requires it” (“I Say unto You, Be One,” Brigham Young University 1990-91 Devotionals and Fireside Speeches [Provo, Utah: Brigham Young University, 1991], 89). B. H. Roberts cautioned, let us not have “the heart breathing defiance to the intellect” (Truman G. Madsen, “Philosophy,” in B. H. Roberts, The Truth, the Way, the Life, ed. John W. Welch [Provo, Utah: BYU Studies, 1994], lxxii).

And one might equally add, let us also not have the intellect pounding submission into the heart. As we study the Book of Mormon, we must keep both our mind and our spirit alive and functioning. The two must work together, each contributing in its own proper way. Perhaps the Lord intended to teach us the importance of both types of testimony through the experiences of the witnesses. The experience of the eight witnesses is a metaphor for the importance of serious study and pondering the book. The experience of the three witnesses suggests the importance of a spiritual witness.

The many textual evidences that suggest logically the Book of Mormon is true do not eliminate the necessity of the witness of the Spirit, but the “intellectual” evidences are not to be ignored. Your author has discovered time and again that study of the Book of Mormon, the gathering of intellectual evidence, leads to the revelations of God—a confirmatory witness that the book is true. C. S. Lewis wrote, “Though argument does not create conviction, lack of it destroys belief. What seems to be proved may not be embraced; but what no one shows that ability to defend is quickly abandoned. Rational argument does not create belief, but it maintains a climate in which belief may flourish” (Austin Farrar, “Grete Clerk,” in Light on C. S. Lewis, comp. Jocelyn Gibb [New York: Harcourt and Brace, 1965], 26). Perhaps most of all, evidence promotes understanding and enhances meaning. In all our study, we should seek understanding. Just as traveling to the Holy Land richly enhanced my understanding of the world of the Bible, as it has for many people, evidence provides essential building blocks in understanding the Book of Mormon. John W. Welch has “turned a metaphor” in emphasizing the necessity of both faith and reason as we study the Book of Mormon. He said, “I like to think of faith and reason as two arms working together to play a violin.

One hand fingers the strings and the other draws the bow. When these two distinct functions are brought together with skill and purpose, they produce expressions that ontologically [what the book actually is] transcend the physics of either part individually. According to this view, for an LDS scholar to proceed on either spirit or intellect alone is like trying to play a violin with only one arm” (Echoes and Evidences of the Book of Mormon, ed. Donald W. Parry, Daniel C. Peterson, and John W. Welch, 26).

Let us get back to the consideration of witnesses. Most members of the Church are aware of the Lord’s Law of Witnesses. Elder Bruce R. McConkie wrote:

Whenever the Lord has established a dispensation by revealing his gospel and by conferring priesthood and keys upon men, he has acted in accordance with the law of witnesses which he himself ordained. This law is: “In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established” (2 Corinthians 13:1; Deuteronomy 17:6; 19:15; Matthew 18:15-16; John 8:12:29).

Never does one man stand alone in establishing a new dispensation of revealed truth, or in carrying the burden of such a message and warning to the world. In every dispensation, from Adam to the present, two or more witnesses have always joined their testimonies, thus leaving their hearers without excuse in the day of judgment should the testimony be rejected (Mormon Doctrine, 436).

President Heber J. Grant stressed the importance of the witnesses of the Book of Mormon:

I do not believe that in any court of justice in the world if a man was being tried for murder and twelve reputable citizens testified of their knowledge of the circumstances leading to the murder, and there was no one who could testify against what they said, there would be a failure to convict the man. We have the testimony of Joseph Smith and the testimony of three witnesses to the effect that God gave them a knowledge regarding the Book of Mormon that an angel of God declared from the heaven that the book had been translated by the gift and power of God. These men were Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer and Martin Harris. They left the Church, but to the day of their death they maintained their testimony regarding the declaration of the angel, and that they were commanded to bear witness of the divinity of this book, and they did so. Eight men, some of whom were excommunicated from the Church, maintained their testimony that they had seen and handled the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated, and they remained true to that testimony to the day of their death. The disbelief of all the world does not prove that those men did not tell the truth, because there are no witnesses on the other side (Conference Report, April 1929, 128).

The Testimony of the Three Witnesses

On the day following the death of David Whitmer, in 1888, the Chicago Times reported an interview with an unnamed “Chicago Man.” This man related a conversation he had engaged in with another individual some years before, a prominent resident of the county in which David Whitmer had lived who had been a lawyer and a sheriff there and who had, the Chicago Man said, known the witness very well. The prominent Clay County resident had given him a remarkable portrait of David Whitmer's character and later life.

In the opinion of this gentleman, no man in Missouri possessed greater courage or honesty than this heroic old man [David Whitmer]. "His oath," he said, "would send a man to the gallows quicker than that of any man I ever knew." He then went on to say that no person had ever questioned [David Whitmer's] word to his knowledge about any other matter than finding the Book of Mormon. [Whitmer] was always a loser and never a gainer by adhering to the faith of Joseph Smith. Why persons should question his word about the golden plates, when they took it in relation to all other matters, was to him a mystery (Cited in Cook, ed., David Whitmer Interviews, 224).

Yet this very David Whitmer persisted, literally to his dying day, despite ridicule and skepticism from those around him and despite his own deep disaffection from the institutional Church led by Joseph Smith and then by Brigham Young and the apostles, in stating that he had been in the presence of an angel, had seen the gold plates and other objects related to the Book of Mormon, and had heard the voice of God declare the book true. In an 1878 interview with Orson Pratt and Joseph F. Smith, for example, he gave dramatic and emphatic testimony of his experience as a witness:

I saw [the plates and other Lehite artifacts] just as plain as I see this bed (striking his hand upon the bed beside him), and I heard the voice of the Lord, as distinctly as I ever heard anything in my life, declaring that the records of the plates of the Book of Mormon were translated by the gift and power of God (Reported in a letter to President John Taylor and the Quorum of the Twelve dated 17 September 1878. Originally published in the Deseret News [16 November 1878] and reprinted in Cook, ed., David Whitmer Interviews, 40).

Six years later, Whitmer was interviewed by Joseph Smith III, in the presence of others, not all of whom were disposed to believe his account. Significantly, he listed several items that he had seen, besides the golden plates: the sword of Laban, the Urim and Thummim, the angel dressed in white, and a dazzling brilliant light that surpassed in brightness even the sun at noonday.

The Testimony of the Eight Witnesses

The testimony of the Eight Witnesses is no less impressive. Though critics of the Book of Mormon have suggested otherwise, these were men who could not be fooled. They were tradesmen and farmers who worked with materials and would recognize a counterfeit.

Hyrum Smith who, besides being the Prophet's loyal elder brother was also one of the Eight Witnesses, wrote in December 1839 of his recent sufferings in Missouri:

I had been abused and thrust into a dungeon, and confined for months on account of my faith, and the testimony of Jesus Christ. However, I thank God that I felt a determination to die, rather than deny the things which my eyes had seen, which my hands had handled, and which I had borne testimony to . . . and I can assure my beloved brethren that I was enabled to bear as strong a testimony, when nothing but death presented itself, as ever I did in my life.

These were not empty words. Four and a half years later, Hyrum Smith sealed his testimony with his blood at Carthage, Illinois, when an armed anti-Mormon mob with painted faces assassinated him and his brother. The historical evidence indicates that Hyrum understood his likely fate, and that he went to it willingly (see, for example, Donna Hill, Joseph Smith: The First Mormon [Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1977], 402).

Another witness, Joseph's brother Samuel also bore strong and specific testimony of seeing and handling the plates. Daniel Tyler was fifteen years old when he heard Samuel tell his story: "He knew his brother Joseph had the plates, for the prophet had shown them to him, and he had handled them and seen the engravings thereon" (Richard Lloyd Anderson, Investigating the Book of Mormon, 140).

In all, Richard Lloyd Anderson has identified: over 40 [actually 42] instances when one of the Eight Witnesses restated his testimony [10 of these mentioned handling the plates], with the printed declaration of that testimony mentioned or understood in the statement or conversation. Yet personal statements or reports are only part of the story of the Eight Witnesses. Their relatives said they affirmed their experience throughout life, showing they were deeply impressed by what they had "seen and hefted." When word reached Kirtland about the deaths of Christian and Peter Whitmer Jr., brother-in-law Oliver Cowdery wrote that "they proclaimed to their last moments, the certainty of their former testimony" (Messenger and Advocate 3 [1836]: 426). Thus, these brothers regularly validated their formal group statement. Sons and nephews of Jacob Whitmer, John Whitmer, and Hiram Page gave similar cumulative accounts. Likewise, Samuel Smith's obituary noted "his steadfastness as one of the witnesses to the Book of Mormon" (Times and Seasons 5 [1 August 1844]:607, obituary by John Taylor, who had known Samuel for over six years). And William Smith included his father and brothers in saying that all of the Eight Witnesses testified "that they not only saw with their eyes but handled with their hands the said record . . . nor has either or any one of these witnesses ever to my knowledge counteracted the testimony as given above concerning the real existence of these Mormon tablets" ("Notes Written on 'Chambers' Life of Joseph Smith," 15). . . .

And thoughtful converts, such as the Pratt brothers, John Corrill, and William E. McLellin, recount how they systematically questioned each Book of Mormon witness at the outset. McLellin later said: "When I first joined the Church in 1831, soon I became acquainted with all the Smith family and the Whitmer families, and I heard all their testimonies, which agreed in the main points; and I believed them then and I believe them yet" ("William E. McLellan's [sic] Testimony of the Book of Mormon," BYU Studies 10/4 [Summer 1970]: 486) (Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, volume 14, number 1, 2005, 28-29).

Another of the Eight Witnesses, John Whitmer, was excommunicated on March 10, 1838, one month before his brother David. Like David, he never returned to the Church. In fact, for a brief period it even appears that John's spiritual confidence in the Book of Mormon had been shaken by his separation from his former associates and by his bitterness over the economic and other issues that had arisen during the Latter-day Saints' brief sojourn in Missouri. He was sorrowful and dejected about his excommunication, but also, for at least a time, quite angry at the Church in general and Joseph Smith in particular (see F. Mark McKiernan and Roger D. Launius, eds., An Early Latter Day Saint History: The Book of John Whitmer Kept by Commandment [Independence, Mo.: Herald Publishing House, 1980], 20). As the Mormons were forced from Missouri in 1839, Theodore Turley temporarily remained as a church business agent and was visited by several residents, including John Whitmer. The hostile group ridiculed Turley's belief in the Book of Mormon, but he confronted John Whitmer with an accusation of inconsistency. Turley later reconstructed the rest of the conversation:

Whitmer asked do you hint at me? Turley replied, "If the cap fits you wear it. All I know, you have published to the world than an angel did present those plates to Joseph Smith." Whitmer replied "I now say I handled those plates. There was fine engravings on both sides. I handled them." And he described how they were hung and they were shown to me by a supernatural power. He acknowledged all. Turley asked him why the translation is not now true, and he said "I cannot read it, and I do not know whether it is true or not" ("Theodore Turley's Memorandums," Church Archives, handwriting of Thomas Bullock, who began clerking in late 1843. Willard Richards made slight changes to this text, which appears with minor modifications in HC, 3:307-08).

Thus, even in the depths of his alienation and bitterness, even when he was most inclined to doubt what he could not see for himself, even living, as he did, in the area of the worst anti-Mormon persecutions, when continuing to affirm faith in anything connected with the Latter-day Saint movement could have been personally dangerous, John Whitmer did not deny that he had "lifted and handled a metal object of substantial weight" (The quoted phrase comes from Anderson, Investigating the Book of Mormon Witnesses, 132). There was nothing mystical, visionary, or immaterial about his experience. It was a simple matter of hefting and examining something entirely tangible, something quite literally physical.

It appears, however, that John Whitmer's bitterness, or at least his skepticism, was short-lived. By 1856, he was the last survivor from among the Eight Witnesses. In 1861 Jacob Gates spoke with him for more than four hours, thereafter entering the following summary comment in his journal: “[H]e still testified that the Book of Mormon is true and that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of the Lord” (Journal of Jacob Gates for 18 March 1861, as cited in Anderson, Investigating the Book of Mormon Witnesses, 131). Fifteen years after that interview, in 1876, Whitmer wrote a lengthy letter to Mark Forscutt, which included the following:

Oliver Cowdery lived in Richmond, Mo., some 40 miles from here, at the time of his death. I went to see him and was with him for some days previous to his demise. I have never heard him deny the truth of his testimony of the Book of Mormon under any circumstances whatever. . . Neither do I believe that he would have denied, at the peril of his life; so firm was he that he could not be made to deny what he has affirmed to be a divine revelation from God. . . .

I have never heard that any one of the three or eight witnesses ever denied the testimony that they have borne to the Book as published in the first edition of the Book of Mormon. There are only two of the witnesses to that book now living, to wit., David Whitmer, of the three, and John Wh[itmer], one of the eight. Our names have gone forth to all nations, tongues and people as a divine revelation from God. And it will bring to pass the designs of God according to the declaration therein contained (Letter of John Whitmer to Mark Forscutt, dated 5 March 1876, cited in Richard L. Anderson, “Personal Writings of the Book of Mormon Witnesses,” in Book of Mormon Authorship Revisited: The Evidence for Ancient Origins, ed. Noel B. Reynolds [Provo, Utah: FARMS, 1997], 55-56).

In a letter to J. R. Lambert (6 May 1877, Community of Christ Archives number P13, f 311) John Whitmer wrote: “It is the same as it was from the beginning, and it is true. . . . I have never denied my testimony as to the Book of Mormon, under any circumstances whatever.”

Martin Harris was, of course, one of the three witnesses, but he was also Joseph’s first scribe during the translation of the book of Lehi in 1828, which translation was subsequently lost. During the period of translation, Martin wrote on more than one occasion that he saw the plates, and then sometimes they were covered.

The official testimonies of the three and eight witnesses are strengthened by a third tier of witnesses, family members who had contact with the plates as Joseph brought them into his New York farm home, as well as scribes who worked around the plates in the translation process. William Smith was 16 when his older brother outran pursuers and breathlessly carried the covered metal record into the house. William recounted lifting the plates that night, saying several times that they weighed about 60 pounds (William Smith on Mormonism [Lamoni IA: Herald House Steam Book and Job Office, 1883], 12). In a pulpit speech William told of feeling their outlines through cloth wrappings: “They were not quite as large as this Bible. . . . Could raise the leaves this way (raising a few leaves of the Bible before him). (“Sermon in the Saints’ Chapel” [Deloit, Iowa, 8 June 1884], Saints’ Herald 31 (1884): 643-44). And he added detail in an interview: “I could tell they were plates of some kind and that they were fastened together by rings running through the back” (Interview of William Smith with E. C. Briggs and J. W. Peterson, Zion’s Ensign, 13 January 1894, 6).

As an early secretary for her husband, Emma Smith remembered how the covered plates were on the translating table, and she sometimes moved them and once felt their shape through the linen covering: “They seemed to be pliable like thick paper, and would rustle with a metallic sound when the edges were moved by the thumb” (Emma Smith interview between February 4th and 10th, 1879, Saint’s Herald 26 [1879]: 290).

Lucy Mack Smith also reported on the experience of the Eight Witnesses:

In a few days, we were followed by Joseph and Oliver and the Whitmers who came to make us a visit and also to make some arrangements about getting the book printed soon after they came. They all, that is the male part of the company, repaired to a little grove where it was customary for the family to offer up their secret prayers, as Joseph had been instructed that the plates would be carried there by one of the ancient Nephites. Here it was that those eight witnesses recorded in the Book of Mormon looked upon the plates and handled them of which they bear witness in the following words [Testimony of the Eight Witnesses]. After the witnesses returned to the house the angel again made his appearance to Joseph and received the plates from his hands. We commenced holding meetings that night in the which we declared those facts that we knew to be true (preliminary manuscript in church archives. Later recorded in Lavina Fielding Anderson, Lucy’s Book [Salt Lake City: Signature Books, 2001] 455-57).

For a further summary of these encounters, see the supplemental article Those Confusing Book of Mormon Plates, particularly the section of that article, “The Physical Characteristics of the Plates.”

Critics of the Book of Mormon and Their Alternate Theory

Book of Mormon skeptics have a strong need to believe that the witnesses of the Book of Mormon were involved in some type of fraud and did not have the experiences to which they testified. They have proposed an alternate theory which depends on two different ideas. The first is that the witnesses did not actually see the plates at all but were manipulated into saying that they did by Joseph’s enthusiasm or by his charisma and some type of “mind control.” The second idea is that no one actually saw the uncovered plates at all but rather they only saw and felt a counterfeit, manufactured by Joseph Smith, which was kept constantly covered or in a box. A careful review of the details of the testimonies reported above renders both of these ideas as only desperate attempts to find an alternate explanation for the plates. The current “leaders” in this pitiful effort are Dan Vogel (Early Mormon Documents, 3:464-72; and “The Validity of the Witnesses’ Testimonies,” in American Apocrypha, ed. Dan Vogel and Brent Lee Metcalf [Salt Lake City: Signature Books, 2002], 79-121) and Grant H. Palmer (“Witnesses to the Golden Plates,” chapter 6 of An Insider’s View of Mormon Origins [Salt Lake City: Signature Books, 2002]). Both of these men largely avoid the Testimony of the Eight Witnesses in their writings. Palmer concludes “that the eight, like the three, saw and scrutinized the plates in a mind vision.” He paints the witnesses as simplistic believers who possessed the “shared magical perspective” of their culture. Vogel starts with a premise of flat disbelief: “There is simply no reliable proof for the existence of the supernatural.” His writings are then like tracking a conclusion in search of evidence. He claims that the Eight Witnesses saw the plates only through imagination, what he calls a “visionary” experience,” “the illusion of a group hallucination,” a sort of mental mirage. As for their hefting the plates, he apparently prefers the possibility of their lifting a weighted box, with something like group hypnosis persuading the eight men that they “viewed the plates through the lid of the box.”

One may well wonder what source material these anti-Mormons use to justify their claims of fraud against the prophet Joseph. One source is the Illinois governor Thomas Ford who was very much an enemy of the Church at the time of the martyrdom of the Prophet. He was surrounded by several ex-Mormons, including John C. Bennett, who were characterized by John Taylor as “some of the vilest and most unprincipled men in creation” (HC, 7:75). Ford’s story traces to no reliable source and appears to be outright folklore. He is quoted as saying that Joseph Smith admitted isolating a few followers and whipping up faith and guilt until they imagined they saw gold plates in an empty box. Ford’s story and its vague source are reprinted in Vogel, Early Mormon Documents, 3:333.

One statement in the above-mentioned quote of John Whitmer’s has become a pillar for the anti-Mormons’ alternate theory: “They were shown to me by a supernatural power.” Vogel insists this “would suggest something other than a normal, physical experience” (Early Mormon Documents, 5:240). And Palmer echoes: “This added detail of how he saw indicates that the eight probably did not observe or feel the actual artifact” (Palmer, Insider’s View, 205-06). It is interesting that David Whitmer often complained of misquotation in his many interviews. In this particular account the concept of miraculous display differs from all other John Whitmer accounts. Note also the bias of Theodore Turley in his quote above. He said to John Whitmer, “You have published to the world that an angel did present those plates to Joseph Smith.” Hence, the idea of a supernatural power later in the quote probably came from the interviewer, Turley himself, rather than from John Whitmer. Richard Lloyd Anderson has reported on twenty-three different reports from this last living survivor of the eight witnesses. Anderson writes:

Many are brief and general, but when details are given, they speak of seeing and/or handling as a normal event, except for Turley’s phrase “supernatural power” and Joshua Davis’s recollection that John declared: “I, with my own eyes, saw the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated, and I also saw an angel who witnessed to the truth of the Book of Mormon” (“A visit to John Whitmer,” Deseret Evening News, 12 April 1875). But John Whitmer’s own words counter the odd particulars in these two reports. As official church historian, he named the Three Witnesses, “into whose presence the angel of God came and showed them the plates, the ball, the directors, etc.” He then named himself and seven others “to whom Joseph Smith Jr. showed the plates” (Bruce N. Westergren, ed., From Historian to Dissident: The Book of John Whitmer [Salt Lake City: Signature Books, 1995], 56). Since John Whitmer personally states that the angel appeared only to the Three Witnesses, Davis obviously got that detail wrong in reporting what John told him. And six statements from John Whitmer speak of handling the plates, including the full Turley reference and John’s editorial farewell in the church newspaper, stating “that I have most assuredly seen the plates from whence the Book of Mormon is translated, and that I have handled these plates” (Latter Day Saint Messenger and Advocate 2 [March 1836]: 286-87). So, John Whitmer claimed to handle the plates as Joseph Smith showed them, not to behold them as displayed by an angel. Though interviews may be quite accurate, they are not transcripts. Davis correctly gave John’s statement about seeing the plates but confused the testimonies of the Three and the Eight Witnesses concerning seeing an angel (Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, volume 14, number 1, 2005, 23).

One additional source which the anti-Mormons rely upon is the favorite anti-Mormon theme of three apostates from the early Church, Stephen Burnett, Warren Parrish, and Ezra Booth. The idea seems to have originated from Ezra Booth who left the Church in 1831. He admitted that the Three Witnesses “frequently” testified that an angel appeared “and presented them the golden plates,” yet, after his disaffection, he noticed in section 17 of the Doctrine and Covenants, directed to the Three Witnesses, in referring to the plates, the breastplate, the sword of Laban, the Urim and Thummim, and “the miraculous directors,” verse 2 reads, “And it is by your faith that you shall obtain a view of them, even by that faith which was had by the prophets of old.” Booth’s illogical and warped interpretation of this verse was that the witnesses saw the plates “by faith or imagination.” This statement of Booth’s seems to have functioned as a promptbook for Parrish and Burnett when they wrote anti-Book of Mormon statements in 1838. Both claimed that “the plates were only visionary,” and they even quoted Martin Harris as saying that “he never saw the plates with his natural eyes, only in vision or imagination” (Vogel, Early Mormon Documents, 2:290-93). The simple fact is that Martin Harris never denied seeing the angel and the plates, and his testimony never wavered while he was alive.

Despite the passage of nearly two centuries and countless attempts, no credible counter-explanation has been offered by any critic for the experiences claimed by the Witnesses to the Book of Mormon. Their still-unimpeached testimony clearly demonstrates that the Book of Mormon plates and the other artifacts mentioned in the historical accounts were physical, that they were neither a figment of Joseph Smith's imagination nor generated by the credulous fantasies of a band of rustic religious zealots.

The First Book of Nephi

His Reign and Ministry

An account of Lehi and his wife Sariah, and his four sons, being called, (beginning at the eldest) Laman, Lemuel, Sam, and Nephi. The Lord warns Lehi to depart out of the land of Jerusalem, because he prophesieth unto the people concerning their iniquity and they seek to destroy his life. He taketh three days' journey into the wilderness with his family. Nephi taketh his brethren and returneth to the land of Jerusalem after the record of the Jews. The account of their sufferings. They take the daughters of Ishmael to wife. They take their families and depart into the wilderness. Their sufferings and afflictions in the wilderness. The course of their travels. They come to the large waters. Nephi's brethren rebel against him. He confoundeth them, and buildeth a ship. They call the name of the place Bountiful. They cross the large waters into the promised land, and so forth. This is according to the account of Nephi; or in other words, I, Nephi, wrote this record.

This “headnote” or “superscription” for 1 Nephi is part of the original text and was not added by modern writers. These headnotes may also be referred to as colophons. A colophon is a brief introduction or outline of what will follow. A colophon usually precedes the text to which it applies, but can also occur following the pertinent text and be a brief summary of what preceded in the book. Colophons are typical features of ancient Near Eastern (including Egyptian) literature.

There are other headnotes or colophons preceding some of the individual books of the Book of Mormon, and all are similarly a part of the original record (see the books of 2 Nephi, Jacob, Alma, Helaman, 3 Nephi, and 4 Nephi).

Most of the headers that precede each chapter in the Book of Mormon are later additions and are not part of the ancient record. There are, however, several chapter headers or colophons that are part of the original record. Examples include: Mosiah chapters 9, 23, and 24, Alma chapters 5, 7, 9, 17, 21, 36, 38, 39, and 45, Helaman chapters 7, 13, and 3 Nephi chapter 11. Some of the book and chapter headers are part of the original text but have modern day additions such as “chapters 7 to 16 inclusive.”

The colophon may extend beyond the headnote or heading. 1 Nephi 1:1-3, for example, also serves as a colophon for the book of 1 Nephi. Other examples of colophons which extend beyond the header include 1 Nephi 9 (the entire chapter); 1 Nephi 22:30-31; Jacob 1:2; 7:27; Jarom 1:1-2; Omni 1:1, 3-4; Words of Mormon 1:9; Mosiah 1:4; 9:1; Helaman 16:25; and 3 Nephi 5:8-26. We will have more to say about colophons in the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:1-3.

This chapter summarizes the events that took place in Jerusalem prior to the departure of Lehi's family into the wilderness.

1 I, Nephi, having been born of goodly parents, therefore I was taught somewhat in all the learning of my father; and having seen many afflictions in the course of my days, nevertheless, having been highly favored of the Lord in all my days; yea, having had a great knowledge of the goodness and the mysteries of God, therefore I make a record of my proceedings in my days.

verse 1 "I, Nephi" Is Nephi an authentic name of this period in Judah? We will comment many times on the considerable Egyptian cultural influence found among the Book of Mormon peoples. This is logical since Egyptian influence was pervasive in Judah at the time Lehi and his family departed Jerusalem. Brother John Gee has pointed out that Nephi is, indeed, an authentic Egyptian name of that period ("A Note on the Name Nephi," Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, volume 1, number 1, fall, 1992, 189; see also Frank L. Benz, Personal Names in the Phoenician and Punic Inscriptions: A Catalog, Grammatical Study, and Glossary of Elements [Rome: Biblical Institute, 1972], 192; Walter E. Crum, A Coptic Dictionary [Oxford: Clarendon, 1939], 240). See also the supplemental article, Names in the Book of Mormon.

"goodly parents" Does "goodly" mean simply good? It does have the archaic meaning of being "of good quality" (Random House Webster's College Dictionary).

It has been suggested that in this verse's context, "goodly" might be additionally interpreted as having adequate material possessions or being wealthy. Because Lehi was a man of material means, Nephi was able to enjoy the privilege of education “therefore I was taught somewhat in all the learning of my father”). We will read later in the Book of Mormon that King Benjamin will afford similar educational opportunities to his three sons (Mosiah 1:2). It appears that a righteous characteristic of “goodly parents” is their willingness to spend some of their resources educating their children and teaching them the things of God.

“learning of my father” Part of the “learning of my father” here must certainly have been the schooling Nephi received from Lehi in a special manner of writing which Nephi and the other Book of Mormon prophets would use to record the events and teachings contained in the Book of Mormon. In what language was the Book of Mormon written? For a discussion of this important topic, please read the supplemental article, The Language of the Book of Mormon.

“having seen many afflictions in the course of my days” We will later learn that at the beginning of the Book of Mormon story Nephi is “exceedingly young” (1 Nephi 2:16), and it will be speculated that he was probably between fourteen and sixteen years old. How could it be that at such a tender age he could already have experienced “many afflictions in the course of [his] days?” Keep in mind that we are now reading from the translation of the small plates of Nephi which Nephi did not even start to engrave until some thirty years after he and his family left Jerusalem (see 2 Nephi 5:28-33).

As mentioned, the first three verses of 1 Nephi chapter 1 are introductory and are written as a sort of brief preface, or colophon, to the Book of Mormon story. They have reference to Nephi’s experiences throughout these thirty years since the exodus from Jerusalem, up until the commencement of the writing of the record on the small plates of Nephi.

“mysteries of God” The term mystery is used two ways in the modern Church. Used positively, it means necessary or useful information that can be obtained only by revelation from God. It remains an unknown mystery unless and until the Spirit participates in communicating the concept. The scriptures always use “mysteries” in this positive sense. Consistent with this definition of mysteries, Harold B. Lee taught that a mystery is a spiritual truth which may be grasped only through divine revelation, a fact or concept that can truly be understood only with the help and influence of the Spirit of God. All spiritual truths are “mysteries,” or unknown or not understood, to those who are “hard-hearted” or “stiff-necked.” Those unresponsive to the Spirit are simply unable to understand them. This definition seems to pertain in this particular verse and throughout the Book of Mormon (Ye Are the Light of the World [Salt Lake City: Deseret Book, 1974], 211).

On the other hand, the term mysteries is used more commonly in the contemporary Church in a negative sense to mean information unnecessary for our salvation or for our personal progress. It is information that the Lord has chosen, for whatever reason, to withhold from us. At least, he has not afforded us a complete explanation. A preoccupation with such things can distract us from the really important truths that have been revealed and often leads to a loss of spiritual balance, then to contention, doubt, and apostasy.

2 Yea, I make a record in the language of my father, which consists of the learning of the Jews and the language of the Egyptians.

verse 2 “I make a record in the language of my father” If you have not yet read the article, The Language of the Book of Mormon, then please do so now.

3 And I know that the record which I make is true; and I make it with mine own hand; and I make it according to my knowledge.

verse 3 “I know that the record which I make is true” In this day when the Book of Mormon is frequently attacked and regarded by some “scholars” as a nineteenth century document, it is vital to remember that we Latter-day Saints are firmly committed to the authenticity of the book in absolute terms. It is not symbolic or allegorical. It is not “spiritual fictional.” It is a book about real people, real events, and real places, all in a finite ancient setting.

verses 1-3 In this commentary the point will soon be further made that there was prominent Egyptian cultural influence in Palestine at the time the Book of Mormon story began (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:4). As already mentioned, in Egyptian writing it is typical to begin a new chapter or section with a “header” or “colophon” which states the author and the sources and describes what is to be found in the material that follows. The colophon almost serves as a table of contents. It also may include a testimony of or a certification as to the authenticity of the record. These three verses comprise a continuation of the colophon begun in the header for this first section of the Book of Mormon.

Brother Hugh Nibley has written of the use of colophons in the Book of Mormon:

The major writings of the Book of Mormon are introduced and concluded by “colophons,” which have the purpose of acquainting the reader with the source of the material given and informing him of the authorship of the particular manuscript. . . In his opening colophon Nephi refers to the excellence of his parents, the good education his father has given him, tells how he has been blessed of heaven, describes the nature of the record he is writing and the sources from which he is taking it, including personal experience—“a record of my proceedings in my days”—and the important information that he can vouch for the truth of the record, having written it with his own hand. This advertising of one’s own virtues, in particular one’s reliability, is a correct and indeed a required fixture of any properly composed Egyptian autobiography of Nephi’s time—a time at which the writing of autobiographies was very fashionable (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 151-152).

The header or colophon for the next major section is the entire chapter 1 Nephi 9. To see why 1 Nephi 9 begins a new section, see the introductory comments for that chapter. As also mentioned, sometimes a colophon, or explanatory paragraph, may appear at the end of a section rather than at the beginning. Actually, all of 1 Nephi 9 serves as an explanation about what Nephi had been recording in the previous eight chapters as well as what he intends now to write. Nephi will often conclude his editorial colophons with “amen.” Note also that in 1 Nephi 14 he summarizes the preceding chapters and then again concludes with “amen.”

4 For it came to pass in the commencement of the first year of the reign of Zedekiah, king of Judah, (my father, Lehi, having dwelt at Jerusalem in all his days); and in that same year there came many prophets, prophesying unto the people that they must repent, or the great city Jerusalem must be destroyed.

verse 4 “it came to pass” This is the first time this introductory phrase is found in the Book of Mormon text. It is a phrase of Hebrew origin and is found very commonly in the Old and New Testaments and in almost every book of the Book of Mormon. Only the book of Moroni fails to use this phrase. Several variations of the phrase are also found in the Book of Mormon, including “now it came to pass” (Alma 62:37); “for behold it came to pass” (Alma 43:4); “but behold, it came to pass” (Alma 53:16); and “and it shall come to pass” (2 Nephi 29:13). Interestingly, the word “utchi” in the Mayan language has been found to have a similar meaning, and a Mayan language glyph or symbol has been identified which means the same (Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon, Joseph L. Allen, 31-33).

This phrase is used frequently in the scriptures to join consecutive events in historical narrative. In the Old Testament, the phrase “and it came to pass” reflects the Hebrew expression wa-y’hee, which means “and it was.” In the Book of Mormon, as in the Old Testament, it is often followed by a time phrase. This verse is an example: “in the commencement of the first year . . .” Other examples include “Now it came to pass that not many days after the battle” (Alma 3:20), or, “And it came to pass that in the same year” (Alma 50:37).

Chronological references in our commentary will be based on the helpful article by Randall P. Spackman, “Introduction to Book of Mormon Chronology: The Principal Prophecies, Calendars, and Dates,” a FARMS reprint.

The political setting in which the Israelites of Palestine existed from about 800 BC on, is perhaps best understood by acknowledging that Judah was a small country surrounded by three military superpowers. These were Egypt to the southwest and Assyria and Babylon to the northeast. These three were constantly contending with one another for land and influence. Palestine was caught in the middle and was sometimes reduced to the role of pawn in the hands of these three major powers. Between 732 and 722 BC, Assyria advanced into Palestine and carried away captive the major part of the Northern Kingdom of Israel with its capital in Samaria. It was the practice of the Assyrians to deport members of the upper classes of conquered peoples to other parts of their empire in order to dissipate rebellious energies. Assyria's influence was prominent in all of Palestine from that time until about 640 BC.

Lehi was probably born about 650 BC. Following Lehi's birth, Assyria's stifling influence began to wane and much needed reform began to occur. In 640 BC King Josiah assumed the throne and leadership of Palestine. Over the next twenty years he introduced sweeping religious reforms including the purging of pagan religious practices which had flourished in the Assyria-dominated Palestine. It seems likely that the Lord blessed Palestine during the period of Josiah's reign and allowed them some degree of independence from Assyria.

Josiah was tragically killed at Megiddo in 609 BC as he led a plucky little Judean force against an Egyptian advance through Palestine. Egypt was marching to support the last Assyrian king in a stand against the new Babylonian Empire. Josiah was apparently trying to limit Assyria's control over Judah. Following Josiah's death, Egyptian influence overran all aspects of Judah's political life. This Egyptian domination lasted until shortly before the Babylonian invasion.

After Josiah's death, his son Jehoahaz was made king, but the Pharaoh soon took him away to Egypt and put Jehoahaz's brother Jehoiakim on the throne. Egyptian control of Palestine lasted until the Egyptians were defeated by Babylon in the battle of Carchemish in 605 BC. Thereafter Babylon began to rule in Palestine.

Jehoiakim reigned in Judah for eleven years and then died in Jerusalem possibly at the hand of an assassin. Jehoiakim's eighteen-year-old son Jehoiachin succeeded his father. Jehoiachin resented the control of Palestine by Babylon and revolted against the firm hand of Babylon. Only three months after Jehoiachin had succeeded to the throne in 597 BC, Nebuchadnezzar (alternatively Nebuchadrezzar), the king of Babylon, defeated Jerusalem on March 10, 597 BC and a few weeks later on April 16, 597 BC began carrying away captive to Babylon Jehoiachin and thousands of others, including Ezekiel.

Nebuchadrezzar placed Jehoiachin's uncle, the twenty-one-year-old Zedekiah, on the throne. The Book of Mormon history begins in this year, 597 BC. Thus, we learn that the Babylonian deportation of Jews had begun already at the time of the preaching of the prophet Lehi.

For more detail of the historical setting of Jerusalem at the time of Lehi, see the supplemental article, Jerusalem at the time of Lehi.

“in the commencement of the first year of the reign of Zedekiah, king of Judah” It is of interest that in Hebrew writings, important historical moments are often referred to according to the reigning king (see Isaiah 6:1 and Ezekiel 1:1-2). We will learn that the important event being referred to here is the calling of Lehi.

There is actually some ambiguity in this verse if one reads it carefully. The coronation of Zedekiah probably took place in October of 597 BC (Randall P. Spackman, “Introduction to Book of Mormon Chronology: The Principal Prophecies, Calendars, and Dates,” a FARMS reprint, 7). It is not clear whether the calling of Lehi occurred in the commencement of the year 597 BC in which Zedekiah was installed as king or whether it occurred in the first year following Zedekiah’s formal coronation. In either case, the year 597 BC is the earliest time when Lehi might have prophesied at Jerusalem.

“at Jerusalem” In those days, towns, villages, or rural areas surrounding major cities were regarded as belonging to the cities. Thus, the area surrounding Jerusalem might well have been referred to as the “land of Jerusalem.” It is interesting that this pattern is carried on throughout the Book of Mormon. For example, the city of Zarahemla is the political and spiritual center of the greater land of Zarahemla. The temple and the political leadership of the “land” is located in the “city.” See also the commentary for 1 Nephi 3:22-23. The same convention made it possible for Socrates to be an Athenian, and nothing else, even though he came from the village of Alopeke, at some distance from the city. Hugh Nibley observed: “While the Book of Mormon refers to the city of Jerusalem plainly and unmistakably over sixty times, it refers over forty times to another and entirely different geographical entity which is always designated as ‘the land of Jerusalem.’ In the New World, also every major Book-of-Mormon city is surrounded by a land of the same name” (An Approach to the Book of Mormon, ed. John W. Welch, 3rd ed. [Salt Lake City: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1989], 101).

It is now clear that Lehi’s home was in the city of Jerusalem, probably in area of the city known as the Mishneh. We will also later read of “the land of our father’s inheritance” (1 Nephi 3:16) which is neither within the city of Jerusalem nor within the larger land of Jerusalem (see the supplemental article, Jerusalem at the time of Lehi).

“many prophets” Among these prophets who preached in those days in Jerusalem were the major biblical prophets Jeremiah and Ezekiel who were contemporaries of Lehi. Other prophet contemporaries of Lehi included Nahum, Huldah, Habakkuk, Urijah of Kirjath-jearim (Jeremiah 26:20), and Zephaniah. You can bet that the Lord would never allow a people to be destroyed without ample warnings through his prophets (Amos 3:7). A major devastation was in the offing, and “many prophets” were required to do the warning (see also Jeremiah 35:15). It was typical at that time for prophets to work largely by themselves, separate from other prophets. The Book of Mormon account is silent on any involvement Lehi might have had with his fellow prophets.

5 Wherefore it came to pass that my father, Lehi, as he went forth prayed unto the Lord, yea, even with all his heart, in behalf of his people.

verse 5 “Lehi, as he went forth” Hugh Nibley has provided us with helpful insight into this interesting man, Lehi:

Lehi was a man possessed of exceeding great wealth in the form of “gold and silver, and all manner of riches” (1 Nephi 3:16; 2:4). He had “his own house at Jerusalem” (1 Nephi 1:7); yet he was accustomed to “go forth” from the city from time to time (1 Nephi 1:5-7), and his paternal estate, the land of his inheritance, where the bulk of his fortune reposed, was some distance from the town (1 Nephi 3:16, 22; 2:4). He came of an old, distinguished, and cultured family (1 Nephi 5:14-16). The opening verse of the Book of Mormon explains the expression “goodly parents” not so much in a moral sense as in a social one: Nephi tells us he came from a good family and “therefore” received a good traditional education: “I was taught somewhat in all the learning of my father” (1 Nephi 1:1). He was of the tribe of Manasseh, which of all the tribes retained the old desert ways and was most active in the caravan trade. He seems to have had particularly close ties with Sidon (for the name appears repeatedly in the Book of Mormon, both in its Hebrew and Egyptian forms), which at that time was one of the two harbors through which the Israelites carried on an extremely active trade with Egypt and the West. He was proud of his knowledge of Egyptian and insisted on his sons learning it (Mosiah 1:4). He was a meticulous record keeper, conscientious to a fault, and given to addressing long moral tirades to youth (1 Nephi 1:16-17 and elsewhere). From his sons, Nephi and Jacob one gathers that Lehi must have been something of an expert in wine, olive, and fig and honey culture (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, 6:46-47).

When Lehi “went forth” to pray, he was probably exiting the city walls, just as Nephi himself did later when he said, “I went forth unto my brethren, who were without the walls” (1 Nephi 4:27).

It is presumed that Lehi’s call from the Lord to become his prophet occurred during Lehi’s experience described in the next few verses. It is notable that the way in which Lehi was called was similar to the manner in which other Hebrew prophets had previously been called. For a thorough discussion of this similarity, see Blake T. Ostler’s article, “The Throne Theophany and Prophetic Commission in 1 Nephi,” a FARMS reprint. For example, study the calls of Micaiah (1 Kings 22:19-22), Isaiah (Isaiah 6), and Ezekiel (Ezekiel 1:1-3; 21). The pattern is that of a righteous individual who becomes concerned because of the wickedness of his people. He prays on their behalf and is carried away in a vision in which he sees God on his throne attended by his heavenly council. He also receives a heavenly book which explains the impending disaster of his people. The vision is completed with a call or commission extended from the heavenly council to the individual to warn his people of their inevitable destruction. He is also forewarned that his people will reject him.

6 And it came to pass as he prayed unto the Lord, there came a pillar of fire and dwelt upon a rock before him; and he saw and heard much; and because of the things which he saw and heard he did quake and tremble exceedingly.

verse 6 “pillar of fire” Brightness or fire are often associated with visual manifestations of the Lord. Joseph Smith taught that God dwells in “everlasting burnings,” as will all of those who obtain the celestial degree of glory. Recall, for example, Joseph Smith’s First Vision (“a pillar of light . . . above the brightness of the sun”) and God’s appearance to Moses in a burning bush (Exodus 3:2) and on a flaming Mount Sinai (Exodus 19:18).

We cannot be certain who or what Lehi saw in the pillar of fire. Did he see the Lord? Since his vision of God himself is reported in the next stage of the vision, it seems more likely that he beheld on this occasion a messenger of God.

“he did quake and tremble exceedingly” It is unlikely that Lehi was quaking and trembling from fear. Those favored few who have been allowed into the presence of the Lord have reported feelings of a perfect peace which replaces all mortal concerns. It seems more likely he is reporting some type of phenomenon produced by the whisperings of the Holy Ghost. Joseph Smith also experienced this phenomenon (see D&C 85:6). There Joseph referred to “the still small voice, which whispereth through and pierceth all things, and often times it maketh my bones to quake.”

verse 7 Lehi was undoubtedly physically exhausted by this spiritual experience, so much so that he went home and went to bed! For other examples of how a profound spiritual experience can be physically enervating see 1 Nephi 17:47, 1 Nephi 19:20, Alma 27:17, Daniel 10:8, and Moses 1:9-10. The bed, in this experience, was also necessary because during this experience the prophet enters into a state wherein physical strength and consciousness are suspended while access to the heavenly realm is gained.

8 And being thus overcome with the Spirit, he was carried away in a vision, even that he saw the heavens open, and he thought he saw God sitting upon his throne, surrounded with numberless concourses of angels in the attitude of singing and praising their God.

verse 8 This verse might be referred to as Lehi's "throne theophany" or his vision of God upon his throne.

In these verses, keep in mind that we are reading from Nephi's abridgement of the record of his father Lehi (see verses 16-17). This verse, however, may be a verbatim quotation from Lehi's record. This might be suspected since Alma the younger will later quote these same words as a first-person from the prophet Lehi (see Alma 36:22).

"he was carried away in a vision" Apparently, this thing of being "carried away" and even transported to other locations while receiving a vision is common (see 1 Nephi 11:1; 2 Nephi 4:25; Moses 1:1; Revelation 21:10; D&C 137:1-2).

This vision experience of Lehi apparently is his call to become a prophet. Compare this vision, for example, with the one had by Isaiah when he was called to his ministry (Isaiah 6:1). This vision scene, including the throne of God, was seen also by other ancient Hebrew prophets when they were called (again, see Blake Ostler's, "The Throne Theophany and Prophetic Commission in 1 Nephi," a FARMS reprint). In actuality Lehi was allowed to meet in a heavenly council, and then he was dispatched by the council to proclaim the message of warning to Jerusalem (Jeremiah 23:18).

Contemporary scholarship has begun to notice and discuss a general pattern for the calling of ancient Hebrew prophets. That pattern is seen more clearly here in this verse than anywhere in the Bible. Actually, this verse could serve as a textbook illustration of prophetic visions and calls as they are recounted in ancient literature. This verse is clearly a vision of the divine council, known today from many ancient Near Eastern texts, that surrounds God and over which he presides. The Hebrew word sod, which denotes that council, also refers to the counsel issued from it. It can often be interchanged, in this sense, with the Greek word mysterion. In ancient conceptions, it is frequently the prophet's admission to this council as a mortal human being, and his knowledge of its decrees and secrets (counsels), that lends him authority as an earthly spokesman for God. "Surely the Lord God will do nothing," said the ancient Israelite prophet Amos of Tekoa, "but he revealeth his secret [sod] unto his servants the prophets" (Amos 3:7).

"attitude of singing" The word "attitude" in Webster's Random House Dictionary, 1998, as "manner, disposition, feeling, position."

9 And it came to pass that he saw One descending out of the midst of heaven, and he beheld that his luster was above that of the sun at noon-day.

verse 9 "One descending out of the midst of heaven" This is likely Jesus Christ.

10 And he also saw twelve others following him, and their brightness did exceed that of the stars in the firmament.

verse 10 “twelve others” These will become the twelve Old World apostles of Christ’s mortal ministry.

11 And they came down and went forth upon the face of the earth; and the first came and stood before my father, and gave unto him a book, and bade him that he should read.

verse 11 “the first” This is likely Jesus Christ who stood before Lehi (CR, October 1970, 28).

“a book” This “book” could have been a scroll, or it might have been comprised of tablets. It contained the judgment to be passed upon Jerusalem which was death and captivity in Babylon. This may be the same book shown to Ezekiel, a contemporary of Lehi, in which he read of “lamentations, and mourning, and woe” (Ezekiel 2:9-10; 3:1-3).

“bade him” “Bade” is the past tense of “bid.” To bid means to ask; to request; to invite.”

12 And it came to pass that as he read, he was filled with the Spirit of the Lord.

verses 11-12 The book suggests that perhaps such a spiritual experience as Lehi is having is not an entirely passive experience. He is required to participate actively to the extent, at least, of reading the book.

13 And he read, saying: Wo, wo, unto Jerusalem, for I have seen thine abominations! Yea, and many things did my father read concerning Jerusalem—that it should be destroyed, and the inhabitants thereof; many should perish by the sword, and many should be carried away captive into Babylon.

verse 13 This is the first use of the word “abominations” in the Book of Mormon text. It will yet be used some seventy-four additional times. It is a broad term and covers every thought, deed, and attitude that is offensive to God who “cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance” (Alma 45:16; D&C 1:31). All abominations are a reflection of the worldly or carnal mind and, therefore, of ungodliness.

14 And it came to pass that when my father had read and seen many great and marvelous things, he did exclaim many things unto the Lord; such as: Great and marvelous are thy works, O Lord God Almighty! Thy throne is high in the heavens, and thy power, and goodness, and mercy are over all the inhabitants of the earth, and, because thou art merciful, thou wilt not suffer those who come unto thee that they shall perish!

verse 14 After reading in the book, Lehi was moved to exclaim, or perhaps to sing, a hymn or psalm of praise to the Lord. It is likely that Nephi's quoting of his father in this verse and in the previous verse were direct quotes from the record of Lehi. See the discussion of the record of Lehi in the commentary for verses 16-17.

15 And after this manner was the language of my father in the praising of his God; for his soul did rejoice, and his whole heart was filled, because of the things which he had seen, yea, which the Lord had shown unto him.

16 And now I, Nephi, do not make a full account of the things which my father hath written, for he hath written many things which he saw in visions and in dreams; and he also hath written many things which he prophesied and spake unto his children, of which I shall not make a full account.

17 But I shall make an account of my proceedings in my days. Behold, I make an abridgment of the record of my father, upon plates which I have made with mine own hands; wherefore, after I have abridged the record of my father then will I make an account of mine own life.

verses 16-17 “an abridgement of the record of my father” It is clear that Nephi had access to a record written by his father Lehi. This record was actually written by Lehi himself. It was quite distinct and separate from any of the Book of Mormon plates. We have no way of knowing what material Lehi kept his record on, but probably it was perishable. A remark made by Lehi's son Jacob supports this view. Jacob notes, “We know that the things which we write upon plates must remain; but whatsoever things we write upon anything save it be upon plates must perish and vanish away” (Jacob 4:1-2). It seems likely that the record of Lehi was completed by the time Nephi began writing on the large plates of Nephi in about 590 BC. Both Nephi and his brother Jacob will make use of Lehi's record in their writings.

Nephi engraved a synopsis of this record onto his small plates of Nephi. The first eight chapters of 1 Nephi consist of that synopsis. Nephi also engraved an even more extensive synopsis of the record of Lehi onto the large plates of Nephi (1 Nephi 19:1). This synopsis was engraved onto the large plates of Nephi by Nephi himself. It was eventually abridged by the prophet Mormon and became the first segment of Mormon's plates of Mormon. On the plates of Mormon, it was called the book of Lehi (see the supplemental article, Those Confusing Book of Mormon Plates).

The account on the book of Lehi apparently began before the family departed Jerusalem and extended down to the reign of King Benjamin. Obviously, then, the book of Lehi contained more than the writings of Lehi and Nephi, since the reign of King Benjamin probably began in about 160 BC.

Joseph Smith began his translation of the Book of Mormon with the book of Lehi in the spring of 1828 with Martin Harris functioning as scribe. After the book of Lehi was translated, Martin had recorded some 116 pages of manuscript. The rest of the story is well known. Martin Harris borrowed the manuscript and took it home to show it to his wife and a few other selected individuals. The manuscript was apparently stolen from Martin. Thus, the translation of Mormon's abridgement of the book of Lehi was lost.

Fortunately, we do have another account of Lehi's writings in the book of Lehi. It is Nephi's abridgement of those writings found in these first eight chapters of 1 Nephi. Chapter 9 is an explanatory editorial comment written by the prophet Nephi. Nephi's own writings, the "account of my proceedings in my days . . . an account of mine own life," actually begins with 1 Nephi 10:1.

Verse 16 does tell us something about the contents of the record of Lehi. It contained "many things which he saw in visions and in dreams; and he also hath written many things which he prophesied and spake unto his children." These would likely include Lehi's experiences described in 1 Nephi 1:6-7; 1 Nephi 1:8-14; 1 Nephi 2:1-2; 1 Nephi 3:2-6; 1 Nephi 8:2-28; 1 Nephi 16:24-25, and 2 Nephi 1:4.

18 Therefore, I would that ye should know, that after the Lord had shown so many marvelous things unto my father, Lehi, yea, concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, behold he went forth among the people, and began to prophesy and to declare unto them concerning the things which he had both seen and heard.

verse 18 Does a prophet have a choice of whether or not he goes forth to preach and warn the people? Prophets are impelled and constrained by the Spirit. They speak out because they must. They cannot hold back what they know. If Lehi had not delivered the warning which God commanded him to deliver, the blood of the wicked who died without being warned would be on his hands (Ezekiel 3:17-19).

19 And it came to pass that the Jews did mock him because of the things which he testified of them; for he truly testified of their wickedness and their abominations; and he testified that the things which he saw and heard, and also the things which he read in the book, manifested plainly of the coming of the Messiah, and also the redemption of the world.

verse 19 "the book" This is the book first mentioned in verse 11 given to Lehi by the Lord during Lehi's vision.

20 And when the Jews heard these things they were angry with him; yea, even as with the prophets of old, whom they had cast out, and stoned, and slain; and they also sought his life, that they might take it away. But behold, I, Nephi, will show unto you that the tender mercies of the Lord are over all those whom he hath chosen, because of their faith, to make them mighty even unto the power of deliverance.

verse 20 "when the Jews heard these things they were angry with him" The word anger is used in the Book of Mormon largely to describe the feelings of those opposed to God's prophets and their teachings (see also 2 Nephi 33:5), or as a goal of Satan or dissenters to "stir" up anger in others (2 Nephi 28:20; Alma 27:2, 12; 43:8; 47:1; Helaman 4:4). Anger is also used to describe the displeasure of God (2 Nephi 15:25; Helaman 13:30, 39) and his righteous servants (2 Nephi 1:26; Alma 44:17). The use of the word "wrath" appears to be used synonymously with anger and is used most often to represent an attribute of God and not man (2 Nephi 19:19; 23:9, 13; Ether 9:20).

Elder Neal A. Maxwell explained, "God's anger is kindled not because we have harmed him, but because we have harmed ourselves" (Sermons Not Spoken, Salt Lake City: Bookcraft, 1985, 85).

Mankind's self-centered anger is clearly contrary to the Lord's will.

verses 19-20 "he testified . . . plainly of the coming of the Messiah, and also the redemption of the world" "And when the Jews heard these things they were angry with him; yea, even as with the prophets of old, whom they had cast out, and stoned, and slain; and they also sought his life, that they might take it away"

The Jews were angry enough at Lehi that they sought his life. Was this simply because he railed against them because of their sins? Probably not. There is likely a more important reason why the Jews were angry enough at Lehi to seek his life. The Hebrew scripture contained prophecies concerning both the Savior's first and second comings. At his first coming he would come as a Redeemer-Messiah and be killed by his own people (1 Nephi 19:10; Helaman 8:17-18; Moses 7:55). At his second coming he would come as a King-Messiah or a Conqueror-Messiah who would subdue all the enemies of Israel and set up a kingdom which would never be destroyed (Daniel 2:44).

The prophecies of the Messiah's first coming were offensive to the Jews. How could anyone think that they would kill their own Messiah. The Jews were outraged when their prophets began to preach that their Messiah would be a Jew and would be killed by his own people. Two prophets were killed for prophesying of Christ's first coming. They were Zenos (Helaman 8:19) and Zenock (Alma 3:17). The Jews became convinced that the story of the Redeemer-Messiah was a myth—a fable that some of the enemies of the Jews had concocted. It apparently became an established policy among the Jews to purge their scriptures of all references to the first coming. Any person caught teaching this prohibited doctrine—that the Messiah would be slain by his own people—was stoned to death. We wouldn't know of this purging except that we have another parallel set of scriptures that is much clearer on the topic. This other record is the brass plates, the scriptural record of Old Testament times kept by the remnant of the tribe of Joseph. See the commentary for 1 Nephi 5:14. By reviewing the prophecies from the brass plates, we are able to see how the Jewish scholars attempted to delete from the scriptural record all prophetic references to the first coming or mortal advent of the Redeemer-Messiah. Some Old Testament prophets who did testify and prophesy of Christ, but whose testimonies we do not have in the Old Testament record include Enoch (Moses 7:55), Abraham (Helaman 8:17-18), Zenos, Zenock, Neum (1 Nephi 19:10), and Ezias (Helaman 8:20).

It is no wonder that the Jews of Christ's day thought that he was simply an imposter. The scriptural background that might have conditioned them to expect the Messiah to be born as a Redeemer and not as a King had been destroyed. Even his own disciples had difficulty understanding his mission during his mortal advent. The Revelator said: "He was in the world . . . and the world knew him not. He came unto his own, and his own received him not" (John 1:10-11). All during Jesus's mortal ministry neither his apostles nor his followers recognized him in his true role as one who had come to be sacrificed for the sins of the world. From the beginning, they looked upon him as the long-awaited King-Messiah, and it was not until after his resurrection that they fully realized the truth about him. Even though Christ patiently taught his disciples that he would be crucified, they seemed not to understand. In the gospel of Mark, we read: "For he taught his disciples, and said unto them, The Son of man is delivered into the hands of men, and they shall kill him; and after that he is killed, he shall rise the third day. But they understood not that saying, and were afraid to ask him" (Mark 9:31-32; see also Luke 18:31, 33-34; John 20:9). On one occasion when his disciples James and John observed Jesus's being persecuted by the Samaritans, they asked him, "Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven, and consume them?" (Luke 9:54). They did not fully realize that the Redeemer-Messiah standing before them had not come to destroy anyone with fire from heaven. Rather he was the Lamb of God and was being prepared for the sacrifice. When the apostles saw the Savior's mental distress and depression at the Last Supper, they began to lose faith in him. On the way to the Garden of Gethsemane, the scripture says: "The disciples began to be sore amazed, and to be very heavy and to complain in their hearts wondering if this be the Messiah" (JST Mark 14:36).

The mind-set of the Jews at the time of Christ's mortal sojourn was that the time was ripe for the destruction of their Roman oppressors and the restoration of the Davidic kingdom as had been described by Daniel. They looked for a Conqueror-Messiah, not a Redeemer-Messiah. It is no wonder they looked beyond the mark.

Interestingly the Jewish rabbis and scribes who served to purge the Old Testament missed one whole chapter which in part describes Christ's first coming. It is Isaiah 53. Apparently, they misinterpreted this chapter. Just prior to this chapter Isaiah was writing about the glorious second coming (Isaiah 52). Then Isaiah proceeded to say that this glorified being of the second coming would be the same Messiah who would come earlier and be rejected (see Isaiah 53:2-5; 8-9; 11).

There may have also been a political reason why some of the Jews of Lehi's day sought his life. Let us briefly review the situation in that day (see also the commentary for verse 4 and the supplemental article, Jerusalem at the time of Lehi). Judah was a vassal state of Babylonia and was ruled by a puppet king, the twenty-one-year-old Zedekiah. In addition to Babylon, the other super powers were: Egypt, which had passed its prime but still had great cultural and economic influence, and Assyria, which had conquered and carried away captive the northern kingdom of Israel between 732 and 722 BC and was looking for other opportunities for conquest. Zedekiah, even though he was a puppet monarch allowed to “rule” by Babylon, resented the control that Babylon had over his kingdom, and he was considering forming an alliance with Egypt hoping to thus rid himself of Babylonian control. Lehi and Jeremiah and other prophets were warning against such an alliance. Two political parties thus existed in the land—the loyalists who stood by Babylon and the hotheads who looked to Egypt for help. These two were pitched against each other to the point of violence and bloodshed (Margolis and Marx, History of the Jewish People, 110). Since the prophets took a position opposite that of the political leaders of Judah and of many of the common Jews, they were in danger of being imprisoned, persecuted, and even killed.

Hugh Nibley has written insightfully of the history of the Jews:

From the Book of Mormon, we learn that through the centuries the Jews have had, as it were, a double history. Along with the conventional story of the nation as recorded in the official accounts kept closely under the control of the schoolmen, there has coexisted in enforced obscurity another Israel, a society of righteous seekers zealously devoting their lives to the preservation of the law of their fathers in all its purity and considering the bulk of their nation to have fallen into sin and transgression Often, they took to the desert and lived in family groups or communities there, teaching the law and the prophets to each other and looking forward prayerfully to the coming of the Messiah. There were many dreamers among them and real prophets as well, for they believed—unlike the scribes and doctors of official Jewry—in continued prophecy. Also, they practiced rites rejected by the majority of the nation and talked constantly of such things as the resurrection of the flesh and the eternities to come—things which, though they figure prominently enough in the apocryphal writings and also the Talmud, are hardly found at all in the official canon of Jewish scripture. They were a sober, watchful, industrious people, sorely distressed by the wickedness of their nation as a whole, and that nation would have nothing to do with them and did all it could to obscure the fact that they even existed. This briefly is the picture the Book of Mormon paints of Lehi and his ancestors, who had, from time to time, been driven out of Jerusalem for looking forward too eagerly for the Messiah. It is also the picture that now meets us in the abundant and ever-increasing documents which have come forth from the caves in Palestine almost in a steady stream since the first find was made in 1947. For some years the best scholars, Jewish and Christian, fought strenuously against accepting any of the so-called Dead Sea Scrolls as genuine—they must be medieval forgeries, it was argued, since the picture they presented was one totally at variance with the picture which had been delineated by the meticulous labors of generations of devoted scholars. . . . And as new scrolls are unrolled, the picture itself is unrolling—the picture of that other Israel that lived in obscurity and hope, first sketched out for us in the Book of Mormon and not for the first time emerging into the light of history (The World and the Prophets, ed. John W. Welch, Gary P. Gillum, and Don E. Norton [Salt Lake City: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1987], 211-13).

“I, Nephi, will show unto you that the tender mercies of the Lord are over all those whom he hath chosen, because of their faith, to make them mighty even unto the power of deliverance.” Don’t make the mistake of passing by this statement of Nephi’s and dismissing it as just so much rhetoric. How does one become “mighty even unto the power of deliverance” by one’s faith? If the reader chooses to digress and pursue this subject, he might wish to read the articles on the concept of faith in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapters 9, Revealed Faith, 10 Deliberate Faith and Revealed Faith, and 11, Other Notes on Faith.

The word “deliverance” means release from captivity, slavery, oppression or any restraint. From what did the people of Jerusalem need deliverance? For one thing, Lehi had prophesied to them that they would soon fall captive to Babylon. In addition, they (and all of us) require deliverance from the consequences of our sins. Once you demonstrate your faith by deliberately obeying the commandments of our Lord, then you will have the “power of deliverance.” Your sins will be forgiven and you will be judged worthy of a celestial resurrection.

The scriptural word chosen is most interesting. It means, of course, to be singled out by God for some purpose. Most commonly it means to be called of God while yet in the premortal world for a particular labor or purpose here on earth. Those receiving premortal appointments are also spoken of as having been “called,” “elected,” “ordained of God,” or “foreordained.” We may thus speak of a chosen or elect people.

To be chosen may also mean to be singled out for exaltation while here on earth, or to have received one’s election—to have been elected to celestial glory.

A scriptural passage commonly quoted in the Church is “Behold, there are many called, but few are chosen” (D&C 121:34). This passage means that many are called—selected or foreordained in the premortal world to particular purposes—but only a few are chosen here on earth—receive their election or exaltation.

A closely related concept is that of a covenant people. Those who are chosen in the premortal world also enter into a covenant with the Lord. For a discussion of the important concept of covenants and a covenant people, see the chapter titled, Covenants and Covenant Making in volume 2, chapter 3 in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine. Those who entered into the covenant relationship with the Lord in the pre-existence are born here on earth through the covenant line, the house of Israel. These are the Lord’s covenant people. Those covenants and promises which are binding on the Lord’s people have been defined for them in the Abrahamic covenant (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 14:8).

This chapter provides an account of Lehi's family's journey into the wilderness.

1 For behold, it came to pass that the Lord spake unto my father, yea, even in a dream, and said unto him: Blessed art thou Lehi, because of the things which thou hast done; and because thou hast been faithful and declared unto this people the things which I commanded thee, behold, they seek to take away thy life.

verse 1 “thou hast been faithful” Please keep in mind, as we study the Book of Mormon, that “faith,” “faithful,” and “faithfulness” do not refer to something held in the mind—something merely believed. Rather, they refer to something one deliberately does. Lehi was “faithful” because he consistently obeyed the Lord’s commands. He was true to his word. He did what he was told by the Lord.

2 And it came to pass that the Lord commanded my father, even in a dream, that he should take his family and depart into the wilderness.

verse 2 From the vantage point of your comfortable chair, don’t make the mistake of taking this commandment of the Lord lightly. This was a monumental and frightening assignment. The “wilderness” or desert was a challenging and foreboding place.

The word wilderness is used more than 300 times in the Book of Mormon. The word has different meaning depending on when and where it is used. For example, in the western hemisphere the term likely refers to thick forests or jungle in which travel is difficult and in which it is easy to become entangled and lost. However, in the Judean desert, wilderness is quite different from jungle. There are actually two Hebrew words for wilderness. The first is midbar which refers to lands which receive modest rainfall and therefore have sparse vegetation. These lands were used for pasturing cattle. The second is jeshimon which refers to desolate arid lands which receive little rain and have little drinking water available. Initially Lehi and his family would have encountered midbar, but later on, jeshimon.

There is a tendency for all of us to depersonalize the scriptures as we read them—to separate ourselves and our situations from those of the scriptural characters. After all, these people lived an awfully long time ago. In those days, it must have been easier for a prophet and his wife and family to leave their home and travel into a wilderness. Isn’t that what ancient prophets and their families are supposed to do? They were not like us . . . or were they? It is difficult to identify with someone who lived in centuries past and in far different circumstances. However, the scriptures will come alive for us if we can overcome this obstacle. These were real people very much like us. In most everything, they thought, felt, suffered, and gloried for the same reasons we do today. How would we respond if we were asked to give up everything for which we have worked and take our family into a wilderness, never to return?

3 And it came to pass that he was obedient unto the word of the Lord, wherefore he did as the Lord commanded him.

4 And it came to pass that he departed into the wilderness. And he left his house, and the land of his inheritance, and his gold, and his silver, and his precious things, and took nothing with him, save it were his family, and provisions, and tents, and departed into the wilderness.

verse 4 One might well ask: Why was father Lehi picked to lead this group to a promised land? What special qualifications did he have? What was his profession? How poor or wealthy was he? Because of the casual mention of tents in this verse and in 1 Nephi 2:15, it has been suggested that he was a merchant and trader who traveled, and while traveling, lived in a tent. Perhaps he was comfortable in a tent, and probably even knew the trade routes—especially the locations of favorable locations in which to set up camp. Alternate speculations have been made regarding Lehi’s profession. For example, John A. Tvednes, a specialist in Hebrew studies, argues that Lehi and Nephi were blacksmiths, hence their appreciation for fine metal craftsmanship and their ability to make metal tools and plates (“Was Lehi a Caravaner?”, a FARMS reprint). See the supplemental article, Lehi’s Life and Profession in Jerusalem. Lehi does seem to have been wealthy as noted here and in 1 Nephi 3:16, 22, and 25.

More recently the idea that Lehi was a caravaner and trader has been questioned (George Potter and Richard Wellington, Lehi in the Wilderness, 59-61). Apparently caravaners did not use tents. Ownership of tents seems to have been common amongst the descendants of Lehi (Mosiah 2:5-6), yet they were neither nomads nor long-distance travelers. The wealthy families of Palestine maintained vineyards and pasture lands some distance from the city where their urban homes were located. An example of this form of commerce is the parable of the householder who planted a vineyard in a far-off place (Matthew 21:33-34). Householders, such as the house of Lehi would have required tents and camels for these operations. Potter and Wellington provide the following lines of evidence in support of the idea that Lehi and his sons were anything but professional desert haulers:

1. A tradition in the Middle East was that the sons from their earliest years grew up working beside their father in the family trade. Lehi’s eldest sons showed little evidence of being trained in the caravan trade nor of having earned the nobility manifested by an experienced caravan overseer. They complained bitterly of having left the comforts of Jerusalem and their family wealth. After a relatively easy trek from Jerusalem to the valley of Lemuel with its sheltering cliffs, fresh water supply, and abundant food, Laman and Lemuel became convinced they would perish in the wilderness (1 Nephi 2:11).

2. Sariah, Lehi's wife, did not display the hardened disposition of a mother whose family traveled long periods of time away from home. When her sons made a short journey to Jerusalem from the valley of Lemuel she began to "mourn," supposing her sons had perished in the wilderness (1 Nephi 5:1-2).

3. When the going got tough, Lehi does not appear to have been a seasoned caravan captain. In times of difficulty, he began "to murmur against the Lord" (1 Nephi 16:20). It was here that Nephi, perhaps still a teenager, took the lead.

4. If Lehi did lead caravans, he would have known some basic navigational skills. Alma wrote that they "tarried in the wilderness, or did not travel a direct course" when they did not give heed to the Liahona (Alma 37:41-43). In other words, during certain parts of the journey, the family became lost.

5. Finally, an experienced and well-equipped caravaner could have made the journey from Jerusalem to Dhofar in less than four months. The fact that Lehi took eight years would seem to indicate that he had neither the knowledge nor the experience necessary to make a speedy journey.

Whatever Lehi's profession may have been and whatever the extent of his material estate, would it be surprising if God selected a man for this important calling who, in addition to his spiritual preparation, already had skills that qualified him for the task at hand?

"And it came to pass that he departed into the wilderness" By what route did Lehi and his family travel from Jerusalem to the Red Sea? At the time of Lehi, there were well known trade routes which ran from Jerusalem to the Gulf of Aqaba ("The route of Salt, Sugar, and Balsam Caravans in the Judean Desert," GeoJournal 2/6 [1978]: 549-56). There are four possible routes of escape that Lehi could have used to reach the shores of the Red Sea. Traveling south from Jerusalem there are two routes. One goes straight south to Hebron, through Arad, and then to the Jordan Valley and down to the Red Sea. The other is more to the east and closer to the Dead Sea. It passes through the Oasis of Ein Gedi, on the west shore of the Dead Sea, then south to the Red Sea keeping at first to the west shore of the Dead Sea. There are also two routes which pass eastward from Jerusalem, south of Jericho and to the east side of the Dead Sea. Eventually both of these join the Jordan Valley south of the Dead Sea and lead toward the Red Sea. It would seem that one of the latter two routes is most likely since they allowed Lehi to head immediately for the wilderness on his way to Arabia. Lehi would have wished to travel quickly, so he would no doubt have chosen an existing route in order to escape Zedekiah's sphere of influence as quickly as possible. It is doubtful that Lehi would have followed either of the two routes to the south which passed through lands controlled by Zedekiah. At the time of Christ, the area across from Jericho over the Jordan River was known as the "wilderness of Judea." The scriptures tell us that John the Baptist was “preaching in the wilderness of Judea” (Matthew 3:1).

Lehi’s use of camels is a certainty because they brought with them tents, each of which doubtless weighed in excess of 250 pounds. To westerners, a camel is an odd curiosity, but to one crossing ancient Arabia, this animal was a lifeline. Of constant concern to Lehi would have been the welfare of his camel herd. Dromedaries break down on mountains and rocky paths. Wilfred Thesiger, famous for his explorations of Arabia, wrote in his journal, “If we did not find grazing, the camels would collapse, and that would be the end of us all” (Taylor, Traveling the Sands, 132). For this reason, despite its bad breath and belligerent temperament, the camel is beloved by the Arab. According to the Qur’an it is a gift from God. We do not know if Lehi shared the same admiration for the camel as do the Arabs, yet despite its constant companions—the flies and four-inch camel spiders—and its habit of spitting at or biting its handlers, the camels were vital assets.

“the land of his inheritance” It seems likely that Lehi and his forbears had lived in the land of Jerusalem for many years, perhaps since before the time Assyria conquered the northern Kingdom of Israel between 732 and 722 BC. “The land of his inheritance” was, however, a land quite apart from Jerusalem. See 1 Nephi 3:16 and its commentary.

It is interesting to note that Lehi and his family were likely not the only people who left Jerusalem for northwest Arabia shortly before the Babylonian destruction of the Holy City. Oral traditions of several Jewish colonies tell of others. Abu Hurairah, an early Islamic period geographer, wrote of the Jews who settled in northwest Arabia to escape the persecution of Nebuchadnezzar (Northern Hijaz, 196-97). According to Reuben Ahroni: “As a result of this prophecy of doom (Jeremiah 38:2), seventy-five thousand courageous men . . . who firmly believed Jeremiah’s prophecy of impending national catastrophe—accompanied by priests, Levites, and slaves . . . crossed the Jordan River and went into the desert,” eventually making their way to Yemen, all the way to the south coast of the Arabian Peninsula (Yemenite Jewry, 25). A similar story of escape from Nebuchadnezzar is told by the descendants of the Jewish colony in India (Meyer, “Jews of Cochin”).

5 And he came down by the borders near the shore of the Red Sea; and he traveled in the wilderness in the borders which are nearer the Red Sea; and he did travel in the wilderness with his family, which consisted of my mother, Sariah, and my elder brothers, who were Laman, Lemuel, and Sam.

verse 5 “And he came down by the borders near the shore of the Red Sea” In Arabic, the name of the mountains in northwest Arabia, the Hijaz, means something like the “border” or “barrier.” In the Semitic or Hebrew language, the words for mountain and border share a common derivation—the Hebrew word gebul means border. Gebul cognates with Arabic jabal (jebel, djebel), which means mountain. Dr. Hugh Nibley has also taught that in the ancient Mesopotamian and Egyptian languages the word borders meant mountains.

“my mother, Sariah” The name Sariah, as a feminine given name, is not found in the Bible. The skeptic might thus suggest that this name was an invention of Joseph Smith. Is it an authentic ancient name of the period?

What is all the more significant is that "previous to its discovery as a woman's name . . . Sariah was known from the Bible as a male name, transliterated Seraiah in English, though spelled the same in Hebrew . . . the name seems to have been common in the time of Jeremiah, a contemporary of Lehi and his wife Sariah (see Jeremiah 36:26; 40:8; 51:59, 61; 52:24)." Book of Mormon scholars have discovered that "Sariah" is an authentic ancient Semitic feminine name. In the early 1990s, Dr. Jeffrey R. Chadwick demonstrated that the name "Sariah" appears in ancient Aramaic (a Semitic language related to Hebrew) papyri discovered in Egypt. "The Hebrew name Sariah, spelled sryh, has been identified in a reconstructed form as the name of a Jewish woman living at Elephantine in Upper Egypt during the fifth century BC" Chadwick noted (Jeffrey R. Chadwick, "Notes and Communications: Sariah in the Elephantine Papyri," Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 2, no. 2, 1993: 196–200).

While the name (or an English variant thereof) was only attested in the Bible as a masculine name, the discovery of the Elephantine papyri firmly demonstrates that "Sariah" is an authentic Hebrew feminine name. This Sariah was a member of a Jewish colony. Although "the language of the document is Aramaic," a language closely related to Hebrew, the translators of the papyri "specify that the names are Hebrew." This should not come as a surprise, as Jews from Israel migrated into Egypt before and after the time of Lehi, bringing with them their particular cultural habits (including names and religious traditions) to that part of the world.

Sariah is mentioned by name four times (1 Nephi 2:5; 5:1, 6; 8:14). As one of the few named women in the Book of Mormon, Sariah's character and role in the narrative has garnered considerable attention by readers. The name Sariah means "Yahweh is prince" and would've been pronounced either sar-yah or sar-yahu in ancient Hebrew.

“my elder brothers, who were Laman, Lemuel, and Sam” It is of interest to note that in the Egyptian culture the two eldest sons were often given names that were similar to each other. These are referred to as "pendant names." Examples include Qabil and Habil, Harut and Marut. Laman and Lemuel might qualify to be "pendant names."

Hugh Nibley has written: "Whether or not Nehi and Nehri are in any way related to the name Nephi (there are other Egyptian names that come nearer) remains to be investigated. But no philologist will refuse to acknowledge the possible identity of the Book of Mormon Korihor with the Egyptian Kherihor, and none may deny, philologist or not, a close resemblance between Sam and Sam (the brother of Nephi)" (Lehi in the Desert, 20-21). For commentary on the derivation of the name Sam, see the supplemental article, Names in the Book of Mormon.

“he traveled in the wilderness in the borders which are nearer the Red Sea”

Along the eastern shore of the Gulf of Aqaba, there are two distinct mountain ranges that parallel one another. One of the two is, of course, “nearer the Red Sea” on the west side of the other. This shoreline range of mountains begins about forty miles south of the northern end of the Gulf of Aqaba and continues for another forty miles to where it ends about twenty miles north of the southern end of the Gulf. When this shoreline range was visualized in 1995 by George Potter and Richard Wellington, they reasoned that the valley of Lemuel (see verse 8) had to be in this range and be next to a canyon that opens upon the Red Sea. After all, the text in these verses makes it clear that while Lehi “traveled in the wilderness in the borders [mountains] which were nearer the Red Sea,” they camped in a valley (Lemuel) that was in the borders (mountains) (George D. Potter and Richard Wellington, Lehi in the Wilderness, Cedar Fort: Springville, Utah, 5).

If one were writing a book in the nineteenth century about a group of people escaping from Jerusalem, one would surely have them escape southwest to Egypt since all such flights into exile in the Bible follow that route (1 Kings 11:26-40; Jeremiah 43:1-7; Genesis 12:10; 46:1-7). Escaping southeast to Arabia would be quite unexpected. Today, however, there is a growing body of evidence, only made available long after Joseph Smith’s day, for extensive contacts between Arabia and Jerusalem in antiquity (Yigal Shiloh, “South Arabian Inscriptions from the City of David, Jerusalem,” Palestine Exploration Quarterly 119/1 [1987]: 9-18). We know that the Lord was leading Lehi and his family to a promised land in the New World, not into exile.

6 And it came to pass that when he had traveled three days in the wilderness, he pitched his tent in a valley by the side of a river of water.

verse 6 Having arrived at the shores of the Red Sea, Lehi and his party decided to continue on for another three days, after which they established camp “in a valley by the side of a river of water.” They will live in this camp for months and perhaps years.

The expression “river of water” might seem to be redundant, since we are used to thinking of rivers as consisting only of water. In the Middle East, however, most rivers do not contain water, but rather are wadis which are washes that contain water only following a rain storm. Thus, it is entirely appropriate and even necessary to use the phrase “river of water.”

There are a few factors that are pertinent about the area in which Lehi and his family are making their camp. First, this area, also known as Midian, was rather heavily populated in antiquity (M. C. A. MacDonald, “Along the Red Sea,” in Civilizations of the Ancient Near East, ed. Jack Sasson et al. [New York: Charles Scribner’s Sons, 1995], 2:1350). Hence it may be incorrect to think that the family was completely isolated in this region. Second, this verse makes it clear that they camped about three days' journey south or southeast of the point at which they initially reached the Red Sea. They would have first seen the Red Sea at what is now modern Aqaba. Thus their camp must be a distance of between forty-five and seventy-five miles, depending on their speed and endurance, particularly the speed and endurance of their camels. Third, the camp lay next to a "river of water" that "emptied into the Red Sea" (verse 8). Lehi described this stream as "continually running" (verse 9). Fourth, the evident impressive character of the valley where they located their camp led Lehi to term the valley "firm and steadfast, and immovable" (verse 10).

Thus, we do have a few clues about the camping place. The most astonishing is the claim that there was a "continually running" stream of water in that part of Arabia. After all, students of geography believe that Arabia has been largely a desert for thousands of years and that water flows only after heavy rains. At the time the Book of Mormon was first published, the claim that a river ran in arid northwestern Arabia could not be checked. Western explorers did not venture into this remote area until well after 1830. The Saudi Arabian Ministry of Agriculture and Water, with the assistance of the U.S. Geological Service, spent forty-four years surveying the kingdom's water resources. Their study consisted of seismic readings, surface and aerial surveys, and even land satellite photo analysis. They concluded that "Saudi Arabia may be the world's largest country without any perennial rivers or streams" (Water Atlas of Saudi Arabia, XV). But there is an unforeseen surprise in the mountains south of Aqaba, a surprise that Joseph Smith could not have known about.

In 1952, Hugh Nibley pointed out that the camp had to lie near "the Gulf of Aqaba at a point not far above the Straits of Tiran" where Lehi, "perhaps from the sides of Mt. Musafa or Mt. Mendisha," beheld that the stream of water ran into the Red Sea (Lehi in the Desert; The World of the Jaredites, 85). In 1976 Lynn and Hope Hilton visited the area and proposed that the likely location of the camp was at the oasis Al-Bad in Wadi al-lfal, about seventy-five miles south and east of Aqaba. Although any running water at the oasis was seasonal, flowing only after heavy seasonal rains, there were springs. Besides, the distant hills were impressive to behold. Thus, the Al-Bad oasis seemed to be a good fit with Nephi's narrative.

More recently George D. Potter and Richard Wellington have described an exciting new candidate in Arabia for the river of Laman and the valley of Lemuel (Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, volume 8, Number 1, 54-63). In May of 1995 Potter, Wellington, and some friends were searching for one of the Arabian candidates for Mount Sinai when they made an unexpected discovery. (Their friends had rejected the popular belief that Mount Sinai is found in the Sinai Peninsula in Egypt. Instead, they believed the Apostle Paul was correct when he wrote that Mount Sinai was located in Arabia—Galatians 4:25.) Traveling near the eastern coast of the Gulf of Aqaba, they stopped at the oasis town of al-Bada'a, the town known anciently as Midian, the hometown of Moses's father-in-law, Jethro, the high priest of Midian. From here they were directed to Maqna, a small isolated village twenty miles west of al-Bada'a on the Gulf of Aqaba. According to local tradition, Maqna had been the first camp of Moses after the Israelites had crossed the Red Sea at the mouth of the Gulf of Aqaba. They then wandered north along the coast of the Gulf of Aqaba. Rounding the base of a cliff, they came upon a magnificent narrow canyon which opened onto the sea in a palm-lined cove. This was the wadi Tayyib al-Isim ("Valley of the Good Name"). They decided to walk up the spectacular wadi or canyon. After three and three-quarter miles it opened into a beautiful oasis upper valley with several wells and three large groves of date palm trees. A stream started in the canyon near its upper end and ran down the wadi virtually all the way to the sea. From the vegetation in the valley and the erosion on the rocks, it appeared that the small desert river flowed continually night and day, year after year. The steep canyon walls would have afforded Lehi and his family enough shade to make the summer heat tolerable. The valley might have offered security to Lehi's family as it was off the main route southward.

Lehi and his family would have come into this valley from its upper end and not from the coast. Note that this verse did not say that Lehi found the river and the valley. Rather he "pitched his tent in a valley by the side of" the river. Perhaps they were even shown the camp site by friendly local inhabitants. They maybe even paid something to stay there. Or, perhaps they simply discovered an uninhabited valley, just as it exists today.

Potter and Wellington have written an exciting description of this purported valley of Lemuel (Lehi in the Wilderness, 32-34):

The grandeur of the valley is difficult to describe in words or even portray in photographs. It is a narrow gorge cut through a massive granite mountain. It consists of three sections which we will refer to as the upper valley, the canyon of granite, and the lower canyon.

The upper valley constitutes an oasis that lies at the south end of a twelve-mile long wadi—known locally as Wadi Tayyib al-Isim—that leads down from the north. The upper valley site is like a pleasant jewel, spread out over approximately one square mile with several hundred palm trees and twelve wells that local residents call the Waters of Moses.

The upper valley ends as the long, descending wadi veers west and runs against the eastern granite cliffs of the shoreline mountains. But rather than forming the usual impassable barrier, the coastal mountains have been breached by a narrow canyon. This deep fracture in the granite mountain border that provides a passage to the sea, we call the canyon of granite. Tim Sedor, a colleague in the exploration effort, has surveyed the length of this section of the Wadi Tayyib al-Isim to the Gulf of Aqaba; he concludes that it is approximately three and three-quarter miles.

Flash floods are a winter-time danger in this part of Arabia. If the family of Lehi and Sariah had camped here in the hot summer months, they could have stayed in the shade of the canyon. During the rainy winter months, however, campers would wisely move out of the canyon up the much wider oasis that the upper valley offers. Here, just outside the canyon in the upper valley, can be found the remains of ancient encampments which date to the Iron Age (early second to mid-first millennium BC). A number of channels are cut in the floor of the upper valley, probably cut by flash floods. However, next to the ancient camp site we found a piece of smooth rounded quartz. This was clear evidence that the stream once flowed as high up the wadi as the highest campsite.

We found old pottery shards throughout the campsite, an area of about one acre. Could these stone structures have been the remains of Lehi's camp? We have no way of determining this. However, we found that a team of international archaeologists led by Michael Ingraham visited the ruins in the upper valley. They classified the site as an 'encampment,' and dated some of the pottery shards to Lehi's time.

The final section of our valley of Lemuel is the lower canyon and the beach. The granite canyon opens out into a flat gravel floor just a few feet above sea level. This level area at the mouth of the canyon is about three-eighths of a mile long. This is the most impressive section of the canyon. Here the height of the canyon walls rises over two thousand feet straight up from the canyon floor. The lower canyon provides an important clue that wadi Tayyib al-Isim is the valley of Lemuel. Though the valley of Lemuel carried a stream to the sea, when Lehi first came into the valley he could not see from his camp that the river empties into the sea; at least that is implied by 1 Nephi 2:6, 9. Our candidate for the valley is less than four miles long, yet its towering walls permit seeing the Red Sea only during the last 375 feet as one descends to the coast. The beautiful palm-laden beach cove that one finally encounters is a spectacular scene.

Brother Potter has re-visited this site several times at various times of the year and has always found the river flowing, in fact the volume of water in the river seems rather constant throughout the year. The spring which feeds the river comes from an underground reservoir system. The pattern of rock erosion in the canyon suggests that a substantial river has flowed in that location for a very long time.

Since their initial discovery of wadi Tayyib al-Isim in 1995, Potter and Wellington have explored the entire Arabian shoreline of the Gulf of Aqaba. They have found no other streams in a wadi near the Gulf of Aqaba, and nothing they have learned subsequent to 1995 has given them any reason to change their opinion. Brother Potter concludes his article: "Are we witnesses of the river Laman and the valley of Lemuel? In my view, the characteristics of the site are compelling evidence that this is so."

verses 5-6 I was deeply moved by the account of George Potter's and Richard Wellington's attempt to retrace Lehi's trail from the modern city of Aqaba to the valley of Lemuel—wadi Tayyib al-Isim (Lehi in the Wilderness, 27-28). When they first discovered the wadi Tayyib al-Isim, three years prior, they had traveled through al Bada'a and Maqna and then come back north to Tayyib al-Isim. This "loop" route was about 122 miles from Aqaba, far too long for laden camels to have traveled in three days. They reasoned that Lehi would have reached the valley more directly along a shoreline trail. They expected the effort to find the proposed site of the valley of Lemuel along a direct trail from the north to be difficult, as the shoreline mountains are a maze of wadis that turn in all directions. What concerned them the most was that the distance from Aqaba to Tayyib al-Isim was nearly seventy-five miles on the map, and camels have a maximum three-day range of approximately seventy-five miles. Thus, the trail to the valley of Lemuel had to be nearly straight. I will let Potter and Wellington tell their own inspiring story:

Confidently we headed south along the shoreline [from Aqaba] into Arabia. Nephi wrote that they [had come] "by" the mountains that were "near" the Red Sea (1 Nephi 2:5). About five miles to our left were the mountains of the Hijaz range, the mountains by the Red Sea. To our right were the waters of the Gulf of Aqaba of the Red Sea. After twenty-five miles, we came to the town of Haql, the site of a caravan stop during ancient times. From Haql the ancient trail headed east into the mountains, and then south to al-Bada'a. We had traveled this route and knew it took over 122 miles [from Aqaba] to reach wadi Tayyib al-Isim. Lehi could not have used the caravan route to al-Bada'a and then to the valley from there, as a laden camel cannot travel 122 miles in three days.

We decided to continue following Nephi's initial instructions and maintained our course down the shoreline. Fifteen miles south of Haql, we came to the shoreline mountains, which extended into the sea and blocked our passage. To our left was a wadi that led into the mountains. It was the only valley leading into the mountains that we had passed since leaving Haql. If this were Lehi's trail, then he had no choice but to enter this wadi. We checked Nephi's next instructions: "And he traveled in the wilderness in the borders which are nearer the Red Sea (1 Nephi 2:5, italics added)." We knew these were the mountains "nearer" the sea and Nephi said they went "in" them.

We entered the wadi and followed east for six miles and then south for three more. It's bed was good for camels. The wadi finally ended at a rise that opened into another wadi that led south. It was this wadi that really impressed us. It ran straight through the mountains. None of us had seen such a wadi in Midian. It was long and straight and had no obvious exits. As Timothy put it, "if Lehi were a bowling ball, he would have just kept rolling down this wadi until the ball came to its end." In other words, if Lehi entered this wadi, he would have followed it to its natural end. We headed down the wadi noting as we went that its foliage was typical for Midian—practically none! Here and there we saw an occasional acacia tree barely hanging on to life. Certainly, there were no signs of water, let alone a river! Our trail odometer read seventy miles, and the wadi had the same arid landscape. We were beginning to think we would find nothing in the seventy-five mile range that camels could travel in three days. Just then the wadi turned due west and headed directly toward the tallest shoreline mountains. Three miles later, having used only Nephi's directions, we were inside the great granite canyon we had discovered three years earlier. Stepping outside our truck, we were standing next to its river of continually flowing water. For the past twenty-two miles, we had actually been driving down the upper section of wadi Tayyib al-Ism, the valley of Lemuel.

7 And it came to pass that he built an altar of stones, and made an offering unto the Lord, and gave thanks unto the Lord our God.

verse 7 “he built an altar of stones” The expression “altar of stones,” as opposed to the more common English form “stone altar,” is standard Hebrew construction. Other similar examples from the Book of Mormon text include: “plates of brass,” “rod of iron,” “land of promise,” “skin of blackness,” and “yoke of iron.”

“made an offering unto the Lord” By what authority did Lehi make this offering? The power to officiate over the offering of sacrifices in that day was held by the tribe of Levi, and so far, as we know no one in Lehi's traveling party was of the tribe of Levi and held that specific priesthood. Lehi was a descendant of Joseph rather than Levi and Aaron. Because he was a prophet, he held the Melchizedek priesthood by which authority he made this offering.

Religious life in ancient Israel derived much of its meaning from the offering of sacrifices. This was true for Lehi and Sariah and their family members. How do we know? Because at critical moments during their first months away from their Jerusalem home they offered sacrifices. Their acts of devotion are consistent with the Mosaic law and its deep influence in the lives of believers. There will be two occasions in addition to that one described in this verse when Lehi offered sacrifices. In this verse, obviously, it is on the occasion of the family's arriving at their first campsite. The other two instances will be when the sons of Lehi return from Jerusalem with the plates of brass (1 Nephi 5:9), and when the sons return with the family of Ishmael (1 Nephi 7:22). In each instance, we will learn that Nephi specifically ties these offerings to expressions of thanksgiving. It is interesting to note that such offerings of thanksgiving were the so-called peace offerings that are mandated in the law of Moses (see Leviticus 3:1-17; 7:11-21; 22:29-30). According to Psalm 107, a person was to “sacrifice the sacrifices of thanksgiving” for safety in journeying (verse 22), whether on water or through the desert (see verses 4-6, 19-30). Jonah, for example, having been delivered from the fish that had swallowed him, prayed to the Lord, saying, “I will sacrifice unto thee with the voice of thanksgiving” (Jonah 2:9). Joseph Smith could not have known which type of sacrifices were appropriate on which occasions, but Lehi knew.

Burnt offerings, on the other hand, present an entirely different matter, and Nephi will mention them in 1 Nephi 5:9 and 7:22. They are for atonement rather than thanksgiving (see Leviticus 1:2-4). This type of offering presumes that someone has sinned and that therefore the relationship between God and his people has been ruptured, requiring restoration.

Let us examine the two instances of Lehi's offering burnt offerings. On one occasion, Lehi will offer such sacrifices after the return of his sons from Jerusalem with the plates of brass in hand (1 Nephi 5:9). Had there been sin on this journey? The answer is yes. We will learn that the older two brothers had beaten the younger two, drawing the attention of an angel (1 Nephi 3:28-30). There was also the matter of the unforeseen death of Laban. Even though Nephi knew through the Spirit of God that the Lord had commanded him to kill Laban and thus justified Laban's death, Lehi was evidently unwilling to take any chances that the relationship between God and his family had not been securely reconciled, so he offered burnt offerings—exactly the right sacrifice for the occasion. On the other occasion, Lehi will offer burnt offerings after the sons return from Jerusalem with the family of Ishmael in tow (1 Nephi 7:22). Had there been sin? Again, the answer is yes. The older sons had sought to bind Nephi and leave him in the desert to die (1 Nephi 7:6-16). Even though they had repented and sought Nephi's forgiveness (1 Nephi 7:20-21), Lehi evidently still felt the need to offer burnt offerings for atonement (S. Kent Brown in FARMS Insights, volume 21, 2001, 2-3).

In building this altar of stones, Lehi appears to have followed the pattern set by other ancient prophets and leaders: Noah built an altar after surviving the Flood (Genesis 8:20); Abraham built altars in several places where he had important spiritual experiences (Genesis 12:7-8; 13:18; 22:9); and Moses, Joshua, David, and Elijah, among others, also built altars (Exodus 17:15; 24:4; Joshua 8:30; 2 Samuel 24:18; 1 Kings 18:30-32). According to the law of Moses, an altar made of stones was to be made of unhewn stones (Exodus 20:25; Deuteronomy 27:5).

It appears that the Book of Mormon actually responds well to the nuances of the ancient Israelite sacrificial ordinances, suggesting that, instead of contradicting the biblical record, the Nephite record actually harmonizes quite well with it.

8 And it came to pass that he called the name of the river, Laman, and it emptied into the Red Sea; and the valley was in the borders near the mouth thereof.

verse 8 The small river in the present-day wadi Tayyib al-Isma flows under a gravel bed for the last three-eighths of a mile as it approaches the Gulf of Aqaba. The reason the river does not reach the Red Sea today is that the volume of water flowing in the river has been reduced to the point where it no longer can reach the Red Sea. Additionally, the elevation of the floor of the canyon is not the same as it was at the time of Lehi. According to geologists, where the river ends today was below the surface of the Red Sea in ancient times.

9 And when my father saw that the waters of the river emptied into the fountain of the Red Sea, he spake unto Laman, saying: O that thou mightest be like unto this river, continually running into the fountain of all righteousness!

verse 9 The use of the term fountain in this verse is consistent with ancient Near Eastern language patterns. A fountain is a body or source of water, such as a spring, well, pool, reservoir, or sea.

10 And he also spake unto Lemuel: O that thou mightest be like unto this valley, firm and steadfast, and immovable in keeping the commandments of the Lord!

verses 9-10 Brother Hugh Nibley has reported on an ancient form of desert poetry known as qasida. These two verses provide a good example of qasida. Brother Nibley was at his best when he detected and explored distinctive features of early Arabic poetry as practiced by the Bedouin of the Arabian Desert (See Hugh Nibley, “Lehi in the Desert—Part VI,” Improvement Era 53/6, June 1950:517–518; Hugh Nibley, “Lehi in the Desert—Part VII,” Improvement Era 53/7, July 1950: 566–567, 587–588; reprinted in Hugh Nibley, Lehi in the Desert/The World of the Jaredites/There Were Jaredites, The Collected Works of Hugh Nibley. Volume 5, Salt Lake City/Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1988, 84–92). His study identified and described seven commonly occurring components of desert poetry, which were “demanded of the true and authentic poet of the earliest period” (Lehi in the Desert, 90). These components are described as follows:

1. They are Brunnen[lieder] or Quellenlieder, as the Germans call them, meaning songs inspired by the sight of water gushing from a spring or running down a valley.
2. They are addressed to one or (usually) two traveling companions.
3. They praise the beauty and excellence of the scene, calling it to the attention of the hearer as an object lesson.
4. The hearer is urged to be like the thing he beholds.
5. The poems are recited extempore or on the spot and with great feeling.
6. They are very short, each couplet being a complete poem in itself.
7. One verse must be followed by its “brother,” making a perfectly matched pair.

All of these seven components are beautifully and exquisitely met by Lehi’s poetic exhortations to his two oldest sons, Laman and Lemuel here in 1 Nephi 2:9–10, which reads: “And when my father saw that the waters of the river emptied into the fountain of the Red Sea, he spake unto Laman, saying, O that thou mightest be like unto this river continually running in to the fountain of all righteousness! And he also spake unto Lemuel, O that thou mightest be like unto this valley, firm and steadfast and immovable in keeping the commandments of the Lord!”

Here, Lehi: (1) sees that the river running through the valley empties into the sea, (2) addresses two of his sons traveling with him, (3) makes the majesty of the scene an object lesson for them, (4) urges them to be like the river and valley, (5) appears to give the poetic advice on the spot, (6) each verse is concise and can stand as complete on its own, and (7) pairs together two perfectly balanced couplets, directed at brothers, no less. Thus, Lehi's poetry shares all seven features with Arabic poetry noted by Nibley.

Brother Nibley also wrote:

One of the most revealing things about Lehi is the nature of his great eloquence. It must not be judged by modern or western standards, as people are prone to judge the Book of Mormon as literature. In this lesson, we take the case of a bit of poetry recited extempore by Lehi to his two sons to illustrate certain peculiarities of the Oriental idiom and especially to serve as a test-case in which a number of very strange and exacting conditions are most rigorously observed in the Book of Mormon account. Those are the conditions under which ancient desert poetry was composed. Some things that appear at first glance to be most damning to the Book of Mormon, such as the famous passage in 2 Nephi 1:14 about no traveler returning from the grave, turn out on closer inspection to provide striking confirmation of its correctness (Approach to the Book of Mormon, 265-75; see also Lehi in the Desert, 84-92).

verses 7-10 To a westerner it may seem strange to name a river after one son and its valley after another. We usually give both the same name—for example, Mississippi River and Mississippi Valley. Lehi's naming of the Lemuel Valley and the River Laman, however, is appropriately Hebrew in its style (Hugh Nibley, An Approach to the Book of Mormon, 65-66). The ancient Hebrews frequently formed analogies between things in nature and human qualities. If only Laman could be more like this river, continually running toward the source of all righteousness.

There was a custom of a newcomer's naming a place and its geographical features. By what right do these people rename streams and valleys to suit themselves? But the immemorial custom of the desert, to be sure. Such actions seem odd in light of the fact that people lived in this part of Arabia and therefore the valley where the family camped probably had already received a name. It was Hugh Nibley who first drew attention to this custom, and he also pointed out what was obvious, that the names conferred by Lehi did not stick (Lehi in the Desert, 75-76). Charles Doughty, an Englishman who traveled in Arabia during the nineteenth century, observed that "every desert stead" had received a name. In fact, many had two or more names. Why? Because landmarks and important places received names from both local residents and from traveling caravanners. These names were never the same because the places in question meant different things to these individuals, depending on the function and importance of the landmarks or depending on an event that occurred there. He observed that one cannot predict which name will stick to a locale, that of the local people or that of the caravanners who visited places again and again (Travels in Arabia Deserta, 1:88). For another instance of naming a valley after only being there a short while, see Mosiah 24:20.

Professor W. Kent Brown of Brigham Young University notes that “in a desert climate all arable land and all water resources have claimants” (“Case for Lehi’s Bondage,” 206. Nibley made a similar point; see Lehi in the Desert, 66). How might Lehi have acquired the right to camp in the valley that was likely controlled by a local tribe? There are a few possible reasons:

1. Lehi had evidently been a wealthy man and, though he left his gold and silver in Jerusalem, his family probably carried among their provisions some items that could be exchanged for temporary camping privileges.

2. Perhaps Lehi’s group appeared small and sufficiently non-threatening that the locals required no payment of them. The hosts may even have pointed out to Lehi where he could find water and a campsite out of their way in the side canyon whose lower reaches they did not use themselves (Nephi did not write that his family “found” a river, but only that they pitched their tent next to it; see 1 Nephi 2:6). This latter possibility is enhanced when we note that Lehi apparently brought no sheep or goats with him into the wilderness. This would imply Lehi had to acquire animals for his sacrifices from the local people.

3. Perhaps there were no inhabitants in this valley. That is true today. If the area had been empty of people except for nomadic Bedouins, then Lehi was in no way beholden to locals.

verse 10 Another construction which might well have seemed unusual to Joseph Smith, as he was translating, was Lehi’s referring to a valley as “firm and steadfast and immovable.” Westerners would be more likely to think of a mountain as having those qualities of stability. Again, Brother Hugh Nibley assures us that such a use is typically middle eastern (Ibid., 223-24).

Being “firm and steadfast and immovable” is arriving at that state of faith and conviction which enables the saint to undergo tribulation, temptation, and persecution while remaining resolute and unwavering in their spiritual convictions.

11 Now this he spake because of the stiffneckedness of Laman and Lemuel; for behold they did murmur in many things against their father, because he was a visionary man, and had led them out of the land of Jerusalem, to leave the land of their inheritance, and their gold, and their silver, and their precious things, to perish in the wilderness. And this they said he had done because of the foolish imaginations of his heart.

verse 11 This verse contains the first appearance of the interesting word “murmur” in the Book of Mormon. The verb murmur is uncommonly used in scripture. In both the Old Testament and the Book of Mormon, murmur is used primarily for the exoduses—the exodus of the Israelites from Egypt and the exodus of Lehi’s family from Jerusalem. Forms of the Hebrew root lwn (translated “to murmur”) in the King James Bible Old Testament occur eighteen times. All but one of them are connected with the exodus from Egypt. In the Book of Mormon, it appears thirty-three times; of these, nineteen describe events in the Old-World wilderness.

“because he was a visionary man” It is interesting that the original text of the Book of Mormon rendered this phrase “because that he was a visionary man.” This latter form is actually better Hebrew (see Genesis 2:3). The term “visionary” in today’s language has a positive meaning something like a person with original ideas. There are, however, other dictionary meanings like ideas that are impractical or non-realizable. A visionary can be interpreted as a person with speculative schemes, a dreamer.

“land of Jerusalem” Many critics of the Book of Mormon have claimed that the book’s use of the term “land of Jerusalem” was a major error and proof that the book was false. They have especially criticized the use of this phrase in reference to the place where Christ would be born. They point out that this phrase was not used in the Bible. Therefore, the critics have concluded it was an example of Joseph Smith’s ignorance and evidence that he had tried to perpetrate a fraud. The phrase “land of Jerusalem” has now been found in the Dead Sea Scrolls in a text that links the phrase to the Jerusalem of Lehi’s time (Gordon C. Thomasson, FARMS Update in Insights [March 1994], 2). This phrase was definitely not in current use in Joseph Smith’s day, but, unknown to him, it was an accurate usage for the day in which he claimed the book was written. Thus, despite the critics’ best efforts, Joseph’s supposed “error” becomes an evidence of the Book of Mormon’s authenticity (see also the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:4).

“foolish imaginations of his heart” Webster’s 1828 Dictionary of the English Language adds to the definition of foolish “wicked and sinful.” It also adds to the definition of “imaginations” the idea of “a scheme or plan formed in the mind.” Hence, it seems possible that Laman and Lemuel were actually accusing their father not just of being an unwise dreamer but of creating a wicked plot to lead them far away with the purpose of depriving them of happiness (see 1 Nephi 16:38).

12 And thus Laman and Lemuel, being the eldest, did murmur against their father. And they did murmur because they knew not the dealings of that God who had created them.

13 Neither did they believe that Jerusalem, that great city, could be destroyed according to the words of the prophets. And they were like unto the Jews who were at Jerusalem, who sought to take away the life of my father.

verse 13 Our natural bias leads us to be judgmental with Laman and Lemuel. We are inclined to label them as stubborn and rebellious and disobedient and unrighteous. They were, after all, reluctant to follow the counsel of their prophet father. Perhaps we should be a bit more sympathetic with them. This one-way trip into the wilderness was a most significant commitment for them. In Jerusalem, their father was wealthy in material goods. They were likely to inherit a significant fortune at their father's death. By leaving their home and traveling into the unknown wilderness they were abandoning this inheritance.

“Neither did they believe that Jerusalem, that great city, could be destroyed according to the words of the prophets” There may have been, at least in part, a historical precedent for Laman and Lemuel's reluctance to believe that Jerusalem could be destroyed. In 701 BC at the time of king Hezekiah, Jerusalem was besieged by Assyria led by Sennacherib. On the very night before they were to be attacked by Assyrian forces, a mysterious illness epidemic swept through the Assyrian army, and it is alleged that 185,000 of them died (see the supplemental article, Historical Setting for the Book of Isaiah). Sennacherib departed quickly back to Nineveh, never to return. In the years that followed, this event would be recounted until “later generations could ascribe this deliverance to nothing less than a supernatural intervention, second only to the one which had secured the freedom of the Israelites from the Egyptian captivity” (Roth, The History of the Jews, 42).

Regarding this event Professor Benjamin Mazar wrote:

Embellished by legendary accretions, it strengthened the popular view of the impregnability of the city, and the ultimate sanctity and inviolability of mount Zion and the Temple. This confidence remained intact through subsequent generations down to the last years of the monarchy, until the day that the city walls were breached, the defending forces overwhelmed, and the city itself destroyed by the armies of the Babylonian king Nebuchadnezzar (Mountain of the Lord, 57).

Read this verse carefully. Did Laman and Lemuel actually seek to take the life of their father? The point is not quite clear, as the verse is somewhat ambiguous.

The term “Jew” in the Book of Mormon is used to refer to either a descendant of Judah, the son of Jacob, or to an inhabitant of the kingdom of Judah. Obviously, Lehi and his family were not Jews by the former definition (1 Nephi 5:14 makes it clear that Lehi was a descendant of Judah's brother Joseph) but did qualify by the latter.

14 And it came to pass that my father did speak unto them in the valley of Lemuel, with power, being filled with the Spirit, until their frames did shake before him. And he did confound them, that they durst not utter against him; wherefore, they did as he commanded them.

verse 14 On this and several subsequent occasions, Laman and Lemuel are cowed or subdued by someone manifesting the power of the Holy Ghost (see also 1 Nephi 3:29; 16:39; 17:47-48; 17:53-55; 1 Nephi 18:11-15). Each time, however, the change of heart was short lived. How universally typical of those who, like Laman and Lemuel, are spiritually “past feeling” (1 Nephi 17:45)!

15 And my father dwelt in a tent.

verse 15 In addition to this verse, Nephi will inform us on two additional occasions that his father Lehi lived in a tent (1 Nephi 9:1; 10:16). Why this repeated emphasis? Perhaps it is to emphasize the humility of this good man who had left behind his considerable worldly possessions, and who now, uncomplaining, he was living in a wilderness, in a tent.

Hugh Nibley has added insight to this verse:

To an Arab, “my father dwelt in a tent” says everything. . . So, with the announcement that his “father dwelt in a tent,” Nephi serves notice that he had assumed the desert way of life, as perforce he must for his journey. Any easterner would appreciate the significance and importance of the statement, which to us seems almost trivial. . . It is most significant how Nephi speaks of his father’s tent; it is the official center of all administration and authority. First, the dogged insistence of Nephi on telling us again and again that “my father dwelt in a tent” (1 Nephi 2:15; 9:1; 10:16; 16:6). So what? we ask, but to an Oriental that statement says everything. Since time immemorial the whole population of the Near East have been either tent-dwellers or house-dwellers, the people of the bait ash-sha’r or the bait at-tin, “houses of hair or houses of clay.” It was Harmer who first pointed out that one and the same person may well alternate between the one way of life and the other, and he cites the case of Laban in Genesis 31, where “one is surprised to find both parties so suddenly equipped with tents for their accommodation in traveling,” though they had all along been living in houses. Not only has it been the custom for herdsmen and traders to spend part of the year in tents and part in houses, but “persons of distinction” in the East have always enjoyed spending part of the year in tents for the pure pleasure of a complete change. It is clear from 1 Nephi 3:1; 4:38; 5:7; 7:5, 21-22; 15:1; 16:19 that Lehi’s tent is the headquarters for all activities, all discussion, and decisions (Approach to the Book of Mormon, 243).

16 And it came to pass that I, Nephi, being exceedingly young, nevertheless being large in stature, and also having great desires to know of the mysteries of God, wherefore, I did cry unto the Lord; and behold he did visit me, and did soften my heart that I did believe all the words which had been spoken by my father; wherefore, I did not rebel against him like unto my brothers.

verse 16 “exceedingly young” It has been speculated that Nephi was probably born about 615 BC. Thus, he might have been fourteen to sixteen years old when the Book of Mormon story began.

“mysteries of God” For a discussion of the two definitions of the concept of the “mysteries of God” see the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:1. In this particular verse, a specific meaning may have been intended by Nephi. We have discussed previously the heavenly councils to which Israelite prophets are invited in vision (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:5). The decrees of these councils were private and secret, indeed mysteries known only to the prophets (see Amos 3:7). Here Nephi expresses his desire to receive a personal confirmation of the truth of Lehi's words. He wanted to know for himself the truth of those decrees Lehi had received in the heavenly council—the “mysteries” of God (John W. Welch, Reexploring the Book of Mormon, 24-25).

“and behold he did visit me” This is a provocative statement, but we really don't know whether the Lord visited Nephi in person or whether he simply touched Nephi's spiritual understanding by the influence of the Holy Spirit.

17 And I spake unto Sam, making known unto him the things which the Lord had manifested unto me by his Holy Spirit. And it came to pass that he believed in my words.

verse 17 Sam was one of the older brothers in scripture who believed on the testimony of his younger brother. Can you think of any others in all of the standard works of the church? How about Hyrum Smith, Joseph's brother, and Moses's elder brother Aaron?

18 But, behold, Laman and Lemuel would not hearken unto my words; and being grieved because of the hardness of their hearts I cried unto the Lord for them.

verse 18 The expression “hardness of their hearts” is used some nineteen times in the four standard works, and eighteen of these are found in the Book of Mormon. It is likely an expression of Egyptian origin. In Egyptian culture, it was believed that the dead were received by Osiris, the god of the underworld. Osiris would judge a man by weighing his heart. If his heart was found to be hard or heavy with sin, then the judgment was unfavorable. Conversely, a light hearted or righteous individual would receive a favorable verdict. See the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

19 And it came to pass that the Lord spake unto me, saying: Blessed art thou, Nephi, because of thy faith, for thou hast sought me diligently, with lowliness of heart.

20 And inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments, ye shall prosper, and shall be led to a land of promise; yea, even a land which I have prepared for you; yea, a land which is choice above all other lands.

verse 20 “a land of promise; yea, even a land which I have prepared for you; yea, a land which is choice above all other lands” We certainly do have the concept firmly in mind that the Book of Mormon land, the so-called “promised land,” was in the western hemisphere, but what part of the western hemisphere is the land “choice above all other lands”? North America? Central America? South America? It would be illogical to exclude any of these three. For a discussion of the issue of the physical location of the Book of Mormon story, see the supplemental article, Book of Mormon

Geography. “Promised lands” are given only to chosen or covenant people (see the commentary on the concept of being chosen in 1 Nephi 1:20).

21 And inasmuch as thy brethren shall rebel against thee, they shall be cut off from the presence of the Lord.

verse 21 “they shall be cut off from the presence of the Lord” This expression means to be cut off from the influence of the Spirit. And perhaps it also refers to their eventually experiencing spiritual death—being eternally separated from God’s presence.

22 And inasmuch as thou shalt keep my commandments, thou shalt be made a ruler and a teacher over thy brethren.

23 For behold, in that day that they shall rebel against me, I will curse them even with a sore curse, and they shall have no power over thy seed except they shall rebel against me also.

verse 23 “curse them even with a sore curse” This curse which will eventually fall upon the Lamanite people is their eventually being denied the priesthood. They will also have a mark placed upon them to identify them as bearers of the curse. This mark would be a “skin of blackness” (see also 2 Nephi 5:21).

It is helpful to keep the “they’s” in this verse straight. The first two “they’s” refer to the unrighteous Lamanites. The third “they” has reference to the Nephites, the seed of Nephi.

Most often God’s cursings—his censuring of wickedness—take three different forms. They may result in the destruction of life (2 Nephi 5:25; Ether 11:6), forced social differentiation (2 Nephi 5:21-23; Alma 3:6-10), or loss of personal property (Helaman 13:30-36; cf. Mormon 1:17-18; Ether 14:1). Cursings and blessings often have to do with a people inhabiting a promised land (2 Nephi 1:7; Deuteronomy 27:11-28; cf. Abraham 2:6). The curse of Adam (Moroni 8:8) is the state of spiritual death that befell Adam and Eve after their transgression. This curse was imposed upon their posterity (Alma 12:22). Yet, we know that because of the Savior’s atonement this curse has been overcome for all mankind.

24 And if it so be that they rebel against me, they shall be a scourge unto thy seed, to stir them up in the ways of remembrance.

verse 24 The “theys” in this verse are a bit problematic. It is likely that both “theys” refer to the Lamanites. Another possibility is that both “theys” refer to some of the Nephites who rebel against the Lord.

A “scourge” is a cause of affliction or a means of inflicting punishment or suffering. Thus, throughout the Book of Mormon, we will read how the pugnacious Lamanites will serve as a scourge or a constant reminder, even an ever-present warning to the Nephites.

“the ways of remembrance” The Hebrew verb zakhor (to remember) carries a wider range of meaning than usually attributed to the verb remember in English. It seems to mean far more than the mere mental recall of information, though of course that is part of its meaning. This verb occurs in the Old Testament over two hundred times and means “to be attentive, to consider, to keep divine commandments, or to act. . . . Indeed, to remember involves turning to God, or repenting, or acting in accordance with divine injunctions. . . . Conversely, the antonym of the verb to remember in Hebrew—to forget—does not merely describe the passing of a thought from the mind, but involves a failure to act, or a failure to do or keep something. Hence, failing to remember God and his commandments is the equivalent of apostasy” (Louis C. Midgley, “O Man, Remember, and Perish Not,” a FARMS reprint, March 1990). For examples of other uses of the verb to remember in the Book of Mormon see Mosiah 2:41; 4:30; 13:29-30; Alma 37:35; Moroni 4:3. “Remembrance,” then, involves active participation. It means recalling not simply with the mind but also with the heart, mind, and actions. It means keeping the covenants which God has made with his people.

1 Nephi 3-5 Lehi's sons return to Jerusalem for the brass plates of Laban.

1 Nephi 3:7 I will go and do the things which the Lord hath commanded, for I know that the Lord giveth no commandments unto the children of men, save he shall prepare a way for them that they may accomplish the thing which he commandeth them.

Chapters 3-5 are notable for the account of the obtaining of the brass plates of Laban.

1 And it came to pass that I, Nephi, returned from speaking with the Lord, to the tent of my father.

2 And it came to pass that he spake unto me, saying: Behold I have dreamed a dream, in the which the Lord hath commanded me that thou and thy brethren shall return to Jerusalem.

3 For behold, Laban hath the record of the Jews and also a genealogy of my forefathers, and they are engraven upon plates of brass.

verse 3 In what sense is the record engraved upon the brass plates a “record of the Jews”? Actually, a similar label is applied to the brass plates in other verses in 1 Nephi (see 1 Nephi 5:6, 12). Don't we usually regard the brass plates as a record of the tribe of Joseph and his descendants, or more broadly the record of the ten northern tribes of Israel (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 5:16)? The term “Jew” has various definitions. See a discussion of this matter in the commentary for 2 Nephi 25:1. In this verse the broadest definition seems applicable—that is, the term is applied to the entire house of Israel.

4 Wherefore, the Lord hath commanded me that thou and thy brothers should go unto the house of Laban, and seek the records, and bring them down hither into the wilderness.

verses 1-4 Lehi and his family did not possess their own copy of the scriptures, and Lehi could not allow his children to grow up without them. In those days, their scriptures were some of the books we would today call the Old Testament. They could not go into the wilderness without the scriptures. They had no choice. Nephi and his brothers had to go back. The two older brothers protested. We usually suppose that the essence of their protest was their fear of Laban, but undoubtedly the distance and the difficult terrain involved in the journey had some bearing on their reluctance. The distance between Jerusalem and the Red Sea is about 155 miles “as the crow flies” but closer to 200 miles on the road. A reasonable pace for a group of people on camels would be fifteen to twenty-five miles a day. So the journey was likely at least ten days. Add to that the three days they traveled after reaching the Red Sea, and the round trip is over five hundred miles and three to four weeks in duration! In addition, the brothers had no clue as to how they were going to obtain the plates. From our comfortable vantage points, we are probably a bit hasty in criticizing Laman and Lemuel for being hesitant and apprehensive. Keep in mind that soon after his sons return from this first assignment, Lehi will command them to return to Jerusalem yet again!

Who was Laban, and what was his relationship to the family of Lehi? We do know that he was of the same lineage as Lehi—a descendant of Joseph (1 Nephi 5:16). Perhaps he was a relative. It has also been suggested that he might have been the member of the family responsible for keeping the genealogical records.

Note the convention of going “up” to Jerusalem and “down” to the wilderness. This is simply because Jerusalem was at a higher elevation than the wilderness. There is also a great deal of meaning in this subtle detail. For ancient Israelites, the elevation of Jerusalem was symbolic of ascending toward heaven. As such, it represented holiness, and was analogous to Mount Sinai, where Moses ascended to meet the Lord.

LDS biblical scholar David J. Larsen explains, “The directive for the thrice-yearly pilgrimage commanded the Israelites to ‘go up’ (ālâ)” to Jerusalem. As Larsen explains, “The Hebrew word ālâ appears to be used often as a . . . term in the Hebrew Bible [the Old Testament] for ascending in procession to sacred places, including going up to the promised land of Israel (i.e., from out of Egypt, e.g., Exodus 3:8, 17) and ascending the holy mountain [Sinai] (e.g., Exodus 19:20)” (David J. Larsen, “Ascending into the Hill of the Lord: What the Psalms Can Tell Us About the Rituals of the First Temple,” in Ancient Temple Worship: Proceedings of the Expound Symposium 14 May 2011, ed. Matthew B. Brown, Jeffrey M. Bradshaw, Stephen D. Ricks, and John S. Thompson, Orem, UT and Salt Lake City, UT: Interpreter Foundation and Eborn Books, 2014, 174–175).

With this perspective, Nephi’s repeated journeys up to Jerusalem and then back down into the wilderness take on new meaning. Each ascent back to Jerusalem must have served as a somber reminder that the city they now fled had once been a holy city.

The use of “up” and “down” in relation to real world elevation has implications for Book of Mormon geography in the New World. For instance, we can know that the land of Zarahemla was at a lower elevation than the land of Nephi (see Omni 1:13, 27–28; Words of Mormon 1:13; Mosiah 7:1, 4, 13). It may also be important for understanding the story of the Zeniff colony. After the first Mosiah led the people down to the land of Zarahemla (Omni 1:13), a group returned up to the land of Nephi, because they “were desirous to possess the land of their inheritance” (Omni 1:27). For the Nephites, the land of Nephi, being on higher ground, seemed to be the new holy land, and Zeniff’s people wanted to reclaim it.

This may be reflected in the attitude of King Noah's priests, who quoted Isaiah 52:7–10 (Mosiah 12:21–24), which praises the feet of those “upon the mountains” who “publisheth peace.” They may have seen themselves as fulfilling this prophecy and establishing Zion in the mountains. Details matter, even the seemingly small and insignificant details. These features reinforce that the Book of Mormon is what Joseph claimed it to be, an ancient text originally situated in Jerusalem.

5 And now, behold thy brothers murmur, saying it is a hard thing which I have required of them; but behold I have not required it of them, but it is a commandment of the Lord.

6 Therefore go, my son, and thou shalt be favored of the Lord, because thou hast not murmured.

7 And it came to pass that I, Nephi, said unto my father: I will go and do the things which the Lord hath commanded, for I know that the Lord giveth no commandments unto the children of men, save he shall prepare a way for them that they may accomplish the thing which he commandeth them.

verse 7 Nephi's expression of faith, in view of these demanding assignments, is all the more impressive (see also 1 Nephi 17:3). New meaning is added to this enthusiastic statement of faith by Nephi in light of the details of the principle of faith discussed the articles on faith in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapters 9, Revealed Faith, 10, Deliberate Faith and Revealed Faith, and 11, Other Notes on Faith.

This a verse with which we're all familiar. It has become an important part of our culture. Most of us have learned to quote it. It increases our understanding and love for Nephi! A question may be asked about Nephi's statement in this verse: Is this a pronouncement of church doctrine or simply an expression of Nephi's enthusiastic faith? Some argue it is not a statement of doctrine, at least it is not a complete elaboration of a doctrine. It is plausible that a person or people might diligently work to fulfill a commandment of the Lord, and yet be thwarted in the attempt. The complete doctrine has been pronounced on this matter by the Lord himself through the prophet Joseph Smith. It is found in D&C 124:49. “Verily, verily, I say unto you, that when I give a commandment to any of the sons of men to do a work unto my name, and those sons of men go with all their might and with all they have to perform that work, and cease not their diligence, and their enemies come upon them and hinder them from performing that work, behold, it behooveth me to require that work no more at the hands of those sons of men, but to accept of their offerings.”

Confusion and frustration may result when a church member fails to recognize an “incomplete doctrine” such as is contained in Nephi's statement. There are other such “incomplete doctrines” in the Church. For example: “Keep the Word of Wisdom, and you will enjoy good health.” “Pay your tithing, and you will become prosperous.” “Train up a child in the way he should go, and later in life he will not depart from it” (see 2 Nephi 4:5). While these statements all contain some general truth, they should not be regarded as binding doctrines. Each of us traveling through this mortal experience will see exceptions to these statements.

Lest the reader take any semblance of a negative connotation from this verse's commentary, it should be emphasized that there can be no question that obedience enables and empowers the obedient. When an individual is on the Lord's errand, he might well expect that the Lord will provide nourishment, strength, and means whereby the errand will be accomplished. But if the individual exerts his best effort and still fails to complete his errand, then his obligation is fulfilled.

Yet, another factor, however, may be operative in Nephi's statement here in 1 Nephi 3:7. It is that in this particular instance the Lord actually intervened and prepared the way. Hence, this verse can be taken at face value without reservation. The Lord's commandment here may also be a different type of commandment. Read on!

Lehi emphasized to Nephi, that this "hard thing" was "commanded" of the Lord, and Lehi repeated that point three times to be sure Nephi understood (1 Nephi 3:2, 4, 5). Nephi had just returned from conversing with the Lord, where he was promised: "inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments, ye shall prosper" (1 Nephi 2:20). Eager to hold up his end of this obligation, Nephi responded to his father with equal emphasis on commandments, likewise repeating the term three times in his one-verse reply (1 Nephi 3:7).

This sets up the rest of the story about getting the plates, where the Lord's commandments are central: command or commandment is repeated 18 times total in 1 Nephi chapters 3, 4, and 5.

Affirming Nephi's response that he will "go and do" in response to the Lord's commands is part of a chiasm—a literary pattern where key words, phrases, or ideas are repeated in reverse order (See the commentary on Mosiah 5:10-12. See also, John W. Welch, "Chiasmus in the Book of Mormon," BYU Studies 10, no. 3, 1969: 69–83; John W. Welch, "Chiasmus in the Book of Mormon," in Chiasmus in Antiquity: Structures, Analyses, Exegesis, ed. John W. Welch, Hildesheim: Gerstenberg Verlag, 1981; reprint Provo, UT: Research Press, 1999, 198–210; John W. Welch, "Chiasmus in the Book of Mormon," in Book of Mormon Authorship: New Light on Ancient Origins, ed. Noel B. Reynolds, Provo, UT: Religious Studies Center, 1982; reprint Provo, UT: FARMS, 1996, 33–52). The center of a chiasm is usually the most important part, and Nephi's chiasm has the Lord's commandments at the very center.

Chiasmus in 1 Nephi 3:7-9

a And it came to pass that I, Nephi, b said to my father.

c I will go and do the things

d which the Lord hath commanded d' for I know that the Lord giveth no commandments unto the children of men
 c' save he shall prepare a way for them that they may accomplish the thing which he commandeth them
 b' And it came to pass that when my father had heard these words he was exceedingly glad, for he knew that I had been blessed of the Lord a' And I Nephi, and my brethren took our journey in the wilderness

Nephi knew that the Lord would prepare a way for him because he trusted in Him, and he wrote the story about obtaining the plates to illustrate this truth. He placed the Lord's commandments at the center of his response to his father, symbolizing their central importance to the whole story.

Two types of commandments are at play in this story. First, the story teaches about specific commandments given in a particular time and context—like getting the plates from Laban. Second, it teaches about general commandments that apply to everyone, like “the commandments of the Lord” found on the plates of brass (1 Nephi 4:15).

Obtaining the plates of brass was done in obedience to a specific commandment and was necessary so that Nephi's seed could keep the general commandments given to all the house of Israel (1 Nephi 4:14–17).

Nephi's story highlights how the Lord prepares the way for obeying both types of commandments: (1) The Lord prepared a way for Nephi to obtain the plates of brass by delivering Laban into his hands (1 Nephi 4:10–12); (2) Obtaining the plates, which had the Law of Moses on them, prepared the way for Lehi's family and their descendants to keep the commandments (1 Nephi 4:14–17) (Monte S. Nyman, Book of Mormon Commentary, 6 vol., Orem, UT: Granite, 2003, 1:57; Joseph Fielding McConkie and Robert L. Millet, Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 4 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 1987–1992, 1:40).

Nephi is a model for keeping the commandments, even when doing so is challenging and difficult. Although he had to travel 500 miles round trip in a scorching desert and face off with a powerful leader, Nephi was determined to obey. This is true of Nephi throughout his life (See John A. Tvedtnes, “He Shall Prepare Away,” in The Most Correct Book: Insights from a Book of Mormon Scholar (Salt Lake City, UT: Cornerstone Publishing, 1999), 104–109).

President Thomas S. Monson taught, “Though others faltered in their faith and their obedience, never once did Nephi fail to do that which the Lord asked of him. Untold generations have been blessed as a result” (President Thomas S. Monson, “Obedience Brings Blessings,” Ensign, May 2013, 90).

Nephi's story teaches that while the Lord may prepare the way, the way prepared is not always easy. It was not until Nephi and his brothers had made multiple failed attempts, and Nephi had suffered from violence at his brothers' hands, that the Lord finally intervened (1 Nephi 3). Nephi had proven himself determined and willing to be "led by the Spirit" (1 Nephi 4:6), and thus a way was prepared (See Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols. (Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007), 1:101–102).

President Henry B. Eyring, of the First Presidency, taught that this kind of commitment comes from trusting in the Lord: "The young Nephi in the Book of Mormon stirs in us a desire to develop trust in the Lord to obey His commandments, however hard they appear to us. Nephi faced danger and possible death when he said these words of trust that we can and must feel steadily in our hearts. . . . That trust comes from knowing God (President Henry B. Eyring, "Trust in God, Then Go and Do," Ensign, November 2010, 71).

8 And it came to pass that when my father had heard these words he was exceedingly glad, for he knew that I had been blessed of the Lord.

9 And I, Nephi, and my brethren took our journey in the wilderness, with our tents, to go up to the land of Jerusalem.

verse 9 "up to the land of Jerusalem" Jerusalem is located in the tops of the mountains, and in approaching it from any direction one must ascend or go up. See the commentary for verse 4.

10 And it came to pass that when we had gone up to the land of Jerusalem, I and my brethren did consult one with another.

11 And we cast lots—who of us should go in unto the house of Laban. And it came to pass that the lot fell upon Laman; and Laman went in unto the house of Laban, and he talked with him as he sat in his house.

verses 10-11 The practice of "casting of lots" is referred to some twenty-four times in the Book of Mormon alone. It is also found throughout the Old and New Testaments. It is a typical Semitic or Near Eastern custom. The casting of lots was done by casting stones onto the ground or drawing a stone or another object from a receptacle. There was a feeling that the will of the Lord would be manifest through the decision of the lot. Casting lots was a method of ascertaining the divine will widely employed in pagan, Jewish, and to some extent in Christian antiquity. Hence, today, to know God's will for oneself is to know what God intends—to know what one's appointed "lot" is. Thus, we may use the expression "accepting one's lot in life." On one memorable occasion in the New Testament, the quorum of twelve cast lots to learn who should fill a vacancy in the quorum of twelve apostles (Acts 1:26).

12 And he desired of Laban the records which were engraven upon the plates of brass, which contained the genealogy of my father.

13 And behold, it came to pass that Laban was angry, and thrust him out from his presence; and he would not that he should have the records. Wherefore, he said unto him: Behold thou art a robber, and I will slay thee.

14 But Laman fled out of his presence, and told the things which Laban had done, unto us. And we began to be exceedingly sorrowful, and my brethren were about to return unto my father in the wilderness.

15 But behold I said unto them that: As the Lord liveth, and as we live, we will not go down unto our father in the wilderness until we have accomplished the thing which the Lord hath commanded us.

verse 15 “As the Lord liveth, and as we live” These words denote that Nephi was swearing a solemn oath that he would not return to his father Lehi without accomplishing that thing for which they had come. It thus became incumbent upon Nephi to obtain the plates or lay down his life in the attempt. In that day, such an oath was considered binding by both the righteous and the wicked (see Alma 44:8). Making this oath was a dramatic act since Nephi knew that his life was in danger in trying to wrest the plates from Laban. For additional comments on the ancient practice of oath taking, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 4:32-33.

16 Wherefore, let us be faithful in keeping the commandments of the Lord; therefore let us go down to the land of our father’s inheritance, for behold he left gold and silver, and all manner of riches. And all this he hath done because of the commandments of the Lord.

verse 16 “let us go down to the land of our father’s inheritance” The land of inheritance is not to be confused with the land of Jerusalem mentioned in 1 Nephi 3:9. From the text of 1 Nephi as a whole, two things are obvious about the land of Jerusalem region: First, the city of Jerusalem is obviously within the boundaries of the land of Jerusalem, and second, the land of Jerusalem refers to a different region than Lehi’s land of inheritance. It is difficult to be certain whether or not Lehi’s land of inheritance is located within the land of Jerusalem. These observations are corroborated by three features of Nephi’s text: (1) Nephi and his brothers return from the valley of Lemuel “up” to the land of Jerusalem (1 Nephi 3:9). (2) They then go “down” to the land of inheritance to collect Lehi’s gold and silver (1 Nephi 3:16, 22). (3) Finally, Nephi and his brothers return back up again to Jerusalem (1 Nephi 3:23). It is important to remember that in the idiom of Nephi, one always went up to come to Jerusalem, and one always went down when exiting Jerusalem. This is also the Hebrew idiom employed in the Bible and probably relates to the relative elevation of Jerusalem above all of the surrounding lands. It should be clear, then, that when Nephi and his brothers go down to the land of inheritance, they are in fact leaving the region of Jerusalem. The land of Jerusalem is clearly not the same as the land of inheritance. See the supplemental article, Jerusalem at the Time of Lehi.

17 For he knew that Jerusalem must be destroyed, because of the wickedness of the people.

18 For behold, they have rejected the words of the prophets. Wherefore, if my father should dwell in the land after he hath been commanded to flee out of the land, behold, he would also perish. Wherefore, it must needs be that he flee out of the land.

19 And behold, it is wisdom in God that we should obtain these records, that we may preserve unto our children the language of our fathers;

verse 19 These records were vital to the Lehites, not only to preserve their spiritual legacy, but also to maintain their language and literacy.

20 And also that we may preserve unto them the words which have been spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets, which have been delivered unto them by the Spirit and power of God, since the world began, even down unto this present time.

verses 17-20 These verses imply that the record on the brass plates would have perished if Nephi had not recovered it.

21 And it came to pass that after this manner of language did I persuade my brethren, that they might be faithful in keeping the commandments of God.

22 And it came to pass that we went down to the land of our inheritance, and we did gather together our gold, and our silver, and our precious things.

23 And after we had gathered these things together, we went up again unto the house of Laban.

verses 22-23 Again, note the “downs” and the “ups” in these verses (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 3:9). The implication is that Lehi’s family home was located outside the city of Jerusalem, perhaps some few miles. One verse of scripture does suggest that Lehi’s home, his land of inheritance might be located within the land of Jerusalem. 1 Nephi 1:4 indicates that Lehi lives “at Jerusalem.” It is also possible that Lehi had two homes, one in the city of Jerusalem and one in the “land of his inheritance.” Whether or not this latter is in the land of Jerusalem is simply not known.

24 And it came to pass that we went in unto Laban, and desired him that he would give unto us the records which were engraven upon the plates of brass, for which we would give unto him our gold, and our silver, and all our precious things.

25 And it came to pass that when Laban saw our property, and that it was exceedingly great, he did lust after it, insomuch that he thrust us out, and sent his servants to slay us, that he might obtain our property.

26 And it came to pass that we did flee before the servants of Laban, and we were obliged to leave behind our property, and it fell into the hands of Laban.

27 And it came to pass that we fled into the wilderness, and the servants of Laban did not overtake us, and we hid ourselves in the cavity of a rock.

verse 27 “we hid ourselves in the cavity of a rock” No matter which direction one travels from Jerusalem, one encounters terrain with many caves. In fact, the area is pock-marked with literally hundreds of caves. This fact of the brothers’ hiding in a cave is perfectly appropriate for the area around Jerusalem.

The discovery of one particular cave has engendered some interest among some members of the Church, though presently, most scholars feel that this cave is unrelated to the Book of Mormon story. This cave is located about twenty-five miles southwest of Jerusalem. It consists of three rooms. In the back of one of the rooms were found inscriptions engraved onto the walls. One of these inscriptions might be translated, in essence, “Deliver us, O’ Lord.” Another has the Lord speaking in first person, “I, Jehovah, have forgiven you of your sins.” Also, portrayed in the engravings were three sailing ships. The writings implied that they might have been written by a prophet since only a prophet would dare write the sacred name of Jehovah. The writings have been dated approximately 600 BC, or about the time of the Babylonian captivity. The implication that whoever was in the cave and made these engravings was probably hiding and trying to escape the Babylonian captivity. They were planning their escape from Jerusalem, and may have been thinking about escaping by boat. At least one in the party believed himself or herself to be a prophet of God. The area where the cave was located had been known for centuries as Lehi or Beit Lehi, or Beit Lei. The word Lehi or Lei means cheek bone or jaw. This cave is located in the same area where Samson slew the thousand Philistines with the jaw bone of an ass. In the Bible the area is referred to as Ramon Lehi or hill of Lehi.

Some have wanted to speculate that perhaps father Lehi even lived in this area. Further, some have even suggested that perhaps it was in that cave, or one just like it, in which Nephi and his brothers took refuge when they were being pursued by Laban’s servants. It seems probable that Nephi and his brothers would have been familiar with many of the caves in the area around Jerusalem since it was the place of their rearing. Today, it seems unlikely that this cave or this area had anything to do with father Lehi or the story of the Book of Mormon.

Also, the terminology “cavity of a rock” is appropriate Hebrew terminology. In Hebrew, one would never say “cave.” It seems likely that Joseph Smith, writing in his own words, would have referred to the hiding place as a cave. Similarly, Joseph would have been more likely to refer to Laban’s scriptural record as “brass plates” rather than the more Hebraically appropriate “plates of brass” (see the supplemental article, The Hebrew Language and the Book of Mormon).

28 And it came to pass that Laman was angry with me, and also with my father; and also was Lemuel, for he hearkened unto the words of Laman. Wherefore Laman and Lemuel did speak many hard words unto us, their younger brothers, and they did smite us even with a rod.

verse 28 “Laman and Lemuel did speak many hard words unto us, their younger brothers” Even though there has been no mention of him by name thus far during this trip to Jerusalem, Sam has also been present with Nephi, Laman, and Lemuel (see 1 Nephi 4:28).

“they did smite us even with a rod” Hugh Nibley has added insight to this passage:

Is it any wonder that Laman and Lemuel worked off their pent-up frustration by beating their youngest brother with a stick when they were once hiding in a cave? Every free man in the East carries a stick, the immemorial badge of independence and of authority, and every man asserts his authority over his inferiors by his stick, “which shows that the holder is a man of position, superior to the workman or day-labourers. The government officials, superior officers, tax-gatherers, and schoolmasters use this short rod to threaten—or if necessary to beat—their inferiors, whoever they may be.” The usage is very ancient. “A blow for a slave” is the ancient maxim in Ahikar, and the proper designation of an underling is abida-l’asa, “stick servant.” This is exactly the sense in which Laman and Lemuel intended their little lesson to Nephi, for when the angel turned the tables he said to them, “Why do ye smite your younger brother with a rod? Know ye not that the Lord hath chosen him to be a ruler over you?” (1 Nephi 3:29) (Approach to the Book of Mormon, 249, see also 246-47. See also Nibley, Lehi in the Desert, 67-71).

29 And it came to pass as they smote us with a rod, behold, an angel of the Lord came and stood before them, and he spake unto them, saying: Why do ye smite your younger brother with a rod? Know ye not that the Lord hath chosen him to be a ruler over you, and this because of your iniquities? Behold ye shall go up to Jerusalem again, and the Lord will deliver Laban into your hands.

30 And after the angel had spoken unto us, he departed.

31 And after the angel had departed, Laman and Lemuel again began to murmur, saying: How is it possible that the Lord will deliver Laban into our hands? Behold, he is a mighty man, and he can command fifty, yea, even he can slay fifty; then why not us?

verse 31 It didn’t take long following the visit of the angel for Laman and Lemuel to start murmuring again.

“he can command fifty, yea, even he can slay fifty” The Book of Mormon consistently agrees with the usage of numbers in the Old Testament, as illustrated in the following three items:

1. Avoidance of complex numeric forms. Biblical Hebrew used cardinals (one, two, three), ordinals (first, second, third), multiplicatives (double, sevenfold), and fractions (half, third, tenth) but avoids complex numeric forms using prefixes such as mono-, bi-, di-, uni-, tri-, multi-, and poly-.

2. The number without the noun. Often in biblical Hebrew, an expected noun does not follow a number. For instance, Genesis 45:22 states that Joseph “gave three hundred of silver” to Benjamin, without stating that the three hundred probably refers to pieces of silver. In order to fix what would have been an awkward omission in English, the King James translators supplied the word pieces but italicized it to show that it is not part of the original text. Other biblical examples of the number without the noun include “ten weight of gold” (Genesis 24:22; the KJV adds shekels to its translation: “ten shekels weight of gold”); “he measured six of barley” (Ruth 3:15; the KJV adds measures: “he measures six measures of barley”); and “a captain of fifty with his fifty” (2 Kings 1:9).

This particular verse is an example, in the Book of Mormon, of this Hebrew usage. The number fifty, used twice in this passage, is not followed by a noun. Does fifty refer to men, warriors, princes, commanders of armies? The context does not make this certain. Other Book of Mormon examples include “my little band of two thousand and sixty fought most desperately” (Alma 57:19); “Wherefore, by the words of three, God hath said, I will establish my word” (2 Nephi 11:3); “And it came to pass that there were two hundred, out of my two thousand and sixty” (Alma 57:25).

3. Joining two or more numbers with the conjunction “and.” It is common in biblical Hebrew to join two or more numbers with the conjunction and; for instance, “thirty and two kings” (1 Kings 20:1) rather than “thirty-two kings.” Examples in the Book of Mormon include “an army of forty and two thousand” (Mormon 2:9); “three hundred and twenty years” (Omni 1:5); and “being sixty and three years old” (Mosiah 17:6).

1 Nephi 4:13 It is better that one man should perish than that a nation should dwindle and perish in unbelief.

1 And it came to pass that I spake unto my brethren, saying: Let us go up again unto Jerusalem, and let us be faithful in keeping the commandments of the Lord; for behold he is mightier than all the earth, then why not mightier than Laban and his fifty, yea, or even than his tens of thousands?

verse 1 Hugh Nibley has suggested that Laban was likely a high-ranking military commander in Jerusalem. The phrase “Laban and his fifty” might well have referred to a fifty-man permanent garrison in Jerusalem which Laban commanded. He also might well have commanded “tens of thousands” when he was in the field of battle (Lehi in the Desert, 97-98).

2 Therefore let us go up; let us be strong like unto Moses; for he truly spake unto the waters of the Red Sea and they divided hither and thither, and our fathers came through, out of captivity, on dry ground, and the armies of Pharaoh did follow and were drowned in the waters of the Red Sea.

verse 2 Nephi is trying to encourage his older brothers. Notice what analogy he uses—that of Moses’s miraculous leading of the Israelites through the Red Sea on dry ground. In Hebrew history and culture, the story of the Israelite’s exodus from Egypt and of Moses’s parting the Red Sea stood at the very center. All of the Old Testament prophets utilized this story as the most important sign that God had truly called the Israelites to be his elect people. Nephi’s use of this story to try to convince his brothers is thus perfectly appropriate. Lehi’s family was reared in a culture where the mighty acts of God in the exodus were commemorated not only in frequent retellings of the story but in ritual form at Passover.

Also, these verses confirm the literal veracity of the Red Sea story, since they serve as an independent scriptural witness. Most sectarian scholars today would doubt the miraculous literalness and historicity of the story. The story of the Egyptian exodus is mentioned thirteen additional times in the Book of Mormon (e.g., 1 Nephi 17:23-27, Mosiah 7:19, Alma 36:28, and Helaman 8:11). It served as an important motif in Nephi’s time, and we might well have expected him to use it in his writings. We should even be surprised if he did not use it! In very Hebraic fashion, the Nephites knew that one of their primary responsibilities before God was to “remember,” to never forget his glorious and mighty acts on their behalf. It is natural that they should think of their deliverance from doomed Jerusalem as a second exodus, although it is sadly ironic that Jerusalem, the promised land the Israelites had struggled so hard to obtain, had become at the time of Lehi analogous to the land of Egypt at the time of the Exodus.

As the story of Lehi's exodus from Jerusalem develops, we may notice that there are several parallels with the exodus of the Israelites from Egypt. These include:

1. The Lord guided both groups in the wilderness (1 Nephi 16:10; 17:13). In both cases, he utilized visionary prophets under whose leadership people left lands that were under divine condemnation and journeyed to lands of "promise."

2. Both groups were miraculously provided food or manna (1 Nephi 16:23, 31).

3. Both were led to a promised land.

4. Both groups carried with them sacred scripture—the Israelites had Moses's Pentateuch, and Lehi's family will acquire the plates of brass.

5. Laman and Lemuel were fickle in observing the counsel of their inspired leaders just as were the recalcitrant Israelites. In both accounts, rebellious members of the group "murmured" because of their hunger, lamented being taken from their previous home to perish in the wilderness, declared that they would rather have died than to have embarked on their present journey, and expressed a desire to return, instead, to the oppressive or dangerous lands from which God had delivered them.

6. Both Lehi (and Nephi) and Moses were instructed on a mountain (1 Nephi 16:30; 17:7; 18:3).

7. Moses built a tabernacle with divine instruction and Nephi built a ship and a temple, also with divine help (1 Nephi 17:8; 18:2; 2 Nephi 5:16).

8. In both, a metallic object (the Liahona for the Lehitites, the brazen serpent for the Israelites) played a major role, and we are told that to "look" upon it in a proper attitude was to "live."

9. In both accounts, the group's rebellious members drew divine wrath down upon themselves and their fellows when they engaged in wild and inappropriate partying, forgetting the Lord who had delivered them (see Terrence L. Szink, "Nephi and the Exodus," in Rediscovering the Book of Mormon, ed. Sorenson and Thorne, 38-51).

Brother Szink concluded: Such a large body of parallels cannot be accounted for by coincidence. This particular verse (see also 1 Nephi 17:23-44) suggests that Nephi purposefully wrote his account in a way that would reflect the Exodus. His intention was to prove that God loved and cared for the Nephites just as he did the children of Israel during the Exodus from Egypt."

3 Now behold ye know that this is true; and ye also know that an angel hath spoken unto you; wherefore can ye doubt? Let us go up; the Lord is able to deliver us, even as our fathers, and to destroy Laban, even as the Egyptians.

verse 3 Nephi refers, of course, to the angel's rebuke of Laman and Lemuel in the previous chapter (1 Nephi 3:29-31).

It is interesting that Nephi already has the impression that Laban will have to be destroyed (killed) before the plates can be obtained.

4 Now when I had spoken these words, they were yet wroth, and did still continue to murmur; nevertheless they did follow me up until we came without the walls of Jerusalem.

verse 4 “they were yet wroth” Wroth means, of course, angry or incensed.

“without the walls of Jerusalem” This phrase means just outside Jerusalem's walls.

During the initial stage of translation of the Book of Mormon in the winter of 1827–1828, Joseph Smith's wife Emma would often write for him as he translated. Later in life, on multiple occasions, Emma would tell the story of the time Joseph was startled by the mention of walls surrounding Jerusalem at the time of Lehi. Edmund C. Briggs reported the most dramatic version of the story, as he heard it from Emma in 1856: “One time while he was translating he stopped suddenly, pale as a sheet, and said, ‘Emma, did Jerusalem have walls around it?’ When I answered ‘Yes,’ he replied ‘Oh! I was afraid I had been deceived.’ He had such limited knowledge of history at that time that he did not even know that Jerusalem was surrounded by walls (John W. Welch, “The Miraculous Translation of the Book of Mormon,” in Opening the Heavens: Accounts of Divine Manifestations, 1820–1844, ed. John Welch with Erick B. Carlson, Salt Lake City/Provo, UT: Deseret Book and BYU Press, 2005, 77–117).

5 And it was by night; and I caused that they should hide themselves without the walls. And after they had hid themselves, I, Nephi, crept into the city and went forth towards the house of Laban.

verses 6-18 These verses describe the slaying of Laban by Nephi. While this episode has generated considerable controversy, it is clear that Nephi was simply responding to the command of God communicated through the Spirit. Those who in their own lives are obedient to gospel principles and enjoy real communication with the Spirit have no trouble in accepting this fact.

The prophet Joseph Smith gave helpful counsel: “We cannot keep all the commandments of God without first knowing them; and we cannot expect to know all or more than we now know unless we comply with or keep those we have already received. That which is wrong under one circumstance may be, and often is, right under another. God said, 'Thou shalt not kill.' At another time he said, 'Thou shalt utterly destroy.' This is the principle upon which the government of heaven is conducted—by revelation adapted to the circumstances in which the children of the kingdom are placed. Whatever God requires is right, no matter what it is, although we may not see the reason thereof until long after the events transpire" (HC, 5:135).

Today we must not live polygamy. One hundred years ago, however, if a man was called to live the law of polygamy and he did not, he was not keeping all the commandments and honoring his priesthood. At one time in the world's history among the Lord's chosen people, a male child had to be circumcised. Today it is not required. At one time the Lord's people were not allowed to walk more than two thousand cubits on the Sabbath day. Today we sometimes have to walk farther than that just to get to the parking lot!

Some have become involved in lengthy logical arguments in order to defend Nephi for his slaying of Laban. For example, the argument has been proffered that "the ends justify the means." Is this sound doctrine? Do favorable ends always justify the means used to attain them? In another place in the Book of Mormon, we are taught that it is better for a man to sacrifice his own life rather than to take the life of even his enemy (Alma 26:32). While in the case of Nephi and Laban the Lord knew that the ends justified the means, a favorable end does not always justify indiscriminate means. Nephi needs no defending by us or by anyone else. He simply did what God commanded him to do.

In commanding Nephi to kill Laban, the Lord was acting according to his own law—the law of retaliation. By this law the Lord destroys nations of the wicked (1 Nephi 17:37-38). Many examples are found in the scriptures: the Canaanites were driven and defeated by the Israelites under Joshua; the northern kingdom of Israel was captured by the Assyrians; and the southern kingdom of Judah will soon be destroyed by Babylon. Laban was wicked. He had offended the Lord three times (see verse 11). The spiritual welfare of a new nation about to be conceived was at stake. The Lord commanded that he be destroyed.

It is interesting, also, to look at the purely legal aspects of Nephi's killing of Laban according to the law of Moses. John W. Welch, a long-time student of biblical law, has argued that the complexities of "Nephi's slaying of Laban can be evaluated profitably through the perspectives of the prevailing legal principles of Nephi's day" (John W. Welch, The Legal Cases in the Book of Mormon, Provo, UT: Brigham Young University Press and the Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2008, 358).

Even though such a killing would not be justifiable in most legal systems today, the text presents “several factors that substantially reduce Nephi’s guilt or culpability under the law of Moses as it was probably understood in Nephi’s day, around 600 BC” (John W. Welch, “Legal Perspectives on the Slaying of Laban,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 1, no. 1, 1992: 121). Welch explained that the critical legal factors in this case are:

1. State of mind—did the killer “lie in wait,” or “come presumptuously” with murderous intent?

Unlike the modern definition, the ancient idea of premeditation required a murder to have been preplanned or implemented through treachery (Legal Perspectives,” 124). From this Welch argued, “Several strong clues indicate that Nephi had the ancient definition in mind when he wrote the story of Laban” (Welch, “Legal Perspectives,” 124). Regarding his state of mind, Nephi specifically noted that he proceeded “not knowing beforehand the things which I should do” (1 Nephi 4:6).

As Welch has explained, this point demonstrates that Nephi had not necessarily even planned to find Laban, let alone to kill him. Nephi did not know where Laban would be, or that he would be drunk. “The occasion presented itself spontaneously. Nephi was completely surprised to find Laban. His deed was not preplanned and, therefore, not culpable” (Welch, “Legal Perspectives,” 125).

2. The role of divine will—did “God deliver him into his hand” (Exodus 21:12–14) (Legal Perspectives,” 123)?

Welch has written, “the ultimate reason for his action was God’s deliverance of Laban into Nephi’s hands. As the Spirit stated, it was the Lord who caused Laban’s death” (Welch, “Legal Perspectives,” 131). The specific words used in the text are important here. When Nephi stumbled upon Laban, the Spirit told Nephi to kill him. When Nephi resisted, the Spirit told Nephi again to “slay him, for the Lord hath delivered him into thy hands” (1 Nephi 4:12, emphasis added). This justification may refer to Exodus 21:13, which states that a slayer may flee to a city of refuge “if [he] lie not in wait, but God deliver him into his hand” (emphasis added). The striking parallel between these texts indicates that the Spirit may have been legally excusing Nephi for slaying Laban (See the commentary for Helaman 2:9).

One possible reason for this is because Laban committed three serious offenses against Nephi and his brothers. (1) He had falsely accused them of a capital crime (being “robbers,” 1 Nephi 3:13; Deuteronomy 19:16–19). (2) He had stolen their property, thus proving to be a robber himself (1 Nephi 3:25–26; 4:11). (3) He had not listened to the commandments of the Lord (1 Nephi 4:11; Deuteronomy 13:15) (See Welch, “Legal Perspectives,” 131, 137; John A. Tvedtnes, The Most Correct Book: Insights from a Book of Mormon Scholar, Salt Lake City, UT: Cornerstone Publishing, 1999, 104–105; Taylor Halverson, “Reading 1 Nephi With Wisdom,” Interpreter: A Journal of Mormon Scripture 22, 2016: 291–292).

Thus, Nephi killed a man whom God had delivered into his hands, indicating that he was worthy of death from a divine perspective. Some killings in the Old Testament happened under similar circumstances. For example, the priest Phinehas killed Zimri and Cozbi for violating the law (Numbers 25:8). Amnon had violated his half-sister Tamar (2 Samuel 13:14-17), and his half-brother Absalom killed him because of it (verse 29).

Importantly, the Spirit provided yet another rationale for the act: “It is better that one man should perish than that a nation should dwindle and perish in unbelief” (1 Nephi 4:13). Welch has stated that this rationale “concerning the relative rights of the individual or the group also has a long tradition in biblical and Jewish legal history” (Welch, “Legal Perspectives,” 134). One example of this practice is the giving up of Samson to the Philistines (Judges 15:9–13). Extra-biblical tradition even suggests that the council of elders may have handed over Jehoiakim—a king of Judah at the time of Lehi—to Nebuchadnezzar in order to save the kingdom (See John W. Welch and Heidi Harkness Parker, “Better That One Man Perish,” in Pressing Forward with the Book of Mormon: The FARMS Updates of the 1990s, ed. John W. Welch and Melvin J. Thorne, Provo, Utah: FARMS, 1999, 17–18).

It is important to look at ancient texts in their own context, not in a modern one. While the slaying of Laban is disturbing or uncomfortable for modern readers, “in its ancient legal context . . . [it] makes sense, both legally and religiously, as an unpremeditated, undesired, divinely excusable, and justifiable killing—something very different from what people today normally think of as criminal homicide” (Welch, “Legal Perspectives,” 140–141). From this, Nephi was changed, seeing that God would provide a way for him to keep God’s commandments, no matter how impossible that appeared. Nephi also learned the importance of following the Spirit and staying within the rules that the Lord had revealed.

However, as convinced as Nephi was that his action was approved by God, Welch also noted that Nephi acted at considerable risk to himself: “I do not know if Nephi would have been able to persuade a court in Jerusalem to let him off or not, but I think he certainly saw himself as not having violated the law” (John W. Welch, “Introduction,” Studia Antiqua 3, no. 2, 2003: 12).

Indeed, the killing of Laban was not without penalties or consequences. In a case like Nephi’s, where the killing wasn’t preplanned, the killer still had to flee to one of the specifically-designated cities of refuge or leave the Holy Land (Numbers 35:6). Nephi did just that. In effect, his punishment for killing Laban was voluntary exile, an exile from which Nephi would never return.

It may also be important for readers to let the event impact them like it impacted Nephi (David Baron, Social Ethics of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints: Analysis and Critique, Los Angeles, CA: University of Southern California, 2004, 84–87). As Elder Holland noted, the narrative is “squarely in the beginning of the book—page 8—where even the most casual reader will see it and must deal with it. It is not intended that either Nephi or we be spared the struggle of this account. I believe that story was placed in the very opening verses of a 531-page book and then told in painfully specific detail in order to focus every reader of that record on the absolutely fundamental gospel issue of obedience and submission to the communicated will of the Lord. If Nephi cannot yield to this terribly painful command, if he cannot bring himself to obey, then it is entirely probable that he can never succeed or survive in the tasks that lie just ahead” (Jeffrey R. Holland, “The Will of the Father in All Things,” BYU Speeches, January 17, 1989, online at speeches.byu.edu).

Ultimately, one should avoid forcing God “into a box of our own making. Violence is intrinsic in this life, and, much as we might despise it, we should be wary of attempting to impose any kind of absolutes (from our point of view) on God” (Gregory Dundas, Review of By Study and Also by Faith, Vol. 2, edited by John M. Lundquist and Stephen D. Ricks, Review of Books on the Book of Mormon 4, 1992: 131). This traumatic experience was difficult for Nephi, and this account, written several years later, likely captures years of wrestling with and reflection on his actions from legal, ethical, and political angles (On the political aspects of the Laban story, see Noel B. Reynolds, “The Political Dimension in Nephi’s Small Plates,” BYU Studies 27, no. 4, 1987: 22–25; Val Larsen, “Killing Laban: The Birth of Sovereignty in the Nephite Constitutional Order,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 16, no. 1, 2007: 26–41, 84–85). Just as when Moses’s killing a man in Egypt (Exodus 2:11-15) marked the beginning of a new life of flight and separation from Egypt for himself and his people, Nephi’s traumatic experience opened the way toward a new land and life for him, his family, and all of his people as well.

6 And I was led by the Spirit, not knowing beforehand the things which I should do.

7 Nevertheless I went forth, and as I came near unto the house of Laban I beheld a man, and he had fallen to the earth before me, for he was drunken with wine.

8 And when I came to him I found that it was Laban.

9 And I beheld his sword, and I drew it forth from the sheath thereof; and the hilt thereof was of pure gold, and the workmanship thereof was exceedingly fine, and I saw that the blade thereof was of the most precious steel.

verse 9 Did steel exist in Palestine in 600 BC? It did indeed! See the commentary for 1 Nephi 16:18.

It is interesting to compare Nephi’s description of Laban’s sword with a description of swords from the same period found in one of the Dead Sea scrolls: “The swords shall be of purified iron, refined in a crucible and whitened like a mirror, work of a skillful craftsman; and it will have shapes of an ear of wheat, of pure gold, encrusted in it on both sides. And it will have two straight channels right to the tip, two on each side. The length of the sword: one cubit and a half [two to two and one half feet]. And its width four fingers. . . The hilt of the sword will be of select horn, craft work, with a pattern in many colors: gold, silver and precious stones.” We are not told the length of Laban’s sword. William J. Adams, in his discussion of an unusually long sword of the period found near Jericho suggested that Nephi would have had an easier time decapitating Laban with his sword if it were longer than the usual short swords known from the ancient Near East (Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, volume 6, number 1, 73- 75).

10 And it came to pass that I was constrained by the Spirit that I should kill Laban; but I said in my heart: Never at any time have I shed the blood of man. And I shrunk and would that I might not slay him.

verse 10 Nephi was constrained by the Spirit. This means that he was powerfully urged; compelled. To “shed the blood of man,” of course, is to take his life.

“I shrunk and would that I might not slay him” Nephi obviously hesitated to kill Laban. It is interesting to note that we have evidence that Moses was similarly hesitant when constrained to kill the Egyptian overseer who had abused the Hebrew slave (see the discussion for verse 13).

11 And the Spirit said unto me again: Behold the Lord hath delivered him into thy hands. Yea, and I also knew that he had sought to take away mine own life; yea, and he would not hearken unto the commandments of the Lord; and he also had taken away our property.

12 And it came to pass that the Spirit said unto me again: Slay him, for the Lord hath delivered him into thy hands;

verse 12 “the Spirit said unto me again: Slay him” It would seem that the Spirit is impatient with Nephi’s reluctance, and he demands outright, “Slay him.”

13 Behold the Lord slayeth the wicked to bring forth his righteous purposes. It is better that one man should perish than that a nation should dwindle and perish in unbelief.

verse 13 Compare this verse with Alma’s warning to Korihor given 500 years later: “Behold, it is better that thy soul should be lost than that thou shouldst be the means of bringing many souls down to destruction” (Alma 30:47).

The principle of sacrificing one for the good of all, of course, runs sharply contrary to American jurisprudence. But there is a suggestion in the scriptures that this principle is found in Hebrew tradition. In John 11:50 Caiaphas says, “It is expedient for us, that one man should die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not.” In a recent article, David Aus demonstrated that this principle prevailed in certain cases under biblical law around 600 BC (“The Death of One for All in John 11:45-54 in Light of Judaic Traditions” in Barabbas and Esther and Other Studies in the Judaic Illumination of Earliest Christianity [Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1992], 29-63). A pivotal precedent was found by the ancients in 2 Samuel 20. It recounts how King David had sought the life of Sheba, a rebel guilty of treason. When Sheba took refuge in the city of Abel, Joab, the leader of David’s army, demanded that Sheba be released to him or he would destroy the city. The people of Abel beheaded Sheba instead, and Joab retreated. This episode became an important legal precedent justifying the killing of one person in order to preserve an entire group. Even more striking is another Old Testament case, one preserved more fully only in oral Jewish traditions, involved Jehoiakim, the king of Judah. He rebelled against Nebuchadnezzar at the very time of Lehi and Nephi. In response, Nebuchadnezzar went to Antioch and demanded that the great Jewish council surrender Jehoiakim or the nation would be destroyed. Jehoiakim protested, “Can ye sacrifice one life for another?” Unmoved, the council replied, “Thus did your ancestors do to Sheba the son of Bichri.” Based on this legal ruling, Jehoiakim was released to Nebuchadnezzar, who took him to Babylon (see 2 Chronicles 36:6) where presumably he was executed. Zedekiah became king less than four months later. At the time the Book of Mormon account begins (see 1 Nephi 1:4), Nephi was probably keenly aware of how the “one for many” principle was used to justify Jehoiakim’s death. Clearly, the cases of Laban and Korihor fit within this tradition.

John W. Welch has compared Nephi’s killing of Laban with Moses’s slaying of the Egyptian who had stricken a Hebrew slave (see John W. Welch, “Legal Perspectives on the Slaying of Laban,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 1/1 [1992]: 119-41; John W. Welch and Heidi Harkness Parker, “Better Than One Man Perish,” FARMS Update, Insights [June 1998]: 2; reprinted in Pressing Forward with the Book of Mormon, ed. Welch and Thorne, 17-19; and in Fred Essig and Dan Fuller’s, “Nephi’s Slaying of Laban: A Legal Perspective” [Provo, Utah: FARMS, 1981]).

As noted above, there is evidence that Moses, like Nephi, was hesitant to kill the Egyptian overseer when constrained to do so by the Spirit until he had a divine revelation on the matter. According to ’Abot de Rabbi Nathan 20, thought to have been written in the second century AD but not available in English until the twentieth century, Moses summoned a court of ministering angels and asked them if he should kill the Egyptian, to which the angels responded, “Kill him.” The same story is told in Midrash Rabbah Exodus 1:29, which adds that, before calling on the angels for counsel, Moses perceived that no righteous persons would descend from the Egyptian man (also mentioned in Zohar Exodus 12b). A similar story is found in an early Jewish text, Tosephta-Targum (V. 1) 2 on 1 Samuel 17:43, which says that just before he slew Goliath, David “lifted up his eyes to heaven and saw angels deliberating on Goliath the Philistine.”

14 And now, when I, Nephi, had heard these words, I remembered the words of the Lord which he spake unto me in the wilderness, saying that: Inasmuch as thy seed shall keep my commandments, they shall prosper in the land of promise.

verse 14 This is the first mention in the Book of Mormon text of a promise or covenant of the Lord which will be repeated many times. It is part of the so-called “promise–curse” of the Book of Mormon: “Inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments, ye shall prosper in the land. . . And again, it is said that: Inasmuch as ye will not keep my commandments ye shall be cut off from the presence of the Lord” (Alma 9:13). This covenant is fundamental to the relationship between God and the Book of Mormon peoples and will be discussed further in this commentary (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 1:20 and the introductory commentary for Alma 43).

15 Yea, and I also thought that they could not keep the commandments of the Lord according to the law of Moses, save they should have the law.

verse 15 We will read often in the Book of Mormon text that the righteous peoples in the book believed in and observed the “law”—the law of Moses. They could not have kept the law “save they should have the law” with them as recorded in the scriptural record.

There is a conspicuous paucity of information about the law of Moses and the people’s living of it in the Book of Mormon. It has been suggested that the editor Mormon himself is responsible for this, since he was a Christian and was little interested in the ancient ways after they were fulfilled by Christ’s atonement and ministry.

16 And I also knew that the law was engraven upon the plates of brass.

17 And again, I knew that the Lord had delivered Laban into my hands for this cause—that I might obtain the records according to his commandments.

18 Therefore I did obey the voice of the Spirit, and took Laban by the hair of the head, and I smote off his head with his own sword.

19 And after I had smitten off his head with his own sword, I took the garments of Laban and put them upon mine own body; yea, even every whit; and I did gird on his armor about my loins.

verse 19 As to the question of Nephi’s justification in killing Laban, I frankly have grown a bit weary of all of the complex legalistic explanations and paradigms that have been proffered to try to justify Nephi’s act. For me, the essence of the explanation is that the Lord can, and does, terminate a mortal life if and when he chooses in order to accomplish his purposes. Nephi was simply his agent. There are plenty of instances—already mentioned above—of the Lord’s “allowing” (even decreeing) the punishment and death of people because of their apostasy—the Israelites and the Canaanites, the Assyrians and the northern ten tribes, the Babylonians and the Jews, etc.

One author (Ben McGuire, “Nephi & Goliath” in Journal of the Book of Mormon and Other Restoration Scripture, volume 18, number 1, 2009, 16-31) has seen a parallel between the accounts of Nephi’s killing Laban and of David’s slaying of Goliath (1 Samuel 17). Brother McGuire defends the idea that Nephi himself was aware of this parallel as he wrote his account. Brother McGuire has proposed that recognition of this parallel helps us today to better appreciate the necessity and the high and noble purpose behind Nephi’s taking the life of Laban. Both accounts make the elimination of the antagonist a necessary and a noble action. David’s killing of Goliath saved Israel, and Nephi’s beheading of Laban rescued the future descendants of the Book of Mormon peoples from spiritual ignorance and inevitable spiritual deterioration.

20 And after I had done this, I went forth unto the treasury of Laban. And as I went forth towards the treasury of Laban, behold, I saw the servant of Laban who had the keys of the treasury. And I commanded him in the voice of Laban, that he should go with me into the treasury.

verse 20 It seems likely that Nephi may have had some divine assistance which enabled him to speak with the “voice of Laban.”

21 And he supposed me to be his master, Laban, for he beheld the garments and also the sword girded about my loins.

22 And he spake unto me concerning the elders of the Jews, he knowing that his master, Laban, had been out by night among them.

verse 22 The “elders of the Jews” (see also verse 27) likely refers to those entrusted with governmental affairs among the Jews rather than to a priesthood office (cf. Matthew 15:2; Acts 4:5; 25:15).

23 And I spake unto him as if it had been Laban.

24 And I also spake unto him that I should carry the engravings, which were upon the plates of brass, to my elder brethren, who were without the walls.

verses 24 Notice in this verse how young Nephi almost blows his cover when he slips and says he is going to carry the plates of brass “to my elder brethren, who were without the walls.” He must have held his breath when he realized his mistake.

Fortunately, as we learn in verse 26, Zoram thought he was speaking of “the brethren of the church.”

25 And I also bade him that he should follow me.

26 And he, supposing that I spake of the brethren of the church, and that I was truly that Laban whom I had slain, wherefore he did follow me.

27 And he spake unto me many times concerning the elders of the Jews, as I went forth unto my brethren, who were without the walls.

verses 26-27 “the elders of the Jews” See the commentary for verse 22.

“the brethren of the church” Who are these “brethren of the church”? Was there a church in 600 BC? There has usually been a church, in some form, whenever the priesthood has been on the earth. The organizations have varied according to the circumstances, but there has always been a “kingdom of God” on the earth in every dispensation. And it has always been called a church. There was a church in Isaiah’s day, and in David’s day. And in each time period, the church has had a government.

In 600 BC Laban belonged to the church. What was Lehi’s status in the church? He had left the church. Isaiah left the church in his day, and Amos and Hosea and many of the prophets left the church in their day. The churches had apostatized, but the church structure continued. It continued right on until even the time of Christ. Therefore at the time of Lehi there was a church organization.

28 And it came to pass that when Laman saw me he was exceedingly frightened, and also Lemuel and Sam. And they fled from before my presence; for they supposed it was Laban, and that he had slain me and had sought to take away their lives also.

29 And it came to pass that I called after them, and they did hear me; wherefore they did cease to flee from my presence.

30 And it came to pass that when the servant of Laban beheld my brethren he began to tremble, and was about to flee from before me and return to the city of Jerusalem.

31 And now I, Nephi, being a man large in stature, and also having received much strength of the Lord, therefore I did seize upon the servant of Laban, and held him, that he should not flee.

verse 31 “I, Nephi, being a man large in stature” It would seem that Nephi’s experience with Laban was a defining moment that marked the transition between his childhood and manhood. In 1 Nephi 2:16, we read that Nephi was “exceedingly young,” but now he defines himself as “being a man large in stature.”

32 And it came to pass that I spake with him, that if he would hearken unto my words, as the Lord liveth, and as I live, even so that if he would hearken unto our words, we would spare his life.

33 And I spake unto him, even with an oath, that he need not fear; that he should be a free man like unto us if he would go down in the wilderness with us.

verses 32-33 “as the Lord liveth and as I live” Again, Nephi is taking an oath! The taking of an oath was regarded so seriously that Nephi knew that Zoram would take comfort from Nephi’s swearing that he would not harm him. The oath was an important part of the cult life of the Hebrew community. Perjury and the violation of an oath were serious matters, which could not go unpunished. Oaths were validated by the invocation of the Lord, the God of heaven and earth. Oath taking was often accompanied by symbolic acts. The gesture of the oath was to raise the hand toward heaven. The later Jewish custom of taking hold of the scriptures or phylacteries in a judicial oath furnished the model for the present-day procedure of swearing on the Bible (see also the note on oath taking in the commentary for 1 Nephi 3:15).

Zoram did indeed take courage because he knew that the oath was binding upon Nephi. In Nephi’s day, if you performed an oath, you meant what you said! If a person took an oath, especially if he swore before God and pledged his life, everyone knew that his word was binding. Zoram also made an oath (see verse 37). Could Joseph Smith have known the extent to which oaths were used in Old Testament times? If he wrote the book himself, as some critics claim, wasn’t he clever to include oath-taking in the Book of Mormon story?

In commenting on the nearly miraculous effect Nephi’s oath had on Zoram, Hugh Nibley wrote:

What astonishes the western reader is the miraculous effect of Nephi’s oath on Zoram, who upon hearing a few conventional words promptly becomes tractable, while as for the brothers, as soon as Zoram “made an oath unto us that he would tarry with us from that time forth . . . our fears did cease concerning him” (1 Nephi 4:35, 37).

The reactions of both parties make sense when one realizes that the oath is the one thing that is most sacred and inviolable among the desert people and their descendants: “Hardly will an Arab break this oath, even if his life be in jeopardy,” for “there is nothing stronger, and nothing more sacred than the oath among the nomads,” and even the city Arabs, if it be exacted under special conditions. “The taking of an oath is a holy thing with the Bedouins,” says one authority. “Wo to him who swears falsely; his social standing will be damaged and his reputation ruined. No one will receive his testimony, even if it is true, and he must also pay a money fine.”

But not every oath will do. To be most binding and solemn an oath should be by the life of something, even if it be but a blade of grass. The only oath more awful than that “by my life” or (less commonly) “by the life of my head” is the wa hayat Allah, “by the life of God” or “as the Lord liveth,” the exact Arabic equivalent of the ancient Hebrew hai Elohim. Today it is glibly employed by the city riffraff, but anciently it was an awful thing, as it still is among the desert people. “I confirmed my answer in the Bedouin wise,” says Doughty. “By his life . . . he said, . . . ‘Well, swear by the life of Ullah’ (God)! . . . I answered . . . and thus even the nomads use, in a greater occasion, but they say, by the life of thee, in a little matter.” Among both Arabs and Jews, says Rosenblatt, “an oath without God’s name is no oath,” while “in both Jewish and Mohammedan sources oaths by ‘the life of God’ are frequent.”

So we see that the only way that Nephi could possibly have pacified the struggling Zoram in an instant was to utter the one oath that no man would dream of breaking, the most solemn of all oaths to the Semite: “As the Lord liveth, and as I live” (1 Nephi 4:32) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 6, part 4, 128-29).

34 And I also spake unto him, saying: Surely the Lord hath commanded us to do this thing; and shall we not be diligent in keeping the commandments of the Lord? Therefore, if thou wilt go down into the wilderness to my father thou shalt have place with us.

35 And it came to pass that Zoram did take courage at the words which I spake. Now Zoram was the name of the servant; and he promised that he would go down into the wilderness unto our father. Yea, and he also made an oath unto us that he would tarry with us from that time forth.

36 Now we were desirous that he should tarry with us for this cause, that the Jews might not know concerning our flight into the wilderness, lest they should pursue us and destroy us.

37 And it came to pass that when Zoram had made an oath unto us, our fears did cease concerning him.

38 And it came to pass that we took the plates of brass and the servant of Laban, and departed into the wilderness, and journeyed unto the tent of our father.

1 And it came to pass that after we had come down into the wilderness unto our father, behold, he was filled with joy, and also my mother, Sariah, was exceedingly glad, for she truly had mourned because of us.

2 For she had supposed that we had perished in the wilderness; and she also had complained against my father, telling him that he was a visionary man; saying: Behold thou hast led us forth from the land of our inheritance, and my sons are no more, and we perish in the wilderness.

3 And after this manner of language had my mother complained against my father.

verses 1-3 These are poignant verses! Sariah had despaired for her son's safety. She was probably beside herself. It was as if the Lord were stretching her to the brink of her faith. It was one thing to leave a comfortable lifestyle, but quite another to have her most precious blessing torn from her. Children were the focus of life for women in ancient Israel (see Psalm 127:3; 128:3). Only in their roles as mothers did Israelite women receive honor and authority. More specifically, being a mother of sons created a woman's greatest source of joy and comfort. Sons were seen as a particular blessing not only because they could defend the family in the face of opposition, but because they promised a continuation of the family name. The loss of a son would have been almost insurmountably devastating to a mother like Sariah. When her sons failed to return, Sariah feared, giving evidence that her present faith, though admirably strong, was not yet strong enough to continue the difficult journey, let alone to establish a God-fearing family in a new land.

Even a great lady with the noble character of Sariah can become low and begin to murmur. Turn also to 1 Nephi 16:20. This verse is even more surprising. Even the great prophet Lehi murmured! Even after all the visions and the spiritual favors he had enjoyed, he murmured against the Lord! Sariah murmured. Lehi murmured. All the boys but one murmured, and he was the one keeping the record! It is human to become discouraged in difficult circumstances!

4 And it had come to pass that my father spake unto her, saying: I know that I am a visionary man; for if I had not seen the things of God in a vision I should not have known the goodness of God, but had tarried at Jerusalem, and had perished with my brethren.

verse 4 Note that Lehi refers to the adjective "visionary" in a slightly different light than Sariah had intended. She saw a pejorative element in the word that Lehi did not acknowledge. See the commentary for 1 Nephi 2:11.

5 But behold, I have obtained a land of promise, in the which things I do rejoice; yea, and I know that the Lord will deliver my sons out of the hands of Laban, and bring them down again unto us in the wilderness.

verses 4-5 Note Lehi's verb usage in these verses—"but had tarried at Jerusalem, and had perished with my brethren" and "behold I have obtained a land of promise" (italics mine). Hebrew prophets often used the past tense to describe events yet in the future which had been seen in prophecy. This has been called the "prophetic perfect" verb tense and is typical of Hebrew writing. At this time Jerusalem had not yet been destroyed, and no one had as yet perished. Also, he was thousands of miles and many years away from reaching his land of promise. However, he had seen a vision, read the heavenly book, and the events which he envisioned were already present for him. He was indeed a "visionary man." For other examples of the "prophetic perfect" verb usage, see 2 Nephi 31:8, spoken in 559-545 BC and Mosiah 15:12, spoken in 148 BC.

6 And after this manner of language did my father, Lehi, comfort my mother, Sariah, concerning us, while we journeyed in the wilderness up to the land of Jerusalem, to obtain the record of the Jews.

7 And when we had returned to the tent of my father, behold their joy was full, and my mother was comforted.

verses 4-7 Lehi responded to Sariah's criticism with comforting words. He had been promised that his sons would return, and he firmly believed the promise.

How old do you suppose Lehi was when he and his family left Jerusalem? It is not known, of course, but it has been estimated that he was about forty or fifty years old. This estimate is based on the fact that Lehi and Sariah had four sons of marriageable age—Laman, Lemuel, Sam, and Nephi—when the family departed Jerusalem.

8 And she spake, saying: Now I know of a surety that the Lord hath commanded my husband to flee into the wilderness; yea, and I also know of a surety that the Lord hath protected my sons, and delivered them out of the hands of Laban, and given them power whereby they could accomplish the thing which the Lord hath commanded them. And after this manner of language did she speak.

verse 8 What if Nephi and his brethren had not returned safely? Do you suppose that Sariah's faith might have been fatally injured by the tragic circumstances? Some readers might even tend to be critical of her and say something like: "She should have been more faithful! After all, was she not the wife of a prophet, and had she not already agreed to leave her home and travel into the wilderness? Had she not heard in great detail about her husband's vision and call from the Lord?" Sariah was much like the rest of us. Her faith was still growing and developing. A person with perfect faith is not shaken by any number of difficult trials here in mortality. He or she simply accepts the experiences which life has to offer and thanks God for the experience. But who among us is perfect? And which of us doesn't wax and wane a little in our faith? Sariah is obviously human, and perhaps we can identify with her more easily because she is!

“Now I know of a surety that the Lord hath commanded my husband to flee into the wilderness” Camille Fronk has asked some interesting questions about Nephi's account of his mother Sariah in these verses (“Desert Epiphany: Sariah & the Women in 1 Nephi,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, volume 9, number 2, 5-15): “Why would Nephi choose to record this incident to focus our attention on his mother—an incident that clearly manifests her murmuring against Lehi? Why not choose an experience that more obviously showed her spiritual strength?” Dr. Fronk sees this episode as one in which Sariah gained a vital increment in her testimony of her husband's mission. Sister Fronk concludes: “To establish Lehi and his family in a new land where they would inspire and instruct later generations to come unto Christ, God needed more than a father and a son (as successor) to possess a testimony tried in the fire of affliction. God also needed a matriarch, weathered by her own trials of faith and armed with her own unwavering witness, to stand steadfast with her prophet-husband” (Ibid.). The reader should take note of the fact that there is no indication that Sariah ever murmured again!

9 And it came to pass that they did rejoice exceedingly, and did offer sacrifice and burnt offerings unto the Lord; and they gave thanks unto the God of Israel.

verse 9 See the discussion of sacrifices in the commentary for 1 Nephi 2:7. The offering of sacrifices and burnt offerings unto the Lord was a distinctly Hebrew custom and a part of the law of Moses. Were Lehi and his family Hebrews? They were. What is a Hebrew? The name Hebrew derives from the son of Shem, whose name was Eber, and is synonymous with Israelite. It is an unimportant, but interesting, fact that the word Hebrew is found in only one verse in the Book of Mormon, Mormon 9:33. In that verse, it is found three times.

The word Israel is pronounced Yisrael in Hebrew. The name combines two roots sara (persevere, persist) and el (god), and it literally means “let God prevail.” The term Israel, as found in the Book of Mormon, has three main contexts:

1. It can refer to a descendant of the man Israel—Jacob, the son of Isaac. As the blood of Israel, these people are often identified as a member of one of the tribes of Israel (Numbers 2). The Jews are the most identifiable remnant of Israel's lineage on the earth today. Most references to Israel in the Book of Mormon relate to this particular meaning—they refer to the lineage or house of Israel.

2. It may refer to the land where the Israelites live. The land Israel is the territory in biblical times variously called the land of Canaan, Israel, Judah/Judea, Palestine, or the Holy Land. It is now mostly encompassed in the modern State of Israel.

3. It may refer to a covenant people whose obedience empowers them to prevail together with God in righteousness. Covenant Israel includes those who are true believers of the Lord Jesus Christ, regardless of lineage or geographical location. Nephi will be taught that those who do not harden their hearts against Jesus Christ will eventually be numbered among the covenant people of Israel. Anyone, Jew or Gentile, who comes unto Christ will be eventually adopted into the house of Israel. However, those of the lineage of Israel who do not repent, follow the Lord, and honor their covenants will be cut off from the house of Israel. Covenant Israelites are the true heirs to the great promises given to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

10 And after they had given thanks unto the God of Israel, my father, Lehi, took the records which were engraven upon the plates of brass, and he did search them from the beginning.

verse 10 Notice that Lehi did not just read the scriptures, but rather he searched them! Mere reading of the scripture has some value, but how much more do we derive from pondering, digging, inquiring, and in fact “feast[ing] upon the words of Christ” (2 Nephi 32:3)?

11 And he beheld that they did contain the five books of Moses, which gave an account of the creation of the world, and also of Adam and Eve, who were our first parents;

12 And also a record of the Jews from the beginning, even down to the commencement of the reign of Zedekiah, king of Judah;

13 And also the prophecies of the holy prophets, from the beginning, even down to the commencement of the reign of Zedekiah; and also many prophecies which have been spoken by the mouth of Jeremiah.

verse 13 “many prophecies which have been spoken by the mouth of Jeremiah” Were the writings of the prophet Jeremiah recorded on the plates of brass? Since the prophet Jeremiah was a contemporary of Lehi, it is improbable that his complete writings were contained on the plates of brass. Some critics of the Book of Mormon have pointed to this as an error of Joseph Smith’s. Notice, however, that the verse does not say that Jeremiah’s writings were on the plates of brass. Perhaps Nephi intended to say that some of Jeremiah’s own writings and prophecies had been recorded on the plates of brass. Or perhaps Nephi is here referring to the fact that Jeremiah, in his preaching and warning of Judah, reiterated pertinent prophecies made by previous prophets.

14 And it came to pass that my father, Lehi, also found upon the plates of brass a genealogy of his fathers; wherefore he knew that he was a descendant of Joseph; yea, even that Joseph who was the son of Jacob, who was sold into Egypt, and verse 14 When the plates of Laban are returned to Lehi, the great prophet is in ecstasy over them. He learns his genealogy. Lehi is a descendant of Joseph (through Manasseh—see also Alma 10:3).

Ancient Joseph was, in his day, a “savior” of his father and his father’s household or family. The covenant blessings which he received from his father Jacob accorded Joseph’s posterity the future role of being a “savior” of the house of Israel. It would be Joseph’s seed to whom the other tribes would look for temporal and spiritual salvation (Genesis 37:5-10). Joseph’s seed would spread abroad to the Americas (Genesis 49:22). Joseph’s seed would write another testament of Christ—the Book of Mormon (Ezekiel 37:16-20; 2 Nephi 3:12). Through Joseph’s seed would arise a namesake prophet, Joseph Smith, who would become an “ensign” for the gathering of Israel in the latter days (JST, Genesis 50:30-33; 2 Nephi 3:6-8, 9-11, 16; D&C 113:6). Joseph’s seed would bestow the ordinances of the Lord’s temple upon redeemed Israel prior to the Savior’s advent (D&C 133:30-35).

The latter-day work of the seed of Joseph would be directed by the descendants of Joseph’s younger son Ephraim who received the birthright blessing from his grandfather Jacob (Genesis 48:17-20). In one sense, the line of prophets introduced into the Americas by Lehi and Ishmael (see 1 Nephi 7) were forerunners for the latter-day restoration.

verses 11-14 The “five books of Moses” presumably correspond to Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy in our modern Bible. Today some biblical scholars question the authorship of these books. Because of verse 11, we should not.

The “account of the creation of the world” contained in the Bible and in the plates of brass was revealed directly to Moses and recorded by him. The historical portions of the book of Genesis, however, were likely obtained from the writings of Noah, Melchizedek, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and perhaps the sons of Jacob.

We have reason to believe that the record contained on the plates of brass was a more complete record than we have available to us today in the Old Testament. What is that reason? Read carefully 1 Nephi 13:23. Some of the specific additional insights contained on the brass plates included: an inference that Abraham knew and prophesied of the advent of Jesus Christ (Helaman 8:17), prophecies of father Jacob concerning the Nephite branch of his descendants (Alma 46:24-26), prophecies of ancient Joseph in Egypt regarding Moses’s delivering of Israel and of the ministry of Joseph Smith (2 Nephi 3), and prophecies by otherwise unknown ancient prophets such as Zenos, Zenock, and Neum (1 Nephi 19:10-17; Jacob 5 and 6; Alma 33:3-17; 34:7; Helaman 8:19-20; 15:11; 3 Nephi 10:16).

Several years later in the Book of Mormon story, after the arrival of Lehi's family in the western hemisphere, Lehi will lecture his son Jacob on the Fall of man, Adam and Eve, the Garden of Eden, and the Atonement (2 Nephi 2:17- 27). Undoubtedly Lehi obtained the insights evidenced in this lecture from the brass plates.

15 And they were also led out of captivity and out of the land of Egypt, by that same God who had preserved them.

16 And thus my father, Lehi, did discover the genealogy of his fathers. And Laban also was a descendant of Joseph, wherefore he and his fathers had kept the records.

verse 16 Here we learn that, like Lehi, Laban was also a descendant of Joseph, the son of father Jacob. Joseph, of course, had two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh. Laban and his paternal ancestors had kept the "record," the brass plates. It is logical to speculate that the record had been kept in the birthright sub-tribe of the larger tribe of Joseph—that of Ephraim. We may thus further speculate that Laban was descended from Joseph through Ephraim.

Just how, in 600 BC, did Lehi, a descendant of Joseph through Manasseh, and Laban, a descendant of Joseph probably through Ephraim, happen to be in Jerusalem? Let us review briefly the history of ancient Israel and then speculate as to how that might have happened. After the death of Solomon in about 931 BC, civil war divided Israel into (1) the Kingdom of Israel, consisting of the northern ten tribes under the rebel leader Jeroboam, with its center in Samaria, and (2) Judah, comprised of the two southern tribes (Judah and Benjamin) under Solomon's son Rehoboam with its center in Jerusalem. For the next 210 years, the two existed separately as enemies.

Between 732 and 722 BC, the Assyrian army crushed the northern kingdom and carried away some 27,290 of its educated aristocracy and anyone with any leadership ability back to Assyria. The area formerly inhabited by the Kingdom of Israel was subsequently populated by some Assyrian colonists who intermarried with the many remaining Israelites. The offspring of these mixed Assyrian / Israelitish people came to be called Samaritans, and their land Samaria.

Sidney Sperry wrote: "The forebears of Laban may have fled to Jerusalem to prevent the sacred records from falling into alien hands. Lehi's grandfather or great-grandfather may have left his northern home for Jerusalem in order to prevent his children from intermarrying and making religious compromises with the pagan foreigners who came into the land." Brother Sperry then went on to speculate about the two centuries between the division and the fall of the northern kingdom: "The brass plates may well have been the official scripture of the Ten Tribes. It is probable that some prophets wrote on these plates whose writings may not have been recorded on the records kept in Judah. Were Zenos, Zenock, Neum, and Ezias (1 Nephi 19:10; Helaman 8:20) among them? They were all Hebrew prophets known to the Nephites, but their names do not appear in our current Old Testament. It is also possible that the writings of some prophets in Judah were not placed on the brass plates during the period under consideration, but of this we have no way of knowing” (Answers to Book of Mormon Questions, 43-44). Thus, the suggestion is made that the brass plates had their origin in the northern Kingdom of Israel, rather than in Judah to the south. For further evidence of this, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 19:13.

Were the brass plates in the possession of Laban the only complete copy of the scriptural record of the northern tribe? We don't know the answer to this question, but it seems likely that there were other copies in circulation, perhaps on scrolls of paper or other materials, of the books contained on the brass plates of Laban. There may also have been other complete copies on metal plates, but these were likely possessed by only a select few who had the requisite cultural standing and financial resources. Even Lehi, with all his wealth and spiritual inclination, did not possess the complete record on metal plates.

17 And now when my father saw all these things, he was filled with the Spirit, and began to prophesy concerning his seed—verse 18 In what sense will the “plates of brass . . . go forth unto all nations”? Perhaps in the future the brass plates will be brought forth and be made available for the righteous to study. Or perhaps this prophecy refers to those teachings from the brass plates contained in the Book of Mormon, and it is really the Book of Mormon that will “go forth unto all nations.”

18 That these plates of brass should go forth unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people who were of his seed.

19 Wherefore, he said that these plates of brass should never perish; neither should they be dimmed any more by time. And he prophesied many things concerning his seed.

verse 19 The phrase “dimmed any more by time” suggests that Laban had neglected the brass plates. To dim is to make less bright; to tarnish or sully. Such would never again be the case.

20 And it came to pass that thus far I and my father had kept the commandments wherewith the Lord had commanded us.

21 And we had obtained the records which the Lord had commanded us, and searched them and found that they were desirable; yea, even of great worth unto us, insomuch that we could preserve the commandments of the Lord unto our children.

22 Wherefore, it was wisdom in the Lord that we should carry them with us, as we journeyed in the wilderness towards the land of promise.

verses 21-22 The brass plates were preserved for the descendants of Lehi just as the Book of Mormon has been preserved for the people of our day.

1 And now I, Nephi, do not give the genealogy of my fathers in this part of my record; neither at any time shall I give it after upon these plates which I am writing; for it is given in the record which has been kept by my father; wherefore, I do not write it in this work.

2 For it sufficeth me to say that we are descendants of Joseph.

3 And it mattereth not to me that I am particular to give a full account of all the things of my father, for they cannot be written upon these plates, for I desire the room that I may write of the things of God.

verses 1-3 “These plates” are, of course, the small plates of Nephi. If you need a review of the large and small plates of Nephi and the plates of Mormon, see the supplemental article, Those Confusing Book of Mormon Plates.

The “record which has been kept by my father [Lehi]” was obviously Lehi’s personal journal. As has been mentioned previously, it may have been kept on material other than metal plates such as parchment. Certainly, the materials included on this record will be entered onto the large plates of Nephi by Nephi himself, who will become the creator and engraver for the first part of the large plates of Nephi (see 1 Nephi 19). When Mormon later abridged the large plates of Nephi, he would have found the genealogy of Lehi on that record. If he did choose to include that genealogy in his abridgement of the large plates of Nephi, then he would have entered it onto his record on the plates of Mormon. It would have then been found in the book of Lehi which was the first part of the record on the plates of Mormon. If it was in fact found there, then Martin Harris lost it when the 116 pages of manuscript were taken from him.

verse 3 “it mattereth not to me that I am particular to give a full account of all the things of my father” This phrase means in essence, “I don’t feel it is necessary to give a full account here on the small plates of Nephi of all of the secular things on my father’s record.” Nephi’s implication is that the space is limited on the small plates of Nephi, and writings on the small plates are to emphasize spiritual things or “the things of God.”

4 For the fulness of mine intent is that I may persuade men to come unto the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, and be saved.

verse 4 “God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob” These titles for Jehovah have their origins in the Abrahamic covenant. For a summary of this covenant, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 14:8.

Also included in these titles are Jehovah’s acts as deliverer of the Hebrew slaves (Alma 29:11; 36:2). These “deliveries” include the Lord’s delivering the senior Alma and his flock captive Nephi’s from the land of Helam in Mosiah 24:17-21, the delivering of King Limhi and his flock of Nephites from the Land of Nephi (Mosiah 22), and the delivery of the Israelites out of Egypt. See also Mosiah 27:16.

These titles also refer to Jehovah's redemptive role as Savior (1 Nephi 19:10).

5 Wherefore, the things which are pleasing unto the world I do not write, but the things which are pleasing unto God and unto those who are not of the world.

6 Wherefore, I shall give commandment unto my seed, that they shall not occupy these plates with things which are not of worth unto the children of men.

verse 6 Nephi commits himself to pass on to the future keepers of the small plates of Nephi the “commandment” that the writings on “these plates” should contain only spiritually edifying ideas.

Nephi began his record by praising his parents and noting that he had been “taught somewhat in all the learning of my father” (1 Nephi 1:1). He further stated that his record was made “in the language of my father, which consists of the learning of the Jews and the language of the Egyptians . . . and I make it according to my knowledge” (1 Nephi 1:2–3).

Several scholars have noted the similarity between Nephi's emphasis on the teachings of his parents, and specifically on that of his father, and the parallel emphasis found in a genre of ancient Near Eastern writings known as “Wisdom literature.” According to BYU professor Daniel C. Peterson: “Biblical scholars recognize a genre of writing, found both in the standard, canonical scriptures (e.g., Job, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, the Song of Solomon) and outside the canon, that they term ‘wisdom literature.’ Among the characteristics of this type of writing, not surprisingly, is frequent use of the term wisdom. There is . . . a strong emphasis on the teachings of parents, and especially on instruction by fathers” (Daniel C. Peterson, “Nephi and His Asherah,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 9, no. 2 (2000): 16–25, 80–81).

LDS scholar Taylor Halverson noted, “Proverbs, a representative repository of Wisdom literature in the Old Testament, advocates that a wise son cherish the words of the father” (Taylor Halverson, “Reading 1 Nephi with Wisdom,” Interpreter: A Journal of Mormon Scripture 22 (2016): 284). Halverson then cited Proverbs 7:1–3: “My son, keep my words, and lay up my commandments with thee. Keep my commandments, and live; and my law as the apple of thine eye. Bind them upon thy fingers, write them upon the table of thine heart.”

Nephi frequently made comments that demonstrated his dedication to obtaining, preserving, and passing on wisdom or knowledge. He wrote: “And we had obtained the records which the Lord had commanded us, and searched them and found that they were desirable; yea, even of great worth unto us, insomuch that we could preserve the commandments of the Lord unto our children. Wherefore, it was wisdom in the Lord that we should carry them with us, as we journeyed in the wilderness towards the land of promise” (1 Nephi 5:21–22).

Dr. Halverson cited these two verses (1 Nephi 6:5-6) and wrote: “The fact that the Book of Mormon is with us today is, in part, a fulfillment of the Wisdom tradition to preserve the sayings of the wise” (Halverson, “Reading 1 Nephi,” 286).

Nephi’s reaction to his father’s dream of the Tree of Life is another example of how faithfully he lived the admonition to search for wisdom “as for hid treasures.” The description and interpretation of the Tree of Life in Lehi and Nephi’s visions have many parallels with the Wisdom tradition. For example, in Proverbs, Wisdom is personified as a female figure who worked with God from before the foundation of the world (Proverbs 8:22–34; compare 1 Nephi 11:12–21), and is also referred to explicitly as “a tree of life” that will make “happy ... every one that retaineth her” (Proverbs 3:18; compare 1 Nephi 8:10). For more on this, see Peterson, “Nephi and His Asherah,” 16–25. Unlike his brothers, who failed to seek God’s help to understand their father’s vision because they were convinced that “the Lord maketh no such thing known unto us,” Nephi decided to “ask [God] in faith, believing” that he would “receive” (1 Nephi 15:9, 11).

In Wisdom literature, such as Proverbs, the wise man is often contrasted with proverbial foolish man: “A wise son maketh a glad father: but a foolish son is the heaviness of his mother” (Proverbs 10:1). A striking example of this type of construct is the story of Nephi (the wise man) being guided by the Spirit to find and slay Laban (the foolish man) so that Nephi could obtain the plates of brass. As Dr. Halverson argued, the name Laban may be an anagram of the Hebrew word nabal, which means “fool.” “Like a true fool,” Halverson commented, “Laban despises the word of God and fails to value the Brass Plates in his possession, a direct contrast to Nephi” (Halverson, “Reading 1 Nephi,” 291). Halverson has further observed that “Nephi reflects the wider Wisdom literature tradition” as he demonstrates the following elements: 1. Listening to and recording the words of his wise father; 2. Valuing learning and education; 3. Embracing hard work; 4. Seeking understanding from the Lord despite suffering and trials; and 5. Demonstrating the difference between the wise man and the fool. Halverson, “Reading 1 Nephi,” 284. See Dr. Halverson’s article for more details on how Nephi’s writings demonstrate all of these elements.).

LDS author Kevin Christensen, drawing on the work of biblical scholar Margaret Barker, noted that the biblical figures of Daniel and Joseph were prototypical wise men, in that they predict the future, interpret dreams, deal with heavenly beings, and are depicted in a royal setting, among other attributes. Nephi depicted himself similarly.

Nephi accepted a kingly role (2 Nephi 5:18), interpreted dreams and predicts the future (1 Nephi 11–15), and spoke with angels (1 Nephi 3:29–30, etc.). “Adding to his stature as a quintessential man of wisdom,” Christensen noted, “Nephi demonstrates knowledge of writing (1 Nephi 1:2) and possesses appropriate wisdom in relation to mining and metalworking (1 Nephi 17:9–10), shipbuilding (1 Nephi 17:8–9; 18:1–8), navigation (1 Nephi 18:12–13, 22–23), and the arts of war (2 Nephi 5:14, 34),” all of which are seen as attributes of wise men in the Wisdom tradition (See Kevin

Nephi can be seen to be particularly concerned with obtaining wisdom, whether it be from sacred records or directly from God, the source of all wisdom. He worked hard to preserve it, as can be seen by his dedication to making and keeping his own sacred records. He also gives strict commands to those to whom he passes that responsibility. The Wisdom tradition emphasized the need for learning, for knowledge, for holding fast to the way of righteousness.

Nephi knew the importance of these things. The way that Nephi lived his life, as recorded in his personal record, provides evidence that he was a student of this ancient tradition. As it says in Proverbs 3:13–15: "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding. For the merchandise of it is better than the merchandise of silver, and the gain thereof than fine gold. She is more precious than rubies: and all the things thou canst desire are not to be compared unto her."

The fact that Nephi so closely resembles the archetypal wise man and employs the Wisdom traditions of the ancient world supports the notion that the Book of Mormon should be read as an ancient text.

As Taylor Halverson has noted, "If the Wisdom tradition is a foundation for Nephi's scribal capabilities and outlook, perhaps the principles and literary skills represented by the scribal Wisdom tradition constitute the 'learning of the Jews' that Nephi references so early in his record" (Halverson, "Reading 1 Nephi," 293). Readers can better appreciate and comprehend Nephi as an author and as a person, and better internalize his message, by seeking to understand the ancient Wisdom traditions that can be found in both the Bible and the Book of Mormon. Furthermore, the value of possessing true wisdom should not be lost on the modern reader. They are aware that technology floods our world with easily accessible information. However, learning information is not the same as gaining wisdom and spiritual knowledge. Wisdom is arguably more valuable than information because wisdom provides guidance in applying that knowledge ethically and prudently. For example, young people today are inundated with information that could cause them to doubt the Church. However, no amount of scattered information can replace the power of wisdom in discerning between correct and false information. Only careful study with the heart and mind, and prayerful confirmation of the Spirit, can engender wisdom for discerning truth.

1 Nephi 7 Lehi's sons return to Jerusalem for Ishmael and his family.

Chapter 7 provides us with the account of the family of Ishmael's joining Lehi and his family in the wilderness.

verses 1-5 Here Lehi receives another revelation: the sons must go back to the land of Jerusalem once again, this time to obtain future brides for the sons of Lehi.

It is a fair question to ask why another family would be willing to abandon their home and all they had known to join these refugees in the wilderness. The only plausible answer is that Ishmael believed the words of the Lord that Jerusalem would soon be destroyed by the Babylonian armies who already occupied the city. Also, Nephi and his brothers had quite a story to tell about how an angel appeared to them and how the Lord had miraculously made it possible to secure the brass plates from Laban. The text of the Book of Mormon itself says, "The Lord did soften the heart of Ishmael, and also his household, insomuch that they took their journey with us down into the wilderness" (1 Nephi 7:5).

1 And now I would that ye might know, that after my father, Lehi, had made an end of prophesying concerning his seed, it came to pass that the Lord spake unto him again, saying that it was not meet for him, Lehi, that he should take his family into the wilderness alone; but that his sons should take daughters to wife, that they might raise up seed unto the Lord in the land of promise.

verse 1 Lehi's "prophesying concerning his seed" began in 1 Nephi 5:17. The adjective "meet" here means suitable, proper, or advisable.

"his sons should take daughters to wife" One definition of "daughters" in Webster's 1828 Dictionary of the English Language is "a daughter in law; a son's wife."

2 And it came to pass that the Lord commanded him that I, Nephi, and my brethren, should again return unto the land of Jerusalem, and bring down Ishmael and his family into the wilderness.

verse 2 "return unto the land of Jerusalem" We have commented previously on the difference between the "land of Jerusalem" and the "city of Jerusalem" (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:4). To reiterate: it is likely that the "land" is the area surrounding the city. This pattern will hold throughout the remainder of the Book of Mormon after the group arrives in the western hemisphere. For example, "land of Nephi" and "city of Nephi."

“bring down Ishmael . . . into the wilderness” Again, the implication here is that the wilderness was lower in elevation—“down”—from the “land of Jerusalem.”

In the Church, it has long been held that Ishmael’s ancestry went back to Joseph through Joseph’s birthright son Ephraim. This tradition is based on a discourse delivered by an apostle, Elder Erastus Snow, in the Logan tabernacle in Logan, Utah, on May 6, 1882. He said, “The Prophet Joseph informed us that the record of Lehi was contained on the 116 pages that were first translated and subsequently stolen, and of which an abridgment is given us in the first Book of Nephi [1 Nephi chapters 1 through 8], which is the record of Nephi individually, he himself being of the lineage of Manasseh; but that Ishmael was of the lineage of Ephraim, and that his sons [had] married into Lehi’s family, and Lehi’s sons married Ishmael’s daughters” (JD, 23:184).

3 And it came to pass that I, Nephi, did again, with my brethren, go forth into the wilderness to go up to Jerusalem.

verse 3 Notice that this time the brothers did not murmur. They were returning to Jerusalem for prospective wives!

4 And it came to pass that we went up unto the house of Ishmael, and we did gain favor in the sight of Ishmael, insomuch that we did speak unto him the words of the Lord.

5 And it came to pass that the Lord did soften the heart of Ishmael, and also his household, insomuch that they took their journey with us down into the wilderness to the tent of our father.

6 And it came to pass that as we journeyed in the wilderness, behold Laman and Lemuel, and two of the daughters of Ishmael, and the two sons of Ishmael and their families, did rebel against us; yea, against me, Nephi, and Sam, and their father, Ishmael, and his wife, and his three other daughters.

verse 6 This verse and the above quote by Elder Erastus Snow have caused some to speculate that Lehi’s family and that of Ishmael might have already had a relationship either by prior marriage or by plans for marriage. This might explain Lehi’s seeming nonchalance about instructing his sons to bring Ishmael’s family down into the wilderness. It seems likely that Lehi had some older daughters who had already married Ishmael’s sons. Perhaps Lehi and Ishmael had previously contracted with each other to have their children marry. Both were of the tribe of Joseph, and their families were nearly compatible in the number of matched pairs for marriage. When we include Laban’s servant Zoram, there is a perfect numerical match of marriageable people.

7 And it came to pass in the which rebellion, they were desirous to return unto the land of Jerusalem.

8 And now I, Nephi, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts, therefore I spake unto them, saying, yea, even unto Laman and unto Lemuel: Behold ye are mine elder brethren, and how is it that ye are so hard in your hearts, and so blind in your minds, that ye have need that I, your younger brother, should speak unto you, yea, and set an example for you?

verse 8 “I, Nephi, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts” See the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

9 How is it that ye have not hearkened unto the word of the Lord?

10 How is it that ye have forgotten that ye have seen an angel of the Lord?

verse 10 When did Laman and Lemuel see an angel? They were rebuked by an angel as they smote their younger brothers with a rod in the “cavity of a rock” (1 Nephi 3:27-30).

11 Yea, and how is it that ye have forgotten what great things the Lord hath done for us, in delivering us out of the hands of Laban, and also that we should obtain the record?

12 Yea, and how is it that ye have forgotten that the Lord is able to do all things according to his will, for the children of men, if it so be that they exercise faith in him? Wherefore, let us be faithful to him.

13 And if it so be that we are faithful to him, we shall obtain the land of promise; and ye shall know at some future period that the word of the Lord shall be fulfilled concerning the destruction of Jerusalem; for all things which the Lord hath spoken concerning the destruction of Jerusalem must be fulfilled.

verse 13 “ye shall know at some future period that the word of the Lord shall be fulfilled concerning the destruction of Jerusalem” The final destruction of Jerusalem by Babylon occurred in 586 BC, and revelation concerning that event is recorded in 2 Nephi 6:8 (also 2 Nephi 25:10).

14 For behold, the Spirit of the Lord ceaseth soon to strive with them; for behold, they have rejected the prophets, and Jeremiah have they cast into prison. And they have sought to take away the life of my father, insomuch that they have driven him out of the land.

verse 14 “the Spirit of the Lord ceaseth soon to strive with them” Nephi refers here to the Jews in Jerusalem.

“they have rejected the prophets” “Jeremiah have they cast into prison” “they have sought to take away the life of my father” Nephi implies that the actions taken against Jeremiah and the other prophets and the threats on Lehi’s life were all a part of the same rebellious mind set in Jerusalem.

“Jeremiah have they cast into prison” Brother Randall P. Spackman regards this verse as one of the most important clues for dating the time of Lehi’s departure from Jerusalem. The most notable incident of Jeremiah’s being cast into prison occurred within a year or two of Babylon’s captivity of Jerusalem (see Jeremiah 37:11 to 38:6). This would have occurred about 588 or 587 BC. Zedekiah was king of Jerusalem for about ten years from 597 BC until the Babylonian captivity in 586 BC. Jeremiah was probably imprisoned in the last year or two of Zedekiah’s reign. After Jeremiah was imprisoned, Zedekiah sought him out to see if Jeremiah had a message from the Lord for Zedekiah. Jeremiah did indeed have a message. It was that the king of Babylon was about to capture and destroy Jerusalem! This was an unacceptable message, and because of it Jeremiah was remanded to prison where he was “sunk in the mire.” If Nephi was referring to this episode of Jeremiah’s imprisonment, then Lehi and his family could not have exited Jerusalem until after Jeremiah was imprisoned in 588 or 587 BC. There were perhaps other incidents of Jeremiah’s being cast into prison well-known to Lehi’s family, since Lehi and Jeremiah were contemporary prophets. Perhaps it is to one of these other incidents that Nephi is referring. We still cannot be certain as to exactly when Lehi and his family left Jerusalem. It could have been any time between 597 BC and 586 BC.

15 Now behold, I say unto you that if ye will return unto Jerusalem ye shall also perish with them. And now, if ye have choice, go up to the land, and remember the words which I speak unto you, that if ye go ye will also perish; for thus the Spirit of the Lord constraineth me that I should speak.

verse 15 Why didn’t Laman and Lemuel and the other members of their rebellious group abandon Lehi’s family and return to Jerusalem? Apparently at this point in time they were irresolute, uncertain, and ambivalent in their disbelief. They probably half believed Nephi’s warnings (cf. verses 19 and 20 in this chapter).

The phrase “if ye have choice” doesn’t question whether or not they had their agency. Certainly, they had that. Rather the phrase seems to mean, “if it is your choice.”

16 And it came to pass that when I, Nephi, had spoken these words unto my brethren, they were angry with me. And it came to pass that they did lay their hands upon me, for behold, they were exceedingly wroth, and they did bind me with cords, for they sought to take away my life, that they might leave me in the wilderness to be devoured by wild beasts.

verse 16 How like human nature! If Laman and Lemuel and the other rebellious members of the traveling party had made the decision to return to Jerusalem, they probably would have done so and not bothered to become angry with Nephi. It appears, however, they were afraid to disregard Nephi’s warning. They thus wanted to return to Jerusalem but were frightened to do so. Thus, frustrated by their dilemma and ambivalent feelings, they took out their frustrations on Nephi.

“that they might leave me in the wilderness to be devoured by wild beasts”

Were there wild beasts in Arabia? We should remember the origin of the word “wilderness.” Its old English form was wilddeoren, meaning “of wild beast.” The Greek Agatharkides wrote of Midian, “The country is full of wild camels, as well as of flocks of deer, gazelles, sheep, mules, and oxen.” As a result, he also noted that the game “attracts numerous lions, wolves, and panthers” (Burton, Gold-Mines of Midian, 108). Nephi’s concern for his life was real. The last lion in Arabia was killed in Midian in 1926.

17 But it came to pass that I prayed unto the Lord, saying: O Lord, according to my faith which is in thee, wilt thou deliver me from the hands of my brethren; yea, even give me strength that I may burst these bands with which I am bound.

18 And it came to pass that when I had said these words, behold, the bands were loosed from off my hands and feet, and I stood before my brethren, and I spake unto them again.

19 And it came to pass that they were angry with me again, and sought to lay hands upon me; but behold, one of the daughters of Ishmael, yea, and also her mother, and one of the sons of Ishmael, did plead with my brethren, insomuch that they did soften their hearts; and they did cease striving to take away my life.

verse 19 “one of the daughters of Ishmael” I am asking you to speculate, of course, but do you suppose that it was this daughter of Ishmael that Nephi eventually married (see 1 Nephi 16:7)? And what about those two daughters of Ishmael that sided with Laman and Lemuel (verse 6)? Might they have been the two that married the two rebellious brothers?

20 And it came to pass that they were sorrowful, because of their wickedness, insomuch that they did bow down before me, and did plead with me that I would forgive them of the thing that they had done against me.

21 And it came to pass that I did frankly forgive them all that they had done, and I did exhort them that they would pray unto the Lord their God for forgiveness. And it came to pass that they did so. And after they had done praying unto the Lord we did again travel on our journey towards the tent of our father.

verse 21 “I did frankly forgive them all that they had done” This simple phrase speaks powerfully of the magnanimous nature of Nephi’s character.

22 And it came to pass that we did come down unto the tent of our father. And after I and my brethren and all the house of Ishmael had come down unto the tent of my father, they did give thanks unto the Lord their God; and they did offer sacrifice and burnt offerings unto him.

verse 22 At this point in time, the traveling party consisted of at least eighteen people. These were Lehi, Sariah, Laman, Lemuel, Sam, Nephi, Zoram, Ishmael, his wife, five daughters, and two sons with their wives. There may also have been children from two married sons of Ishmael. It is interesting to ponder why two married sons of Ishmael would have opted to come into the wilderness with their wives. Could it have been family loyalty? Or perhaps they were touched by the Spirit and believed that Jerusalem was about to be destroyed.

“and they did offer sacrifice and burnt offerings unto him” Again, we see the custom of offering appropriate sacrifices to the Lord in appropriate circumstances. See the commentary for 1 Nephi 2:7.

1 Nephi Chapter 8

1 Nephi 8 Lehi's vision of the tree of life

This chapter contains Nephi's record of his father's vision of the dark and dreary wilderness or waste, the tree of life and its precious fruit, the rod of iron and the path through the darkness, and the great and spacious building to which some apostatized. This is Lehi's so-called "vision of the tree of life."

Trees were among the favorite objects of biblical imagery and symbolism. Trees usually represent people. Comparing the characteristics of trees to the human experience was a familiar teaching approach among the Jewish sages for centuries. The following is an example from the most known and used part of the Mishnah (volumes of rabbinic writings). One rabbi used to say, "One whose wisdom is greater than his deeds what is he like? A tree whose branches are many and its roots few. And the wind comes and roots it up and overturns it on its face. . . But one whose deeds exceed his wisdom what is he like? A tree whose branches are few and its roots many; so that even if all the winds that are in the world come and blow upon it they stir it not from its place" (Pirke Aboth, III:22, 92-93).

From Jesus and his disciples came many examples of trees as object lessons. Bad trees produce ill will, negativism, criticism, accusation, cynicism, and all kind of destructive thinking and sinful behavior. Good trees produce good fruit. Joseph Smith was a good tree. The Book of Mormon is a good tree. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is a good tree. Jesus Christ himself is the best tree of all—the Tree of Life. You can know the trees; that is, you can know the hearts and souls of people perfectly by their fruit, that is, by what comes out of them in the form of thoughts, words, feelings, and actions. In a sense, we seldom speak or act truly impulsively. We say and do what we are.

The issues addressed in Lehi's vision of the tree of life are so fundamental and important in this mortal phase that the reader may wish to give careful thought to Lehi's vision. The interested reader may find it helpful to read two articles in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 5, The Natural Self and the Spiritual Self and chapter 6, The Gospel and the Two Natures of Man before commencing a study of this chapter.

Later on, Nephi desired to witness the things his father had seen. In response to his desire, we will read that Nephi was "caught away" to "an exceedingly high mountain" (1 Nephi 11:1), where he was shown an impressive vision. Nephi saw what had been revealed to his father, and he was also shown the interpretation of several of the major symbols of the vision, which he later recorded (1 Nephi 11-15). We will make use of Nephi's account of this same vision in our discussion of chapter 8.

The most important symbol in Lehi's vision is the tree. It represents the love of God the Father, particularly the love of God as manifest in the gift of his Son. Therefore the tree is actually a symbol or "type" of Jesus Christ himself. Toward him men press forward on the strait and narrow path. He is the way (John 14:6). Only he can make it possible for us to obtain eternal life. An expanded meaning of the symbol of the tree, then, is eternal life in the presence of the Father.

Lehi's vision basically consists of the scene of the tree of life and the efforts of some people to obtain its fruits. Nephi's vision, to be discussed later in chapters 11-15, consists of much more.

1 And it came to pass that we had gathered together all manner of seeds of every kind, both of grain of every kind, and also of the seeds of fruit of every kind.

verse 1 This is an interesting informational verse, though it seems a bit out of context here. It has become apparent, especially to interested scholars, that the Book of Mormon peoples depended on well-developed agriculture. More than sixty passages refer to agriculture in the Book of Mormon, most of them incidental to historical accounts but some of them allegorical. It would seem most likely that this gathering together of seeds was in preparation for their eventual departure from the valley of Lemuel. These could have been gathered together while the family was still in Jerusalem. Or, some of them could have been obtained from the area around the valley of Lemuel. The seeds available today in the wadi Tayyib al-Isim (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 2:6) include a few varieties of grain and dates. There are stories of Arabs' surviving for long periods of time on dates and water.

In spite of eight years in the wilderness, time during which many seeds may lose their ability to germinate, the seeds brought from Jerusalem "did grow exceedingly" when cultivated in the promised land (1 Nephi 18:24). The Jaredites also carried seeds to the promised land along with domestic and wild animals, including flocks, fowl, fish, and honey-bees (Ether 1:41; 2:1-3).

Several specific cultivated plants are mentioned in the Book of Mormon. The Nephite civilization had corn, wheat, barley, neas, and sheum (see Mosiah 9:9 and its commentary). In the Bible, the word corn typically refers to a cereal grain of some type, such as wheat or barley (e.g., Isaiah 28:28). However, the corn mentioned in Mosiah 9:9 was probably maize (called corn in the United States) because wheat and barley are mentioned separately in the same verse. Indeed, maize was among the most important staple foods of ancient American civilizations and was found throughout the Americas at the time of European contact. The single reference to neas and sheum in Mosiah 9:9 provides no additional information about these plants other than their agricultural importance. Olives are mentioned several times prior to the allegory of the olive tree in Jacob 5 but never in a context of cultivation in the New World. After the allegory of the olive tree, there is no further reference to the olive in the Book of Mormon. Grape is not specifically mentioned, although there are several references to wine. King Noah planted vineyards and built wine-presses. Indeed, people cultivated grapes in both the Old and new Worlds prior to European contact.

No fiber-producing plants are specifically mentioned. Linen, which is derived from flax (a plant of Old World origin), is mentioned on several occasions in the Book of Mormon (Mosiah 10:5; Alma 1:29; Ether 9:17). Cotton is a domesticated native of both the Old and New Worlds, but there is no reference to it in the Book of Mormon.

Agriculture includes animal husbandry. For a discussion of animals in the Book of Mormon, see the commentary on 1 Nephi 18:25. While it is clear that the Jaredites brought domesticated animals with them from the Old World to the Americas (Ether 1:41; 2:1-3), there is no indication that Lehi's group carried such animals on their voyage. In fact, there are evidences that they did not do so. For example, during their time in the wilderness, Lehi's group hunted wild animals for meat, and they were unable to obtain food when the bow of Nephi was broken, suggesting that they had no domestic animals with them that they could use for food. Yet, we will learn that upon their arrival in the promised land, they will discover domestic animals, including "the cow and the ox, and the ass and the horse, and the goat" (see 1 Nephi 18:25 and its commentary).

2 And it came to pass that while my father tarried in the wilderness he spake unto us, saying: Behold, I have dreamed a dream; or, in other words, I have seen a vision.

verse 2 "while my father tarried in the wilderness" All of the events in this chapter occurred while Lehi and his extended family were camped in the valley of Lemuel. Nephi will now take a long quote of his father Lehi from the record of Lehi (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:17). This quotation of his father will extend through verse 28.

3 And behold, because of the thing which I have seen, I have reason to rejoice in the Lord because of Nephi and also of Sam; for I have reason to suppose that they, and also many of their seed, will be saved.

verse 3 Keep in mind that the speaker or first person in these verses is Lehi, not Nephi.

"saved" The most common interpretation of this word, when used in the Book of Mormon, is exalted.

4 But behold, Laman and Lemuel, I fear exceedingly because of you; for behold, methought I saw in my dream, a dark and dreary wilderness.

verse 4 The "dark and dreary wilderness" (or "dark and dreary waste" in verse 7) seems to be symbolic of the fallen state of man in the lone and dreary world.

“Methought” is the preterite tense of methinks. It means “it seemed to me; I thought.”

5 And it came to pass that I saw a man, and he was dressed in a white robe; and he came and stood before me.

6 And it came to pass that he spake unto me, and bade me follow him.

verses 5-6 The “man . . . dressed in a white robe” is Lehi’s guide, a heavenly messenger or angel. Some have suggested that this messenger might have been the Holy Ghost (James E. Talmage, Articles of Faith, 30th edition, 32; Sidney B. Sperry, Answers to Gospel Doctrine Questions, 27-30) or even Jesus Christ.

7 And it came to pass that as I followed him I beheld myself that I was in a dark and dreary waste.

verse 7 Again, the “dark and dreary waste” seems to be symbolic of the fallen state of man in the lone and dreary world.

The geography of Lehi’s vision is more at home in Arabia than it is in western New York. The scenes in Lehi’s dream alternate between long, lonely stretches of desert crossed at night and regions of dense population (see verses 21, 24, 27, 30, 33). Lehi also wrote of deep canyons, known as wadis, that were almost impossible to traverse (compare “a great and a terrible gulf” in 1 Nephi 12:18 and “an awful gulf” in 1 Nephi 15:28). After rains, the seasonal streams in the wadis fill with mud and debris (called “filthy water” in 1 Nephi 12:16 and “filthiness” in 1 Nephi 15:26-27).

In contrast, Lehi described occasional green fields next to the desert graced not only by abundant water (there were already extensive irrigation works in south Arabia that supported a larger population than the one living there now) but also by lush vegetation represented by the tree full of delicious fruit (see 1 Nephi 8:9-13). He saw heavily traveled paths leading to the green areas (see verses 20-21) as well as “forbidden paths” and “strange roads” of the surrounding desert where the unwary would become “lost” (verses 23, 28, 32). Further, Lehi’s mention of “a mist of darkness” (verse 23) reminds one of the heavy mists and fogs that blanket the coasts of Arabia (especially during the monsoon season) including the place where the family most likely emerged from the desert.

The dream is also true to other cultural and geographical dimensions of the family’s world. For example, Lehi’s dream began in “a dark and dreary wilderness” wherein Lehi and a guide walked “in darkness” for “many hours” (1 Nephi 8:4, 8). Plainly, they were walking at night, the preferred time for traveling through the hot desert. Further, when Lehi reached the tree that grew in “a large and spacious field,” which field is different from the wilderness, he partook of the fruit of the tree and then looked for his family, apparently expecting to see them (see verses 9, 12-14). This sort of detail meshes with the custom of family travel in the Near East, with the father going as a vanguard to look for danger and for food while the mother and younger children follow. When there are other adult members in a clan or family, the males form a rear guard, as did Laman and Lemuel in this set of scenes (verses 17-18). Hence, in the dream Lehi was evidently not alone with the guide as they traveled. His family members were following him, but at a safe distance as custom required.

The dream of Lehi teems with people. Lehi saw multitudes (1 Nephi 8:21-22, 24, 26-27, 30-31). Where did all these people come from? Was not Arabia basically an empty place? The answer is yes and no. There are vast regions where no human inhabitant lives. The problem in those areas, of course, is a lack of water. But anciently both the northwest and southwest sections of the Arabian Peninsula supported large populations.

The “great and spacious building” of Lehi’s dream appeared unusual enough to his eye that he called it “strange” (1 Nephi 8:33). Why would Lehi, who had possibly traveled a good deal during his life, call a building strange? And does the word strange fit with the fact that the building soared into “the air, high above the earth” (1 Nephi 8:26)? Evidently, Lehi’s descriptions of this building point to architecture unfamiliar to him. Furthermore, his words prophetically anticipate architecture that he and his party would see in south Arabia. Recent studies have shown that the so-called skyscraper architecture of modern Yemen (the extreme southwestern area of the Arabian peninsula) has been common since at least the eighth century BC and is apparently unique in the ancient world. In this light, it seems evident that Lehi was seeing the architecture of ancient southern Arabia in his dream. For contemporary buildings there “stood as it were in the air,” rising to five or six stories in height.

Could Joseph Smith have known that any of these architectural features existed in the days of Lehi and Sariah? The answer has to be no. Dr. S. Kent Brown has found that no classic source about ancient Arabia was available to Joseph Smith (Echoes and Evidences of the Book of Mormon, ed. Donald W. Parry, Daniel C. Peterson, and John W. Welch, FARMS, 69-76).

8 And after I had traveled for the space of many hours in darkness, I began to pray unto the Lord that he would have mercy on me, according to the multitude of his tender mercies.

verse 8 Lehi grew weary of the dreary darkness of man’s fallen state, and he prayed for light.

“have mercy on me, according to the multitude of his tender mercies” This interesting phrase is not unique to this verse of scripture. It is also found in Psalm 106:45; Isaiah 63:7; Lamentations 3:32; and Ether 6:12.

9 And it came to pass after I had prayed unto the Lord I beheld a large and spacious field.

verse 9 The “large and spacious field” is the world (see Matthew 13:38; 1 Nephi 8:20).

10 And it came to pass that I beheld a tree, whose fruit was desirable to make one happy.

verse 10 “I beheld a tree” It is interesting to note that a tree of life is a part of the cultural symbolism of several Near Eastern cultures including Hebrew, Mesopotamian, and Egyptian (C. Wilfred Griggs, “The Tree of Life in Ancient Cultures” Ensign, June 1988, 26-31). In a similar vision had by Lehi’s son Nephi, we will read that the tree of life is associated the waters of life (1 Nephi 11:25). This is reminiscent of an ancient Jewish tradition that “the tree of life is planted near the source of the water of life” (Bernard Chapira, “Legendes Bibliques,” Revue des etudes juives 69, 1919: 105 note 4). Also the tree of life and its connection with the waters of life also occur in ancient Egyptian religion and literature (Edmund Hermsen, Lebensbaumsymbolik im alten Agypten, Cologne: Brill, 1981, 3).

In 1941, in Izapa, in southern Mexico a carved stone slab was discovered which dates to about 200 to 300 BC. It is an apparent depiction of the tree of life. It is referred to as Stela 5 and is one of 164 sculptures discovered at Izapa, an ancient temple center located near the Pacific coast. Some Book of Mormon researchers have become interested in trying to associate this stela with Lehi’s vision of the tree of life, and Stela 5 has even been called the “Lehi stone” in some LDS circles. The stone portrays a complicated scene of humans and supernatural beings seated or standing around a magnificent fruit tree. Although the stela may represent a tree of life, there is no written inscription accompanying the carved scene, and thus positive interpretation of the other images is impossible. It would seem that archaeological science is a long way from making any truly confirmed association between Stela 5 and Lehi’s vision of the tree of life.

11 And it came to pass that I did go forth and partake of the fruit thereof; and I beheld that it was most sweet, above all that I ever before tasted. Yea, and I beheld that the fruit thereof was white, to exceed all the whiteness that I had ever seen.

verse 11 The words “white” and “whiteness” might be interpreted as “full of eternal glory, and instilling everlasting joy.”

You well might ask, “What fruit is white?”

In a 2005 presentation, Margaret Barker, a non-Mormon biblical scholar, asked the question, “Do the revelations to Joseph Smith fit [into the context of the time of] the reign of King Zedekiah . . . [who] was installed as king in Jerusalem in 597 [BC]” (Margaret Barker, “Joseph Smith and Preexilic Israelite Religion,” in The Worlds of Joseph Smith, ed. John W. Welch, Provo, UT: Brigham Young University Press, 2005, 69–82)? One example offered by Barker is the depiction of the white fruit in Lehi's vision, which finds parallels in ancient Jewish and Christian beliefs. The early Christian (Gnostic) treatise titled On the Origin of the World includes a description of paradise (the Garden of Eden) and the Tree of Life: "The tree of life looks like the sun, and its branches are lovely," the text reads. "Its leaves are like the leaves of cypress, its fruit is like a cluster of white grapes, and its height reaches the sky" (Marvin Meyer, trans., "On the Origin of the World," in The Nag Hammadi Scriptures, ed. Marvin Meyer, New York: Harper One, 2007, 210). This finds a parallel in the non-canonical Jewish text 1 Enoch, which describes the fragrant "tree of wisdom" as containing clusters of grapes (1 Enoch 32:4–6).

Margaret Barker mentions that she was unaware of other ancient sources describing the fruit as being white until she encountered the Book of Mormon. "Imagine my surprise," Barker exclaimed, "when I read the account of Lehi's vision of the tree whose white fruit made one happy (1 Nephi 11:4–23)." Barker concluded, "This revelation to Joseph Smith was the ancient Wisdom symbolism, intact, and almost certainly as it was known in 600 BC" ("Joseph Smith and Preexilic Israelite Religion," 76).

12 And as I partook of the fruit thereof it filled my soul with exceedingly great joy; wherefore, I began to be desirous that my family should partake of it also; for I knew that it was desirable above all other fruit.

verses 12 "I partook of the fruit thereof" According to modern interpretation, "to partake of" means to eat or drink something. On the other hand, Webster's 1828 Dictionary of the English Language defines the phrase "to partake of" as "to take a part, portion, or share in common with others." In other words, "partaking of" something, according to Webster, was a communal act where, as part of a group, one shared things in common with the others in the group (see Moroni 6:6; D&C 20:75).

To partake of the fruit of the tree, then, is to, along with others, accept Christ and his gospel and thus ultimately enjoy the greatest of all the gifts of God—eternal life in his presence.

13 And as I cast my eyes round about, that perhaps I might discover my family also, I beheld a river of water; and it ran along, and it was near the tree of which I was partaking the fruit.

verse 13 We will later learn that Lehi was so distracted with concerns over his family that he did not notice the filthiness of the water in the river (1 Nephi 12:16; 15:27). This river of filthy water represents filthiness or the depths of hell or "an awful gulf which separated the wicked from the tree of life, and also from the saints of God" (1 Nephi 15:28).

A similar “gulf” existed in the spirit world before the resurrection of Jesus which separated the righteous in paradise from the wicked in prison. Figuratively this river seems to represent the distance in spiritual progress and receptivity that separated the righteous from the wicked. It is symbolic of the hopeless and desperate situation of those who have given themselves over to influences of the world.

14 And I looked to behold from whence it came; and I saw the head thereof a little way off; and at the head thereof I beheld your mother Sariah, and Sam, and Nephi; and they stood as if they knew not whither they should go.

verse 14 One of the definitions of the word whence in Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language is “from what source.” The word from just prior to whence is thus redundant. The “head” of the river is the point of its beginning.

15 And it came to pass that I beckoned unto them; and I also did say unto them with a loud voice that they should come unto me, and partake of the fruit, which was desirable above all other fruit.

16 And it came to pass that they did come unto me and partake of the fruit also.

17 And it came to pass that I was desirous that Laman and Lemuel should come and partake of the fruit also; wherefore, I cast mine eyes towards the head of the river, that perhaps I might see them.

18 And it came to pass that I saw them, but they would not come unto me and partake of the fruit.

19 And I beheld a rod of iron, and it extended along the bank of the river, and led to the tree by which I stood.

verse 19 The “rod of iron” represents the word of God or the gospel of Jesus Christ. An expanded meaning is that Christ and his gospel are the only means by which we can attain the presence of the Father—our exaltation. The location of the rod of iron in Lehi’s vision is pertinent since it extended along the bank of the river of filthiness. One had to maintain a firm hold on the rod of iron to keep from losing one’s way and slipping into the river, particularly since mists of darkness tended to impair vision along the path (see verse 23).

20 And I also beheld a strait and narrow path, which came along by the rod of iron, even to the tree by which I stood; and it also led by the head of the fountain, unto a large and spacious field, as if it had been a world.

verse 20 The word “strait” does not mean straight. Rather it means narrow, restricted, rigorous, difficult, and exacting. He who walks the path must do so carefully with his eyes fixed upon the Lord and his anointed servants.

While some may object to the use of the word strait here rather than straight, there is significant justification for its use as discussed in the supplemental article Strait and Straight in the Book of Mormon.

“the head of the fountain” A “fountain” is a spring or a river, and its “head” is the place where it begins or emerges from the ground. The fountain mentioned here has been thought by some to be the “fountain of living waters” which will be mentioned in 1 Nephi 11:25. It seems more likely, however, that it is instead the river of filthy water (see 1 Nephi 8:32; 1 Nephi 12:16).

Here we are given to understand that the “strait and narrow path” led from the world (the large and spacious field) past the head of the river, to the tree.

verses 21-23 In these verses which follow, Lehi describes people who are responsive to the light of Christ within them, and they even set out to seek for their eternal purpose and destiny. However, the path is rigorous, and they are eventually distracted, and they are turned away by the extraneous and unnecessary things the world offers in abundance. These things include seeking for wealth, power, fame, and the unrighteous satisfaction of sexual appetites.

21 And I saw numberless concourses of people, many of whom were pressing forward, that they might obtain the path which led unto the tree by which I stood.

22 And it came to pass that they did come forth, and commence in the path which led to the tree.

23 And it came to pass that there arose a mist of darkness; yea, even an exceedingly great mist of darkness, insomuch that they who had commenced in the path did lose their way, that they wandered off and were lost.

verse 23 The “mist of darkness” represents things of the world or the temptations of the world.

verses 24-28 This second group of people accept the gospel but eventually they are “ashamed” or dissuaded by the taunts and scorn of worldly people. They are deceived by those offering counsel based upon wisdom, intellectualism, philosophies, and opinions of the world.

24 And it came to pass that I beheld others pressing forward, and they came forth and caught hold of the end of the rod of iron; and they did press forward through the mist of darkness, clinging to the rod of iron, even until they did come forth and partake of the fruit of the tree.

25 And after they had partaken of the fruit of the tree they did cast their eyes about as if they were ashamed.

26 And I also cast my eyes round about, and beheld, on the other side of the river of water, a great and spacious building; and it stood as it were in the air, high above the earth.

verse 26 The “great and spacious building” represents the world and the wisdom thereof and the vain imaginations and pride of the children of men.

27 And it was filled with people, both old and young, both male and female; and their manner of dress was exceedingly fine; and they were in the attitude of mocking and pointing their fingers towards those who had come at and were partaking of the fruit.

28 And after they had tasted of the fruit they were ashamed, because of those that were scoffing at them; and they fell away into forbidden paths and were lost.

29 And now I, Nephi, do not speak all the words of my father.

verse 29 Nephi indicates some type of gap in his description of his father's vision. We do not know what was omitted here. The following verse suggests that Nephi found it expedient to do some redacting and summarizing of Lehi's account.

30 But, to be short in writing, behold, he saw other multitudes pressing forward; and they came and caught hold of the end of the rod of iron; and they did press their way forward, continually holding fast to the rod of iron, until they came forth and fell down and partook of the fruit of the tree.

verse 30 “they came forth and fell down” It is notable that Webster's 1828 Dictionary of the English Language defines the phrase “to fall down” as “to prostrate one's self in worship” and “to bend or bow as a suppliant.” It is probable that these individuals prostrated themselves in worship upon recognizing the significance of the tree (see also 1 Nephi 17:55).

Apparently, these people remained steadfast and inherited eternal life.

verses 31-33 These people never did grab hold of the rod nor did they seek for the tree of life. They became lost while “feeling their way” toward the great and spacious building. They sought for the pleasures of the world and the approval of the worldly wise. Once they achieve worldly status, they are inclined to scoff and mock those who are trying to live a simple, godly, and spiritual life.

31 And he also saw other multitudes feeling their way towards that great and spacious building.

verse 31 “feeling their way” One point of some interest, but of little importance, is that the original Book of Mormon manuscript rendered this phrase, “pressing their way.” Apparently, an error was made as the original manuscript was read and copied to create the printers manuscript. Dr. Royal Skousen has observed that the original manuscript version is wholly consistent in representing people as pressing, and not feeling, their way.

32 And it came to pass that many were drowned in the depths of the fountain; and many were lost from his view, wandering in strange roads.

verse 32 “many were drowned in the depths of the fountain” This “fountain” is obviously the river of filthiness, worldliness, referred to in 1 Nephi 8:13-14.

33 And great was the multitude that did enter into that strange building. And after they did enter into that building they did point the finger of scorn at me and those that were partaking of the fruit also; but we heeded them not.

34 These are the words of my father: For as many as heeded them, had fallen away.

verse 34 “Them” does not refer to “the words of my father,” rather it refers to the taunts of the inhabitants of the great and spacious building. Those who have accepted the gospel but heed the ridicule of the worldly wise are likely to be led away from the gospel.

35 And Laman and Lemuel partook not of the fruit, said my father.

36 And it came to pass after my father had spoken all the words of his dream or vision, which were many, he said unto us, because of these things which he saw in a vision, he exceedingly feared for Laman and Lemuel; yea, he feared lest they should be cast off from the presence of the Lord.

37 And he did exhort them then with all the feeling of a tender parent, that they would hearken to his words, that perhaps the Lord would be merciful to them, and not cast them off; yea, my father did preach unto them.

verse 37 This verse is all the more meaningful if we keep in mind that under ancient Israelite law the father had enormous legal power, to the point of disinheriting or even putting to death a rebellious child (Welch, John W., The Book of Mormon: Second Nephi, The Doctrinal Structure, Salt Lake City and Religious Studies Center Brigham Young University: Bookcraft, 1989, 66). Thus, Lehi’s restraint here is real evidence of the tender and loving feeling he had for his wayward sons.

38 And after he had preached unto them, and also prophesied unto them of many things, he bade them to keep the commandments of the Lord; and he did cease speaking unto them.

This chapter is the “editorial comment” by Nephi which forms the bridge between Nephi’s record of his father’s writings and his own writings. In a sense, this entire chapter is a colophon, as described in the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:1-3. Chapters 1 through 8 of 1 Nephi are Nephi’s record and abridgement of his father’s writings, while Nephi’s own writings begin in chapter 10.

verses 1-5 In these verses the phrase “these plates” refers to the small plates of Nephi. The “other plates” which do contain a “full account of my people” are the large plates of Nephi. See the supplemental article entitled, Those Confusing Book of Mormon Plates.

1 And all these things did my father see, and hear, and speak, as he dwelt in a tent, in the valley of Lemuel, and also a great many more things, which cannot be written upon these plates.

2 And now, as I have spoken concerning these plates, behold they are not the plates upon which I make a full account of the history of my people; for the plates upon which I make a full account of my people I have given the name of Nephi; wherefore, they are called the plates of Nephi, after mine own name; and these plates also are called the plates of Nephi.

verse 2 Both the large plates of Nephi and the small plates of Nephi were originally known only as “the plates of Nephi.” Please recall that the adjective “large” refers to the number of plates (or number of “pages”) in the set and not to the size of the individual plates.

3 Nevertheless, I have received a commandment of the Lord that I should make these plates, for the special purpose that there should be an account engraven of the ministry of my people.

verse 3 “These plates” are the small plates of Nephi. We will read about the Lord’s formally commanding Nephi to make and begin keeping this record in 2 Nephi 5.

4 Upon the other plates should be engraven an account of the reign of the kings, and the wars and contentions of my people; wherefore these plates are for the more part of the ministry; and the other plates are for the more part of the reign of the kings and the wars and contentions of my people.

verse 4 “these plates are for the more part of the ministry” The expression “more part” is used in the scriptures to mean the majority or most. Here, the expression “for the more part of” mean mostly for. The small plates of Nephi were intended to focus on the spiritual aspects of the Book of Mormon story. It is notable that the small plates of Nephi do contain more than merely the spiritual dealings of the Lord with his people. They also contain some important political points. Noel B. Reynolds, a Harvard-trained political scientist, noticed, “Nephi carefully constructed what he wrote to convince his and later generations that the Lord had selected him over his older brothers to be Lehi’s successor. Thus, one interesting way to read the account is as a political tract produced to show that his rule was authoritative” (“Nephi’s Political Testament,” in Rediscovering the Book of Mormon: Insights You May Have Missed Before, ed. John L. Sorenson and Melvin J. Thorne, Salt Lake City/Provo: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1991, 221).

Reynolds was the first to notice that Nephi began to write his small plates, not as a daily diary, but after the division between him and his brothers. This division created a competing claim to political authority. The record also began after Nephi and his people built a temple and Nephi had become their king (2 Nephi 5:16, 18, 28–33).

It cannot be accidental that very early in his narrative, Nephi points out that, as he sought to confirm the truth of his father’s revelations, he was given a revelation of his own. The Lord tells Nephi, “thou shalt be made a ruler and a teacher over thy brethren” (1 Nephi 2:22). This is reaffirmed in a dramatic way when an angel comes to tell his older and reluctant brothers of Nephi’s privileged status (1 Nephi 3:29).

“the other plates are for the more part of the reign of the kings and the wars and contentions of my people” “The other plates” are the large plates of Nephi. They will focus on more secular historical issues.

5 Wherefore, the Lord hath commanded me to make these plates for a wise purpose in him, which purpose I know not.

verse 5 We know that the Lord’s “purpose” in commanding Nephi to make the small plates of Nephi related to the fact that the translation of the initial part of the plates of Mormon (the book of Lehi) will be lost by Martin Harris in June of 1828. See the supplemental article, A Brief History of the Translation of the Book of Mormon.

6 But the Lord knoweth all things from the beginning; wherefore, he prepareth a way to accomplish all his works among the children of men; for behold, he hath all power unto the fulfilling of all his words. And thus it is. Amen.

verse 6 When Nephi concludes a major section of his writings, he uses the wording, “And thus it is. Amen.” See also 1 Nephi 14:30 and 1 Nephi 22:31. Dr. Hugh Nibley suggested that this expression may have Egyptian origins (Lehi in the Desert, 18).

1 Nephi 10:19 He that diligently seeketh shall find and the mysteries of God shall be opened unto him.

Chapters 10 and 11 of 1 Nephi plus a few other references in the Book of Mormon (see the commentary for Mosiah 15:5-7) contain important specific prophetic revelations concerning Jesus. Those Book of Mormon peoples who believed these teachings and looked forward in faith to Christ's coming were literally Christians. Thus, their record, the Book of Mormon, is indeed "Another Testament of Jesus Christ."

1 And now I, Nephi, proceed to give an account upon these plates of my proceedings, and my reign and ministry; wherefore, to proceed with mine account, I must speak somewhat of the things of my father, and also of my brethren.

verse 1 As previously stated, chapter 10 begins the actual account of Nephi. Up to now Nephi has been summarizing the record of his father Lehi. Chapter 9 was simply Nephi's editorial comment placed between the record of his father Lehi and his own record.

Actually, most of chapter 10 includes more of Nephi's recollections of what his father Lehi prophesied and taught. In this chapter and in several of the remaining chapters in the books of 1 Nephi and 2 Nephi, Nephi will continue to use his father's record for source material and will even quote from it on occasion. Nephi's brother Jacob will also quote from his father's record.

2 For behold, it came to pass after my father had made an end of speaking the words of his dream, and also of exhorting them to all diligence, he spake unto them concerning the Jews—verse 2 The "thems" in this verse obviously refer to Nephi's brothers.

3 That after they should be destroyed, even that great city Jerusalem, and many be carried away captive into Babylon, according to the own due time of the Lord, they should return again, yea, even be brought back out of captivity; and after they should be brought back out of captivity they should possess again the land of their inheritance.

verse 3 "the own due time of the Lord" The meaning of the concept of "the Lord's own due time" is intuitively clear. We would define it as "when the Lord sees fit." This particular rendering of that expression, however, seems a bit unusual. The phrase “own due time” seems to fit more smoothly with modifiers other than “the,” such as “mine own due time” (2 Nephi 27:21; 3 Nephi 20:29), “my own due time” (Ether 3:24), and “his own due time” (Enos 1:16; 3 Nephi 5:25; Mormon 5:12; Ether 3:27). This same expression—“the own due time”—is also found in 1 Nephi 14:26 and 2 Nephi 27:10 but is found in no other places in the four standard works.

The destruction of the Jews prophesied in this verse is one of the major “scatterings” of Israel, while the “return again” represents one of the significant “gatherings.” For a summary of the concepts of scattering and gathering of Israel, see the introductory commentary for 1 Nephi 20.

In the Book of Mormon, much attention is given to the fate of the kingdom of Judah and the Jews. This is likely because the pattern of the scattering and gathering of the Jews forms a paradigm or model of scattering and gathering which will apply to the entire house of Israel. Lehi prophesies here of the return of the Jews to Jerusalem following their captivity. In 538 BC, just less than fifty years following the Babylonian captivity of Jerusalem in 586 BC, Cyrus the Persian captured Babylon and allowed the Jews to return to Jerusalem (see Isaiah 44:28; 45:1).

4 Yea, even six hundred years from the time that my father left Jerusalem, a prophet would the Lord God raise up among the Jews—even a Messiah, or, in other words, a Savior of the world.

verse 4 There are actually several references in the Book of Mormon that contain prophecies or historical statements stating that Jesus will be born “six hundred years” from the time Lehi left Jerusalem. See also 1 Nephi 19:8, 2 Nephi 25:19, and 3 Nephi 1:1, 13. Is this time span “six hundred years” intended to be general and approximate or literal and specific? Some are comfortable with the idea that an approximate time period is intended.

Those who have insisted on a literal interpretation have done some agonizing over the issue since it is difficult to make the numbers add up exactly. Consider for example the following: Biblical scholars date the first year of the reign of Zedekiah to about 597 BC. If this is indeed the year that Lehi’s family left Jerusalem, then Jesus would have had to be born in about AD 3. This latter date is not satisfactory since biblical scholars have dated the death of Herod the Great at 4 BC. The Savior must have been born before Herod’s death since Herod played a major role in the story of the Christ child’s early life. If Lehi and his family left Jerusalem some years after 597 BC, which is probable (see the supplemental article Jerusalem at the Time of Lehi), then the mathematical problem is even more difficult.

Randall P. Spackman in his helpful article “Introduction to Book of Mormon Chronology: The Principal Prophecies, Calendars, and Dates,” (a FARMS reprint) has provided us with a compelling solution of the problem. The principal time-keeping system throughout the Middle East in the sixth century BC was a twelve-moon lunar calendar. By this calendar a year lasted 354.367 days. The principle of the solar calendar was also understood in which a year lasted 365.24 days, but the twelve-moon lunar calendar continued in use as the principal Babylonian, Egyptian, and Jewish religious calendar throughout ancient history. These religious calendars appear to have been based on direct observation of the moon by the priests to determine the times of religious festivals. “The priests also recognized that the solar year . . . was about eleven days longer than the twelve-moon calendar. For purposes of seasonal or agricultural rituals, the priests probably added or intercalated a 13th moon every two or three years. This was not an exact process in the time of Lehi, but it was an ancient one. Accurate intercalation schedules for adding the 13th moon were not worked out in Babylonia until the fifth century BC. In Lehi’s day, a 13th moon was added to the year when it became clear that the religious festivals were starting to occur too early in the agricultural or seasonal cycle” (Spackman, 15).

Brother Spackman believes it unlikely that Lehi and his people ever tried to intercalate their calendar. Thus their year was slightly over 354 days long. Brother Spackman also makes a compelling argument for the fact that Lehi and his family probably left Jerusalem in January 587 BC according to our present-day Gregorian calendar. Lehi would probably have begun his 600-year count on the first new moon day that followed his departure. The date of that new moon was January 19, 587 BC. He apparently began the count as he camped in the wilderness. Lehi’s righteous posterity kept this year count and were taught expressly to look forward to the birth of the Savior in 600 years by this lunar calendar. After 600 years or 7,200 moons, the 601st year of Lehi’s prophetic period would have begun with the new moon of March 8, 5 BC. In the “commencement” of this long-awaited year, the sign of the Messiah’s birth was seen in the heavens and he was born at Bethlehem probably in the spring of 5 BC.

“a prophet would the Lord God raise up among the Jews” Jesus is the “prophet,” indeed the Prophet of prophets. Lehi is actually quoting scripture here. He is quoting Moses’s prophecy of the Savior’s birth (Deuteronomy 18:15-19). Obviously, the term “Lord God” refers to God the Father or Elohim. Most scriptures that speak of God or the Lord do not necessarily refer specifically to the Father or the Son because it usually doesn’t make much difference which God is intended. Critics of the Book of Mormon have suggested that the book speaks of only one God—that it is trinitarian in nature. While Jesus is certainly the central character, a careful reading of the text indicates that God the Father is referred to as well.

It is obvious, then, that the Book of Mormon represents Nephi and other pre-Christian prophets as having a foreknowledge of Jesus Christ as the atoning Son of God and the Messiah. This Messiah, Nephi said, would be the “Redeemer of the world” (1 Nephi 10:5) and “the Son of God” (1 Nephi 10:17).

The strong expectations in the Book of Mormon for a coming messiah, including the testimony that Jesus Christ is the Messiah, has raised questions about whether it was plausible for ancient Israelites to have believed such. Is this teaching in the Book of Mormon a clear anachronism? Did this idea somehow originate with Joseph Smith in the early nineteenth century? For some, it seems implausible that the peoples in the Book of Mormon could have known so much about Jesus before his birth.

It is clear, for one thing, that the New Testament affirms that prophets before Jesus foresaw his life and death (see, for example, Luke 24:13–35; Acts 2:25; 3:24; 8:26–39).

Drawing on the work of Margaret Barker, and other non-LDS biblical scholars, author Brant Gardner and other scholars have argued that Yahweh was the “preeminent God of Israel” and understood to be Israel’s Redeemer (cf. Psalms 19:14; Isaiah 47:4; 48:17; 54:5; Jeremiah 50:34). “These ideas,” Gardner argued, “provide the conceptual background that allows us to understand the references to God, the Son, and the Father in the Book of Mormon.”

Furthermore, “Because the understanding of El as Father and Yahweh as son was still part of Hebrew thought when the Book of Mormon began, this particular description of the Father and the Son” is most likely the theology of the Book of Mormon (Brant Gardner, “Excursus: The Nephite Understanding of God,” in Second Witness: Analytical and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, six volumes, Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 1:215).

As Gardner went on to explain, the Book of Mormon depicts Yahweh (the pre-incarnate Jesus Christ [e.g. 1 Nephi 19:7–9]) as the Messiah, which Barker argued was the earliest Christian messianic understanding; an understanding that reached back into and restored an important aspect of ancient Israelite religion (Gardner, “Excursus,” 217; Barker, The Great Angel, 190–212).

According to Daniel Boyarin, a leading scholar of Judaism, the New Testament’s teachings about the Messiah predate the advent of Jesus, and are rooted in the most ancient form of Israelite religion (Daniel Boyarin, The Jewish Gospels: The Story of the Jewish Christ, New York, N. Y.: The New Press, 2012, 53–56, 72–73). Boyarin argued, “The Messiah-Christ existed as a Jewish idea long before the baby Jesus was born. . . . The idea of a second God as viceroy to God the Father is one of the oldest theological ideas in Israel” (Boyarin, The Jewish Gospels, 44). The second God is the Redeemer. “The second-God Redeemer figure thus comes, in my view, out of the earlier history of Israel’s religion.” These notions are, according to Boyarin, “among the earliest ideas about God in the religion of the Israelites” (The Jewish Gospels, 46).

At least some of these ideas, the Father/Son godhead and the suffering savior, for instance, have deep roots in the Hebrew Bible as well and may be among some of the most ancient ideas about God and the world the Israelites held (The Jewish Gospels, 158).

These are, notably, the very ideas portrayed in the Book of Mormon.

5 And he also spake concerning the prophets, how great a number had testified of these things, concerning this Messiah, of whom he had spoken, or this Redeemer of the world.

verse 5 “he also spake” Lehi also spake.

The very purpose and calling of those prophets who lived before the meridian of time was to prophesy of Jesus Christ. Those who have lived since the meridian of time have existed and will exist to testify of him. Nephi’s brother Jacob will later write, “None of the prophets have written, nor prophesied, save they have spoken concerning this Christ” (Jacob 7:11).

6 Wherefore, all mankind were in a lost and in a fallen state, and ever would be save they should rely on this Redeemer.

verse 6 “All mankind were in a lost and in a fallen state, and ever would be save they should rely on this Redeemer.” This is a doctrine that is taught repeatedly in the Book of Mormon. For a discussion of the doctrines of the fall of man and the atonement, see chapter 2 in volume 2 of Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, Consequences of the Savior’s Atonement. See also the commentary for Mosiah 15:19.

verses 7-10 The four following verses contain an exceedingly explicit and specific prophecy by Lehi concerning John the Baptist. The Baptist is even quoted some six hundred years before he was even born! How could this be? Read on!

7 And he spake also concerning a prophet who should come before the Messiah, to prepare the way of the Lord—

8 Yea, even he should go forth and cry in the wilderness: Prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight; for there standeth one among you whom ye know not; and he is mightier than I, whose shoe’s latchet I am not worthy to unloose. And much spake my father concerning this thing.

verse 8 “Prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight” The use of the word straight (rather than strait) in this verse is appropriate and related to the word straight in Isaiah 40:3. See the supplemental article, Strait and Straight in the Book of Mormon.

9 And my father said he should baptize in Bethabara, beyond Jordan; and he also said he should baptize with water; even that he should baptize the Messiah with water.

verse 9 “he should baptize in Bethabara, beyond Jordan” “Beyond Jordan” (Greek Perea) is the name of a region on the east bank of the Jordan River. Bethabara is the place, within Perea, where John baptized. In Hebrew, Bethabara or Beth-avara means “house of the ford” or “place of crossing.” Bethabara is near the natural fording place east of Jericho entering Perea. At such an important juncture along a major east-west travel route, John could have taught people traveling from the regions of Judea, Perea, Galilee, Decapolis, and Phoenicia.

verses 8-9 “Prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight”

Doubtless Lehi (or Nephi) borrowed this phrase from the writings of Isaiah on the plates of brass (Isaiah 40:3). The expression “prepare ye the way of the Lord” is a commission to prepare for the coming of the Lord by crying repentance and gathering a people sufficiently prepared by covenant and ordinance to receive him (Malachi 3:1; JST Luke 3:4-10; D&C 84:28).

“and make his paths straight” This phrase means “prepare the way of the Lord,” or prepare for the second coming by making the saints’ path back to God’s presence level or smooth or not winding.

In their Doctrine and Covenants commentary, Smith and Sjodahl explain:

Eastern potentates, when traveling from one part of the kingdom to another, would proclaim their coming and order their subjects to prepare the way for them, by building roads where there were none; if necessary by leveling hills and filling up depressions, and straightening out the winding paths. . . To prepare the way of the Lord and make his paths straight is to acknowledge his sovereignty and to make all necessary preparations for his reception. He will not come to reign until all necessary preparations for his coming have been made. Joseph Smith said, “Hear this, O earth! The Lord will not come to reign over the righteous in this world . . . until everything for the Bridegroom is ready (HC, 5:291)” (174).

This preparation includes removing all obstacles out of the way so that others can be obedient to the laws and ordinances of the gospel (see also D&C 33:10; 65:1; 45:2). The book of Isaiah renders this same phrase “make straight in the desert a highway for our God.” The desert symbolizes the world of sin. The highway here is the “way of holiness” (Isaiah 19:199-25; 35:8).

“there standeth one among you . . . whose shoe’s latchet I am not worthy to unloose” “he should baptize in Bethabara, beyond Jordan” The phrasing of Lehi’s prophecy seems to be borrowed from the New Testament, especially John 1:26-29 which states, “there standeth one among you . . . whose shoe’s latchet I am not worthy to unloose” (see also Matthew 3:3,11; Mark 1:7; Luke 3:16; and Acts 13:25). Obviously Lehi and Nephi did not have access to any New Testament writings except by revelation. How do we explain, then, the identical wording? There are at least three reasonable explanations.

1. Maybe Joseph Smith, in the process of translation, perceived the meaning of Lehi’s prophecy and used the King James Bible to put words to it? There is no historical evidence that Joseph ever actually physically employed the King James Bible in the process of the Book of Mormon translation. But Joseph Smith might have been sufficiently familiar with these phrases in the New Testament that they were in his mind, and he used them to express the ideas he was perceiving. This is not a likely possibility, particularly since recent accounts of Joseph Smith's translating the Book of Mormon suggest that he was allowed read, in English, each and every word in the book.

2. Conceivably Lehi (or Nephi) was simply given by direct revelation the words of John the Baptist and the apostle John.

3. Perhaps Lehi, John the Baptist, and John the apostle were all quoting an earlier prophet whose writings are lost to us today. This seems the most likely possibility.

10 And after he had baptized the Messiah with water, he should behold and bear record that he had baptized the Lamb of God, who should take away the sins of the world.

verse 10 “bear record” The phrase “bear/beareth record” occurs thirty-two times in the Book of Mormon and seven times in the King James Version of the New Testament, where it is used to translate the Greek work martureo, meaning to give evidence, testify, or be a witness (e.g., John 8:14).

“the Lamb of God” It is interesting to note that this specific phrase is found thirty-five times in the Book of Mormon and thirty-eight times in all the standard works. The vision of Nephi (1 Nephi 11-15) contains twenty-eight of the thirty-five Book of Mormon examples of this phrase. It is found once in the Doctrine and Covenants (D&C 88:106) and not at all in the Old Testament. The only two examples of this phrase in the New Testament are found in the gospel of John (John 1:29, 36). Do you suppose it is simply a coincidence that the two ancient characters who are mostly responsible for the scriptural use of this phrase are brought together in Nephi's vision, the apostle John and Nephi? Many of the things Nephi saw in his vision are the very things the apostle John will also see and write about (1 Nephi 14:24).

“who should take away the sins of the world” This phrase in the original manuscript reads sin, in the singular, and not sins. Elsewhere in the original Book of Mormon, in fifteen other instances, the text speaks of the Savior as taking away the sins (plural) of mankind. But in the two places where it speaks of the atonement in connection with John's baptism of Jesus (here and in 2 Nephi 31:4), it uses the singular sin—precisely as does John the Baptist himself in the New Testament (see John 1:29). This observation has been referred to as evidence of an “astonishing consistency” of the original text by Dr. Royal Skousen, a BYU professor of linguistics and English language (see the report “Restoring the Original Test of the Book of Mormon,” Insights 24/4, 2004).

11 And it came to pass after my father had spoken these words he spake unto my brethren concerning the gospel which should be preached among the Jews, and also concerning the dwindling of the Jews in unbelief. And after they had slain

verse 11 The “gospel” is a term that may be understood in two contexts. In its broader sense, the gospel embraces all truth including the verities of science, philosophy, and the arts. Usually, however, we speak of the gospel in its scriptural or saving sense. In this context, the gospel is the proclamation that Christ is the way, and one must obey those principles and laws which he taught, and which he typified, in order to live with God eternally. The scriptural definition of the gospel is found in 3 Nephi 27:13-21.

“And after they had slain the Messiah” Let us never become guilty of allowing ourselves to believe or preach the unqualified half truth, that “the Jews crucified our Savior.” Keep in mind that most of Jesus’s adherents during his mortal ministry were Jews. The vast majority of Jews in Jerusalem did not even know that Jesus was being crucified, and they likely would have dealt with him in a gentler way if it had been up to them. Christ’s crucifixion was engineered by a relative few of the Jewish leaders, largely Pharisees and Sadducees, whose positions of power and influence were threatened by Jesus.

“unto the Gentiles” The word “Gentiles” is used here for the first time in the text of the Book of Mormon. Gentile is a word used to translate the Hebrew Goyim, literally meaning “the nations.” The use of this word in various contexts often results in confusion, because different meanings have been applied to it over the history of the world. Let us summarize the evolution of this word. All inhabitants of the earth (at least those in the family of Adam) descended from the three sons of Noah. Those sons were Shem, Ham, and Japheth. The descendants of Shem were the “Shemites” or Hebrews. Through this lineage came the prophets Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. The descendants of Ham are the black races or “Hamites.” Before the Flood, Ham had married Egyptus, a descendant of Cain. Thus, the descendants of this union were the “Canaanites” (Genesis 9:25). The descendants of Japheth were called “Gentiles” (Genesis 10:1-5). These were all of those who have not descended from either Shem or Ham.

In the days of Abraham, the meaning changed to include all those not descended from him. Gentiles, by this definition, would include all those not descended through the patriarchal line of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. The Arabs and other races of Semitic (“Shem-itic”) origin would not be counted as Gentiles. In the days of Jacob or Israel and throughout the history of ancient Palestine or Israel, the meaning changed again to become all those not descended from Jacob or Israel—all those outside the “house of Israel.”

Another definition of Gentile was used by father Lehi and his descendants and therefore finds application throughout the Book of Mormon. After the Kingdom of Israel with its ten tribes of Israel were carried away captive by Assyria between 732 and 722

BC, those of the Kingdom of Judah came to call themselves “Jews” and designated all others as “Gentiles.” Lehi was brought up in the land of Jerusalem with this definition. Thus, it is not surprising to find, in the Book of Mormon, the following: (1) the phrase “Jew and Gentile” which implies all mankind; (2) a description of the United States as a “Gentile Nation” (1 Nephi 13; 3 Nephi 21); and (3) the promise that the Book of Mormon would come forth “by way of the Gentile” (title page of Book of Mormon) even though the prophet Joseph Smith was of the tribe of Joseph through Ephraim. Thus all of scattered Israel, except for the Jews, are referred to in the Book of Mormon as Gentiles.

The meaning of the term Gentile that is most applicable today is that of a Gentile being all those outside the house of Israel, that is, those not descended from Jacob and his twelve sons. By this definition, Joseph Smith would not be a Gentile since he is descended from the house of Israel.

By any definition, the membership of the Church today consists of people of whose lineage is both Jew and Gentile. However, all people who accept the gospel, regardless of descent, are “adopted” into the house of Israel. Those who fail to accept the gospel, regardless of their lineage, lose any preferential status into which they may have been born. It is because of this principle of adoption that the custom has developed in the Church today of referring to members of the Church as “Israelites” and to all non-members as “Gentiles.”

“should make himself manifest by the Holy Ghost unto the Gentiles” During Jesus’s mortal ministry, he delivered the gospel message preferentially in person to the twelve tribes of Israel and not to those outside the house of Israel. Some years after Christ’s death and resurrection, the apostle Peter was inspired to begin preaching the gospel to the Gentiles (Acts 10). Thus, the Gentiles did not hear his voice directly. Rather, they heard the word from his disciples and it was “manifest by the Holy Ghost” unto them. Following Christ’s resurrection, he will teach the Book of Mormon people during a personal visit to them. He will teach that he intends to appear personally only to Israelites and not to the Gentiles. Thus, he will “make himself manifest by the Holy Ghost unto the Gentiles,” but he will not manifest himself personally to them (see 3 Nephi 15:23 and its commentary).

12 Yea, even my father spake much concerning the Gentiles, and also concerning the house of Israel, that they should be compared like unto an olive-tree, whose branches should be broken off and should be scattered upon all the face of the earth.

verse 12 “they should be compared like unto an olive-tree” It is difficult to know when the practice of comparing the house of Israel metaphorically to an olive tree began. Genesis 49:22 (“Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well; whose branches run over the wall”) suggests that Moses may even have suggested the comparison. The Old Testament prophet Zenos, whose writings are contained on the plates of brass but not in the Bible, certainly used this comparison extensively. See Jacob's quotations of Zenos's prophecies in Jacob 5. It is likely that father Lehi was familiar with Zenos's allegory of the olive tree as he had studied the brass plates. Both Isaiah (Isaiah 5) and Jeremiah (Jeremiah 12:10) compared the house of Israel to the Lord's vineyard. At any rate, the idea of comparing the house of Israel with an olive tree does not seem to have originated with the prophet Lehi.

The word branch (or branches) is used with four different meanings in the Book of Mormon:

1. It may be used, as it is here in this verse, to refer to groups of people, most often to Israelites who are scattered or separated from their Israelite kinsmen. With this meaning, the branch is part of the metaphor of the olive tree. These scattered branches will be gathered and grafted back into the olive tree in the latter days (see verse 14 and 1 Nephi 15:12-16). For other instances in which the word branch is used with this meaning, see 1 Nephi 19:24, 2 Nephi 3:5, Alma 26:36, and Jacob 5.

2. A branch may be a cutting with negative or undesirable characteristics. Isaiah referred to the time when the king of Babylon would be “cast out of [his] grave like an abominable branch” (2 Nephi 24:19).

3. Branch may be used as a title for Christ. The Savior is a branch or descendant of the house of Israel through the Davidic line (2 Nephi 21:5; cf. Jeremiah 23:5-6; 33:15-17).

4. Branch may refer to posterity. Malachi warned that the wicked, at the Lord's second coming, would be left with “neither root nor branch” (3 Nephi 25:1).

13 Wherefore, he said it must needs be that we should be led with one accord into the land of promise, unto the fulfilling of the word of the Lord, that we should be scattered upon all the face of the earth.

verse 13 The departure of Lehi and his family from Jerusalem and their sojourn to the land of promise was a significant part of the scattering of Israel. Most of those Israelites scattered at the same time, however, were taken captive in Babylon. Generally, when a lineage rejects Christ and his gospel, they are in danger of being “scattered” or dispersed into the world. Here, we see another purpose of scattering. It is for the preservation of a lineage.

14 And after the house of Israel should be scattered they should be gathered together again; or, in fine, after the Gentiles had received the fulness of the Gospel, the natural branches of the olive-tree, or the remnants of the house of Israel, should be grafted in, or come to the knowledge of the true Messiah, their Lord and their Redeemer.

verse 14 The expression “in fine” means in conclusion or in summary.

“in fine, after the house of Israel should be scattered they should be gathered together again” This refers to the latter-day gathering of Israel in this present dispensation.

“after the Gentiles had received the fulness of the Gospel” During the time of Christ’s mortal ministry, the gospel went first to the house of Israel and then to the Gentiles. In this final dispensation, that order is reversed. The gospel will be received first by a “Gentile nation” who will then take the gospel to the world and begin to gather or “graft in” the house of Israel.

There are a few references in the Book of Mormon—direct or indirect—to this Gentile nation which is thought to be the United States of America (see, for example 1 Nephi 13:15, 30; 22:7; Ether 2:12). In the Church, we have come to refer to this nation as the “great Gentile nation,” a phrase probably initially coined by Elder B. H. Roberts (see Conference Report, October 1922, 14-21) but later used by Presidents Spencer W. Kimball (Conference Report, October 1959, 57-62) and Ezra Taft Benson (October 1961, 69-75). The specific phrase “great Gentile nation” is not found in the Book of Mormon or in any scripture. The most direct reference in the Book of Mormon to this nation is found in 1 Nephi 22:7 where it is referred to as “a mighty nation among the Gentiles.” It should be noted that those citizens of the great Gentile nation who receive the gospel are most often of the blood of Israel (see more discussion on this topic in the commentary for 1 Nephi 15:13).

The “natural branches of the olive tree” are those individuals who belong to the house of Israel by blood descent. These will be taught the gospel by the “Gentile” missionaries. Again, the Gentile missionaries are usually Israel by blood descent. They are “Gentiles” only in that they live in the great Gentile nation and are not Jews.

15 And after this manner of language did my father prophesy and speak unto my brethren, and also many more things which I do not write in this book; for I have written as many of them as were expedient for me in mine other book.

verse 15 “this book” This is, of course, Nephi’s reference to the small plates of Nephi. “Mine other book” is the large plates of Nephi.

One of the definitions of expedient in Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language is, “fit or suitable for the purpose; proper under the circumstances.”

16 And all these things, of which I have spoken, were done as my father dwelt in a tent, in the valley of Lemuel.

17 And it came to pass after I, Nephi, having heard all the words of my father, concerning the things which he saw in a vision, and also the things which he spake by the power of the Holy Ghost, which power he received by faith on the Son of God—and the Son of God was the Messiah who should come—I, Nephi, was desirous also that I might see, and hear, and know of these things, by the power of the Holy Ghost, which is the gift of God unto all those who diligently seek him, as well in times of old as in the time that he should manifest himself unto the children of men.

verse 17 “by the power of the Holy Ghost, which power he received by faith on the Son of God” Obedience to the commandments of the Lord has profound effects on the obedient individual, including a closer connection to the Spirit of God and a gradually increasing testimony of the Lord Jesus Christ. The expression “faith on the Son of God” is synonymous with obedience to the commandments of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

“as well in times of old” It is false doctrine that the Holy Ghost was manifest for the first time following the resurrection of Jesus Christ. In fact, such manifestations have been known from the very beginning of man. Even the gift of the Holy Ghost has been bestowed whenever there has been a legal Melchizedek priesthood administrator of the kingdom of God on earth (Moses 5:58). For a discussion of this issue see “Is having one’s calling and election made sure the same as receiving the Second Comforter?” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 16, Calling and Election Made Sure.

18 For he is the same yesterday, today, and forever; and the way is prepared for all men from the foundation of the world, if it so be that they repent and come unto him.

verse 18 The concept explained in this verse is a rich and vital one. We are governed by God’s law. That law is absolute, completely reliable, unvarying, and its consequences are inescapable. For every action, there is an identical result. These results follow without respect to person. It has always been thus, in Adam’s day just as in ours and in the eternities to come. Thus, “the course of the Lord is one eternal round” (see the following verse).

“from the foundation of the world” The period here referred to as the “foundation of the world” is that period in the premortal existence when preparations were made for the great mortal experience of the family of Adam and the plan of redemption by which members of that family might eventually return to their celestial home. This expression will be used on several occasions in the Book of Mormon (see 2 Nephi 9:18; Mosiah 15:19 18:13; Alma 12:25, 30; 13:3, 5; 18:39; 22:13; 42:26; Helaman 5:47; Ether 3:14). The term foundation will also be used as a direct reference to Jesus Christ. Jacob and Helaman will teach that as the “stone” or “rock” upon which faith must be built, Christ is the “only sure foundation” of everyone’s hope for redemption, even for the Jews, though they would reject him during his mortal ministry (Jacob 4:15-17; Helaman 5:12).

19 For he that diligently seeketh shall find; and the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto them, by the power of the Holy Ghost, as well in these times as in times of old, and as well in times of old as in times to come; wherefore, the course of the Lord is one eternal round.

verse 19 “mysteries of God” For a discussion of the concept of the “mysteries of God” see the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:1. He who has faith in Christ and seeks to know the things of God will be granted that privilege by the power of the Holy Ghost. This promise holds true in all ages because “the course of the Lord is one eternal round” (see the commentary for verse 18).

20 Therefore remember, O man, for all thy doings thou shalt be brought into judgment.

verse 20 As explained in the commentary for verse 18 above, the eternal law which binds and governs us is absolute. Our actions or “doings” in mortality will determine our course for eternity.

21 Wherefore, if ye have sought to do wickedly in the days of your probation, then ye are found unclean before the judgment-seat of God; and no unclean thing can dwell with God; wherefore, ye must be cast off forever.

verse 21 “no unclean thing can dwell with God” For added insight into this phrase, see the discussion on concept of justification in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 17, Justification and Sanctification.

It should be noted that this verse states two seemingly incompatible inevitabilities. First, “no unclean thing can dwell with God,” and second, that the unclean will be brought before God at his judgment seat. Actually, the unclean cannot dwell with God in that they cannot live in his presence permanently, but all, even the unclean, will be admitted into his presence temporarily to be judged of him (see also 2 Nephi 9:38).

Generally, the Book of Mormon does not teach the complete doctrine of our post-mortal lives. There is no mention of the three degrees of glory in the Book of Mormon. Rather, it teaches only the extremes: accept and live the gospel in this life, and receive eternal life in God’s presence, or reject the gospel and be cast out to live with Satan and his angels. There is no mention of spirit prison or the opportunity to repent after mortality. For a discussion of this problem, see “Post-Mortal Life and the Book of Mormon” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 13, The Spirit World.

22 And the Holy Ghost giveth authority that I should speak these things, and deny them not.

verse 22 One of the roles of the Holy Ghost is to be the witness or testator. He witnesses to man through personal revelation the validity and importance of eternal truths. When a man speaks these truths with the assistance and influence of the Holy Ghost, he has the authority and power from God to do so.

Scripture Mastery

1 Nephi 11-15 Nephi's vision of the tree of life and the future of the world.

1 Nephi 11:16-17 Knowest thou the condescension of God?

At this point, please review the commentary on the Vision of the Tree of Life in 1 Nephi chapter 8. Sometime after recording his father's vision of the tree of life, Nephi desired to witness for himself the things his father had seen. In response to his desire, we will read in 1 Nephi 11:1 that he was "caught away" to "an exceedingly high mountain," where he was shown an impressive vision (1Nephi 11-15). Nephi saw what had been revealed to his father, and he was also shown the interpretation of several of the major symbols of the vision, which he later recorded.

Nephi's vision consisted of much more than the scene of the tree of life and the efforts of some to obtain its fruits. It contained also an expanded prophecy of the future, the coming of Christ and his atoning mission, the future of Lehi's descendants, the restoration of the gospel in the last days, and the ongoing struggle between the forces of righteousness and evil. This material has been referred to as "Nephi's prophetic view" (see 2 Nephi 11:2 and its commentary).

1 For it came to pass after I had desired to know the things that my father had seen, and believing that the Lord was able to make them known unto me, as I sat pondering in mine heart I was caught away in the Spirit of the Lord, yea, into an exceedingly high mountain, which I never had before seen, and upon which I never had before set my foot.

verse 1 "as I sat pondering in mine heart" Which of us has not had our lives enriched by the thoughts and inspiration we have received as we have sat pondering in our hearts? As we study the scriptures, it is vital that we take time to meditate and ponder the things of the Spirit. These moments of not being distracted by other things seem to provide an opportunity for the Spirit of God to contact us. Consider an example from the life of President Joseph F. Smith: "On the third of October, in the year nineteen hundred and eighteen, I sat in my room pondering over the scriptures; And reflecting upon the great atoning sacrifice that was made by the Son of God. . . . As I pondered over these things which are written, the eyes of my understanding were opened (D&C 138:1-2, 11, italics added)." President Smith then had a great vision of the spirit world and the Savior's visit there which is available to us today in D&C 138.

"I was caught away in the Spirit of the Lord, yea, into an exceedingly high mountain" Was Nephi's being "caught away" into (or onto) a mountain a literal or a figurative phenomenon? It may well have been literal. Certainly, the Spirit of the Lord has that capability. Prophets before Nephi had gone to high mountains to communicate with the heavens—Moses (Exodus 24:12-13; Deuteronomy 10:1) and the brother of Jared (Ether 3:1), for example.

2 And the Spirit said unto me: Behold, what desirest thou?

verse 2 Nephi's vision was conducted by "the Spirit." For conjecture as to the identity of this individual, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 11:11.

3 And I said: I desire to behold the things which my father saw.

4 And the Spirit said unto me: Believest thou that thy father saw the tree of which he hath spoken?

verse 4 Doesn't this question seem a little peculiar? Why did the Spirit ask him specifically about the tree? Why did he not ask about other items in Lehi's vision such as the building or the river or the rod of iron? The answer is simple. Nephi was not being asked here whether or not he believed his father had had a vision. He was being questioned regarding his faith in Jesus Christ. The tree is a symbol or "type" of Christ. This explains the Spirit's response in verse 6.

5 And I said: Yea, thou knowest that I believe all the words of my father.

6 And when I had spoken these words, the Spirit cried with a loud voice, saying: Hosanna to the Lord, the most high God; for he is God over all the earth, yea, even above all. And blessed art thou, Nephi, because thou believest in the Son of the most high God; wherefore, thou shalt behold the things which thou hast desired.

verse 6 The Spirit rejoices over Nephi's faith in Christ, not simply over the fact that Nephi believed that Lehi had seen a tree.

The word "Hosanna" is usually translated "save us, we beseech thee" and its use is usually associated with the hope and expectation of the coming of Christ.

7 And behold this thing shall be given unto thee for a sign, that after thou hast beheld the tree which bore the fruit which thy father tasted, thou shalt also behold a man descending out of heaven, and him shall ye witness; and after ye have witnessed him ye shall bear record that it is the Son of God.

verse 7 The Spirit here begins to explain that the tree is a symbol or sign or "type" of Jesus Christ. The reference here is to the eventual appearance of Jesus Christ to the Book of Mormon people (see 1 Nephi 12:6).

8 And it came to pass that the Spirit said unto me: Look! And I looked and beheld a tree; and it was like unto the tree which my father had seen; and the beauty thereof was far beyond, yea, exceeding of all beauty; and the whiteness thereof did exceed the whiteness of the driven snow.

verse 8 Knowing the typology of the tree, it is now easy to understand Nephi's description of it. "Whiteness," of course, is symbolic of purity.

9 And it came to pass after I had seen the tree, I said unto the Spirit: I behold thou hast shown unto me the tree which is precious above all.

10 And he said unto me: What desirest thou?

11 And I said unto him: To know the interpretation thereof—for I spake unto him as a man speaketh; for I beheld that he was in the form of a man; yet nevertheless, I knew that it was the Spirit of the Lord; and he spake unto me as a man speaketh with another.

verse 11 "To know the interpretation thereof" Nephi wishes to know the meaning of the tree that his father had seen and that he himself now sees. We might expect "the Spirit" to answer Nephi's question directly, but, as you will see, "the Spirit's" response will be quite surprising. Even though Nephi asks for the interpretation of the symbol of the tree, we will learn that the angel guide will not mention the tree at all. Rather, he will show Nephi a vision of Mary and the Christ child.

"the Spirit of the Lord" This phrase is used over forty times in the Book of Mormon. In most every case it refers to the Holy Ghost. But, what about here? Who is it that is speaking with Nephi here? Couldn't this expression also be used to refer to Jesus Christ? After all, in 600 BC Jesus had no mortal body, rather he existed as a spirit. If Jesus had visited Nephi, he would have had to visit Nephi in a body of spirit. Hence, this expression could refer to a visit from Jesus Christ himself. On a few occasions, Nephi said, in effect, "I have seen my Redeemer" (e.g., 2 Nephi 11:2). Was he referring to an actual visit from the Savior? Or, might Nephi's angel guide have been the Holy Ghost himself?

Which is it then? Does the phrase "the Spirit of the Lord" here refer to Jesus Christ or to the Holy Ghost? What have we been taught by authority? Actually both meanings have been espoused by general authorities of the Church in the past. The fact is that we do not know the truth of this. If it is the Holy Ghost, then this is the only instance in scripture when the Holy Ghost has been seen by man.

Some feel that the Holy Ghost was seen in the form of a dove at the time of Jesus's baptism. This is apparently not correct (see the commentary for verse 27).

12 And it came to pass that he said unto me: Look! And I looked as if to look upon him, and I saw him not; for he had gone from before my presence.

13 And it came to pass that I looked and beheld the great city of Jerusalem, and also other cities. And I beheld the city of Nazareth; and in the city of Nazareth I beheld a virgin, and she was exceedingly fair and white.

verse 13 “a virgin . . . exceedingly fair and white” Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines fair as, “Pleasing to the eye; handsome or beautiful.” Another meaning in the same dictionary is “free from stain or blemish; unspotted; untarnished.” A comment on Mary by Elder Bruce R. McConkie is interesting to ponder: “Can we speak too highly of her whom the Lord has blessed above all women? There was only one Christ, and there is only one Mary. Each was noble and great in the pre-existence, and each was foreordained to the ministry he or she performed. We cannot but think that the Father would choose the greatest female spirit to be the mother of his Son, even as he chose the male spirit like unto him to be the Savior” (The Mortal Messiah: From Bethlehem to Calvary, 1:326-27, note 4).

14 And it came to pass that I saw the heavens open; and an angel came down and stood before me; and he said unto me: Nephi, what beholdest thou?

verse 14 Apparently, there is a change in Nephi’s guide at this point. An angel whose identity is not given or even hinted at now appears to conduct Nephi through the rest of his vision experience.

15 And I said unto him: A virgin, most beautiful and fair above all other virgins.

16 And he said unto me: Knowest thou the condescension of God?

verse 16 We should not pass by this verse without asking ourselves this same important question. Do we have a true appreciation for the sacred concept of the “condescension of God”? To “condescend” means to descend from the privileges of higher rank or dignity to a lower level when it is not required to do so, and particularly for the benefit of someone else. Hence, condescension, in this context, is a manifestation of love.

The concept of the “condescension of God” has two general applications—the condescension of the Father and the condescension of the Son. Elder Bruce R. McConkie taught: “The condescension of God (meaning the Father) consists in the fact that though he is an exalted, perfected, glorified personage, he became the personal and literal father of a mortal offspring born of mortal woman” (Mormon Doctrine, 2nd edition, 155). The Father was willing to condescend in this way because of his love for us, so that we can obtain eternal life.

The condescension of the Son refers to the fact that Jesus, the God of this earth, voluntarily and knowingly came to this earth to submit himself to unparalleled indignity and suffering.

A superficial reading of the Gospels would lead one to think that Jesus was very popular during his ministry, but what of this popularity? Were his disciples solidly dedicated and ready to stick by him and follow him even in hard times? It is true that the crowd was intrigued by his miracles and doubtless wondered if he could be the Messiah. Maybe they even hoped that he might be. But a certain fickleness invariably betrayed itself. For example, after being miraculously fed near Capernaum, many of the same disciples again grew hungry and sought out Jesus for more food. Jesus then preached to them a plain sermon in which he chastised them for worrying so much about their stomachs and taught them that they should look instead to him as the “bread of life.” He refused to feed them, and many of the disappointed “disciples went back, and walked no more with him.” Jesus sadly turned to his apostles and asked, “Will ye also go away?” (John 6:66-69). During his short ministry, Jesus was to be roundly rejected by most everyone, save a few intimate family and friends. At the very outset of his ministry he was rejected by those of his home town, Nazareth (Luke 4:16-30), but that was only the beginning. He was later to be rejected, not only by the Jewish crowd in general, but even by some in his own family (John 7:5), some of the disciples of John the Baptist (Mark 2:18), and even some of his own apostles (John 16:31-32). The Jewish hierarchy, of course, not only rejected him, but even sought to kill him on more than one occasion (John 7:1; 10:39; 11:47-53).

How did Jesus perceive this almost universal rejection? Was he affected and upset by it? Was he emotionally involved? We tend to objectify his experience: Was He not, after all, God of the earth? Had He not a godly perspective? He knew in advance what the outcome of his ministry would be. It must have been no surprise to Him. He had the big picture. He did not depend on man for his happiness. He wasn't likely as emotionally torn as, for example, a rejected missionary, who lacks his perspective, might be today. Or, was he? We tend to overlook the fact that in a profound sense, Jesus was human. He experienced the extremes of joy and sorrow in a sensitive and empathetic way that likely exceeded that of which we are capable (John 11:33-35). During his final week on earth, he paused as he approached Jerusalem, considered its rejection of him, and wept over the city (Luke 19:41-44). Consider what emotion he might have experienced at his last supper. Here was his final meeting with his apostles on the night before his crucifixion. He had taught them of his coming death. They were his most intimate and valued friends. It was only they, among mortals, to whom he could look for solace in this hour of his extremity. He might well have anticipated receiving sympathy and understanding and comfort from them. What did he instead encounter? As he entered the room, some of them were arguing as to which of them would be the greatest in the earthly kingdom of God once it was established! They were completely ignorant of the gravity of the situation and the plight of their Master. They were like children bickering among themselves, oblivious to the problem at hand.

Jesus would later prophesy on the same occasion that all of his disciples would flee from him that very night (Matthew 26:31). He realized that he was obviously going to have to go through his ordeal alone, save for the companionship of the Spirit.

Then consider also the ultimate and final rejection. As Christ hung on the cross, he heard the taunts of those watching: “Thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, save thyself. If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross” (Matthew 27:40). “He saved others; let him save himself, if he be Christ, the chosen of God” (Luke 23:35). As he looked down, he saw only one apostle, his mother, and a few women disciples. Here was the God of the earth, the Son of the very Father. He had come to earth to offer, to any who would believe, everything that he and his Father possessed. Yet most all had deserted him. Then finally the cruelest stroke of all—difficult even to imagine and especially difficult to recount. By the eternal, yet awful, plan of justice and law, it was required that even the protective Spirit of the Father be withdrawn from him. In this extreme moment, the only comfort that remained to him was torn away, leaving him in hell, bereft of any support. “And at the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani? which is, being interpreted, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?” (Mark 15:34.) Jesus would later recall this experience as he tried to comfort Joseph Smith and others held captive in Liberty jail, “And if thou shouldst be cast into the pit, or into the hands of murderers, and the sentence of death passed upon thee; if thou be cast into the deep; if the billowing surge conspire against thee; if fierce winds become thine enemy; if the heavens gather blackness, and all the elements combine to hedge up the way; and above all, if the very jaws of hell shall gape open the mouth wide after thee, know thou, my son, that all these things shall give thee experience, and shall be for thy good. The Son of Man hath descended below them all. Art thou greater than he?” (D&C 122:7-8.)

To each reader of this commentary, I would ask: Knowest thou the condescension of God?

17 And I said unto him: I know that he loveth his children; nevertheless, I do not know the meaning of all things.

verses 18-21 In the following four verses, the messenger shows Nephi the condescension of God, rather than simply telling him about it.

18 And he said unto me: Behold, the virgin whom thou seest is the mother of the Son of God, after the manner of the flesh.

verse 18 It is interesting to note that when this verse was first recorded in the first edition of the Book of Mormon, it read: “And he said unto me, behold the virgin whom thou seest is the mother of God after the manner of the flesh.” Our present edition of the Book of Mormon renders it “mother of the Son of God.” Joseph Smith himself made this change in 1837, seven years after the Book of Mormon was first published. Why the change? Obviously, the present rendering clarifies the meaning of the verse.

Did Joseph have a full comprehension of the nature of the godhead when he translated the Book of Mormon in 1829, or was he still learning? Were the explicit differences between the Father and the Son perfectly clear in his mind at that time, or not? These questions have been offensive and felt to have a negative connotation by some in the Church. They would answer, “Of course Joseph understood clearly the nature of the godhood. This was made clear to him even as early as the first vision experience in the sacred grove in 1820.” Others are not offended by the questions and feel that Joseph did not learn all of the answers at first. They feel that Joseph was tutored throughout his ministry and was always learning. He was not, for example, completely schooled in all aspects of the gospel as he translated the Book of Mormon. He would continue to receive additional revelations and insights throughout his life time, and he would continue to learn even to the time of his death. “After all,” they would contend, “Joseph did not give us the explicit revelation on the nature of the godhead until April of 1843” (D&C 130:22-23). At any rate, these questions have resulted in lively discussions.

1. the physical mortal body (2 Nephi 9:7-8; Mosiah 7:27);
2. mankind in mortality (1 Nephi 10:6; 2 Nephi 2:21; Jacob 2:21); and
3. tendencies and temptations associated with the physical, fallen body and man’s so-called natural tendencies (1 Nephi 2:22-23; 2 Nephi 2:28-29; 10:24).

Verse 21 below will inform us that the Son of God is the Son of the Eternal Father. Here in verse 18 we learn that Jesus was conceived “after the manner of the flesh.” These verses contain more literal information about the relationship of God the Father and the mortal Jesus Christ than all of the Old and New Testament scriptures combined. Of course, our knowledge of the physical conception in Mary’s womb of the Christ is incomplete. We do know that as Mary conceived the Christ child, the Holy Ghost was in some way involved (see Alma 7:10).

President Ezra Taft Benson taught: “The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints proclaims that Jesus Christ is the Son of God in the most literal sense. The body in which he performed his mission in the flesh was sired by that same holy being we worship as God, our Eternal Father. Jesus was not the son of Joseph, nor was he begotten by the Holy Ghost. He is the son of the Eternal Father!” (Come Unto Christ, 4).

19 And it came to pass that I beheld that she was carried away in the Spirit; and after she had been carried away in the Spirit for the space of a time the angel spake unto me, saying: Look!

verse 19 “she was carried away in the Spirit” Mary was apparently transported to the presence of God where she would conceive a child.

20 And I looked and beheld the virgin again, bearing a child in her arms.

21 And the angel said unto me: Behold the Lamb of God, yea, even the Son of the Eternal Father! Knowest thou the meaning of the tree which thy father saw?

verse 21 Here the angel dramatically concludes his teaching of Nephi about the deeper significance of the tree. While Nephi is looking at Mary and the Christ child, the angel asks in effect, “Now, Nephi, do you finally understand the significance of the tree which your father saw?”

Again, Joseph altered this verse after the publication of the 1830 edition. In that original edition the verse read: “Behold the Lamb of God, yea, the Eternal Father” (see the commentary for verse 18 above).

22 And I answered him, saying: Yea, it is the love of God, which sheddeth itself abroad in the hearts of the children of men; wherefore, it is the most desirable above all things.

verse 22 The term “sheddeth itself abroad” means “is extended to all men.”

Nephi has come to realize the meaning of the tree of life. And what exactly is that meaning? Many have felt that in looking at the vision of the virgin mother and her child, Nephi concentrated mainly on the child and came to realize that the tree is actually a symbol or “type” of Jesus Christ. Jesus is the very personification of the “love of God” or the “love of the Father.” He is a manifestation, indeed the greatest manifestation, of the Father’s love for us. “For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son” (John 3:16-17). Additionally, Jesus’s laying down his life for us is the ultimate manifestation of his love for us, the consummate evidence of his charity.

Other Book of Mormon scholars have come to a different conclusion as to what meaning Nephi saw in the tree of life. They feel that somehow the meaning of the tree lies in the image that Nephi saw of both mother Mary and her child. They have concluded that Nephi may have concentrated mostly on the virgin Mary, and that in some ways the virgin Mary is an integral part of the meaning of the tree. Even the language used to describe her echoes the vocabulary previously used for the tree. Just as she was “exceedingly fair and white,” “most beautiful and fair above all other virgins,” so was the tree’s beauty “far beyond, yea, exceeding of all beauty; and the whiteness thereof did exceed the whiteness of the driven snow.” Significantly, though, it is only when she appears with a baby and is identified as “the mother of the Son of God” that Nephi grasps the tree’s meaning.

Why would Nephi, whether consciously or unconsciously, see a connection between a tree and the image of a virginal mother and her divine child? The ancient Near Eastern religious world is very foreign to us, as it was to Joseph Smith. Nephi’s vision appears to reflect a meaning of the “sacred tree” that is unique to the ancient Near East, and that, indeed, can only be fully appreciated when the ancient Canaanite and Israelite associations of that tree are borne in mind. For a much more complete presentation of the analysis and evidence on this subject, see Daniel C. Peterson’s, “Nephi and His Asherah: A Note on 1 Nephi 11:8-23,” in Mormons, Scripture, and the Ancient Word: Studies in Honor of John L. Sorenson, ed. Davis Bitton (Provo, Utah: FARMS, 1998), 191-243. A greatly condensed version of the same article is Daniel C. Peterson’s, “Nephi and His Asherah,” in Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 9/2 (2000): 15-25, 80-81.

A feminine divine being, generally called by some form of the name Asherah, seems to have been known and worshipped not only among the Canaanites but among the Israelites. Her veneration can be documented over a period extending from the conquest of Canaan in the second millennium before Christ to the fall of Jerusalem in 586 BC, the time of Lehi’s departure with his family from the Old World. Belief in Asherah seems, in fact, to have been a conservative position in ancient Israel. It was a later criticism of her that appears to have been a religious innovation. In fact, an image or symbol of Asherah stood in Solomon’s temple at Jerusalem for nearly two-thirds of its existence, until the reforms of King Josiah (who reigned from roughly 639 to 609 BC). This means that her presence in the temple extended into the lifetime of Lehi and perhaps even into the lifetime of Lehi’s son Nephi. Since that time, though, she has been fiercely suppressed. In the text of the Bible as we now read it, although hints of the goddess remain, little survives that would enable us to form an accurate or detailed understanding of her character or nature. Greater understanding has only begun to come through relatively recent archaeological discoveries, including but not limited to the immensely important Canaanite texts from ancient Ugarit, in Syria.

What was the symbol of Asherah that stood in the temple at Jerusalem? Asherah was associated with trees. The tenth-century cultic stand from Ta’anach, near Megiddo, for instance, features two representations of Asherah, first in human form and then as a sacred tree. She is the tree. Israelite goddess figurines that represent her typically feature upper bodies that are unmistakably anthropomorphic and female while their lower bodies are simple columns, very possibly representing tree trunks. Asherah “is a tree goddess, and as such is associated with the oak, the tamarisk, the date palm, the sycamore, and many other species. This association led to her identification with sacred trees or the tree of life” (Steve A. Wiggins, “The Myth of Asherah: Lion Lady and Serpent Goddess,” Ugarit-Forschungen: Internationales Jahrbuch für die Altertumskunde Syrien-Palastinas 23 [1991]: 383). The rabbinic authors of the Jewish Mishna (second-third century AD) explain the Asherah as a tree that was worshipped (see John Day, “Asherah in the Hebrew Bible and Northwest Semitic Literature,” Journal of Biblical Literature 105/3 [1986], 397-98, 401-04).

She seems to have been represented by a carved, wooden image, perhaps some kind of pole. Very probably it symbolized a tree, and it may itself have been a stylized tree. It was not uncommon in the ancient Near East for a god or goddess to be essentially equated with his or her symbol, and Asherah seems to have been no exception: Asherah was both goddess and cult symbol. She was the “tree.”

The menorah, the seven-branched candelabra that stood for centuries in the temple of Jerusalem, supplies an interesting parallel to all of this: Leon Yarden maintains that the menorah represents a stylized almond tree. He points to the notably radiant whiteness of the almond tree at certain points in its life cycle. Yarden also argues that the archaic Greek name of the almond (amygdale, reflected in its contemporary botanical designation as Amygdalis communis), almost certainly not a natively Greek word, is most likely derived from the Hebrew em gedullah, meaning “Great Mother” (The Tree of Light: A Study of the Menorah, the Seven-Branched Lampstand, Uppsala, Sweden: Skriv Service AB, 1972, 44-47, 103-6).

Among the Hebrews, Asherah seems to have been known as a divine maternal dea nutrix, a nourishing or nurturing and loving goddess. Paradoxically, though, it appears that she may also have been considered a virgin. The Punic western goddess Tanit, whom Saul Olyan has identified with Israelite-Canaanite Asherah, the consort of the chief god El, the mother and wet nurse to the gods, was depicted as a virgin and symbolized by a tree (Asherah and the Cult of Yahweh in Israel, Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1988, 56-61, 65-67).

Although Asherah remains imperfectly understood, and although we cannot be certain of all the details, it should be apparent by now why Nephi, an Israelite living at the end of the seventh and the beginning of the sixth century before Christ, might have recognized an answer to his question about a marvelous tree in the otherwise unexplained image of a virginal mother and her divine child. His perception seems to derive from precisely the pre-exilic Palestinian culture into which, the Book of Mormon tells us, Nephi had been born. This is obviously a culture very foreign to ours, and to that of Joseph Smith.

24 And after he had said these words, he said unto me: Look! And I looked, and I beheld the Son of God going forth among the children of men; and I saw many fall down at his feet and worship him.

25 And it came to pass that I beheld that the rod of iron, which my father had seen, was the word of God, which led to the fountain of living waters, or to the tree of life; which waters are a representation of the love of God; and I also beheld that the tree of life was a representation of the love of God.

verse 25 Here we learn that the “fountain of living waters” is another type or symbol of Christ, just as is the “tree of life.” Metaphorically, the fountain is the source of all righteousness, Jesus Christ. This symbolism is found in Old and New Testament scriptures. For example, see Jeremiah 2:13; John 4:14; and Revelation 22:1-2. The fountain of living waters is not mentioned in Lehi’s vision of the tree of life in 1 Nephi 8. In contrast, in Lehi’s vision, the “fountain” (1 Nephi 8:20; 8:32) likely refers to the river of filthy water and not to the “fountain of living waters” (see 1 Nephi 12:16).

verses 26-33 The condescension of God, referred to in these verses, is a sacred and profound concept which we should know and hold dear. It is discussed above in the commentary for verse 16.

26 And the angel said unto me again: Look and behold the condescension of God!

verse 26 It is apparent that this verse has reference to Jesus Christ, whereas verse 16 apparently had reference to both the Father and the Son.

27 And I looked and beheld the Redeemer of the world, of whom my father had spoken; and I also beheld the prophet who should prepare the way before him. And the Lamb of God went forth and was baptized of him; and after he was baptized, I beheld the heavens open, and the Holy Ghost come down out of heaven and abide upon him in the form of a dove.

verses 26-27 “form of a dove” What exactly is meant when it is said that the Holy Ghost descended in the form of a dove? Did the spirit body of the Holy Ghost confine itself to a dove or even the form of a dove? Joseph Smith taught, that as the Holy Ghost descended, probably unseen by any eye, a dove was caused to descend upon Jesus as a heavenly sign that the Holy Ghost was present. Joseph taught: “The sign of the dove was instituted before the creation of the world, a witness for the Holy Ghost, and the devil cannot come in association with the sign of a dove. The Holy Ghost is a personage, and is in the form of a personage. It does not confine itself to the form of the dove, but his presence may be accompanied by the sign of the dove. The Holy Ghost cannot be transformed into a dove; but the sign of a dove was given to John to signify the truth of the deed, as the dove is an emblem or token of truth and innocence” (HC, 5:261).

28 And I beheld that he went forth ministering unto the people, in power and great glory; and the multitudes were gathered together to hear him; and I beheld that they cast him out from among them.

29 And I also beheld twelve others following him. And it came to pass that they were carried away in the Spirit from before my face, and I saw them not.

verse 29 The “twelve others following him” refers to the twelve apostles called in Palestine and headed by Peter, James, and John.

As soon as Nephi viewed them, the scene changed again.

30 And it came to pass that the angel spake unto me again, saying: Look! And I looked, and I beheld the heavens open again, and I saw angels descending upon the children of men; and they did minister unto them.

verse 30 “angels descending upon the children of men” This phrase apparently has reference to the principle of “ministry or ministering of angels” which is discussed by Mormon in Moroni 7:27-38. Essentially, the concept is that if the kingdom of God is on the earth and the people exercise sufficient faith, then angels will minister unto them. Bruce R. McConkie taught: “So unvarying is this principle that it stands forth as the conclusive test of the divinity of any organization on earth. If angels minister to a people, they are the Lord’s people, and his kingdom is with them. If angels do not minister unto them, they are not the Lord’s people, and his kingdom is not with them” (Mormon Doctrine, 503).

31 And he spake unto me again, saying: Look! And I looked, and I beheld the Lamb of God going forth among the children of men. And I beheld multitudes of people who were sick, and who were afflicted with all manner of diseases, and with devils and unclean spirits; and the angel spake and showed all these things unto me. And they were healed by the power of the Lamb of God; and the devils and the unclean spirits were cast out.

32 And it came to pass that the angel spake unto me again, saying: Look! And I looked and beheld the Lamb of God, that he was taken by the people; yea, the Son of the everlasting God was judged of the world; and I saw and bear record.

verse 32 Here is another verse that Joseph changed from its original form in the first edition of the Book of Mormon. It was originally printed: “And it came to pass that the angel spake unto me again saying, Look. And I looked, and I beheld the Lamb of God, that he was taken by the people. Yea, the everlasting God was judged of the world. And I saw and bear record.” Our current edition says “the Son of the everlasting God.” Joseph was continually learning more about the nature of the godhead. He saw a way to make this verse clearer.

33 And I, Nephi, saw that he was lifted up upon the cross and slain for the sins of the world.

verse 33 If Nephi saw this event in vision almost six hundred years before the birth of Christ, then it is obvious that Jesus had a foreknowledge of it during his mortal ministry. He was obviously fully aware of his eventual fate. He knew that he would die on a cross!

34 And after he was slain I saw the multitudes of the earth, that they were gathered together to fight against the apostles of the Lamb; for thus were the twelve called by the angel of the Lord.

verse 34 Nephi saw the time following the crucifixion of Jesus, when the saints, and particularly their leaders, were persecuted and martyred.

35 And the multitude of the earth was gathered together; and I beheld that they were in a large and spacious building, like unto the building which my father saw. And the angel of the Lord spake unto me again, saying: Behold the world and the wisdom thereof; yea, behold the house of Israel hath gathered together to fight against the twelve apostles of the Lamb.

verse 35 “the multitude of the earth” These people are representative of those who espouse the wisdom of the naturalistic world or materialism, as opposed to those who are inclined to respond to the Spirit of the Lord. The continuous and age-old struggle between these two orientations and the people who espouse them is the large part of the story of this mortal phase of our existence.

“the house of Israel hath gathered together to fight against the twelve apostles of the Lamb” Among the worldly wise, vain, and proud will be found some who are of the blood of Israel.

36 And it came to pass that I saw and bear record, that the great and spacious building was the pride of the world; and it fell, and the fall thereof was exceedingly great. And the angel of the Lord spake unto me again, saying: Thus shall be the destruction of all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, that shall fight against the twelve apostles of the Lamb.

verse 36 This symbolic fall is a foreshadowing of the destruction of all peoples that fight against the twelve apostles and the gospel just prior to the Millennium at the Lord's second coming.

The sin of pride will be often mentioned in the Book of Mormon. For a discussion of this vastly important sin, see the discussion of “Pride” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 5, The Natural Self and the Spiritual Self.

verses 1-3 In these verses Nephi is given a preview of the hostile relationship that will exist among the different factions of the people, particularly the Nephites and Lamanites. It is difficult to be certain about what specific time period is being seen here in vision. Presumably Nephi is seeing Book of Mormon peoples during the time period covered by the Book of Mormon.

1 And it came to pass that the angel said unto me: Look, and behold thy seed, and also the seed of thy brethren. And I looked and beheld the land of promise; and I beheld multitudes of people, yea, even as it were in number as many as the sand of the sea.

verse 1 “as many as the sand of the sea” This is an interesting, obviously hyperbolic, expression denoting many. As with all expressions of hyperbole it is not meant to be taken literally. There are numerous references in which similar expressions are found (Genesis 22:17; 32:12; Joshua 11:4; Judges 7:12; 1 Samuel 13:5; 2 Samuel 17:11; and 1 Kings 4:20). The expressions “sand,” “sands,” and “sands of the sea” are also found when the intended meaning is great weight (Job 6:3; Proverbs 27:3) or great size (1 Kings 4:29).

2 And it came to pass that I beheld multitudes gathered together to battle, one against the other; and I beheld wars, and rumors of wars, and great slaughters with the sword among my people.

3 And it came to pass that I beheld many generations pass away, after the manner of wars and contentions in the land; and I beheld many cities, yea, even that I did not number them.

verse 3 “I beheld many generations pass away” The terms generation or generations are common in the Bible and the Book of Mormon. In the Bible, they are translations of the Hebrew root dor, meaning “circle,” or “assembly,” as in a “circle of contemporary people.” These terms then refer to a group of people living during the same period of time and, by extension, the period of time itself. These terms are used in a few different senses in the Old Testament and the Book of Mormon:

1. The period between the birth of parents and the birth of their children. Adult contemporaries of the parents are considered part of the parents’ generation; their children belong to the next generation. The phrase “from generation to generation” (2 Nephi 8:8; 25:16; Moroni 10:28) simply means “from parents to children.” The phrase “unto the third and fourth generation” (Mosiah 13:13) indicates that the actions of parents can have a serious effect on their descendants.

2. The period of time during which all of a group of contemporaries live and die. This seems to be the sense of the term in 4 Nephi 1:14, 18-22, where most of the first generation after Christ had died by the year AD 110, and most of the second had died by AD 200. Book of Mormon prophets and the Savior prophesied that the fourth generation from the coming of the Christ (that is, within four hundred years) would turn from righteousness and would be destroyed (1 Nephi 12:11-12; 2 Nephi 26:9; Alma 45:10-12; Helaman 13:5-10; 3 Nephi 27:32).

3. A designation or characterization of a specific group of people at a given time, such as “blessed are this people in this generation” (Alma 27:12), a “wicked and perverse generation” (Alma 9:8; 10:17, 25; Helaman 13:29), and “unto future generations” (Alma 24:14; 37:18-19; 3 Nephi 26:2).

4 And it came to pass that I saw a mist of darkness on the face of the land of promise; and I saw lightnings, and I heard thunderings, and earthquakes, and all manner of tumultuous noises; and I saw the earth and the rocks, that they rent; and I saw mountains tumbling into pieces; and I saw the plains of the earth, that they were broken up; and I saw many cities that they were sunk; and I saw many that they were burned with fire; and I saw many that did tumble to the earth, because of the quaking thereof.

verse 4 In this verse Nephi is shown the great destruction that occurred on the western hemisphere at the time of the Savior’s crucifixion. This destruction is a foreshadowing or type of the destruction that will be wrought upon the wicked at the time of Jesus’s second coming.

5 And it came to pass after I saw these things, I saw the vapor of darkness, that it passed from off the face of the earth; and behold, I saw multitudes who had not fallen because of the great and terrible judgments of the Lord.

6 And I saw the heavens open, and the Lamb of God descending out of heaven; and he came down and showed himself unto them.

verses 5-6 Here, of course, Nephi sees Jesus’s visit to the western hemisphere after his crucifixion and resurrection. He appears to those who survived the great destructive phenomena which occurred at his crucifixion. Presumably these were generally the more righteous among the inhabitants of Book of Mormon lands in that day.

7 And I also saw and bear record that the Holy Ghost fell upon twelve others; and they were ordained of God, and chosen.

verse 7 The “twelve others” are the twelve disciples or apostles chosen on the western hemisphere.

“they were ordained of God, and chosen” See the discussion of the interesting word chosen in the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:19-20.

8 And the angel spake unto me, saying: Behold the twelve disciples of the Lamb, who are chosen to minister unto thy seed.

9 And he said unto me: Thou rememberest the twelve apostles of the Lamb? Behold they are they who shall judge the twelve tribes of Israel; wherefore, the twelve ministers of thy seed shall be judged of them; for ye are of the house of Israel.

verse 9 “Thou rememberest the twelve apostles of the Lamb?” The angel had just mentioned the twelve apostles in the two verses that precede this one.

The “twelve apostles of the Lamb” spoken of here in verse 9 are Christ’s twelve apostles in Jerusalem. The verse makes explicit the significance of these twelve. They will play an important role in the eternal scheme of things! The verse helps us to sense the true greatness of those twelve men. They shall judge all Israel (see also D&C 29:12; Matthew 19:28)! For further discussion of this concept, see the commentary for Mormon 3:18.

The “twelve disciples of the Lamb” in verse 8 and the “twelve ministers of thy seed” in verse 9 are the twelve Nephite disciples or apostles who will be called by Jesus in the western hemisphere. This verse teaches that they are presided over by the original twelve called in Palestine, yet they are apostles in the complete sense of the word (Moroni 2:2). In an analogous way, might we assume that the apostles in this final dispensation are presided over by the original twelve as well?

Brother Kevin L. Barney has discovered an interesting syntactic or writing device utilized by the authors of the Old Testament Hebrew which is called enallage, which is Greek for “interchange.” In this pattern of writing, the author intentionally shifts from singular to plural forms for rhetorical effect and emphasis. In this pattern a divine being or prophet directly addresses an individual using the singular, “thou.” He then makes a third-person reference to that individual’s posterity, “thy seed.” Finally, he directly addresses the individual and his posterity together in the second-person plural, “ye.” If the reader cares to take a moment, it is easy to identify that pattern in this particular verse (see also Genesis 17:9-10; 2 Nephi 1:31-32; 2 Nephi 3:1-2). For further discussion of this interesting form of Hebrew poetry, see the supplemental article, Enallage in the Hebrew Bible and the Book of Mormon.

10 And these twelve ministers whom thou beholdest shall judge thy seed. And, behold, they are righteous forever; for because of their faith in the Lamb of God their garments are made white in his blood.

verse 10 This verse refers to the twelve Nephite apostles. See 3 Nephi 27:27. They shall assist in judging the tribe of Joseph.

“their garments are made white in his blood” “They” and “their” in this verse seem to refer to the twelve Nephite disciples or apostles. The figurative phrase here—“their garments are made white in his blood”—refers to the principles of justification and sanctification. See the commentary for 3 Nephi 19:13-14. In other words, they are justified and sanctified through the influence of the atonement of Christ. For a more complete discussion of the principles of justification and sanctification see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 17, Justification and Sanctification.

11 And the angel said unto me: Look! And I looked, and beheld three generations pass away in righteousness; and their garments were white even like unto the Lamb of God. And the angel said unto me: These are made white in the blood of the Lamb, because of their faith in him.

12 And I, Nephi, also saw many of the fourth generation who passed away in righteousness.

verses 11-12 Following Christ’s appearance in the western hemisphere there were several years of general righteousness among the people. This was the “golden age” of the Nephites which lasted until AD 200—“three generations.” During this idyllic period, men “did deal justly one with another” and “there were not rich and poor, bond and free” (4 Nephi 1:2-3). This period has been referred to as the Nephite “mini-millennium.”

13 And it came to pass that I saw the multitudes of the earth gathered together.

verse 13 “I saw the multitudes of the earth gathered together” Nephi is seeing different factions of Book of Mormon peoples gather together to do battle. The expression “multitudes of the earth” simply refers to the peoples of the Book of Mormon world. The Book of Mormon story took place in a limited geographical location and involved a specific population of people. It certainly did not involve all the peoples of the earth or even all the peoples of a hemisphere or continent.

14 And the angel said unto me: Behold thy seed, and also the seed of thy brethren.

verse 14 Throughout the remainder of this chapter, Nephi’s “seed” are not his literal descendants but rather those descendants of the families of Lehi, Ishmael, and Zoram who chose to identify themselves, nominally at least, with Jesus Christ and his gospel during the years AD 200 to AD 421. Similarly, the “seed of thy brethren” are not the literal descendants of Laman and Lemuel, but rather the descendants of those who rejected the gospel during the same period.

15 And it came to pass that I looked and beheld the people of my seed gathered together in multitudes against the seed of my brethren; and they were gathered together to battle.

verses 16-18 In these verses, the scene suddenly changes, and Nephi's angel guide provides an interpretation of part of the vision of the tree of life experienced by both Nephi and his father Lehi.

16 And the angel spake unto me, saying: Behold the fountain of filthy water which thy father saw; yea, even the river of which he spake; and the depths thereof are the depths of hell.

verse 16 "hell" This is the first mention of the word "hell" in the Book of Mormon. It will be found fifty-eight more times in the Book of Mormon text. What is hell? In Mormonism, is hell a place or a state of mind? It certainly is both. Specific meanings of hell include:

1. the spirit prison. This is the most common meaning. But why is the spirit prison called "hell"? Consider the circumstances of many people there. They are informed that they must confess Christ and sincerely commit themselves to obeying his commandments. And this must be done by a certain date. Then they may inherit eternal life in a kingdom of glory (celestial, terrestrial, or telestial). If they do not, however, they are said to "remain filthy still," and they will be cast out eternally to outer darkness. Then consider those who abide in spirit prison. What are they like? Do some of them have a long and painful path to follow to avoid outer darkness? Obviously so. Might it be so painful that it might well be an experience resulting in hell? Will any feelings of doubt and desperation exist there in spirit prison regarding the eventual eternal outcome? Might these feelings sometimes approach desperation and even hopelessness? Is there any question why the spirit prison, for some who abide there, will be hell?

2. "outer darkness" or the eternal abode of Satan and his adherents.

3. Infrequently, the term may be used to refer to the telestial kingdom.

4. Also hell is the state of mind—the pain caused by sin—the sorrow, anguish, torment, and anxieties when one is not right with God. But there is more regarding the state of mind referred to as hell. The word conjures up nightmarish feels of desperation and hopelessness. It is the feeling of being trapped with doubt regarding the feasibility of escape. Perhaps the most common circumstance here in mortality that results in a state of mind called hell is an individual who has given-in to his or her natural self repeatedly to the point where the individual is inextricably trapped and obedience to the Lord's commandments seems almost out of the question (see "The 'Natural Self' and the 'Spiritual Self'" and "The Gospel and the Two Natures of Man" in volume 1, chapters 5 and 6 in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine). The scriptures graphically describe this situation as being caught in the “chains of hell” (Alma 12:9-11). Again, the state of mind called hell includes feels of desperation and even hopelessness regarding one’s eternal future.

Each time the word “hell” is used in the scriptures, you should try to decide which of these few meanings is intended.

Consider for a moment the following question: Does the state of mind referred to as hell in the previous paragraph exist in the terrestrial or telestial kingdoms? Probably not. Those in the telestial kingdom for example are happy and fulfilled to be there, they are where they belong. They would be unhappy and uncomfortable anywhere else. In section 19 of the Doctrine and Covenants the expressions “eternal punishment” and “endless punishment” are mentioned and then explained. We are taught in D&C 19 that we do not believe in a punishment, or “hell,” that goes on forever and that the terms “eternal or endless punishment” refer to God’s punishment, not punishment without an end (D&C 19; James E. Talmage, Vitality of Mormonism, 264-65).

“filthy water” “depths of hell” One way to approach Lehi’s dream in 1 Nephi 8 is to see it as describing the “two ways” doctrine: the narrow way to the tree (exaltation) and the broad ways that lead to destruction (spiritual death). But it is notable that Lehi’s dream also gives us a depiction the “filthy water” of the “depths of hell” that may be experienced along the way to our eternal reward. To understand the force of this image, it is logical and compelling to compare the things seen in the dream with geographical realities found in Arabia, where Lehi and his family were traveling when he had his dream.

Hugh Nibley was among the first to make these comparisons in his groundbreaking 1950 Improvement Era series “Lehi in the Desert.” He compared the gulf of Lehi’s dream to the wadis—deep canyons and narrow valleys—found in the Arabian mountains: “All who have traveled in the desert know the feeling of utter helplessness and frustration at finding one’s way suddenly cut off by one of those appalling canyons with perpendicular sides—nothing could be more abrupt, more absolute, more baffling to one’s plans, and so will it be with the wicked in a day of reckoning (Hugh Nibley, Lehi in the Desert / The World of the Jaredites / There Were Jaredites, The Collected Works of Hugh Nibley: Volume 5, Salt Lake City and Provo, Utah: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1988, 46).

Professor S. Kent Brown, who had traveled extensively in this region, developed this connection further in 2002. As Brown points out, usually there is a river or streambed running through the wadi. “After rains, the seasonal streams in the wadis fill with mud and debris,” which readily relates to the “filthy water” in 1 Nephi 12:16 and the “filthiness” in 15:26–27” (S. Kent Brown, “New Light From Arabia on Lehi’s Trail,” in Echoes and Evidences of the Book of Mormon, ed. Donald W. Parry, Daniel C. Peterson, and John W. Welch, Provo, Utah: FARMS, 2002, 65).

Moreover, the stream of water that led from the Valley of Lemuel to the Red Sea, where Lehi had his dream, was likely one of these wadis. Recently, it occurred to a pair of Latter-day Saint explorers, standing in one of those canyons, that its steep walls and canyon creek might have brought to life the symbolism found in Lehi's vision: "The high vertical walls of the gulf would be a good type for the depths of hell, since there would be no way back up and anyone who fell from the walls of the canyon could not survive" (George Potter and Richard Wellington, Lehi in the Wilderness: 81 New, Documented Evidences that the Book of Mormon is a True History, Springville, Utah: Cedar Fort Publishing, 2003, 49).

These details tell us why Lehi's dream was so powerful to him and to his posterity. Sudden desert storms, causing fatal flash floods, are feared by all wise travelers, such as Lehi. Staying out of harm's way was of paramount importance.

These images were not fictions, but reflected realities. As Hugh Nibley reasoned, "The substance of Lehi's dreams is highly significant, since men's dreams necessarily represent, even when inspired, the things they see by day, albeit in strange and wonderful combinations" (Nibley, Lehi in the Desert, 43). Lehi traveled in Arabia by day, and he dreamed in terms of those ominous exposures by night.

As Lehi's dream reflects the realities of life in Arabia, it would seem Lehi knew Arabia intimately: "Lehi's dream, perhaps more than any other segment of Nephi's narrative, takes us into the ancient Near East," Brother Kent Brown reasons, "for as soon as we focus on certain aspects of Lehi's dream, we find ourselves staring into the ancient world of Arabia. Lehi's dream is not at home in Joseph Smith's world but is at home in a world preserved both by archaeological remains and in the customs and manners of Arabia's inhabitants" (Brown, "New Light From Arabia," 64).

In Arabia, deep chasms are filled with muddy water, separating travelers from their destination. This is the gulf of filthy water, the gulf of sin and unrighteousness, which separates the righteous from the wicked. This sweeping force struck Lehi and Nephi vividly as a powerful image of the natural justice of God, and these reasons help modern readers understand how and why the dream of Lehi has powerfully awakened, warned, and guided its numerous readers all around the world.

17 And the mists of darkness are the temptations of the devil, which blindeth the eyes, and hardeneth the hearts of the children of men, and leadeth them away into broad roads, that they perish and are lost.

verse 17 "which blindeth the eyes, and hardeneth the hearts of the children of men" See the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

"broad roads" This phrase is used to form a contrast with the "strait and narrow path." While the latter expression implies a path that is narrow, rigorous, and demanding to negotiate (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 8:20), the "broad roads" can and will be traveled by multitudes of the spiritually careless.

18 And the large and spacious building, which thy father saw, is vain imaginations and the pride of the children of men. And a great and a terrible gulf divideth them; yea, even the word of the justice of the Eternal God, and the Messiah who is the Lamb of God, of whom the Holy Ghost beareth record, from the beginning of the world until this time, and from this time henceforth and forever.

verse 18 “a great and a terrible gulf” Nephi is shown a great gulf which separates those in the great and spacious building—those who are caught up in worldliness—from those successfully pursuing the tree of life. An analogous gulf existed in the spirit world before Christ’s resurrection. See the commentary for 1 Nephi 15:28-29. Does such a gulf exist in mortality? It certainly does, and one need only to understand the concept of justification to know the gulf which separates the sinner from exaltation. Again, for a review of this important concept, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 17, Justification and Sanctification.

“even the word of the justice of the Eternal God” One point of some interest is that the original manuscript rendered this phrase “even the sword of the justice of the eternal God.” Oliver Cowdery misread sword as word when he was copying the original manuscript into the printer’s manuscript, yet neither he nor subsequent editors noticed that the Book of Mormon nowhere else refers to the “word of the justice of God.” But in several instances the phrase “the sword” of the justice of God is found (see Alma 26:19; 60:29, Helaman 13:5, 3 Nephi 20:20; 29:4, and Ether 8:23). Dr. Royal Skousen has referred to phenomena like this as “inconsistent wrinkles” in the Book of Mormon text.

verses 19-20 The scene changes again, and Nephi sees in vision the final destruction of the Nephite people by the Lamanites in about AD 385 near the hill Cumorah (Mormon 6).

19 And while the angel spake these words, I beheld and saw that the seed of my brethren did contend against my seed, according to the word of the angel; and because of the pride of my seed, and the temptations of the devil, I beheld that the seed of my brethren did overpower the people of my seed.

20 And it came to pass that I beheld, and saw the people of the seed of my brethren that they had overcome my seed; and they went forth in multitudes upon the face of the land.

verse 20 “and they went forth in multitudes upon the face of the land” The subject of Book of Mormon geography and how the people of the Book of Mormon might coincide with contemporary scientific archeological findings is discussed in the supplemental article, Book of Mormon Geography. We will also make reference to various specific points of this subject in the commentary as we go. Some students of Book of Mormon geography feel that the apostate Lamanite culture, following the destruction of the Nephites, coincides with the Mayan culture of Central America. The “classic” Mayan period was from about AD 200 to AD 900. This classic Mayan period is so named by virtue of the quality and quantity of buildings and monuments that have been found dating from this time period. The “post-classic” and “pre-classic” periods, as contrasted with the “classic period,” are characterized by a lesser quality and quantity of constructed remnants which have been discovered. It would not be surprising to one day learn that they remnant of the Lamanites may have joined with the Mayans but did not constitute the principle founders of that group.

21 And I saw them gathered together in multitudes; and I saw wars and rumors of wars among them; and in wars and rumors of wars I saw many generations pass away.

22 And the angel said unto me: Behold these shall dwindle in unbelief.

23 And it came to pass that I beheld, after they had dwindled in unbelief they became a dark, and loathsome, and a filthy people, full of idleness and all manner of abominations.

verse 23 “dark, and loathsome, and a filthy people” Loathsome means disgusting; hateful; abhorred; detestable.

Be careful lest you associate skin color with righteousness or unrighteousness. In the Book of Mormon story, a dark skin was neither good nor evil, but the dark skin was designated, doubtless arbitrarily, to be the sign of the curse. The curse itself was separation of the cursed people from the priesthood of God. For a more complete discussion of the “mark” placed on the unrighteous Lamanites, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 5:20-21.

1 Nephi 13:28-29 Plain and precious things taken away from the Bible

1 Nephi 13:40-41 Modern-day revelations to restore plain and precious things

Chapters 13 and 14 of 1 Nephi both deal in part with an often-misunderstood concept—the great and abominable church of the devil. For this introductory discussion, I have drawn from a paper by Stephen E. Robinson, “Early Christianity and 1 Nephi 13-14” published in The Book of Mormon, First Nephi, the Doctrinal Foundation, 177-91.

In these two chapters, Nephi describes the vision in which he sees the future of the world and its kingdoms. Nephi's vision is the type of revelation known in biblical literature as apocalyptic (prophetic revelation, especially concerning a cataclysm in which the forces of good triumph over the forces of evil), and it is represented in the New Testament most fully by John's book of Revelation. The revelations of Nephi and of John have more in common, however, than merely the apocalyptic form. For one thing, Nephi's vision foretells of John's vision (Nephi 14:19-28). The two are complementary, centering in part on the same characters and themes: the Lamb and his church, the apostasy, the great and abominable church of the devil, and the restoration of the gospel in the latter days.

The word great is an adjective of size rather than of quality. It thus informs us of the large size of the abominable entity. Secondary meanings might refer to great wealth or power. The term abominable is used in the Old Testament to describe what God hates, what cannot fail to arouse his wrath. In the book of Daniel, for example, the abomination of desolation is that thing so hateful to God that its presence in the temple causes the divine presence to depart, leaving the sanctuary desolate. The term is usually associated with idolatrous worship or gross sexual immorality.

The word church had a slightly broader meaning anciently than it does now. It referred anciently to an assembly, congregation, or association of people who bonded together and shared the same loyalties. Thus, the term was not necessarily restricted to religious associations. In fact, in Athens the Greeks used the term to denote the legislative assembly of government. The Greek word for church, ekklesia, is formed from the root -klesia, meaning “to call” and the prefix ek-, meaning “out.” Thus, it originally referred to those citizens who were called out or summoned to public meetings. It was thus an ideal word to represent the body of individuals whom God “calls out” of the world through the Holy Ghost.

When we put all this together, we find that the term great and abominable church means an immense assembly or association, likely a religious association, of people bound together by their loyalty to that which God hates. Most likely, this “church” is involved specifically in sexual immorality, false worship, or both. While the book of Revelation does not use the exact phrase great and abominable church, both John the Revelator and Nephi use a number of similar phrases to describe it. They both call it the “Mother of Harlots and Abominations,” “mother of abominations,” and “the whore that sitteth upon many waters” (Revelation 17:1; 1 Nephi 14:10-11).

Whenever the kingdom of God has been placed on the earth, “the devil always sets up his kingdom at the very same time in opposition to God” (TPJS, 365). “And since the kingdom of God or true church has been on earth from age to age, so also has the kingdom of the devil or the church of the devil” (Bruce R. McConkie, A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, 340). In setting up his church, Satan has always imitated the kingdom of God in order to deceive people. We might always expect to find in Satan’s church an organization similar to that of God’s kingdom, priestcraft rather than priesthood, and the teaching of untruths mingled with scripture.

The major characteristics of the great and abominable church described in 1 Nephi 13 and 14 may be listed as follows:

1. It persecutes, tortures, and slays the saints of God (1 Nephi 13:5).
2. It seeks wealth and luxury (1 Nephi 13:7-8).
3. It is characterized by sexual immorality (1 Nephi 13:7).
4. It has removed plain and precious things from the scriptures (1 Nephi 13:28-29).
5. It has “dominion over all the earth, among all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people” (1 Nephi 14:11).
6. Its fate is to be consumed by a world war. This will occur, when the nations which it has incited against the saints, war among themselves until the great and abominable church itself is destroyed (see 1 Nephi 22:13-14).

These same characteristics are also attributed to the whore (Babylon) in the Revelation of John:

1. She is drunk with the blood of the Saints and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus and of the prophets (17:6; 18:24).
2. She is characterized by the enjoyment of great wealth and luxury (17:4; 18:3, 11-16).
3. She is characterized by sexual immorality (17:1, 2, 5).
4. She has dominion over all nations (17:15, 18; 18:3, 23-24).
5. Her fate is to be consumed by the very kings who have made war on the Lamb under the influence of her deceptions (17:14-16; 18:23).

It should be noted that one characteristic not common to both prophetic descriptions is Nephi's statement that the great and abominable church held back important parts of the canon of scripture. But because John's record is one of the very scriptures to which Nephi refers (14:20-23), this omission in John's account is not surprising.

Some confusion is caused regarding the concept of the great and abominable church by what seems to be a contradiction between chapter 13 and chapter 14. In 1 Nephi 13, the "great and abominable church" is one specific church among many. Nephi's description of it as "most abominable above all other churches" (verses 5, 26) does not make sense otherwise. Also, in chapter 13, it has a specific historical description: It was formed among the Gentiles after the Jews transmitted the Bible in its purity to the Gentiles (verse 26). It is also the specific historical agent responsible for removing plain and precious truths from the scriptural record. To this may be added the information provided by the Doctrine and Covenants 86:1-3, which teaches that the "great and abominable church" did its work after the apostles had "fallen asleep"—that is, after the end of the first century AD. Clearly, "great and abominable" here refers to one specific church among many others that are not "great and abominable."

In contrast, 1 Nephi 14:10 describes the devil's church as consisting of all those organizations not associated with the Church of Jesus Christ: "Behold there are save two churches only [that is, Zion and Babylon]; the one is the church of the Lamb of God, and the other is the church of the devil."

How can this be? Is the "great and abominable" one church or many? The answer is that the term is used in two different ways in chapters 13 and 14. In chapter 13, the "great and abominable church" refers to a specific historical entity, whereas in chapter 14 the term is used simply in a generic or universal or typological sense. An example of another such term used in the same way, with much the same meaning, is Babylon. Babylon is an ancient Mesopotamian city. Babylon is also a more general expression which signifies a spiritual category of people—the carnal world, and its values and lifestyle which include mockery of the kingdom of God.

Another similar expression is Zion. Zion is a specific city to be founded before the Lord's second coming. It is also a spiritual category of people—the pure in heart. As spiritual categories, Babylon is the antithesis of Zion. Zion is wherever the pure in heart dwell, and Babylon is wherever the wicked live. Anyone who fights against Zion can be put into the category of Babylon.

Apocalyptic literature is also dualistic. Because it deals with archetypes, it boils everything down to opposing principles: love and hate, good and evil, light and dark. There are not gray areas in apocalyptic scripture. At the very least, everything can be reduced to the opposing categories of "A" and "not-A" ("They who are not for me are against me, saith our God"—2 Nephi 10:16). In the realm of religion, there are only two categories; religion that will save and religion that will not. The former is the church of the Lamb, and the latter—no matter how well intentioned—is a counterfeit. Thus, even a “good” church must still be part of the devil’s kingdom in the sense used in 1 Nephi 14 (“there are save two churches only”). Again, by the construct of 1 Nephi 14, there is only one true church, and all other churches are part of the entity known as the “great and abominable church.” However, all of the churches that are part of the “great and abominable” entity in 1 Nephi 14, cannot be called the “great and abominable church” in the sense used in 1 Nephi 13, for their intentions are good and honorable, and quite often such churches teach people enough truth that they can then recognize the true church when they meet it. These churches do not slay the saints of God, they do not seek to control civil governments, nor do they pursue wealth, luxury, and sexual immorality. Such churches may belong to the kingdom of the devil in the apocalyptic sense, when there are only two categories, “A” and “not-A,” but they cannot be called the great and abominable church in the historical sense—the description is just not accurate.

In 1 Nephi 13:5, 8, and 26 the reference to the “great and abominable church” implies the specific historical entity. In 1 Nephi 14:10, the more general meaning is apparently intended.

What, then, is the specific historical entity referred to in 1 Nephi 13? Before we consider what it is, let us consider what it is not. Well-intentioned churches do not qualify as the “great and abominable church” described in 1 Nephi 13. They do not slay the saints of God, and they do not seek to control civil governments. Nor do they pursue wealth, luxury, and sexual immorality.

Some have suggested that the great and abominable church is Judaism in the first century AD. After all, Jewish leaders persecuted the Church and spilled the blood of the Saints. They even crucified the Messiah. It was this kind of argument—that the Jews were the antichrist—that led directly to the Holocaust in the 20th century and that still fans the bigoted insanity of some present-day groups. Judaism cannot be the great and abominable church. Nephi makes clear that the scriptures were complete when they came forth from the mouth of a Jew, but that the great and abominable church, which had its formation among the Gentiles, excised some of their most plain and precious parts (1 Nephi 13:24-26).

Some have suggested that the Roman Catholic Church might be the great and abominable church of Nephi 13. This also is untenable. Catholicism did not yet exist when the crimes described by Nephi were being committed. Constantine did not formally organize the state church until AD 313. Furthermore, the early Catholic Church can hardly be accused of immorality. It had, in fact, gone to the extremes of asceticism. And during much of the period, members of the Catholic Church were not in a position to persecute anyone, as they were being thrown to the lions themselves. The Catholic Church of the fourth century was the result of apostasy, not its cause.

As an aside, the word apostasy is a most interesting one. It is derived from the Greek word apostasia which means literally standing apart. Most commonly, however, apostasy is taken to mean “rebellion” or “revolution.” It conveys the sense of an internal takeover by factions hostile to the intentions of the previous leaders. A similar meaning is conveyed by the word mutiny, which implies that unauthorized crew commandeers a ship and take it where it is not supposed to go. Because early Christians often thought of the Church as a ship, it seems “mutiny” conveys exactly the right sense of what Paul and others meant by the term “apostasy.” Webster’s Dictionary defines apostasy in a somewhat different way when it says, “An abandoning of what one has believed in.” Although the word apostasy is not found in the text, the Book of Mormon has much to say about the nature, causes, and effects of apostasy. Indeed, the stories of two of its great civilizations, the Jaredites and the Nephites, end in massive, and fatal, national apostasies. The Book of Mormon teaches that apostasy occurs in at least two ways: (1) Drifting or falling away; losing one’s zeal for or commitment to the gospel; losing one’s way, often in almost imperceptible degrees. The phrase “dwindle in unbelief” is used to represent such a process. (2) Knowingly and openly rebelling. Indeed, those who sin knowingly, “in open rebellion,” are especially condemned, and are frequently the most bitter of apostates, far more so than those whose apostasy stems from backsliding parents or inherited false traditions. A primary cause of both types of apostasy is giving in to one’s carnal or natural self. For a discussion of this carnal or natural tendency within each of us, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 5, The “Natural Self” and the “Spiritual Self.”

What then is the historical great and abominable church that existed in the second century AD? This “church” would have had its origins in the second half of the first century and would have done much of its work by the middle of the second century. Brother Stephen E. Robinson wrote of this time:

This period might be called the blind spot in Christian history, for it is here that the fewest primary historical sources have been preserved. We have good sources for New Testament Christianity; but then the lights go out, so to speak, and we hear the muffled sounds of a great struggle. When the lights come on again a hundred or so years later, we find that someone has rearranged all the furniture and Christianity has become something very different from what it was in the beginning. That different entity can accurately be described as hellenized Christianity (“Nephi’s Great and Abominable Church,” in the Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, volume 7, number 1, 1998, 32-39).

Brother Robinson, after thoughtfully analyzing the possibilities, concludes that the historical great and abominable church was the earliest apostate Christian church, the Greek Christian church. In about 330 BC Alexander the Great and his Greek culture conquered the known world, and the world became “hellenized,” or imbued with Greek culture. The Greek influence pervaded the biblical world, and it persisted until after the time of Christ’s mortal ministry. It was not even altered by the Roman political domination that existed at the time of Jesus. Following the crucifixion and resurrection of Christ, his apostles carried the gospel message into the world. Thus, Jewish Christianity and Greek culture met head-on. Greek culture prevailed, and Jewish Christianity was revised to make it more attractive and appealing to a Greek audience. Primary prejudices of the Greek world were the absolute nature of God (i.e., he cannot be bound or limited by anything) and the impossibility of anything material or physical being eternal. In order to satisfy the Gentiles steeped in Greek philosophy, Christianity had to throw out the doctrine of an anthropomorphic (“in the shape of man”) God and the resurrection of the dead, or at least reinterpret them drastically. Some Greek Christians at Corinth had already reinterpreted the doctrine of resurrection, and Paul responded in 1 Corinthians 15:12: “Now, if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is not resurrection of the dead?” Thus resulted the original and earliest apostate church. This church (let us call it “hellenized Christianity”) had in its possession all the Jewish scriptures and were in a perfect position to alter them. It taught the philosophies of men mingled with scripture. It dethroned God in the church and replaced him with man by denying the principle of revelation and turning instead to human intellect. As the product of human agency, its creeds were an abomination to the Lord, for they were idolatry: men worshiping their own creations, not so much of their own hands, but of their own minds.

The hellenization of Christianity is a phenomenon that has long been recognized by scholars of Christian history, but it is one which Latter-day Saints know better as the Great Apostasy. Hellenization means imposing Greek culture on the native cultures of the East. The result was a synthesis of East and West, with the elements of the Greek West predominating, creating a melting-pot, popular culture that was virtually worldwide. But in the realm of religion, synthesis means compromise, and when one speaks of the gospel, compromise with the popular culture of the world means apostasy from the truth.

While the Orthodox Christians in the first and second centuries AD adopted Greek philosophy, there may have been other specific bit players in this period of apostasy. Some Jewish Christians couldn't let go of the law of Moses and eventually gave up Christ instead. The Gnostics wallowed in the mysteries and in unspeakable practices on the one hand, or in neurotic asceticism on the other. And all of them together forced the true church of Jesus Christ into the wilderness.

The specific historical entity that qualifies to be the great and abominable church of 1 Nephi 13, then, has been named. What of the typological entity of 1 Nephi 14? Does it exist today? Today, the great and abominable church of the devil is, as Bruce R. McConkie describes it, “the world; it is all the carnality and evil to which fallen man is heir, it is every unholy and wicked practice; it is every false religion, every supposed system of salvation which does not actually save and exalt man in the highest heaven of the celestial world. It is every church except the true church, whether parading under a Christian or a pagan banner” (Doctrinal New Testament Commentary, 3:552). It is especially anyone who makes war against the saints.

In a later chapter, Nephi will teach that the day would come when the great and abominable church will be destroyed (see 1 Nephi 22:13-14). This is likely to come just prior to the Savior’s second coming. Does this mean that people who are members of churches other than The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are wicked and are marked for destruction? Certainly not. While the whole of all the world’s churches may form part of the entity spoken of as the great and abominable church, there are doubtless many within those churches with whom the Lord is pleased individually. Elder James E. Talmage taught: “I do not understand that when the Lord states that those churches shall be overthrown—I mean the church of the devil, using his expression as he says—I do not understand that all members of those churches are to meet destruction, physically or otherwise. He is speaking there of the church collectively, and he is not pleased with it; but individually he may be well pleased with many of his sons and daughters who have been born under an environment that has led them into those churches which are not of God. . . . But the Lord is not pleased with those churches that have been constructed by men and then labeled with his name. He is not pleased with those doctrines that are being taught as being his doctrines when they are only the effusion of men’s brains, undirected by inspiration and utterly lacking in revelation” (CR, October 1928, 120-21).

1 And it came to pass that the angel spake unto me, saying: Look! And I looked and beheld many nations and kingdoms.

2 And the angel said unto me: What beholdest thou? And I said: I behold many nations and kingdoms.

3 And he said unto me: These are the nations and kingdoms of the Gentiles.

verses 1-3 The “nations and kingdoms of the Gentiles” are multiple and likely refer to the Middle East, Asia Minor, Europe, and all of the Mediterranean area. We will learn later that the promised land, the Americas, will also be inhabited by Gentiles and be referred to as a great Gentile nation.

4 And it came to pass that I saw among the nations of the Gentiles the formation of a great church.

verse 4 “a great church” Here is the first reference to the specific historical entity which later will be called the “great and abominable church.” This may well be the Greek Christian Church of the second and third centuries AD. Keep in mind that the adjective “great” refers to size and not quality.

5 And the angel said unto me: Behold the formation of a church which is most abominable above all other churches, which slayeth the saints of God, yea, and tortureth them and bindeth them down, and yoketh them with a yoke of iron, and bringeth them down into captivity.

6 And it came to pass that I beheld this great and abominable church; and I saw the devil that he was the founder of it.

7 And I also saw gold, and silver, and silks, and scarlets, and fine-twined linen, and all manner of precious clothing; and I saw many harlots.

8 And the angel spake unto me, saying: Behold the gold, and the silver, and the silks, and the scarlets, and the fine-twined linen, and the precious clothing, and the harlots, are the desires of this great and abominable church.

9 And also for the praise of the world do they destroy the saints of God, and bring them down into captivity.

verses 5-9 These verses outline the major characteristics of the great and abominable entity. They include immorality and materialism. This “church,” headed by Satan, captures, tortures, and even slays the saints of God. It seeks for worldly popularity and approval.

10 And it came to pass that I looked and beheld many waters; and they divided the Gentiles from the seed of my brethren.

verse 10 Here Nephi suddenly changes the subject from the great and abominable entity to the future of the Nephites and Lamanites on the western hemisphere. The great and abominable entity—located in nations and kingdoms of the Gentiles with its center in Europe described in verses 1-3 of this chapter—is separated from his own eventual descendants by the great oceans.

11 And it came to pass that the angel said unto me: Behold the wrath of God is upon the seed of thy brethren.

“wrath of God” This expression is used several times in chapters 13 and 14 of 1 Nephi. Its meaning is self evident. It has been defined, perhaps somewhat euphemistically as “divine justice.” The word “wrath” is usually thought to mean fierce anger leading to vengeance, actually just and fair punishment, as a consequence of that anger.

This is first time the word “wrath” is used in the Book of Mormon. The suggestion has often been made by anti-Mormons that Joseph Smith wrote the Book of Mormon, that he himself was the author. Here is a brief summary of a simple word study done in comparing the Book of Mormon with the Doctrine and Covenants:

There are several unique terms used in the Book of Mormon that are not found once in the Doctrine and Covenants. These include “wrath” (42 times), “consecrate” (instead of “ordain” 8 times), “restoration” (instead of resurrection 19 times), “of my proceedings” (15 times), “more part” or “more history part” (28 times), “Holy One of Israel” (39 times), “clouds of darkness” (10 times).

Also, there are some expressions found in the Doctrine and Covenants that are not found once in the Book of Mormon: “wheat and tares” (11 times), “the Seventy” (14 times), “keys of the kingdom” (50 times), “and lo,” or “lo” (36 times), and “even so, amen” (49 times).

12 And I looked and beheld a man among the Gentiles, who was separated from the seed of my brethren by the many waters; and I beheld the Spirit of God, that it came down and wrought upon the man; and he went forth upon the many waters, even unto the seed of my brethren, who were in the promised land.

verse 12 Who was this man “wrought upon” by the Spirit of God? Elder Orson Pratt identified this man as Christopher Columbus in a footnote in the 1879 edition of the Book of Mormon. Critics of the Book of Mormon have tended to dismiss this passage as a cheap and easy instance of prophecy after the fact, composed centuries after Columbus’s death—but postdated, as it were, in order to create a seemingly impressive and self-validating prediction by an ancient prophetic writer. At the very most, some have observed, a “prophecy” of Columbus hardly constitutes evidence for the antiquity or inspiration of the Book of Mormon.

On a surface level, such critics seem to be right. It would have taken little talent in the late 1820s for someone to prophesy the discovery of America nearly three and a half centuries earlier. But the description of Columbus provided by this verse nonetheless remains a remarkable demonstration of the revelatory accuracy of the Book of Mormon. It is only with the growth of Columbus scholarship in recent years, and particularly with the translation and publication of Columbus’s Libro de las Profecías in 1991, that English-speaking readers have been fully able to see how remarkably the admiral’s own self-understanding parallels the portrait of him given in the Book of Mormon. The Columbus revealed in recent scholarship is quite different from the gold-driven secular adventurer celebrated in the textbooks and holidays most of us grew up with.

We now understand, for example, that the primary motivation for Columbus’s explorations was not financial gain but the spread of Christianity. He was zealously committed to the cause of taking the gospel, as he understood it, to all the world. He felt himself guided by the Holy Spirit, and a good case can indeed be made that his first transoceanic voyage, in particular, was miraculously well executed.

Columbus was a serious and close student of the Bible. Among his very favorite passages of scriptures was John 10:16: “And other sheep I have that are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold and one shepherd.” This verse provided significant support for his image of himself as a bearer of the gospel to the New World. And, though he was unfamiliar with the writings of Nephi, Columbus was convinced that his role had been predicted by ancient prophets. “The Lord purposed,” he wrote to Ferdinand and Isabella, “that there should be something clearly miraculous in this matter of the voyage to the Indies. . . I spent seven years here in your royal court discussing this subject with the leading persons in all the learned arts, and their conclusion was that it was vain. That was the end, and they give it up. But afterwards it all turned out just as our Redeemer Jesus Christ had said, and as he had spoken earlier by the mouth of his holy prophets” (Delno C. West and August Kling, The “Libro de las profecias” of Christopher Columbus [Gainesville: University of Florida Press, 1991], 107). “For the execution of the journey to the Indies,” he said, “I was not aided by intelligence, by mathematics or by maps. It was simply the fulfillment of what Isaiah had prophesied” (Ibid., 111). Referring to his first crossing of the Atlantic, Columbus declared:

With a hand that could be felt, the Lord opened my mind to the fact that it would be possible to sail from here to the Indies, and he opened my will to desire to accomplish the project. This was the fire that burned within me. . . Who can doubt that this fire was not merely mine, but also of the Holy Spirit who encouraged me with a radiance of marvelous illumination from his sacred Holy Scriptures, by a most clear and powerful testimony . . . urging me to press forward? Continually, without a moment’s hesitation, the Scriptures urge me to press forward with great haste (Ibid., 105).

Additional scholarship has come to agree with the Book of Mormon’s assessment of Columbus (see especially Pauline Watts, “Prophecy and Discovery: On the spiritual Origins of Christopher Columbus’s ‘Enterprise of the Indies,’” American Historical Review [February 1985]: 73-102). In a book entitled Columbus, Don Quixote of the Seas, the author Jacob Wasserman quotes directly from the writings of Christopher Columbus: “From my first youth onward, I was a seaman, and have so continued until this day. . . The Lord was well disposed to my desire, and he bestowed upon me courage and understanding. . . . Our Lord with provident hand unlocked my mind, sent me upon seas, and gave me fire for the deed. Those who heard of my enterprise called it foolish, mocked me, and laughed. But who can doubt but that the Holy Ghost inspired me?” (18). President Spencer W. Kimball testified, “I’m sure that [God] inspired a little boy, Christopher Columbus, to stand on the quays in Genoa, Italy, and yearn for the sea. He was filled with the desire to sail the seas, and he fulfilled a great prophecy made long, long ago, that this land, chosen above all other lands, should be discovered. And so, when he was mature, opportunity was granted to him to brave the unknown seas, to find this land . . . and to open the door, as it were” (Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball. Edited by Edward I. Kimball, [Salt Lake City: Bookcraft], 1982, 427). George Q. Cannon taught, “Columbus was inspired to penetrate the ocean and discover this Western continent, for the set time for its discovery had come, and the consequences which God desired to follow its discovery have taken place—a free government has been established on it. The men who established that government were inspired of God. . . We believe it was a preparatory work for the establishment of the kingdom of God” (JD, 14:55).

The recent publication of Columbus’s Book of Prophecies in English translation, much too late for Joseph Smith to have used it, now permits us a window into the great admiral’s soul. And what we find there is strikingly reminiscent of prominent themes in the Book of Mormon. Columbus was fascinated, for instance, by such subjects as the recovery of the Holy Land and the rebuilding of the ancient Jewish temple in Jerusalem. One of his favorite scriptures, in this regard, was Isaiah 2:2 (cf. 2 Nephi 12:2): “And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord’s house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it.” He was also, as mentioned, deeply committed to the notion that the gospel had to be preached to the ends of the earth and the inhabitants thereof brought to Christ before the end of the world. For much of this, as careful readers of the Book of Mormon might have guessed, Columbus’s favorite author was the prophet Isaiah. Indeed, it was in that prophet’s book that Columbus thought he could see himself and his voyages divinely foretold. Among the passages that caught his attention was Isaiah 55:5: “Behold, thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not, and nations that knew not thee shall run unto thee because of the Lord thy God, and for the Holy One of Israel; for he hath glorified thee.”

Columbus seems to have regarded this as a prophecy of his own mission, along with Isaiah 42:1-4 (“Behold my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth; I have put my spirit upon him. . . and the isles shall wait for his law”), which students of the Book of Mormon will have no difficulty connecting with the prophet Jacob’s remarks at 2 Nephi 10:20-22.

“Our Lord,” Columbus said in AD 1500, “made me the messenger of the new heaven and the new earth, of which he spoke in the Book of Revelation by St. John, after having spoken of it by the mouth of Isaiah; and he showed me the place where to find it” (Cited in Kay Brigham, Christopher Columbus: His Life and Discovery in the Light of His Prophecies [Barcelona: CLIE, 1990], 50, or 57 n.).

Without question, Columbus’s first voyage to America is one of the most significant events of the history of humanity. His expedition brought two worlds into permanent contact with each other, the Old World of Europe and Asia, and the New World of the Americas, and it set in motion a chain of events that would transform both worlds forever. Among other things, Columbus’s encounter with the Americas opened the door to a flood of exploration, colonization, missionary work, and fortune-seeking. Latter-day Saints honor Columbus for being a forerunner to the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ in these latter days. He laid the foundation for the establishment of a nation that would “be set up as a free people by the power of the Father, that [the Book of Mormon and the fulness of the gospel] might come forth” (3 Nephi 21:4).

The “promised land” is the Americas.

13 And it came to pass that I beheld the Spirit of God, that it wrought upon other Gentiles; and they went forth out of captivity, upon the many waters.

verse 13 Perhaps this verse is a reference to the early European colonists or Pilgrims who fled their countries in Europe and the British Isles to America to escape religious persecution.

14 And it came to pass that I beheld many multitudes of the Gentiles upon the land of promise; and I beheld the wrath of God, that it was upon the seed of my brethren; and they were scattered before the Gentiles and were smitten.

verse 14 Undoubtedly, this is a reference to the scattering and suppression of remnants of Book of Mormon peoples—perhaps some among the Native Americans, by the early American settlers. Another possible historical correlation with this “scattering and smiting” is the conquest of Mexico by the Spanish in AD 1519 and the three-hundred-year Spanish Colonial Period that followed.

15 And I beheld the Spirit of the Lord, that it was upon the Gentiles, and they did prosper and obtain the land for their inheritance; and I beheld that they were white, and exceedingly fair and beautiful, like unto my people before they were slain.

verse 15 This verse likely refers to the “Gentiles” who founded and inhabited the great Gentile nation, the United States of America. See a discussion of the great Gentile nation in the commentary for 1 Nephi 10:14 and 1 Nephi 15:13. The Spirit of the Lord was indeed “upon [these] Gentiles” as they established their independence from other nations, wrote their constitution, and established their free form of government. As we have discussed previously, many of these “Gentiles” were descendants of the house of Israel, especially of the tribe of Joseph through Ephraim.

Again, a word of caution seems appropriate. This verse seems to communicate the doctrinally unsound concept that white skin is inherently more desirable than dark skin. For a discussion of the “mark” placed upon the unrighteous peoples in Book-of-Mormon history see the commentary for 2 Nephi 5:20-21.

verses 16-19 These verses likely have reference to the Revolutionary War fought by the colonies against their “mother,” England. The Book of Mormon, thus, leaves little doubt that God took sides in the Revolutionary War, and that he aided the American colonists in their fight against Great Britain, the home of the “mother Gentiles.”

16 And it came to pass that I, Nephi, beheld that the Gentiles who had gone forth out of captivity did humble themselves before the Lord; and the power of the Lord was with them.

verse 16 “the Gentiles who had gone forth out of captivity” This phrase refers to the early American settlers (see verse 13).

17 And I beheld that their mother Gentiles were gathered together upon the waters, and upon the land also, to battle against them.

verse 17 “mother Gentiles” These are those European countries from which colonists immigrated to the Americas, and which subsequently, and unsuccessfully, “gathered together upon the waters, and upon the land also, to battle against” those colonists. England, France, Spain, and Portugal all waged unsuccessful wars against colonists in the New World.

18 And I beheld that the power of God was with them, and also that the wrath of God was upon all those that were gathered together against them to battle.

19 And I, Nephi, beheld that the Gentiles that had gone out of captivity were delivered by the power of God out of the hands of all other nations.

20 And it came to pass that I, Nephi, beheld that they did prosper in the land; and I beheld a book, and it was carried forth among them.

verse 20 What book did Nephi behold? Likely he saw the Bible as it is known today.

21 And the angel said unto me: Knowest thou the meaning of the book?

22 And I said unto him: I know not.

23 And he said: Behold it proceedeth out of the mouth of a Jew. And I, Nephi, beheld it; and he said unto me: The book that thou beholdest is a record of the Jews, which contains the covenants of the Lord, which he hath made unto the house of Israel; and it also containeth many of the prophecies of the holy prophets; and it is a record like unto the engravings which are upon the plates of brass, save there are not so many; nevertheless, they contain the covenants of the Lord, which he hath made unto the house of Israel; wherefore, they are of great worth unto the Gentiles.

verse 23 “Behold it proceedeth out of the mouth of a Jew.” Who is this Jew? In about 445 BC, following the exile of Judah in Babylon and some 150 years after the exodus of Lehi from Jerusalem, a Jewish priest and scribe named Ezra collected together all of the authentic sacred writings extant in his day. He edited and correlated the various manuscripts. After his work was complete, he gathered the people together, read the record to them, expounded it for seven days, and then submitted it to them for their acceptance (Nehemiah 8:1-18; 9:3). This was the beginning of the Old Testament.

The canon was later completed by the addition of the writings of those prophets who lived during and after the exile in Babylon. The New Testament, of course, came forth from the mouth of Jesus the Jew and also out of the mouth of other prophet Jews.

“the covenants of the Lord, which he hath made unto the house of Israel”

Of all God’s spirit children, one group distinguished itself, during the conflicts incident to the war in heaven, by its exceeding faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. This group was called and foreordained to participate in a great work on earth among the children of men. These were born into this world through the literal lineage of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob or Israel; thus they are “of the house of Israel.” Elder Bruce R. McConkie taught: “Israel is an eternal people. She came into being as a chosen and separate congregation before the foundations of the earth were laid; she was a distinct and a peculiar people in the pre-existence, even as she is in this sphere. Her numbers were known before their mortal birth, and the very land surface of the earth was ‘divided to the nations [for] their inheritance . . . according to the number of the children of Israel (Deuteronomy 32:8)” (A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, 510-11).

“it is a record like unto the engravings which are upon the plates of brass, save there are not so many” The Old Testament of the Bible contains fewer writings than the brass plates of Laban. The writings of several qualified prophets, which would undoubtedly be of value to us today, are not found in the Bible. These include the writings of Zenock, Neum, and Zenos (1 Nephi 19:10), the writings of Ezias (Helaman 8:20), the Book of the Covenant (mentioned in Exodus 24:7, 2 Chronicles 34:30, and 2 Kings 23:2), the Book of the Wars of the Lord (mentioned in Numbers 21:14), the Book of Jasher (referred to in Joshua 10:13, and 2 Samuel 1:18), and the Book of the Acts of Solomon (mentioned in 1 Kings 11:41). The writings of Nathan (2 Samuel 7:2), Gad (1 Samuel 22:5, 2 Samuel 24:11), Ahijah (1 Kings 11:29; 14:2), and Iddo (2 Chronicles 13:22) are unavailable in the Bible, and they were all qualified prophets. Also missing from the Bible are The Sayings of the Seers (2 Chronicles 33:19), the Book of Jehu (2 Chronicles 20:34), the Prophecies of Enoch (Jude 1:14), and a second book by Isaiah known as the Acts of Uzziah (2 Chronicles 26:22).

verses 24-32 Here Nephi explains how the “great apostasy” from early Christianity would occur. These verses seem to identify three stages in this process (for further discussion see “The Plain and Precious Parts,” in Reexploring the Book of Mormon, ed. John W. Welch [Salt Lake City: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1992], 37-40):

1. The Gentiles would take “away from the gospel of the Lamb many parts which are plain and most precious” (verse 26). This might have been accomplished simply by altering the meaning of the things taught by the Lord without necessarily changing the words themselves.

2. The Gentiles would also take away “many covenants of the Lord” (verse 26). This step also could have been accomplished without deleting any words from the Bible.

The knowledge and benefits of the covenants of God would then be lost simply by neglecting the performance of ordinances, priesthood functions, or individual covenants.

3. Finally, “many plain and precious things” were “taken away from the book” (verse 28). In other words, the scriptures were actually altered. This was probably a natural consequence of (1) and (2). It is likely that the removal of “many plain and precious things” was less the altering of those materials included in the Bible and more the elimination of other works that might well have been included in the canon.

24 And the angel of the Lord said unto me: Thou hast beheld that the book proceeded forth from the mouth of a Jew; and when it proceeded forth from the mouth of a Jew it contained the fulness of the gospel of the Lord, of whom the twelve apostles bear record; and they bear record according to the truth which is in the Lamb of God.

verse 24 “the book proceeded forth from the mouth of a Jew” This reference to “the book” Nephi is shown is to both the Bible (Old and New Testaments), with which modern readers are familiar (verses 20, 29, and 30), and to the early scriptural records from which the Bible would be compiled (verses 24-28). The book (biblical source records) would suffer omissions at the hand of the great and abominable church “after they go forth by the hand of the twelve apostles of the Lamb” (first and second century), and the resulting book (the Bible that Nephi saw centuries later among the Gentiles) would reflect those omissions.

25 Wherefore, these things go forth from the Jews in purity unto the Gentiles, according to the truth which is in God.

verses 24-25 Apparently, the Jews did not alter the scriptures in such a way as to prevent their use by the early apostles in teaching the gospel in its purity. We will learn in verse 28 that many “plain and precious things” have been removed from the Bible. This did not occur at the hand of the Jews. Rather, the scriptures came forth from them “in purity unto the Gentiles.” Keep in mind that the term Gentiles here refers to everyone except the Jews.

As an aside, it is worth noting that the Book of Mormon does not contradict or undermine the Bible on any given common point. Rather, the Book of Mormon confirms the Bible’s basic historicity and doctrinal correctness. Clearly these two sacred volumes are not competitors for the truths of salvation but joint witnesses of it.

26 And after they go forth by the hand of the twelve apostles of the Lamb, from the Jews unto the Gentiles, thou seest the formation of that great and abominable church, which is most abominable above all other churches; for behold, they have taken away from the gospel of the Lamb many parts which are plain and most precious; and also many covenants of the Lord have they taken away.

verse 26 Not only is our Bible incomplete, as is argued in the commentary for 1 Nephi 13:23, but those books we do have in our present Bible may have been altered by the great and abominable church and perhaps other special-interest groups, so that the gospel teachings they contain are missing “many parts which are plain and most precious” and “many covenants of the Lord.” Thus, the deletions are extensive.

What are some examples of missing “plain and most precious” parts? To mention just a few, what about the identity of Jesus Christ as Jehovah in the Old Testament, a clear description of the ordinances of salvation (baptism, confirmation, sealings, and eternal marriage), the age of accountability, the premortal existence of man, the typology or symbolisms contained in the Law of Moses, a specific description of the nature and function of the Melchizedek priesthood, and a more precise elaboration of the doctrines of the Fall and the Atonement. Brother John W. Welch has added to this list: “Baptism for the dead, the use of prayer circles, and the sacrament itself underwent transformation, if not elimination. Similarly, asceticism and celibacy entered Christianity at an early stage to distort the meaning of the covenant of marriage and many passages in the Bible” (John W. Welch, “The Plain and Precious Parts,” in Reexploring the Book of Mormon: A Decade of New Research, John W. Welch, ed. (Provo, Utah: FARMS, 1992), 39. See also. John W. Welch, “Modern Revelation: A Guide to Research About the Apostasy,” in Early Christians in Disarray: Contemporary LDS Perspectives on the Christian Apostasy, ed. Noel B. Reynolds, Provo, UT: FARMS, 2005, 108-110).

“and also many covenants of the Lord have they taken away” As mentioned, another part of the apostasy from early Christianity which Nephi prophesies is the taking away of ordinances, priesthood functions, and individual covenants.

27 And all this have they done that they might pervert the right ways of the Lord, that they might blind the eyes and harden the hearts of the children of men.

verse 27 This verse suggests that the alterations and omissions which have occurred in the scriptures were not all simply accidents of translation and transmission caused by unintentional human error. Rather, some were purposeful and intentional changes made with evil intent. All the changes and omissions have made the Bible difficult to understand, thus disputations and various interpretations have resulted. The importance of these changes should perhaps be emphasized. This alteration was extensive, deliberate, and done by someone who had access to very early, even first generation, manuscripts. It was indeed an “inside job.” Joseph Smith said, “There are many things in the Bible which do not, as they now stand, accord with the revelations of the Holy Ghost to me” (TPJS, 310).

“that they might blind the eyes and harden the hearts of the children of men” See the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

28 Wherefore, thou seest that after the book hath gone forth through the hands of the great and abominable church, that there are many plain and precious things taken away from the book, which is the book of the Lamb of God.

verse 28 “there are many plain and precious things taken away from the book” It is generally held by knowledgeable LDS scholars that our present Bible has suffered more from what has not been included in it, than it has by scribal alterations and errors. Dr. Hugh Nibley has taught that one of the most important restorations of these missing “plain and precious things” has been the books of Moses and Abraham in the Pearl of Great Price.

Hugh Nibley also commented:

As many things were taken away from the Old Testament as from the New Testament. R. H. Charles who was the principal editor of the Book of Enoch [an apocryphal record] for many years, says that nearly all writers of the New Testament were familiar with it [the Book of Enoch]. He discovered that there were no less than one hundred twenty-eight quotations in the New Testament from the Book of Enoch. But the world didn't have any Book of Enoch. What had happened to it? It is quoted as a genuine production of Enoch by Jude in the New Testament and as scripture by Barnabas, one of the seven apostolic fathers. And with the early fathers and apologists it had all the weight of a canonical book. It was scripture as far as the early church was concerned. It was included in the Bible and belonged there, but there is not a trace of it there now. But when the men of the schools became the leaders of the church, accommodating to the contemporary philosophy, there were many things in Enoch that they did not like. Charles [the editor of the Book of Enoch being spoken of here] himself doesn't like them; he puts it as tastefully as possible here. He says, “But our book contained much of a questionable character.” This was the fourth century, of course. That was the time when the University of Alexandria won a complete victory over everything. That's the Athanasian Creed. The Book of Enoch fell into discredit. Under the ban of such authorities as Hilary, Jerome, and Augustine, it gradually became lost. Notice that they banned it. They would not allow people to use the Book of Enoch, and they were the authorities. It was Hilary who made more decisions than anybody else. He said that if a thing isn't found in the scripture, you can be sure that it never happened. Unless a thing is mentioned in the Bible, it didn't happen. Now that is absolute dependence on the infallibility of the scriptures (Teachings of the Pearl of Great Price, a FARMS publication, lecture one).

29 And after these plain and precious things were taken away it goeth forth unto all the nations of the Gentiles; and after it goeth forth unto all the nations of the Gentiles, yea, even across the many waters which thou hast seen with the Gentiles which have gone forth out of captivity, thou seest—because of the many plain and precious things which have been taken out of the book, which were plain unto the understanding of the children of men, according to the plainness which is in the Lamb of God—because of these things which are taken away out of the gospel of the Lamb, an exceedingly great many do stumble, yea, insomuch that Satan hath great power over them.

“across the many waters” Apparently this refers to the western hemisphere and to the European immigrants in the Americas “which have gone forth out of captivity.”

“which were plain unto the understanding of the children of men, according to the plainness which is in the Lamb of God” The reasons why our current Bible is often interpreted with different meanings have already been described. There have obviously been serious difficulties in precisely defining the doctrine of the Church of Jesus Christ when the Bible is used as the primary resource. There is a distressing ambiguity and lack of “plainness” in our Bible as regards some points of doctrine. As a result, a dangerous apostate concept has grown up and flourished among some students of the scriptures. These students have come to believe that the scriptures were not intended by God to provide plain and simple and absolute explanations. Rather they were meant to be merely “ambiguous catalysts” to stimulate our thinking about spiritual things in a general way. They feel each individual reading the scriptures should seek his own individual interpretations. Too much concreteness or clear explanation might restrict an individual’s ability to perceive his own personal and intimate interpretations.

Carried to its extreme, this ridiculous concept of scripture may be easily made to sound illogical and even ludicrous. According to the “ambiguous catalyst” theory, for example, an individual who desires to study the scripture would need no prior preparation. He would require no knowledge of the historical or geographic or linguistic aspects of the world. Nor would he need to know anything about the writings of the ancient prophets. He would not even have to study what other authorities have had to say about certain scriptures. For him a study and interpretation of the scripture is a purely individual endeavor. If he should come to a verse of scripture, written by the prophet Isaiah, for example, that makes no sense to him at all and means little more than a “word salad,” that’s perfectly all right. He shouldn’t be concerned. If the Lord wanted to reveal any meaning to him from that group of unintelligible words, then he would.

Perhaps it’s unfair to state this philosophy of scripture in its extreme in order to expose its faults, since there can be no denying that individual revelation is often received in response to reading scripture. It seems to me, though, that it behooves each of us who would study the standard works to prepare ourselves as best we can. The Book of Mormon is not a divination tool. Learning something of the life and historical setting of the prophet Isaiah, for example, can be invaluable in understanding his writings. It may also be helpful to read the commentary of those scholars who have made a study of the life and times and language of Isaiah.

Another reason the “ambiguous catalyst” theory is potentially hazardous is that the unprepared individual may never become emotionally attached to the scriptures since he will always regard the study of them as more of an exercise in abstraction. They cease to become words written by a real feeling and thinking human being that he knows and loves.

I cannot refrain from recounting an instructive anecdote told by Robert J. Matthews. His account illustrates an important flaw in the apostate view of scripture I have referred to above as the “ambiguous catalyst” perspective.

In March 1978, a prominent Lutheran minister participated in a symposium on the Brigham Young University campus. He had accepted the task of comparing the Savior’s sermon in 3 Nephi with the Sermon on the Mount found in the book of Matthew. By the tools and procedures of textual criticism, he discovered several interesting differences between these two sermons. He gave an astute and perceptive analysis. He said that compared to the New Testament, 3 Nephi is much clearer, the Savior’s teachings are more precise; they are stronger, bolder, and offer considerably more information than can be gained from the New Testament. He found also that the personality of Jesus is more commanding in 3 Nephi than in the New Testament. He noted that in the New Testament Jesus speaks as a teacher, but in 3 Nephi he speaks as a God.

As I listened, I thought it was remarkable that he had recognized these things, and I supposed that he was speaking with favor toward the Nephite account. However, as he continued, he tried to discredit the Book of Mormon by saying that new religions and cults always have an insatiable thirst for answers and for knowledge, whereas spiritual maturity brings a more ascetic view. He preferred the New Testament to 3 Nephi because it was not so definitive and allowed him more choice of interpretation. He acknowledged that the New Testament was less clear, and less dramatic, but felt that was the beauty of it. It did not seem to occur to him that the New Testament had suffered at the hands of copyists, translators, and textual critics and so was now only a shadow of its former self (“Jesus the Savior in 3 Nephi” in The Book of Mormon: 3 Nephi 9-30, This is My Gospel, 34-5).

It is heartening to learn in verse 29 that God intended for his scriptures to be easily understood by those who study them.

30 Nevertheless, thou beholdest that the Gentiles who have gone forth out of captivity, and have been lifted up by the power of God above all other nations, upon the face of the land which is choice above all other lands, which is the land that the Lord God hath covenanted with thy father that his seed should have for the land of their inheritance; wherefore, thou seest that the Lord God will not suffer that the Gentiles will utterly destroy the mixture of thy seed, which are among thy brethren.

31 Neither will he suffer that the Gentiles shall destroy the seed of thy brethren.

verses 30-31 Here is another reference to the western hemisphere as a covenant land. Even though the Gentiles will scatter and abuse the descendants of the Book of Mormon peoples, the Lord will never allow those peoples to become extinct.

32 Neither will the Lord God suffer that the Gentiles shall forever remain in that awful state of blindness, which thou beholdest they are in, because of the plain and most precious parts of the gospel of the Lamb which have been kept back by that abominable church, whose formation thou hast seen.

verse 32 Here is an allusion to the restoration of the gospel and the coming forth of the Book of Mormon and other modern-day scripture. Without this restoration, those “Gentiles” who will be inspired to come to this land, which is choice above all other lands, will remain in an “awful state of blindness.”

33 Wherefore saith the Lamb of God: I will be merciful unto the Gentiles, unto the visiting of the remnant of the house of Israel in great judgment.

verse 33 In this verse the Gentiles are those who will be inspired to come to this choice land and thus escape spiritual captivity, eventually to receive the restored gospel. The “remnant of the house of Israel” refers to the descendants of the Nephite / Lamanite people who will inhabit this land. The Lord’s allowing the Gentiles to overpower the remnant of the house of Israel as the Gentiles become established in this land is part of the great judgment brought by the Lord on the heads of the descendants of Lehi. The Lord will be merciful unto the “Gentiles” in the great Gentile nation by (1) visiting the native American Israelites with his judgment, thus allowing the Gentiles to smite them, and by (2) restoring the gospel among those Gentiles.

34 And it came to pass that the angel of the Lord spake unto me, saying: Behold, saith the Lamb of God, after I have visited the remnant of the house of Israel—and this remnant of whom I speak is the seed of thy father—wherefore, after I have visited them in judgment, and smitten them by the hand of the Gentiles, and after the Gentiles do stumble exceedingly, because of the most plain and precious parts of the gospel of the Lamb which have been kept back by that abominable church, which is the mother of harlots, saith the Lamb—I will be merciful unto the Gentiles in that day, insomuch that I will bring forth unto them, in mine own power, much of my gospel, which shall be plain and precious, saith the Lamb.

verse 34 “Behold, saith the Lamb of God” The prophecy contain in this verse is uttered by the “Lamb of God” who is, of course, Jehovah or Jesus Christ. Critics of the Book of Mormon may well consider this phrase, written nearly six hundred years before Christ, to be anachronistic. Hugh Nibley has written: “At the end of the last century scholars were mystified to find that a demotic [ancient Egyptian] prophecy datable to the time of Bochoris (718-712 BC), in which coming destructions were predicted with the promise of a Messiah to follow, was put into the mouth of ‘the Lamb.’ Greek sources inform us that this prophecy enjoyed very great circulation in ancient times. The strange wording of Lehi’s great prophecy, uttered by ‘the Lamb’ (1 Nephi 13:34), is thus seen to be no anachronism, taking from Hellenistic or Christian times, as was once maintained” (Lehi in the Desert, 18). We may, of course, defend Nephi’s use of the term “Lamb of God” in another way as well. We will later (Jacob 4:4) learn that “all the holy prophets,” beginning with Adam, have known of the coming Christ and his atoning sacrifice.

The reader is reminded to keep in mind that many of the immigrating “Gentiles” that will inhabit this great Gentile nation carry the blood of Israel. Many of our generation, in our patriarchal blessings for example, have been told that they have descended from ancient Joseph through his son Ephraim. Thus an individual may be Israelite by birth but a “Gentile” by culture.

35 For, behold, saith the Lamb: I will manifest myself unto thy seed, that they shall write many things which I shall minister unto them, which shall be plain and precious; and after thy seed shall be destroyed, and dwindle in unbelief, and also the seed of thy brethren, behold, these things shall be hid up, to come forth unto the Gentiles, by the gift and power of the Lamb.

verse 35 This verse has reference to the Book of Mormon. The prophet writers of the Book of Mormon “shall write many things which [the Lord] shall minister unto them,” and these writings shall be recorded on plates which shall be “hid up” for a time before coming forth to the Gentiles.

36 And in them shall be written my gospel, saith the Lamb, and my rock and my salvation.

verse 36 “my rock” When the word rock is used symbolically in the scriptures, the most common meanings include (1) the Lord himself (Deuteronomy 32:13; Psalm 71:3; 1 Corinthians 10:4; 2 Nephi 9:45), (2) revelation (Matthew 16:18; TPJS, 274), or (3) the gospel itself (D&C 11:24). The latter meaning seems most likely to apply here.

37 And blessed are they who shall seek to bring forth my Zion at that day, for they shall have the gift and the power of the Holy Ghost; and if they endure unto the end they shall be lifted up at the last day, and shall be saved in the everlasting

verse 37 “Zion” This is the first time Zion has been mentioned in the Book of Mormon text. Let us briefly review the concept of Zion. Literally, Zion is the kingdom of God upon the earth, a society that governs itself by celestial principles. Figuratively, Zion is that glorious city or land which will be established in the latter days some time prior to the Lord’s second coming. It will serve as a place of gathering and refuge to those who accept the gospel of Jesus Christ. The church members who establish and live in Zion will be sanctified. They will live and be governed by the principles of the celestial law. Zion will be the abode of Jesus as he administers the government of the earth during the Millennium. It will not be a secret place, rather all will know of it, even those who do not dwell there. Zion is described in scripture as “Fair as the sun, clear as the moon, and . . . terrible unto all nations; [such] that the kingdoms of this world [will be] constrained to acknowledge that the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ” (D&C 105:31-32).

In the latter days, two places will be called the center places of Zion. The first is the city of Jerusalem itself which will be restored to its holy position of grandeur and beauty. It will serve as a gathering place for the tribe of Judah. The second is the New Jerusalem to be built upon the western hemisphere with its center in Jackson County, Missouri. To Zion on the western hemisphere will gather the rest of Israel and those Gentiles without the house of Israel who accept the gospel and are “adopted” into the house of Israel.

Zion is not limited just to the city of Jerusalem and Jackson County, Missouri. In the latter days, wherever there are saints of God who have embraced the restored gospel, there is Zion.

Zion may also be something other than a place. Zion may also be an attitude of acceptance of the gospel, a spirit of obedience, a purity of heart. Just as the title Babylon may refer in a specific way to an ancient city or in a general way to the evil which exists in the world, so may the word Zion represent either a city or label used to describe all that is truly righteous, wholesome, and in tune with the Spirit of the Lord and his eternal plan.

Those who assist in the cause of Zion in the latter days (“at that day”) will be exalted (“saved”). For a more complete discussion of the concept of Zion, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 27, Zion.

“whoso shall publish peace” To “publish peace [and] tidings of great joy,” of course is to preach the gospel. Isaiah saw the missionaries of the latter days and praised them in somewhat peculiar terms. He said that they will have “beautiful [feet] upon the mountains” (Isaiah 52:7). This verse is a partial quotation of Isaiah 52:7. This same idea and wording will be used elsewhere in the Book of Mormon (Mosiah 12:21; 15:15-18; 3 Nephi 20:40). The prophet Abinadi will provide a more precise definition of those who “publish peace” in Mosiah 15:15. They are all the prophets since the world began who have prophesied of the coming of the Lord.

38 And it came to pass that I beheld the remnant of the seed of my brethren, and also the book of the Lamb of God, which had proceeded forth from the mouth of the Jew, that it came forth from the Gentiles unto the remnant of the seed of my brethren.

verse 38 “the book of the Lamb of God” Again, this is the Bible. The white settlers of the Americas early on made the Bible available to the native American Indians.

39 And after it had come forth unto them I beheld other books, which came forth by the power of the Lamb, from the Gentiles unto them, unto the convincing of the Gentiles and the remnant of the seed of my brethren, and also the Jews who were scattered upon all the face of the earth, that the records of the prophets and of the twelve apostles of the Lamb are true.

verse 39 What are the “other books” which Nephi sees? It seems likely that they are “latter-day” scriptural records such as the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, the Pearl of Great Price, and the Joseph Smith Translation of the Bible. A valid function of these scriptures is to bear witness of the truth of the Bible—“the records of the prophets and of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.”

40 And the angel spake unto me, saying: These last records, which thou hast seen among the Gentiles, shall establish the truth of the first, which are of the twelve apostles of the Lamb, and shall make known the plain and precious things which have been taken away from them; and shall make known to all kindreds, tongues, and people, that the Lamb of God is the Son of the Eternal Father, and the Savior of the world; and that all men must come unto him, or they cannot be saved.

verse 40 Here the Bible is referred to in the plural as “the first, which are of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.” This plural reference could refer to the books of the Bible or the many spiritual truths contained therein. The other latter-day standard works are referred to as “these last records.” Not only will the more modern day scriptures bear witness of the Bible, but they will also restore many truths which have been lost from the Bible.

“the Lamb of God is the Son of the Eternal Father” The 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon rendered this phrase “the Lamb of God is the Eternal Father.” See the commentary for 1 Nephi 11:18 and 1 Nephi 11:21.

“saved” Again, it is not inappropriate to interpret this word as meaning exalted. However, we know that no individual will be saved in any kingdom of glory, including the terrestrial and telestial, lest they “come unto” Christ.

41 And they must come according to the words which shall be established by the mouth of the Lamb; and the words of the Lamb shall be made known in the records of thy seed, as well as in the records of the twelve apostles of the Lamb; wherefore they both shall be established in one; for there is one God and one Shepherd over all the earth.

verse 41 The Book of Mormon and the Bible must be used together as complementary records. Together they describe the way in which all men must come unto the Lord to be saved.

42 And the time cometh that he shall manifest himself unto all nations, both unto the Jews and also unto the Gentiles; and after he has manifested himself unto the Jews and also unto the Gentiles, then he shall manifest himself unto the Gentiles and also unto the Jews, and the last shall be first, and the first shall be last.

verse 42 There is a timetable established for the dissemination of the gospel. This verse summarizes that timetable. At the time of Christ’s mortal ministry, the gospel was preached to the house of Israel, or to “the Jews” (Matthew 15:24). Some years later the apostles took the gospel to the Gentiles (Acts 10-11). This sequence is, in a way, reversed in this final dispensation. In 1830 the Church was first established among people of a “great Gentile nation.” As has been often stressed, most of those designated as Gentiles in the Book of Mormon are actually members of the house of Israel by lineal descent. They are “Gentiles” largely in that they are not Jews and they are citizens of the great Gentile nation. From its establishment among these “Gentiles,” the gospel will then be taken to the house of Israel, including the Jews. Thus “the last [the Gentiles] shall be first [to receive the gospel in this final dispensation], and the first [those of the house of Israel] shall be last [to hear the gospel in this final dispensation].”

There is yet another phase of this back-and-forth pattern. In the latter days the gospel will be restored to the Gentile-Israelites, mostly of the tribe of Joseph through Ephraim, in the great Gentile nation. The period after the restoration is referred to as the “times of the Gentiles.” During this period the Gentile missionaries—actually missionaries of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints—will carry the gospel to the nations of the world and will gather Israel to the stakes of Zion. Those gathered will include both Israelites by blood and non-Israelites. The latter, after accepting the gospel, will be assimilated into the house of Israel by adoption. They thus become the Lord’s people.

Just prior to the Millennium there will be a major apostasy of the Gentiles. This will include inhabitants of the great Gentile nation who have not accepted the gospel and probably some “Gentiles” who have joined the Church but who have not lived up fully to their covenants. After the Lord’s second coming, the “times of the Gentiles will be fulfilled,” and the gospel will be “taken from the Gentiles” and given back to its original stewards, the house of Israel. This prophesied change of stewardship is more symbolic than practically significant, since all who accept the gospel and endure in it are covenant Israelites in every sense of the word, though they might have previously been classified as Gentiles by virtue of their citizenship in the great Gentile nation. Their allegiance to Christ’s gospel is the sole determinant of whether or not they are Israelites by covenant. Their blood lineage matters little if they reject the gospel. At the beginning of the Millennium, all Gentile governments will end, the day of the Israelite will begin, and Jesus Christ will reign personally upon the earth.

1 Nephi 14:10 There are save two churches only—the church of the Lamb of God and the church of the devil.

1 And it shall come to pass, that if the Gentiles shall hearken unto the Lamb of God in that day that he shall manifest himself unto them in word, and also in power, in very deed, unto the taking away of their stumbling blocks—

2 And harden not their hearts against the Lamb of God, they shall be numbered among the seed of thy father; yea, they shall be numbered among the house of Israel; and they shall be a blessed people upon the promised land forever; they shall be no more brought down into captivity; and the house of Israel shall no more be confounded.

verses 1-2 Here is a great promise to those inhabitants of the great Gentile nation in this final dispensation. Those who accept the gospel will be restored to their rightful place as a covenant people in the house of Israel if they are of the blood of Israel. This will include not only those remnants of Book of Mormon peoples who still exist, but also those immigrants who have entered the great Gentile nation who are also, by blood, of the house of Israel. Those who accept the gospel who are not of the house of Israel by blood will also be admitted into the covenant house of Israel by adoption. They will then in every sense become part of the covenant people (see the commentary on the concepts of covenant making and a covenant people in the introductory commentary for Alma 43; see also the commentary for 2 Nephi 30:1-2).

“stumbling blocks” The gospel message itself is replete with stumbling blocks for those who are unrepentant and lack the Spirit. Paul said: “We preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling block, and unto the Greeks foolishness” (1 Corinthians 1:23). It is probably not this type of stumbling block being referred to here, however. Rather, this verse seems to refer to the stumbling blocks of ignorance which were removed by restoration of the gospel.

“they shall be numbered among the seed of thy father” This phrase, which is explained in the phrase that follows it in the text, simply means that they shall be numbered among the house of Israel.

Let us not fall into the trap of believing that all of the native American Indian peoples are descendants of the house of Israel. They more likely have complex heterogeneous origins. For a discussion of this issue, see the supplemental article, Book of Mormon Myths.

“they shall be a blessed people upon the promised land forever” Does this mean that the Americas will continue to be a promised land for the house of Israel during the Millennium? And what about the time after the world is celestialized?

“they shall be no more brought down into captivity” This is a promise with far reaching implications. The Nephite land of promise was and is a covenant land. If those who inhabit it remain faithful to the gospel, they will never again be captured and live in servitude.

“the house of Israel shall no more be confounded” The word “confounded” here means to be scattered or thrown into disorder. Scattering occurs only because of apostasy—gathering only through repentance. “Confounded” may also mean mixed or mingled in with a group so that the original form or identity cannot be distinguished.

3 And that great pit, which hath been digged for them by that great and abominable church, which was founded by the devil and his children, that he might lead away the souls of men down to hell—yea, that great pit which hath been digged for the destruction of men shall be filled by those who digged it, unto their utter destruction, saith the Lamb of God; not the destruction of the soul, save it be the casting of it into that hell which hath no end.

verse 3 “yea, that great pit which hath been digged for the destruction of men shall be filled by those who digged it” This poignant phrase speaks, figuratively of course, for itself and is worth memorizing and pondering! The great and abominable entity here might well be either the specific “church among churches” described in 1 Nephi 13 or the more generic or universal application of the term used more commonly in this chapter (see the commentary for verses 9-17 below).

Today, of course, we would use the word dug rather than digged. I would presume that “digged” was an appropriate preterit or past participle form in Early Modern English, the version of English in which Joseph was given the translation. “Digged” was an appropriate tense in Webster’s 1828 Dictionary of the English language.

“utter destruction” This expression is necessarily somewhat figurative or hyperbolic since our doctrine contains no provision for the annihilation of any intelligence and its spirit. This fact is explained in the phrase which completes this verse.

“not the destruction of the soul” See the commentary for 1 Nephi 15:35. The word “soul” here means spirit of man. The spirit of man cannot be destroyed (TPJS, 352-54).

“that hell which hath no end” The only hell we are aware of that literally has no end is outer darkness, where Satan and his angels will live forever. The spirit prison is also a “hell.” This latter definition of hell is more applicable here in this verse and in the following verse.

Is the world of spirits really a “hell which hath no end”? In general, the Book of Mormon speaks of the life hereafter in simplistic terms—either endless exaltation or endless perdition. The Book of Mormon does not contain the concept of “multiple heavens” or the three degrees of salvation. For a discussion of the incomplete doctrine of the post-mortal world contained in the Book of Mormon, see “Post-Mortal Life and the Book of Mormon” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 13, The Spirit World.

4 For behold, this is according to the captivity of the devil, and also according to the justice of God, upon all those who will work wickedness and abomination before him.

verse 4 “according to the captivity of the devil” Though Satan delights in the eventual spiritual death of those who reject the gospel of Jesus Christ, he actually had no role in creating that captivity. Generally, we tend also give him too much credit for causing that captivity. It is man himself who incessantly gives in to his natural self and refuses to instead deny himself and obey the Lord’s commands. Mankind is responsible for his own eventual captivity.

“according to the justice of God” Whatever fate befalls a man for eternity, we can be assured that it will be consummately fair and just, as it is “according to the justice of God.” See a discussion of the law of justice in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 12, The Law of Justice.

5 And it came to pass that the angel spake unto me, Nephi, saying: Thou hast beheld that if the Gentiles repent it shall be well with them; and thou also knowest concerning the covenants of the Lord unto the house of Israel; and thou also hast heard that whoso repenteth not must perish.

verse 5 “the covenants of the Lord unto the house of Israel” These covenants are reviewed in the commentary for verse 8 of this chapter.

6 Therefore, wo be unto the Gentiles if it so be that they harden their hearts against the Lamb of God.

7 For the time cometh, saith the Lamb of God, that I will work a great and a marvelous work among the children of men; a work which shall be everlasting, either on the one hand or on the other—either to the convincing of them unto peace and life eternal, or unto the deliverance of them to the hardness of their hearts and the blindness of their minds unto their being brought down into captivity, and also into destruction, both temporally and spiritually, according to the captivity of the devil, of which I have spoken.

verse 7 “a great and marvelous work among the children of men” This phrase has its origin in Isaiah 29:13-14 and, of course, has reference to the restoration of the gospel in the latter days. The wording of Isaiah 29:13-14 is also used in 2 Nephi 27:25-26.

This verse makes it clear that the gospel will not only be a blessing to those who accept it, but a witness against those who reject it.

“the deliverance of them to the hardness of their hearts and the blindness of their minds unto their being brought down into captivity” This means they will be delivered to the condition of eternal spiritual death by their recalcitrance—their reluctance to accept and abide by the Lord’s commandments.

“destruction, both temporally and spiritually” The word “temporally” is placed here in apposition to the word “spiritually” and implies a destruction of that part of man which is not spiritual—his body. Our doctrine does not actually include any type of figurative eternal destruction of the body since all will be resurrected and live forever in an eternally enduring body. What type of temporal destruction, then, is spoken of here? Perhaps this could be a reference to the great destructive cleansing of the earth prior to the Lord’s second coming. Or, perhaps this phrase simply refers to the erosive effect of sinful living on the body.

verses 5-7 Those who “perish,” those who are delivered “to the hardness of their hearts and the blindness of their minds,” those who are “brought down into captivity,” and those subject to “destruction” do not necessarily suffer eternal destruction and live with Satan as sons of perdition. Rather they all die a spiritual death and fail to return to God’s presence in the celestial kingdom. See the discussion of the phrase, “that hell which hath no end” in the commentary for verse 3 of this chapter. See also the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

8 And it came to pass that when the angel had spoken these words, he said unto me: Rememberest thou the covenants of the Father unto the house of Israel? I said unto him, Yea.

verse 8 “the covenants of the Father unto the house of Israel” Let us review these covenants. These covenants, as a group, are often referred to as the Abrahamic covenant as it was first made between father Abraham and the Lord. The Abrahamic covenant may be said to consist of four main provisions—four main promises of the Lord to those of Abraham’s seed who “hearken to my voice”—to those who obey the Lord’s commands. Abraham received from the Lord the gospel, baptism, the higher priesthood, and the ordinance of celestial marriage. He agreed to abide by the gospel law and honor his priesthood, or, as the Lord told Abraham elsewhere, “Walk before me, and be thou perfect” (Genesis 17:1). The Lord in turn made eternally binding promises to Abraham. They include:

1. Abraham would be blessed to become the “father of many nations” (Genesis 17:19), and his posterity would be exceedingly numerous—even “as the stars of the heaven and as the sand which is upon the seashore (Genesis 17:2; 22:17-18; Abraham 2:9). Abraham's seed would grow and continue forever.

2. Abraham and his posterity were blessed with certain lands as an eternal inheritance (Abraham 2:6; cf. Genesis 12:7; 13:15; 15:9-14). Initially this included the land of Canaan (Genesis 17:8) extending from the Nile River to the Euphrates (Genesis 15:18).

3. Abraham and his descendants would be blessed to have a right to the priesthood and enjoy its blessings (Abraham 1:18; 2:11).

4. Abraham's posterity would prove to be a blessing to all families of the earth (Genesis 12:3; Abraham 2:9-11). They would do this by bearing the priesthood and by having the right and responsibility to preach the gospel to all the world. Thus will every individual and every family have the opportunity, through the posterity of Abraham, to enjoy the blessings of the gospel, which eventually include the "blessings of salvation, even of life eternal"—the blessing of salvation and exaltation (Abraham 2:9-11).

These covenants were renewed with Isaac (Genesis 26:1-4, 24) and again with Jacob (Genesis 28; 35:9-13; 48:3-4). The restoration of the fulness of the gospel through the prophet Joseph Smith is in fact the restoration of the Abrahamic covenant. Through this restoration, God has renewed for the Latter-day Saints all he promised to the former-day Saints, including his covenants and his gospel, a "mighty nation among the Gentiles," and that in this dispensation of the fulness of times the Father will "make bare his arm in the eyes of the nations." That is, he will demonstrate his power to gather his children throughout the earth.

verses 9-17 The phrases "the whore of all the earth . . . the great mother of abominations . . . the mother of harlots" in these verses refer to the generic or universal definition of the "great and abominable church" as spoken of in the introductory discussion for 1 Nephi 13 above. Certainly, an application of these verses to this final dispensation is likely.

9 And it came to pass that he said unto me: Look, and behold that great and abominable church, which is the mother of abominations, whose founder is the devil.

10 And he said unto me: Behold there are save two churches only; the one is the church of the Lamb of God, and the other is the church of the devil; wherefore, whoso belongeth not to the church of the Lamb of God belongeth to that great church, which is the mother of abominations; and she is the whore of all the earth.

verse 10 Again, see the introductory commentary for 1 Nephi 13.

Individual orientation to the Church of the Lamb or to the great and abominable church is not by blood lineage or by being a "member of record," but by loyalty. Just as there are Latter-day Saints who belong to the great and abominable church because of their loyalty to their natural, material self, so are there members of other churches who belong to the Lamb because of their loyalty to him and his principles. Membership is based more on who has your heart than who has your records. Hence, it is unwise and inaccurate to point to any particular contemporary church or political system as the great and abominable church.

11 And it came to pass that I looked and beheld the whore of all the earth, and she sat upon many waters; and she had dominion over all the earth, among all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people.

verse 11 “the whore of all the earth . . . sat upon many waters” This expression seems to have originated in Jeremiah 51:13. It is alternatively translated, “dwelt beside many waters.” Jeremiah seemed to have in mind the city of Babylon, the symbol of all wickedness, which was located beside the Tigris River. In the context of this verse, however, it seems appropriate to interpret it as implying that the influences of the “great whore”—the great and abominable church—is located in all countries throughout the world.

12 And it came to pass that I beheld the church of the Lamb of God, and its numbers were few, because of the wickedness and abominations of the whore who sat upon many waters; nevertheless, I beheld that the church of the Lamb, who were the saints of God, were also upon all the face of the earth; and their dominions upon the face of the earth were small, because of the wickedness of the great whore whom I saw.

13 And it came to pass that I beheld that the great mother of abominations did gather together multitudes upon the face of all the earth, among all the nations of the Gentiles, to fight against the Lamb of God.

verse 13 “to fight against the Lamb of God” This war is likely not one that will be fought with bombs and artillery, but rather it will be a battle for the hearts of men using testimony and witnessing versus persecution and propaganda.

14 And it came to pass that I, Nephi, beheld the power of the Lamb of God, that it descended upon the saints of the church of the Lamb, and upon the covenant people of the Lord, who were scattered upon all the face of the earth; and they were armed with righteousness and with the power of God in great glory.

verse 14 “and they were armed with righteousness” “They” refers to both the “saints of the church of the Lamb” and also to “the covenant people of the Lord, who were scattered upon all the face of the earth.” Because they are “armed” with the gospel and the priesthood, they will withstand the great propaganda wars and physical destructions of the latter days prior to the Lord’s second coming.

“with the power of God in great glory” The Lord’s people are also armed with God’s power. This could refer to the priesthood or also to the power provided all members of the Lord’s Church as they keep their temple covenants. See the “Endowment of Power” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 18, The Temple.

15 And it came to pass that I beheld that the wrath of God was poured out upon that great and abominable church, insomuch that there were wars and rumors of wars among all the nations and kindreds of the earth.

16 And as there began to be wars and rumors of wars among all the nations which belonged to the mother of abominations, the angel spake unto me, saying: Behold, the wrath of God is upon the mother of harlots; and behold, thou seest all these things—verses 15-16 These two verses clearly state that the time will come when the wrath of God will be poured out upon the great and abominable entity in the form of “wars and rumors of wars.” Those people who are a part of the great and abominable church—those whose lives and purposes are consumed with worldliness—will begin to make war on one another. And this war will be, in a way, a manifestation of God’s wrath or judgment upon them.

An interesting question might here be raised for your consideration: Would God ever start a war? Did God, for example, inspire the Assyrians to attack and carry off captive the ten tribes of Israel in the Kingdom of Israel between 732 and 722 BC? Did the Lord encourage the Babylonians to overcome the rebellious Israelites in Judah in 587 BC? Some might argue that certainly the Lord would never start something as inherently evil as a war. After all, Moroni 7:12 states, “Wherefore, all things which are good cometh of God; and that which is evil cometh of the devil.” The Lord may not start a war, but he might decide not to intervene when men on the earth commence an attack on one another motivated by their materialistic and selfish desires. Another might argue the contrary view: Of course the Lord had Assyria capture the northern tribes, and obviously it was his will that Babylon punish the people of Judah. From our limited mortal perspective, who are we to judge the Lord’s actions in this regard?

17 And when the day cometh that the wrath of God is poured out upon the mother of harlots, which is the great and abominable church of all the earth, whose founder is the devil, then, at that day, the work of the Father shall commence, in preparing the way for the fulfilling of his covenants, which he hath made to his people who are of the house of Israel.

verse 17 “then, at that day, the work of the Father shall commence” The “work of the Father” is the missionary effort of the latter-day Church of Jesus Christ—the gathering of Israel. This work commenced and has continued during a time of great conflict including the Civil War in the United States and two major world wars. The final defeat of the great and abominable church will not occur until the great final cleansing of the earth just prior to the Lord's second coming. While the Lord's missionary work and gathering has commenced prior to the great final cleansing of the earth, following this great destruction it will greatly accelerate in speed and efficiency as it continues into the Millennium (see also 2 Nephi 30:7-15; 3 Nephi 21:24-28).

“in preparing the way for the fulfilling of his covenants, which he hath made to his people who are of the house of Israel” For a review of those covenants see the commentary for verse 8 of this chapter.

18 And it came to pass that the angel spake unto me, saying: Look!

19 And I looked and beheld a man, and he was dressed in a white robe.

verse 19 It is apparent from subsequent verses in chapter 14 (20-22, 27) that the “man . . . in a white robe” is John the Revelator. Here, some six hundred years before Christ, Nephi sees John and his writings—centuries before they were written! Sectarian scholars of the Bible generally accept the rule that there is no such thing as true prophecy—a prophet cannot actually see beyond his own historical horizon. They would have difficulty in accepting this verse. We, in the Church, do gratefully accept the literal reality of prophecy.

20 And the angel said unto me: Behold one of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.

21 Behold, he shall see and write the remainder of these things; yea, and also many things which have been.

verse 21 Here the angel is telling Nephi that John the Revelator will also see and write about the things Nephi will yet see in his vision and also many of those things Nephi has already seen.

22 And he shall also write concerning the end of the world.

23 Wherefore, the things which he shall write are just and true; and behold they are written in the book which thou beheld proceeding out of the mouth of the Jew; and at the time they proceeded out of the mouth of the Jew, or, at the time the book proceeded out of the mouth of the Jew, the things which were written were plain and pure, and most precious and easy to the understanding of all men.

verse 23 John's writings will be found in the Bible.

“easy to the understanding of all men” It is humbling to consider the fact that the angel considered the writings of John the Revelator to be “easy” to understand. How many of us even plan to one day make a serious attempt to understand the book of Revelation?

24 And behold, the things which this apostle of the Lamb shall write are many things which thou hast seen; and behold, the remainder shalt thou see.

25 But the things which thou shalt see hereafter thou shalt not write; for the Lord God hath ordained the apostle of the Lamb of God that he should write them.

verses 24-25 John's calling was to write those things which Nephi had already seen and recorded and those things which Nephi would yet see in vision and write into his record. Nephi would also see things of which he was asked not to write. John would also write of these latter things.

26 And also others who have been, to them hath he shown all things, and they have written them; and they are sealed up to come forth in their purity, according to the truth which is in the Lamb, in the own due time of the Lord, unto the house of Israel.

verse 26 “also others who have been, to them hath he shown all things” Nephi is a member of the elect fellowship of those who have seen the panoramic vision of the earth from its beginning to its end. Others in this fellowship include Adam, Enoch, Noah, the brother of Jared, Abraham, Moses, and Joseph Smith. Apparently, there are many wonderful features and aspects of this vision that have been written but never made available for mankind. At some future date when man is prepared to receive them, perhaps during the Millennium, these will be published. We know that one such account was Moroni's abridgment of the vision of the brother of Jared which was contained on the plates of Mormon, but that part of the plates of Mormon was sealed and could not be translated by Joseph Smith.

Elder Bruce R. McConkie wrote of additional scripture yet to be sent forth to earth by the Lord:

We have not received, by any means, all of the word of the Lord. I think we have received most of the word of the Lord that is required until the second coming. The Lord has given all that people in the world have the spiritual capacity to receive at this time. There is going to be another great dispensation—that is, another great period of enlightenment—when he comes. At that time, he will reveal all things, such as the sealed portion of the Book of Mormon. But he will not reveal the sealed portion of the Book of Mormon now, or let us publish it to the world because what it contains is so far beyond the spiritual capacity of men that it would drive people away from the truth rather than lead them to the truth. Actually, it is an act of mercy for the Lord to limit, to a particular people, the amount of revelation they receive.

We are now in a glorious dispensation in which we have received substantially all of the revelations we are able to bear; it is true, however, that if we were able to unite and have faith, we would get more. That is one of the things that was involved in 1978 when President Kimball received the revelation that the gospel and all of its blessings (the priesthood and the ordinances of the house of the Lord) were now to go to those of every race and kindred and tongue without any reservation except that people live in righteousness and be worthy to receive what is offered to them. That new revelation came in large measure because the prophet of God and those associated with him united in faith and in prayer and in desire, and sought for an answer from the Lord. There are added revelations we could receive, and I hope we will receive, as we manage to get in tune with the Spirit. But the great reservoir of revelation for our dispensation—meaning the things that we need to know to govern our conduct in order to gain an eternal life—these things have already been given. And there will not be great added reservoirs of substantive revelation that will come before the second coming because of the wickedness of the world. Some of that wickedness spills over and prevails among the Latter-day Saints. But eventually, there will be a day of great added revelation (Sperry Symposium Classics, The Doctrine and Covenants, 44).

27 And I, Nephi, heard and bear record, that the name of the apostle of the Lamb was John, according to the word of the angel.

28 And behold, I, Nephi, am forbidden that I should write the remainder of the things which I saw and heard; wherefore the things which I have written sufficeth me; and I have written but a small part of the things which I saw.

29 And I bear record that I saw the things which my father saw, and the angel of the Lord did make them known unto me.

30 And now I make an end of speaking concerning the things which I saw while I was carried away in the spirit; and if all the things which I saw are not written, the things which I have written are true. And thus it is. Amen.

1 Nephi 15:23-24 Laman and Lemuel's question to Nephi: What meaneth the rod of iron?

1 Nephi 15:34 Nephi's teaching that no unclean thing can enter the kingdom of God.

1 And it came to pass that after I, Nephi, had been carried away in the spirit, and seen all these things, I returned to the tent of my father.

2 And it came to pass that I beheld my brethren, and they were disputing one with another concerning the things which my father had spoken unto them.

3 For he truly spake many great things unto them, which were hard to be understood, save a man should inquire of the Lord; and they being hard in their hearts, therefore they did not look unto the Lord as they ought.

verse 3 We are here reminded of the profound truth that the intellect of a man by itself, however gifted and trained that man may be, cannot perceive and comprehend spiritual truths. When we are dealing with the things of the Spirit, we cannot weigh and evaluate and judge and handle them in a laboratory, unless we are speaking of a spiritual laboratory. These truths can only be understood through the direct intervention of the Holy Spirit (1 Corinthians 2:14). The Holy Spirit favors a man with this blessing—that of being able to understand spiritual truths—only when he is receptive to the promptings of the Spirit. A man is receptive only when he is humble, prayerful, and obedient. It is likely that Nephi's brothers were not lacking in intelligence and logic. But they obviously did not qualify for the Spirit's promptings.

4 And now I, Nephi, was grieved because of the hardness of their hearts, and also, because of the things which I had seen, and knew they must unavoidably come to pass because of the great wickedness of the children of men.

verse 4 “hardness of their hearts” See the discussion of this phrase in the commentaries for 1 Nephi 2:18 and Alma 10:6.

5 And it came to pass that I was overcome because of my afflictions, for I considered that mine afflictions were great above all, because of the destruction of my people, for I had beheld their fall.

verses 4-5 “I, Nephi, was grieved” “I was overcome because of my afflictions” “I considered that mine afflictions were great above all” We have learned from other prophets that the experience of having a vision is physically enervating (Moses 1:10, JS-H 1:20). These verses suggest that Nephi's vision had the same effect on him. He was obviously shaken emotionally to have been a witness to the eventual apostasy, destruction, and scattering of his people.

6 And it came to pass that after I had received strength I spake unto my brethren, desiring to know of them the cause of their disputations.

7 And they said: Behold, we cannot understand the words which our father hath spoken concerning the natural branches of the olive-tree, and also concerning the Gentiles.

verse 7 For a review of the concepts of the “natural branches of the olive-tree” and the “Gentiles” see the commentary for 1 Nephi 10:14.

8 And I said unto them: Have ye inquired of the Lord?

9 And they said unto me: We have not; for the Lord maketh no such thing known unto us.

verse 9 Here the brothers seem to be stating their expectations of the Lord, i.e. “The Lord would never make such things known to us.” They do not believe in personal revelation. They do not believe that Nephi could receive actual communication from the Lord. After all, Nephi is not a prophet. He is no better than they.

10 Behold, I said unto them: How is it that ye do not keep the commandments of the Lord? How is it that ye will perish, because of the hardness of your hearts?

verse 10 This verse is a prelude to the following verse. In what sense will the brothers “perish”? See the commentary for verses 5-7 of 1 Nephi 14.

11 Do ye not remember the things which the Lord hath said?—If ye will not harden your hearts, and ask me in faith, believing that ye shall receive, with diligence in keeping my commandments, surely these things shall be made known unto you.

verse 11 Nephi quotes a scripture to his brothers. But where is this scripture? We do know of a scripture containing the same concept. It is a New Testament scripture, James 1:5: “If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.” Obviously, the book of James was not available to Nephi. Both James and Nephi might have been quoting an ancient scripture which is not available to us today in our Old Testament. It is likely this scripture was found on the brass plates of Laban.

Nephi avers that personal and literal revelation is, in fact, available to common man, not just to prophets, if only man will obey the commandments and ask in faith. The brothers, of course, will not obey. Consequently, they will be spiritually blighted as a result.

It is clear, in the Book of Mormon, that revelation and prophecy are not exclusively the privileges of the prophets. Because the book is compiled largely by Nephite prophets, we get only a few examples of revelation to common individuals. We will read of the missionary Ammon's watching helplessly as thousands of his converts, turned pacifist, suffer death rather than retaliate or defend themselves (Alma 24). He proposes a migration to Nephite-held Zarahemla, but they are reluctant. "And Ammon said: I will go and inquire of the Lord, and if he say unto us, go down unto our brethren, will ye go?" They agreed. "And it came to pass that Ammon went and inquired of the Lord, and he said unto him: Get this people out of this land" (Alma 27:7, 11-12).

The concept of personal revelation is practically lost in the world today. The religious world acknowledges revelation mainly in written form—the Bible—and in God's managing of major events in the earth's history. The idea that any sincere individual might receive actual individually-tailored communication from God is foreign to virtually all theological circles today. We know that revelation is not confined to prophets and concerns itself with more than the exegesis or explanation of all existence and matters of ultimate concern to all mankind. It is the prerogative of each of us. Questions that prompt divine replies may arise from anyone and may concern themselves with matters that are quotidian, banal, and mundane. For example, while still in the wilderness on their way to the promised land, Nephi and his brothers will lose their weapons and their people will suffer hunger and discouragement. Lehi will "inquire of the Lord" where to hunt, and he will be directed (see 1 Nephi 16:24-31). Later in the record, on two occasions, military plans will be influenced by divine revelation (see Alma 16:5-6; 42:23). The true nature of revelation is that it represents an egalitarian access to truths that range from the sublime to the mundane, from principles of salvation to advice on prime hunting grounds. Personal revelation is the key to spiritual survival, both for the individual and for the nation.

verses 12-20 These verses deal with the scattering and gathering of Israel. A few simple yet essential facts need to be kept in mind as we study about these two concepts—the scattering and gathering.

1. Israel was scattered because they rejected Christ and his gospel, and they will not be gathered again until they accept him.

2. One cannot fully accept Christ without joining his Church and thus accepting citizenship in his kingdom—being gathered to his kingdom.

3. The Israelites will be gathered to the lands of their inheritance—their lands of promise. The western hemisphere, the Americas, have been promised to the tribe of Joseph, while the land of Palestine has been promised for the tribe of Judah.

For more discussion on the scattering and gathering, see the commentary for 1 Nephi chapters 20-22.

12 Behold, I say unto you, that the house of Israel was compared unto an olive-tree, by the Spirit of the Lord which was in our father; and behold are we not broken off from the house of Israel, and are we not a branch of the house of Israel?

verse 12 As explained in 1 Nephi 10:12, in the olive-tree analogy, the tree is the house of Israel and the breaking off of branches signifies the scattering of Israel. Thus, Lehi's family's journey to the western hemisphere is one aspect of the scattering of Israel. This verse implies that the olive-tree analogy originated with the prophet Lehi. This is obviously not the case as is discussed in the commentary for 1 Nephi 10:12.

13 And now, the thing which our father meaneth concerning the grafting in of the natural branches through the fulness of the Gentiles, is, that in the latter days, when our seed shall have dwindled in unbelief, yea, for the space of many years, and many generations after the Messiah shall be manifested in body unto the children of men, then shall the fulness of the gospel of the Messiah come unto the Gentiles, and from the Gentiles unto the remnant of our seed—verse 13 “the fulness of the Gentiles” This statement refers to a period of time. This same time period is also known, particularly in the Doctrine and Covenants, as the “times (or days) of the Gentiles.” This is the period of time beginning with the restoration of the gospel through Joseph Smith in which the fulness of the gospel is taken to “Gentile” nations. Actually, any nation that does not have prophets at its head, revelation as its constitution, and the Messiah as its king, is a Gentile nation. Hence all nations of the earth are Gentile nations. The “times of the Gentiles” are the last or latter days. This period culminates or is fulfilled at or near the second coming of the Lord, after the Gentiles have had a full opportunity to receive the gospel. Gospel preaching will then be directed principally to the Jews.

In another sense, the “times of the Gentiles” began in the days of Paul, when he turned from preaching to the Jews and offered the gospel to the Gentiles (Acts 13:46-47). In Paul's day the gospel was preached first to the Jews and then to the Gentiles. In the latter days the gospel goes first to the Gentiles and then to the Jews (1 Nephi 13:42). As has already been pointed out, this is an application of that well known principle “the last shall be first, and the first shall be last” (see 1 Nephi 13:42).

“grafting in of the natural branches through the fulness of the Gentiles” This signifies the gathering of those of actual Israelite blood descent (“the natural branches”) by those missionaries from the great Gentile nation who have received the gospel. For additional discussion of the phrase “great Gentile nation” see the commentary on 1 Nephi 10:14.

The work of gathering in the latter days will begin as the everlasting gospel is restored to a particular servant of the Lord, Joseph Smith, Jr. He will be living in and is a representative of the great Gentile nation, the United States of America. Then missionaries from this great Gentile nation, under the direction of Joseph Smith, will take the gospel to the house of Israel—to those of the actual blood of Israel—including the Lamanites and the Jews.

Are these missionaries really “Gentiles?” Obviously, many of these missionary “Gentiles” are really descendants of the house of Israel. They are “Gentiles” only in a cultural sense since they belong to this great Gentile nation. They will receive the gospel and take it to those of the house of Israel, including to those who are a “remnant of our seed”—obviously a reference to those who are descended from Lehi, Ishmael, and Zoram (see also 1 Nephi 22:7).

The “great Gentile nation” will be established in the latter days by the inspiration of the Lord, but its establishment will, of necessity, be a compromise by the Lord. It will not be a truly righteous nation. There will be a separation, by constitutional mandate, of church and state. It will be this way because it must. The world would not tolerate or allow the founding of a truly righteous nation to receive the gospel. Modern revelation regarding this great Gentile nation suggests that the Lord allows this nation to exist as a mechanism for the restoration and promulgation of his gospel, but he does so almost grudgingly. There will exist here much apostasy. The Lord will allow the “tares” to grow among the “wheat” (see JST, Matthew 13:22-29). And what of the eventual fate of this nation? It is sealed up to its eventual destruction after the work of the Lord’s gathering of Israel has progressed to a satisfactory state.

14 And at that day shall the remnant of our seed know that they are of the house of Israel, and that they are the covenant people of the Lord; and then shall they know and come to the knowledge of their forefathers, and also to the knowledge of the gospel of their Redeemer, which was ministered unto their fathers by him; wherefore, they shall come to the knowledge of their Redeemer and the very points of his doctrine, that they may know how to come unto him and be saved.

verse 14 This knowledge that they, “the remnant of our seed,” are natural descendants of the house of Israel is to be restored to Lehi’s descendants. This restoration will, of course, come through the Book of Mormon.

15 And then at that day will they not rejoice and give praise unto their everlasting God, their rock and their salvation? Yea, at that day, will they not receive the strength and nourishment from the true vine? Yea, will they not come unto the true fold of God?

verse 15 “at that day” This refers to the day when Lehi’s seed comes to a knowledge of the gospel and to a knowledge of their own true identity as blood members of the house of Israel. This will occur in the final dispensation just prior to the Millennium.

“their rock and their salvation” The most common symbolic meaning of the word “rock” is the gospel of Jesus Christ. For additional meanings see the commentary for 1 Nephi 13:36. These additional meanings include (1) the Lord himself (Deuteronomy 32:13; Psalm 71:3; 1 Corinthians 10:4; 2 Nephi 9:45), and (2) revelation (Matthew 16:18; TPJS, 274). It is the Lord who is being referred to here as “their rock.”

Viticulture is the science of the production and study of grapes. A grape plant, or grapevine, in growing season, consists of a vertical trunk, supported by an underground root system. The trunk is covered with bark and is the permanent part of the grape plant or grapevine. The trunk serves to provide water and nutrients to the rest of the plant. From the trunk, there arise horizontal arms, cordons, or branches which are the semi-permanent parts of the plant. These give rise to the shoots which are the fruit-bearing parts of the plants. These branches are often pruned if they become unproductive. In coming to understand the Savior’s being the “true vine,” John 15:1 is useful. It reads: “I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman.” It would seem most appropriate to compare the Savior to the life-giving trunk of the grapevine. This is the permanent and fixed part of the plant which provides life-giving water and nutrition to the remainder of the plant.

Husbandman is an archaic word which means farmer. Another archaic word is vinedresser. Today, we may refer to him as the vineyard keeper.

“true fold of God” A fold is an enclosure for sheep. Figuratively the “true fold of God” is the Church of Jesus Christ.

The “true olive-tree” spoken of in the following verse is also symbolic of the Church and its Head, the Savior himself.

16 Behold, I say unto you, Yea; they shall be remembered again among the house of Israel; they shall be grafted in, being a natural branch of the olive-tree, into the true olive-tree.

verse 16 “They” refers to Lehi’s descendants. They are a “natural” branch in that they are blood Israel.

17 And this is what our father meaneth; and he meaneth that it will not come to pass until after they are scattered by the Gentiles; and he meaneth that it shall come by way of the Gentiles, that the Lord may show his power unto the Gentiles, for the very cause that he shall be rejected of the Jews, or of the house of Israel.

verse 17 “it will not come to pass until after they are scattered by the Gentiles” Lehi’s descendants will not realize their true identity and be grafted in to the Church of Christ until after they have been scattered by the Gentiles. For a discussion of this scattering see the commentary for 1 Nephi 13:14.

“that the Lord may show his power unto the Gentiles” Here Nephi gives the reason why the Lord “will show his power unto the Gentiles” and why the gospel will be restored in the latter days through the Gentiles in the great Gentile nation. It is because he has been and will be rejected by the Jews and the rest of the house of Israel.

18 Wherefore, our father hath not spoken of our seed alone, but also of all the house of Israel, pointing to the covenant which should be fulfilled in the latter days; which covenant the Lord made to our father Abraham, saying: In thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed.

verse 18 “In thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed” Here reference is made to one tenet of the Abrahamic covenant. For a summary of the other features of this covenant, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 14:8.

19 And it came to pass that I, Nephi, spake much unto them concerning these things; yea, I spake unto them concerning the restoration of the Jews in the latter days.

verse 19 “I, Nephi, spake much unto them” Keep in mind that Nephi is speaking to his rebellious brothers—see verse 6 above.

“I spake unto them concerning the restoration of the Jews in the latter days” This might be a good time to read, for the first time, the important introductory commentary for 1 Nephi 20, particularly the paragraph on the temporal gathering of Israel.

20 And I did rehearse unto them the words of Isaiah, who spake concerning the restoration of the Jews, or of the house of Israel; and after they were restored they should no more be confounded, neither should they be scattered again. And it came to pass that I did speak many words unto my brethren, that they were pacified and did humble themselves before the Lord.

verse 20 “Isaiah, who spake concerning the restoration of the Jews, or of the house of Israel” Isaiah did indeed prophesy of the restoration of the house of Israel, particularly in Isaiah chapters 2 and 11. A detailed commentary will be provided of these chapters—see the commentary for 2 Nephi 12 and 21 respectively.

21 And it came to pass that they did speak unto me again, saying: What meaneth this thing which our father saw in a dream? What meaneth the tree which he saw?

22 And I said unto them: It was a representation of the tree of life.

verse 22 As stated previously (introductory commentary for 1 Nephi 8), the “tree of life” is the tree of eternal life and is symbolic of Jesus Christ. Its fruits symbolize the saving principles of the gospel. All must partake of this fruit if they are to obtain eternal life.

The title “tree of life” is first encountered in scripture in the creation story. It stood in the midst of the Garden of Eden, and its fruit contained the power of everlasting life (Genesis 2:9; 3:22-24). A question that is sometimes asked: “Is the tree of life in the Garden of Eden the same tree as that in Lehi’s and Nephi’s visions of the tree of life?”

Perhaps Adam and Eve were allowed and even commanded to partake of the tree of life in the garden prior to their transgression. It is possible that it was simply a nutritional necessity. Perhaps their regularly partaking of that tree had the essential physical effect of perpetuating their peculiar eternal state in the Garden. Perhaps that was the way they maintained their eternal physical condition.

This, of course, would make the tree of life in the Garden unrelated to the “tree of life” in 1 Nephi 8 and in 1 Nephi 11-15 except that they would share in the symbolism that they both were the mechanisms for producing something of eternal duration. If, in fact, it is true that the Eden tree is simply a nutritional necessity that enabled Adam and Eve to maintain their status quo in the Garden, then continued access to the tree of life in the Garden might simply have allowed them to maintain their Edenic conditions (not subject to death, unable to procreate). Perhaps their being cast out of the Garden and being denied access to the tree of life were the factors that caused them to begin to deteriorate in a “mortal” way—in other words to become mortal.

23 And they said unto me: What meaneth the rod of iron which our father saw, that led to the tree?

24 And I said unto them that it was the word of God; and whoso would hearken unto the word of God, and would hold fast unto it, they would never perish; neither could the temptations and the fiery darts of the adversary overpower them unto blindness, to lead them away to destruction.

verse 24 “fiery darts of the adversary” These are the temptations of the Devil. This colorful metaphor is extended in D&C 27:17 where we read that one may be protected from these by the “shield of faith.” But if “fiery darts” is a metaphor, what is this metaphor based upon?

The imagery of the “fiery darts of the adversary” in this Book of Mormon passage is similar to that used by the apostle Paul in describing what he called the “armour of God.” As Paul said, saints were to take “the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked” in their spiritual warfare (Ephesians 6:16).

Some may wonder what the relationship is between 1 Nephi 15:24 and Ephesians 6:16. Is it possible that Nephi knew, literarily or historically, about the use of fiery arrows or projectiles as instruments of war in his day? Historians now recognize that fiery arrows or projectiles were used in ancient warfare both before and after the time of Nephi.

The phrase “fiery arrows” appears in the Hebrew text of Psalm 7 (verse 13 in English and verse 14 in Hebrew). The verse in the KJV reads, “[God] hath also prepared for him the instruments of death; he ordaineth his arrows against the persecutors” (emphasis added). The translators of the KJV misunderstood the underlying Hebrew of this verse, and thus did not translate it completely accurately. The verse should actually read, “[God] has prepared his deadly weapons, making his arrows fiery shafts” (New Revised Standard Version, emphasis added) or even more literally “[God] makes his arrows to [be] fiery.” This is confirmed by the ancient Greek and Latin translations of the Bible, which unmistakably render the passage the correct way as picked up by many modern English Bible translations. Importantly, the ancient Greek translation of the Old Testament (the Septuagint) uses the same word in Greek for “arrow/shaft” in Psalm 7:13 as is used Ephesians 6:16, showing that the two passages are talking about the same thing—fiery arrows.

If we look at the world of the ancient Near East, there is evidence that the ancient Assyrians, Persians, and Greeks used fiery arrows in combat. The ancient Greek historians Herodotus and Thucydides mention their use, and the ancient Assyrian reliefs depicting the siege of the city of Lachish in 701 BC appear to show Judahite defenders of the city hurling flaming projectiles at enemy siege engines. As such, there appear to have been real-world incidents of the use of fiery darts or arrows both before and after the time of Nephi.

This passage in 1 Nephi serves as a powerful metaphor concerning the tactics used by Satan still today in his attacks against the faithful. Nephi’s metaphor of Satan’s fiery arrows warns us that the Adversary will at times attack those who hold on to the iron rod (the word of God) from a distance as he tries to unsettle them and “lead them away to destruction.”

verses 23-24 Here, Nephi asserts unambiguously that the “word of God” is a “rod.” Latter-day Saint scholars Hugh Nibley and John A. Tvedtnes have shown how a rod came to be commonly identified with the word of God in the ancient Near East (Hugh Nibley, An Approach to the Book of Mormon, 3rd edition, ed. John W. Welch, 311-28; John A. Tvedtnes, “Rod and Sword as the Word of God,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 5/2 [1996]: 148-55).

Further support for the antiquity of Nephi’s imagery has been reported by Matthew L. Bowen (FARMS Update, no. 175, vol. 25, 2005: 2-3). Brother Bowen points out that the comparison may involve a word play with the Egyptian term for “word” and “rod.” Although we obviously have the Book of Mormon text only in translation and do not know the original wording of the text, we can use our knowledge of the languages that the Nephite writers said they used—Hebrew and Egyptian (see 1 Nephi 1:2; Mormon 9:32-33). The Egyptian word mdw means not only “a staff or rod” but also “to speak” a “word.” The Egyptian word mdw, probably pronounced mateh in Lehi’s day, was common in the Egyptian dialect of that time and would have sounded very much like a common Hebrew word for rod or staff, matteh. An indication of Nephi's awareness of the play on words is his use of the expression in these two verses "hold fast unto" the "word of God," since one can physically hold fast to a rod but not to a word (compare Helaman 3:29). Another indication of Nephi's awareness of this word interplay is found in 1 Nephi 17:26, 29: "And ye know that by his word the waters of the Red Sea were divided. . . And ye also know that Moses, by his word . . . smote the rock, and there came forth water" (italics added).

25 Wherefore, I, Nephi, did exhort them to give heed unto the word of the Lord; yea, I did exhort them with all the energies of my soul, and with all the faculty which I possessed, that they would give heed to the word of God and remember to keep his commandments always in all things.

verse 25 To "give heed," of course, is to pay attention; to observe; to notice; to obey.

26 And they said unto me: What meaneth the river of water which our father saw?

27 And I said unto them that the water which my father saw was filthiness; and so much was his mind swallowed up in other things that he beheld not the filthiness of the water.

verse 27 As father Lehi witnessed the vision of the tree of life, he did see and comment upon the river of water, but he failed to notice that the river flowed with filthy water. The river and its "filthiness" represents the gulf which separates the righteous from the wicked.

28 And I said unto them that it was an awful gulf, which separated the wicked from the tree of life, and also from the saints of God.

29 And I said unto them that it was a representation of that awful hell, which the angel said unto me was prepared for the wicked.

verses 28-29 "an awful gulf" Nephi points out that in mortality the river of filthiness separates the proud and worldly in the large and spacious building from the tree of life and from the saints of God. The symbolism of this awful gulf likely has application to both our mortal life and to the post mortal phase of our existence.

Some have taken this symbolism to be referable to the great gulf in the spirit world (see also 1 Nephi 12:18). From the time of Adam to the time of Christ's mortal ministry, there existed no link in the spirit world between paradise and prison—between the righteous and the wicked. People who had chosen to live according to the things of the world as opposed to ways of the spirit were doomed, in the spirit prison, to live without gospel light for centuries.

The parable of the rich man and Lazarus as related in the book of Luke is often taken as a depiction of this great gulf (Luke 16:19-26). The rich man, finding himself in hell, saw Lazarus some distance away in “Abraham’s bosom” (paradise). He pled with father Abraham to send Lazarus, “that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame.” In commenting on this parable, Elder Bruce R. McConkie taught that these two men “knew each other in mortality, so they remember their former acquaintanceship. But no longer are they accessible to each other so that one might minister to the needs of the other. Christ [had] not bridged the gulf between the prison and the palace, and there [was] as yet no communion between the righteous in paradise and the wicked in hell” (The Mortal Messiah, 3:263).

Jesus Christ bridged the gulf between paradise and prison when he visited the spirit world between the time of his death and resurrection. We are taught by President Joseph F. Smith in D&C 138:20-37 that Jesus did not actually go personally among the spirits in prison, but rather he preached the gospel to the righteous in paradise and then organized them to travel as missionaries to the spirits in prison.

Prior to the bridging of this great gulf between wicked and righteous, the saints in paradise had nowhere to preach the gospel. It was during this period that the Lord chose to utilize some of these righteous saints as translated beings. Their mortal lives were prolonged, and their bodies were raised to a terrestrial level. They were then given assignments that allowed them to continue their labors among the children of men (for additional discussion of the phenomenon of translation, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 17, Doctrine of Translation). Enoch and his city were an example.

Joseph Smith taught of translated beings: “Their place of habitation is that of the terrestrial order, and a place prepared for such characters he held in reserve to be ministering angels unto many planets” (TPJS, 170-71, 191). After Jesus bridged the gulf in the world of spirits, this practice changed. Now the obligation of the righteous is to die, go to the spirit world, and continue to preach the gospel there (Bruce R. McConkie, “Jesus Christ and Him Crucified,” 1976 Brigham Young University Devotional Speeches of the Year, 401; The Millennial Messiah, 284-85).

Does an analogous gulf exist in mortality? It certainly does, and Nephi refers to it in the following verse.

Prior to Jesus’s atoning sacrifice and resurrection no one could cross either gulf. The atonement of Jesus Christ has made it possible for both to be crossed.

30 And I said unto them that our father also saw that the justice of God did also divide the wicked from the righteous; and the brightness thereof was like unto the brightness of a flaming fire, which ascendeth up unto God forever and ever, and hath no end.

verse 30 “the justice of God did also divide the wicked from the righteous”

To understand how an “awful gulf” divides the wicked from the righteous in mortality, as well as in the post mortal world, one needs only to understand the concept of the law of justice. For a review of this important concept, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 12, The Law of Justice. In mortality the law of justice divides the righteous from the wicked. Strictly speaking, the only completely righteous individual, standing alone on his side of the gulf, is the Savior himself. In a more practical sense, there is a clearly definable difference or “gulf” between those individuals earnestly striving for righteousness and those caught up in the snares of the world.

The “brightness of a flaming fire” apparently refers to the glory of those residing in paradise in the spirit world.

31 And they said unto me: Doth this thing mean the torment of the body in the days of probation, or doth it mean the final state of the soul after the death of the temporal body, or doth it speak of the things which are temporal?

32 And it came to pass that I said unto them that it was a representation of things both temporal and spiritual; for the day should come that they must be judged of their works, yea, even the works which were done by the temporal body in their days of probation.

verses 31-32 Nephi’s brothers ask him whether the symbols spoken of, namely the “river of water” and the “awful gulf” which separate the righteous from the wicked, pertain to the mortal world (“the days of probation” and “things which are temporal”) or to the world to come (“the final state of the soul after the death of the temporal body”). Nephi answers that it applies to both.

33 Wherefore, if they should die in their wickedness they must be cast off also, as to the things which are spiritual, which are pertaining to righteousness; wherefore, they must be brought to stand before God, to be judged of their works; and if their works have been filthiness they must needs be filthy; and if they be filthy it must needs be that they cannot dwell in the kingdom of God; if so, the kingdom of God must be filthy also.

verse 33 Usually the phrase kingdom of God is used to refer to the Lord’s earthly kingdom. Here, however, the context makes it obvious that in a broad sense there are two kingdoms of God, one on earth and the other in heaven. The phrase kingdom of heaven uniformly refers to God’s celestial heaven.

34 But behold, I say unto you, the kingdom of God is not filthy, and there cannot any unclean thing enter into the kingdom of God; wherefore there must needs be a place of filthiness prepared for that which is filthy.

verses 33-34 As we read about the law of justice (see the reference above) we learn that for every violation of the Lord's law a penalty must be paid. Also, for every instance of obedience to the law there is a reward. A man is "justified" when all penalties are paid. He is then "reconciled to God" or brought into perfect harmony with God to the point where he can be exalted. The following statement is absolute and must be understood to be absolute: No man can be exalted in the celestial kingdom without being justified.

35 And there is a place prepared, yea, even that awful hell of which I have spoken, and the devil is the preparator of it; wherefore the final state of the souls of men is to dwell in the kingdom of God, or to be cast out because of that justice of which I have spoken.

verse 35 "the preparator of it" A "preparator" is one who prepares. Today we would prefer the word preparer. Dr. Royal Skousen has, however, observed that the original manuscript for this phrase reads "proprietor of it" and suggests that when the printer's manuscript copy was made from the original, this word was mis-copied.

"souls" The most precise definition of a soul is the combination of the body and the spirit of man (Abraham 5:7; D&C 88:15-16). However, here, and in several other places in the Book of Mormon, the word "soul" is used as meaning the spirit. See also Mosiah 14:10; Alma 36:15; 40:7, 11-14, 18, 21, 23; and 42:16. The same meaning also pertains elsewhere in the scriptures (D&C 101:37; Abraham 3:23).

"the final state of the souls of men is to dwell in the kingdom of God, or to be cast out" As has been stated previously, the Book of Mormon speaks of the life hereafter in simplistic terms—either exaltation or perdition. It does not contain the concept of "multiple heavens" or the three degrees of salvation. See "Post-Mortal Life and the Book of Mormon" in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 13, The Spirit World.

36 Wherefore, the wicked are rejected from the righteous, and also from that tree of life, whose fruit is most precious and most desirable above all other fruits; yea, and it is the greatest of all the gifts of God. And thus I spake unto my brethren. Amen.

verse 36 The "greatest of all the gifts of God" is exaltation in the celestial kingdom (D&C 14:7).

1 Nephi Chapter 16

Scripture Mastery

1 Nephi 16 Lehi and his family find the Liahona and depart the valley of Lemuel.

In chapter 16 Lehi and his family depart the valley of Lemuel.

verses 1-6 These six verses might better have been included as the last six verses of chapter 15. In 1 Nephi chapters 8 through 15, we find visions, prophecies, and admonishments. Chapter 16 begins the second phase of their journey from the valley of Lemuel to the ocean.

1 And now it came to pass that after I, Nephi, had made an end of speaking to my brethren, behold they said unto me: Thou hast declared unto us hard things, more than we are able to bear.

2 And it came to pass that I said unto them that I knew that I had spoken hard things against the wicked, according to the truth; and the righteous have I justified, and testified that they should be lifted up at the last day; wherefore, the guilty taketh the truth to be hard, for it cutteth them to the very center.

verses 1-2 The admonishments of Nephi were perceived as “hard things” by Laman and Lemuel since they were condemned by them. It would seem that the expression “more than we are able to bear” does not reflect the brothers’ resentment (see verse 5) so much as it does their despair over their sinfulness. Indeed, “it cutteth them to the very center.”

“the righteous have I justified” To be justified is to be entirely free of sin and qualified to enter the kingdom of God after this life. Obviously, Nephi does not do the judging or justifying, but here he pronounces that the righteous will eventually be justified.

3 And now my brethren, if ye were righteous and were willing to hearken to the truth, and give heed unto it, that ye might walk uprightly before God, then ye would not murmur because of the truth, and say: Thou speakest hard things against us.

verse 3 Simply stated, the best way to obtain a spiritual witness of a true principle is to live it.

4 And it came to pass that I, Nephi, did exhort my brethren, with all diligence, to keep the commandments of the Lord.

5 And it came to pass that they did humble themselves before the Lord; insomuch that I had joy and great hopes of them, that they would walk in the paths of righteousness.

6 Now, all these things were said and done as my father dwelt in a tent in the valley which he called Lemuel.

7 And it came to pass that I, Nephi, took one of the daughters of Ishmael to wife; and also, my brethren took of the daughters of Ishmael to wife; and also Zoram took the eldest daughter of Ishmael to wife.

8 And thus my father had fulfilled all the commandments of the Lord which had been given unto him. And also, I, Nephi, had been blessed of the Lord exceedingly.

verses 7-8 “And thus my father had fulfilled all the commandments of the Lord” This phrase implies that father Lehi had been commanded by the Lord to arrange marriages for his sons. Under ancient Israelite law, it was the father’s duty to arrange marriages for his children, and it was the children’s duty to accept the father’s arrangements. Recall that Lehi selected the family whose daughters his sons would marry.

“I, Nephi, had been blessed of the Lord exceedingly” It’s fun to read between the lines as you read scripture. For example, in these verses the men in the traveling company have divided up the girls among themselves and have taken them to wife. Note particularly Nephi’s statement, “I Nephi have been blessed of the Lord exceedingly.” Nephi is probably not talking about just generic blessings here. He is likely saying that when a woman was chosen for each man, he got the loveliest of the group! He was “blessed of the Lord exceedingly.”

9 And it came to pass that the voice of the Lord spake unto my father by night, and commanded him that on the morrow he should take his journey into the wilderness.

verse 9 The marriages between the families of Lehi and Ishmael marked the end of the long encampment in the valley of Lemuel. The next phase of the journey would be more difficult. They would traverse country that was more arid and dangerous. Food and water would be scarce, and a vigil would have to be maintained for robbers. As we read the following narrative account written by Nephi of the family’s journey in the wilderness, it is appropriate to keep in mind that this account was recorded onto the small plates of Nephi. The account was actually written by Nephi perhaps some thirty years after the fact. Thus, it seems unlikely that Nephi could have given us a precise chronological account, and more likely that he is simply reporting the important highlights of the journey.

10 And it came to pass that as my father arose in the morning, and went forth to the tent door, to his great astonishment he beheld upon the ground a round ball of curious workmanship; and it was of fine brass. And within the ball were two spindles; and the one pointed the way whither we should go into the wilderness.

verse 10 This device is referred to in the text of the Book of Mormon as “the ball,” “the compass” (1 Nephi 18:21), and “the director” (2 Nephi 5:12; Mosiah 1:16). It is not given the name “Liahona” until Alma 37:38. Though many meanings have been suggested for the term Liahona, Dr. Hugh Nibley’s favorite is “God is our Guide” (“The Liahona’s Cousin,” a FARMS reprint).

Some interesting insight on how the extended family of Lehi used the Liahona is obtained from the account of Alma the younger’s delivering the Liahona to his son Helaman (Alma 37:38-47). The Liahona was a gift of God that worked solely by the power of God. It functioned only in response to the faith and diligence of those who followed it.

Alma taught that the Liahona seemed a “temporal” thing of “small means,” and, apparently, it was regarded as such by Lehi’s people. They seemed to take it for granted and almost ignored it altogether. It is apparent that it was not regarded by Lehi’s people as a new and unfamiliar type of object. They seemed to regard it as unremarkable and ordinary. Dr. Hugh Nibley has pointed out why this might have been so. He has reported evidence that the tradition in Hebrew culture of “divining with arrows” is well established. Hebrews believed that for many types of decisions, including such things as finding their way through uncharted territory, the Lord’s influence would intervene if they used arrows in a type of divining ritual (“The Liahona’s Cousin,” a FARMS reprint).

Evidently, then, to Lehi’s group the Liahona seemed just another device with which they could seek the Lord’s will through the use of arrows—just another way to “cast lots” as it were. Apparently, they often did not take it seriously and were careless in giving heed to its advice. Alma later taught Helaman that this carelessness and disobedience of those in Lehi’s party contributed to their having to wander eight years in the wilderness: “They were slothful, and forgot to exercise their faith and diligence and then those marvelous works ceased, and they did not progress in their journey; therefore, they tarried in the wilderness, or did not travel a direct course, and were afflicted with hunger and thirst, because of their transgressions” (Alma 37:40-41). Alma would also teach that the Liahona was a type or symbol of Christ (Alma 37:44-45) in that Lehi’s party had but to follow its words and directions to be led to the Promised Land. Similarly, if we follow the words of Christ, we will be led to a much better promised land.

the appearance of this device. It is not possible, of course, to be certain of its appearance, or its size, because we only have this cursory description. Apparently the round ball of brass did not have a complete spherical shell and was at least in part hollow since the pointer spindles were “within the ball.” There was obviously some type of gap or window in the shell that allowed visualization of the spindles or pointers.

Robert L. Bunker has provided us with a helpful article on the Liahona in which he speculates as to its appearance. Under the section titled Illustrations, see “Liahona” and “Spindles of Liahona.” He also suggests a plausible reason why the Liahona had to have “two spindles” or pointers (“The Design of the Liahona and the Purpose of the Second Spindle,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, volume 3, [Fall 1994] 1-11). A “spindle,” according to the Oxford English Dictionary (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1970) is an object used in spinning: “a slender rounded rod . . . tapering towards each end.” “Such a spindle-shaped pointer is often encountered in magnetic compasses where some type of marking designates one end as north. The spindle in the Liahona used to designate direction would also have required differentiation between ends, either by color, texture, or shape. While use of the spindle shape is aesthetically pleasing and appropriately functional, there are sound engineering reasons for its selection: The symmetry inherently provides mechanical balance along its major and minor axes, a requirement for both compasses and the Liahona” (Bunker, 3).

Why were there two spindles? In his article, Brother Bunker reminds us that the Liahona functioned appropriately only part of the time “according to the faith and diligence and heed which we did give” (1 Nephi 16:28). But even when it wasn’t functioning, its directional spindle would always be pointing in some specific direction. It is clear then that the Liahona not only had to provide directional information, but also had to indicate whether or not that information could be relied upon—whether or not its users were exercising sufficient faith (1 Nephi 18:12, 21). One of the pointers provided directional information. Again, since a single pointer is always pointing in a specific direction, it seems likely that the role of the second pointer was to provide the information as to whether or not the directional information from the first pointer was reliable. Brother Bunker speculates: “If an observer viewed the pointers and saw only a single pointer, then they were both aligned in the same direction, one on top of the other, and the director was providing correct information. Lehi’s party could then follow the indicated direction with confidence that it was the Lord’s instruction. If, on the other hand, the two pointers were cross-ways to each other—forming an “X,” then the pointing information was not reliable. No other information was required of the Liahona, so no more than two pointers were needed. But the requirements demand a minimum of two.” See the illustration of the spindles. Brother Bunker points out that this technique is used in modern engineering and is called “voting.” When the decision of a computer system, for example, is critical, two independent systems will be asked to make an independent analysis. If the decision of both systems (the “votes”) are the same, then a correct decision is assumed. If the answers are different, then an error is assumed.

Brother Hugh Nibley has written:

A . . . study by an Arabic scholar has called attention to the long-forgotten custom of the ancient Arabs and Hebrews of consulting two headless arrows whenever they were about to undertake a journey; the usual thing was to consult the things at a special shrine, though it was common also to take such divination arrows along on the trip in a special container. The message of the arrows, which were mere sticks without heads or feathers, was conveyed by their pointing and especially by the inscriptions that were on them, giving detailed directions as to the journey (Prophetic Book of Mormon, 244-45).

11 And it came to pass that we did gather together whatsoever things we should carry into the wilderness, and all the remainder of our provisions which the Lord had given unto us; and we did take seed of every kind that we might carry into the wilderness.

verse 11 This verse marks the beginning of what has been referred to as the “Desert Journal.” It will include 1 Nephi 16:11-17, 33; 17:1-6. It is possibly a journal kept by Nephi himself, but it more likely is Nephi’s quoting of his father’s writings from the record of Lehi (see 1 Nephi 19:1-2). The reader will recall that Nephi did not even start the small plates of Nephi, the record from which we are now reading, until about 570 BC, some thirty years after the group left Jerusalem. It is likely that Lehi’s “Desert Journal” proved very useful in filling out Nephi’s memory of hazy or forgotten details.

“we did take seed of every kind” It is safe to assume that Nephi’s party did not have access to every kind of seed, rather they took those seeds which were available to them. These likely came from both the land of Jerusalem and from the valley of Lemuel. They would surely have included dates (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 8:1). Along with the camel, the Arabs consider the date to be one of God’s greatest gifts to them. Without the camel, travel across the desert would have been impossible. Without the date, one of the few foodstuffs that do not perish in the heat of the desert, those making long desert journeys would have little to eat.

12 And it came to pass that we did take our tents and depart into the wilderness, across the river Laman.

verse 12 As they broke camp and set out for the wilderness, Lehi knew they were headed for a promised land and that it would be over water. It is therefore quite possible that when Lehi left the valley of Lemuel, he had a good idea of where they were headed—to one of the South Arabian ports. Also, it is likely that he knew, camped in the valley of Lemuel, that he was less than twenty miles from the Frankincense Trail which could lead him down the full length of western Arabia to those ports. See the illustration of the map of the Frankincense Trail.

When Lehi and his family departed the valley of Lemuel they would have descended the wadi Tayyib al-lsm to the shore of the Red Sea, crossed the small river Laman, and traveled south along the narrow coastal plain to the site of modern Maqna. From there they would have turned east and traveled twenty miles to the ancient town of Midian (modern al Bada'a). Here in Midian they would have picked up the Frankincense Trail.

The Frankincense Trail, in the days of Lehi, was the one trail that existed from the Mediterranean Sea to southern Arabia (Thesiger, Arabian Sands, 208-9). If one were traveling up the Frankincense Trail from southern Arabia, one would encounter a major division in the trail about 250 miles below the valley of Lemuel at a place now called Dedan or Ula. One branch, the main branch, continued on north-northeast to pass east of the Dead Sea to modern-day Amman, Jordan and Damascus, Syria. The other branch, the Egyptian or Gaza branch, turned more toward the west to run near the Gulf of Aqaba, through the modern-day town of Aqaba on the northern tip of the Gulf of Aqaba, and thence north to the town of Gaza on the Mediterranean. It is this latter branch of the Frankincense Trail that Lehi's family would have traveled after leaving the town of Midian.

At the time three major ports existed in southern Arabia (see Frankincense Trail map): Aden (Eden), Cana (Qana), and Moscha (in Dhofar). The merchant ships of these three ports virtually monopolized trade with India and the Far East until the first centuries BC–AD. Aden and Cana were the ports of the Sheban empire (the kingdom of Sheba) and were known to the people of Palestine in Lehi's time (Ezekiel 27:23). It is almost certain that Lehi also knew of the ocean-going ships of the Indian Ocean which called at these three ports. His contemporaries, Ezekiel and Jeremiah, had knowledge of the Frankincense Trail and the merchant ships which sailed the Indian Ocean (Ezekiel 27:20, 22). The Liahona eventually will point Lehi and his family to Moscha on the Indian Ocean. Today, the ruins of what is thought to be Moscha are found at the inlet of Khor Rori in the southern part of the Sultanate of Oman. From Moscha in the area known as Dhofar, ships loaded with the precious frankincense embarked into the Indian Ocean. We will have more to say about Khor Rori later.

It is peculiar that many in the Church have the idea that Lehi and his family traveled from the valley of Lemuel to the Arabian coast secretly, avoiding trails and shunning contact with other people. The only practical way to have made the journey was to follow the Frankincense Trail, and doing so was reasonably safe. It is true that small bands of outlaws occasionally preyed on small groups of travelers, but the tribes who lived along the trail were mostly a source of security for those traveling the trail rather than a source for fear. It was apparently the habit, in those days, for the traders who used the trails to pay protection money called khawah to the tribes through whose territory they were traveling. Thus, the tribes regarded the travelers as their customers, and had a genuine interest in their safety (Keohane, Bedouin, Nomads of the Desert, 10, 11). The tribute money they collected from the travelers was their main source of income. For this reason, the tribes that ruled trade routes went to great efforts to protect their trails and to organize small parties into larger groups for travel between villages. Tribute-paying travelers were welcomed so long as they obeyed the terms of passage: staying to the authorized trails through the Arab's lands, paying tribute, and not robbing the locals. The desert trails could be viewed as toll roads that crossed the private property of the tribes. The tribes fiercely protected their lands and guarded their wells. Lehi would have understood that in order to travel through Arabia he would need the protection of an authorized trail, for he would not have been allowed free access to wells or provisions of the local tribe. If Lehi did not pay khawah or if he strayed from the authorized trails, he and his family would have quickly found themselves at the mercy of the local tribes. In the years Lehi was in Arabia, his party would have passed through the lands of at least a dozen tribes and many more sub-tribes. It is incomprehensible that Lehi with many men, woman, and children in his party could have traveled undetected through Arabia.

Another technique for staying safe on the journey through the desert was to combine into larger groups. Apparently, in Lehi's day, when a smaller group wished to make a long journey, they would wait at a caravanserai or village, making their intentions known, until enough people could band together to make a sizable traveling party. Only then would they set out, the large size of the group providing the deterrent to would-be bandits. The caravan was thus a small army traveling across the desert, a veritable town on the move, bristling with weapons. To think that Lehi would have been so foolish as to try to wander across Arabia alone, trespassing lands and without permission simply ignores the realities of travel in that period.

Besides money for tributes, Lehi would have needed funds for acquiring provisions, and probably for replacing camels that became lame or died on the trail. We know Lehi did not take his gold and silver into the wilderness. Randolph Linehan, an attorney specializing in international commerce, and one who practiced law in Arabia, speculates on how Lehi acquired the funds necessary to purchase passage through Arabia:

Lehi was wealthy. He had taught not just his oldest sons, but his younger ones as well, reading, writing, and the trade languages: Egyptian, Canaanite script, and Judahite Hebrew. . . . The idea that nobles would hire themselves out as slaves or workers on their journey south makes little sense. Anyone who could read in their period of time already had a talent which would be similar to an M.D. traveling abroad today (personal communication between Linehan and George Potter, reported in Lehi in the Wilderness, 64).

Linehan finds it reasonable to assume that in the commercial centers located along the Frankincense Trail, Lehi and his older sons could have exchanged their highly valued personal services for tribute and provisions. This might, to some degree, explain why it took Lehi eight years to cross Arabia, and is consistent with the history of the Arab world where educated people would migrate from city to city seeking positions as scholars, political and commercial aids, or judges. Undoubtedly the well-educated Lehi could have offered an array of needed skills to the courts of sheikhs along the Frankincense Trail.

One might well ask, “If they traveled along a trail why did they need the Liahona to show them the way?” Couldn’t they have simply walked along the road? The Frankincense Trail was not a road in the sense that we are used to. There was no clearly delineated trail along which to walk. It is not really possible to speak of a single trail. At times this trail was only a few yards wide when it traversed mountain passes. At others, it was several miles across. In places the trail split into two or more branches that, at a point farther on, would reunite into one main road. Until late antiquity, the trail ran along the east side of the mountain range in western Arabia rather than along the west or coastal side. The Frankincense Trail was simply a general course that would take one to the next caravan “halt” and source of water. Lehi would have needed a guide, and for those times that the family was traveling alone, the Liahona was capable of taking a guide’s place. The trip down the Frankincense Trail was no jaunt down a well-marked highway.

13 And it came to pass that we traveled for the space of four days, nearly a south-southeast direction, and we did pitch our tents again; and we did call the name of the place Shazer.

verse 13 “we traveled . . . nearly a south-southeast direction” This is the direction of the Frankincense Trail. The Frankincense Trail took its name from the product that was primarily transported along it, frankincense, a sweet-smelling sap of the frankincense tree. The southern Arabians became wealthy on the sale of this aromatic, highly prized by the ancients. It was used in perfume, in medicine, in embalming, and in religious worship. At the time of Lehi, the main place where frankincense grew naturally was southern Arabia, with the most highly prized “silver” frankincense coming from Dhofar. The Persian Emperor Darius (521-486 BC) received one thousand Babylonian talents in weight, nearly twenty-five tons, of frankincense annually as a “voluntary tribute” from the Arabs (W. W. Muller, “Weihrauch,” suppl. 15, col. 708, lines 40-58; Groom, Frankincense and Myrrh, 60). Herodotus in the fifth century BC recorded that two and a half tons of frankincense were burned annually in the temple of Bel Al Babylon (Hawley, Oman and Its Renaissance, 245). This was obviously only a tiny fraction of the total produce of the area at that time. Vast amounts were also used in Egypt, Mesopotamia, and Greece. An estimated three thousand tons of frankincense were sent to Greece and Rome each year at the peak of the incense trade in the second century AD. Huge caravans must have left regularly from Dhofar carrying frankincense to Mesopotamia and the Mediterranean, and still more was taken on board ships to Yemen.

“and we did call the name of the place Shazer” The text implies that it was the Lehites themselves who named this place “Shazer.” Regarding the name Shazer, Hugh Nibley wrote, “The name is intriguing. The combination shajer is quite common in Palestinian place names; it is a collective meaning ‘trees.’ And many Arabs (especially in Egypt) pronounce it shazher” (Old Testament and Related Studies, 78-79). Nigel Groom, in his Dictionary of Arabic Topography and Place Names, uses a number of variations of the same place name, Shajir being one of them, identical to Nibley’s “Shajer.” Groom’s definition of Shajir is: “A valley or area abounding with trees and shrubs.” So, it appears highly likely that the family had named the place Shazer because it was a valley with many trees.

Armed with the knowledge that this cultivated valley was within one hundred miles south-southeast of the valley of Lemuel (“we traveled for the space of four days”), George Potter and Richard Wellington set out to find a likely candidate for the place called Shazer. It took them two years and three field trips. Finally, in the summer of 2000, the whereabouts of Shazer became apparent. Nephi recorded that their first halting place after leaving the valley of Lemuel was a place of trees where they stopped to hunt. In their research in the spring of 2000, Wellington had learned, from studying the ancient trade routes in Arabia, that the first rest stop traveling south from Midian (modern al-Bada’a) was a place called Al-Aghra’. In other writings, he found a description of a fertile valley with an oasis over fifteen miles long which was south-southeast from the valley of Lemuel at about the appropriate distance. This was found in the wadi Agharr. Noticing the similarity of the spelling of these two places, Al-Aghra’ and Agharr, Wellington recalled that on a previous field trip he had been told by the Police General at al-Bada’a that the best hunting in the entire area was in the mountains of Agharr. From al Bada’a Potter and Wellington headed sixty miles south-southeast to the wadi Agharr. To their right was the Red Sea glittering in the bright noon light; to their left the mountains of the Hijaz towering over them. Straight ahead they soon came to a place where the wide plain on which they were traveling was constricted by a low mountain chain that ran at right angles to their path. These were the Agharr mountains. The trail led to a gap in the mountains. Passing through the gap they entered an oasis that ran as far as the eye could see both to their left and to their right. This was a narrow valley, perhaps one hundred yards across, bounded on each side by high walls stretching up a few hundred feet. “Shazer” was certainly an apt description for this location—a valley with trees, set amid the barren landscape of Midian. They felt they had found Shazer.

After the family departed from Shazer, it seems likely that they turned east and ascended a mountain range described in the commentary for verse 15. After the following verse, Nephi’s account will not mention the Red Sea again.

14 And it came to pass that we did take our bows and our arrows, and go forth into the wilderness to slay food for our families; and after we had slain food for our families we did return again to our families in the wilderness, to the place of Shazer. And we did go forth again in the wilderness, following the same direction, keeping in the most fertile parts of the wilderness, which were in the borders near the Red Sea.

verse 13 “we did take our bows and our arrows, and go forth into the wilderness to slay food for our families” Potter and Wellington, on a later expedition, returned to wadi Agharr (Shazer) and drove up into the mountains in the area they thought the men of Lehi’s party would have gone to hunt. They spoke with Bedouins who lived in the upper end of the wadi Agharr who told them that Ibex lived in the mountains, and they still hunted them there. It may have been these very animals that Lehi and his sons went out to hunt. Here at wadi Agharr was a site that probably had the best hunting along the entire Frankincense Trail. It is the first place travelers would have been allowed to stop and pitch tents south of Midian, and as the Book of Mormon states, it is a four days’ journey from the valley of Lemuel.

“in the borders near the Red Sea” Here Nephi informs us that after leaving Shazer, the group traveled “in the borders near the Red Sea.” We have discussed previously that it is likely that the word borders refers to mountains (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 2:5), particularly the Hijaz mountains which are a range of mountains that runs along the northwestern shoreline of Arabia, dividing the interior desert valleys from the shoreline plain. Thus, the term “borders” for this mountain range is most appropriate. The group traveled up in the mountains for much of the journey through northwest Arabia which happens to be the route followed by the Frankincense Trail. See, again, the map of the Frankincense Trail.

The phrase “in the most fertile parts of the wilderness” also makes a mountainous location more likely. It is pertinent that Nephi uses the phrase “in the borders” only in the initial phase of the journey. Subsequently he drops the word “borders.” This is consistent with the mountainous terrain through which the Frankincense Trail runs for the 500 or so miles from the valley of Lemuel toward the southern coast of Arabia. From then on, the trail through Arabia was on the plains well east of the mountains.

“keeping in the most fertile parts of the wilderness, which were in the borders near the Red Sea” Nephi tells us here that while they are traveling in the mountains, there are areas of fertility and cultivation and that the Frankincense Trail passed through them. From Shazer, the group continued on the Gaza branch of the Frankincense Trail to the ancient oasis town of Dedan. Here it joined the main branch of the trail which continued either north or south.

There is another interesting concept that supports the veracity of the Book of Mormon. In ancient times, there was a 215 mile-long section of the Frankincense Trail that incorporated twelve frankincense halt (oasis) settlements toward the south between Dedan and modern-day Medina. This section was known in pre-Islam times as the Qura 'Arabiyyah, or the "Arab Villages" (Groom, Dictionary of Arabic Topography and Placenames, s.v. "Qura 'Arabiyyah"). These villages with their cultivated lands were linked together by the Frankincense Trail. These cultivated lands stood out from the surrounding vast and barren desert like a string of pearls. They are located in valleys surrounded by mountains, thus Nephi's reference to fertile parts in the "borders" or "mountains" is in harmony with the geography of this section of the trail.

Even more interesting is the name applied to all the Qura Arabiyyah villages by the prophet Mohammed. He referred to them as the Muhajirun, which means the "fertile pieces or parts of land." Muhajirun is the plural form of Hajar which means simply "farm." In other words, when Nephi referred to the "most fertile parts," he appears to have been using the actual place-name for the area in which they were traveling, the Muhajirun.

It is noteworthy that Nephi's record does not mention the family murmuring while they traveled in the most fertile parts of the land. If they had traveled anywhere else in the northwest part of Arabia, other than the unique and narrow strip of rich farmland that is found along the main Frankincense Trail, we can be sure that the impatient Laman and Lemuel would have vented strong complaints. Why would anyone want to wander off the trail, since just a few miles on either side was harsh waterless desert? Lehi and his family would have had to travel this route.

15 And it came to pass that we did travel for the space of many days, slaying food by the way, with our bows and our arrows and our stones and our slings.

verse 15 "slaying food by the way, with our bows and our arrows and our stones and our slings" Brother Hugh Nibley wrote of these weapons:

[Nephi] explicitly tells us that the hunting weapons he used were "bows . . . arrows . . . stones, and . . . slings" (1 Nephi 16:15). That is another evidence for the Book of Mormon, for [Moritz] Mainzer found that those were indeed the hunting weapons of the early Hebrews, who never used the classic hunting weapons of their neighbors, the sword, lance, javelin, and club. . . According to the ancient Arab writers, the only bow-wood obtainable in all Arabia was the nab wood that grew only . . . in the very region where, if we follow the Book of Mormon, the broken bow incident occurred. How many factors must be correctly conceived and correlated to make the apparently simple story of Nephi's bow ring true! The high mountain near the Red Sea at a considerable journey down the coast, the game on the peaks, hunting with a bow and sling, the finding of bow-wood viewed as something of a miracle by the party—what are verses 14-15 The traveling party were truly nomadic hunters. On occasion, they would establish a base camp and launch hunting expeditions from it. Also, they would hunt food “along the way.”

Joseph Smith’s only known statement about the geography of Arabia and the route of Lehi’s family shows no knowledge of the mountain chain pattern, the major trade route, or the economy and trading practices in Arabia. He simply said that the party traveled from “the Red Sea to the great Southern Ocean” (TPJS, 267), a rather simple statement when compared to Nephi’s complex narrative.

The length of the party’s journey from Jerusalem to the ocean was at least 2,100 miles. From Jerusalem to Nahom (see verse 34) was about 1,400 miles. The first 250 or so miles brought them to the first camp, their valley of Lemuel. The remaining 1,150 or so miles lay between the first camp and Nahom. There remained approximately 700 miles to traverse to their Bountiful, where they would build their ship.

The time it took to travel from the first camp to Nahom was likely less than one year. How do we know that? The answer comes from Nephi’s placement of details in his narrative. We start with observations about the marriages that took place in the camp before everyone departed (see 1 Nephi 16:7). While we cannot be entirely certain how long after the marriages the party left the camp, we would expect that one or more of the new brides became pregnant within the first months of marriage. Thus, they may have been pregnant when they set out from the camp. So, we should expect a report of childbirths. And we find it. What may be significant is that Nephi noted the first births of children only as he finished his record of later events at Nahom, not before (see 1 Nephi 17:1). We naturally conclude that the women gave birth to their first children at Nahom and that the journey from the camp to Nahom took a year or less, the length of the new brides’ pregnancies.

16 And we did follow the directions of the ball, which led us in the more fertile parts of the wilderness.

verse 16 “the more fertile parts of the wilderness” After leaving the “most fertile parts,” Nephi here reports that the family hunted with bows as they traveled in the “more fertile parts of the wilderness.” Most has now become more. The implication here is that this part of the journey was through lands which were not as fertile as the “most fertile parts.”

The Qura Arabiyyah (see the commentary for verse 14), the fertile pieces or parts, ended south of Medina, and from that point the trail changes in nature. The trail moved away from the mountains and onto the Arabia shelf. The trail south from Medina headed inland. In order to skirt the lava fields, it stayed in the desert, the entire course being approximately three hundred fifty miles to Bishah. See again the map, the Frankincense Trail. South of Medina the oases with cultivation were farther apart. After Medina, the oases were at Turbah, Bishah, Tathlith, Ranyah, and Najran, five oases over a distance of more than seven hundred fifty miles. Now, rather than an oasis every night, they were many days or weeks apart.

17 And after we had traveled for the space of many days, we did pitch our tents for the space of a time, that we might again rest ourselves and obtain food for our families.

verse 17 The trail and its spurs kept to the main wells and grasslands where caravanners could obtain food and water for their animals and themselves. The course of the Frankincense Trail can be explained in one word—water—the most precious commodity of all to the desert traveler. Lynn Hilton notes, “The history of Arabia is written in water, not ink” (In Search of Lehi’s Trail—Part One, 36). The great oases of western Arabia, Tabuk, Hijra (Madain Saleh), Dedan (Ula), Medina, Mecca, and Najran are all found on the Frankincense Trail or a branch of it. See the map of the Frankincense Trail. The eastern side of the coastal mountains forms an underground seal, trapping large pools of water in aquifers. The inland underground reservoirs, called the Basalt Aquifers, run almost the entire length of the northern and central parts of the trail, providing dependable wells and springs along its course. Indeed, the course of the Frankincense Trail was not a fluke. It was there because it offered the traveler the best chance of surviving a crossing of the great deserts. It had a reliable water supply. Because of the need for water, Lehi had no option but to travel on a proven trail.

As previously mentioned, some believe that Lehi tiptoed through the desert of Arabia undetected by the local inhabitants. After all, were the family not fugitives from justice since Nephi had killed Laban? It is simply not possible that they could have avoided everyone on the trail, as every few days the family would have needed water and when they did, they would have had to deal with the owners of the wells in order to obtain it. To attempt to steal it would have been a punishable crime. Some might argue that the Liahona could have directed Lehi through the desert without a trail. Even so, the party needed to rejoin the trail at the wells. They had no other choice. The need to find water in the desert made it relatively easy for the tribes to control passage through their lands. Even if a party attempted an unauthorized passage through the land, they would eventually need to stop for water at the precious few wells.

Although wells were still found at regular intervals along the southern Frankincense Trail, they were more widely spaced and no longer were the large sweet water wells like those found on the northern part of the trail. The wells in the south were small deep wells with dark polluted water. The commercial caravans that utilized the Frankincense Trail consisted of hundreds and even thousands of camels in one caravan. For hundreds of years prior to Lehi’s journey, caravan after caravan stopped at the same watering holes. The stench from the dung and urine, and the accompanying swarms of flies must have been revolting. If the family ran short of water, Lehi would have instituted rationing. Even worse, if their water ran out, they would have been forced to stoop to previously unthinkable depths. In such a time of crisis, Lehi would have resorted to the technique used by the Bedouins in emergencies, where they will either kill an old camel or thrust a stick down a camel's throat to make it vomit water (Musil, Manners and Customs of the Rwala Bedouins, 368). If the camel has been watered within a day or two, the liquid is tolerably drinkable but if it has not drunk for some time the liquid will be foul to the taste. Could the family have been forced by circumstances to sink to depths of drinking this liquid in order to survive?

Other adversities the family would surely have encountered on the trail would have been sandstorms, despair and loneliness, overwhelming swarms of flies, and other pests including the camel or sun spider. This four-inch long creature is a flesh-eating parasite that normally satisfies itself by hiding in the fur of camels and dining at will, yet at times they are rumored to enter tents in the night and feed on human flesh.

The Frankincense Trail also provided the other important elements needed to survive the trip through the desert: food and fresh camels. At the caravanserais, or camps along the trail, the traveler could also share news and companionship with other travelers as well as inquire about the trail ahead. It is apparent that Lehi's party met people who knew and used this trail because some in Lehi's group threatened to return home from Nahom, even though they were by then approximately fourteen hundred miles south of Jerusalem, and even though twice between the first camp and Nahom they had faced the terrifying prospect of starvation (see verses 17-32, 39).

As we might expect, the terrain through which the trail ran differed from place to place. In the south, where inhabitants harvested and packed the incense, the trail ran from populated area to populated area where cultivation was extensive because of irrigation works, extant even in those early times. Father north, past Nahom, the trail passed through a vast, sparsely settled area. It was evidently in this area that the party of Lehi came to rely heavily on their compass to lead them to the "fertile parts of the wilderness" where they could find fodder for their animals and food for themselves (see verses 14, 16).

What attitudes in other peoples might Lehi and his family have encountered on their journey from the valley of Lemuel to Bountiful? Historically the people of Arabia have been divided into two groups: the town dwellers, or settled Arabs, and the Bedouin, the desert dwellers who subsist by herding goats and sheep. Since the fodder is so sparse, the Bedouins live a nomadic life, moving from one range to another. In the towns, we may assume that Lehi would have been treated with respect, given his noble status and education. The Bedouins, on the other hand, might have presented to the family of Lehi a mixed possibility of experiences. Some Bedouins were notorious robbers. On the other hand, the Bedouin was obligated by their "law of the desert," and much of the time, the family was probably treated to a form of hospitality called the Bond of Salt. This tradition seemed to originate as a system of mutual support by which the Bedouin attempted to deal with the difficult physical circumstances of their world. To this day, the Bedouin code of hospitality requires that when a stranger comes to one's tent, the guests must be shown generous hospitality for three days. Thus, the host's tents became a restaurant and a hotel for the traveler. In return the Bedouin receives news from the outside world, and his guest today may be his host tomorrow.

verses 18-32 These verses contain the well-known broken bow incident. What is the likely site of the broken bow incident?

The mountains in this part of Arabia, south from the site of Medina, are called the Asir, which means "difficult" because of the impact of the terrain on travel. It is the only place in Arabia where the camel is replaced by the donkey as the chief pack animal. The Frankincense Trail is inland from these mountains to avoid the difficult mountains and the lava fields. It is likely that Lehi would have followed this more inland trail. Lehi left the most fertile parts with no further mention of being in or by the "borders." The "trail" here is simply a vast expanse of gravel or sand with perhaps a week to the next oasis, and virtually no landmarks. It is easy to understand why the family would need either a guide or the Liahona in order not to get lost in this wilderness. Camels leave few tracks in the gravel, and the tracks they leave in the sand are blown away when the first winds come. The word trail is used loosely to describe a route which is basically "any way that gets you from one oasis to the next." It would have been somewhere in country like this that the family stopped to rest and hunt (see the previous verse).

Lehi didn't pass through Arabia in one winter traveling season. The journey took a total of eight years. It is impossible to travel in Arabia during the hot months of May through October, and Lehi would have stopped for the summer to rest. With the arrival of the hellish summer, travel would have been very dangerous and the trade business along the frankincense route would have ground to a halt. By late spring, the temperatures along the trail are consistently over 120 degrees Fahrenheit in the shade, which made the caravan business in Arabia a mostly seasonal activity. The most likely reason Lehi stopped was that he had no choice. He was probably faced with the onslaught of the summer. Waiting out the hot season provided them with an opportunity to hunt and rest from a journey through difficult terrain.

As a candidate for the specific site for the broken bow incident, Potter and Wellington (Lehi in the Wilderness, 95-106) have suggested the site of the oasis called Bishah. See the map of the Frankincense Trail. They proffer the following arguments in favor of their suggestion: (1) Bishah is the closest trail oasis to the mountains, and thus a logical place to leave the trail to find a refuge from the heat. From the Frankincense Trail in Bishah, the high wadis of the Asir are no more than sixty-five miles distant, and the summer temperatures are relatively pleasant, for the most part remaining about eighty to ninety degrees Fahrenheit. (2) Bishah's general location is deep into southern Arabia, but still a considerable distance from Yemen where Nephi recorded that they turned east. After they left the camp where Nephi broke his bow, he wrote that they continued "traveling nearly the same course" (south-southeast) for a "space of many days" before they reached the place where they turned east (1 Nephi 16:33, 34; 17:1). (3) There is a long summer-months tradition of the permanent residents of Bishah leaving their businesses, which were mostly involved with providing support and supplies to trading caravans, and moving into the mountains. In the mountains, they tended to hunt for game and tend fruit orchards in the highlands. (4) Though camels have difficulty traveling in the mountains, two large wadis pass through Bishah from the mountains which provide a ready-made path into the mountains. Surrounded by mountain peaks, the wadis end at an altitude of approximately 6,000 feet or more. Nephi says that he "did go forth up into the top of the mountain" (1 Nephi 16:30) to hunt. This seems to imply that they were already on the slope of a mountain and that he went up to the top to hunt. From this point in the wadi, Nephi could have continued on foot to the tops of the mountains, which are up to 9,000 feet high. (5) After considerable research, Potter and Wellington learned that the best wood in southern Arabia for making bows was from the Atim tree, a type of wild olive. Most other dead woods simply broke when bent. Atim is known to have been used anciently for making bows, arrows, staffs, throwing sticks, and spears (Miller and Morris, Plants of Dhofar, 216). Atim is found in abundance on the eastern slopes of the Asir Mountains only between the altitudes of 6,000 and 7,000 feet, but the eastern mountain slopes farther south in Yemen are too dry to support the growth of trees. In fact the entire range where the Atim trees grew was seventy-two miles, north to south. However all but the very northernmost trees of the Atim range were too far from the Frankincense Trail for Nephi to have reached them. The best Atim groves were found due west of Bishah.

18 And it came to pass that as I, Nephi, went forth to slay food, behold, I did break my bow, which was made of fine steel; and after I did break my bow, behold, my brethren were angry with me because of the loss of my bow, for we did obtain no food.

verse 18 "which was made of fine steel" For years the mention of steel in the Book of Mormon (see also 1 Nephi 4:9) was considered by critics of the Book of Mormon to be an anachronism—an embarrassing mistake. An anachronism is something out of its appropriate historical timeframe. They believed that steel was not available in 600 BC. It is now well established that the Egyptians had been making steel since 1200 BC (Hugh Nibley, "Howlers in the Book of Mormon," a FARMS reprint).

It is perhaps pertinent here to comment further on anachronisms. Since the earliest days of the Church, critics of the Book of Mormon have pointed to certain alleged anachronisms—claims that ideas, words, events, persons, and objects are historically out of place—as evidence that the Book of Mormon is false.

Let us evaluate, for example, three categories of alleged anachronisms: linguistic, cultural, and doctrinal:

1. Allegations of linguistic anachronisms concern words in the Book of Mormon. For example, the book of Jacob ends with the French word for farewell, “adieu.” Please see the commentary for Jacob 7:27 for a discussion of this particular issue.

2. Critics of the Book of Mormon have noted certain cultural features of the Book of Mormon that supposedly do not square with its presumed setting in Mesoamerica. For example, according to these critics, the Book of Mormon describes ancient Americans involved in massive armed conflicts, with armies of hundreds of thousands engaged in single battles, but they claim ancient Americans were sedentary and peaceful.

This cultural criticism of the Book of Mormon is becoming more and more difficult to maintain in the light of more recent research. According to one scholar, “It has been held that the Maya pursued a peaceful existence. From the beginning of the Classical Era, however, the trading of victors on captives is represented and such scenes carved in stone increase in numbers and complexity with the passage of time” (Lothrop, Samuel K., Treasures of Ancient America [Cleveland, Ohio, 1964], 107). John L. Sorenson has also identified many fortified Mesoamerican sites indicative of a warring people that date to Book of Mormon times (An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City: Deseret Book, 1985).

Another cultural claim is that the use of the word “horse” is another striking anachronism, because no horses existed in Mesoamerica unto the time of Columbus. For a discussion of this issue, see the commentary for Enos 1:21.

3. An example of a presumed anachronism to doctrine is the early reference to the unpardonable sin (see Jacob 7:19; Alma 39:6; cf. 2 Nephi 31:14). See the discussion of this issue in the commentary for Jacob 7:19.

19 And it came to pass that we did return without food to our families, and being much fatigued, because of their journeying, they did suffer much for the want of food.

20 And it came to pass that Laman and Lemuel and the sons of Ishmael did begin to murmur exceedingly, because of their sufferings and afflictions in the wilderness; and also my father began to murmur against the Lord his God; yea, and they were all exceedingly sorrowful, even that they did murmur against the Lord.

verse 20 “also my father began to murmur” Perhaps none of us is exempt from real discouragement given prolonged exposure to adverse circumstances!

Here is yet another use of that verb “murmur” (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 2:11). That commentary mentions the frequent association in scripture of the verb murmur with the exoduses—the Israelites from Egypt and the Lehites from Jerusalem. It is suspected that Nephi had in mind a comparison with his family’s travails in the wilderness and the Israelite Egyptian exodus. Perhaps he obtained the word “murmur” from the brass plates’ account of Moses and the exodus. It is interesting to note the similarities between the Israelites’ experiences in the Sinai and the Lehites’ experiences in that wilderness. Both groups experienced hunger, and in both the problem of insufficient food was solved miraculously—for Israel, manna from heaven; for the Lehites the Liahona which showed them where to obtain game.

Both groups feared dying in the wilderness (1 Nephi 2:11; Exodus 14:11). Both groups at times wished they had died before coming into the wilderness (1 Nephi 17:20; Numbers 14:2), and both also at times wished to return back from where they had come (1 Nephi 16:35-36; Numbers 14:1-4). Both people were ultimately saved from destruction by an object—the Liahona among the Lehites and the symbolic serpent among the Israelites (Numbers 21:8-9). The similarity between these two devices is obvious. To be healed or saved from destruction one had only to exercise simple faith. The Lord guided both groups in their wilderness experience (1 Nephi 17:13-14; Exodus 6:7-8). Both Nephi and Moses received from the Lord a summons to climb a high mountain where they would receive instruction (1 Nephi 17:7; Exodus 19:20; 24:12-13). While on the mountain, Nephi received instructions on building a ship (1 Nephi 17:8), and Moses received instructions on building a tabernacle (Exodus 25:1, 8-9).

Both structures (the Liahona and the symbolic serpent) were eventually described as being of “curious workmanship” (1 Nephi 18:1-2; Exodus 35:30-33). Both groups had inappropriately raucous parties (1 Nephi 18:9; Exodus 32:4-6, 18-19, 25). Both the Israelites and the Lehites subsequently developed the custom of retelling their exodus experience to remind them of their dependence on God (see, for example Mosiah 7:19-20; Alma 36:28-29).

It is at this point in the story where Nephi emerges as the dominant leader of the expedition. He started the trip in Jerusalem as a young man (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 2:16) but soon assumed leadership of the entire group.

21 Now it came to pass that I, Nephi, having been afflicted with my brethren because of the loss of my bow, and their bows having lost their springs, it began to be exceedingly difficult, yea, insomuch that we could obtain no food.

verse 21 “having been afflicted with my brethren because of the loss of my bow” A careful reading of this phrase suggests that even Nephi had been “afflicted” or discouraged, but he seems to have made a quick recovery as evidenced by the next verse.

22 And it came to pass that I, Nephi, did speak much unto my brethren, because they had hardened their hearts again, even unto complaining against the Lord their God.

verse 22 “because they had hardened their hearts again” See the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

23 And it came to pass that I, Nephi, did make out of wood a bow, and out of a straight stick, an arrow; wherefore, I did arm myself with a bow and an arrow, with a sling and with stones. And I said unto my father: Whither shall I go to obtain food?

verse 23 “I, Nephi, did make out of wood a bow, and out of a straight stick, an arrow” Some might wonder why Nephi had to make a new arrow in addition to his new bow. Certainly, he would have had arrows already. Those familiar with archery have pointed out that arrows used with a metal bow, likely metal arrows, would have been unusable with a wooden bow (David S. Fox in a letter to FARMS and “Nephi’s Arrows Create Solid Bulls-eye,” Insights: An Ancient Window, a FARMS publication, October 1984).

Nephi’s bow had broken, and the bows of his brothers had lost their spring. We will learn that Nephi’s fashioning for himself a new bow will quickly result in his brothers’ accusing him of having ambitions to rule over them (see verses 37-38). Alan Goff taught: “Bows were symbols of political power. One thinks of Odysseus bending the bow to prove himself. An overlord would break the bow of a disobedient vassal to symbolically put the rebel in his place” (see Jeremiah 49:35) (FARMS newsletter, March 1984).

“And I said unto my father: Whither shall I go to obtain food?” Notice also how Nephi evidences his humility and respect for his father’s patriarchal authority. His asking his father where he should go to get food seems an ingenious act, since it seems to have helped his father and the others to humble themselves again.

24 And it came to pass that he did inquire of the Lord, for they had humbled themselves because of my words; for I did say many things unto them in the energy of my soul.

25 And it came to pass that the voice of the Lord came unto my father; and he was truly chastened because of his murmuring against the Lord, insomuch that he was brought down into the depths of sorrow.

verse 25 “brought down” Webster’s 1828 Dictionary of the English Language defines “to bring down” as to humble or abase.

26 And it came to pass that the voice of the Lord said unto him: Look upon the ball, and behold the things which are written.

verse 26 Messages were apparently written upon the outside of the ball. We will also learn that messages were also written on the pointers (see verse 29).

27 And it came to pass that when my father beheld the things which were written upon the ball, he did fear and tremble exceedingly, and also my brethren and the sons of Ishmael and our wives.

verse 27 We are never told what was written on the ball. Presumably it was a message of chastisement and a stern warning of the possible consequences of continued rebelliousness.

28 And it came to pass that I, Nephi, beheld the pointers which were in the ball, that they did work according to the faith and diligence and heed which we did give unto them.

verse 28 To heed is to observe, to attend to, to take notice of.

29 And there was also written upon them a new writing, which was plain to be read, which did give us understanding concerning the ways of the Lord; and it was written and changed from time to time, according to the faith and diligence which we gave unto it. And thus we see that by small means the Lord can bring about great things.

verse 29 “And there was also written upon them” The word “them” refers back to “the pointers” in the previous verse.

“And thus we see” This phrase or similar phrases are frequently used by Book of Mormon record keepers to emphasize a principle, precept, or consequence that can be learned from the event(s) or behavior(s) just discussed. It signals the reader that something important will immediately follow. Simply put, by using the phrase “and thus we see,” the writer is saying, “If you missed the point of what you just read, I will now explain the message you should have received.” Other forms of this phrase include: “And now . . . ye see”; “And now . . . we see”; “And thus we can behold”; “And thus it is”; “And we see”; “And when ye shall see”; “For I see”; “For . . . we see”; “Look . . . and see”; “Nevertheless . . . we see”; “Now we see”; “Now . . . we see”; “Seeing we know”; “Thus we may see”; “Thus we see”; “Thus . . . we see”; “We may see”; “We see”; “We shall see”; “When ye see these”; “Ye see”; “Ye shall see”; and “Ye should see.”

This phrase does not appear in other volumes of scripture, but such words as “behold,” “therefore,” “wherefore,” “because,” and sometimes, “thus saith the Lord” often function as cause-and-effect conjunctions. It becomes apparent that most writers of holy writ used some form of the “and thus we see” model (e.g., Deuteronomy 9:6; 32:39; Joshua 23:15; Judges 2:16; 1 Samuel 24:13; John 3:16; Acts 10:34-35; 1 Corinthians 10:11; Hebrews 3:19-4:2).

When “and thus we see” phrases are used, the antecedent may be only a few verses or it may be hundreds of pages.

“by small means the Lord can bring about great things” Knowing what we do today about the Liahona from the Book of Mormon story, I think if we could see and handle and make use of the Liahona, we would hardly regard it as “small means.” We would regard it as a fascinating wonder! There is evidence from the text, however, that Lehi’s party often took it for granted and did not regard it as a constant miracle. Often, they seemed even to ignore it (see the commentary for Alma 37:41).

30 And it came to pass that I, Nephi, did go forth up into the top of the mountain, according to the directions which were given upon the ball.

31 And it came to pass that I did slay wild beasts, insomuch that I did obtain food for our families.

32 And it came to pass that I did return to our tents, bearing the beasts which I had slain; and now when they beheld that I had obtained food, how great was their joy! And it came to pass that they did humble themselves before the Lord, and did give thanks unto him.

33 And it came to pass that we did again take our journey, traveling nearly the same course as in the beginning; and after we had traveled for the space of many days we did pitch our tents again, that we might tarry for the space of a time.

Leaving the camp where Nephi made his bow, the family would have taken the wadi back to the plain to rejoin the Frankincense Trail and continue south-southeast. The next oasis would have been Tathlith and then on to Najran, the northernmost of the kingdoms of southern Arabia (see the map of the Frankincense Trail).

Beyond Najran, the Frankincense Trail comes into direct contact with the southwestern corner of the infamous Rub’ al Khali, or Empty Quarter. The Arabs have a legend that when the world was made, two quarters were made for man to inhabit, one quarter was sea, and the last quarter was the Empty Quarter. No one, in written history, has ever lived there. Usually the Empty Quarter is avoided as the largest and one of the most treacherous sand dune deserts in the world. A colleague of George Potter and Richard Wellington told the following story about this area (Lehi in the Wilderness, 108-10): As a young man this colleague had intended to travel into the Rub’ al Khali. He asked his grandfather how much water he should take. “In winter take as much water as you can carry,” said the grandfather. “And what about the summer?” retorted the young man. “For the summer, I have no advice for you,” came his reply.

Even in this day and age, traveling through the Rub’ al Khali, even along established trails, is not without its perils. On August 21, 2001, the Arab News newspaper reported the death of fourteen people as they tried to cross the Empty Quarter. Apparently, they died because of a lack of water after their jeep had run out of fuel. Without the help of the Liahona to direct them away from perils, the family of Lehi would not have lasted long in this wilderness. To become lost there would have meant almost certain death. But we will learn that it is possible that Lehi's family did just that. Let us continue our discussion.

34 And it came to pass that Ishmael died, and was buried in the place which was called Nahom.

verse 34 It is notable that during the group's journey from the valley of Lemuel to the sea, Nephi seems to purposefully omit mention of all persons and places except for Nahom. Nahom is a word derived from the Hebrew root nhm which may be translated "to sigh, to beat upon the breast, to mourn, to grieve" (Hugh Nibley, The Collected Works of Hugh Nibley [Salt Lake City: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1988] volume 5, 79). An alternate translation of this same Hebrew root is "growl, groan, suffer from hunger, complain" ("Lehi's Trail and Nahom Revisited," Reexploring the Book of Mormon, edited by John W. Welch [Salt Lake City: Deseret Book, 1992] 47-50). The scholar David Damrosch says of the word:

It [the root for naham] appears twenty-five times in the narrative books of the Bible, and in every case, it is associated with death. In family settings, it is applied in instances involving the death of an immediate family member (parent, sibling, or child); in national settings, it has to do with the survival or impending extermination of an entire people. At heart, naham means "to mourn," to come to terms with a death; these usages are usually translated . . . by the verb "to comfort," as when Jacob's children try to comfort their father after the reported death of Joseph (The Narrative Covenant [San Francisco: Harper and Row, 1987] 128-29).

Book of Mormon scholars have tried to make much of the association between the meaning of the name Nahom and the situation of Lehi's group at the time of their sojourn there (see, for example, Alan Goff's article "Mourning, Consolation, and Repentance at Nahom" in Rediscovering the Book of Mormon, 92-99). All of this association would only be pertinent if the group had given the place of Ishmael's death and burial its name. Nephi's wording here in verse 34, however, suggests that Lehi's group did not concoct the name but learned it from local inhabitants. Incidentally, this verse is the first evidence that Nephi gives that they had met others while traveling, though as is evident from the foregoing, nearly constant interaction with others on the Frankincense Trail would have been necessary and expedient.

The modern-day site on the Arabian Peninsula, which seems to be the leading candidate for Nahom, is the tribal area still known as Nehem which lies about twenty-five miles northeast of Sana'a, capital of the republic of Yemen. This area is about 1,400 miles south-southeast of Jerusalem. It is the only place in Arabia where the Semitic name nhm (spelled variously as Nahm, Nehem, or Nihm) is preserved. The name has now been accounted for in the same location by means of maps and early writings to as early as AD 600 and possibly earlier. Modern Nehem includes an extensive traditional burial area with tombs dating as far back as neolithic times, long predating Lehi's day.

It is interesting to review the sequence of discovery of modern-day Nehem. Archaeologist Ross T. Christensen noticed the name Nehhm on Carsten Niebuhr's 1763 map of Arabia, in the southwest corner of the Arabian Peninsula, which is modern day Yemen. In a note published in the August 1978 Ensign, Christensen noted that "Nehhm is only a little south of the route drawn by [Lynn and Hope] Hilton," who had mapped out Lehi's route a couple years earlier (Ross T. Christensen, "The Place Called Nahom," Ensign, August 1978: 73. For the Hilton's work, see Lynn M. Hilton and Hope A. Hilton, "In Search of Lehi's Trail—Part 1: The Preparation," Ensign, September 1976: 32–54; Lynn M. Hilton and Hope Hilton, "In Search of Lehi's Trail—Part 2: The Journey," Ensign, October 1976: 34–63).

This led Warren Aston, an independent researcher from Australia, to make a series of visits to Yemen to further research the origins of the place named Nehhm / Nehem in southern Arabia. Aston found that there was only one place in all of Arabia known as Nehem, and was able to trace it through maps and historical references back to about the time of Christ, still 600 years too late for Nephi (Warren P. Aston and Michaela Knott Aston, In the Footsteps of Lehi: New Evidence of Lehi's Journey across Arabia to Bountiful, Salt Lake City, Utah: Deseret Book, 1994, 14–16).

Then, in 1999, S. Kent Brown, professor of Ancient Scripture at BYU, noticed an altar from Yemen in a museum catalog, bearing the inscription, "Bi'athar, son of Sawād, son of Naw'um, the Nihmite" (S. Kent Brown, "New Light—'The Place That Was Called Nahom': New Light from Ancient Yemen," Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 8, no. 1, 1999: 68). The term Nihmite indicates that the donor, Bi'athtar, hailed from "the Nihm region, west of Mārib" (St. John Simpson, ed., Queen of Sheba: Treasures from Ancient Yemen, London: British Museum Press, 2002, 166). Some critics have insisted that Nihm was a tribal name, but not a toponym or place name. The tribal territory, however, bears the Nihm name today, and has borne it for as far back as we can trace any Arabian place names. In common with other tribal territories in southern Arabia, Nihm is the name of the tribe and of its territory (Ibid.).

Nihm, Nehem, and Nehhm are all variant spellings of the same tribal and territorial name. Like most ancient Near Eastern languages, the south Arabian script found on the altar did not include vowels; hence Nihm / Nehem was spelled simply as NHM. Nephi's own writings would have also omitted vowels, making NHM his equivalent of Nahom. Not understanding Semitic languages, some critics have made an issue out of the different vowels, or other spelling / pronunciation differences. For a response see Neal Rappleye and Stephen Smoot, "Book of Mormon Minimalists and the NHM Inscriptions: A Response to Dan Vogel," Interpreter: A Journal of Mormon Scripture 8 (2014): 173–179.

In 2000, Warren Aston went to Mārib in Yemen, to examine the altar. He found two more altars with the identical inscription (Warren P. Aston, “Newly Found Altars from Nahom,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 10, no. 2, 2001: 57–61). The altars were believed to be an “archaic type,” in style and “dating from the 7th to 6th centuries before Christ” by the original excavator (Burkhard Vogt, “Les temples de Mārib,” in Yémen: au pays de la reine de Saba, Paris: Flammarion, 1997, 144. Translation by Gregory L. Smith.). More recent work on the chronology of ancient Arabia, however, pushes the dates farther back to approximately 800–700 BC (Warren P. Aston, “A History of NaHoM,” BYU Studies Quarterly 51, no. 2, 2012: 87). Aston has also documented writings mentioning NHM in texts from 700–300 BC (Aston, “A History of NaHoM,” 90–93).

Aston’s research also shows that the Nihm region included, or lay adjacent to, a central burial ground for outlying desert communities. It is the largest known graveyard in all of Arabia, and was actively used from about 3000 BC to AD 1000 (Aston and Aston, In the Footsteps of Lehi, 19). The very meaning of Nihm refers to the stonework used to build grave sites and other buildings, and is possibly connected to similar words in Arabic, Hebrew, and Egyptian, which refer to mourning the death of a loved one (Aston, “The Origins of the Nihm Tribe,” 147).

Writing in 2002, Terryl Givens, a Latter-day Saint historian and professor at Richmond University, marveled, “Found in the very area where Nephi’s record locates Nahom, these altars may thus be said to constitute the first actual archaeological evidence for the historicity of the Book of Mormon” (By the Hand of Mormon: The American Scripture that Launched a New World Religion, New York: Oxford University Press, 2002, 120). Since the finding of these altars, it cannot honestly be maintained that there is no archaeological evidence for the Book of Mormon.

There seems to be little reason to draw an association between the name of the place and the vocal mourning, murmuring, and rebellion of some members of Lehi’s group. It seems likely that Ishmael died before (possibly weeks or even months before) the Lehites arrived at Nahom. Hugh Nibley has pointed out that it is not uncommon for desert people to carry their dead many miles to locate the proper place of burial (Lehi in the Desert; World of the Jaredites; There Were Jaredites, 79). There is also a scriptural precedent: “And the bones of Joseph, which the children of Israel brought up out of Egypt, buried they in Shechem, in a parcel of ground which Jacob bought” (Joshua 24:32). Just as Joseph was buried in a special parcel of land, it seems only natural that the Lehites would wait until they found a proper place to bury Ishmael. Warren and Michaela Aston have shown that the place of Nehem is a few miles off the main trail that the Lehites took (“The Place Which Was Called Nahom: The Validation of an Ancient Reference to Southern Arabia” a FARMS reprint). The logical conclusion, then, is that Ishmael died along the way and was carried to Nahom. It is also clear that those in Lehi's party did not name the place Nahom. Rather, it was a place already called Nahom.

Because of the remarkable insights contained in the Book of Mormon text regarding the route from Jerusalem to the point of the group's eventual embarkation, it has been suggested that Joseph Smith had access to a literary work on ancient Arabia. Brother S. Kent Brown has researched the possibility that Joseph might have had access to such a work, and he concludes: "Any hypothesis that Joseph Smith had access to a private library that contained works on ancient Arabia is impossible to sustain" ("New Light from Arabia on Lehi's trail" in Echoes and Evidences of the Book of Mormon, 75).

35 And it came to pass that the daughters of Ishmael did mourn exceedingly, because of the loss of their father, and because of their afflictions in the wilderness; and they did murmur against my father, because he had brought them out of the land of Jerusalem, saying: Our father is dead; yea, and we have wandered much in the wilderness, and we have suffered much affliction, hunger, thirst, and fatigue; and after all these sufferings we must perish in the wilderness with hunger.

verse 35 This verse makes it clear that Lehi's group has suffered much affliction before arriving at Nahom. Obviously, the entire journey was not easy for those unaccustomed to desert travel. Yet, this verse seems to paint a picture of particularly severe suffering including "much affliction," "hunger," "thirst," and "fatigue." Here, the daughters of Ishmael indicate feelings of despair—feelings that they "must perish in the wilderness with hunger." When was this particularly severe suffering? If it was between the camp of the broken-bow incident and Nahom, then the relative silence of verse 34 is especially poignant.

Potter and Wellington have suggested a plausible scenario for what happened between the camp of the broken bow and Nahom that might explain the negative attitude of the daughters of Ishmael (Lehi in the Wilderness, 110-15). They speculate as to a great drama which might have unfolded to cause the death of Ishmael and to lead to the intervention of the Lord both to save and chasten the travelers.

The despair which the daughters of Ishmael express in this verse, after their arrival in Nahom, suggests that they may have spent some time actually lost in the wilderness in an area uninhabited by other people. The elder brothers of Nephi will refer to this wilderness as a "strange wilderness" (verse 38). Nephi will later avow that if the Lord had not blessed them, they would have died of hunger (see verse 39). But where was this "strange wilderness" where they might have become lost and placed themselves in danger of starvation? They had essentially traveled the Frankincense Trail for the length of Arabia. They had described this as being in the wilderness. What could be different about this "strange" wilderness?

Alma seems to give us some insight into this question and what might have happened to the family at this time. In Alma we read concerning the Liahona: “They were slothful, and forgot to exercise their faith and diligence and then those marvelous works ceased, and they did not progress in their journey; therefore, they tarried in the wilderness, or did not travel a direct course, and were afflicted with hunger and thirst, because of their transgressions” (Alma 37:40-41). Alma appears to be describing a time when the faith of the family was faltering, and so they wandered around in the wilderness. After leaving Najran, the family would have encountered the first huge dune desert on their journey. This is the southwest corner of the terrible desert, the Rub’ al Khali. The Frankincense Trail skirts to the west of the dunes, hugging the side of the mountains. Without the help of the Liahona—if the Lord had withheld his help due to their faithlessness—they may well have wandered east into the desert. Potter and Wellington describe a segment of the trail, south of Najran which is particularly tortuous and difficult to follow. It also seems possible that the Lord may have even directed them into the desert to chasten them. In the desert, they would have undergone extreme deprivation and hardship. Ishmael may have died during this period and his body carried with them. The sand dunes are huge and the soft sand quickly drains the strength of the traveler. It is noteworthy that Nephi will use the word “wade” to describe their journey after leaving Nahom (1 Nephi 17:7)—just as one would wade through water or soft sand. The Rub’ al Khali has sand dunes that sometimes reach seven hundred to eight hundred feet in height. The terrain of this corner of the Rub’ al Khali, its vast emptiness, and the fact that it was not traveled by the overland incense caravans, suggest this could have been considered as passing through a “strange wilderness.”

36 And thus they did murmur against my father, and also against me; and they were desirous to return again to Jerusalem.

37 And Laman said unto Lemuel and also unto the sons of Ishmael: Behold, let us slay our father, and also our brother Nephi, who has taken it upon him to be our ruler and our teacher, who are his elder brethren.

verse 37 “who has taken it upon him to be our ruler and our teacher, who are his elder brethren” Throughout the Old Testament is found the tradition of “primogeniture” which means that the first-born son ranks highest among his siblings. Undoubtedly the culture at the time of Lehi held to this tradition. This may have been an additive factor that intensified the resentment of Nephi that his older brothers obviously experienced. There are additional verses yet to come in the Book of Mormon in which the brothers of Nephi betray their chafing resentment of him. These will be mentioned as we come to them.

38 Now, he says that the Lord has talked with him, and also that angels have ministered unto him. But behold, we know that he lies unto us; and he tells us these things, and he worketh many things by his cunning arts, that he may deceive our eyes, thinking, perhaps, that he may lead us away into some strange wilderness; and after he has led us away, he has thought to make himself a king and a ruler over us, that he may do with us according to his will and pleasure. And after this manner did my brother Laman stir up their hearts to anger.

verse 38 “he worketh many things by his cunning arts, that he may deceive our eye, thinking, perhaps, that he may lead us away into some strange wilderness” A modern definition of “cunning” would be something like “skill in achieving one’s ends by deceit or evasion.” Interestingly Webster’s 1828 Dictionary of the English Language defines “cunning” as “knowing; skillful; experienced; well-instructed.” Given this latter definition, it would be reasonable to conclude that Laman did not accuse Nephi of using some type of creative trickery to deceive them. Rather, he most likely felt that Nephi was using skills or knowledge that he had acquired, to deceive them.

Laman accuses Nephi of making the Liahona for the purpose of deceiving his family. Nephi will later testify that it was made by the hand of the Lord (1 Nephi 18:12; 2 Nephi 5:12). Alma the younger will also so testify (Alma 37:38-39).

It is interesting, here in this verse, to understand the thinking of Laman and Lemuel—especially to view the episode of the family’s traveling in the “strange wilderness” (described in the commentary for verse 35) through the eyes of Laman—to come to understand his interpretation of Nephi’s motives. As the family found themselves in desperate trouble in the “strange wilderness,” it is natural and appropriate that Nephi would have taken charge (see Mosiah 10:13). He had done so at the camp of the broken bow. No doubt, through his skill, the family was saved, yet Laman interprets Nephi’s leadership as a desire to control and to impose his rule over the group. Laman states in this verse that Nephi had led them away into a strange wilderness. Away from what? Had they not been in the wilderness for some considerable time? From what could have Nephi led them away? The answer would seem to be the trail. If they had stayed on the trail to the probable site of Nahom, they would have traveled a stretch of the trail adequately supplied with oases, and they would not have been starving at the time they reached Nahom. Leaving the trail would have separated the family from other travelers, effectively isolating the family. Laman felt that Nephi had manipulated their circumstances in order to produce the ideal setting in which to stage his takeover bid and to realize his ambition to rule the group. Note that Laman used the past tense “has led us away” and “he has thought to make himself a king and a ruler over us” evidencing that this event had already taken place by the time they tarried at Nahom.

39 And it came to pass that the Lord was with us, yea, even the voice of the Lord came and did speak many words unto them, and did chasten them exceedingly; and after they were chastened by the voice of the Lord they did turn away their anger, and did repent of their sins, insomuch that the Lord did bless us again with food, that we did not perish.

verse 39 “even the voice of the Lord came and did speak many words unto them” How did the Lord speak to them? Directly in an audible voice? Through Nephi or Lehi? Through the Holy Spirit? We are obviously not told. It is unusual for wicked people to be addressed directly and audibly by the voice of the Lord.

“and did chasten them exceedingly” The word chasten here means scold or reprimand.

This verse provides evidence that the Liahona had ceased to work again perhaps because of the rebellious spirit among those in the traveling party.

1 Nephi Chapter 17

1 Nephi 17 Building the ship

This chapter contains the account of the sojourn in the land called Bountiful.

1 And it came to pass that we did again take our journey in the wilderness; and we did travel nearly eastward from that time forth. And we did travel and wade through much affliction in the wilderness; and our women did bear children in the wilderness.

verse 1 “and we did travel nearly eastward from that time forth” It is pertinent that from the ancient tribal area of Nihm (the likely location of Nahom) almost all of the ancient roads turned east, veering from the general north-south direction of the Frankincense Trail. The trail beyond Nihm was another part of the ancient incense trail that ran east and west.

“we did travel and wade through much affliction in the wilderness” The main trail east from Nahom would have passed through the capitals of the incense kingdoms and ended in the port of Cana (Qana) (see the map of the Frankincense trail). The downside to this trail is that all of the capitals extracted a levy from the caravans as they passed and that route would have been “enormously expensive” (Kiernan, Unveiling of Arabia, 31). Consequently, there existed a number of “shortcuts” or secondary trails. Though cheaper, these trails were more difficult going, with only a few wells and virtually no caravanserais or camps. Consequently, these trails were not heavily travelled, in fact some were likely little used in Lehi’s day.

During their crossing of this isolated section of the trail, Nephi will note that the meat was eaten raw. The Lord instructed the family not to make much fire (1 Nephi 17:12). Hugh Nibley studied the accounts of the early explorers of the Arabian sands and concluded that the family did not have fires because of fear of being raided by unfriendly Bedouin tribes (“Lehi in the Desert,” Improvement Era [May 1950]: 382). The need to avoid the Bedouin raiders was imperative, as they were an aggressive and brutal people. Fires can be seen for great distances in the desert. While traveling south from Jerusalem, Nephi never mentions that they did not use fires. This earlier part of the trail, from Jerusalem to Nahom, was well used in Nephi’s time, and payment of a toll guaranteed protection from the Bedouins. However, the trail that led eastward from Nahom to Bountiful was a different story. Apparently raiding by Arab tribesmen increased whenever there was an economic downturn (Salibi, History of Arabia, 31-32). As the Bedouins became impoverished they turned more and more to raiding which subsidized their already meager income (Ibid., 9-10). Historical evidence suggests that about the time Lehi was leaving Jerusalem, economic forces were driving the Bedouins on the northern part of the trail to increase their raiding. In response to their incursions, King Nebuchadrezzar II launched an attack in 599 BC on the Arab tribes (al-Sudairi, Desert Frontier of Arabia, 31). If the same conditions existed on the southern part of the trail, then we see why Lehi was told not to make fires.

This last leg of the journey would have been the toughest yet. Nephi informs us in this verse, “And we did travel and wade through much affliction in the wilderness.” But after eight years in the wilderness, the family finally reached the land they called Bountiful where more drama would unfold.

It is worth mentioning that the culture of Arabia might well have had another influence upon Lehi and his party, particularly so upon Nephi. While it is possible to find in the Near East many examples of ancient writing on metal plates, those found in south Arabia are particularly relevant for comparative purposes. Recent decades have seen a number of discoveries of writing on hard surfaces from south Arabia (L’Arabie antique de Karib’ila Mahomet, 162-66). Examples come from ancient temples, indicating perhaps that people understood such writing to be connected in some way to the realm of the divine. They apparently chose hard surfaces—metal and stone—for writing because of durability. Skilled Arabian artisans had adopted and developed the skills to inscribe important records on metal surfaces. Of course, the record on the brass plates of Laban would have served as the chief model for Nephi’s later efforts to keep records on metal plates. Even so, the artisans and scribes who created records on stone and metal in all the major centers of south Arabia may also have impressed Nephi, who wrote his narrative on metal plates only after passing through Arabia. As mentioned previously, there are indications that members of the party, particularly Lehi, kept a diary of the Arabian trek, but on a perishable material, not on metal plates.

2 And so great were the blessings of the Lord upon us, that while we did live upon raw meat in the wilderness, our women did give plenty of suck for their children, and were strong, yea, even like unto the men; and they began to bear their journeyings without murmurings

3 And thus we see that the commandments of God must be fulfilled. And if it so be that the children of men keep the commandments of God he doth nourish them, and strengthen them, and provide means whereby they can accomplish the thing which he has commanded them; wherefore, he did provide means for us while we did sojourn in the wilderness.

verse 3 See the commentary for 1 Nephi 3:7.

To sojourn is to dwell.

4 And we did sojourn for the space of many years, yea, even eight years in the wilderness.

verse 4 The distance from Jerusalem to Southern Arabia then east to Bountiful is a distance of about 2,100 miles. Then you might add an additional 1,000 miles or so journeyed by the four sons in their two additional round trips from the valley of Lemuel to Jerusalem!

There are hints in the text that this next stage of the journey between Nahom and the ocean was not only the most difficult, but also required the longest time. The distance from Nahom eastward to the seacoast—the party’s Bountiful—was seven hundred miles or less. This was about half the distance that the party had already traveled from Jerusalem to Nahom. However, apparently the party spent the bulk of its “eight years in the wilderness” on this leg of the journey.

There is no clear evidence that, during the era of Lehi, an established incense trail ran east of Shabwah (Shabwa), the major south Arabian city where caravans stopped to allow grading and taxing of incense coming from that general area (see the map of the Frankincense Trail). Hence, Lehi and his party may not have had access to a trail taken by camel drivers and their cargoes. Presumably their party followed a course that snaked eastward between the sands of the Rub’ al Kahli (the “Empty Quarter”) on the north and the craggy landscape on the south. In addition, it is now known that the tribes in the region east of Shabwah were in a constant state of tension with one another and that a person could not cross tribal boundaries without having to negotiate afresh the terms of safe conduct. Such negotiations could and often did lead to temporary servility (submissiveness) for the traveler among local tribes. Moreover, there were no assured sources of food in the region east of Shabwah except flocks and herds that belonged to tribesmen. Agriculture was little practiced.

Such challenges fit the vivid reminiscences of the party’s troubles preserved by writers other than Nephi. These later Book of Mormon authors had access to the fuller account of the party’s journey preserved on the large plates of Nephi. For instance, King Benjamin recalls that at certain points along the way party members “were smitten with famine” (Mosiah 1:17). We do have the account of the family’s suffering from lack of food on the way to Nahom, but the word famine sounds a more ominous note. Alma writes of Lehi’s party suffering “from famine” as well as “from sickness, and all manner of diseases” (Alma 9:22). Alma also records that party members “did not travel a direct course, and were afflicted with hunger and thirst” (Alma 37:42). We should probably understand most of these difficulties described by Benjamin and Alma to have befallen the group after they turned “nearly eastward” at Nahom (verse 1).

In almost identical language, both Amaron and Alma write of God’s preserving Lehi’s party from “the hands of their enemies” (Omni 1:6; Alma 9:10). Who were these enemies? The most attractive possibility is that they were people encountered on the leg of the journey between Nahom and the seacoast, even though Nephi himself does not mention enemies. Nephi’s abbreviated account of crossing south Arabia from Nahom to the seacoast consists of only four verses, 1 Nephi 17:1-4. Alma seems to tie a recollection of ancestors who were “strong in battle” to Lehi’s party, whom God “delivered . . . out of the land of Jerusalem” (Alma 9:22). If so, then we might well imagine that the party struggled against more than the harsh realities of the desert as they forged on toward the seacoast. One of their biggest challenges may have come in dealing with tribesmen whom they met. This impression matches what we know of tribal troubles in this part of Arabia (The peace brokered by the British representative Harold Ingrams, for example, in 1937 included the signatures of “1400 tribal leaders”—J. G. T. Shipman, “The Hadhramaut,” Asian Affairs 71/2 [1984]: 159).

Presumably, Lehi’s company used camels to carry their cumbersome gear and essential possessions as well as themselves. Traveling 20 to 25 miles a day, the capacity pace for laden camels, Lehi could have covered the distance between Jerusalem and suggested locations for Bountiful in weeks rather than eight years. The company obviously camped for lengthy periods or was otherwise detained during the journey. To account for some of the added years of “sojourning,” S. Kent Brown has conjectured that Lehi’s family experienced periods of servitude or bondage among larger desert clans and that the family may have traded food and water, or more likely their skills in reading and writing, for their freedom (From Jerusalem to Zarahemla, 55-67). Perhaps longer periods of camping and resting occurred during the women’s advanced stages of pregnancy and subsequent childbirth. Nephi recorded that the women, including Sariah, gave birth to one or more children during their eight years in the wilderness (see 1 Nephi 17:1; 18:7). One scholar described the desert birthing bed as “a mantle or tent-cloth spread upon the earth.” Older women among the clan typically assisted the mother by taking her away from the camp—“apart in the wilderness,” to be delivered (Charles M. Doughty, Travels in Arabia Deserta, New York: Random House, 1936, 268).

5 And we did come to the land which we called Bountiful, because of its much fruit and also wild honey; and all these things were prepared of the Lord that we might not perish. And we beheld the sea, which we called Irreantum, which, being interpreted, is many waters.

verse 5 “much fruit and also wild honey” Among the classic writings on ancient Arabia are those of Pliny the Elder (AD 23-79). His book, Natural History (6.32) reports that “the Sabaei” people of south Arabia produced “honey and wax.”

“And we beheld the sea, which we called Irreantum” Is this name for the ocean, “Irreantum,” merely a name that Joseph invented? While the word Irreantum might sound strange to modern readers, some scholars have proposed at least two plausible origins for the word. The first derives from a combination of elements found in West and South Semitic languages and would mean “somewhat literally, ‘abundant watering of completeness,’ or ‘fully abundant waters’” (online at <https://onoma.lib.byu.edu/onoma/index.php/IRREANTUM>). The second proposed origin for the word

Irreantum is Egyptian, and when parsed “the elements would mean ‘great watercourse of all’” (online at <https://onoma.lib.byu.edu/onoma/index.php/IRREANTUM>).

While we cannot be certain, the evidence reviewed by these scholars suggests at least a plausible ancient origin for the word Irreantum that is authentic to the ancient Near East.

6 And it came to pass that we did pitch our tents by the seashore; and notwithstanding we had suffered many afflictions and much difficulty, yea, even so much that we cannot write them all, we were exceedingly rejoiced when we came to the seashore; and we called the place Bountiful, because of its much fruit.

verse 6 The group has now arrived at a place called Bountiful which is likely on the southern coast of the Arabian Peninsula. From its description, it is a fertile place. Here Nephi will build a ship that will carry the group to the New World. In Joseph Smith’s day, and for more than a century afterward, it seemed impossible that such a place could exist in barren Arabia. Today an ideal general location is known to exist on the southern coast of Arabia, the Dhofar region of southern Oman.

Is it possible for us to narrow our quest for Bountiful to a specific area within the Dhofar region? Before considering specific suggestions, let us summarize the characteristics of the place called Bountiful:

1. Bountiful was “nearly eastward” from Nahom (see 1 Nephi 17:1).
2. Overland access to Bountiful had to be possible from the interior desert. Access to the southern coast from the interior of Arabia is usually difficult and in some places impossible. The Qara mountains hinder access to much of the most fertile region of coastal Arabia where we would expect Bountiful to be situated.
3. Bountiful was fertile. The Qara Mountains form an abrupt transition “between two worlds.” As Lehi and his family reached the top of the mountain pass, they would have left behind them the desert, and before them were the lush tree-lined slopes of Bountiful. Nephi describes Bountiful as yielding “meat” (perhaps small game that could be hunted), “much fruit,” and “honey” (see 1 Nephi 17:5, 6; 18:6).
4. Bountiful had to be suitable for a long encampment and for shipbuilding. It would likely have taken Nephi and his brothers at least a year to construct a ship substantial enough to carry as many as thirty people two-thirds of the way around the globe. Thus, the site for Bountiful must have been capable of sustaining a small colony for at least one and perhaps a few years.

For several months, each year during the monsoon, heavy seas, fog, and rain envelope the southern Arabian coastline, making outdoor activities like shipbuilding difficult. Presumably Nephi and his brothers stopped work on the ship during this period of the year or perhaps Bountiful offered enough shelter to allow them to continue.

5. Timber had to be readily available. To build his ship, Nephi would have needed access to sufficient timber of the right types and sizes to fashion a seaworthy vessel (see 1 Nephi 18:1, 2, 6).

6. A year-round supply of fresh water has to be available for the camp.

7. Bountiful had a prominent mountain. In the Book of Mormon text, Nephi refers to this mountain as “the mount” (1 Nephi 17:7; 18:3) which was close enough to the camp-site that Nephi could go there to “pray off” (1 Nephi 18:3).

8. Bountiful likely had cliffs overlooking the ocean. Laman and Lemuel attempted to kill Nephi by throwing him into the sea (see 1 Nephi 17:48). This seems to imply cliffs overlooking the ocean, since Nephi’s life would not have been threatened by being thrown into the ocean from a beach.

9. Bountiful had a source of ore which could be smelted for the making of tools, along with flint used in starting fires (see 1 Nephi 17:9-11, 16). Nephi did not need a large deposit of copper or iron ore for his tools. Fifty pounds or so would have met his needs. In February 2000, geologists from BYU discovered two large deposits of iron ore in the Dhofar region of Oman. And they both lie within a few days’ walk of any campsite along the seacoast. Although iron ore in the amounts that make mining profitable do not occur in southern Oman, ore does occur in sufficient quantities that Nephi could easily have traveled to a substantial deposit and extracted enough to smelt for his tools. Thus, the natural occurrence of iron ore in the Dhofar area offered a clear solution to Nephi’s need for tools.

10. Bountiful had to have suitable winds and currents to carry Nephi’s ship out into the Arabian Sea and eventually into the Indian Ocean. Apparently at a particular season of the year, Arab voyagers from the Red Sea and the southern Arabian coast routinely sailed eastward to southern India and Ceylon. Nephi could have used the same winds to sail across the Indian Ocean. Furthermore, every few years the marine and meteorological phenomenon, popularly known as the El Niño effect, changed the pattern of winds across the Pacific so that travel in an easterly direction, even as far as America, becomes possible for a period of a year or two (George F. Hourani, Arab Seafaring in the Indian Ocean in Ancient and Early Medieval Times [Princeton, N. J.: Princeton University Press, 1951] and David L. Clark, “Lehi and El Niño: A Method of Migration,” BYU Studies 30/3 [1990], 57-65).

As to the specific site of Bountiful within the Dhofar region of southern Oman, two specific sites have been suggested:

Khor Kharfot

The first was described by Warren and Michaela Aston (“The Arabian Bountiful Discovered?” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, volume 7, number 1, 1998, 4-11). It is Khor Kharfot (“Fort Port”), a unique and fertile place along the coastline of the southern Arabian Peninsula. It lies at the end of a long, narrow ravine, the Wadi Sayq ("River Valley"). This wadi provides the only access from the interior desert to the coast through the Qara Mountains, though that access would have been difficult along this narrow and boulder strewn wadi. Let us compare this site with the characteristics of Bountiful outlined above.

Khor Kharfot is located almost due east of Nehem, the modern-day site which is the leading candidate for ancient Nahom (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 16:34).

Khor Kharfot is fertile. Trees grow naturally, some bearing fruit, and there are nesting birds, a variety of small animals, bees that provide wild honey (Oral report at BYU by Professors Terry B. Ball, Loreen Wolstenhulme, and Gary Baird on Friday, December 3, 1999), and abundant fish.

Ruins at Khor Kharfot, which have yet to be excavated, appear to indicate that at least one small community lived there for some time.

Numerous large trees are still found at Khor Kharfot almost down to the ocean, and they were certainly even more plentiful in the past. Drought in recent centuries has reduced the natural forests that formerly covered the sides of the valley and the surrounding mountains. Timber from several species has been identified at Kharfot—especially the sycamore fig and the tamarind, which would have been suitable for building a seagoing craft.

Khor Kharfot contains the largest source of fresh water on the Arabian coast. In this particular coastal area, there are streams and springs which would have provided ample water.

And what of Bountiful's requirement for a mountain? Fittingly, at Khor Kharfot the highest and most prominent peak is isolated directly above the little western plateau where evidence of former settlement is most abundant and on which Lehi's family would have been most likely to camp. At Khor Kharfot, there are also dangerous cliffs averaging 200 feet high which overlook the ocean.

Preliminary investigations in Khor Kharfot have proved promising as to the availability of sufficient iron ore for the making of tools.

The Astons feel that another criterion for Bountiful is that it be uninhabited by other peoples at the time Lehi and his family camped there. At least the Book of Mormon text mentions no such interactions with other people. Preliminary investigations of archaeological evidences suggest only intermittent periods of human habitation at Kharfot. Because of the rugged coastline, overland travel to Kharfot along the coast is very difficult. This is probably the primary reason why such an attractive and fertile place as Kharfot has remained uninhabited for most of the time, including the present day. It is very isolated, and difficult to reach by any route, except the sea. This relative isolation of Khor Kharfot may be why Laman and Lemuel assisted with the shipbuilding and seem not to have objected to leaving Bountiful.

Khor Rori

The second candidate for Bountiful is Khor Rori and was first described by George Potter and Richard Wellington (Lehi in the Wilderness, 121-37). It is located about sixty miles to the east of Khor Kharfot on the Salalah coast of southern Arabia. Potter and Wellington emphasize that at the time of Lehi, Dhofar was a land of great wealth due to the groves of Frankincense trees.

Potter and Wellington also suggest that Lehi and his family were probably not alone in Bountiful, but took their place there as part of a larger community of seafarers, farmers, business people, traders, and craftsmen. They write, “It would have been highly unlikely for Lehi to have entered southern Arabia undetected by the local inhabitants. Historian William J. Hamblin reminds us of the geo-political environment of Lehi’s southern Arabia. He states that ‘there they would have necessarily made contact with the local inhabitants, if only because every well in the region would have been owned by some tribe or city, and strangers would not have been allowed to drink from the wells without permission’” (Ibid., 124).

The text of the Book of Mormon also appears to support the idea that Bountiful was populated and that the family had interaction with the inhabitants. The implication is that Nephi was working within a community that had carpenters and shipbuilders. A common definition of the word wilderness is an area devoid of signs of human life. Nephi never refers to Bountiful as a wilderness. Yet another indication from the Book of Mormon that Bountiful was populated is Nephi’s use of the word land to define it, which connotes ownership and habitation, e.g., “land of Jerusalem” (1 Nephi 2:11), the land of Egypt (1 Nephi 5:14), and the “land of our inheritance” (1 Nephi 3:22). Every time Nephi uses the word land it is in the context of a people. Finally, Bountiful’s “much fruit” implies cultivated fields and orchards. Most farmers will tell us that wild fruit trees do not produce “much fruit.” Cultivated fruit trees do. A neighboring town to Khor Rori was Moscha (the modern-day Taqah)—see the map of the Frankincense Trail.

Let us now consider some evidences for Khor Rori’s being the land of Bountiful.

As with Khor Kharfot, Khor Rori is approximately 3 degrees off true east from the point in Yemen where the eastward trail to Dhofar splits off the main Frankincense Trail.

A mountain range runs parallel to the southern coast of Arabia from Yemen to Dhofar, the Qara Mountains. In order to reach the coast from the trail the family would have had to cross the mountains. Camels with provisions would only have been able to cross the mountains on established trails through passes. The mountains in southern Oman are limestone mountains that have been eroded by rainwater into virtually impassable flowstone formations. Maps of the ancient trade routes in southern Arabia show only one pass through the mountains of southern Oman to the coast. This route goes through the Thammarit Pass and is now the modern Salalah/Thammarit road. This route is east of Wadi Sayq and has been in use for thousands of years.

The soil of the Salalah coastal plain is remarkably rich and is said to be capable of producing three crops in a year. There is evidence to suggest that the Salalah plain has been cultivated for thousands of years—dating back to the third Millennium BC (Doe, Southern Arabia, 13; Allen, Oman: The Modernization of the Sultanate, 21-25). Some of the tropical fruits and vegetables grown on the Salalah plain in older times were probably introduced through ancient trade. Omani sailors have traded with India as far back as 1000 BC (Tosi, “Early Maritime Cultures of the Arabian Gulf,” 101). The Salalah plain has several khors, or inlets, and some of them are fresh water, being filled predominantly from streams and wells coming forth from the mountains. Irrigation from the streams that feed these freshwater khors might have been used by Lehi’s family to irrigate their crops.

The reference to “wild honey” seems at first odd as we are used to bee-keeping as a more efficient means of collecting honey. In Dhofar, however, honey is still collected from wild bees. To this day, these Omani bees are considered only “somewhat” managed. The Salalah honey is not sold in shops, but rather in pharmacies. It commands high prices, being considered possessed of numerous medicinal properties. The honey from various parts of Dhofar differs in color and flavor depending on which flowers and plants grew where the bees feed. Bees are rare in Arabia, and the Dhofar coast is one of the few places where they are found.

The Lord is specific about one particular mountain. Potter and Wellington have not been able to identify any specific peak from Nephi’s account, but there are a number of possibilities. Closest to Khor Rori are the mountains of the Jabal Al Qara range, bounding Wadi Dharbat. Approximately 3,000 feet, it is the highest mountain in southern Oman and is mentioned by name in Genesis 10:30, where it is known as “Sephar, a mount of the east.”

We do not actually know what type of ore Nephi was shown by the Lord. The two most likely possibilities are iron ore and copper ore. Bronze (a metal alloy containing some copper) tools have been found in Dhofar dating to 1100 BC (These are on display in the Salalah Museum of National Heritage and Culture). See the commentary on iron ore above.

Nephi tells us, “I did smite two stones together that I might make fire” (1 Nephi 17:11). Flint is usually the stone of choice for making sparks. Flint deposits have been found at Shisur (a town Lehi’s family would have encountered on the trail before coming through the mountain pass). Nephi could have picked these stones up as he passed through the city.

Since large timbers are imperative for building a ship, Nephi had to acquire them. He had only two choices. One way was to purchase imported wood. The other way would be to find a locally grown source. Nephi needed large timbers made of hardwood to build a seaworthy ship. The hardwood species found on the foothills of Dhofar tend to be small and do not produce the large timbers necessary for the construction of large ships. However, there is one notable exception. In wadi Dharbat, a large upper valley to Khor Rori located about seven miles away, a unique combination of environmental factors—exceptional soil and high rainfall—have combined. They have resulted in the only large trees in Dhofar. Indeed, the locals call wadi Dharbat “the valley of the big trees.” It may be that in Nephi’s time, this small but ideal growing area produced enough hardwood trees for him to have harvested large timbers for his ship. Other possible sources of large timbers might have been mango trees or coconut palms.

Nephi used the skins of beasts to make a bellows. When loading the ship they took “meat from the wilderness,” (1 Nephi 18:6). Perhaps there is a distinction between these two. Since “beasts” were different from “meat from the wilderness,” it is possible that “beasts” were not wild. Dhofar is the only place in Arabia where cattle could have been found. The earliest settlers of Dhofar took cattle into that area long before Lehi’s time (Clapp, Road to Ubar, 221-22). The mountains are now populated by a tribe known as the Jibalis, the mountain people. They speak a different language than the Arabs of Oman. They make their living by raising cattle and camels, and to this day their livestock still graze the mountains of Dhofar. It would appear to make sense that if leather were available for sale, it would be easier for Nephi to have used that than go off and hunt beasts, skin them, and then make a bellows.

Regarding the “meat from the wilderness,” there are many wild animals in the Dhofar mountains. Dhofar contains twenty species of wild mammal. These include “the caracul, the leopard, the Arabian gazelle, and the ibex which appear in small numbers and are vulnerable to hunting” (Vine, Heritage of Oman, 50). Ancient cave art in wadi Dharbat shows large wild animals (Hanna and Al-Belushi, Caves of Oman, 100,103). The lakes in wadi Dharbat would have served as watering holes for the animals and an ideal place for Nephi to have hunted, only ten miles from the harbor in Khor Rori. Several species of wild birds also exist there.

We will read in verse 48, “And now it came to pass that when I said these words they were angry with me, and were desirous to throw me into the depths of the sea.” This was no boisterous romp among loving siblings. This was an attempt on Nephi’s life. There are cliffs near Khor Rori that are high and overhang deep water. They offer no beach where Nephi might have been able swim to safety, but only treacherous rocks where he would have been pounded by the surf. What truly separates the cliffs at Khor Rori from those of any other spot along the Dhofar shoreline is that they consist of an odd set of two giant rock promontories that reach into the sea some one hundred fifty yards from the natural shoreline. It is apparently the only place along the Omani coast where someone could literally be thrown into deep water.

Unlike the site at Khor Kharfot, in Khor Rori they would have discarded their tents and lived in a house among the other inhabitants of the area.

Perhaps the most compelling feature of Khor Rori is that it is a protected harbor where large ocean-going ships could be built and launched. Indeed, Khor Rori was the site of ancient Omani shipbuilding well before the time of Lehi. In Khor Rori, Nephi could find all of the resources for building a large ship including materials, help in learning the art of ship building and sailing, skilled labor, and especially an appropriate place for building and launching a large ship. A large sailing vessel simply cannot be built and launched from a shallow beach which characterizes the coast at Khor Kharfot. Ordinarily a hull of the ship is built on “ways,” or greased logs. Once the hull was finished, the massive structure could be gently lowered along the ways into the water. The hull can then be checked for water tightness. Then the remainder of the ship—the deck, fittings, ballast, provisions, anchor, etc.—is built while the ship is floating on the water. Thus, the building site has to be a harbor protected from storms. But how can we be sure Khor Rori is where Nephi build his ship? Could there have been other natural harbors in Dhofar where Nephi could have built a ship? George Potter and Richard Wellington (Lehi in the Wilderness) studied these questions by visiting ten inlets besides Khor Rori. Their findings were clear and definitive in showing that the strongest candidate for Nephi’s harbor was Khor Rori. Apparently Khor Rori has been in use as a port as far back as 3000 BC. The great strengths of Khor Rori as a port include natural breakwaters consisting of huge cliffs and surrounding hills that provide protection from both the summer southwest monsoons and the winter northeast monsoons. Thus, the port could be used for shipbuilding and shipping all year, unlike any other place in Dhofar.

There is evidence to suggest that Dhofar was the same area also known as Tarshish. The expression “ships of Tarshish” was used in ancient times to denote ships of the largest size, suitable for long voyages. The frankincense port at Kohr Rori would have been a main port between India and Egypt.

Joseph Smith could have known almost nothing about ancient Arabia when he began translating the Book of Mormon. In 1830, it was known to people in the west as only a desert wasteland. Yet the narrative of the journey of the party of Lehi through ancient Arabia, written by their son Nephi, fits with what we know about the Arabian Peninsula literally from one end to the other, for their journey began in the northwest and ended in the southeast sector. Nephi’s narrative faithfully reflects the intertwining of long stretches of barren wilderness with pockets of verdant, lifesaving vegetation. The Book of Mormon account shines as a radiant beam across the centuries, inviting us to adopt its more important message of spiritual truths as our own.

7 And it came to pass that after I, Nephi, had been in the land of Bountiful for the space of many days, the voice of the Lord came unto me, saying: Arise, and get thee into the mountain. And it came to pass that I arose and went up into the mountain, and cried unto the Lord.

verse 7 “get thee into the mountain” Mountains have always served as natural temples when no temple is available. There, prophets have communicated with the Lord and have received revelation.

8 And it came to pass that the Lord spake unto me, saying: Thou shalt construct a ship, after the manner which I shall show thee, that I may carry thy people across these waters.

verse 8 “that I may carry thy people across these waters” Some students of the Book of Mormon have paid particular attention to the use of the word people here instead of families. They have wondered if the traveling group included more than simply the families of Lehi and Ishmael and Zoram. Could they have with them others, especially household servants which had worked for them in Jerusalem? It would have been the norm for a wealthy man of Lehi’s social stature to have had household servants, and it is hard to imagine Lehi’s deserting them in a city that was about to be destroyed. There is some likelihood that Lehi took with him a large party, though they are never mentioned. Zoram was a servant who was mentioned. We may keep in mind that in that patriarchal society, servants were never mentioned. Zoram had been freed, and that may be why he was mentioned. Keep in mind that we never hear the names of Nephi’s sisters, any of Ishmael’s daughters, and even the name of Ishmael’s wife is never recorded.

9 And I said: Lord, whither shall I go that I may find ore to molten, that I may make tools to construct the ship after the manner which thou hast shown unto me?

10 And it came to pass that the Lord told me whither I should go to find ore, that I might make tools.

verses 9-10 As has been discussed above, Nephi did not need a large deposit of copper or iron ore for his tools. Fifty pounds or so would have met his needs. In February 2000, geologists from Brigham Young University discovered two large deposits of iron ore in the Dhofar region of Oman (W. Revell Phillips, “Metals of the Book of Mormon,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 9/1 [2000]: 36-43). And they both lie within a few days’ walk of any campsite along the seacoast. Although iron ore in the amounts that make mining profitable do not occur in southern Oman, ore does occur in sufficient quantities that Nephi could easily have traveled to a substantial deposit and extracted enough to smelt for his tools. Thus, the natural occurrence of iron ore in the Dhofar area offered a clear solution to Nephi’s need for tools.

11 And it came to pass that I, Nephi, did make a bellows wherewith to blow the fire, of the skins of beasts; and after I had made a bellows, that I might have wherewith to blow the fire, I did smite two stones together that I might make fire.

12 For the Lord had not hitherto suffered that we should make much fire, as we journeyed in the wilderness; for he said: I will make thy food become sweet, that ye cook it not;

verse 12 Why had they not been allowed to build fires in the wilderness? We have already discussed one reason. That is, by not building fires they may have remained less conspicuous, thus avoiding contact with unfriendly groups (Nibley, Lehi in the Desert, 72-77). Another possible reason is that the Lord might have forbidden the use of fire to teach the traveling party dependence on him—that he was leading and protecting and enabling them. In the following verse, the Lord is quoted as saying, “Ye shall know that it is by me that ye are led.”

13 And I will also be your light in the wilderness; and I will prepare the way before you, if it so be that ye shall keep my commandments; wherefore, inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments ye shall be led towards the promised land; and ye shall know that it is by me that ye are led.

14 Yea, and the Lord said also that: After ye have arrived in the promised land, ye shall know that I, the Lord, am God; and that I, the Lord, did deliver you from destruction; yea, that I did bring you out of the land of Jerusalem.

verse 14 Shortly after the group arrived in the western hemisphere, Lehi informed them that he had seen in vision the destruction of Jerusalem, and he learned by revelation that if they had remained in Jerusalem, Lehi and his family would have perished (see 2 Nephi 1:4).

15 Wherefore, I, Nephi, did strive to keep the commandments of the Lord, and I did exhort my brethren to faithfulness and diligence.

16 And it came to pass that I did make tools of the ore which I did molten out of the rock.

17 And when my brethren saw that I was about to build a ship, they began to murmur against me, saying: Our brother is a fool, for he thinketh that he can build a ship; yea, and he also thinketh that he can cross these great waters.

verse 17 “he also thinketh that he can cross these great waters” It is not surprising that Laman and Lemuel, in their faithless state, were skeptical and frightened about Nephi’s proposed voyage. Keep in mind that in that day people of the Old World must have had a profound fear of the great oceans. Doubtless many feared that one who ventured out onto the ocean was in real danger of never returning. Columbus would not succeed in dispelling this fear, by making his journey from the Old World to the New, for another twenty-one centuries!

The seafaring people of Oman limited their sea voyages to India and Persia and the Mediterranean, and the seafaring crews usually kept land in sight. To head out into the great ocean was quite another matter. As far we can tell, Nephi would have been aware that this is something no one had ever done before! It might be compared today to being commanded to build a spaceship and setting out, with one's family, to Mars.

18 And thus my brethren did complain against me, and were desirous that they might not labor, for they did not believe that I could build a ship; neither would they believe that I was instructed of the Lord.

verse 18 The thoughtful reader is now brought to a place where he or she must face the question of the practical realities of building a large boat adequate to carry Lehi and his party thousands of miles on open ocean to the promised land. One might argue that it was no problem at all; for the Lord could have simply supplied Nephi with all the materials, knowledge, and skills he needed on request. Potter and Wellington refer to this notion as the “storybook” version of Nephi’s shipbuilding experience (Lehi in the Wilderness, 148-49). Of this storybook version, those authors write:

It is a scenario that we think grossly misrepresents how the Lord deals with his faithful servants and significantly undervalues what Nephi actually accomplished through applied faith and works, and it also leads to a mythological rather than factual understanding of the Book of Mormon. Besides, the storybook version makes no sense. If the Lord simply wanted to supply everything for Nephi, one miracle after another, why build a ship in the first place? Why not have them walk across the ocean?

The likelihood of the Lord-did-it-all theory seems even more doubtful if one considers the context in which the ship was built. Why would the Lord suddenly start intervening in every matter, after having Nephi and his group suffer great afflictions for eight years in the desert where they nearly died and having them later almost drown in a great tempest at sea? Nephi seems to have had to suffer through each ordeal the same as any man. The sun shone just as hot on him as anyone else; the rain fell just as wet on him; and the wind blew just as hard.

Like the desert journey, building a ship was part of Nephi’s development under the hand of the Lord. He, too, would have had to learn line upon line, precept upon precept, as all who had gone before him or would go after. The Lord seems to have made a pioneer par excellence of the faithful Nephi who, on his journey, acquired all the basic skills necessary for the creation and settlement of a new society in the strangeness of the promised land.

Building a ship required Nephi to learn from local tradesmen how to smelt ore to make tools, to cut stones to form anchors, to work wood with very tight specifications, to weave sails, to fabricate rope, to mold pots for storing water, to tan hides for bellows, and how to fasten the ship’s riggings. Culminating with the building of a great ship, Nephi’s journey was, we might say, his university. In the New World he became a ruler and teacher, passing on to a new society a storehouse of knowledge that took civilizations thousands of years to acquire. Nephi personally taught his people the basic skills of metallurgy (2 Nephi 5:15), high quality wood working skills—manifested in the wilderness family's ability to construct a temple of "exceedingly fine" workmanship (2 Nephi 5:16), building construction, and to work in all manner of woods (2 Nephi 5:15).

Let us now acquaint you, the reader, with the practical problems that confronted Nephi as he began the project of building a ship large enough and strong enough to cross two great oceans. I will draw heavily from Potter and Wellington's book, Lehi in the Wilderness (149-62), for this material. They, in turn, have drawn from the experience of a marine archaeologist Tim Severin's experience in building and sailing a replica medieval Arab merchant ship from Oman to China (Sindbad Voyage). Even with advanced rigging and sails, it took him seven and a half months to sail from Oman to China, a distance of less than half that sailed by Nephi.

The first question is, just how large was Nephi's ship? We know it had to be large enough to carry the people and necessary provisions for the long journey. For a discussion of the size of the traveling group, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 18:6. The ship also had to be large enough to withstand the great storms the party would encounter. Nephi will describe his ship's being out of control and driven back for four days in a "terrible tempest" that became "exceedingly sore" (1 Nephi 18:13-15). A member of the Church, Frank Linehan, the Western Region Marine Surveyor for the United States and an expert in hull construction and deep-water sailing, was asked to calculate the needed dimensions of Nephi's ship. He wrote:

Parts of the voyage were in extreme weather from the description of the trip in the Book of Mormon. This would dictate a fairly stout vessel of at least 100 to 120 feet in length but could have been as small as 80 feet with a side beam, high freeboard or bulwarks and light tonnage of no less than 100 tons. [The vessel was] . . . most likely a split rig like a schooner rig or equal. That being the main mast aft and the mizzenmast being forward. A one-masted vessel would have been too tall and not so well balanced in heavier weather. She would have to be constructed above calm deep waters and built on "ways" [greased logs] so that she could be launched prior to outfitting i.e., stepping the masts, rigging, ground tackle etc. This rules out a launch from a beach with waves (Personal Communication with Potter and Wellington, the authors of Lehi in the Wilderness).

Now, let us consider some practical realities regarding the construction and sailing of such a ship:

1. Materials to Construct a Ship:

Large Timbers. In the commentary for verse 6 of this chapter, we mentioned the possibility that hardwood timbers sufficiently large to construct a substantial ship could have been found in wadi Dharbat. However, it is more likely that Nephi used imported hardwood, especially teak or even coconut. Tim Severin, whose experience building and sailing a replica Arab merchant ship from Oman to India we mentioned previously, explains, "Historically, nearly all materials for shipbuilding in Oman have been imported from the Indian subcontinent, Oman being lacking in suitable timber for large boat building” (“Construction of the Omani Book Sohar,” 279-80). Frank Linehan, the LDS expert in large boat hull construction, stressed the need for large straight hardwoods. Severin, whose boat was probably smaller than that which Nephi would have built described his search for the right timber:

I carried a shopping list for my timber, an inventory of every plank, beam, and fame, its size and curve. All agreed that the keel of the ship was the key to its construction. The keel of a boom is long, straight, and massive; it is the very backbone of the vessel, and its dimensions dictate the remainder of the ship, for an Arab shipwright builds mathematically. The problem was that the keel piece to my replica needed to be 52 feet long, 12 inches by 15 inches in cross-section, and dead straight (Sindbad Voyage, 37-38).

Using imported lumber would certainly not contradict Nephi’s claim that he worked timbers. Nephi’s text alludes to the fact that the timber they were working had already been cut somewhere else. He wrote, “We did work timbers of curious workmanship” (1 Nephi 18:1). How could they have been curious to Nephi and his workers, if they had logged the lumber themselves? Apparently, some of the timbers Nephi used to construct his ship were precut in an unfamiliar manner. How could Nephi have paid for imported lumber? There were at least a couple of options for obtaining money. They would have arrived at Bountiful with camels that they no longer needed. These would have been eminently marketable at the end of the Frankincense Trail where camels were used as the principle beasts of burden. It is even possible that Lehi could have sold property and belongings in Jerusalem while he was in Bountiful. The tradesman’s journey to Jerusalem took only about four months.

Coconut Rope. After Nephi acquired large timber, he still needed materials to affix the timbers together to form a stout vessel. He probably had two choices: nail the timbers in place, or sew the timbers together with coconut rope and wooden pegs. With the Lord’s help, he had found a source of ore, so nails are not out of the question, but binding the timbers with nails would have required thousands of nails—probably more than twenty thousand. The other choice was that of sewing the ship together with coconut rope. This was the only way large ships were constructed in Dhofar in ancient times (Omani Ministry of National Heritage and Culture, Oman, a Seafaring Nation, 154-55), and is probably the method Nephi used to affix the timbers of his ship. Even if Nephi used nails, he still would have needed ropes for the ship’s riggings. So where did Nephi acquire coconut rope? If he made it himself, he would have needed the precise knowledge of how to make good quality rope, a very complex process (Severin, Sindbad Voyage, 40). Tim Severin needed fifty thousand coconuts to make the forty miles of rope to build his replica ship (Ibid., 41). In ancient Dhofar, coconuts were imported from India.

Sails. Nephi’s ship needed several sets of excellent quality sails to power it half way around the world. Tim Severin, in building his replica Omani ship, originally acquired sails of “very poor quality canvas,” and they had to be replaced or his ship “stood little chance of reaching China” (Ibid., 102). Severin’s replacement sails required two and one half tons of canvas. Traditionally, the sails on the Arab ships were woven from coconut fiber or palm leaves, or made from cotton cloth (Omani Ministry of national Heritage and Culture, Oman, a Seafaring Nation, 113). It probably would have taken Nephi, or someone in his party, as much time to weave the tons of quality canvas as it would have taken to build the rest of the ship.

Other Materials. Severin’s list of items needed for the construction of a large sewn sailing ship is interesting and instructive. His list included a quarter ton of tree gum, mutton fat, a half dozen barrels of fish oil, a large quantity of sugar, a half ton of lime (Sindbad Voyage, 42). These materials were mixed into caulking and antifouling compounds. Without caulking, Nephi’s ship would have sunk in the very harbor in which she was built. Without anti-fouling, shipworms would have destroyed the ship before it reached the west coast of India. Some species of tropical shipworms grow to six feet in length and attain the thickness of a man’s arm (Morton, Wind Commands, 207). As an experiment, Severin’s crew left unprotected timbers below the waterline to judge the impact of the teredo worms. The results were sobering. Within weeks, they became honeycombed with wormholes. One two-and-one-half-inch thick piece “snapped with one’s bare hands like wafers” (Severin, Sindbad Voyage, 32). How could Nephi, with no shipbuilding knowledge, have found the proper ingredients for caulking and anti-fouling? If he made these compounds himself, how did he learn to prepare them? Any mistake in the formula would have been fatal. Without caulking the ship would have sunk at launching. Ineffective anti-fouling coating on the ship would have met with the same fate as Severin’s unprotected wood within a matter of weeks.

2. Shipwrights:

It is probably a fact that when Nephi arrived at Bountiful, his knowledge of shipbuilding was nil. John L. Sorensen goes so far as to state: “No hint can be found in the text that anyone in Lehi’s party had any knowledge whatever of nautical matters” (“Transoceanic Crossings,” 257). Frank Linehan believes that to build his ship Nephi needed access to skilled shipwrights. Nephi could not have developed the required expertise in Jerusalem. While the Lord gave Nephi the instructions on how to build the ship, he did not give him the lifetime of experience that shipwrights need to perform their craft. Nephi built a ship that was large and of fine workmanship (1 Nephi 18:4). Tim Severin noted the skills required of his shipwrights: “Whether cutting a foot-thick lump of timber to size, or shaping the finest sliver of wood for a delicate joint, ninety per cent of the [shipwright’s] work was done with hammer and chisel; only very reluctantly did they pick up a saw or a plane. The soft iron chisel was their tool, and with it, they could work wonders. They could carve a plank into delicate curves, or they could shape the 60-foot spar into a taper as if it had been turned on a giant lathe” (Sindbad Voyage, 207). To prevent leaks, Severin's ship's planks had to be planed to 1/64 of an inch in exactness. How could Nephi have learned to do this if not at the side of an experienced shipwright?

The same can be said for sailing a large multi-sail ship. It takes years to learn and practice the skills needed to master a large sailing ship at sea. Severin wrote of his shipwrights: "Their fathers, grandfathers, and great-grandfathers, and untold generations before that, had been carpenters. . . They had begun work as soon as they were big enough to pick up a mallet" (Ibid., 58). Nephi's statement, "I had finished the ship" (1 Nephi 18:4) does not mean that he built it all by himself. Nephi does not tell us how many people worked on the construction of his ship, only that "we did work timbers" (1 Nephi 18:1), and that at least on one occasion his workers were his reluctant brethren. However, his brothers were not working on the ship when it was being finished (1 Nephi 18:4). It would have been impossible for a lone man to have outfitted and finished a large ship by himself. Simply lifting the heavy timbers would have required many men. If his brothers were not helping him build the finished ship, then who was? It was imperative that Nephi needed at least one experienced shipwright to train and assist him, as well as, a number of other workers.

3. Trained Crew and Captain to Sail the Ship:

A ship the size of Nephi's would need a trained crew of probably at least twenty men. We do not know if he hired experienced sailors for his crew. At a minimum, prior to leaving port, he needed someone to organize the crew and to teach every man aboard how to perform his responsibilities within the team. For the crew of his Omani replica ship, Tim Severin had a crew of twenty experienced sailors whom he described as having saved the ship on "several occasions." Without a trained crew to handle the sails and riggings, Nephi's ship would have never left the port in which she was built. It would also have been necessary for the crew and captain to test the ship on sea trials before actually launching for the Promised Land. Sea trials are more than just a precautionary measure to make sure the ship is sound. They are the means by which the captain and crew learn to sail her. They are the process by which shipbuilders discover the proper amount of sail for different conditions, and of utmost importance—what the right amount and balance of the ballast should be. Before they entered the ship for the voyage to the New World, Nephi's family knew that the finished ship was "good," and the "workmanship thereof was exceedingly fine" (Nephi 18:4). This implies that they had already conducted successful sea trials. Otherwise, how could they have judged the ship's workmanship unless they saw that the hull was sound and watertight, that the ship rested properly and equally balanced in the water, and that the ship handled well in various seas? Without sea trials, the words "good ship" would have been as meaningless as pronouncing an airplane "good" before seeing if it could fly.

Nephi was apparently the ship's captain. The question remains, "How did Nephi learn to command a multi-sail ship and her crew?" The captains that sailed the ancient waters of the Mediterranean stayed close to the shoreline, seldom venturing out of sight of land. In the Red Sea, because of its dangerous shoals, all vessels sail only during the day, putting in toward nightfall at the nearest available anchorage (Casson, Ancient Trade and Society, 187). Nephi needed to learn to sail in open seas. Today the California Maritime Academy, of the California State University of Engineering, Technology, and Marine Transportation, offers a degree in Marine Transportation. The curriculum includes thirty-seven courses on topics relevant to sailing a ship. Upon completing the course, the cadets become junior officers with many years at sea lying ahead of them before they can qualify to command a ship. Frank Linehan, a sailing expert, states it quite simply, “Even with the inspiration of the Lord, it was simply impossible for Nephi to have sailed to the New World without training.”

In addition to having the Liahona, which appointed the direction the traveling group should go, it seems clear that Nephi knew how to calculate his position in the open sea for he realized that during the “terrible tempest” they were “driven back” four days (1 Nephi 18:13).

Let us now consider some of the practical realities of provisioning a vessel making such a voyage:

1. Food and Water for a Pacific Crossing. In describing his provisioning of the ship, Nephi used the phrases we “prepared all things,” taking “much fruits and meat,” “honey in abundance,” “provision according to that which the Lord had commanded,” “all our loadings and our seeds,” and “whatsoever thing we had brought with us.”

When marine archaeologist Tim Severin sailed his replica Arab ship to China, he covered a distance less than half that of Nephi’s voyage, and he carried a crew of only twenty men. Severin describes loading his eighty-foot ship with provisions:

There was not enough room to store all the provisions for the entire journey. I calculated that we would carry a basic store of rations, and supplement our supplies with purchases made at countries along the route. . . We had boxes of nuts and dried fruit, hundreds of eggs preserved in grease and wrapped in sawdust, sacks of onions, dried peas, rice, and packets of spice. For variety, there was a selection of tinned foods and sauces. Our cooking would be done on deck over a simple charcoal fire burning in a tray of sand. . . I watched a ton of dates being manhandled aboard in sacks. . . The list of necessities was unending (Sindbad Voyage, 82).

Once past India there were few, if any, ports where Nephi could have restocked his ship. Presumably, they fished and collected rainwater when possible, but it is likely they stopped often along the way to search for water and food. Depending on the winds, the voyage to the New World doubtless took at least a year. It is certain Nephi needed to have taken on board large stores of food and water. He needed enough fresh water for 50-75 people who would have been exposed to hot tropical conditions.

Severin, with his crew of only twenty, rationed only twenty-five gallons of water a day for drinking and cooking. All washing was done in sea water, while the cooking water was diluted, half and half, with sea water. His ship carried a month-and-a-half supply of water, roughly eleven hundred gallons. It is reasonable to assume that Nephi's ship required a water reserve at least twice that size. Fortunately, Nephi's ship carried enough water for them to have survived the "great calm" that seems to have entrapped the ship between the time of the tempest and the time when there was once again enough wind to sail (1 Nephi 18:21-22).

2. Ship's Repairs and Tools. A wooden ship is in constant need of maintenance, an endless effort that once stopped dooms the ship. Nephi had to maintain his ship while on route to the Promised Land. Many of these had to be made at sea, though it is almost certain that Nephi beached his vessel a time or two for repairs. It is also probable that during the great storm in which his ship nearly sunk, the vessel was damaged (1 Nephi 18:13-15). Thus, he needed to carry with him all the tools and supplies necessary to maintain the ship, its riggings and its sails.

On route to China, Severin purchased many supplies along the way. Still he took aboard many maintenance supplies:

On board we would have to carry enough spare materials to maintain an early medieval ship at sea for at least eight months of voyaging. . . The ship rapidly began to fill up with hundreds of items necessary for a sea voyage that would last seven or eight months. The forepeak was stuffed with bosun's stores—coil upon coil of rope of every size, from bundles of light lashing twine to 8-inch-thick spare halyards. There were dozens of extra blocks, each one lovingly carved out of a single chunk of wood and with their wooden wheels revolving on wooden pins. . . There were spare sacks of lime for the day when we careened the ship in a foreign port and smeared on a new coat of the traditional antifouling. There were tins of mutton fat, rank and nauseating, to mix with the lime or to grease the running ropes and tackles. There were marlin spikes and mallets, chests of carpenter's tools, odd lengths of spare timber, bolts of spare sailcloth, spare oxhide, and the needle and thread to sew chafing patches (Sindbad Voyage, 81.)

The fact that Nephi's ship was new does not mitigate the need for repairs and maintenance. Severin's ship was newly built, yet it needed repairs before it reached its first stop on the west coast of India. Included in these repairs was a new coat of antifouling compound, which if not maintained allows the destructive teredo worms to eat through the hull.

3. Other Supplies. We can be assured that Nephi's ship needed several sets of sails, and so she had need of a large space to hold the extra sails. Sailing ships carried one set of sails for the night and bad weather, the other for day and fair weather. The wrong sail in the wrong wind conditions, can lead to a ship's being capsized. During one stormy day in the China Sea, Severin had five sails "ripped to shreds" (Ibid., photos).

Nephi's family took tents with them to the Land of Promise (1 Nephi 18:23). It is likely that these were the traditional Middle Eastern heavy goat and camel hair tents. There were at least eight married couples in the group. A folded 10 foot by 10 foot goat hair tent measures 3 feet by 3 feet by 6.5 feet or 58.5 cubic feet. Multiply that by eight families, and the tents form a stack 13 feet long 6 feet wide and 6 feet tall, not counting floor rugs, bedding, and at least a ton of tent poles and stakes.

At least one, and probably multiple, anchors would have been required. Ancient anchors have been recovered in Omani waters. They were made from stone and were, of course, heavy. A recently recovered anchor in Oman weighed twenty-two hundred pounds and was nine feet long (Anchors, Field report, Traditional Boats of Oman Project).

Other supplies would have included weapons (we know they had at least one sword—the sword of Laban), some form of fishing tackle, a sand pit for cooking, pots and other kitchen items, along with a large store of charcoal or firewood with flint. The brass plates of Laban, of course, were also on board.

19 And now it came to pass that I, Nephi, was exceedingly sorrowful because of the hardness of their hearts; and now when they saw that I began to be sorrowful they were glad in their hearts, insomuch that they did rejoice over me, saying: We knew that ye could not construct a ship, for we knew that ye were lacking in judgment; wherefore, thou canst not accomplish so great a work.

verse 19 It seems likely that Nephi was sorrowful because he was beginning to realize the hopeless spiritual plight of his recalcitrant brothers, Laman and Lemuel. Nephi's brothers obviously misinterpreted the cause of his sorrow. Quite another reason that he might have been exceedingly sorrowful is that he realized the enormity of the task ahead and was overwhelmed. He was about to attempt something that no one else had ever done—head out into the great ocean to an unknown destination. It could well be that this was Nephi's darkest hour. He may have been stuck with the awesome reality of what he was about to attempt.

This may well have been a watershed moment for the great Nephi! He likely walked alone somewhere to contemplate his situation and to pray. It was in this setting that the Spirit touched his heart and mind, and he recalled the miraculous story of Moses's leading the Israelites out of captivity in Egypt (see verses 23-33). Perhaps this moment, as much as any other, was instrumental in changing Nephi from an ordinary man to a powerful and capable prophet of God who was forged in the fires of adversity. If we are to learn that which the Lord would have us learn from this great prophet, we must come to know his experiences as they actually occurred. We must never regard Nephi's journey from Jerusalem to the Promised Land as one which was made easy by the Lord's revelations. For Nephi personally, this was surely a refiner's fire like few people on earth have had to endure. And the end result was a magnificent and capable prophet of God fully capable of leading his people in establishing a new society in a new world.

20 And thou art like unto our father, led away by the foolish imaginations of his heart; yea, he hath led us out of the land of Jerusalem, and we have wandered in the wilderness for these many years; and our women have toiled, being big with child; and they have borne children in the wilderness and suffered all things, save it were death; and it would have been better that they had died before they came out of Jerusalem than to have suffered these afflictions.

21 Behold, these many years we have suffered in the wilderness, which time we might have enjoyed our possessions and the land of our inheritance; yea, and we might have been happy.

verse 21 “yea, and we might have been happy” Isn't this a revealing statement in teaching us what happiness was to Laman and Lemuel and the others of the same mettle in the traveling company? To them happiness was what? Worldliness—what a man is able to amass and enjoy. Were Laman and Lemuel, though, really unrighteous in yearning for their “land of inheritance”? After all, their “land of inheritance” must have consisted of more than just property—land and a house. It also included a familiar culture, friends, and familiar surroundings! Is it really that bad to seek for this type of happiness? Worldliness consists of a dependence for happiness on material circumstances and material possessions. Joseph Smith taught that the key to happiness is “. . . keeping the commandments of the Lord”—whatever hardship, deprivation, or sacrifice is implied (TPJS, 255-256).

22 And we know that the people who were in the land of Jerusalem were a righteous people; for they kept the statutes and judgments of the Lord, and all his commandments, according to the law of Moses; wherefore, we know that they are a righteous people; and our father hath judged them, and hath led us away because we would hearken unto his words; yea, and our brother is like unto him. And after this manner of language did my brethren murmur and complain against us.

verse 22 “And we know that the people who were in the land of Jerusalem were a righteous people” The brothers' perception of the righteousness of the people in Jerusalem was colored by their misunderstanding of the “chosen people” concept. At the time, the Lord was allowing the Kingdom of Judah a period of relative peace and economic prosperity. Laman and Lemuel were smugly proud of the idea that the Jews and other Israelites were a chosen people and unconditionally favored of the Lord. Had the Israelites been truly righteous, of course, they would not have been crushed by Babylon.

Lehi will explain that the Lord judges the individual by his heart and not his label. One's righteousness does not consist in one's being identified with this or that nation or group or church. Brother Hugh Nibley pointed out that the Lord taught that the perfect example of a righteous person was “a man who was a member of the wrong nation, the wrong party, and the wrong church, who did a very unpleasant, messy, and inconvenient thing in helping a total stranger who, for all he knew and to all appearances, was a dirty, drunken, no-good tramp. At least two members of the right party and the right nation and the right religion . . . discreetly and quietly declined the awkward involvement, which could certainly lead to complications, by passing down the other side of the road (Luke 10:25-37)” (“Freemen and King-men in the Book of Mormon” a FARMS reprint).

verses 23-32 The story of Moses’s parting the Red Sea and indeed the complete story of the exodus and sojourn in the wilderness is an important and appropriate motif in the Book of Mormon (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 4:2). Nephi could probably have recounted the story by heart since it likely had been taught to him since his childhood. Perhaps Laman and Lemuel had been similarly taught. Thus, the opening phrases of verses 25 through 29 contain the idea, “ye also know.”

As you read this account, don’t fail to note that you are reading an entirely separate account of the exodus story. In a very real way, this account corroborates the historicity of that found in the Bible.

In the past decade, there have been several reports on what has been called the “Exodus Pattern” in the Book of Mormon. Many comparisons have been made between the exodus of the children of Israel out of Egypt and the exodus made by the Lehites from Jerusalem. Some similarities have included the divine call of the leader accompanied by fire; the deliverance of the people on the other side of a water barrier involving the crossing of that barrier; the extended wandering; and the complaints and rebellion (George S. Tate, “The Typology of the Exodus Pattern in the Book of Mormon,” in Literature of Belief; Terrence L. Szink, “Nephi and the Exodus,” in Rediscovering the Book of Mormon; S. Kent Brown, “The Exodus: Seeing It as a Test, a Testimony, and a Type,” Ensign [February 1990] 54-57; S. Kent Brown, “The Exodus Pattern in the Book of Mormon,” BYU Studies 30/3[1990]: 111-26; and “Nephi and the Exodus,” Ensign [April 1987]: 64-65).

23 And it came to pass that I, Nephi, spake unto them, saying: Do ye believe that our fathers, who were the children of Israel, would have been led away out of the hands of the Egyptians if they had not hearkened unto the words of the Lord?

24 Yea, do ye suppose that they would have been led out of bondage, if the Lord had not commanded Moses that he should lead them out of bondage?

25 Now ye know that the children of Israel were in bondage; and ye know that they were laden with tasks, which were grievous to be borne; wherefore, ye know that it must needs be a good thing for them, that they should be brought out of bondage.

26 Now ye know that Moses was commanded of the Lord to do that great work; and ye know that by his word the waters of the Red Sea were divided hither and thither, and they passed through on dry ground.

27 But ye know that the Egyptians were drowned in the Red Sea, who were the armies of Pharaoh.

28 And ye also know that they were fed with manna in the wilderness.

29 Yea, and ye also know that Moses, by his word according to the power of God which was in him, smote the rock, and there came forth water, that the children of Israel might quench their thirst.

30 And notwithstanding they being led, the Lord their God, their Redeemer, going before them, leading them by day and giving light unto them by night, and doing all things for them which were expedient for man to receive, they hardened their hearts and blinded their minds, and reviled against Moses and against the true and living God.

31 And it came to pass that according to his word he did destroy them; and according to his word he did lead them; and according to his word he did do all things for them; and there was not any thing done save it were by his word.

verse 31 “according to his word he did destroy them” Do you recall the incident in the exodus story that is being referred to here? Shortly after breaking the tablets containing the ten commandments, Moses ordered the Levites to go through the camp of Israel and slay the misbehaving men. By the sword, some three thousand Israelite men were thus slain (Exodus 32:26-29).

32 And after they had crossed the river Jordan he did make them mighty unto the driving out of the children of the land, yea, unto the scattering them to destruction.

33 And now, do ye suppose that the children of this land, who were in the land of promise, who were driven out by our fathers, do ye suppose that they were righteous? Behold, I say unto you, Nay.

verse 33 The meaning of this verse is somewhat problematic. In some measure the difficulty hinges on the meaning of the words “this land.” If it had read “that land,” it would likely have referred to the land of Canaan at the time of Moses and Joshua. The “children of this land,” then, would be the Canaanites who lived in Canaan at the time of the arrival of the Israelites. Then the verse would be easy to interpret. This interpretation seems most plausible.

Another possibility is that “this land” refers to the Promised Land that Lehi and his traveling group encountered in the western hemisphere. Keep in mind that Nephi was living in the western hemisphere when he wrote the record we are now reading. It would then imply that the Lehites had to wage war against the indigenous peoples in the land of promise before they were able to establish themselves. If there was such a battle, we have no mention of it in the Book of Mormon.

Yet another idea has been proffered. Brother Hugh Nibley regards this verse as referring to the desert tribes through whose territories Lehi and his people were traveling (Since Cumorah, 218). This seems a difficult meaning for your author to understand. After all, these desert tribes were not in a promised land.

34 Do ye suppose that our fathers would have been more choice than they if they had been righteous? I say unto you, Nay.

verses 34 The “theys” in this verse refer to the inhabitants of the land of promise who dwelt there before the arrival of the Israelites. Nephi takes a swipe at the contestable righteousness of the Israelites. He asks, “Do you really think that the Israelites would have been regarded by the Lord as righteous if those who already inhabited the land of promise had themselves been at all righteous?” It was not the Israelites’ righteousness that entitled them to be victorious as they moved into the promised land. Rather it was the relatively greater unrighteousness of their enemies.

Is the Lord prejudiced? Does he play favorites? Did he favor and help the Israelites just because they were Israelites? He is not racist. He is no respecter of persons. There is only one pertinent criterion by which his favoritism is meted out—that of righteousness. He favors those who keep his commandments: “Them that honour me I will honour, and they that despise me shall be lightly esteemed” (1 Samuel 2:30).

Nephi’s brothers had just reiterated the idea that the people of Jerusalem were a “righteous people” (1 Nephi 17:22), indeed a chosen people. Nephi could see clearly that the perversion of the “chosen people” concept among the Israelites had led to a harmful pride and smugness which had eventually led to their downfall and destruction. Nephi could see that his brothers had fallen into this same trap.

35 Behold, the Lord esteemeth all flesh in one; he that is righteous is favored of God. But behold, this people had rejected every word of God, and they were ripe in iniquity; and the fulness of the wrath of God was upon them; and the Lord did curse the land against them, and bless it unto our fathers; yea, he did curse it against them unto their destruction, and he did bless it unto our fathers unto their obtaining power over it.

verse 35 “the Lord esteemeth all flesh in one” All men are subject to the same eternal laws. We will see in the ensuing verses that while he loves all his children, he favors with blessings those who obey and honor him.

“this people” The Canaanites of the Bible.

“they were ripe in iniquity” A people that is “ripe in iniquity” means that they have reached the stage of sin and evil which inevitably leads to a people’s destruction. The Canaanites had rejected every word of God. Thus, the Israelites were able to clobber them as they moved into the Holy Land. They may also be said to have reached a “fulness of iniquity” (Ether 2:10).

“the Lord did curse the land against them” As people are cursed and blessed for their wickedness or righteousness, so are the lands which they inhabit.

36 Behold, the Lord hath created the earth that it should be inhabited; and he hath created his children that they should possess it.

verse 36 The Lord intends that righteous people have a land of their own whereon they can feel safe and secure. This verse also hints at the fact that the reason the earth was created was for the spiritual progression and ultimate exaltation of man (Moses 1:39).

37 And he raiseth up a righteous nation, and destroyeth the nations of the wicked.

verse 37 “he raiseth up a righteous nation” It seems unlikely that a specific righteous nation is being referred to here. Rather this is a statement of a general principle: Righteous nations are blessed, and unrighteous nations are not.

38 And he leadeth away the righteous into precious lands, and the wicked he destroyeth, and curseth the land unto them for their sakes.

verse 38 When we think of promised lands or covenant lands, we usually think of only Palestine and the Americas. Our vision is probably limited. When the truth is known, we will probably find that in the history of the earth the Lord has covenanted with many peoples concerning their lands of promise.

39 He ruleth high in the heavens, for it is his throne, and this earth is his footstool.

verse 39 This verse contains a thought that Nephi obviously borrowed from the writings of Isaiah on the plates of Laban (see Isaiah 66:1). The earth is the Lord’s footstool in that he will again stand upon it (see D&C 38:17).

40 And he loveth those who will have him to be their God. Behold, he loved our fathers, and he covenanted with them, yea, even Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; and he remembered the covenants which he had made; wherefore, he did bring them out of the land of Egypt.

41 And he did straiten them in the wilderness with his rod; for they hardened their hearts, even as ye have; and the Lord straitened them because of their iniquity. He sent fiery flying serpents among them; and after they were bitten he prepared a way that they might be healed; and the labor which they had to perform was to look; and because of the simpleness of the way, or the easiness of it, there were many who perished.

verse 41 How would you interpret the verb “did straiten”? Here it is probably reasonable to interpret it as “disciplined.”

Take a moment to review the colorful story of the Lord’s setting fiery serpents upon the Israelites wandering in the wilderness. The story is found in Numbers 21:4-9:

And they journeyed from mount Hor by the way of the Red sea, to compass the land of Edom: and the soul of the people was much discouraged because of the way. And the people spake against God, and against Moses, “Wherefore have ye brought us up out of Egypt to die in the wilderness? for [there is] no bread, neither [is there any] water; and our soul loatheth this light bread?” And the Lord sent fiery serpents among the people, and they bit the people; and much people of Israel died. Therefore, the people came to Moses, and said, “We have sinned, for we have spoken against the Lord and against thee; pray unto the Lord that he take away the serpents from us.” And Moses prayed for the people. And the Lord said unto Moses, “Make thee a fiery serpent, and set it upon a pole: and it shall come to pass, that every one that is bitten, when he looketh upon it, shall live.” And Moses made a serpent of brass, and put it upon a pole, and it came to pass, that if a serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the serpent of brass, he lived.

Notice the typological or symbolic reference to Christ. In the Book of Mormon, the serpent is used on a few occasions as a symbol of Christ (see also 2 Nephi 25:20; Alma 33:19-21; Helaman 8:14-15). Each of these references refers to the same incident when Moses lifted up the brazen serpent in the wilderness. The word “brazen” in this context means simply made of brass. Some have been confused by this symbolism since in the Garden of Eden the serpent was the symbol of Satan. Some have suggested that Satan, who was aware of the serpent symbol’s being representative of Christ, took upon himself this identity because he is the great counterfeiter. It is also interesting that in Mesoamerican history, there is a legend of the white god that some investigators believe originated with Christ’s visit to that land. This god is known as Quetzalcoatl, which means feathered serpent (Joseph L. Allen, Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon, 159-167).

It is interesting to note that a symbol in the scriptures can have dual even opposite meanings. For example, the shedding of a man’s blood brings about physical death. On the other hand, the shedding of Christ’s blood brings about spiritual life. In the Garden of Eden, it was the serpent that represented the devil, the father of death and darkness. Later, however, it was the brazen serpent that represented the Savior, the source of life and light. The waters of Noah’s day destroyed all but eight souls, yet the waters of baptism symbolically cleanse and save every soul who seeks eternal life. Fire is the token of punishment for the anguished in hell, but Isaiah spoke of the righteous who shall dwell in “everlasting burnings” (Isaiah 33:14; see also Revelation 15:2). At the second coming of Christ it is fire that will destroy the wicked, but in the interim it is the fire of the Holy Ghost that purges and edifies the spiritually repentant.

“the simpleness of the way, or the easiness of it” In life the “easy way” is most always the wrong way. It offers no resistance and freedom from pain.

42 And they did harden their hearts from time to time, and they did revile against Moses, and also against God; nevertheless, ye know that they were led forth by his matchless power into the land of promise.

43 And now, after all these things, the time has come that they have become wicked, yea, nearly unto ripeness; and I know not but they are at this day about to be destroyed; for I know that the day must surely come that they must be destroyed, save a few only, who shall be led away into captivity.

verse 43 Between verses 42 and 43, a sudden transition is made of nearly seven hundred years from the time of the Israelites at the time of Moses (the Exodus occurred in about 1260 BC) to that of the Jews in Jerusalem in 600 BC. See the supplemental article, Chronology of the Bible and the Book of Mormon.

44 Wherefore, the Lord commanded my father that he should depart into the wilderness; and the Jews also sought to take away his life; yea, and ye also have sought to take away his life; wherefore, ye are murderers in your hearts and ye are like unto them.

verse 44 “ye also have sought to take away his life” See 1 Nephi 16:36-37.

Do you suppose that eternal truths have always engendered anger and resentment among those who refuse to accept them?

45 Ye are swift to do iniquity but slow to remember the Lord your God. Ye have seen an angel, and he spake unto you; yea, ye have heard his voice from time to time; and he hath spoken unto you in a still small voice, but ye were past feeling, that ye could not feel his words; wherefore, he has spoken unto you like unto the voice of thunder, which did cause the earth to shake as if it were to divide asunder.

verse 45 “Ye have seen an angel” See 1 Nephi 3:29.

“ye were past feeling Laman and Lemuel had been witnesses to overt spiritual manifestations, yet their hearts were never lastingly softened. See the commentary for 1 Nephi 2:14. They never could “feel the words of the Lord.”

The reader may wish to notice the example of antithetic parallelism contained in this verse (see the supplemental article, The Hebrew Language and the Book of Mormon):

Ye are swift to do iniquity but slow to remember the Lord your God

46 And ye also know that by the power of his almighty word he can cause the earth that it shall pass away; yea, and ye know that by his word he can cause the rough places to be made smooth, and smooth places shall be broken up. O, then, why is it, that ye can be so hard in your hearts?

47 Behold, my soul is rent with anguish because of you, and my heart is pained; I fear lest ye shall be cast off forever. Behold, I am full of the Spirit of God, insomuch that my frame has no strength.

verse 47 “I am full of the Spirit of God, insomuch that my frame has no strength.” Apparently the process of being in tune with the Spirit can be physically enervating (cause a loss of strength). For other examples, see the following references: 1 Nephi 1:7, 1 Nephi 19:20, Alma 27:17, Daniel 10:8, Moses 1:9-10, and JS-H 1:20.

48 And now it came to pass that when I had spoken these words they were angry with me, and were desirous to throw me into the depths of the sea; and as they came forth to lay their hands upon me I spake unto them, saying: In the name of the Almighty God, I command you that ye touch me not, for I am filled with the power of God, even unto the consuming of my flesh; and whoso shall lay his hands upon me shall wither even as a dried reed; and he shall be as naught before the power of God, for God shall smite him.

verse 48 This scene is reminiscent of a future experience of the prophet Abinadi when speaking before King Noah’s court (see Mosiah 13:2-3, 5). Most likely Nephi and Abinadi were transfigured and given special power by the Spirit in these situations of their righteous indignation. Bruce R. McConkie defines transfiguration as “a special change in appearance and nature which is wrought upon a person . . . by the power of God” (Mormon Doctrine, 803).

There are a number of instances in original manuscript of the Book of Mormon where Dr. Royal Skousen feels that Oliver made a mistake in transcribing Joseph Smith’s dictation. If a word or a phrase was unknown to him, he substituted a more common word or phrase (but with varying degrees of success). In each of these cases, the substitution is found in the original manuscript and was later copied into the printer’s manuscript. It then was either corrected by the typesetter or appeared in the 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon. This phrase offers such an example. In the original and printer’s manuscripts, this phrase read “and whoso shall lay his hands upon me shall wither even as a dried weed [not reed].” Dr. Skousen feels that the reading in the present edition is the correct one.

49 And it came to pass that I, Nephi, said unto them that they should murmur no more against their father; neither should they withhold their labor from me, for God had commanded me that I should build a ship.

50 And I said unto them: If God had commanded me to do all things I could do them. If he should command me that I should say unto this water, be thou earth, it should be earth; and if I should say it, it would be done.

verse 50 Here is a reminder that miracles of this sort can happen, but only if the Lord commands that they be performed (see D&C 24:13).

51 And now, if the Lord has such great power, and has wrought so many miracles among the children of men, how is it that he cannot instruct me, that I should build a ship?

verse 51 One of the definitions for wrought in Webster's 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language is, "effected; performed."

52 And it came to pass that I, Nephi, said many things unto my brethren, insomuch that they were confounded and could not contend against me; neither durst they lay their hands upon me nor touch me with their fingers, even for the space of many days. Now they durst not do this lest they should wither before me, so powerful was the Spirit of God; and thus it had wrought upon them.

verse 52 Durst is the past, preterit tense of dare.

53 And it came to pass that the Lord said unto me: Stretch forth thine hand again unto thy brethren, and they shall not wither before thee, but I will shock them, saith the Lord, and this will I do, that they may know that I am the Lord their God.

54 And it came to pass that I stretched forth my hand unto my brethren, and they did not wither before me; but the Lord did shake them, even according to the word which he had spoken.

verses 52-54 It is interesting that throughout the First Book of Nephi, Laman and Lemuel, notwithstanding their rebellious natures, were the recipients of so many miraculous manifestations of the Holy Ghost. Usually manifestations of the Spirit are given only to those who are prepared by righteous living to receive them. It would seem that the likely explanation for these unexpected favors shown to Laman and Lemuel is that they could not be allowed to thwart the Lord's purposes. It was consequently vital that their rebellious influences be held in abeyance at least until the group arrived in the promised land.

"I will shock them" I will cause them to shake or tremble.

55 And now, they said: We know of a surety that the Lord is with thee, for we know that it is the power of the Lord that has shaken us. And they fell down before me, and were about to worship me, but I would not suffer them, saying: I am thy brother, yea, even thy younger brother; wherefore, worship the Lord thy God, and honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God shall give thee.

verse 55 Nephi's demonstration of the Lord's power was a bit too effective. His brothers fell down before him and were about to worship him.

"We know of a surety that the Lord is with thee, for we know that it is the power of the Lord that has shaken us" These words stand as a witness against Laman and Lemuel. Because of their subsequent openly rebellious actions, they stand condemned after this utterance.

1 Nephi 18 Voyage to the Promised Land

Chapter 18 is notable for its account of the voyage to the Promised Land.

1 And it came to pass that they did worship the Lord, and did go forth with me; and we did work timbers of curious workmanship. And the Lord did show me from time to time after what manner I should work the timbers of the ship.

verse 1 “from time to time” We have previously discussed Nephi's need for much expert help from at least one shipwright, from an experienced captain of large boats, and from experienced crew members.

2 Now I, Nephi, did not work the timbers after the manner which was learned by men, neither did I build the ship after the manner of men; but I did build it after the manner which the Lord had shown unto me; wherefore, it was not after the manner of men.

verse 2 In Joseph Smith's day the Arabian Peninsula was not well known to Americans and was generally understood to be a desert wasteland, devoid of timber that could have been used for shipbuilding. As we discussed in the commentary for 1 Nephi 17:6, there now exists convincing evidence that Oman's Dhofar coast is the probable location of Nephi's Bountiful, where he and his family constructed the ship that carried them to the Americas. Oman, with its borders on the Arabian Gulf and the Indian Ocean, is relatively geographically isolated, and its history, according to archaeologist Michael Rice, is “most notably a record of Oman's marriage with the sea.” He continues: “Her people have always been energetic and courageous seamen, probably from the earliest times. Oman's ships are distinctive and her sailors were foremost among the seamen of Islam” (The Archaeology of the Arabian Gulf, 5000-323 BC, 246-48). Ancient Oman played an important role in early trade routes and served as an international center for trade by sea. Long before 600 BC, their trade linked India, Persia, Mesopotamia, Africa, Egypt, and eventually China. In ancient times it was the natural location to build and launch a ship for a journey eastward into the Indian Ocean. It is likely that Nephi learned his skills as a shipbuilder from the Omani shipwrights.

One possible meaning of this verse is that Nephi was shown by the Lord some variations in the usual Omani techniques of ship construction. Another possible meaning, however, of this verse is that the Omani style of ship construction was unique and differed from the rest of the world. Hence the Omani ships were built in a manner which was “not after the manner of men.” The Omani used a distinctive ship, the “sewn boat,” which, though of very ancient origin, is still used by modern Omani. These sewn boats, also called “booms,” are wooden boats, but they are not nailed. They are completely stitched together, without using nails. Approximately 56,000 meters of coconut hair rope are required to sew together one complete ship. Using these vessels, the Omani have maintained active trade with neighboring countries over most of a five-thousand-year period. It is highly improbable that Joseph Smith or his contemporaries knew that southern Arabia was home to world-class mariners and shipbuilders for millennia. We do not know whether Nephi built his ship in the Omani style (which would have been different from “the manner of men” he would have known from the Mediterranean) or whether the construction style the Lord showed him was different from both of these. But the reputation of ancient Oman as a center of shipbuilding demonstrates clearly that the necessary materials for the successful ship construction were available in that land in Lehi’s day.

The skills required to build a large and seaworthy ship and to successfully complete a treacherous journey from the coast of Arabia to the Americas carrying a large group of people are considerable. Practically speaking, they could not have been obtained by Nephi, the revelation to which he was entitled notwithstanding, without help. And so it appears the Lord led him to a place where the body of accumulated knowledge and tradition of sailing were already in place.

3 And I, Nephi, did go into the mount oft, and I did pray oft unto the Lord; wherefore the Lord showed unto me great things.

verse 3 “into the mount oft” In modern-day English, we may prefer the preposition “onto” here rather than “into.”

4 And it came to pass that after I had finished the ship, according to the word of the Lord, my brethren beheld that it was good, and that the workmanship thereof was exceedingly fine; wherefore, they did humble themselves again before the Lord.

verse 4 It is interesting to remind ourselves that Laman and Lemuel had no choice but to board the ship and go with Nephi. The only way out of Bountiful was back through the foreboding desert or out to sea.

5 And it came to pass that the voice of the Lord came unto my father, that we should arise and go down into the ship.

verse 5 Even though it was Nephi who had been receiving the revelation relative to the specific task of building the ship, notice who it was that received the revelation regarding the group’s departure. Lehi was the presiding priesthood leader.

6 And it came to pass that on the morrow, after we had prepared all things, much fruits and meat from the wilderness, and honey in abundance, and provisions according to that which the Lord had commanded us, we did go down into the ship, with all our loading and our seeds, and whatsoever thing we had brought with us, every one according to his age; wherefore, we did all go down into the ship, with our wives and our children.

verse 6 “every one according to his age” Here it is suggested that the sequence in which the group entered the ship was determined by their rank in the family, which rank was in turn determined by their age.

“we did all go down into the ship, with our wives and our children” Obviously, Lehi and Sariah, by this time, had some grandchildren (see also a mention of Nephi’s children in 1 Nephi 18:19). Just how large is the traveling group? Since Lehi and Sariah had two children, Jacob and Joseph, while traveling in the wilderness we might well expect the younger couples to have been more fertile and to have had at least as many children as their parents did over that same time period. Let us make a few assumptions. First, we may assume that Nephi’s older brothers (Laman, Lemuel, and Sam) each had at least four children. This is assumed because shortly after arriving in the promised land, Lehi will bless the “sons and daughters” of Laman (2 Nephi 4:3) and the “sons and daughters” of Lemuel (2 Nephi 4:8). Nephi’s sisters will be mentioned in 2 Nephi 5:6, but we know they were married to Ishmael’s sons. Nephi went back to get Ishmael’s family, so his sisters were presumably already married to Ishmael’s sons before they left Jerusalem. Since these two couples had been married for at least eight years, they most likely had more than four children each. We will assume that each couple had four. Nephi states that his “children” traveled on the ship (verse 19), and so we will assume that he and his wife also had four children.

So far, then, we have a minimum of 40 people (Lehi, Sariah, Laman and his wife and four children, Lemuel and his wife and four children, Sam and his wife and four children, Nephi and his wife and four children, Jacob, Joseph, and Nephi’s two sisters, their husbands, and their four children per couple). Then if we add the wife of Ishmael, Zoram, his wife, and their probably four children, we are up to 47 as a reasonable minimum. Then there is the possibility that Lehi and maybe even Ishmael had brought servants with them in the wilderness (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 17:8). In addition, one cannot rule out the possibility that some of the local people from Dhofar (Bountiful) joined the family. The Omanis had a great tradition of seafaring. When building the ship, the family may have had help from the locals. The local young men would doubtless have been drawn by the adventure and romance of a far journey in the ship, and their seafaring skills would have been vital for the ship’s crew. It is certainly possible that the total number of people on board the ship could have been in the neighborhood of 50 to 75.

7 And now, my father had begat two sons in the wilderness; the elder was called Jacob and the younger Joseph.

8 And it came to pass after we had all gone down into the ship, and had taken with us our provisions and things which had been commanded us, we did put forth into the sea and were driven forth before the wind towards the promised land.

Verse 8 Is there evidence that ancient Jews engaged in seafaring? There is, as it turns out. The non-Mormon historian Raphael Patai has looked closely at the evidence for Jewish maritime technology and expertise and concludes that ancient Jews “in monarchic times [the time of Solomon’s kingdom] were acquainted with large seagoing vessels” and that “they prized such vessels highly” (Raphael Patai, The Children of Noah: Jewish Seafaring in Ancient Times, Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1998, 21). Patai also allows that “even though the biblical references to ships and seafaring are extremely meager, this does not mean that sea traffic and trade played a correspondingly minor role in the life of the Hebrews in monarchic times.” Thus, Patai insisted, “we are justified in assuming that . . . once their control extended to the Mediterranean coastline, the Hebrews engaged in shipping and fishing to no less an extent than the other peoples whose towns and villages bordered the Great Sea” (Ibid., 19). Importantly, Patai includes the Book of Mormon as an “unexpected outside source” that may be of “interest” to those wanting to know more about ancient Jewish seafaring (Ibid., 21). Patai refers readers to Latter-day Saint scholar John M. Lundquist’s appendix “Biblical Seafaring and the Book of Mormon,” 171–176, for a fuller treatment of the Book of Mormon’s depiction of ancient Jewish seafaring).

Indeed, the Book of Mormon records the migrations across the seas of three ancient groups of people from the ancient Near East to ancient America—the Jaredites, Lehiters, and Mulekites (Ether 6;1 Nephi 8:18; Omni 1:15–16). In each instance the text attributes the respective group’s safe passage to divine protection and guidance, highlighting one of the Book of Mormon’s central messages of relying on God in the face of great trials or uncertainties.

John L. Sorenson is one such scholar whose lifelong work on pre-Columbian transoceanic contacts has appeared in reputable Mormon and non-Mormon scholarly venues (See John L. Sorenson, “Some Mesoamerican Traditions of Immigration by Sea,” El México antiguo 8, 1955: 425–38; “The Significance of an Apparent Relationship between the Ancient Near East and Mesoamerica,” in Man Across the Sea: Problems of Pre-Columbian Contacts, ed. Carroll L. Riley et al., Austin: University of Texas Press, 1971, 219–41; “Scientific Evidence for Pre-Columbian Transoceanic Voyages to and from the Americas,” Sino-Platonic Papers 133, Philadelphia: Department of East Asian Languages and Civilizations, University of Pennsylvania, 2004; “Ancient Voyages Across the Ocean to America: From ‘Impossible’ to ‘Certain’,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 14, no. 1, 2005: 4–17, 124–25; John L. Sorenson and Carl L.

Mair, Honolulu: University of Hawai‘i Press, 2006, 238–97; John L. Sorenson, World Trade and Biological Exchanges before 1492, New York and Bloomington, IN: iUniverse, 2009; Mormon’s Codex: An Ancient American Book, Provo: Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2013, 150–172).

Besides arguing for transoceanic contact himself, Sorenson and Martin H. Raish have likewise cataloged an extensive bibliography of non-Mormon academic work that argues, to varying degrees, for possible evidence of pre-Columbian transoceanic contact (John L. Sorenson and Martin H. Raish, Pre-Columbian Contact with the Americas Across the Oceans: An Annotated Bibliography, 2 volumes, Provo: FARMS, 1996). “It is clear,” Sorenson and Raish maintained, “that the technological capacity for transoceanic voyaging has been available at a number of points in the Old World many times in the past. It is both plausible and probable on nautical grounds that numerous voyagers crossed the oceans at multiple points before the age of modern discovery” (Sorenson and Raish, Pre-Columbian Contact with the Americas Across the Oceans, 1:xii). Sorenson offers numerous biological evidence of transoceanic contacts as well as cultural parallels between peoples of the Old and New Worlds.

9 And after we had been driven forth before the wind for the space of many days, behold, my brethren and the sons of Ishmael and also their wives began to make themselves merry, insomuch that they began to dance, and to sing, and to speak with much rudeness, yea, even that they did forget by what power they had been brought thither; yea, they were lifted up unto exceeding rudeness.

verse 9 “much rudeness . . . exceeding rudeness” What kind of activity might be referred to in this way? During their exodus from Egypt, the Israelites on at least one occasion involved themselves in lewd and lascivious dancing (see Exodus 32:18, 19, and 25). Perhaps this same type of behavior provoked this somewhat euphemistic description of their behavior.

10 And I, Nephi, began to fear exceedingly lest the Lord should be angry with us, and smite us because of our iniquity, that we should be swallowed up in the depths of the sea; wherefore, I, Nephi, began to speak to them with much soberness; but behold they were angry with me, saying: We will not that our younger brother shall be a ruler over us.

verse 10 Here, again, the rancor of Nephi’s older brothers surfaces. Their resentment may have had, at least in part, a cultural origin. See the commentary for 1 Nephi 16:37.

11 And it came to pass that Laman and Lemuel did take me and bind me with cords, and they did treat me with much harshness; nevertheless, the Lord did suffer it that he might show forth his power, unto the fulfilling of his word which he had spoken concerning the wicked.

verse 11 “the Lord did suffer it” Sometimes the Lord will allow the wicked to abuse and mistreat the righteous. We might say that he allows them to dig their own spiritual grave.

12 And it came to pass that after they had bound me insomuch that I could not move, the compass, which had been prepared of the Lord, did cease to work.

verse 12 The “compass” is, of course, the Liahona.

13 Wherefore, they knew not whither they should steer the ship, insomuch that there arose a great storm, yea, a great and terrible tempest, and we were driven back upon the waters for the space of three days; and they began to be frightened exceedingly lest they should be drowned in the sea; nevertheless they did not loose me.

14 And on the fourth day, which we had been driven back, the tempest began to be exceedingly sore.

15 And it came to pass that we were about to be swallowed up in the depths of the sea. And after we had been driven back upon the waters for the space of four days, my brethren began to see that the judgments of God were upon them, and that they must perish save that they should repent of their iniquities; wherefore, they came unto me, and loosed the bands which were upon my wrists, and behold they had swollen exceedingly; and also mine ankles were much swollen, and great was the soreness thereof.

16 Nevertheless, I did look unto my God, and I did praise him all the day long; and I did not murmur against the Lord because of mine afflictions.

verse 16 Take note of the relationship between Nephi and the Lord, particularly the humility that Nephi evidences. Presumably Nephi had done nothing to offend the Lord, yet Nephi assumed no automatic favors from the Lord. He approached the Lord with humble submissiveness.

17 Now my father, Lehi, had said many things unto them, and also unto the sons of Ishmael; but, behold, they did breathe out much threatenings against anyone that should speak for me; and my parents being stricken in years, and having suffered much grief because of their children, they were brought down, yea, even upon their sick-beds.

18 Because of their grief and much sorrow, and the iniquity of my brethren, they were brought near even to be carried out of this time to meet their God; yea, their grey hairs were about to be brought down to lie low in the dust; yea, even they were near to be cast with sorrow into a watery grave.

verse 18 “lie low in the dust” Two of the definitions of “dust” in Webster’s 1828 Dictionary of the English Language include “the grave” and “a low condition.”

19 And Jacob and Joseph also, being young, having need of much nourishment, were grieved because of the afflictions of their mother; and also my wife with her tears and prayers, and also my children, did not soften the hearts of my brethren that they would loose me.

20 And there was nothing save it were the power of God, which threatened them with destruction, could soften their hearts; wherefore, when they saw that they were about to be swallowed up in the depths of the sea they repented of the thing which they had done, insomuch that they loosed me.

verses 17-20 We continue to learn about the character of Laman and Lemuel. They were unmoved by the pleading of their elderly and ailing parents, the deprivation of their youngest brothers, and even the tears of Nephi’s wife. Only the threat to their personal safety finally motivated them to release Nephi.

21 And it came to pass after they had loosed me, behold, I took the compass, and it did work whither I desired it. And it came to pass that I prayed unto the Lord; and after I had prayed the winds did cease, and the storm did cease, and there was a great calm.

22 And it came to pass that I, Nephi, did guide the ship, that we sailed again towards the promised land.

23 And it came to pass that after we had sailed for the space of many days we did arrive at the promised land; and we went forth upon the land, and did pitch our tents; and we did call it the promised land.

verse 23 What is your concept of this brand new Promised Land? What did Lehi and his group encounter there? What about other people? Did the emigrants from Jerusalem actually encounter indigenous peoples in the Promised Land? As many have read the Book of Mormon, they have developed the intuitive notion that father Lehi and his group were alone in a pristine land, never previously inhabited by man. Actually, the western hemisphere was inhabited millennia before Lehi and company arrived here. There were doubtless remnants from the Jaredite culture and probably other indigenous subcultures. It is probable later on, however, that the Nephites and Lamanites did multiply to become a significant part, though probably not a majority, of the Mesoamerican scene during the Book of Mormon years.

Dr. Joseph L. Allen (Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon, 237) suggested a possible scene encountered by Lehi’s colony as they arrived in the promised land: “[They] were probably greeted by the scantily clothed, sun-baked, dark-skinned natives living along the coast. These natives were probably part of the great Jaredite nation. Most likely, Laman and Lemuel, in their traditional jealousy of Nephi, assumed the leadership of these natives. Thus, began the great Lamanite culture.”

A logical extension of the mistaken presumption that Lehi’s colony was alone in this new land is that the emigrants from Jerusalem (Lehi’s group and the Mulekites—also from Jerusalem) then proceeded, over the centuries, to populate the entire western hemisphere by themselves. At one point in our church history, it was commonly believed that all American Indians were descendants of Lehi, Ishmael, Zoram, and the Mulekites. Be careful not to fall into this simplistic trap. The contemporary Indian cultures and language groups are too diverse to be explained by origination from these few ethnic groups sixteen centuries ago.

“we did arrive at the promised land” In early church history it was commonly believed that Lehi landed in Chile. This idea seems to have originated from a statement by Frederick G. Williams which stated that Lehi “landed on the continent of South America in Chile thirty degrees south Latitude [sic].” In 1882 Franklin D. Richards attributed this statement to Joseph Smith. Subsequent research finds no evidence that Joseph ever made this statement (Re-exploring the Book of Mormon, edited by John W. Welch, 57-60).

24 And it came to pass that we did begin to till the earth, and we began to plant seeds; yea, we did put all our seeds into the earth, which we had brought from the land of Jerusalem. And it came to pass that they did grow exceedingly; wherefore, we were blessed in abundance.

25 And it came to pass that we did find upon the land of promise, as we journeyed in the wilderness, that there were beasts in the forests of every kind, both the cow and the ox, and the ass and the horse, and the goat and the wild goat, and all manner of wild animals, which were for the use of men. And we did find all manner of ore, both of gold, and of silver, and of copper.

verse 25 Apparently, they encountered several types of domestic animals in the wilderness as well as “all manner of wild animals.” How could domestic animals have been found in this pristine, uninhabited land? First, Nephi does not specifically state that the animals were domestic when first encountered. Second, as is stated above in the commentary for verse 23, archaeologists assure us that people already inhabited all parts of Mesoamerica in 580 BC. Thus, domestic animals might well have been found.

There are actually some twelve specific animals mentioned in the Book of Mormon. Six of them are found in this verse. The entire list of twelve includes the ass (see also Mosiah 12:5), the cow (see also Ether 9:18), the dog (Mosiah 12:2; Alma 16:10; Helaman 7:19; 3 Nephi 14:6), the goat (see also Enos 1:21; Ether 9:18), the wild goat, the horse (2 Nephi 12:7; Enos 1:21; Alma 18:9, 10, 12; Alma 20:6; 3 Nephi 3:22; 3 Nephi 4:4; 3 Nephi 6:1; 3 Nephi 21:14; Ether 9:19), the sheep (Ether 9:18), the ox (see also 2 Nephi 21:7; 2 Nephi 30:13; Mosiah 13:24), the swine (3 Nephi 14:6; Ether 9:18), the elephant (Ether 9:19), and the “curelom” the “cumom” (see the commentary for Ether 9:19). Also mentioned are calf, cattle, fowl, lamb, and fatling which are variations of the twelve already mentioned.

Since the classification and nomenclature of animals have varied so widely from culture to culture, it is probably best not to assume that these animals are the same as we know them today. For example, there is no good evidence that the cow as we know it was present in the Americas before the time of Columbus. What then is referred to in the Book of Mormon by the term “cow”? It is not entirely possible to know, but we might speculate. At the time of the Spanish conquest, some of the Indians of Mesoamerica owned and tended herds of deer. In Peru, some pastoral Indians kept domesticated llamas. Could these be the Book of Mormon’s “cow”? Perhaps also the “cow” is the bison or the alpaca?

Metaphorical references to animals also occur. For instance, “ye are his sheep . . . suffer no ravenous wolf to enter among you” (Alma 5:60); “the people had turned from their righteousness, like the dog to his vomit, or like the sow to her wallowing in the mire” (3 Nephi 7:8); “they shall be driven before like a dumb ass” (Mosiah 12:5); “they were struck with great fear, and fled from the presence of Alma and Amulek even as a goat fleeth with her young from two lions” (Alma 14:29).

1 Nephi 19 Nephi commanded to make the large plates of Nephi and begin engraving upon them.

1 Nephi 19:23 I did liken all scriptures unto us.

This chapter provides us with the account of Nephi's making the large plates of Nephi and starting his engravings upon them.

1 And it came to pass that the Lord commanded me, wherefore I did make plates of ore that I might engraven upon them the record of my people. And upon the plates which I made I did engraven the record of my father, and also our journeyings in the wilderness, and the prophecies of my father; and also many of mine own prophecies have I engraven upon them.

verse 1 About ten years after Lehi's family's departure from Jerusalem and shortly after their arrival in the New World—the family's departure was likely between 597 and 587 BC—Nephi was commanded to begin a record which we now know will become part of the “large plates of Nephi.” Note that the Lehites are still living in the “land of first inheritance”—the land in the western hemisphere near where they first disembarked. If the reader does not have a clear understanding of this set of plates, please review the article Those Confusing Book of Mormon Plates.

“the Lord commanded me, wherefore I did make plates of ore that I might engraven upon them the record of my people” Nephi reports making “plates of ore” upon which to engrave his account. Although he does not tell us specifically which kind of ore he used, just before making the plates he mentions finding “all manner of ore, both of gold, and of silver, and of copper” (1 Nephi 18:25). The wording of 1 Nephi 18:25 can be somewhat confusing, since it uses “both” and then lists three different ores. Jerry Grover, a professional geologist, explains, “Native gold and silver nearly always occur together as one ‘ore’ in nature. Technologies to separate gold and silver (called ‘parting’) were not known to be practiced in the Old World before the fifth century BC There has been no evidence discovered in the New World that any pre-Columbian culture possessed gold and silver separation technologies.” Thus, Grover explains, “the most consistent reading of the scriptural passage above is a binary ore of gold and silver, with the additional separate ore being copper” (Jerry D. Grover Jr., Ziff, Magic Goggles, and Golden Plates: The Etymology of Zyf and a Metallurgical Analysis of the Book of Mormon Plates, online PDF, accessed November 13, 2015, 79).

Today, readers typically read these statements (in 1 Nephi 18:25 and 1 Nephi 19:1) separately, due to the chapter divisions made by Orson Pratt in 1879. In the original Book of Mormon, however, there was no chapter break between 1 Nephi 18:25 and 19:1. Thus, one can agree with Book of Mormon scholar Brant A. Gardner that there may well be “a direct connection between finding ore and creating the plates” (Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: An Analytical & Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, Utah: Greg Kofford Books, 2007–2008, 1:357).

As it turns out, an alloy that was called tumbaga by the Spanish was known in pre-Columbian Mesoamerica. Tumbaga generally consisted of copper, gold, and sometimes silver—the same three metals Nephi explicitly mentions finding before making his plates. As early as the 1960s, metallurgical technician Read H. Putnam suggested that this alloy may be the material used to make the Book of Mormon plates (“Were the Golden Plates made of Tumbaga?” Improvement Era 69, no. 9, September 1966: 788–789, 828–831. This article was based on a presentation given at the Fifteenth Annual Symposium on the Archaeology of the Scriptures, May 16, 1964. See UAS Newsletter no. 90, July 21, 1964). For additional information on tumbaga, see the supplemental article, “Those Confusing Book of Mormon Plates.”

“I did engraven the record of my father” We are taught that Nephi’s early engravings on the large plates of Nephi included a record of his father Lehi. Nephi likely used, as his source for his father’s record, Lehi’s personal journal (S. Kent Brown, “Nephi’s Use of Lehi’s Record,” in Rediscovering the Book of Mormon, 3-5). Nephi probably copied his father’s record onto the large plates of Nephi in the same way that he later copied the Isaiah chapters from the brass plates onto the small plates of Nephi. The fact that Nephi copied his father’s record onto metal plates suggests that Lehi’s record was written on perishable material rather than on more durable metal plates.

Do we have access today to the book of Lehi? Actually, in a way, we do. We have access to a likely abbreviated version of the book of Lehi. Apparently, the 116 pages of manuscript lost by Martin Harris contained the complete book of Lehi. This book had been translated by Joseph Smith from the plates of Mormon. It included an account of the period of time from Jerusalem down to the reign of King Benjamin. This abridgment of Father Lehi’s journal was written onto the small plates of Nephi and is found in the book of 1 Nephi—chapters 1 through 8. These chapters, of course, will not be written by Nephi onto the small plates of Nephi for another twenty years after Nephi was commanded to begin the large plates of Nephi.

2 And I knew not at the time when I made them that I should be commanded of the Lord to make these plates; wherefore, the record of my father, and the genealogy of his fathers, and the more part of all our proceedings in the wilderness are engraven upon those first plates of which I have spoken; wherefore, the things which transpired before I made these plates are, of a truth, more particularly made mention upon the first plates.

verse 2 Don't be confused by this verse. Remember, as we read 1 Nephi, we are reading from the small plates of Nephi. See if you can keep straight the various references to the two sets of plates, the large plates of Nephi and the small plates of Nephi.

“Them” refers to the large plates of Nephi. “These plates” are the small plates of Nephi. “Those first plates” are, again, the large plates of Nephi. Again, “these plates” refers to the small plates of Nephi. Finally, “the first plates” are the large plates of Nephi.

Nephi would not even begin the small plates of Nephi, those from which we are now reading, until at least twenty years following the events about which we have been reading in chapter 18 (567 to 557 BC—see 2 Nephi 5:28-33).

We learn that some precious things were contained on the large plates of Nephi to which we do not have access today, including the genealogy of Lehi. This genealogy was probably taken from the brass plates. We also learn that the account of the party's sojourn in the wilderness was found in more detail on the large plates of Nephi. In fact, every event that occurred between the exodus from Jerusalem and Nephi's creation of the small plates, was described in more detail on the large plates of Nephi.

3 And after I had made these plates by way of commandment, I, Nephi, received a commandment that the ministry and the prophecies, the more plain and precious parts of them, should be written upon these plates; and that the things which were written should be kept for the instruction of my people, who should possess the land, and also for other wise purposes, which purposes are known unto the Lord.

4 Wherefore, I, Nephi, did make a record upon the other plates, which gives an account, or which gives a greater account of the wars and contentions and destructions of my people. And this have I done, and commanded my people what they should do after I was gone; and that these plates should be handed down from one generation to another, or from one prophet to another, until further commandments of the Lord.

verses 3-4 Both references to “these plates” in verse 3 and the single reference to “these plates” in verse 4 refer to the small plates of Nephi. Here we learn that the small plates of Nephi were to contain the more “plain and precious parts” of “the ministry and the prophecies”—the more spiritual record. The “other plates,” or the large plates of Nephi, were to give a “greater account of the wars and contentions and destructions” of the people—a more secular record.

By our reading of the small plates of Nephi, we are made aware, in general terms, of the tensions between Nephi and his followers and the adherents of Laman and Lemuel (see 2 Nephi 5:1-5). In the lifetime of Nephi, however, we do not have any record of “wars and contentions and destructions of [Nephi’s] people.” Apparently, there was open conflict, and the record of this would have been recorded on the large plates of Nephi.

One further question for clarification: When Martin Harris lost the 116 pages of manuscript, did he lose only the book of Lehi? We know that he lost all the secular writings of the prophets from the exodus from Jerusalem down to the reign of King Benjamin. While today we are inclined to refer to this entire lost segment of scripture as “the book of Lehi,” if we did have access to these lost materials today, we may find that they were organized and divided into a few books, not just the book of Lehi.

5 And an account of my making these plates shall be given hereafter; and then, behold, I proceed according to that which I have spoken; and this I do that the more sacred things may be kept for the knowledge of my people.

verse 5 Here Nephi refers to his account of making the small plates of Nephi found in 2 Nephi 5:28-33.

6 Nevertheless, I do not write anything upon plates save it be that I think it be sacred. And now, if I do err, even did they err of old; not that I would excuse myself because of other men, but because of the weakness which is in me, according to the flesh, I would excuse myself.

verse 6 “if I do err, even did they err of old” Some of the sacred teachings that Nephi will enter onto the small plates of Nephi will be based on the writings of prophets that preceded him. In this verse, he suggests that he might be excused if he includes any erroneous materials from the writings of these earlier prophets.

verses 7-10 Secular biblical scholars today, in general, do not believe that a prophet can prophesy outside of his own life’s time reference. They also would not allow that a prophet could prophesy explicit particulars about any matter. Indeed, biblical prophecies about Jesus Christ are scarce, and those few that do exist are veiled. However, in the Church today we are committed to the idea that a prophet can predict specific events to occur in any era of the earth’s future existence. These verses contain remarkable prophetic detail concerning the Messiah.

7 For the things which some men esteem to be of great worth, both to the body and soul, others set at naught and trample under their feet. Yea, even the very

God of Israel do men trample under their feet; I say, trample under their feet but I would speak in other words—they set him at naught, and hearken not to the voice of his counsels.

8 And behold he cometh, according to the words of the angel, in six hundred years from the time my father left Jerusalem.

verse 8 Who is the “angel” spoken of here? He is “the angel” who assisted Nephi in his vision experience in 1 Nephi 11-15. He is first introduced in 1 Nephi 11:14.

9 And the world, because of their iniquity, shall judge him to be a thing of naught; wherefore they scourge him, and he suffereth it; and they smite him, and he suffereth it. Yea, they spit upon him, and he suffereth it, because of his loving kindness and his long-suffering towards the children of men.

10 And the God of our fathers, who were led out of Egypt, out of bondage, and also were preserved in the wilderness by him, yea, the God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, yieldeth himself, according to the words of the angel, as a man, into the hands of wicked men, to be lifted up, according to the words of Zenock, and to be crucified, according to the words of Neum, and to be buried in a sepulchre, according to the words of Zenos, which he spake concerning the three days of darkness, which should be a sign given of his death unto those who should inhabit the isles of the sea, more especially given unto those who are of the house of Israel.

verse 10 It is made clear in this verse that Jehovah, the God of the Old Testament, is Jesus Christ.

Here also are reiterated the non-biblical prophets, Zenock, Neum, and Zenos, who are quoted in the Book of Mormon and whose writings were presumably found on the brass plates. These prophets prophesied and testified of Christ with unparalleled plainness. A fourth such prophet was Ezias who is mentioned in Helaman 8:20. For speculation concerning these four non-biblical prophets, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 5:16.

We know very little of these prophets. We do know that they lived “since the days of Abraham” (Helaman 8:19). An interesting verse in 3 Nephi (3 Nephi 10:16) suggests that the Nephites actually descended from the prophets Zenos and Zenock. It is likely that Zenos and Zenock were descendants of ancient Joseph, the son of Jacob. Of the prophet Ezias, we know only that he prophesied of the coming of the Messiah (Helaman 8:19-20). The prophet Zenock was apparently martyred for his beliefs (Alma 33:15-17), as was Zenos (Helaman 8:19). For further commentary on the prophet Zenos, see the introductory commentary for Jacob 5.

A point of little importance but of some interest is that the name Zenock was spelled Zenoch in the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon. There is good evidence to suggest that during the translation process, when a proper name was initially encountered, Joseph actually saw the specific spelling of that name and spelled it out for the scribe. We may thus wonder if a more appropriate spelling of this prophet's name would be Zenoch rather than Zenock. Zenoch is, incidentally, more appropriate as a Hebrew name.

A profoundly important and revolutionary concept, as far as our present-day world is concerned, is taught explicitly in the brass plates. This concept is that Christianity, with its doctrines and ordinances, began at the time of Adam (see D&C 20:25-26; Jacob 4:4-5; Alma 39:17-19). All of the prophets since Adam were Christian prophets. They prophesied of Christ, taught Christian doctrine, and administered Christian ordinances. Bruce R. McConkie taught, "What interests us more than the books included on the brass plates is the tone and tenor and general approach to the gospel and to salvation that they set forth. They are gospel oriented and speak of Christ and the various Christian concepts which the world falsely assumes to have originated with Jesus and the early apostles" (The Doctrinal Restoration, 17). This concept is also taught in the Bible by the Savior himself. Study carefully Luke 24:25-27, 44.

The phrase "isles of the sea" found here and in subsequent verses (1 Nephi 19:12, 16) is metaphorical and refers simply to scattered Israel, wherever they may be found upon the earth. This phrase is found exclusively in 1 Nephi and 2 Nephi. It has been suggested that the Nephites might have been especially inclined to use this phrase since they at first—on their arrival in the New World—thought they were living on an island. These Israelites are far removed from Jerusalem. We thus learn here that the three days of darkness to occur at the Lord's death were intended as a specific sign to scattered Israel, probably especially to those in "Book of Mormon country," and perhaps not to those in Jerusalem. Was there a specific sign given to those in Jerusalem? Matthew described, "The veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom; and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent" (Matthew 27:51; see also Mark 15:38; Luke 23:45). The gospel writers also describe darkness at the time Jesus was on the cross, but there was apparently no three-day period of darkness in Jerusalem.

verses 11-12 The signs described in these verses, of course, would occur in the New World at the time of Christ's crucifixion.

11 For thus spake the prophet: The Lord God surely shall visit all the house of Israel at that day, some with his voice, because of their righteousness, unto their great joy and salvation, and others with the thunderings and the lightnings of his power, by tempest, by fire, and by smoke, and vapor of darkness, and by the opening of the earth, and by mountains which shall be carried up.

verse 11 “The prophet” in this verse and also in verses 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, and 24 refers to the prophet Zenos. This designation as “the prophet” perhaps suggests an unusual degree of greatness and importance among other prophets.

“all the house of Israel” Aside from those who resided in Judah, the major elements of scattered Israel at the time of Christ’s crucifixion consisted of the ten tribes of the northern kingdom of Israel taken captive by Assyria between 732 and 722 BC and the Book of Mormon peoples. The Lord will visit these either directly with his voice (and his presence) or by giving them a specific sign of his crucifixion. Apparently, it was and is the Lord’s plan to visit directly the more righteous among scattered Israel. And whatever he plans to do, he will do.

12 And all these things must surely come, saith the prophet Zenos. And the rocks of the earth must rend; and because of the groanings of the earth, many of the kings of the isles of the sea shall be wrought upon by the Spirit of God, to exclaim: The God of nature suffers.

verse 12 Here the prophet Zenos prophesies of the response of all nature to the Savior’s atoning sacrifice (Matthew 27:52-54). His atonement permeates and applies to all reality, including the inanimate earth. When he suffered, creation itself responded (see Moses 7:56).

The phrase “wrought upon” means influenced or prevailed on.

13 And as for those who are at Jerusalem, saith the prophet, they shall be scourged by all people, because they crucify the God of Israel, and turn their hearts aside, rejecting signs and wonders, and the power and glory of the God of Israel.

verse 13 “as for those who are at Jerusalem, saith the prophet” Zenos’s wording suggests that he was writing from somewhere other than Jerusalem. See the commentary for 1 Nephi 5:16. This provides some evidence that the brass plates, from which Zenos’s writings were taken by Nephi, may have had their origins in the northern kingdom of Israel, rather than the southern kingdom of Judah some time between Israel’s division into separate kingdoms in 931 BC and the fall of the northern kingdom between 732-722 BC.

Were the Jews scattered and scourged because they crucified Jesus? The answer is “certainly not.” It is pernicious and inaccurate doctrine to believe that an entire progeny would be punished because those few ruling Jews in the Jerusalem Sanhedrin sought to and succeeded in having Jesus crucified by the Romans. The answer as to why all Israel, including the Jews, was scourged and scattered is found in the next verse.

14 And because they turn their hearts aside, saith the prophet, and have despised the Holy One of Israel, they shall wander in the flesh, and perish, and become a hiss and a byword, and be hated among all nations.

verse 14 Here is plainly expressed by Nephi the reason the Jews, and indeed all Israel, were scattered—because they rejected the gospel. Elder Bruce R. McConkie explained: “Our Israelite forebears were scattered because they rejected the gospel, defiled the priesthood, forsook the church, and departed from the kingdom. They were scattered because they turned from the Lord, worshiped false gods, and walked in all the ways of the heathen nations. They were scattered because they . . . rejected the Lord Jehovah, who is the Lord Jesus, of whom all their prophets testified. Israel was scattered for apostasy” (A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, 515).

This verse contains a fundamental and important truth. A people is scattered when they reject Jesus Christ and his gospel. Apostasy leads to scattering. The converse principle is just as important. A people is gathered when they accept the Messiah and his message and become disciples (see 2 Nephi 9:2, 2 Nephi 25:14). Let us then summarize: Scattering results from apostasy, and gathering occurs as a result of repenting and accepting the gospel of Christ.

“Holy One of Israel” It is of interest that this expression is found several times in the Book of Mormon text but only in the small plates of Nephi (1 Nephi through Omni). The phrase appears thirty times in the Old Testament, and almost all of those occurrences are in Isaiah or in texts that originated around the time of Lehi. Perhaps this name reflects attitudes about God that were particularly relevant and current around Lehi’s time.

“hiss and a by-word” This colorful expression is found in none of the other scriptures. In the Book of Mormon, it is found here and in 3 Nephi 16:9. One of the definitions of hiss in Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language is, “An expression of contempt or disapprobation, used in places of public exhibition.” As a verb, to “hiss” is to express disapproval by hissing. A “by-word” or “byword” is, in this context, a person or thing known for contemptible qualities.

15 Nevertheless, when that day cometh, saith the prophet, that they no more turn aside their hearts against the Holy One of Israel, then will he remember the covenants which he made to their fathers.

16 Yea, then will he remember the isles of the sea; yea, and all the people who are of the house of Israel, will I gather in, saith the Lord, according to the words of the prophet Zenos, from the four quarters of the earth.

verse 16 The phrase “from the four quarters of the earth” means from all parts of the earth.

17 Yea, and all the earth shall see the salvation of the Lord, saith the prophet; every nation, kindred, tongue and people shall be blessed.

verses 15-17 Nephi speaks of the great final gathering which will begin in the dispensation of the fulness of times and will continue through the Millennium. The expression “all the earth shall see the salvation of the Lord” refers to the period of time of the Millennium. For a more complete review of the concepts of scattering and gathering of Israel, see the introductory comments for 1 Nephi 20.

The expression “the earth” has three meanings when it is used in the Book of Mormon:

1. This globe on which we live—one of the “worlds without number” created by Jesus Christ.
2. A collective term referring to all the inhabitants of this world. This meaning applies in this verse (see also 2 Nephi 21:9).
3. The soil or ground (e.g., 1 Nephi 18:24; 23:21; Mosiah 6:7; Alma 48:8).

18 And I, Nephi, have written these things unto my people, that perhaps I might persuade them that they would remember the Lord their Redeemer.

19 Wherefore, I speak unto all the house of Israel, if it so be that they should obtain these things.

20 For behold, I have workings in the spirit, which doth weary me even that all my joints are weak, for those who are at Jerusalem; for had not the Lord been merciful, to show unto me concerning them, even as he had prophets of old, I should have perished also.

verse 20 “workings in the spirit . . . for those who are at Jerusalem” Nephi is emotional and distraught as he considers the fate of Jerusalem at the hands of Babylon, and how he might have still been in Jerusalem when it was crushed.

“which doth weary me, even that all my joints are weak” See the commentary for 1 Nephi 17:47.

21 And he surely did show unto the prophets of old all things concerning them; and also he did show unto many concerning us; wherefore, it must needs be that we know concerning them for they are written upon the plates of brass.

verse 21 “all things concerning them” Old Testament prophets, whose writings are contained on the plates of brass, prophesied in depth about the fate of the people of Jerusalem.

“many [things] concerning us” Those same prophets prophesied concerning this branch of the tribe of Joseph, Lehi’s colony. Even though the Old Testament of the Bible has not maintained its pure original form, we still find references which might well refer to Lehi and his group. Consider, for example, Genesis 49:22-26, Deuteronomy 33:13-16, Psalm 85:11, and Isaiah 29:9-14.

Nephi is about to quote chapters 48 and 49 of Isaiah (1 Nephi 20-21). It appears that his motivation for quoting these two chapters is to illustrate the truth contained in this phrase.

“we know concerning them” Since Old Testament prophets wrote of the prophecies of the fate of the people of Jerusalem, which writings are contained on the brass plates, Nephi and his people can read them.

22 Now it came to pass that I, Nephi, did teach my brethren these things; and it came to pass that I did read many things to them, which were engraven upon the plates of brass, that they might know concerning the doings of the Lord in other lands, among people of old.

verse 22 “the doings of the Lord in other lands, among people of old” In verses 20 and 21, Nephi has been writing of the prophecies of Old Testament prophets concerning Jerusalem and also prophecies concerning his own people. Here he expands his reference in space and time to include the Lord’s dealings with people who had lived before the time of Nephi and in other lands as will be seen in the next verse.

23 And I did read many things unto them which were written in the books of Moses; but that I might more fully persuade them to believe in the Lord their Redeemer I did read unto them that which was written by the prophet Isaiah; for I did liken all scriptures unto us, that it might be for our profit and learning.

verse 23 “I did liken all scriptures unto us” Some have suggested that as we study the writings of the Old Testament prophets today, we should be careful as we try to apply their teachings to ourselves. After all, they were speaking mainly to the people of their own day and addressing the problems of their own people. To apply a scripture to a different situation than that in which it originated may lead one away from the original meaning of that scripture. There is certainly merit to this argument, but here Nephi confirms the validity of seeking to apply the teachings of the ancient prophets to ourselves as he “did liken all the scriptures unto us [his own people], that it might be for our profit and learning.” This is the so-called process of “likening” the scriptures, and it is often a valid process, particularly if we seek only to apply mainly the principles contained in the scriptures to ourselves (see also 2 Nephi 6:5).

In this verse, Nephi suggests that he prefers the writings of Isaiah over those of Moses for the purpose of teaching about Christ. Soon—in 1 Nephi chapters 20-21—Nephi will quote Isaiah chapters 48-49. The use of Isaiah 48-49 in 1 Nephi 20-21 does not appear to be random. It is unlikely that these chapters were sloppily inserted as irrelevant filler. It is apparent that Nephi is “likening” these two Isaiah chapters to the situation of his own family. They seem to be deliberately selected prophetic passages—selected by someone who was intimately familiar with their specific relevance to the personal experiences of Lehi’s family.

Recognizing these correspondences also allows us to peek inside the mind of Nephi. It gives us an opportunity to see how one great prophet (Nephi) closely read, understood and interpreted, and likened the works of another great prophet (Isaiah) to his own experiences. As we pay close attention to how Nephi likens Isaiah to his own situation, we can learn how to follow Nephi's example better and more effectively "liken all scripture unto us" (1 Nephi 19:23).

S. Kent Brown has pointed out that while the "ultimate reason" for citing Isaiah was surely to "bring comfort and joy to his people by directing their attention to the Holy One of Israel," that was not the only reason. Brother Brown observed: "Nephi's secondary purpose radiates through the perceptible connections between Isaiah's prophecies of the future scattering and gathering of the house of Israel and the experiences of Nephi's family during their exodus from Jerusalem to the land of promise. Thus, Nephi found calming solace as well as proof of prophetic fulfillment in the words of Isaiah, words which he knew and loved ("What is Isaiah Doing in First Nephi? Or, how Did Lehi's Family Fare So Far from Home?" in From Jerusalem to Zarahemla: Literary and Historical Studies of the Book of Mormon, Provo, UT: BYU Religious Studies Center, 1998, 17, 19).

Some examples of the parallels between Isaiah chapters 48-49 and the circumstances of Lehi's family include the following:

- Isaiah talks about people who "call themselves of the holy city, but they do not stay themselves upon the God of Israel" (1 Nephi 20:2; Isaiah 48:2). This is similar to the condemnation of Jerusalem made by Lehi and other prophets (1 Nephi 1:13, 18–19).

- Isaiah says that the people are "obstinate, and thy neck is an iron sinew" (1 Nephi 20:4; Isaiah 48:4). Nephi undoubtedly hoped that his defiant brothers would recognize their own "stiffneckedness" (1 Nephi 2:11) and hard-heartedness (1 Nephi 2:18).

- Through Isaiah, the Lord laments, "Thou hast seen and heard all this; and will ye not declare them? And that I have showed thee new things from this time, even hidden things, and thou didst not know them" (1 Nephi 20:6; cf. Isaiah 48:6). This provides a contrast between Lehi and Nephi, on the one hand, and Laman and Lemuel on the other. Lehi and Nephi had not only seen and heard, but did declare them, and were shown new, hidden things, and understood them (1 Nephi 1:18; 9:1; 14:29-30). Meanwhile, Laman and Lemuel lamented, "Behold, we cannot understand the words which our father hath spoken" and said, "the Lord maketh no such things known unto us" (1 Nephi 15:7, 9).

- In Isaiah 49, the servant of the Lord is said to have a "mouth like a sharp sword" (1 Nephi 21:2; Isaiah 49:2). This may have called to Nephi's mind the sword of Laban, which he used to carry out the Lord's purposes (see 1 Nephi 4:9–18).

• Isaiah said that not only will the servant of the Lord “raise up the tribes of Jacob, and . . . restore the preserved of Israel,” but will also be “a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the ends of the earth” (1 Nephi 21:6; Isaiah 49:6). The Lord also promises to “lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people” (1 Nephi 21:22; Isaiah 49:22). This passage may have reminded Nephi of the Gentiles in his panoramic vision (1 Nephi 13), who were in an “awful state of blindness” because of lost gospel truths (1 Nephi 13:32). Of these Gentiles, the Lamb of God promised, “I will be merciful unto the Gentiles in that day, insomuch that I will bring forth unto them, in mine own power, much of my gospel, which shall be plain and precious, saith the Lamb” (1 Nephi 15:34). The means by which these Gentiles would be brought into the light was through the record kept by Nephi and his descendants (1 Nephi 13:35).

24 Wherefore I spake unto them, saying: Hear ye the words of the prophet, ye who are a remnant of the house of Israel, a branch who have been broken off; hear ye the words of the prophet, which were written unto all the house of Israel, and liken them unto yourselves, that ye may have hope as well as your brethren from whom ye have been broken off; for after this manner has the prophet written.

verse 2 “The prophet,” of course, is Isaiah.

This verse forms an excellent introduction to the next two chapters which consist of some verses from the book of Isaiah. It is a message of hope to scattered Israel.

“a branch who have been broken off” Nephi informs his people that they are like unto a branch which has been broken off or scattered from the main olive tree (the main body of the house of Israel). For a discussion of the interesting word branch, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 10:12.

“which were written unto all the house of Israel” Here Nephi is “likening” the words of Isaiah to his own people—the “branch who have been broken off.”

An interesting and important point is made by Joseph Fielding McConkie and Robert L. Millet in their book, Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon (150-51). They write: “A misunderstanding of scripture results when a prophecy made to all the house of Israel and then applied to the descendants of Lehi by Book of Mormon prophets is assumed to find its fulfillment only in the activities of the descendants of Lehi.” In other words, we might today read prophecies in the Book of Mormon by prophets who specify that those prophecies apply to the remnants of the Nephites and Lamanites. We might then assume that those prophecies will find their fulfillment only among those native Indian peoples of North, Central, and South America who might be descended from Book of Mormon peoples. In fact, those prophecies might have been intended by the Lord to apply to all Israel. Millet and McConkie continue, “Some have erred by supposing that statements made by Book of Mormon prophets, in which they applied the prophecies of Old World prophets to their own people, applied only to the descendants of Book of Mormon people or the Lamanites. This has led them to greatly exaggerate the role the Lamanites will play in the events of the last days. Faithful Lamanites will play a role equal in importance to that of all the faithful descendants of Abraham” (Ibid.).

1 Nephi 20-21 Isaiah 48-49

Chapters 20 through 22 are concerned with the scattering and gathering of Israel. Chapters 20 and 21 are Nephi's quotation of Isaiah chapters 48 and 49, taken from the brass plates of Laban. Before beginning a verse by verse commentary on these chapters, let us review the concepts of scattering and gathering and the essential historical events of the scatterings and gatherings of Israel in the past and in the future.

Gathering. What is the purpose of gathering, and why would our Father in heaven wish to gather his people? Perhaps we can best understand his divine yearning by examining an analogous situation here in mortality. One of the compelling instincts earthly mothers possess is the need to gather their children about them. Mothers are happiest when their sons and daughters are gathered close. Then she can reassure herself that they are safe. She can nurture and teach them personally. She can see to it that their needs are fulfilled.

Through observing this powerful maternal drive, we may come to understand something of the desire the Father has to gather his children about him. It is clear that the Father's desire is shared equally by our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. On one occasion during his mortal ministry, the Savior looked over Jerusalem and wistfully pined: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, [thou] that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under [her] wings, and ye would not!" (Matthew 23:37).

Perhaps a practical and highly significant reason for the physical gathering is to allow the saints to have access to the blessings of the temples and the covenants entered into in the temples. Joseph Smith taught that the main object of gathering the people of God in any age to certain places is "to build unto the Lord a house whereby he could reveal unto his people the ordinances of his house and the glories of his kingdom, and teach the people the way of salvation" (TPJS, 307-08). The ultimate gathering will take place in the celestial kingdom where the Father will welcome his children with arms outstretched. There he can rejoice in their safe arrival, and nurture and instruct them for eternity.

Before this great and final gathering, it is clear that he would have us gather together here on earth for our mutual safety and protection from the evils of the world. The Lord would have his people separate themselves from the sins of the world (spiritual Babylon) and gather to their own safe "promised land" or "Zion," that they might together learn the ways of God in a secure refuge and serve him more fully.

The term “Israel” refers to his chosen people. And who are they? The faithful ancient patriarch Abraham committed himself unwaveringly to the service of the Lord and was blessed to be able to enter into a grand covenant with him. This covenant was to be passed on to his seed through the patriarchal line, contingent upon the continued righteousness of that posterity. In making this covenant, the Lord promised Abraham: (1) a promised land; (2) a vast posterity both in this world and in the eternal worlds; (3) the priesthood and the gospel; and (4) that his posterity would bless all families of the earth, both in and out of the house of Israel, by taking the gospel message to them. For a more thorough summary of the Abrahamic covenant, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 14:8.

Contingent upon continued faithfulness and obedience, the right to share in the Abrahamic covenant was passed along through the patriarchal lineage to Isaac, to Jacob (Israel), to Jacob’s twelve sons, and to their posterity, the “house” of Israel. Abraham’s seed, the house of Israel, are indeed a chosen people. In being called chosen, however, they are not necessarily blessed with more favorable circumstances or an easier road to exaltation, and they are not loved more by God. Rather, they are chosen or called to serve in much the same way that each of us today may be called to service in the Church. See further discussion on the scriptural word chosen in the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:19-20.

Why are some born into the covenant line, while others are not? Are those born into the house of Israel somehow better than the others? It is clear that those who were most valiant and who made more progress in the first estate are privileged to be born into the house of Israel here in mortality. Rather than being easier for them to earn their exaltation, it will likely be even more difficult because “of him unto whom much is given much is required” (D&C 82:3). Yet it is logical to suppose that these chosen people have the potential to progress faster and farther than those who were less valiant in the pre-existence. This potential may be realized if they continue to be valiant in righteousness and obedience. Here on earth, the categorization of a people as “chosen” or “Israel” is quite another matter. Those born into the covenant line must maintain and progress in their allegiance to the gospel, or they will lose their place. Those not born into the house of Israel can win a position there by accepting and persisting in the gospel of Jesus Christ. Thus, there exists a saying: Whether or not you are in the house of Israel here on earth depends on your heart, not your genes.

There are practical fundamental reasons why gathering or its opposite, scattering, occur here on earth. The only circumstances under which the Lord will assist in his peoples’ gathering are true repentance and conversion to the gospel of Jesus Christ (Isaiah 43:1-7; Jeremiah 3:12-23; 16:11-21; 1 Nephi 10:14; 2 Nephi 9:2; 10:6-7; 3 Nephi 20:29-33).

Scattering. The dispersion or scattering of a people occur when they apostatize from the truth (Deuteronomy 28:15, 25, 64; Jeremiah 16:11-13; 2 Nephi 6:9-11; 10:5-6; Helaman 7:19). Moses prophesied what would happen if the Israelites rebelled against God: “The Lord shall scatter you among the nations, and ye shall be left few in number among the heathen, whither the Lord shall lead you” (Deuteronomy 4:27). “The Lord shall scatter thee among all people, from the one end of the earth even unto the other” (Deuteronomy 28:64).

On occasion, there may be other reasons for a people to be scattered. For example, the Lord might lead a group of people away from the main body of Israel intending to raise up a righteous branch and preserve them from the sins of the rest of Israel. By this means is the blood of Abraham preserved and spread throughout the world. Lehi’s group was just such an example.

It is also important to acknowledge that a people, as a whole body, may be gathered, but the most important gathering to the blessings of the gospel is the “gathering” of each individual. Each person must accept Christ and his gospel and become, in his own right, one of the Savior’s chosen and covenant people, indeed a member in good standing of the house of Israel.

Historical gatherings and scatterings. Let us now summarize the historical gatherings and scatterings that befell and will befall the house of Israel. After the Israelites (the descendants of father Jacob) had lived captive in Egypt for some 215 years or “four generations,” the Lord raised up Moses and commanded him to lead them to their promised land in about 1260 BC. Before the children of Israel were allowed to take possession of Palestine, the Lord warned them through Moses that if they failed to keep his commandments, they would be driven from their land and scattered among other nations. Their entry into Palestine in 1220 BC was the first gathering of Israel to their promised land though some might argue that this gathering might not have been wholly merited by the repentance and righteousness of the Israelites. In Palestine they lived through the 200-year period of the rule of judges and through the reigns of the great Israelite kings Saul, David, and Solomon.

In about 931 BC King Solomon died, and the scattering began as civil war divided the whole of Israel into the Kingdom of Israel in the north, with its center in Samaria, and the Kingdom of Judah in the south, with its center at Jerusalem. The northern kingdom consisted of ten tribes and was initially led by the rebel military leader Jeroboam. The dominant tribe of the northern kingdom (actually a sub-tribe) was comprised of the descendants of ancient Joseph’s son Ephraim. Thus, these northern ten tribes are often referred to as simply “Ephraim.” The southern two tribes (Judah and Benjamin) were led originally by Solomon’s son, Rehoboam. We may refer to the southern kingdom as simply “Judah.”

All Israel, both in the north and in the south, did apostatize, and the stage was set for a major scattering of all Israel.

Between 732 and 722 BC, the Assyrian army crushed the northern Kingdom of Israel and took captive 27,290 of its educated aristocracy and anyone with any leadership ability. These were carried away—back to Assyria. Their fate from that point on is historically undocumented. Were they subsequently simply dispersed among the many nations, or did some of them remain together in a body? While it is clear that many were scattered and dispersed in several countries, there is a possibility that some of them remained together in a group. This possibility finds some support in scripture (see Jeremiah 3:12; D&C 110:11; 133:26-34) and in apocryphal literature (book of Esdras) which suggests they traveled into the “north country.” We know also that the resurrected Christ went forth to minister among them after his visit to the Nephites (3 Nephi 15:15; 16:1-3). Did he visit scattered remnants, perhaps, by then, combined with other peoples? Or, did he visit a group of Israelites descended from the ten tribes who had remained together in a group? We obviously do not know.

The southern kingdom existed precariously until 587 BC when the Babylonians conquered Judah and partially destroyed the city of Jerusalem. The Jews were carried off to exile in Babylon. In the Book of Mormon, the term “Jew” has a specific meaning. It refers to the inhabitants of Judah at the time Lehi left Jerusalem and their descendants, regardless of whether they descended from the tribe of Judah or from some other tribe. Once in Babylon, instead of being absorbed into Babylonian society, the Jews preserved their religion, their culture, and their sense of national identity by excluding Babylonian influence whenever possible.

In 539 BC, the Babylonian empire was conquered by Cyrus, King of Persia. Cyrus allowed the Jews to return to their ancestral homes. Many did return and sought to reestablish themselves on the scale of their former power. However, many others had already left Babylon for other locations. By the time of Jesus, probably two-thirds of all Jews lived outside the Holy Land, with Jewish communities scattered throughout the Mediterranean region and the Near East, where many persisted into the twentieth century AD. The Jews never were again a truly independent people. This gathering of the Jews in 539 BC, however, does qualify as the second great gathering.

Some have suggested that the time of Christ’s mortal ministry was a significant period of gathering of Israel. After all, the keys of gathering were restored to the earth by Moses on the Mount of transfiguration at that time. Certainly, the Lord did “set his hand” to gather Israel at that time. It turned out to be, however, a gathering that did not quite succeed.

The culmination of the scattering of Israel occurred in AD 70 after the Savior’s ministry. Some four years previously the Jews had revolted against ruthless Roman leadership. Rome retaliated in force, and in August of AD 70, Jerusalem fell. Hundreds of thousands of its inhabitants were slaughtered or died from the famine incident to the siege, and thousands more were sent to the arena as victims for Roman entertainment, sold into slavery, or forced into exile. The Jerusalem temple was burned to the ground, and Jerusalem itself was leveled. The scattering of Israel was thus complete. From that time forth, the Jews became wanderers, a people without a country, a nation without a home. Many settled in Europe, as well as the Mediterranean and Near East as already mentioned.

The great and final gathering of the Jews, and indeed all Israel from the four corners of the earth, will occur in the final dispensation as predicted by many prophecies.

Two components of gathering. Gathering has two components—spiritual and temporal. The spiritual gathering occurs when a people accept Christ and join his church. The temporal gathering consists in moving to that location where the saints have gathered (2 Nephi 9:2). The sequence of gathering generally is first to Christ and his church, and then to specific locations. President Spencer W. Kimball explained the spiritual gathering and suggested that temporal gathering was not, in all cases, essential: “The gathering of Israel consists of joining the true church and their coming to a knowledge of the true God. . . . Any person, therefore, who has accepted the restored gospel, and who now seeks to worship the Lord in his own tongue and with the saints in the nations where he lives, has complied with the law of the gathering of Israel and is heir to all of the blessings promised the saints in these last days” (The Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball, ed. Edward L. Kimball, 439).

The temporal gathering in this final dispensation is to occur in two separate places:

1. The “lost” ten tribes will gather to the New Jerusalem or “Zion” on the North American continent. Some of these may return in a group. Obviously, others of the ten lost tribes are dispersed throughout the nations of the world. Who are they? Where are they? Most who have joined the Church in this last dispensation are told in their patriarchal blessings that they are of the “loins of Ephraim.” They are the scattered remnants of the ten lost tribes. The “center pole” of the “tent” under which Israel will be gathered is to be located in Jackson County, Missouri. The several “stakes” of this tent will be located all over the earth.

2. The tribe of Judah will gather to its own land of promise—to Jerusalem and Palestine, also called “Zion.” The land of Israel has been dedicated for this purpose in this dispensation on more than one occasion.

A question to consider: Do you see the current gathering of the Jews in the land of Israel a manifestation of the prophesied “gathering” of the tribe of Judah in Jerusalem in the latter days? Certainly, it is not the spiritual gathering that will occur. The gospel is not playing a part in the current Zionist movement in Palestine. That movement and gathering is more of a political affair. Who can doubt, however, that the Spirit of the Lord is beginning to move upon the tribe of Judah as we see unfolding a preliminary phase of the temporal latter-day gathering of Judah.

To initiate the gathering of the house of Israel in the latter days, the Lord will raise up a mighty nation among the Gentiles—the United States of America. A special servant will be selected from these “Gentiles,” and through him the gospel will be restored. Who is this servant? He is the president of the High Priesthood of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. How did he receive these keys? They have been passed on directly by the laying on of hands since the time of Joseph Smith, Jr. Joseph received them from Moses in the Kirtland temple on April 3, 1836. Missionaries will go out from this great Gentile nation to Israel, to the Lamanites, to the Jews, and to Israelites in all the world. Thus, this nation will become an ensign to the world and to all Israel. These missionaries may be referred to in scripture as “Gentiles” even though many of them are, by descent, of the house of Israel. They are “Gentiles” by virtue of the fact that culturally they belong to the “mighty nation among the Gentiles.” Also the Book of Mormon is wont to refer to any non-Jew as a “Gentile.” Through this missionary work, the Lord will bring the Israelites out of “captivity” or “out of obscurity and out of darkness” to the lands of their inheritance—to Jerusalem or to the New Jerusalem. Zion will thus be established. All who fight against Zion—the “great and abominable church” or the “whore of all the earth”—will be destroyed.

Is there a difference between being “gathered” and being “redeemed” or “restored”? Not only will Israel be gathered geographically from their dispersed state throughout the world, but also the gospel will be “declared among them,” and they will be redeemed or “restored unto the knowledge of their fathers, and also to the knowledge of Jesus Christ, which was had among their fathers.”

It is clear from the scriptures that at least part of the gathering will occur after the return of Christ to the earth and after the beginning of the Millennium (1 Nephi 22:15, 24-25; 3 Nephi 21:24-26). Just prior to Christ’s advent and the Millennium, the wicked (telestials) will be burned as stubble, for God will not suffer that the wicked will destroy the righteous. The (terrestrial and celestial) righteous will be preserved and need not fear. During the Millennium, the Holy One of Israel will rule in might, power, and glory, and because of the righteousness of the people, Satan will have no power. These factors will facilitate the gathering and restoration of the house of Israel which will continue throughout the Millennium.

The final gathering to occur in this last dispensation, prior to the Millennium, will be done under difficult circumstances. We are taught in prophetic scripture that a veil of darkness shall cover the earth before the second coming (Moses 7:61; D&C 112:23). This veil, likely one of spiritual darkness, shall only be removed at the time or just before the Lord’s second coming (D&C 38:7). Perhaps this veil of darkness is now in place and has not yet been removed. Those of us involved in the final gathering of Israel will labor under the handicap of the spiritual unresponsiveness caused by this veil.

We may then summarize the main periods of Israel’s gathering and scattering:

The scatterings occurred in 931 BC when civil war divided the whole of Israel into two kingdoms, between 732 and 722 BC when Assyria captured the northern kingdom, in 587 BC when Babylon seized control of Judah, and finally in AD 70 when Rome ransacked and destroyed Jerusalem.

The first of the gatherings occurred in 1220 BC when the Lord allowed Joshua to lead the Israelites into Palestine. Following the Babylonian captivity (587-539 BC), the Jews were allowed to return to their homeland. The great and final gathering is now occurring in this final dispensation when Israel will be temporally and spiritually restored—Ephraim and the rest of the lost ten tribes to the New Jerusalem in the western hemisphere and the tribe of Judah to Old Jerusalem.

The means by which this great final gathering will be accomplished will include the restoration of the gospel and the translation and distribution of the Book of Mormon (3 Nephi 29:1; Ether 4:17). This great work will be initiated by the prophet Joseph Smith, Jr. (2 Nephi 3:7, 11-12, 14-15; 3 Nephi 21:9-11) and will be continued by each President of the High Priesthood in this final dispensation. Under their direction, an army of valiant missionaries will spread over the earth to proclaim the restored gospel and bring scattered Israel back to the fold.

The Scatterings and Gatherings of Israel

Scatterings	Gatherings
	1220 BC Joshua leads Israelites into Palestine
931 BC Civil war divides Israelites into northern kingdom of Israel and southern kingdom of Judah.
732-722 BC Assyria captures and carries away many people of northern kingdom of Israel (ten tribes).
597 BC Lehighites "scattered" from Jerusalem and gathered to New World
587 BC Babylon captures southern kingdom of Judah 539 BC Cyrus of Persia defeats Babylon and allows Judah to return to their homeland.
	AD 30 Christ's mortal ministry and establishment of his Church in the Old World AD 70 Rome destroys Jerusalem and scatters the Jews.
AD 300 Apostasy from Christ's Church in Old World is complete.
AD 385 Lamanites destroyed and scatter the Nephites—Lamanites also scattered.
AD 1522 Spanish under Cortez further scatter some of the remnants of Book of Mormon people.

	AD 1830 Church restored, onset of final gathering of Israel
AD 1900 Early American settlers further scatter remnants of Book of Mormon people.
	AD ?? Gathering of Jews to Palestine—after Christ's second coming

Why all this emphasis on the house of Israel anyway? Not everyone is born into the house of Israel. Why is it so important? In the Lord's plan there is no exaltation outside of the house of Israel. An individual can be reconciled to God only by being received into the house of Israel either by birth or by adoption. The Savior himself is Israel's king.

Since this is a Book of Mormon commentary, it seems appropriate also to summarize the scatterings and gatherings of that branch of the tribe of Joseph led by father Lehi. They were "scattered" as they left Jerusalem some time between 597 and 587 BC. Shortly thereafter they were "gathered" to their promised land in the western hemisphere. After about ten years Nephi and those who continued to adhere to his teachings were "scattered"—that is forced to leave the land of their first inheritance on the western hemisphere, and they moved to the land of Nephi. And there they were gathered. After nearly four centuries of apostasy, in about 210 BC another major scattering occurred when Mosiah led many of the believers north to the land of Zarahemla where they were gathered. Another significant gathering occurred following the Savior's appearance to the people in the land Bountiful. There was a significant general repentance among the people, and they lived together in relative peace during the period referred to as the Nephite "Mini-Millennium" (34 to 200 AD). In AD 385 another scattering occurred when the Lamanites defeated and decimated the Nephites. Some centuries later another great scattering would occur at the hands of Spanish invaders in AD 1522. The opportunity for gathering of the remnants of the Book of Mormon peoples will occur in this final dispensation along with the rest of the tribes of Israel.

This chapter, 1 Nephi 20, contains the first major segment of Isaiah's writings. Without help these writings are difficult to understand. Most church members, as they read along in the Book of Mormon, might be inclined to skip over this chapter and several subsequent chapters which are taken from the book of Isaiah. Or, they read the words, but little meaning or substance is perceived. This is an unfortunate tendency found in most of us. There follows a verse by verse interpretation of the vital writings of this great prophet, Isaiah. It is hoped that this commentary will enable the reader to truly understand these precious writings.

Acknowledgment is given to the following books and authors whose materials have been used in preparing this interpretive guide: (1) Isaiah, Prophet, Seer, and Poet, Victor L. Ludlow, (Deseret Book Company, 1982); (2) Isaiah Speaks to Modern Times, W. Cleon Skousen, (Ensign Publishing Company, 1984); (3) Great Are the Words of Isaiah, Monte S. Nyman, (Bookcraft, 1980); (4) The Voice of Israel's Prophets, Sidney B. Sperry, (Deseret Book, 1952) chapters 7 through 10; (5) The Book of Isaiah, a New Translation with Interpretive Keys from the Book of Mormon, Avraham Gileadi, (Deseret Book, 1988); and (6) Understanding Isaiah, Donald W. Parry, Jay A. Parry, and Tina M. Peterson, (Deseret Book, 1998).

Before beginning a study of some of Isaiah's writings, it is vital to prepare oneself. Please read and reread the two supplemental articles, Introduction to the Book of Isaiah, and Historical Setting for the Book of Isaiah. Once armed with this material, we are prepared to begin to study the text itself.

There is, even to the casual observer, a striking similarity between wording in the book of Isaiah in the King James version of the Bible and Joseph Smith's translation of the Isaiah materials which he obtained from the brass plates and recorded in the Book of Mormon. Why is this so? If Joseph had translated these passages from an ancient text, wouldn't we expect the wording to be different? Opinions as to the answer to these questions vary among knowledgeable scholars.

Daniel H. Ludlow attempted to explain the similarities between the Book of Mormon Isaiah passages and the KJV Isaiah as follows: "When Joseph Smith translated the Isaiah references from the small plates of Nephi, he evidently opened his King James version of the Bible and compared the impression he had received in translating with the words of the King James scholars. If his translation was essentially the same as that of the King James version, he apparently quoted the verse from the Bible; then his scribe, Oliver Cowdery, copied it down. However, if Joseph Smith's translation did not agree precisely with that of the King James scholars, he would dictate his own translation to the scribe" (A Companion to Your Study of the Book of Mormon, 141-42). Sidney B. Sperry added: "The text of Isaiah in the Book of Mormon is not word for word the same as that of the King James version. Of 433 verses of Isaiah in the Nephite record, Joseph Smith modified about 233. Some of the changes made were slight, others were radical. However, 199 verses are word for word the same as the old English version. We therefore freely admit that Joseph Smith may have used the King James version when he came to the text of Isaiah in the gold plates. As long as the familiar version agreed substantially with the text on the gold plates [taken from the brass plates], he let it pass; when it differed too radically he translated the Nephite version and dictated the necessary changes" (Answers to Book of Mormon Questions. Salt Lake City: Bookcraft, 1980.)

It should be noted that the opinions of Drs. Ludlow and Sperry are not based on any witness's account or on Joseph's account of the translation process, for there exists no written account that describes the use of the King James Bible by Joseph at any time during the translation process. Other Book of Mormon scholars find no historical evidence to substantiate the idea that Joseph actually used the King James version in the process of translating the Book of Mormon (Royal Skousen, “Translating the Book of Mormon, Evidence from the Original Manuscript” in Book of Mormon Authorship Revisited, The Evidence for Ancient Origins, 61-93 and personal communication with Dr. Skousen).

Addressing himself to the question of the similarity of the wording of the Isaiah passages in the Book of Mormon to the wording of the King James Version of the Bible, Hugh Nibley said simply, “When ‘holy men of God’ quote the scriptures it is always in the received standard version of the people they are addressing.” Brother Nibley then went on to explain, “When Jesus and the apostles and, for that matter, the angel Gabriel quote the scriptures in the New Testament, do they recite from some mysterious Urtext? Do they quote the prophets of old in the ultimate original? Do they give their own inspired translations? No, they do not. They quote the Septuagint, a Greek version of the Old Testament prepared in the third century BC. Why so? Because that happened to be the received standard version of the Bible accepted by the readers of the Greek New Testament” (The Prophetic Book of Mormon. Volume 8 of the Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, 215).

It should be noted that the brass plates version of Isaiah predates the earliest extant version of Isaiah, the Dead Sea Scrolls document called the Great Isaiah Scroll, by about 450 years and the Masoretic Text by about 1,500 years. This latter text is what we call the Hebrew Bible, whence came the KJV Old Testament. So the writings of Isaiah in the Book of Mormon become the earliest text of Isaiah available to the world today.

1 Hearken and hear this, O house of Jacob, who are called by the name of Israel, and are come forth out of the waters of Judah, or out of the waters of baptism, who swear by the name of the Lord, and make mention of the God of Israel, yet they swear not in truth nor in righteousness.

verse 1 The Lord is speaking and addressing the house of Israel—“Hearken and hear this, O house of Jacob.” Phrases similar to this are found elsewhere in the writings of Isaiah. These phrases introduce divine proclamations that are revealed through prophets. To hearken is to listen; to lend the ear; to attend to what is uttered with eagerness; to give heed; to observe or obey; to comply. Through Isaiah the Lord is rebuking those in Israel who call themselves Israelites because of their lineage but do not keep the covenants and commandments that covenant Israel ought to maintain. While the rebuke is directed particularly at those descended from the tribe of Judah (“are come forth out of the waters of Judah”), it likely has broader application to all of those of the house of Israel.

It is common in all of Isaiah's writings for him to refer simultaneously to his own day and to us in the latter days. We must be always sensitive to the possibility of this dual meaning. Also, his allusions may be literal or figurative. This chapter, for example, speaks also to people of our day, especially members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The Lord addresses those who have come up out of the waters of baptism—those who have joined themselves to the covenant but who are not true to their covenants. They are stubborn and slow to respond to the counsel of the Lord.

“out of the waters of baptism” This phrase is not contained in the corresponding verse in the book of Isaiah (Isaiah 48:1). It also was not found in the original 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon. Rather, it was first found in the 1840 edition. Thus, we would not expect to find it in the book of Isaiah on the brass plates. The phrase seems to be simply a commentary by Joseph Smith, placed here to define the phrase, “out of the waters of Judah.” A phrase on the title page of the 1840 edition reads, “Third Edition, Carefully Revised by the Translator.”

For a discussion of the term Israel, as used in the Book of Mormon, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 5:9.

“they swear not in truth nor in righteousness” These church members make oaths and covenants in the Lord's name, but they do so hypocritically rather than in diligent righteousness.

2 Nevertheless, they call themselves of the holy city, but they do not stay themselves upon the God of Israel, who is the Lord of Hosts; yea, the Lord of Hosts is his name.

verse 2 The “holy city” is Jerusalem. These hypocritical baptized Israelites may call themselves Jews or claim to be descended from Judah or Jerusalem. They claim to be holy like their God (Leviticus 19:2) —they “call themselves of the holy city.” They regard themselves as part of the Lord's people—part of the Church, or part of Zion—but they do not “stay themselves.” That is, they do not lean upon or put their trust in God for spiritual guidance. The concept is implied that there are no holy places or cities unless holy people inhabit them.

It is notable that the KJV renders this verse, “. . . they call themselves of the holy city, and stay themselves upon the God of Israel.” Thus, the Book of Mormon version makes a substantial change in meaning.

“Lord of Hosts” This title, which may be translated as Lord of Armies, is the same as the title “Lord of Sabaoth” found in D&C 88:2. Sabaoth means “hosts” and should not be confused with Sabbath. Jehovah is the “captain” (2 Chronicles 13:12), “leader” (Isaiah 55:4), and “man of war” (Exodus 15:3) who will lead the armies of the righteous against the armies of evil.

The Lord's hosts or armies consist of: (1) ancient Israel, which was called “the armies of the living God” (1 Samuel 17:26, 36); (2) the hosts of heaven, also called armies (Daniel 4:35; Revelation 19:14; D&C 88:112); and (3) the latter-day Church, described as being “terrible as an army with banners” (D&C 5:14). The latter-day Church is also described in scripture as “the army of Israel” (D&C 105:26, 30-31; 109:73).

As the Lord’s army, we are equipped with the “whole armor of God” (Ephesians 6:11-17; D&C 27:15-18), spiritual armor designed to assist us to use light and truth in the battle against the forces of evil.

verses 3-8 In these verses the Lord reviews his earlier actions with Israel. He also emphasizes his own omniscience and his ability to prophesy of things in the future.

3 Behold, I have declared the former things from the beginning; and they went forth out of my mouth, and I showed them. I did show them suddenly.

verse 3 His meaning is, “Long ago I foretold, through my prophets, things that would happen, and they came to pass suddenly.” Specifically, he foretold the miraculous deliverance of Israel under the leadership of Moses (see Isaiah 42:9; 43:9; 46:9).

Some have made much of the word show in the phrase “I did show them suddenly.” This word is not found in the KJV. They would suggest that this phrase clarifies the point that the Lord suddenly revealed rather than suddenly orchestrated the prophesied events.

4 And I did it because I knew that thou art obstinate, and thy neck is an iron sinew, and thy brow brass;

verse 4 Isaiah’s meaning here is: “I showed you these things as a sign because I know how stubborn you are.” Note Isaiah’s colorful metaphors used in describing an obstinate, stubborn, and proud people: “thy neck is an iron sinew” and “thy brow is brass.” Those with stiff necks will not bow before the Lord (Deuteronomy 9:6; 31:27). Those with brass brows will not give their minds or thoughts to the Lord (Ezekiel 3:9).

The Lord knew that many ancient Israelites as well as many members of the Church in this dispensation would be stubborn, unyielding, and hard hearted (Ezekiel 3:7-9).

5 And I have even from the beginning declared to thee; before it came to pass I showed them thee; and I showed them for fear lest thou shouldst say—mine idol hath done them, and my graven image, and my molten image hath commanded them.

verse 5 Isaiah’s meaning is: “I told you about these things long before they happened, so that when they did happen you wouldn’t give your false gods credit.” This verse gives an interesting insight into reasons the Lord reveals knowledge of future events to his people. He doesn't always do so simply to enlighten them. Apparently at times his goal is to provide an undisputable witness of his own prophets' divine connections. Also, he does so to provide a witness against those who reject his prophecies.

A "graven" image is a carved idol. A "molten" image is an idol made of metal.

6 Thou hast seen and heard all this; and will ye not declare them? And that I have showed thee new things from this time, even hidden things, and thou didst not know them.

verse 6 The Lord is still speaking and addressing the house of Israel.

"Thou hast seen and heard all this; and will ye not declare them?" In effect the Lord says, "You have heard and seen all my prophecies and teachings. Now, shouldn't you acknowledge them and bear testimony of them?" The KJV has this phrase as, "Thou hast heard, see all this; and will not ye declare it?" The wording here in the Book of Mormon is thought to show more clearly that the house Israel has a clear knowledge of the Lord's prophecies and teachings and also has an obligation to testify of them.

Isaiah then says: "Now I will announce to you new things—well guarded secrets you do not already know." This might have referred in Isaiah's day to the prophecy concerning Israel's deliverance from Babylon through Cyrus (Isaiah 42:9; 43:9) or anything given by the Lord, who is a God of continuing revelation.

7 They are created now, and not from the beginning, even before the day when thou heardest them not they were declared unto thee, lest thou shouldst say—Behold I knew them.

verse 7 They are new things, not old things. Before today you have not heard them, in fact no one has heard them. You cannot say, "I know them already."

8 Yea, and thou heardest not; yea, thou knewest not; yea, from that time thine ear was not opened; for I knew that thou wouldst deal very treacherously, and wast called a transgressor from the womb.

verse 8 The Lord says, "Unfortunately you have never heard, you have never known; your spiritual ears have been closed from the beginning."

To deal "treacherously" is to deal unfaithfully, deceitfully, or in a dishonest manner.

"a transgressor from the womb" A "transgressor" is an apostate or rebel. Israel had been a rebellious nation from the moment of her mortal inception. Perhaps some of the Lord's chosen people had evidenced rebellious behaviors even in the premortal life—even after they had earned the right to be called Israel.

Again, keep in mind a possible latter-day application of these words. They may describe church members who are sinners from their very mortal (or premortal) inception.

verses 9-13a Here the Lord states what he is going to do. In verses 9-11 he emphasizes his love for his covenant people.

9 Nevertheless, for my name's sake will I defer mine anger, and for my praise will I refrain from thee, that I cut thee not off.

verses 9, 11 Jehovah had placed his name and the promise of his blessings and power upon Israel. They were his elect—his chosen people. He was not about to allow his name to be forgotten, ignored, or profaned. He had covenanted with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob to raise up a mighty nation from their seed (Exodus 32:11-14). He will hold back or put off his anger against and judgment of Israel.

“for my praise will I refrain from thee” That my name might be known, I will delay my judgment of thee.

“I cut thee not off” He first promises that he will not destroy ancient Israel or destroy those rebellious latter-day church members.

10 For, behold, I have refined thee, I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction.

verse 10 Just as gold is smelted in the fire to remove impurities, so God tries his covenant people with fire to remove their impurities. Both in the past and in the future, ancient Israel and the latter-day Church have been placed in bondage where they will experience the purifying heat of trial. There they will be “refined” or pay the penalty for her sins and be purged or made pure. The initial furnace of affliction for Israel was her servitude in Egypt (Deuteronomy 4:20, 1 Kings 8:51). In all dispensations, the saints are to be refined and made pure through affliction, as metal is refined in the fiery furnace.

For a discussion of the interesting scriptural word chosen, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:19-20. See also the discussion of the concepts of covenants and a covenant people in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 3, Covenants and Covenant Making.

11 For mine own sake, yea, for mine own sake will I do this, for I will not suffer my name to be polluted, and I will not give my glory unto another.

verse 11 “for I will not suffer my name to be polluted” Everything redemptive is accomplished in the name of Christ, who mediates all transactions between God and man. To use his name for anything other than a righteous and redemptive purpose is to use his name in vain—to pollute his name (see the commentary for verse 9). To be “polluted” is to be defiled or stained. The wording of this verse here in the Book of Mormon is clearer than the KJV which says, “. . . for mine own sake, will I do it: for how should my name be polluted? . . .” This book of Mormon verse makes it clear why the Lord intervenes. He is anxious to redeem the family of man in his name. He loathes to damn them.

“I will not give my glory unto another” Even though his covenant people, those who have taken upon themselves his name, have been rebellious, the Lord expresses hope that they will be refined through affliction. He also hopes they will not bring dishonor to his name and that they will continue to qualify to receive his glory.

verses 12-21 In these verses, the Lord emphasizes his omnipotence.

12 Hearken unto me, O Jacob, and Israel my called, for I am he; I am the first, and I am also the last.

verse 12 The Lord addresses his “called”—those selected in the premortal existence to be among those of Israel. “Listen to me, O Israel, for I am Jehovah.” The “first, and . . . last” contains the idea that he is the eternal God.

“O Jacob and Israel” The Lord addresses the house of Israel by both their natural name (“Jacob”) and their covenant name (“Israel”).

“my called” Both Israel in general and members of his Church specifically are selected or called to be the ministers of salvation to all other peoples of the earth (Abraham 2:9-11; Deuteronomy 32:7-9). To be “called” does not mean to be singled out for special privileges. Rather, it means to be selected for a special assignment. For further discussion of the scriptural words called and chosen, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:19-20.

13 Mine hand hath also laid the foundation of the earth, and my right hand hath spanned the heavens. I call unto them and they stand up together.

verse 13 “Mine hand hath also laid the foundation of the earth” I have created the earth and the heavens.

“my right hand hath spanned the heavens” The right hand is the hand of authority. My influence has stretched across or spread over the whole of the universe.

“I call unto them and they stand up together.” When I call to all the inhabitants of the universe and to the elements of the entire universe, they respond.

14 All ye, assemble yourselves, and hear; who among them hath declared these things unto them? The Lord hath loved him; yea, and he will fulfil his word which he hath declared by them; and he will do his pleasure on Babylon, and his arm shall come upon the Chaldeans.

15 Also, saith the Lord; I the Lord, yea, I have spoken; yea, I have called him to declare, I have brought him, and he shall make his way prosperous.

verses 14-15 Isaiah is now the speaker. He announces in these two verses that the Lord Jehovah will send forth a servant to do many wonderful things. Note how, in verse 14, Isaiah abruptly begins to speak of this servant.

“All ye, assemble yourselves, and hear” Isaiah seems to intend, “Now, all of you, sit still and listen to me. I’m about to say something particularly important.”

“who among them hath declared these things unto them?” Before Isaiah describes what wonderful things this servant will do, he seems to be providing a clue as to the identity of this servant. He seems to indicate that this servant is the mortal Lord Jesus Christ. Isaiah asks, “who among them hath declared these things unto them?” The “them” seems to refer to all of the universe’s inhabitants and elements mentioned in the previous verse. “Just who is it that has spoken to all these and caused them to obey (“stand up together”)?” Isaiah leaves the question unanswered, but the implication is that it was Jehovah himself, and that he is the servant who will work marvelous works in heaven and eventually come to earth and complete his calling as a servant.

It is interesting to note that in one phrase in verse 14 Isaiah refers to Jesus both in the first person and in the third person: “The Lord hath loved him.” That is, the Lord Jehovah hath loved the servant who is Jesus Christ or Jehovah.

This marvelous servant will (1) foretell the future (“declared these things unto them” and “I have called him to declare”); (2) fulfill the Lord’s word as spoken through his prophets (“fulfil his word which he hath declared by them”); (3) wield power over Babylon (“he will do his pleasure on Babylon, and his arm shall come upon the Chaldeans”). In a literal sense this servant will conquer Babylon. Symbolically, Babylon refers to sinfulness or worldliness. Chaldea was an area in southern Babylon and is simply another term used here to designate Babylon; (4) and ultimately succeed in his mission (“make his way prosperous”).

These verses provide evidence that the Lord will not forget his chosen people. After their cleansing in the “furnace of affliction” (verse 10), he will send his servant (He will send himself) to rescue them from their scattered state.

On another level, some have wanted to interpret these verses alternatively and have suggested that the servant is Cyrus, the king of Persia who defeated the Babylonian empire in 539 BC. Cyrus is referred to by name in Isaiah and designated a “shepherd” and even the “anointed one” (Hebrew “messiah;” Isaiah 44:28; 45:1). Cyrus can certainly be regarded as a type of the servant or servants called by the Lord to deliver Israel from spiritual Babylon.

“and he will fulfil his word which he hath declared by them” This phrase is not found in the corresponding verse in the KJV Isaiah. It is probably a reference to the several servants by whom the Lord has delivered his people from spiritual Babylon—a type of the world with its pride and wickedness (D&C 1:16; 133:14; Revelation 14:8). These include the Deliverer himself, Cyrus, the king of Persia, Isaiah or other prophets, and Joseph Smith.

“he will do his pleasure on Babylon” He will have his will with Babylon. Again, on one level this phrase has been interpreted as referring to Cyrus, king of Persia. Obviously, Babylon here could refer to the literal ancient city of Babylon or to the figurative spiritual Babylon (wickedness, worldliness). In the latter case, the reference may be to one of the other servant deliverers of Babylon.

“I have called him to declare, I have brought him, and he shall make his way prosperous” The Lord has called his servant(s) and will assure his (their) success.

16 Come ye near unto me; I have not spoken in secret; from the beginning, from the time that it was declared have I spoken; and the Lord God, and his Spirit, hath sent me.

verse 16 Now Jehovah is again the speaker. Draw near to me and hear this: “From the beginning, I have never functioned in secret. From the time anything was declared, I was there and was speaking. I have spoken openly through my prophets. The voice of the Lord is unto all men.”

“the Lord God, and his Spirit, hath sent me” In this phrase, Jehovah testifies of his relationship to his Father—the “Lord God”—and to the Holy Ghost.

17 And thus saith the Lord, thy Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel; I have sent him, the Lord thy God who teacheth thee to profit, who leadeth thee by the way thou shouldst go, hath done it.

verse 17 “And thus saith the Lord” In his book Prophecy in Early Christianity and the Ancient Mediterranean World, biblical scholar David E. Aune sets forth the various formulaic expressions that characterize prophetic speech in the Old Testament (see Donald W. Parry, “Thus Saith the Lord: Prophetic Language in Samuel’s Speech,” JBMS 1/1 [1992]:181-83). These expressions serve to formally introduce vital, sacred utterances and to announce that the Lord is the source behind them. The Book of Mormon prophets used these same formulas in their prophetic discourse. This particular expression, “And thus saith the Lord,” is called the “messenger formula” and is found thirty-nine times in the Book of Mormon (e.g., Mosiah 3:24; Alma 8:17). It serves to indicate the origin of the revelation. The revelation is directed to the messenger (i.e., a prophet) from the Lord himself.

“I have sent him” The pronoun him is a reference to the servant mentioned in verse 14. This verse seems to settle the issue of the identity of that servant. The Lord refers to himself in the third person: “Thus saith the Lord your Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel: I, the Lord, have sent myself to instruct you for your own benefit and guide you in the way you should go.”

“hath done it” This seemingly awkward appendage to this verse seems incomplete. It almost seems to complete the thought: “I have sent him, [and he] hath done it.” Keep in mind the so-called “prophetic perfect” verb tense rule which allows the prophet to mix up the verb tenses, apparently at his discretion. It might be preferable for the reader to interpret this phrase as “he will do it or accomplish it.”

18 O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments—then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea.

verse 18 The Lord is still addressing the house of Israel. If only you had heeded my commands! Your prosperity and feeling of peace would have flowed “as a river” and prospered forever. Your righteousness would have been constant and unstoppable as are the “waves of the sea.”

19 Thy seed also had been as the sand; the offspring of thy bowels like the gravel thereof; his name should not have been cut off nor destroyed from before me.

verse 19 The phrases “thy seed” and “the offspring of thy bowels,” of course, mean “your descendants.”

“Thy seed also had been as the sand; the offspring of thy bowels like the gravel thereof” Your offspring would have been numerous, and I would never forsake them. If you had not been rebellious, you would have enjoyed a renewal of the promise to Abraham (Genesis 22:17-18; D&C 132:30).

Note the hyperbole and parallelism: “thy seed [would have] been as the sand” and “the offspring . . . like the gravel thereof.” Both of these hyperbolic expressions have the same meaning and thus are an example of poetic parallelism.

And finally, had you not been rebellious, you would have remembered and honored the name of Jehovah. You would not have forsaken him.

verses 20-22 These verses may be referred to as the song of the flight from Babylon.

20 Go ye forth of Babylon, flee ye from the Chaldeans, with a voice of singing declare ye, tell this, utter to the end of the earth; say ye: The Lord hath redeemed his servant Jacob.

verse 20 A divine directive is given for Jacob (the house of Israel) to gather—to flee out of Babylon.

Since Babylon and Chaldea mean the same thing, you will recognize the first two phrases of this verse as another example of poetic parallelism in which the same thought is stated twice: “Go ye forth of Babylon, flee ye from the Chaldeans.”

Again, don’t forget different levels on which this directive might be received. First, the Lord promised ancient Israel that after almost fifty years (586 to 539 BC) of Babylonian captivity, Israel would be blessed to return to the land of her inheritance (Jeremiah 25:11; 29:10). Next, it is a general directive to the house of Israel to leave the carnal world (“Babylon”) for the spiritual. Finally, it has a latter-day application. Those who leave the things of the world behind—return to Zion—will become heirs to great promises and blessings.

When the gathering is complete, it will be “uttered,” announced, or proclaimed that Israel has been gathered. When Israel has been gathered, we may use the phrase, “Israel has been redeemed.” The implication is that they have been gathered spiritually (they have accepted the gospel of Jesus Christ) as well as temporally.

21 And they thirsted not; he led them through the deserts; he caused the waters to flow out of the rock for them; he clave the rock also and the waters gushed out.

verse 21 Even though Israel in her scattered state was led through the parched and barren places, they were not allowed to perish. He made water flow for them from a rock. Isaiah’s reference here may be to Moses’s providing water for the Israelites while leading them across Sinai by striking a rock (Exodus 17:1-7; Numbers 20:11), but a broader application is also appropriate. The Lord will lead us through spiritual deserts and give us living waters to drink. The rock symbolizes Christ who is our living water.

22 And notwithstanding he hath done all this, and greater also, there is no peace, saith the Lord, unto the wicked.

verse 22 Despite seeing great miracles of deliverance, some in Israel continue in wickedness, so the Lord gives his final warning. There is no peace of soul to those who continue in sin.

1 Nephi Chapter 21

In the previous chapter, Isaiah spoke directly to ancient and modern members of the house of Israel who are already gathered to the area of Jerusalem or to the Church. This chapter is addressed to the members of the house of Israel who have been “broken off,” “driven out,” and “scattered abroad” upon the “isles” (see verse 1). Accordingly, Nephi felt this chapter had special application to his people (cf. 2 Nephi 10:21). This chapter corresponds to Isaiah chapter 49, and is a vital chapter for each Latter-day Saint. It applies specifically also to any today who may not be of the blood of Israel, but desire to investigate the gospel of Jesus Christ and be gathered to the Lord’s earthly kingdom.

The first six verses of this chapter comprise one of the five recognized “servant songs” of Isaiah (see also Isaiah 42:1-4; 50:4-11; 52:13-15; and 53:1-12). These passages all speak of a servant or servants who, though they may appear insignificant, will do a great work for the Lord.

The preeminent servant is Jesus Christ, described as “a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of . . . Israel” (Luke 2:32), who would deliver the world from sin, death, and hell and direct the work of all other servants. It is likely that these servants are at least types of Christ. These individuals may include Isaiah and other Old Testament prophets; Cyrus (a non-Israelite), called a “shepherd” and an “anointed one” (Isaiah 43:28; 44:1), who would deliver ancient Judah from Babylon; and the prophet Joseph Smith, whom the Lord used to restore the gospel and initiate the gathering of Israel in the latter days.

Scholars in and out of the Church have suggested various possibilities for the identity of the servant or the speaker in this particular passage. Your author will try to make a case for the idea that the speaker or “servant” is the dominant tribe of the house of Israel, Ephraim. Furthermore, since the time reference for the restoration or gathering of Israel is the latter days, the speaker might even be the one who presides over the tribe of Ephraim in the latter days, Joseph Smith, Jr.

For our discussion of the first six verses of chapter 21, I am indebted to Kent P. Jackson, specifically his essay “Revelation Concerning Isaiah,” in Studies in Scripture, Volume One, The Doctrine and Covenants, 326-30.

1 And again: Hearken, O ye house of Israel, all ye that are broken off and are driven out because of the wickedness of the pastors of my people; yea, all ye that are broken off, that are scattered abroad, who are of my people, O house of Israel. Listen, O isles, unto me, and hearken ye people from far; the Lord hath called me from the womb; from the bowels of my mother hath he made mention of my name.

verse 1 We will learn in verse 3 that the speaker or first person in this passage is named “Israel.” The secret to proper interpretation of this verse and those that follow is to identify this speaker. As already mentioned, from the context of this verse we may conclude that Isaiah appears to be speaking as though he were Ephraim, the dominant tribe of covenant Israel and the tribe designated by the Lord to direct the ultimate latter-day gathering of scattered Israel.

Ephraim is addressing scattered Israel. The phrases “all ye that are broken off and are driven out,” “all ye that are broken off, that are scattered abroad,” “O isles,” and “ye people from far” all refer to the scattered remnants of Israel. Again, our time frame is this final dispensation or the latter days. Of all these expressions, the one the reader will want to become most aware of is “O isles,” as the word isles invariably refers to the people of scattered Israel (1 Nephi 22:4; cf. 2 Nephi 10:20-22).

From the days of the ancient patriarchs, Joseph, the son of Jacob (or Israel), and his descendants have been foreordained to stand at the head of the house of Israel and provide spiritual or priesthood leadership (see Genesis 37:5-11; 48:13-20; 49:26; Deuteronomy 33:16-17). This calling includes the challenge to Joseph’s descendants to be saviors of their brethren of Israel, just as their forefather Joseph had been a temporal savior of his family in ancient times. Of Joseph’s sons, Ephraim had the birthright. Jeremiah prophesied concerning Ephraim’s role in the latter-day gathering of Israel. As the presiding tribe, it would be he who would announce to all that the time of the gathering and return had come. The prophet Jeremiah said, “For there shall be a day, that the watchmen upon the mount Ephraim shall cry, Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion unto the Lord our God” (Jeremiah 31:6).

The terms “called me from the womb” and “from the bowels of my mother hath he mentioned my name” imply that Ephraim’s role was foreordained from the premortal or pre-existent phase. Joseph Smith was also foreordained or called from very early times. Ancient Joseph prophesied of Joseph Smith (2 Nephi 3:15), and Joseph Smith himself testified that he was foreordained to be a prophet in this dispensation (D&C 127:2, TPJS, 365).

To reiterate, it seems reasonable to conclude then that “Israel” or the speaker in this prophecy is Ephraim, the tribe that is to preside in these latter days. And, as mentioned, since the prophet Joseph Smith, Jr. presides over latter-day Ephraim, one might even read these verses as though Joseph Smith himself were speaking them.

“driven out because of the wickedness of the pastors of my people” The spiritual leaders of Israel were and are apostate. This has resulted in the scattering of Israel. The congregations of these leaders have acquiesced readily to these apostate teachings and share equally in the blame, however.

2 And he hath made my mouth like a sharp sword; in the shadow of his hand hath he hid me, and made me a polished shaft; in his quiver hath he hid me;

verse 2 “mouth like a sharp sword” This metaphor is found elsewhere in scripture (see also Hebrews 4:12; Revelation 1:16; D&C 6:2) and refers to the power of Ephraim’s message, the penetrating power of the word of God. Nephi spoke of truth cutting people “to the very center” (1 Nephi 16:2).

“in the shadow of his hand hath he hid me” At the same time Joseph’s father, Jacob, pronounced the blessing of spiritual leadership or priesthood presidency on Joseph and his posterity, he prophesied that the government would be in the hands of the tribe of Judah (Genesis 49:8-10). This was fulfilled in the kingship of David and his descendants, and it will be fulfilled to its fullest measure in the millennial kingship of the Lord Jesus Christ. The descendants of Joseph never ruled over the house of Israel in spite of the fact that they inherited from their ancestor the keys of presidency. Ephraim’s presidency over Israel was to be realized in the last days, thus Ephraim was hidden “in the shadow of his hand” until the last days.

With the calling of Joseph Smith, Jr., a descendant of Ephraim, in this dispensation, the tribe to which he belonged took its rightful position at the head of the family of Israel. Foreordained to a great latter-day service, ancient Joseph’s descendants—both of Ephraim and of Manasseh—have been called to bring the blessings of the gospel to their brethren.

“a polished shaft . . . in his quiver” A “shaft” is the body of an arrow. Joseph Smith himself provided an interpretation that may explain the fulfillment of this scripture: “I am like a huge, rough stone rolling down from a high mountain; and the only polishing I get is when some corner gets rubbed off by coming in contact with something else . . . all hell knocking off a corner here and a corner there. Thus, I will become a smooth and polished shaft in the quiver of the Almighty” (TPJS, 304). A polished shaft, then, is a smooth arrow, a metaphor for being well prepared. Thus, Joseph viewed himself as a polished shaft in the Lord’s quiver, in direct fulfillment of Isaiah’s words.

3 And said unto me: Thou art my servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified.

verse 3 Scattered throughout Isaiah 42–53 are four poems biblical scholars call the “servant songs.” The first six verses of Isaiah 49, quoted here by Nephi in 1 Nephi 21, constitute the second of the four servant songs. The identity of the servant in these poems is a debated topic. Many scholars and Jews suggest that the servant represents the nation of Israel as a whole while Christians have traditionally interpreted it as a reference to the Savior.

While both of these interpretations have great merit, Nephi begins his quotation of Isaiah by inviting us to “liken them unto yourselves, that ye may have hope as well as your brethren” (1 Nephi 19:24). Modern-day Prophet Wilford Woodruff taught, “the 49th chapter of Isaiah is having its fulfillment [in the latter-days]” (“Discourse by President Wilford Woodruff,” The Latter-day Saints’ Millennial Star 47, no. 58, November 19, 1896: 738). If we consider, or liken, Isaiah 49 (1 Nephi 21) to the Latter-day dispensation, who might qualify as the servant spoken of in Isaiah 49:1–6?

Andrew C. Skinner, a Hebrew scholar and professor of ancient scripture at BYU, identified 12 characteristics of the servant, as found in Isaiah 49:1–9 and 1 Nephi 21:1–9:

- The servant is “called ... from the womb” (1 Nephi 21:1; Isaiah 49:1).
- His “mouth [was] like a sharp sword” (1 Nephi 21:2; Isaiah 49:2).
- He was hidden “in the shadow of [the Lord’s] hand” (1 Nephi 21:2; Isaiah 49:2).
- He was “made ... a polished shaft” tucked away in the Lord’s quiver (1 Nephi 21:2; Isaiah 49:2).
- He will feel that he “labored in vain” (1 Nephi 21:4; Isaiah 49:4).
- He could speak with the authority of the Lord (1 Nephi 21:5; Isaiah 49:5).
- He knew he had been foreordained, or from the “womb” (1 Nephi 21:5; Isaiah 49:5).
- His life’s work would be “to bring Jacob again to [the Lord]—though Israel be not gathered” (1 Nephi 21:5; Isaiah 49:5).
- He would “raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the preserved of Israel” (1 Nephi 21:6; Isaiah 49:6).
- He would be “a light to the Gentiles” (1 Nephi 21:6; Isaiah 49:6).
- He would be despised of men and abhorred by nations, yet, “Kings shall see and arise, princes also shall worship” (1 Nephi 21:7; Isaiah 49:7).
- He will be given to Israel “for a covenant of the people to establish the earth, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages,” he will free prisoners and enlighten “them that sit in darkness” and shepherd the chosen people (1 Nephi 21:8–9; Isaiah 49:8–9) (Adapted from Andrew C. Skinner, “Nephi’s Lessons to His People: The Messiah, the Land, and Isaiah 48–49 in 1 Nephi 19–22,” in Isaiah in the Book of Mormon, ed. Donald W. Parry and John W. Welch, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1998, 106–107).

“Various aspects of these characteristics,” wrote Skinner, “could probably be applied to several different individuals,” ancient and modern. But Skinner and some other Latter-day Saints have argued that, “the words Isaiah uses to describe this helper of Israel in the latter days” can apply to both “the Messiah and the Prophet Joseph Smith” (Skinner, “Nephi’s Lessons to His People,” 107. For examples of others arguing that Joseph Smith can be the servant, see Victor L. Ludlow, Isaiah: Prophet, Seer, and Poet, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 1982, 407–410; George A. Horton Jr., “Prophecies in the Bible about Joseph Smith,” Ensign, January 1989; Richard Wadsworth, “I Have a Question: Does the Book of Mormon Prophecy of the Prophet Joseph Smith?” Ensign, April 1989).

While the application of these passages to the Savior is probably familiar to most Latter-day Saints and other Christians, most people probably have not thought about how this prophecy might also be applied to Joseph Smith. Skinner identifies each of the 12 features of the Lord's servant to Joseph Smith with illuminating results, drawing often from the revealed words of the Lord in the Doctrine and Covenants:

- Joseph Smith was foreordained, and hence called "from the womb" (2 Nephi 3:7–9, 14–15).
- He knew of his foreordination (D&C 127:2).
- Spoke the word of Lord, which is "quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword, to the dividing asunder of both joints and marrow" (D&C 6:2).
- Was hidden from world by the Lord (D&C 86:9).
- Through persecution, Joseph, in his own words, became "a smooth and polished shaft in the quiver of the Almighty."
- He became very discouraged (D&C 121:2).
- Frequently spoke with the authority of the Lord, declaring, "Thus saith the Lord" on several occasions (e.g., D&C 52:1; 54:1; 55:1; 60:1).
- Brought forth the Book of Mormon, which was written to "a remnant of the house of Israel" and convince them "that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God" (Title Page).
- Was given the keys for the latter-day gathering of Israel (D&C 110:11).
- Was declared, by the Lord, to be "a light unto the Gentiles, and through this priesthood, a savior unto my people Israel" (D&C 86:11).
- Both good and evil have been spoken of him (See Joseph Smith—History 1:33), and the gospel he restored was promised to be proclaimed "before kings and rulers" (D&C 1:23).
- The gospel covenant was restored through him (D&C 1:17–22).

Skinner pointed out, "Surely it is not merely coincidence that," section 1 of the Doctrine and Covenants, "the revelation in which the Lord introduces Joseph Smith to the world, begins with the same language as Isaiah 49:1." Doctrine and Covenants 1:1 says: "Hearken ye people from afar. . . and ye that are upon the islands of the sea," just as Isaiah 49:1 begins: "Listen, O isles; and hearken, ye people from far."

Interpreting Joseph Smith as the servant in Isaiah 49 (1 Nephi 21), allows us to apply the remainder of the chapter to the restoration of the gospel in the latter-days. Skinner explained, "Having described the special latter-day servant, the one who would be instrumental in bringing about the restoration and eventual redemption of Israel, Isaiah reveals the events associated with the restoration and redemption" (Skinner, "Nephi's Lessons to His People," 109–110).

Nephi applies Isaiah's prophecy about the Gentiles (Isaiah 49:22–23; 1 Nephi 21:22–23) to the latter-day restoration, where the Lord "will proceed to do a marvelous work among the Gentiles, which shall be of great worth unto our seed" (1 Nephi 22:8; also see verses 6–14).

It is important to stress that in seeing Joseph Smith as the servant from Isaiah 49, this does not mean or suggest that he is the Messiah, or that he is equal in importance to the Savior. Joseph Smith was a type, ultimately pointing back to the Lord Jesus Christ. Victor L. Ludlow has suggested that the servant embodies several of "the house of Israel's major representatives throughout the ages. Joseph Smith was one of many lesser "saviors" (see Obadiah 1:21; D&C 86:11) who participate in the Lord's work of salvation among his people, but among all the prophets he served in many ways that are noticeably unusual and uncommonly distinctive.

4 Then I said, I have labored in vain, I have spent my strength for naught and in vain; surely my judgment is with the Lord, and my work with my God.

verse 4 "Israel" points out that his labors in the past have been "for naught," or in vain. The history of the house of Israel has been marred with apostasy and scattering. To this the Lord responds with a powerful prophecy of more significant labors that lay ahead in verses 5 and 6.

"surely my judgment is with the Lord, and my work with my God" A modern translation of Isaiah renders this phrase, "Yet what is due me is in the Lord's hand, and my reward is with my God" (NIV).

5 And now, saith the Lord—that formed me from the womb that I should be his servant, to bring Jacob again to him—though Israel be not gathered, yet shall I be glorious in the eyes of the Lord, and my God shall be my strength.

verse 5 This verse, as has already been discussed, is the commission of the birthright children of ancient Joseph to bring about the gathering of Israel in the last days. Ephraim's leader, Joseph Smith, Jr., was the one to whom the keys of gathering were restored (D&C 110:11). It will be under the authority of those keys that the gathering will occur. In modern revelation, the Lord has affirmed that "they who are in the north countries" will return and receive their blessings under the hand of "the children of Ephraim" (D&C 133:26-34). Today it is, with few exceptions, the children of Ephraim and Manasseh, who constitute the Lord's Church who are taking the gospel message to the scattered remnants of Israel and who thus are gathering their brethren. Thus, the expression "children of Ephraim" refers to the latter-day Church of Jesus Christ.

"though Israel be not gathered, yet shall I be glorious in the eyes of the Lord" Ephraim says, "Even if I were to fail in my attempts at gathering, the Lord would continue to regard me with favor."

6 And he said: It is a light thing that thou shouldst be my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the preserved of Israel. I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the ends of the earth.

verse 6 "And he said" The Lord continues speaking.

“It is a light thing” This phrase means it is a comparatively small task—it is simply not sufficient—that Israelites should work to gather and restore only other blood Israelites. Israelites must also serve as a “light to the Gentiles”—an ensign, an example or missionary, to all the world, even those outside the blood of Israel. Nephi and others taught how the great blessings of the last days would be made available not only to the house of Israel, but to the Gentiles as well (see 1 Nephi 15:18; 22:8-11; 3 Nephi 20:25-27). The gospel is to be taken by Ephraim in the dispensation of the fulness of times to all people. It is not enough to simply bless Israel—Ephraim is destined to bless the whole earth. Once again, the tribe of Ephraim and Joseph Smith stand out as the main participants in this work.

To “raise up the tribes of Jacob” is to gather scattered Israel and therefore lift them up through the covenants of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The “preserved of Israel” are those of scattered Israel who, through their righteousness have remained prepared to receive the gospel message and thus responsive to the call to gather.

“unto the ends of the earth” To “every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people” (Revelation 14:6; 1 Nephi 19:16; D&C 133:37).

An important group of verses in D&C 86:8-11 identify Joseph Smith and his co-workers of the tribes of Joseph—the members of the Church of Jesus Christ in these latter days—as the fulfillment of these words from Isaiah. These are they “with whom the priesthood hath continued through the lineage of [their] fathers—for [they] are lawful heirs according to the flesh, and have been hid from the world with Christ in God.” Having been foreordained long ago to this calling, and having inherited it through lineal descent, Ephraim’s children are now no longer “hid from the world” but are at the forefront of the Lord’s work in the last days to restore scattered Israel to the covenant blessings, and to bring the message of the gospel to the Gentiles.

7 Thus saith the Lord, the Redeemer of Israel, his Holy One, to him whom man despiseth, to him whom the nations abhorreth, to servant of rulers: Kings shall see and arise, princes also shall worship, because of the Lord that is faithful.

verse 7 “Thus saith the Lord” In the remainder of the chapter, Isaiah quotes the Lord who speaks in the first person.

“to him whom man despiseth” “to him whom the nations abhorreth” The servant shall be despised. Again, this servant may be the tribe of Ephraim or, more specifically, he who presides over Ephraim in this last dispensation, Joseph Smith, Jr. It is perhaps pertinent that Joseph Smith was promised by Moroni that his name would be “had for good and evil among all nations.”

“to servant of rulers” On the other hand, the Lord is also speaking to one, the servant, who will be influential even in the lives of some rulers.

“Kings shall see and arise” “princes also shall worship” The Lord saith to Ephraim: In that latter day, even kings and princes will respond to the servant’s message and worship the Lord.

“the Lord that is faithful” The Lord never fails to keep his promises.

verses 8-12 These verses describe the time of gathering of Israel from her prolonged dispersal.

8 Thus saith the Lord: In an acceptable time have I heard thee, O isles of the sea, and in a day of salvation have I helped thee; and I will preserve thee, and give thee my servant for a covenant of the people, to establish the earth, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages;

verse 8 “In an acceptable time” At a favorable or appropriate time the Lord will respond to the spiritual yearnings of scattered Israel and commence the process of gathering.

“O isles of the sea” means, “O scattered Israel.”

“in a day of salvation have I helped thee” In the great final dispensation, referred to as the “day of salvation,” the Lord will “help” scattered Israel by bestowing the keys of gathering so that the work might be commenced. Note Isaiah’s use of the past perfect tense in this phrase for an event that will occur in the future. This is yet another example of the so-called “prophetic perfect” verb tense.

Thus, saith the Lord: At a time acceptable to me, I will send you my servant created and prepared by me. He will re-establish my covenant with Israel, restore the earth, and rejuvenate Israel’s desolate spiritual heritage.

“to cause to inherit the desolate heritages” Restore lands, blessings, and covenants to which Israel was formerly entitled.

9 That thou mayest say to the prisoners: Go forth; to them that sit in darkness: Show yourselves. They shall feed in the ways, and their pastures shall be in all high places.

verse 9 That the servant may say to the prisoners, “Go forth” and “show yourselves.” The prisoners are scattered, apostate Israel, those in spiritual bondage, whether on the earth or in the spirit world. They “sit in darkness” because they lack the truths of the gospel. They shall be freed by the restoration of gospel truths (see D&C 45:28). They shall be freed from the bonds of sin and spirit prison.

Gathering Israelites are compared to sheep:

“they shall feed in the ways” They shall be spiritually nourished as they go along their way to the gathering.

“their pastures shall be in all high places” The concept of “high places” has been used in other scriptural verses. See, for example, D&C 19:29 and D&C 112:7.

Figuratively speaking, mountains or high places are often used as the meeting place for God and man, especially the temples. Israel shall be spiritually nourished in these high places—Israel will be nurtured and succored by divine intervention.

The entire phrase “they shall feed in the ways, and their pastures shall be in all high places” is a metaphor for the Lord’s care and nurturing.

10 They shall not hunger nor thirst, neither shall the heat nor the sun smite them; for he that hath mercy on them shall lead them, even by the springs of water shall he guide them.

verse 10 The comparison of gathering Israel with sheep continues. The gathering Israelites shall not suffer unnecessarily, for the Lord, who loves them, will nourish them as he leads them to the “springs of water,” to the living water—to Jesus Christ and his gospel.

11 And I will make all my mountains a way, and my highways shall be exalted.

verse 11 This expression simply means that the Lord will prepare paths or means for the return of scattered Israel to the Lord’s earthly kingdom.

The Lord through Joseph Smith spoke of the miraculous creation of a great highway “in the midst of the great deep” which will be created to assist in the gathering of Israel. This terminology seems a bit ambiguous, and perhaps is used because this miraculous thoroughfare is analogous to one that appeared as Moses led the Israelites across the Red Sea. We are left with the impression that this will be a spectacular miracle (see D&C 133:26-33)!

12 And then, O house of Israel, behold, these shall come from far; and lo, these from the north and from the west; and these from the land of Sinim.

verse 12 The gathering of dispersed Israel will be extensive. They will come from all parts of the earth. Some will even come from “Sinim”! Where is that? No one really knows. Some scholars hold that it is Syrene, a place in southern Egypt, also known as Aswan. This was the location of a large Jewish colony after the scattering. Others have suggested that Sinim is China. Still others think it might be the desert of Sin, which is in the peninsula of Sinai. The point is that the Lord will gather his people from wherever they have been scattered.

verses 13-21 In these verses the Lord comforts and reassures his gathering children.

13 Sing, O heavens; and be joyful, O earth; for the feet of those who are in the east shall be established; and break forth into singing, O mountains; for they shall be smitten no more; for the Lord hath comforted his people, and will have mercy upon his afflicted.

verse 13 Shout, O heavens, and rejoice O earth, and sing O mountains, for the Lord will have mercy on gathering Israel. Even the inanimate creations of God, all nature, will witness and rejoice at his mercy and at the exaltation he offers.

The Lord will protect and comfort the gatherers. Some of them are established in the east (in and around Jerusalem?).

“for they shall be smitten no more” These people have been “smitten” because of their dispersion and long exile and because some have lived under circumstances of severe persecution. They have also been afflicted spiritually because of sin.

14 But, behold, Zion hath said: The Lord hath forsaken me, and my Lord hath forgotten me—but he will show that he hath not.

verse 14 Zion is usually the place where the covenant people will gather. Here, however, Zion is used to personify the scattered Israelites.

Isaiah, in this and in the next several verses, personifies scattered Israel who “complains” and thus betrays her lost faith in the Lord’s ability to save her. But Isaiah reassures scattered Israel that the Lord has not forgotten.

15 For can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? Yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee, O house of Israel.

verse 15 A “sucking child,” of course, is a nursing baby. In our mortal experience, each of us has experienced first-hand the profound love of a mother for her child. Here the Lord’s love for us and his desire to gather us to him is compared to this maternal love. The verse suggests that the Lord’s love for us is even greater. Though unlikely, a mortal mother may forget, but I will never forget—“they may forget, yet will I not forget thee, O house of Israel.” The Lord’s love for us is incomprehensible, absolute, and completely incredible. He will never fail us!

16 Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me.

verse 16 “I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands” I have engraved you on the palms of my hands, and you are always present with me. This phrase may have reference to the ancient Hebrew practice of tattooing the palm with a symbol or emblem or name to show devotion and to serve as a reminder of one’s commitment. This phrase also may have reference to the crucifixion of Christ, in which nails pierced his hands and left scars that remained after his resurrection (Luke 24:38-40; 3 Nephi 11:13-14). These nail marks are a sign to Israel—and to the world—that Christ loves us more than we can understand and that he has indeed completed his mission as Savior. He ever stands ready to receive us to him if we are willing.

“thy walls are continually before me” This phrase implies protection. The Lord is ever mindful of his people, and he has enclosed Israel with protective walls.

17 Thy children shall make haste against thy destroyers; and they that made thee waste shall go forth of thee.

verse 17 The “children” are the descendants of ancient Israel. The “destroyers” are the nations that attacked and captured ancient Israel. In the days when Israel shall be restored to her former blessings, the descendants of ancient Israel will quickly turn against their ancient enemies.

“they that made thee waste shall go forth of thee”The “of” in this passage may be rendered “from.” Those who conquered and held captive Israel will flee or depart.

This passage may also refer to the success the faithful of Israel will have against those who would destroy them spiritually—including Satan and his followers.

18 Lift up thine eyes round about and behold; all these gather themselves together, and they shall come to thee. And as I live, saith the Lord, thou shalt surely clothe thee with them all, as with an ornament, and bind them on even as a bride.

verse 18 The Lord addresses Zion, the place of gathering. Multitudes will gather to Zion—“to thee”—and they will complement Zion as a wedding gown and ornaments complement a bride. Those of gathered Israel are Christ’s jewels. In this verse the bride represents those gathered in Zion.

19 For thy waste and thy desolate places, and the land of thy destruction, shall even now be too narrow by reason of the inhabitants; and they that swallowed thee up shall be far away.

verse 19 The returning multitudes will be so numerous that they will occupy even the desolate places in Israel’s promised lands that have previously been laid waste and lie empty. The returning masses will be unimpeded since their enemies, including spiritual enemies, will be far away.

20 The children whom thou shalt have, after thou hast lost the first, shall again in thine ears say: The place is too strait for me; give place to me that I may dwell.

verse 20 Israel is characterized as a mother who has lost her children—those earlier generations of Israel who fell away in apostasy—and is barren, but she shall have more—those of gathering Israel.

Their numbers will be so large that the Lord says, speaking to Israel, “You thought all of scattered Israel was irretrievably lost, but those who return will be so numerous that they will say, ‘This place is too strait—too tight or narrow or crowded. Help me find a place to dwell here in Zion (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 8:20).’” 21 Then shalt thou say in thine heart: Who hath begotten me these, seeing I have lost my children, and am desolate, a captive, and removing to and fro? And who hath brought up these? Behold, I was left alone; these, where have they been?

verse 21 Israel will then say to herself, “Where did all these come from?” It is surprising that a barren woman should turn up with so many children.

22 Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people; and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders.

verse 22 The Lord is addressing Israel.

“I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles” The reader ought to become sensitized to the imagery of the “hand” or the “arm” of the Lord. It invariably signifies his power to intervene in the affairs of men and in the events of history. In the latter days, the Lord will strengthen and enable the Gentiles to gather scattered Israel.

“set up my standard to the people” A standard is a banner or flag or ensign to which people gather. It is frequently used metaphorically, as it is here, for the restored gospel of Christ that will come forth among the Gentiles.

“and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders” This is a figurative expression indicating that the Gentiles, through whom the gospel is restored, will gather the Lord’s covenant people, Israel (cf. 1 Nephi 22:6-10). In this context, these latter-day Gentiles constitute the Lord’s servant Israel mentioned earlier in this chapter (verse 3). They are Gentiles by nationality and culture (citizens of the great Gentile nation) but Israelite by genealogical descent (cf. D&C 109:60).

verses 22-23 These can be confusing verses. To understand them, see Nephi’s own inspired commentary on them in 1 Nephi 22:7-14.

The phrase “I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people” refers to the Lord’s delivering the everlasting gospel to the great Gentile nation in the latter days (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 15:13). This great Gentile nation will then take the gospel message to those of the house of Israel—the Lamanites and the Jews and the other scattered peoples. The gospel and the Church of Jesus Christ shall serve as a flag or ensign or a rallying point around which people may gather. Scattered Israel, including its sons and daughters, will be nourished and gathered by the Gentiles. This missionary work or gathering is represented by the phrase, “they [the Gentiles] shall bring thy [Israel’s] sons in their [the Gentiles’] arms, and thy [Israel’s] daughters shall be carried upon their [the Gentiles’] shoulders.”

The Prophet Jacob commented on the meaning of verse 23 (see 2 Nephi 6:12-13 and 2 Nephi 10:7-9). There is a sign that awaits the gathering Israelites in the latter days: The very elect and righteous among the Gentiles (the “kings” and “queens”) will bow down to the Israelites and humbly serve them and teach the gospel to them without shame, for true humility is seen among the disciples of Christ. Hence the verse may be restated: “And the very elect of the Gentiles shall be thy (Israel’s) nursing fathers and mothers; they (the very elect of the Gentiles) shall bow down to thee (Israel) with their face towards the earth, and lick up the dust of thy (Israel’s) feet; and thou (Israel) shalt know that I am the Lord; for they that wait for (serve and trust in) me (the elect of the Gentiles) shall not be ashamed.” This is figurative or metaphorical language suggesting that governments will also assist with the gathering and restoration of the covenant people (cf. 2 Nephi 10:7-9).

“lick up the dust of thy feet” This is a figurative expression meaning to be humble and subservient. An explanation of this phrase will be offered by Jacob, the son of Lehi, who will quote the same Isaiah passage (2 Nephi 6:13). He will identify those who “lick up the dust” of Israel’s feet not as the kings and queens who would be nursing fathers and mothers aiding Israel’s return but as those who fight against Zion—against the covenant people of the Lord. Hence, God does fulfill his covenants, and his people need not be ashamed. Those who oppose his plans and purposes will in the end be humbled (cf. D&C 49:10).

24 For shall the prey be taken from the mighty, or the lawful captives delivered?

verse 24 All of this prophecy on the gathering of Israel seems too much to believe. Normally no one takes away from the mighty beasts their helpless prey, or from the mighty political powers the captives that they have taken. Therefore, Israel asks, “Is it really possible to free imprisoned Israel from her captors?”

25 But thus saith the Lord, even the captives of the mighty shall be taken away, and the prey of the terrible shall be delivered; for I will contend with him that contendeth with thee, and I will save thy children.

verse 25 The “mighty” and the “terrible” are the tyrants, conquerors, and unrighteous leaders who hold scattered Israel captive.

The Lord reassures Israel that not only is it possible, it will be done! “Thy children” are the descendants of the Israelites. The Lord will deliver his covenant people.

26 And I will feed them that oppress thee with their own flesh; they shall be drunken with their own blood as with sweet wine; and all flesh shall know that I, the Lord, am thy Savior and thy Redeemer, the Mighty One of Jacob.

verse 26 Isaiah comments upon the fate of those who war against the Israelites in the last days. These Israelites are those who have been converted to the gospel of Jesus Christ and have thus learned of their own true identity and their proper place in the chosen or royal family.

The fate of those who contend against Israel is graphically described, “I will feed them that oppress thee with their own flesh; they shall be drunken with their own blood as with sweet wine.” The specific meaning of these phrases is given by Nephi in 1 Nephi 22:13. Those who afflict Israel shall eventually become internally divided and make destructive war upon each other.

“all flesh” This term may refer to all human beings (Ezekiel 21:4-5; D&C 63:5-6; 84:97-98) or even all members of the animal kingdom (Genesis 6:17, 19; Leviticus 17:14). Perhaps the Lord’s manifestations of power will be so great that all creatures will know he is God.

“thy Savior and thy Redeemer, the Mighty One of Jacob” These three titles for Jehovah emphasize his ability to rescue us from spiritual death (Savior) and to ransom us from the demands of justice (Redeemer), as well as his ability to deliver us from all our earthly enemies (Mighty One).

1 And now it came to pass that after I, Nephi, had read these things which were engraven upon the plates of brass, my brethren came unto me and said unto me: What meaneth these things which ye have read? Behold, are they to be understood according to things which are spiritual, which shall come to pass according to the spirit and not the flesh?

verse 1 “I, Nephi, had read these things which were engraven upon the plates of brass” In the prior chapter, 1 Nephi 21, Nephi has provided a discourse on the scattering and gathering of the House of Israel. Buttressing his theological arguments, Nephi has quoted liberally from other prophets whose writings were on the plates of brass, specifically Isaiah and Zenos. There are also a number of verses in this chapter, 1 Nephi 22, that either quote from or allude to Isaiah and Zenos. Thus, verse 4 of this chapter reads, “And behold, there are many who are already lost from the knowledge of those who are at Jerusalem. Yea, the more part of all the tribes have been led away; and they are scattered to and fro upon the isles of the sea; and whither they are none of us knoweth, save that we know that they have been led away.” The italicized portions of this verse comes from Isaiah 49:21 (quoted in 1 Nephi 21) and from Zenos (quoted in 1 Nephi 19:10, 12, 16).

Far from slavishly and lazily copying the brass plates, Book of Mormon authors, such as Nephi, conscientiously knit together strings of “biblical” phrases and passages in an intricate manner that expand and re-conceptualize the teachings of biblical prophets. This phenomenon of a text recombining quotations, allusions, and paraphrases of other texts for new literary purposes is called intertextuality. This practice was anciently regarded as the mark of a fine scribe or author and is found explicitly and implicitly throughout the biblical books themselves.

Since Nephi was clearly literate and was most likely trained in a scribal school where such techniques were taught (See Brant A. Gardner, “Nephi as Scribe,” Mormon Studies Review 23, no. 1, 2011: 45–55), we should not at all be surprised to find such brilliance in his record. Readers of the text can therefore better appreciate the literary skill and grace that went into the production of the Book of Mormon.

For example, later on in this chapter, in verses 9–12, Nephi will skillfully weave quotations from Genesis 22:18 and Isaiah 52:10 (cf. 1 Nephi 19:17), 29:18, and 49:26 (cf. 1 Nephi 21:26) in the middle of his own doctrinal reflection on the relationship between the gentiles and the house of Israel: “And it shall also be of worth unto the Gentiles; and not only unto the Gentiles but unto all the house of Israel, unto the making known of the covenants of the Father of heaven unto Abraham, saying: In thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed [Genesis 22:18]. And I would, my brethren, that ye should know that all the kindreds of the earth cannot be blessed unless he shall make bare his arm in the eyes of the nations [Isaiah 52:10]. Wherefore, the Lord God will proceed to make bare his arm in the eyes of all the nations [Isaiah 52:10], in bringing about his covenants and his gospel unto those who are of the house of Israel. Wherefore, he will bring them again out of captivity, and they shall be gathered together to the lands of their inheritance; and they shall be brought out of obscurity and out of darkness [Isaiah 29:18]; and they shall know that the Lord is their Savior and their Redeemer, the Mighty One of Israel [Isaiah 49:26].”

Curiously, Nephi also quotes one unknown prophet, whose writings presumably were found on the brass plates, in verse 17. “For thus saith the prophet, they shall be saved, even if it so be as by fire.” All told, there are some 23 quotations of Isaiah and other scriptural works in 1 Nephi 22 woven deftly into Nephi’s larger discussion on the topic of the restoration of the house of Israel.

“What meaneth these things which ye have read? Behold, are they to be understood according to things which are spiritual, which shall come to pass according to the spirit and not the flesh?” Nephi is asked whether the prophecies he has just read from the plates of brass pertaining to the scattering and gathering of Israel (Isaiah chapters 48 and 49) are to be taken literally (“according . . . to the flesh”) or figuratively (“according to the spirit”). That is, will Israel actually be scattered and gathered physically (literally) or just spiritually (figuratively)?

2 And I, Nephi, said unto them: Behold they were manifest unto the prophet by the voice of the Spirit; for by the Spirit are all things made known unto the prophets, which shall come upon the children of men according to the flesh.

verse 2 “The prophet,” is perhaps Isaiah, and perhaps this phrase also refers to the other prophets quoted in 1 Nephi 20-21.

The Spirit of the Holy Ghost, of course, is involved in a prophet’s receiving revelation. Even so, the events of which the prophet foretells often may occur literally—“according to the flesh” as they will do with the prophecies in 1 Nephi 20-21

3 Wherefore, the things of which I have read are things pertaining to things both temporal and spiritual; for it appears that the house of Israel, sooner or later, will be scattered upon all the face of the earth, and also among all nations.

verse 3 “both temporal and spiritual” As mentioned in the commentary for verse 1, Nephi was asked whether the prophecies of Isaiah should be regarded as literal or figurative. Nephi answers that both meanings should be taken. Israel will be scattered physically or literally and later gathered literally (return to their lands of promise). They will also be gathered spiritually (returned to the gospel of Jesus Christ).

As an aside, it should be mentioned that there is no question more fundamental to scriptural interpretation than whether a given passage is intended to be interpreted literally or figuratively. Prophets write some passages which they intend to be understood literally, and others they intend to have symbolic meanings. Mistakes may be made in both directions. There are often no easy answers to this dilemma.

If you would like to review the concepts of scattering and gathering of Israel, see the introductory comments for 1 Nephi 20 (see also verses 7-14 below).

4 And behold, there are many who are already lost from the knowledge of those who are at Jerusalem. Yea, the more part of all the tribes have been led away; and they are scattered to and fro upon the isles of the sea; and whither they are none of us knoweth, save that we know that they have been led away.

verse 4 “many who are already lost from the knowledge of those who are at Jerusalem” Who are those of the house of Israel “who are already lost from the knowledge of those who are at Jerusalem” at the time of Nephi? They are the ten tribes of the northern Kingdom of Israel who were captured by Assyria’s forces in the series of conquests between 732 and 722 BC. In other words, they are scattered Israel. See the supplemental article, Jerusalem at the time of Lehi.

“Yea, the more part of all the tribes have been led away” It has often been maintained that the northern kingdom of Israel was destroyed and deported by the Assyrians but that the southern kingdom of Judah remained essentially unaffected. In the case of Judah, however, nothing could be farther from the truth. In 701 BC, some ninety percent of the kingdom of Judah—consisting not only of people whose tribal heritage was Judah, but of many refugees and other citizens of Judah whose tribal heritage was of Ephraim or Manasseh, Dan or Asher, Zebulon or Naphtali—was also taken away, and became part of “lost Israel.” In this regard, it is perhaps more accurate to speak not of the ten lost tribes, but of the twelve lost tribes (or at least the 11.9 lost tribes) since the majority of all twelve tribes, including Judah, was carried away captive by the Assyrians. See the discussion of Assyria’s attack on the land of Judah in 701 BC, also contained in the supplemental article, Jerusalem at the Time of Lehi.

“isles of the sea” The term “isles of the sea,” as mentioned previously, refers simply to scattered Israel, wherever they may be found upon the earth. It does not necessarily mean they occupy an island.

“they are scattered to and fro” The phrase “to and fro” means literally to and from. Israel is scattered everywhere—to and from, hither and thither.

In what ways are the “lost ten tribes” or others of scattered Israel lost? They are: (1) lost to the lands of their inheritance; (2) lost to the gospel, the priesthood, and its saving ordinances; and (3) they have lost their identity. They no longer know that they are of the house of Israel and that they are a chosen and covenant people.

5 And since they have been led away, these things have been prophesied concerning them, and also concerning all those who shall hereafter be scattered and be confounded, because of the Holy One of Israel; for against him will they harden their hearts; wherefore, they shall be scattered among all nations and shall be hated of all men.

verse 5 “since they have been led away [from the truth]” As mentioned previously, scattering occurs because of apostasy. Those who apostatize and are scattered will tend to become isolated, lonely, and despised of men.

6 Nevertheless, after they shall be nursed by the Gentiles, and the Lord has lifted up his hand upon the Gentiles and set them up for a standard, and their children have been carried in their arms, and their daughters have been carried upon their shoulders, behold these things of which are spoken are temporal; for thus are the covenants of the Lord with our fathers; and it meaneth us in the days to come, and also all our brethren who are of the house of Israel.

verse 6 See the commentary for 1 Nephi 21:22-23. The setting for this verse is the latter days and the latter-day gathering of the house of Israel.

“behold these things of which are spoken are temporal” Again, this phrase implies that the prophecies of the Lord’s prophets and the covenants which the Lord has made with man will find their fulfillment physically or literally.

“it meaneth us” Lehi’s descendants, probably numbered among the Indian populations of North, Central, and South America, will be included in the gathering as will all others of the house of Israel (“also all our brethren”).

7 And it meaneth that the time cometh that after all the house of Israel have been scattered and confounded, that the Lord God will raise up a mighty nation among the Gentiles, yea, even upon the face of this land; and by them shall our seed be scattered.

verse 7 “a mighty nation among the Gentiles” See the commentaries for 1 Nephi 10:14 and 1 Nephi 15:13 for a discussion of the “mighty nation among the Gentiles.” In the Church, we have come to refer to this nation as “the great Gentile nation,” though this phrase is not found in scripture. This nation would seem to be the United States of America. Before missionaries from this great Gentile nation begin to gather Israel, including the Lamanites, the citizens of this Gentile nation will first have a role in scattering them. Presumably this refers to the oppression and disruption of the native American Indian tribes (by American and Spanish settlers). Some of those scattered (likely only a few) might include Lehi’s descendants.

8 And after our seed is scattered the Lord God will proceed to do a marvelous work among the Gentiles, which shall be of great worth unto our seed; wherefore, it is likened unto their being nourished by the Gentiles and being carried in their arms and upon their shoulders.

verse 8 The “marvelous work” is the restoration of the gospel and the coming forth of the Book of Mormon.

“wherefore, it is likened . . . upon their shoulders” This phrase explains the meaning of 1 Nephi 21:22-23 and 1 Nephi 22:6.

“It” refers to the gathering of Israel. The first “their” refers to gathering Israelites. The second “their” and third “their” refer to the Gentile missionaries. Since the gospel will be restored and the Book of Mormon will come forth to the great Gentile nation, the “Gentile” missionaries will carry the gospel to the house of Israel. Remember that even though these missionaries are called “Gentiles” by virtue of their residence in the great Gentile nation, most of them are actually descendants of the tribe of Joseph through Ephraim (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 21:1-6).

9 And it shall also be of worth unto the Gentiles; and not only unto the Gentiles but unto all the house of Israel, unto the making known of the covenants of the Father of heaven unto Abraham, saying: In thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed.

verse 9 “It” is the gathering of Israel and the restoration of gospel blessings which include the covenants made with father Abraham. Part of the “marvelous work” of restoration to occur in the latter days, under the direction of the prophet Joseph Smith, is the making known to the Israelite peoples the covenants of the Father unto Abraham. The covenants which the Lord made with Abraham are reviewed in the commentary for 1 Nephi 14:8.

This verse makes special reference to one specific covenant: “In thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed.” What is the meaning of this particular covenant? In what way will all of the families or kindreds of the earth be blessed through the seed of Abraham or the house of Israel? Abraham’s posterity will prove to be a blessing to all families of the earth, in that Israel will bear the priesthood and preach the gospel to them. Thus, will every family have the opportunity, through the posterity of Abraham, to enjoy the blessings of the gospel, which include the “blessings of salvation, even of life eternal” (Abraham 2:9-11).

This verse implies that this particular covenant which the Lord made with Abraham will be “of worth” both to the house of Israel and to the Gentiles. In other words, it will apply to, or benefit, or be of value to both Abraham’s posterity and to the Gentiles. This covenant has obvious application to those of the house of Israel. But how does it apply to Gentiles? Once an individual who descends from ancestors outside the house of Israel accepts the gospel, he is adopted into the house of Israel. He becomes, in a literal sense, one of the posterity of Abraham. All of the covenants made with Abraham apply to him just as if he were a blood descendant of Abraham. Hence, the “Gentiles” who are the missionary citizens of the great Gentile nation, those of the house of Israel who accept the gospel, and the “Gentiles”—those not of Israelite blood—who accept the gospel will all be blessed by this particular covenant.

10 And I would, my brethren, that ye should know that all the kindreds of the earth cannot be blessed unless he shall make bare his arm in the eyes of the nations.

verse 10 “make bare his arm in the eyes of the nations” When we say that the Lord “makes bare his arm” we mean that the Lord shows his power. Those missionaries who take the gospel to all peoples and nations of the earth will go with God’s power (see D&C 35:13-14).

11 Wherefore, the Lord God will proceed to make bare his arm in the eyes of all the nations, in bringing about his covenants and his gospel unto those who are of the house of Israel.

12 Wherefore, he will bring them again out of captivity, and they shall be gathered together to the lands of their inheritance; and they shall be brought out of obscurity and out of darkness; and they shall know that the Lord is their Savior and their Redeemer, the Mighty One of Israel.

verse 12 “they shall be gathered together to the lands of their inheritance” Keep in mind the fact that the land of inheritance for the lost ten tribes of Israel is the western hemisphere (with its theoretical center in Jackson County, Missouri), and the land of inheritance for those of Jewish descent is Jerusalem and the land of Israel.

The phrase “out of obscurity and out of darkness” originated with Isaiah (Isaiah 29:18) and refers to scattered Israel.

13 And the blood of that great and abominable church, which is the whore of all the earth, shall turn upon their own heads; for they shall war among themselves, and the sword of their own hands shall fall upon their own heads, and they shall be drunken with their own blood.

14 And every nation which shall war against thee, O house of Israel, shall be turned one against another, and they shall fall into the pit which they digged to ensnare the people of the Lord. And all that fight against Zion shall be destroyed, and that great whore, who hath perverted the right ways of the Lord, yea, that great and abominable church, shall tumble to the dust and great shall be the fall of it.

verses 13-14 “great and abominable church” See the commentary for 1 Nephi 21:26. See also the introductory commentary for 1 Nephi 13.

This verse describes the internal strife and fratricide that will occur in the latter days among those in the great and abominable church. Since the verse has a latter-day orientation, the great and abominable church referred to here is the less specific entity described in 1 Nephi 14 (see 1 Nephi 14:10) and not the specific church referred to in 1 Nephi 13. This generic or less specific entity consists of all those organizations (in this instance, nations) who fight against the kingdom of God. Here we learn that they will be caught in their own traps. The fall of this great and abominable entity will only occur just prior to the Millennium.

15 For behold, saith the prophet, the time cometh speedily that Satan shall have no more power over the hearts of the children of men; for the day soon cometh that all the proud and they who do wickedly shall be as stubble; and the day cometh that they must be burned.

verse 15 The “prophet” spoken of here may well be Isaiah (see Isaiah 47:14) or even Zenos.

“Satan shall have no more power over the hearts of the children of men”
Satan is bound during the Millennium.

This verse has been a source of trouble and criticism for the Church. It has served as fodder for anti-Mormons. The reason is that its phraseology is very similar to a prophecy of Malachi. Compare the wording of this verse with Malachi 4:1. Malachi is the only biblical scripture that has wording similar to 1 Nephi 22:15. Why should this be a source of trouble? Couldn't Nephi have simply taken this wording from the brass plates? No, he couldn't have. Why? Simply because the prophet Malachi prophesied in about 450 BC, well after Lehi's family left Jerusalem! There were no writings of Malachi on the brass plates that Lehi's family took with them. The anti-Mormons have said, “Aha! We've got you this time!” Joseph Smith must have had before him the Book of Malachi when he wrote 1 Nephi 22:15. Nephi could not have had access to Malachi's writings! This is not the only verse that has caused this trouble. Anti-Mormons have also compared 1 Nephi 22:23-24 and 2 Nephi 26:4, 8-9 with Malachi 4:1-2 and have found unmistakable similarities. What is the explanation? How do we get out of this one?

Before we try to resolve this issue, let's raise yet another similar criticism of the Book of Mormon. Almost since the publication of the Book of Mormon it has been noticed that there is a similarity between 2 Nephi 1:14 and a passage written by William Shakespeare in his play Hamlet. 2 Nephi 1:14 reads: “in the cold and silent grave, from whence no traveler can return.” The passage in Hamlet is: “But that the dread of something after death, the undiscovered country from whose bourn no traveler returns.” Yet another passage in Mosiah 3:25 is similar: “a state of misery and endless torment from whence they can no more return.” Shakespeare wrote in the late 1500s and early 1600s AD.

Well then, did Joseph Smith quote from Shakespeare as he wrote the Book of Mormon? For the discussion of the issue of 2 Nephi 1:14, I am indebted to Robert F.

Smith. In his article “Shakespeare and the Book of Mormon,” (a FARMS reprint) he has provided us the following explanation.

It would seem that there are two possible explanations for the similarities between these passages in the Book of Mormon and those in Malachi and Hamlet. The first theoretical possibility is that Joseph Smith’s mind might have been laced with the literature of his day. He certainly had read Malachi, and I suppose he might have been familiar with Hamlet. There are also passages in the King James Version of the Book of Job which are vaguely similar to 2 Nephi 1:14 (see Job 7:9- 10, 21; 16:22). There is other literature which was theoretically available to Joseph in 1828. For example, the phrase “. . . from whence no traveler returns” has been found in a book by Josiah Priest, published in Albany, New York, in 1825. Perhaps as he translated, he used words and phrases which were in his mind, and perhaps one result was the phraseology in 2 Nephi 1:14. We now know that this first explanation is no longer feasible, particularly in view of just how the Book of Mormon was translated. See Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, Appendix A, “The Process of Translating the Book of Mormon.” In this article, you will learn that Joseph was not given ideas to translate using his own words. Rather, he was given every word which he visualized and read.

A better explanation is that Malachi, Nephi, and Shakespeare all had an abundant common source of literature available to them from which they might have taken their ideas and even their phraseology. For example, Brother Smith in his article gives a few examples of specific “ideas and expressions . . . [which] . . . were available from Mesopotamia to Egypt in Lehi’s own time—especially in Egypt.” A few of these specific examples follow (reproduced here without references which might be obtained from Brother Smith’s article): “May you not go on the roads of the western ones [the dead]; they who go on them [travelers] do not return.” “There is nobody who returns from there.” “Behold, there is nobody who has gone, who has returned.” “None that have gone have come back.” “Why, pray, have you come to the ‘Land of No Return,’ on the road whose traveler returns never.” “To the house from which he who enters never goes forth. To the road whose path does not lead back.”

Referring to 2 Nephi 1:14, Hugh Nibley wrote:

This passage has inspired scathing descriptions of the Book of Mormon as a mass of stolen quotations. . . A recent study of Sumerian and Akkadian names for the world of the dead lists prominently “the hole, the earth, the land of no return, the path of no turning back, the road whose course never turns back, the distant land, etc.” . . . This is a good deal closer to Lehi’s language than Shakespeare is. . . Lehi . . . can hardly be denied the luxury of speaking as he was supposed to speak (Approach to the Book of Mormon, 276-77; see also Nibley, Since Cumorah, 162; and Nibley, Prophetic Book of Mormon, 90-91.)

Let us, then, turn our attention back to 1 Nephi 22:15. What common source might have influenced both Malachi and Nephi? Elder Bruce R. McConkie has proposed an interesting explanation. He has suggested that the prophet Zenos may have been a common source for both Nephi and Malachi:

Our understanding of the prophetic word will be greatly expanded if we know how one prophet quotes another, usually without acknowledging his source.

Either Isaiah or Micah copied the prophetic words of the other relative to the mountain of the Lord's house being established in the last days with all nations flowing thereto. Their ministries overlapped, but we assume that the lesser Micah copied from the greater Isaiah and then appended some words of his own about the Millennial Era.

Some unnamed Old Testament prophet, who obviously was Zenos, as the Book of Mormon testifies, spoke of the day when the wicked would be destroyed as stubble; when the righteous would be "led up as calves of the stall"; when Christ should "rise from the dead, with healing in his wings"; and when the Holy One of Israel would then reign on the earth [1 Nephi 22:24; 2 Nephi 25:13].

Malachi, who lived more than two hundred years after Nephi [sic], uses these very expressions in his prophetic writings. Can we do other than conclude that both Nephi and Malachi had before them the writings of Zenos? . . .

Once the Lord has revealed his doctrine in precise language to a chosen prophet, there is no reason why he should not inspire another prophet to choose the same words in presenting the same doctrine on a subsequent occasion. It is much easier and simpler to quote that which has already been given in perfection. We are all commanded—including the prophets among us—to search the scriptures and thereby learn what other prophets have presented ("The Doctrinal Restoration" in The Joseph Smith Translation: The Restoration of Plain and Precious Things, editors: Monte S. Nyman and Robert L Millet, 17-18.)

"they who do wickedly shall be as stubble; and the day cometh that they must be burned" Stubble is the stumps of wheat, rye, barley, oats, or buckwheat left in the ground; the part of the stalk left by the scythe or sickle. This cleansing of the earth, which will eliminate all telestial elements, will occur at the Savior's second coming—at the onset of the Millennium.

verses 16-18 These verses also describe those events that will occur prior to the Millennium. Just as the earth was baptized by water in the days of Noah, so it will yet be baptized by fire and the Holy Ghost so that it may commence its terrestrial, Millennial period.

16 For the time soon cometh that the fulness of the wrath of God shall be poured out upon all the children of men; for he will not suffer that the wicked shall destroy the righteous.

17 Wherefore, he will preserve the righteous by his power, even if it so be that the fulness of his wrath must come, and the righteous be preserved, even unto the destruction of their enemies by fire. Wherefore, the righteous need not fear; for thus saith the prophet, they shall be saved, even if it so be as by fire.

verse 17 “thus saith the prophet” Nephi is perhaps still quoting the prophet Zenos.

18 Behold, my brethren, I say unto you, that these things must shortly come; yea, even blood, and fire, and vapor of smoke must come; and it must needs be upon the face of this earth; and it cometh unto men according to the flesh if it so be that they will harden their hearts against the Holy One of Israel.

verse 18 “these things must shortly come” Since the things prophesied will not occur for nearly three millennia following the time of Nephi, the word “shortly” here is of interest. Perhaps “shortly” here is less a reference to the time of occurrence and more a reference to the fact that these things will occur acutely or quickly when they do occur. It may also carry the connotation that these things will surely come.

“fire and vapor of smoke” It has been suggested that these may result from a nuclear holocaust (Bruce R. McConkie, CR, April 1979, 133).

“if it so be” This phrase marks this as a conditional prophecy or one that need not occur lest mankind bring it upon themselves by their own wickedness.

“Holy One of Israel” is an interesting term which is used here for Deity. It is found thirty-four times in the Bible—all in the Old Testament. It is not used in the New Testament. Most instances of its use are in the book of Isaiah (twenty-nine times), and all instances are in the 150 years preceding Babylonian captivity. Thus, we might expect that it would be found in the Book of Mormon, particularly because of the Book of Mormon’s Old Testament orientation, and more particularly because the term was commonly used during and just prior to Lehi’s day. Indeed, it is found some thirty-nine times in the Book of Mormon—all in materials translated from the small plates of Nephi. The term is not found once in the Doctrine and Covenants. Again, we encounter a piece of evidence that Joseph Smith, Jr., did not write the Book of Mormon. If he had authored it, we would expect to find the term “Holy One of Israel” also in the Doctrine and Covenants and also in Mosiah through Alma in the Book of Mormon.

19 For behold, the righteous shall not perish; for the time surely must come that all they who fight against Zion shall be cut off.

20 And the Lord will surely prepare a way for his people, unto the fulfilling of the words of Moses, which he spake, saying: A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass that all those who will not hear that prophet shall be cut off from among the people.

verse 20 “A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you” This prophet is, of course, Jesus Christ. This remarkable verse is perhaps the most often quoted messianic prophecy in all scripture. It originated with Moses (Deuteronomy 18:15-19). Lehi quoted it to his children; (1 Nephi 10:4); Paul quoted it while preaching in the temple (Acts 3:22-23); Christ quoted it during his appearance to the Nephites (3 Nephi 21:11); Stephen quoted it before the Jewish Sanhedrin (Acts 7:37); Moroni quoted it to Joseph Smith (JS-H 1:40); and it is found in the Doctrine and Covenants (D&C 1:14; 133:63).

“like unto me” Moses, the great deliverer of the Israelites from captivity in Egypt, was one of the purest “types” of Christ among all of the world’s prophets.

21 And now I, Nephi, declare unto you, that this prophet of whom Moses spake was the Holy One of Israel; wherefore, he shall execute judgment in righteousness.

verse 21 “he shall execute judgment in righteousness” There are many scriptural references to Jesus Christ as the judge of all the earth (John 5:22, 30; Psalm 50:6; 94:1-2; Acts 10:42; Isaiah 9:7; 11:4; Genesis 18:25). There are also references that suggest Christ may delegate at least part of the responsibility of judging to others (Matthew 10:14-15; 19:28; Luke 22:30; D&C 29:12; 75:21:22; 1 Nephi 12:9-10; 3 Nephi 27:27; Mormon 3:19; Daniel 7:22).

At what specific point in our eternal lives do we stand before our Lord to be judged? Certainly, a judgment must occur prior to the resurrection since the body we receive at the moment of our resurrection indicates how we have been judged. We will come forth with a telestial body, a terrestrial body, or a celestial body. When is the judgment then? In his book, Gospel Doctrine, Joseph F. Smith taught of a “partial judgment” that occurs at the time of our death (448). In this judgment, which is meted out by the “gatekeeper”—surely Jesus Christ himself—all will be assigned to a state of either paradise or prison. This is a vital judgment since all assigned to paradise will continue on to their exaltation, and most, if not all, of those assigned to prison will eventually inherit a lesser degree of glory in the terrestrial or telestial kingdoms. Apparently, those who have not received the gospel will be judged by the Lord according to how they would have responded had they received it (D&C 137:5-9). Surely other judgments will follow involving those in spirit prison prior to their resurrection. For additional discussion of the judgments, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 9, The Judgments.

The word “righteousness” used in this verse is richer than we might initially suppose. The fact that Jesus Christ is the “righteous” judge means that He is the perfect judge—the only one qualified to judge us. And this title He earned by virtue of his atoning suffering and death at Gethsemane and at Golgotha (see “The Perfect Judge” in The Essence of the Lord’s Atonement in volume 1, chapter 19 of Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine).

22 And the righteous need not fear, for they are those who shall not be confounded. But it is the kingdom of the devil, which shall be built up among the children of men, which kingdom is established among them which are in the flesh—verses 22-23 The “kingdom of the devil” corresponds to the entity defined as the “great and abominable church” in 1 Nephi 14 (see the introductory discussion for 1 Nephi 13). It is a generic term much the same as Babylon or “whore of all the earth” (2 Nephi 10:16). Keep in mind the fact that the word “churches” here does not necessarily refer to religious organizations. Rather, it referred anciently to an assembly, congregation, or association of people who bonded together and shared the same loyalties.

verses 24-26 These verses refer to the Millennium.

24 And the time cometh speedily that the righteous must be led up as calves of the stall, and the Holy One of Israel must reign in dominion, and might, and power, and great glory.

verse 24 “calves of the stall” The only biblical reference containing this phrase is Malachi 4:2. Both Nephi and Malachi were probably quoting the prophet Zenos (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 22:15).

The implication of the expression “led up as calves of the stall” suggests that the gathering back to the fold of Zion will, during the Millennium, occur more easily, frequently, willingly, and with less opposition as cows in the stall are herded.

25 And he gathereth his children from the four quarters of the earth; and he numbereth his sheep, and they know him; and there shall be one fold and one shepherd; and he shall feed his sheep, and in him they shall find pasture.

verse 25 A major part of the gathering of the house of Israel will not take place until the Millennium.

26 And because of the righteousness of his people, Satan has no power; wherefore, he cannot be loosed for the space of many years; for he hath no power over the hearts of the people, for they dwell in righteousness, and the Holy One of Israel reigneth.

verse 26 “he hath no power over the hearts of the people” Apparently, Satan’s being bound during the Millennium is actually the result of two separate phenomena:

1. Satan will actually be restrained by the power of God. This will likely occur by means of the Lord’s pouring out his Spirit upon the righteous who remain on the earth to the extent that Satan’s power will be simply overwhelmed. President Joseph Fielding Smith taught concerning the binding of Satan: “There are many among us who teach that the binding of Satan will be merely the binding which those dwelling on the earth will place upon him by their refusal to hear his enticings. This is not so. He will not have the privilege during that period of time to tempt any man” (Church History and Modern Revelation, 1:192).

2. The Lord will destroy telestial wickedness from off the earth, and thus there will not be people on the earth who will respond to his promptings. In this verse, Nephi teaches that “because of the righteousness of his [the Lord’s] people, Satan has no power; wherefore, he cannot be loosed for the space of many years; for he hath no power over the hearts of the people, for they dwell in righteousness, and the Holy One of Israel reigneth.”

President George Q. Cannon taught that both the power of God and the righteousness of the saints are necessary to bind Satan:

We talk about Satan’s being bound. Satan will be bound by the power of God; but he will be bound also by the determination of the people of God not to listen to him, not to be governed by him. The Lord will not bind him and take his power from the earth while there are men and women willing to be governed by him. That is contrary to the plan of salvation. To deprive men of their agency is contrary to the purposes of our God. . .

Satan only gains power over man through man’s exercise of his own agency; and when Satan shall be bound, as the Lord says he will be for a thousand years, one of the great powers that will help bring this to pass will be man’s agency. The Lord has never forced men against their will to obey him. He never will do so. If Satan, therefore, has power with man, it is because man yields to his influence. . .

The time is not far distant when great judgments will be poured out upon the wicked inhabitants of the earth. Every prophet who has looked forward to our day has seen and predicted that the wicked would be destroyed. Their destruction means the destruction of Satan’s power [including the literal destruction of the wicked]. The righteous will be left, and because of their righteousness the Lord will have mercy upon them; they, exercising their agency in the right direction, will bring down his blessings upon them to such an extent that Satan will be bound (Gospel Truth, 1:86-87).

Joseph Smith Taught: “Christ and the resurrected saints will reign over the earth during the thousand years. They will not probably dwell upon the earth, but will visit it when they please, or when it is necessary to govern it” (Joseph Fielding Smith, TPJS, 268).

27 And now behold, I, Nephi, say unto you that all these things must come according to the flesh.

verse 27 “according to the flesh” All these prophecies are not merely figurative. Rather their fulfillment will be literal—“according to the flesh.”

28 But, behold, all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people shall dwell safely in the Holy One of Israel if it so be that they will repent.

verse 28 This verse raises an interesting idea. It suggests that the concept of salvation, actually exaltation, is somehow not only applicable to individuals, but under certain circumstances it might be more broadly applicable—even to whole nations. Perhaps the ambiance created by some righteous nations is generally conducive to exaltation, though surely each individual must earn his own salvation.

29 And now I, Nephi, make an end; for I durst not speak further as yet concerning these things.

30 Wherefore, my brethren, I would that ye should consider that the things which have been written upon the plates of brass are true; and they testify that a man must be obedient to the commandments of God.

31 Wherefore, ye need not suppose that I and my father are the only ones that have testified, and also taught them. Wherefore, if ye shall be obedient to the commandments, and endure to the end, ye shall be saved at the last day. And thus it is. Amen.

The Second Book of Nephi

An account of the death of Lehi. Nephi's brethren rebel against him. The Lord warns Nephi to depart into the wilderness. His journeyings in the wilderness, and so forth.

In the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon, the title of the Second Book of Nephi was simply designated as "the Book of Nephi." Later Oliver Cowdery realized that there was more than one book of Nephi which led him to insert the word second. It is easily identifiable on the original manuscript, as it is written with considerably heavier ink, providing evidence that the insertion was made on another occasion (Royal Skousen, "Translating the Book of Mormon, Evidence from the Original Manuscript" in Book of Mormon Authorship Revisited, The Evidence for Ancient Origins).

The Book of Mormon is a primary source of doctrine for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and 2 Nephi is one of the most doctrinally rich books in the Book of Mormon.

Chapter Outline of 2 Nephi

A brief outline of 2 Nephi, worth committing to memory, is as follows:

2 Nephi 1-4 Father Lehi counsels and blesses each of his sons.

2 Nephi 2 Lehi's counsel to his son Jacob includes teachings on the atonement.

2 Nephi 5 Nephi and his followers separate from the Lamanites and move to the land of Nephi.

2 Nephi 6-10 Jacob delivers an important two-day sermon to the Nephites.

2 Nephi 7-8 Isaiah 50-51

2 Nephi 9 Jacob's teachings include teachings on the atonement.

2 Nephi 12-24 Isaiah 2-14

2 Nephi 27-30 Nephi prophesies of latter-day apostasy, coming forth of the Book of Mormon, and restoration of the gospel.

2 Nephi 27 Isaiah 29

2 Nephi 1-4 Father Lehi counsels and blesses each of his sons.

2 Nephi 1:13-16 Father Lehi's counsel to his rebellious descendants: O that ye would awake; awake from a deep sleep, yea, even from the sleep of hell, and shake off the awful chains by which ye are bound, which are the chains which bind the children of men, that they are carried away captive down to the eternal gulf of misery and woe. Awake! and arise from the dust, and hear the words of a trembling parent, whose limbs ye must soon lay down in the cold and silent grave, from whence no traveler can return; a few more days and I go the way of all the earth. But behold, the Lord hath redeemed my soul from hell; I have beheld his glory, and I am encircled about eternally in the arms of his love. And I desire that ye should remember to observe the statutes and the judgments of the Lord; behold, this hath been the anxiety of my soul from the beginning.

John W. Welch has found much in the first four chapters of 2 Nephi that is compatible with ancient Israelite family laws and customs. He has referred to these four chapters as “Lehi’s last will and testament” (The Book of Mormon: Second Nephi, The Doctrinal Structure, Salt Lake City: Bookcraft and Religious Studies Center Brigham Young University, 1989, 62).

Sometime after the arrival of Lehi’s colony in the promised land, and possibly just shortly before Lehi’s death, Lehi called together the entire community to give them a final blessing. Chapter 1 contains Lehi’s final warnings and admonitions to his sons, to the sons of Ishmael, to Zoram, and to all their posterity. This chapter confirms the teaching that the Americas are a land choice above all other lands given by covenant to Lehi and his posterity forever and also to all others that the Lord would bring. The land will continue prosperous and free only on the condition that its inhabitants keep the commandments of God.

One observation of interest is that in some ancient Jewish traditions, it was normal and expected that the patriarch of the family would gather together his family and bless, instruct, exhort, and prophesy to them before passing away. In this, Lehi’s behavior as here illustrated was as we might expect. This tradition seems originally to have stemmed from Genesis 49, which could have been on the brass plates. This is the chapter where ancient Jacob (Israel) gathers and blesses his sons. Both the Nephites and the later Jews may have developed this so-called “testament” tradition independently based upon Genesis 49 as a model. In this final speech of Lehi’s, his behavior was as expected.

Another observation of interest is that Lehi’s actions here illuminate Lehi as the patriarch of a new, separate branch of Israel. While not all, many of the figures in testamentary literature are patriarchal figures from Israel’s past. In portraying Lehi in this role, Nephi is solidifying the Lehites as an independent branch of Israel. This was a lasting legacy among Book of Mormon peoples. John W. Welch has explained, “Seeing Lehi in the patriarchal tradition is borne out by the fact that Lehi was remembered by Nephites from beginning to end as “father Lehi.” . . . Since Lehi is the only figure in the Book of Mormon called “our father,” this designation appears to be a unique reference to Lehi’s patriarchal position at the head of Nephite civilization, society, and religion” (“Lehi’s Last Will and Testament: A Legal Approach,” in Second Nephi, The Doctrinal Structure, ed. Monte S. Nyman and Charles D. Tate Jr., Provo, UT: BYU Religious Studies Center, 1989, 69–70).

Also, Lehi's discourse provides an example for fathers and patriarchs today. The tradition, initially but briefly present in Genesis 49, was not maintained and developed only by the Jews after their return to Jerusalem in the Second Temple period but was called upon effectively by Lehi in the sixth century BC. Building from there, later prophets in the Book of Mormon followed Lehi's example, as Alma does in Alma 36–42 and Helaman does in Helaman 5:5–13. Latter-day Saint fathers today also follow these patriarchal examples as they bless, instruct, exhort, and testify to their children and grandchildren.

1 And now it came to pass that after I, Nephi, had made an end of teaching my brethren, our father, Lehi, also spake many things unto them, and rehearsed unto them, how great things the Lord had done for them in bringing them out of the land of Jerusalem.

verse 1 “after I, Nephi, had made an end of teaching my brethren” From 1 Nephi 19:8 through the end of 1 Nephi 22, Nephi discoursed to his brothers on the coming and the ministry of the Savior and the scattering and gathering of Israel.

2 And he spake unto them concerning their rebellions upon the waters, and the mercies of God in sparing their lives, that they were not swallowed up in the sea.

verse 2 The “rebellions upon the waters,” of course, refers to the irreverent and probably lascivious behavior of Laman, Lemuel, and the sons of Ishmael during the trip over the ocean to the promised land, reported in 1 Nephi 18:9-20.

3 And he also spake unto them concerning the land of promise, which they had obtained—how merciful the Lord had been in warning us that we should flee out of the land of Jerusalem.

4 For, behold, said he, I have seen a vision, in which I know that Jerusalem is destroyed; and had we remained in Jerusalem we should also have perished.

verse 4 Nephi is quoting his father Lehi here and will continue to do so intermittently through 2 Nephi 4:12.

“I have seen a vision” When and where did Lehi have this vision? Was it in the wilderness? In the land of promise? At any time following his vision in the first year of Zedekiah's reign, 597 BC, Lehi could have factually proclaimed, “I have seen a vision in which I know that Jerusalem is destroyed.” Apparently during that original vision, Lehi learned of Jerusalem's eventual fate. He did not need another vision to confirm Jerusalem's destruction (see 1 Nephi 5:4). Nephi's brother Jacob would later have a similar vision which is reported in 2 Nephi 6:8. Nephi also will yet mention the destruction of Jerusalem (2 Nephi 25:6-10).

The destruction of Jerusalem by Babylon is recorded in the Bible in 2 Kings 25 and took place about 586 BC. Again, see the supplemental article, Jerusalem at the Time of Lehi.

5 But, said he, notwithstanding our afflictions, we have obtained a land of promise, a land which is choice above all other lands; a land which the Lord God hath covenanted with me should be a land for the inheritance of my seed. Yea, the Lord hath covenanted this land unto me, and to my children forever, and also all those who should be led out of other countries by the hand of the Lord.

verse 5 A point to ponder: When we consider the concept of a “land of promise,” a covenant land belonging to the tribe of Joseph, to which specific land does this title apply? North America? Central America? South America? The entire western hemisphere? Certainly, some prophecies seem to apply more to North America, specifically to the United States of America—especially those prophecies which have to do with the “great Gentile nation” and the restoration of the gospel and the latter-day gathering of Israel and bringing forth of the Book of Mormon. Perhaps, though, we ought to be careful about restricting our notion of the promised land to North America, especially since it is likely that the land inhabited by the immediate descendants of Lehi was Central America, and not North America.

“the Lord hath covenanted this land unto me, and to my children forever” What is the duration of this covenant agreement? For how long is it binding? For a century or two? For a dispensation or two? For the duration of the existence of this mortal earth? The answer is probably forever! Keep in mind that the earth will eventually be celestialized and become the eternal home of the righteous. Orson Pratt made a thought-provoking observation: “Different portions of the earth have been pointed out by the Almighty, from time to time, to his children, as their everlasting inheritance. As instances—Abraham and his posterity, that were worthy, were promised Palestine. Moab and Ammon—the children of righteous Lot—were promised a portion not far from the boundaries of the twelve tribes. . . In the resurrection, the meek of all ages and nations will be restored to that portion of the earth previously promised to them. And thus, all the different portions of the earth have been and will be disposed of to the lawful heirs; while those who cannot prove their heirship to be legal, or who cannot prove that they have received any portion of the earth by promise, will be cast out into some other kingdom or world” (JD, 1:332-33).

“all those who should be led out of other countries by the hand of the Lord” This important phrase verifies that the Americas are not a promised land to Lehi’s descendants alone—but also to all those who are directed there by the hand of the Lord. Certainly, this applies to the Pilgrim fathers and to the Puritans and also to many who joined the Church of Jesus Christ in this final dispensation and then immigrated to the United States to live among the saints.

6 Wherefore, I, Lehi, prophesy according to the workings of the Spirit which is in me, that there shall none come into this land save they shall be brought by the hand of the Lord.

verse 6 What precisely is meant by this verse? Taken at face value, it suggests that the only individuals who will come from the Old World to the New World will be those who have been invited by the Lord or brought by his hand. This has obviously not been the case. Certainly, the New World has been the recipient of many unsavory and ungodly individual immigrants over the years.

A couple of other possible meanings are more plausible. First, this prophecy might refer to groups and not individuals. For example, the Lord certainly had a role in directing the Jaredites, the Mulekites, the Lehites, the Pilgrims, the Puritans, some of the early Mormon converts, and probably many other individuals to gather in the Americas. In each of these groups, however, there have obviously been unrighteous individuals unworthy of the Lord's covenant blessings. Alternatively, the verse might refer selectively only to those to whom the covenant of a promised land applies. All such "shall be brought [to the Americas] by the hand of the Lord." This meaning is likely in view of the following verse.

7 Wherefore, this land is consecrated unto him whom he shall bring. And if it so be that they shall serve him according to the commandments which he hath given, it shall be a land of liberty unto them; wherefore, they shall never be brought down into captivity; if so, it shall be because of iniquity; for if iniquity shall abound cursed shall be the land for their sakes, but unto the righteous it shall be blessed forever.

verse 7 This is largely a self-explanatory verse of vital importance!

"this land is consecrated unto him whom he shall bring" To consecrate is to do something with sacredness, to dedicate, devote, and focus oneself toward the realization of a sacred end. In addition, it is to set apart and designate for sacred purposes, as when priests and teachers are called and put in place in the Church (2 Nephi 5:26). The saints of the Most High consecrate their resources to God when they enter into the law of consecration and stewardship (3 Nephi 26:19; 4 Nephi 1:3; D&C 42:30). If they are submissive, the people of the Lord may have their desires and their works consecrated by God to their eternal gain (2 Nephi 32:9; 33:4).

"And if it so be" Prophecy may be categorized into two types, conditional and unconditional. Unconditional prophecy is binding and will come to pass regardless of the actions of men or nations. Can you think of any unconditional prophecies? How about the birth of Christ, the second coming of Christ, the resurrection, and the day of judgment? These things have come to pass or will come to pass regardless of the actions of men. Conditional prophecies are those contingent upon obedience or disobedience. This promise of liberty to the inhabitants of the Americas is obviously conditional.

“if so” The conjunction “if so” refers to the possibility of the land of promise’s being brought “down into captivity.”

8 And behold, it is wisdom that this land should be kept as yet from the knowledge of other nations; for behold, many nations would overrun the land, that there would be no place for an inheritance.

verse 8 We believe that Columbus was directed to discover the Americas by the Holy Spirit. This verse implies that other peoples were prevented from discovering the New World until, in the Lord’s economy, the time was right.

The verse also suggests one reason why the New World was protected in this manner by the Lord. It was to prevent the land from being overrun by non-covenant people and to preserve the area as a land of inheritance.

The New World was to be groomed and prepared for the eventual restoration of the gospel and the gathering of Israel. Keeping this in mind, another interesting reason has been suggested for the Lord’s protecting the New World from untimely immigration. It was important to keep out religious cultures that might adversely affect the eventual establishment of the restored Church of Jesus Christ. Joseph Fielding McConkie and Robert L. Millet suggested, “Had the knowledge of the Americas been made known even a century earlier, the religion transplanted to the Western World would have been that of the church of Europe at its lowest stage of decadence. The period closing with the fifteenth century was that of the dense darkness that goes before the dawn. . . . Indeed, it was to escape the chains of bondage and the darkness of religious oppression that people of spiritual nobility immigrated to the new land” (Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, volume 1, 185).

9 Wherefore, I, Lehi, have obtained a promise, that inasmuch as those whom the Lord God shall bring out of the land of Jerusalem shall keep his commandments, they shall prosper upon the face of this land; and they shall be kept from all other nations, that they may possess this land unto themselves. And if it so be that they shall keep his commandments they shall be blessed upon the face of this land, and there shall be none to molest them, nor to take away the land of their inheritance; and they shall dwell safely forever.

verse 9 What a sweeping promise the Lord made with Lehi! But the posterity of Lehi did not keep the Lord’s commandments. Is it possible that the conquest of Central America by the Spaniard Cortez in AD 1519 was “allowed” by the Lord because of the disobedience of the people? What about the earlier discovery of the New World by Columbus in AD 1492? Might this event also have resulted from the people’s failure to keep the commandments? We have discussed elsewhere that Columbus was inspired by the Spirit of God to make the discoveries he made (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 13:12). Did Columbus's inspiration come as the result of the unrighteousness of the peoples in the New World, or rather was his "discovery" simply an essential part of the plan to prepare the New World for the eventual restoration of the gospel and gathering of Israel? This is a difficult question. Certainly, the indigenous peoples of the Americas (some of which were Lehi's posterity) were eventually "scattered and smitten" as a result of the discovery of the New World by Columbus. It seems likely that Columbus's discovery was made necessary, in God's broad plan, by the apostasy of the Native Americans.

10 But behold, when the time cometh that they shall dwindle in unbelief, after they have received so great blessings from the hand of the Lord—having a knowledge of the creation of the earth, and all men, knowing the great and marvelous works of the Lord from the creation of the world; having power given them to do all things by faith; having all the commandments from the beginning, and having been brought by his infinite goodness into this precious land of promise—behold, I say, if the day shall come that they will reject the Holy One of Israel, the true Messiah, their Redeemer and their God, behold, the judgments of him that is just shall rest upon them.

verse 10 "a knowledge of the creation of the earth" Where did they get this knowledge? Initially, from the plates of brass. Later on, the "record of the Jews," the Bible, will be brought to the New World.

"having power given them to do all things by faith" This concept might also have come from the plates of brass, specifically the book of Genesis even though it is not in the King James version of Genesis. In Joseph Smith's inspired revision of the Bible, the JST, we read that those who hold the priesthood "should have power, by faith, to break mountains, to divide the seas, to dry up waters, to turn them out of their course; to put at defiance the armies of nations, to divide the earth, to break every band, to stand in the presence of God" (JST, Genesis 14:30-31).

"having all the commandments from the beginning" We believe that the basic saving doctrines and ordinances have been available to each and every dispensation including those of Adam, Enoch, Noah, and Abraham.

The construction of this verse is unusual and perhaps a bit awkward in that Nephi initially writes "when the time cometh" that the people will lose their faith, indicating that the time will indeed come. But later on in the verse he changes the thought to a less-conclusive "if the day shall come" that they should reject Jesus Christ and his gospel.

11 Yea, he will bring other nations unto them, and he will give unto them power, and he will take away from them the lands of their possessions, and he will cause them to be scattered and smitten.

verse 11 All of the thems in this verse refer to the Native Americans except the second which refers to the foreign nations empowered by God to establish themselves in the New World and thus chasten rebellious Israel.

verses 9-11 Ultimately four groups of covenant people are to inhabit this same promised land: (1) the antediluvians, from Adam to Noah (D&C 116; 107:53); (2) the Jaredites; (3) the Lehites; and (4) the latter-day Israelites, especially those descendants of the ten tribes, being gathered by the missionaries of this great Gentile nation. We have learned or will learn that the first three of these groups have, indeed, ripened in iniquity and have been destroyed. The single exception is a subgroup of the Lehites, the Lamanites, whom the Lord is preserving, though chastening repeatedly. The complete story of the Gentiles is not yet recorded, though scripture suggests that there will be a great final destruction and purging before the Lord's second coming wherein the righteous among them will be preserved but the wicked will be cleansed from the earth.

12 Yea, as one generation passeth to another there shall be bloodsheds, and great visitations among them; wherefore, my sons, I would that ye would remember; yea, I would that ye would hearken unto my words.

verse 12 This verse spells out the fate of the disobedient and apostate remnants of the Book of Mormon peoples. The "great visitations" spoken of here refer to the judgments brought against them by the Holy Spirit.

13 O that ye would awake; awake from a deep sleep, yea, even from the sleep of hell, and shake off the awful chains by which ye are bound, which are the chains which bind the children of men, that they are carried away captive down to the eternal gulf of misery and woe.

verse 13 The term "deep sleep" likely refers to spiritual indifference or a lack of susceptibility to the promptings of the Spirit.

The "chains" spoken of are the "chains of hell" defined by Alma (Alma 12:9-11) as the inevitable plight of the individual whose heart is not responsive to things of the Spirit. They are given lesser and lesser portions of the word until eventually they know nothing of the doctrine or word of God. Then they are inevitably taken captive by Satan and led down to destruction. This tragic sequence is what is meant by the expression "chains of hell." In D&C 123 Joseph wrote from Liberty Jail that a world without eternal truths is ripe for a takeover by the devil. He then goes on to describe this spiritual bondage as "an iron yoke, a strong band, handcuffs, chains and shackles, and fetters of hell" (D&C 123:7-8).

Wo or woe is grief, sorrow, misery, a curse. Do we really believe that Lehi's rebellious sons will eventually inherit an "eternal gulf of misery and woe"? This implies that they will become sons of perdition, for that is the only eternal state of misery of which we are aware. Wicked and spiritually recalcitrant though they were, it is unlikely that they will become sons of Perdition. For a discussion of this problem, see “Post-Mortal Life and the Book of Mormon” Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 13, The Spirit World. Similar references are made to the post-mortal life of Lehi’s rebellious sons in verses 17 and 22 of this chapter.

14 Awake! and arise from the dust, and hear the words of a trembling parent, whose limbs ye must soon lay down in the cold and silent grave, from whence no traveler can return; a few more days and I go the way of all the earth.

verse 14 “ye must soon lay down in the cold and silent grave, from whence no traveler can return” This phraseology has been a source of difficulty. Anti-Mormons have suggested that Joseph Smith borrowed from William Shakespeare as he recorded it. For a discussion of this problem see the commentary for 1 Nephi 22:15.

15 But behold, the Lord hath redeemed my soul from hell; I have beheld his glory, and I am encircled about eternally in the arms of his love.

verse 15 Lehi apparently was blessed to receive the Second Comforter—to have his calling and election made sure. For a discussion of this topic, see the commentary for Helaman 10:4-7 and also Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 16, Calling and Election Made Sure.

16 And I desire that ye should remember to observe the statutes and the judgments of the Lord; behold, this hath been the anxiety of my soul from the beginning.

17 My heart hath been weighed down with sorrow from time to time, for I have feared, lest for the hardness of your hearts the Lord your God should come out in the fulness of his wrath upon you, that ye be cut off and destroyed forever;

verse 17 The concept of a “heavy” or a “hard” heart seems to have its origins in Egyptian mythology. Osiris, the god of the underworld, and his assistant Anubis weighed the hearts of the dead on a balance against the positive virtues of truth, goodness, etc. The heavy heart, weighed down with sin, weighed more than the heart imbued with positive virtues.

The phrase “lest for” may be interpreted “that because of.”

“that ye be cut off and destroyed forever” Who is it, according to our modern-day understanding of the plan of salvation, that is “cut off and destroyed forever”? It would seem that only those who live eternally with Satan would fit this description. Even then, it is not possible, even for God, to literally destroy an intelligence. We thus have a similar problem to that mentioned in verse 13 above—that of incomplete doctrine of the post mortal world taught in the Book of Mormon.

18 Or, that a cursing should come upon you for the space of many generations; and ye are visited by sword, and by famine, and are hated, and are led according to the will and captivity of the devil.

verse 18 “Or, that a cursing should come upon you for the space of many generations” The “sore cursing” which will eventually come upon Laman and Lemuel and their descendants was not the “skin of blackness.” Rather the cursing was losing the Spirit or being cut off from the presence of the Lord (2 Nephi 5:20). The “skin of blackness” is rather simply a mark of the curse which indicates those peoples on whom the curse has been pronounced.

Are you comfortable with the idea that “many generations” of descendants of Laman and Lemuel should be cursed because of the misdeeds of their forefathers? Is this fair? Should any man be mandated by God to suffer because of the sins of another? I believe we must acknowledge that generations of Lamanites were born into spiritually adverse circumstances because of the wickedness of their forebears. This does not negate the inviolate principle, however, that each man will be ultimately judged on his own merits—what he has done with the circumstances he inherits in this mortal life.

It is certain that some Lamanites will be judged more leniently than many of their counterpart Nephites. The latter were blessed to receive many more spiritual benefits at their birth. It is also possible that an outsider, observing those Lamanites so blessed, might conclude that they do not appear on the surface to be as righteous in their actions as those Nephites who received a lesser judgment. It is difficult to judge a man’s heart, and only the Lord is qualified. This is the great principle of D&C 82:3: “For of him unto whom much is given much is required; and he who sins against the greater light shall receive the greater condemnation.” Surely this same principle applies to all of us in the Church. To an outsider, we might appear to be a rather homogeneous group, all blessed with happy and supportive family relationships, and all content and enthusiastic about our Church and culture. Are we really that homogeneous? Is life and its varied circumstances really so simple that we can be categorized into this or that large group? Certainly not. Life is complex and intricate and each of us has very different circumstances as we wend our way through mortality. Only the Lord knows our heart and unique circumstances, and only he can judge us.

“led according to the will and captivity of the devil” Are individuals born into an environment where there is no gospel influence and no priesthood more apt to be influenced by Satan? Perhaps so, but this fact also does not invalidate the important principle discussed in the paragraph above.

It would seem that there are three vital factors which will surely be considered by the Lord in his final judgment of us following this mortal experience:

1. Each of us arrives here on earth having earned various degrees of spiritual light and progress in the premortal world. Some have been valiant and obedient, and others less so. Hence, some have acquired significantly more spiritual growth than others. Which will be judged most rigorously? Again, the principle of D&C 82:3: Of the more accomplished souls, more is expected, and the Lord is likely to be more lenient with those of lesser initial spiritual accomplishment.

2. We will live out our mortal experience in widely divergent circumstances. Some will live in wealth and plenty, while others will struggle just to survive. Some will experience loving parents and associates, while others will be treated more harshly. Some will be reared in a home where the principles of the gospel are observed. Others will never even be exposed to the gospel or its teachings. The span of our lives will vary from short to long. Consider also the nearly infinite variety of vicissitudes and pitfalls each of us will encounter. Certainly, a loving Lord will take into account in his judgment the circumstances of each of our lives.

3. Finally, each of us will earn a certain absolute amount of spiritual progress between our birth and death. Each of us will grow a certain measurable and quantifiable distance toward godhood—some will grow inches and others will grow miles. We will not, of course, be judged according to our absolute progress. Rather the Lord, with his divine wisdom and insight, will place our absolute progress in the context of factors 1. and 2. For some spiritually disadvantaged and beleaguered souls, a small amount of absolute spiritual growth may be sufficient for exaltation. Others, with more spiritual advantages in life may be judged unworthy of exaltation though their measurable growth exceeds that of those who were less advantaged.

19 O my sons, that these things might not come upon you, but that ye might be a choice and a favored people of the Lord. But behold, his will be done; for his ways are righteousness forever.

verse 19 “But behold, his will be done” A casual reading of this verse, and particularly this phrase, might lead one to incorrectly interpret it to suggest that it is the Lord’s will that Laman and Lemuel and their descendants not become “a favored people of the Lord.” It might be more correctly interpreted to mean: “May the Lord’s plan remain the standard of righteousness.” There is nothing about this verse that negates the principle of agency and the principle of the Lord’s incalculable love for each and every one of us.

20 And he hath said that: Inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments ye shall prosper in the land; but inasmuch as ye will not keep my commandments ye shall be cut off from my presence.

verse 20 Here is an important covenant which is restated throughout the pages of the Book of Mormon (see 1 Nephi 4:14; Mosiah 2:22; Alma 9:13; see also verses 7, 9-10 in this chapter). It is usually referred to as the “promise / curse” of the Book of Mormon. This covenant is fundamental to the relationship between the Book of Mormon peoples and their God (see the introductory commentary for Alma 43).

This covenant has also been called the “covenant of Moses” (Lauri Hlavaty, “The Religion of Moses and the Book of Mormon” in The Book of Mormon: Jacob Through Words of Mormon, To Learn with Joy, Provo, Utah, 103) and is the essence of the religion of the ancient Jews and of the Book of Mormon people. To understand better this “covenant of Moses,” it is helpful to contrast it with the “covenant of Christ.”

The covenant of Christ is given to individuals and includes promises of eternal individual exaltation. Its ordinances belong to the Melchizedek priesthood. Basically stated, it says: “If you keep my commandments and come to know and emulate my Son, you shall become like me and live with me forever.” The covenant of Moses, on the other hand, is given collectively to a people, not to individuals. It pertains to their temporal welfare and not to their eternal salvation. It is administered through the Aaronic priesthood which is concerned with temporal affairs. It may be simply stated: “If you keep my commandments, I will take care of you here on earth.” A good example of the covenant of Moses is expressed in Leviticus: “If ye walk in my statutes and keep my commandments . . . I will give you rain in due season, and the land shall yield her increase. . . I will give peace in the land, and ye shall lie down, and none shall make you afraid. . . and I will walk among you, and will be your God, and ye shall be my people” (Leviticus 26:3, 4, 6, 12). In this passage in Leviticus, the “you” is plural. This covenant is made with a people or community and not with an individual. The covenant of Moses should not be interpreted that every person who keeps the commandments will prosper. Rather it means that if a group of people keep the commandments, then they, as a group, will prosper (see also Joshua 23:6-13).

One other point is pertinent. The term “law of Moses,” as we use it today, often refers to the entire religion of Moses. This religion actually consists of two fundamental parts.

1. First, there is a set of carnal commandments or laws governing every day behavior. Many of these are a part of the everlasting gospel including self discipline, concern for others, and love for and faith in God. These were given to Moses but later added to and corrupted by apostate Judaism. These laws defined social behavior (and also became the basis of the Jewish legal code) and specified the rituals, especially sacrifices to be used in worship.

2. Second, there is the covenant of Moses. The two together, the laws and the covenant make up the entire “law of Moses” (Ibid.).

21 And now that my soul might have joy in you, and that my heart might leave this world with gladness because of you, that I might not be brought down with grief and sorrow to the grave, arise from the dust, my sons, and be men, and be determined in one mind and in one heart, united in all things, that ye may not come down into captivity;

verse 21 “arise from the dust, my sons, and be men” Lehi’s intended meaning is unmistakable. “Quit groveling in the dust of your iniquity. Arise and be real men!” This imagery is repeated in verse 23.

“in one mind” Is this verse teaching the necessity of unity—that we must be united one with another? Perhaps, but an additional implication is likely. Each of us should be united with Christ. Paul taught that it was desirable to have the “mind of Christ” (1 Corinthians 2:16). To earn our exaltation, we must strive to have the “mind of Christ.” That is, we must think as he thinks, believe as he believes, and do as he would do.

22 That ye may not be cursed with a sore cursing; and also, that ye may not incur the displeasure of a just God upon you, unto the destruction, yea, the eternal destruction of both soul and body.

verse 22 “that ye may not incur the displeasure of a just God upon you, unto the destruction, yea, the eternal destruction of both soul and body” The precise definition of “soul,” as provided us in latter-day scripture is the combination of a spirit and a mortal body (D&C 88:15-16). In the Book of Mormon, however, the word “soul” is usually best interpreted as spirit (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 15:35).

The phrase “eternal destruction” cannot, of course, be interpreted as annihilation since there is no possibility of annihilation of the body and spirit of man in the eternities, as we understand the doctrine (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 14:3). How do we explain this verse, then?

Joseph Fielding Smith wrote: “Destruction does not mean . . . annihilation. When the Lord says they shall be destroyed, he means that they shall be banished from his presence, that they shall be cut off from the presence of light and truth, and shall not have the privilege of gaining this exaltation; and that is destruction” (Joseph Fielding Smith, Doctrines of Salvation, comp. Bruce R. McConkie [1955], 2:227–28).

But, surely, those in the kingdoms of glory are not completely excluded from light and truth. Only the sons of Perdition, as we understand them, will qualify for this awful fate. Again, we might ask the question, “Are Laman and Lemuel likely candidates for outer darkness? Probably not. For a discussion of this matter, again, see “Post-Mortal Life and the Book of Mormon” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 13, The Spirit World. Later on, the Book of Mormon will teach unequivocally of a universal resurrection that consists of the inseparable union of body and spirit (see Alma 11:44-45; 40:19-23).

Some have seen this verse as evidence that certain of the children of God, namely those who become sons of perdition, may, after their resurrection, experience eventual dissolution of their bodies. Brigham Young said of the sons of perdition:

They will be decomposed, both soul and body, and return to their native element. I do not say that they will be annihilated; but they will be disorganized, and will be as though they never had been, while we will live and retain our identity, and contend against those principles which tend to death or dissolution. I am after life; I want to preserve my identity, so that you can see Brigham in the eternal worlds just as you see him now (JD, 7:57-58).

Presumably, this dissolution of the bodies of the sons of perdition would include the dissolution of the resurrected bodies (and probably the spirit bodies)—for those who had a mortal experience—and a dissolution of the spirit bodies of Satan himself and his angels. This would leave these individual intelligences of both groups without any embodiment whatever—“naked intelligences.” Each would have nothing remaining except for their individual unembodied intelligence, in which they would be cast into outer darkness, perhaps never again to be picked up in another round of creation. This final dissolution of the bodies may be termed the third death.

23 Awake, my sons; put on the armor of righteousness. Shake off the chains with which ye are bound, and come forth out of obscurity, and arise from the dust.

verse 23 Lehi doubtless learned this imagery in reading from the brass plates—see Isaiah 59:17.

24 Rebel no more against your brother, whose views have been glorious, and who hath kept the commandments from the time that we left Jerusalem; and who hath been an instrument in the hands of God, in bringing us forth into the land of promise; for were it not for him, we must have perished with hunger in the wilderness; nevertheless, ye sought to take away his life; yea, and he hath suffered much sorrow because of you.

verse 24 Nephi would serve as the prophet when Lehi died.

25 And I exceedingly fear and tremble because of you, lest he shall suffer again; for behold, ye have accused him that he sought power and authority over you; but I know that he hath not sought for power nor authority over you, but he hath sought the glory of God, and your own eternal welfare.

26 And ye have murmured because he hath been plain unto you. Ye say that he hath used sharpness; ye say that he hath been angry with you; but behold, his sharpness was the sharpness of the power of the word of God, which was in him; and that which ye call anger was the truth, according to that which is in God, which he could not restrain, manifesting boldly concerning your iniquities.

27 And it must needs be that the power of God must be with him, even unto his commanding you that ye must obey. But behold, it was not he, but it was the Spirit of the Lord which was in him, which opened his mouth to utterance that he could not shut it.

28 And now my son, Laman, and also Lemuel and Sam, and also my sons who are the sons of Ishmael, behold, if ye will hearken unto the voice of Nephi ye shall not perish. And if ye will hearken unto him I leave unto you a blessing, yea, even my first blessing.

29 But if ye will not hearken unto him I take away my first blessing, yea, even my blessing, and it shall rest upon him.

verses 28-29 “first blessing” We have spoken previously about the concept of primogeniture that existed in ancient Israel (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 16:37). This principle held that upon the death of the father, the eldest son of the father’s first wife was entitled to occupy the father’s house and estate. This would help him care for his mother and unmarried sisters when the father passed away. The firstborn also was given the right to preside over the family after the death of the father, though this right could be bartered away, as happened to Esau (Genesis 25:29-34), or forfeited by unrighteousness as happened to Reuben (Genesis 35:22; 49:3-4; 1 Chronicles 5:1). The firstborn was also granted the right to be shown deference by his siblings throughout his life (e.g., Genesis 43:33). Apparently, this principle was not always applied without qualification. In Israel, a father was free to choose a younger son as his successor if he found the eldest unworthy of the honor. Also, this privilege did not pass automatically, but had to be conferred and publicly acknowledged by the father, usually in the form of an oral blessing. Additionally, by Lehi’s time the firstborn was not given the entire estate to the exclusion of all other sons. Rather the firstborn was given a double share compared with his brothers (Deuteronomy 21:17). Given the culture in which he was reared, Laman might well have had the expectations that he would succeed his father as the leader of the family and that he would have received more than an even share of his father’s estate.

In this verse, Lehi’s approach to this potentially explosive problem is an interesting one. It is clear that Lehi wanted the role of spiritual leadership of the family to pass to Nephi. Lehi promises to his sons and his sons-in-law the birthright blessing contingent upon their righteous obedience of the gospel laws as promulgated by Nephi. Lehi could hardly have blessed each of his sons or sons-in-law simultaneously with this “first blessing.” He could, however, bless each of them to participate in this patriarchal sequence should the one or ones above them default. He could also take away the birthright from any or all of them. His solution is particularly interesting in that it guarantees the right of leadership to Nephi. In order for Laman to obtain the first blessing, he had to obey Nephi. If he did not obey Nephi, his father’s blessing would go to Nephi anyway.

We might intuitively predict Laman and Lemuel’s reaction to this offer. They likely regarded Lehi’s words as “rubbing salt into the wound.” Centuries later, the descendants of Laman would still be complaining of how they were robbed of their “right to the government when it rightly belonged to them” (Alma 54:17).

30 And now, Zoram, I speak unto you: Behold, thou art the servant of Laban; nevertheless, thou hast been brought out of the land of Jerusalem, and I know that thou art a true friend unto my son, Nephi, forever.

31 Wherefore, because thou hast been faithful thy seed shall be blessed with his seed, that they dwell in prosperity long upon the face of this land; and nothing, save it shall be iniquity among them, shall harm or disturb their prosperity upon the face of this land forever.

32 Wherefore, if ye shall keep the commandments of the Lord, the Lord hath consecrated this land for the security of thy seed with the seed of my son.

verses 30-32 In verses 1 through 29 above, Lehi has spoken to his sons collectively. John W. Welch has pointed out that in these three verses (verses 30-32) and in the several verses that follow, Lehi will speak in turn to:

1. Zoram (verses 30-32),
2. Jacob (2 Nephi 2),
3. Joseph (2 Nephi 3),
4. the children of Laman (2 Nephi 4:3-7),
5. the children of Lemuel (2 Nephi 4:8-9),
6. the sons of Ishmael (2 Nephi 4:10), and
7. Sam and Nephi (2 Nephi 4:11).

In so doing, Brother Welch feels that he was organizing his posterity into seven groups or tribes (The Book of Mormon: Second Nephi, The Doctrinal Structure. Salt Lake City: Bookcraft and Religious Studies Center Brigham Young University, 1989, 68-70).

Just as the descendants of Israel were organized into twelve tribes, so are Lehi’s posterity divided into these seven, and Lehi is functioning in creating this organization in just the same patriarchal tradition as did Jacob of old. This organization will persist throughout the Book of Mormon and will be mentioned on three other occasions (Jacob 1:13; 4 Nephi 38; and Mormon 1:8). Just as the Israelites have always known Abraham as “father Abraham,” so will the Nephites accord Lehi the honor of being “father Lehi” throughout the Book of Mormon (Enos 1:25; Mosiah 1:4; 2:34; Alma 9:9; 18:36; 36:22; 56:3; Helaman 8:22; 3 Nephi 10:17).

Although the text does not state it explicitly, Brother Welch further feels that Lehi was assigning each tribe or group a specific “land of inheritance” to which each had perpetual rights. He further suggests this right was a significant factor which, later in the text, will motivate the followers of Zeniff to repossess (see Omni 27) their land (The Book of Mormon: Second Nephi, The Doctrinal Structure. Salt Lake City: Bookcraft and Religious Studies Center Brigham Young University, 1989, 71). Further support is gained for this idea in Lehi's reference above (2 Nephi 1:11) to "the lands of their possessions." Note the plural form of the terms "lands" and "possessions." Apparently, Lehi perceived the land as divided into several "lands" or territories.

2 Nephi Chapter 2

2 Nephi 2 Lehi's counsel to his son Jacob includes teachings on the atonement.

2 Nephi 2:6-8 Wherefore, redemption cometh in and through the Holy Messiah; for he is full of grace and truth. Behold, he offereth himself a sacrifice for sin, to answer the ends of the law, unto all those who have a broken heart and a contrite spirit; and unto none else can the ends of the law be answered. Wherefore, how great the importance to make these things known unto the inhabitants of the earth, that they may know that there is no flesh that can dwell in the presence of God, save it be through the merits, and mercy, and grace of the Holy Messiah, who layeth down his life according to the flesh, and taketh it again by the power of the Spirit, that he may bring to pass the resurrection of the dead, being the first that should rise.

2 Nephi 2:11 There is an opposition in all things.

2 Nephi 2:14 Things to act and things to be acted upon.

2 Nephi 2:25 Adam fell that men might be, and men are, that they might have joy.

2 Nephi 2:27 Lehi's teaching on the principle of agency. Wherefore, men are free to choose liberty and eternal life, through the great Mediator of all men, or to choose captivity and death, according to the captivity and power of the devil; for he seeketh that all men might be miserable like unto himself.

In giving his son Jacob a father's blessing, Lehi delivers a doctrinal discourse on the fall of man, the atonement, and the agency of man. Before studying this chapter, please read Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 19, The Essence of the Lord's Atonement and volume 2, chapter 2, Consequences of the Savior's Atonement.

1 And now, Jacob, I speak unto you: Thou art my first-born in the days of my tribulation in the wilderness. And behold, in thy childhood thou hast suffered afflictions and much sorrow, because of the rudeness of thy brethren.

verse 1 "Thou are my first-born in the days of my tribulation in the wilderness" This statement may have a deeper meaning than simply stating that Jacob was the first child to be born to Sariah while in the wilderness. Lehi may have considered Jacob to be something of a replacement for his eldest son, Laman, with his younger son Joseph being a replacement for the second son, Lemuel. There is a parallel to this situation in Genesis 48:5, 16 where Jacob adopted Joseph's sons Manasseh and Ephraim in place of Reuben and Simeon who had sinned (see Genesis 34:30; 35:22; 49:3-5). In consequence of Reuben's sins, he was replaced as firstborn by Joseph (see 1 Chronicles 5:1-2). In the case of Lehi, however, with the rebellion of his two elder sons, the birthright went to Nephi and not Jacob.

“in thy childhood thou hast suffered afflictions and much sorrow” The Book of Mormon account of the travels of Lehi’s colony in the wilderness, after their departure from the valley of Lemuel, is reported in 1 Nephi 16 and 1 Nephi 17:1- 4. It would seem that the trail from Nahom to Bountiful was the most difficult leg of the trip. One of the poignant phrases in these verses is in 1 Nephi 17:1 where Nephi reports, “And we did travel and wade through much affliction in the wilderness.” One might wonder if this wasn’t something of an understatement!

“because of the rudeness of thy brethren” Though “rude” has come to mean “impolite” in twentieth-century English, at the time Joseph Smith translated the Book of Mormon, it meant “wild” or “savage.”

2 Nevertheless, Jacob, my first-born in the wilderness, thou knowest the greatness of God; and he shall consecrate thine afflictions for thy gain.

verse 2 “he shall consecrate thine afflictions for thy gain” Here is an important doctrine: The Lord will turn suffering and tribulation into blessings. Since all people will experience adversity, this is a vital doctrine for all to know. Afflictions will be imposed upon us from without by the very nature of this mortal experience, and perhaps on occasion by a loving God who wishes to try and test us. They most often occur quite at random, through no fault of our own, simply because vicissitudes and trials characterize this mortal experience. Also, afflictions may come from within. We may bring them on ourselves due to sins, errors in judgment, or mistakes. Whatever the source of our trials, in this verse we are promised that as we strive to overcome them, we will be blessed with spiritual strength. For a more detailed discussion of adversity, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 1, Adversity and Suffering. See particularly the section titled “How Might We Categorize Adversity and Suffering?”

Jacob had been born “in the days of [Lehi’s] tribulation.” He had been raised on raw meat rather than milk and will be orphaned at a young age. Some people are hardened and made cynical and resentful by hardship, but not Jacob. We will learn that Jacob will become a uniquely sensitive and loving prophet. His long afflictions seem to have softened his spirit. He is a grand example of the sweet uses of adversity.

3 Wherefore, thy soul shall be blessed, and thou shalt dwell safely with thy brother, Nephi; and thy days shall be spent in the service of thy God. Wherefore, I know that thou art redeemed, because of the righteousness of thy Redeemer; for thou hast beheld that in the fulness of time he cometh to bring salvation unto men.

verse 3 What does it mean to be redeemed? The word redeem means to buy back or to clear by payment. From what great evil does man need redemption? Man is in need of redemption from his own sins. Because every man has sinned, he is not qualified to return to God’s presence or, in fact, he does not qualify to be assigned to any degree of glory. He is said to be in a fallen state. We also know that man cannot redeem himself from this fallen state. He must have a rescuer, a redeemer, a savior. The scriptures teach clearly that if there had been no Savior and no atonement, then all mankind would sojourn with Satan in outer darkness forever (2 Nephi 9:8-9). To be redeemed in a spiritual sense, then, means to be rescued from the fall of man, to be saved in a degree of glory, to be snatched from the clutches of the Devil. The optimal form of redemption is, of course, to be exalted in the celestial heaven.

“thou shalt dwell safely with thy brother Nephi” “I know that thou art redeemed” Apparently it had been made manifest to father Lehi, presumably by the Holy Ghost, that the “callings and elections” of both Jacob and his brother Nephi have been made sure. In other words, they are assured of their exaltation, barring any unforeseen and unlikely spiritual mishaps.

“righteousness of thy Redeemer” One of the ways in which Jesus qualified to be able to atone for our sins was that he was perfectly righteous and “justified by the law.” In addition, by virtue of His atonement, Jesus will qualify himself to become the perfect judge—the perfectly empathetic judge—of all mankind. In this context, Jesus may be referred to as the “righteous judge” or able to judge with perfect “righteousness.”

“in the fulness of time” This expression has reference to the period of Christ’s mortal ministry (see Galatians 4:4-5). A similar phrase, the “fulness of times” (plural) is used many times in the Doctrine and Covenants, usually referring to the “dispensation of the fulness of times,” the dispensation beginning at the restoration of the gospel through the prophet Joseph Smith (D&C 27:13; 112:30; 122:31; 124:41; 128:18-20; 138:53). The expression “dispensation of the fulness of times” was also spoken of by Paul (Ephesians 1:10). Doctrine and Covenants 76:106 employs the phrase “fulness of times” to refer to the end of the Millennium.

“he cometh to bring salvation unto men” As has been mentioned previously, the word salvation when used in scripture often means “exaltation.” Here, however, it may simply refer to the fact that the Savior’s atonement has made it possible for man to achieve a kingdom of glory, whether it be celestial, terrestrial, or telestial. An individual qualified to enter any of the three degrees of glory is said to be “saved.”

4 And thou hast beheld in thy youth his glory; wherefore, thou art blessed even as they unto whom he shall minister in the flesh; for the Spirit is the same, yesterday, today, and forever. And the way is prepared from the fall of man, and salvation is free.

verse 4 “And thou hast beheld in thy youth his glory” Jacob and his brother Nephi were both blessed to see the Lord Jesus Christ as had the prophet Isaiah many years previously (see also 2 Nephi 11:2-3). This verse is the first mention of Jacob’s seeing the Lord while in his youth.

“the Spirit is the same, yesterday, today, and forever” From the context of this passage, the “Spirit” is Jesus Christ. As the Lord deals with us in this dispensation, so he has dealt with all people in all dispensations of time since the human family inhabited the earth. There is a “timelessness” to the Lord’s eternal plan for us. A specific example of this timelessness would have been particularly pertinent for Jacob. He lived six hundred years before the Savior came to earth to work out the infinite atonement. Yet, the atonement is retroactive. Its benefits apply to Jacob just as much as they apply to any people who have ever lived on the earth in any dispensation, before or after Jesus’s mortal ministry. The blessings of the Lord’s atoning sacrifice are not contingent on when one is born during this earth’s history.

“the way is prepared from the fall of man” There is a tendency to read this phrase, “And the way is prepared for the fall of man.” It actually says, “And the way is prepared from the fall of man” (italics added). This phrase implies that the plan of redemption was prepared long before the fall took place (see also D&C 124:33, 41; 128:5; 130:20). The plan was laid from the very beginning. When Adam fell, there was no confusion or anxiety in Heaven. The plan was already in place to save mankind.

“salvation is free” There are at least two possible interpretations of this phrase:

1. The term “salvation” here may refer to the “unconditional” aspect of Christ’s atonement—the gift of resurrection. To earn this gift, one needs do nothing. It is provided free of charge. All will be resurrected.

2. The word “salvation” here might refer to exaltation or to salvation in the lesser two degrees of glory. In what way, then, is this salvation “free”? This phrase may simply be teaching the important concept that man cannot obtain exaltation through meticulously living the law of Moses or even the law of the gospel of Jesus Christ alone. Man cannot be “justified by the law.” Another essential ingredient is necessary for a man’s exaltation. This ingredient is “free” and given to man without his having earned it. This is the atonement of Christ which is given to a righteous man because of Christ’s love for the man—the “grace of Christ.” While the opportunity to take advantage of Christ’s atonement is free and need not be earned, man does need to live worthy of this great blessing in order to actually receive it. Thus, the actual working out of one’s salvation and ensuring that the blessings of the Lord’s atonement will be applied to any individual are not in fact free. They require diligent effort and self denial.

5 And men are instructed sufficiently that they know good from evil. And the law is given unto men. And by the law no flesh is justified; or, by the law men are cut off. Yea, by the temporal law they were cut off; and also, by the spiritual law they perish from that which is good, and become miserable forever.

verse 5 “And men are instructed sufficiently that they know good from evil.” This important principle applies only to those who reach the age of accountability. All accountable people are provided a level of understanding that allows them to intuitively know good from evil. This free gift may be referred to as the light of Christ or the spirit of Christ (D&C 88:7; 93:2; Moroni 7:16-17).

“And the law is given unto men” The “law” here is apparently the law of the gospel of Jesus Christ—all the commandments of the Lord.

“And by the law no flesh is justified” We know that by living the law of the gospel alone no man can be justified. Remember that to be “justified” is to have one’s penalties for sin removed. When an individual commits sin, a penalty is inflicted or imposed by the law of justice. The individual is thereafter unworthy to be exalted or to enter any degree of glory. When the individual’s penalty for sin is removed, he or she is said to be “justified.”

To understand this phrase in this context, it is essential to understand the concepts of justice (the law of justice), the law of mercy, and the atonement. These concepts are discussed in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 12, The Law of Justice, and chapter 19, The Essence of the Lord’s Atonement. Even if you have already read these articles, yet their vital concepts are not fresh on your mind, please re-read them before you study the rest of this chapter. See also the commentary for Mosiah 14:11.

This phrase simply implies that no man can be “justified” or judged worthy of exaltation through his living of the law alone, since no man can live the law perfectly without sin. The grace or mercy of God is also necessary. By this grace or great love for us, the Savior is inclined to apply the power of his atonement to mankind. Each and every man and woman, based on his or her performance relative to the law do not really merit that application.

“by the law men are cut off” Adam transgressed and every other man commits sin. Because of the workings of the law of justice each man is “cut off”—that is, subject to two types of death:

1. “physical death This is separation of the body and the spirit. A man who dies a physical death is thus said to be cut off by the “temporal law.”

2. “spiritual death” This is separation of man from God’s presence. Thus, man is said to perish by the “spiritual law.”

In both of these are men “cut off,” or separated, from something important.

“become miserable forever” This phrase refers to the idea that if the states of death (physical and spiritual) are not reversed, then all men will become sons of perdition and live with Satan forever (2 Nephi 9:8-9).

verses 6-13 Please do not take these verses for granted. They are vital and contain some of the clearest teachings on the doctrine of the atonement found in all of the scripture. There is no clear explanation of this vital doctrine found in the Old Testament, and a study of the New Testament has led to much confusion (see also 2 Nephi 9:6-16; Alma 34:13-16; Alma 42:13-26; and Mormon 9:13-14).

6 Wherefore, redemption cometh in and through the Holy Messiah; for he is full of grace and truth.

verse 6 Man may only be redeemed from the fall (resurrected, justified, and saved in a degree of glory) through Christ's atoning sacrifice.

"he is full of grace and truth" The redemption of man, which comes "in and through" Christ, is not a matter of grace (that aspect of his love for us that inclines him to extent merciful blessings to us when we obey his commandments) alone or truth (righteousness and obedience to the law) alone. Rather redemption is found in the combination of the two. The Savior is the source and prototype of both the saving grace and the saving truths of the gospel.

7 Behold, he offereth himself a sacrifice for sin, to answer the ends of the law, unto all those who have a broken heart and a contrite spirit; and unto none else can the ends of the law be answered.

verse 7 Through his atoning sacrifice, Christ "answer[ed] the ends of the law," that is, he fully qualified himself, according to the eternal law, the law of justice and the law of mercy, to absolve men of their sins. And, unto whom will he extend this absolution? To those who manifest "a broken heart and a contrite spirit," in other words, to those who are obedient.

A "broken heart and a contrite spirit" is a gift of the Spirit. It is the gift of being aware constantly of a deep and compelling sense of gratitude to the Savior for his love and his willingness to die for us all. With this gift comes the motivation to obey the commandments, to submit to his will. In a sense, we may say that "a broken heart and a contrite spirit" is the gift of being able to obey enthusiastically and gratefully.

"unto all those who have a broken heart and a contrite spirit; and unto none else" Doesn't Christ's atonement apply to all men? Why does this verse say that his "sacrifice" applies only to those who qualify? The atonement of the Savior has a dual character. There are "unconditional" blessings or benefits of the atonement and "conditional" blessings of the atonement. Man is automatically the beneficiary of the unconditional blessings of the atonement without any effort on his own part. By this unconditional atonement, the effects of the fall of Adam are completely overcome. That is, all men shall be resurrected, and no one will be kept out of his eternal presence because of Adam's sin. These unconditional blessings of the atonement also overcome the effects of "sins" or transgressions committed by those who were not in a state of accountability at the time. The conditional blessings of the atonement overcome the effects of the fall of each individual person, but only on condition of that person's repentance and obedience—only those with "a broken heart and a contrite spirit." These are the people who repent of their sins.

Some have been critical of the Book of Mormon for having the prophet Nephi, some 600 years before Christ, teaching the concept of a broken heart and contrite spirit at a time when animal sacrifice was still being practiced. Is this an anachronism in the Book of Mormon?

Most Latter-day Saints are familiar with the idea of a sacrifice of a broken heart and contrite spirit as a new standard that Jesus established after his crucifixion, which was the “infinite sacrifice” (Alma 34:10, 14) after which no more animal sacrifices would be accepted. Jesus, just before his visit to the Book of Mormon peoples after his resurrection, made a statement to that very effect: “And ye shall offer up unto me no more the shedding of blood; yea, your sacrifices and your burnt offerings shall be done away, for I will accept none of your sacrifices and your burnt offerings. And ye shall offer for a sacrifice unto me a broken heart and a contrite spirit. And whoso cometh unto me with a broken heart and a contrite spirit, him will I baptize with fire and with the Holy Ghost” (3 Nephi 9:19–20).

If this was a new standard instituted by the Savior after his death, then how did Lehi know about it and expect his people to live by it even though they still lived the Law of Moses and offered animal sacrifices?

The idea of offering a sacrifice of a “broken heart and contrite spirit” is rare in the Old Testament and does not appear in the New Testament at all. The idea that this teaching came directly from Jesus is unique to 3 Nephi. However, as Dana Pike, a BYU professor of ancient scripture, pointed out, although animal sacrifices were done away when Jesus fulfilled this part of the Law, the main aspects of the principles and ordinances of the Gospel have been in place from the foundation of the world. Regarding the Law of Sacrifice, he explains:

Just as the doctrines of faith in Christ, repentance, and baptism by water and by the Spirit were taught from the time humans first lived on the earth, so likewise the law of sacrifice was introduced to Adam and Eve at their expulsion from Eden (Moses 4:27). . . . Latter-day Saints therefore accept that just as faith, repentance, obedience, and other gospel requirements were necessary to qualify for the salvation prior to Jesus’s mortal ministry, the requirement that premeridian disciples of the Lord participate in all aspects of the law of sacrifice with heartfelt devotion was also expected by the Lord throughout those earlier millennia; it was not something originally announced to Nephite survivors when the Son of God concluded his saving mission (Dana M. Pike, “3 Nephi 9:19-20: The Offering of a Broken Heart,” in Third Nephi: An Incomparable Scripture, Andrew C. Skinner and Gaye Strathearn, eds., Provo, Ut.: Maxwell Institute; Salt Lake City, Ut.: Deseret Book, 2012, 42-43).

Pike justifies this conclusion by noting that “while passages in the Old Testament and the early portion of the Book of Mormon that convincingly mention the offering of a broken heart as a sacrifice to God are relatively few in number, they do exist” (Ibid., 47). The two principal examples that he cites come from the Psalms.

- “The Lord is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart; and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit” (Psalm 34:18).

- “For thou desirest not sacrifice; else would I give it: thou delightest not in burnt offering. The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise” (Psalm 51:16-17).

Pike explains that these two usages, along with the early Book of Mormon use of the terms “broken heart” and “contrite spirit,” “are sufficiently clear to indicate that this concept was taught and understood among God’s covenant people prior to the mortal mission of Jesus Christ. The need for a disciple of the Lord to offer a broken heart and contrite spirit was presumably part of the law of sacrifice from the very beginning. It was not initially instituted by Jesus in 3 Nephi 9:19–20” (Ibid.).

“unto none else can the ends of the law be answered” The “ends of the law” are “answered” for an individual when he is justified and able to return to the presence of God to receive his exaltation. He has satisfactorily repented of his sins and therefore is qualified to receive the Savior’s absolution or forgiveness.

8 Wherefore, how great the importance to make these things known unto the inhabitants of the earth, that they may know that there is no flesh that can dwell in the presence of God, save it be through the merits, and mercy, and grace of the Holy Messiah, who layeth down his life according to the flesh, and taketh it again by the power of the Spirit, that he may bring to pass the resurrection of the dead, being the first that should rise.

verse 8 This verse contains the succinct “bottom line.” Since no man can live the law to perfection, no man can be justified and saved by virtue of his own merits. No one will live with God in the celestial kingdom or in any kingdom of glory “save it be through the merits, and mercy, and grace of the Holy Messiah.” There is no other name by which man can be exalted. There is no other way. We are all totally and abjectly dependent upon him. He is qualified to be our Savior by (1) his “merits”—he lived a sinless life and suffered the agony of the atonement; (2) his “mercy” his willingness and inclination to provide each of us blessings greater than we actually merit; and (3) his “grace”—his unparalleled love for us, particularly that aspect of his love that inclines him to give us blessings we don’t fully merit.

“who layeth down his life according to the flesh” Jesus’s agony and death in Gethsemane and on the cross was not mitigated by his being the God Jehovah and his being sired by the Father. He suffered the unbelievable agony just a man would suffer. His body was mortal and had to undergo the obligatory terminal physiologic phenomena necessary to terminate life common to all mortals.

“and taketh it again by the power of the Spirit” This phrase suggests that the Holy Ghost was somehow involved in the resurrection. This is certainly a provocative independent observation.

9 Wherefore, he is the firstfruits unto God, inasmuch as he shall make intercession for all the children of men; and they that believe in him shall be saved.

verse 9 “he is the firstfruits” Mosaic law required the consecration of the choicest and initial part of the harvest to God—the “firstfruits.” These were brought to the temple and given to the priests for their support.

In an analogous way, Christ’s life was lived and given up as a sacrifice to the Father. The term firstfruits has reference to a few different aspects of the life of the Savior. First, it refers to the fact that he is “the first that should rise” from the dead—the first to be resurrected. Second, that he is the “Firstborn” spirit child of Elohim (D&C 93:21). Finally, as in this verse, the term firstfruits refers to the fact that “he shall make intercession for all the children of men.”

As a foreshadowing of Jesus Christ as the “firstfruits,” the ancient Israelites were commanded to “give,” or dedicate to God, the “firstborn of [their] sons” (Exodus 22:20); to sacrifice to God the “firstling males of their flocks and herds” (Deuteronomy 15:19-21); and to bring “the first of the fruits” of their land “into the house of the Lord” (Exodus 23:19). Book of Mormon peoples followed this same practice, “according to the law of Moses,” specifically noting the sacrifice of the “firstlings of their flocks” (Mosiah 2:3).

Actually, two other variations of the term “firstfruits” are used also in the Book of Mormon, first-fruits, and first fruits. The followers of Christ who are worthy to come forth in the first resurrection will be “presented as the first-fruits of Christ unto God” (Jacob 4:11). This is the first harvest of souls redeemed through the atonement of Christ. The phrase first fruits may be used to mean the first action as a consequence of another action or principle. For example, “the first fruits of repentance is baptism” (Moroni 8:25).

“he shall make intercession for all the children of men” An intercession is an intervention to resolve a predicament. The predicament here is that all are guilty of sin (Romans 3:23), and therefore unworthy to return to the celestial presence of the Father or any other kingdom of glory.

“they that believe in him shall be saved” This rather understated passage might be rephrased, “those that accept Christ and his gospel with all their hearts and repent of their sins and persist in obedience to the end will be exalted in his presence.”

10 And because of the intercession for all, all men come unto God; wherefore, they stand in the presence of him, to be judged of him according to the truth and holiness which is in him. Wherefore, the ends of the law which the Holy One hath given, unto the inflicting of the punishment which is affixed, which punishment that is affixed is in opposition to that of the happiness which is affixed, to answer the ends of the atonement—verse 10 “all men come unto God; wherefore, they stand in the presence of him, to be judged of him” One of the unconditional blessings of Christ’s atoning sacrifice was the complete overcoming of the effects of Adam’s transgression. Please recall that because of Adam’s transgression, all men will suffer a physical death, and all will also be temporarily separated from God—they will suffer a temporary spiritual death. Because Christ’s intercession has completely overcome the effects of Adam’s transgression, all men will be resurrected and all will be brought back into the presence of God at least long enough to be judged. These are the unconditional blessings of the Savior’s atonement. The presence of God that we seek, however, is not just a brief audience during which we will be judged but rather an eternal sojourn with him in the celestial kingdom.

“the ends of the law which the Holy One hath given” The phrase “ends of the law” refers to the demands of justice. Simply stated, they are that a man guilty of sin is unworthy to return to his celestial home, or in fact, unworthy to return to any degree of glory. The phrase “which the Holy One hath given” simply states that in the plan of the Father and the Son, man is made subject to the “ends of the law.”

“unto the inflicting of the punishment which is affixed, which punishment that is affixed is in opposition to that of . . . happiness” Since all have sinned, all are subject to the “ends of the law” and will receive the “punishment which is affixed” to that law. That is, by his own merits, each and every man is shut out of God’s heavenly kingdom and shut out also of any degree of glory. He thus cannot find eternal happiness.

“happiness . . . is affixed, to answer the ends of the atonement” Punishment is inexorably “affixed” to the law of justice. Happiness refers to the blessings of justification and sanctification made available to us because of the Lord’s atonement (See Justification and Sanctification in volume one, chapter 17 of Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine).

Each man will be judged by the Lord according to the individual’s intentions and actions relative to the law of the gospel. Each will be meted out “happiness (reward)” or “punishment” according to his merit. Those who have done their best to adhere to the gospel principles as they understand them will qualify and benefit from Christ’s atonement. Christ’s suffering will answer or satisfy the law of justice for those sincere individuals. They will be justified and sanctified (cleansed from sin and perfected) and return to his presence for eternity where they will receive a fulness of happiness or joy (see D&C 45:3-5). Those who are hard-hearted and proud and remain unrepentant will not qualify for the benefits of the atonement. There will be no intercession. The law of justice will not be satisfied. The individual will then be left to suffer personally for his own sins in the spirit prison (see D&C 19:4, 15-17). It would seem that the phrase “ends of the atonement” refers to the ultimate fulfilling purpose of the atonement—exaltation in the eternal presence of the Father.

In the spirit world, if the demands of justice are not satisfactorily met by the individual's own personal suffering, and if he does not eventually repent and confess Jesus Christ, the individual will remain "filthy still" and go with Satan and his angels. If, in spirit prison, he is successful in making the needed personal atonement, the benefits of Christ's atonement will be extended to him, and the law of justice will be fulfilled. He will then become "justified" and be resurrected to a lesser kingdom where he will experience joy, but not a fulness of joy.

The use of the word "atonement" here is the first usage found in the text of the Book of Mormon. This is a most interesting word. It has no Greek or Latin root. It is a "neologism" or new word created by the early English translators of the Bible in the latter sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries. As they came across the concept of bringing two estranged and alienated things into perfect harmony, they sometimes used the word reconcile. At other times, they apparently found that word wanting, and they made up a new word. They created the word at-one-ment or "atonement." The word contains the idea of scattered or separated things being encircled or embraced or enveloped by something—for example, being encircled in the arms of the Lord. The prophet Lehi said, "The Lord hath redeemed my soul from hell; I have beheld his glory, and I am encircled about eternally in the arms of his love" (2 Nephi 1:15).

Atonement is also another word for sealing. There is no eternal embrace by the Lord or eternal relationship between two people that is not secured by a priesthood or temple ordinance. Priesthood ordinances both in and out of the temple may be viewed as a progressive sealing of ourselves to the Lord until the atonement is complete and we are embraced in the arms of the Savior. Many scriptural words may be considered synonymous with atonement. Consider, for example, oneness, in one, unity, united, gathering, equal, cleaving, sealing, welding, linking, embracing, and even resurrection.

The reader may wonder why Joseph Smith used the word atonement in the Book of Mormon text when the word would not even exist for another two thousand or so years. As a matter of fact the entire English language did not exist at the time the Book of Mormon plates were engraved. The simplest answer is that Joseph did not decide to use the word atonement. Rather, the Lord simply revealed to him the English translation of the book. During the translation of the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith seemed to simply read the text of the Book of Mormon by using his seerstone in the bottom of a hat (see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, Appendix A, The Process of Translating the Book of Mormon). Apparently, it was the Lord himself or his assigned agent who was actually clothing the concepts on the plates with English words.

11 For it must needs be, that there is an opposition in all things. If not so, my first-born in the wilderness, righteousness could not be brought to pass, neither wickedness, neither holiness nor misery, neither good nor bad. Wherefore, all things must needs be a compound in one; wherefore, if it should be one body it must needs remain as dead, having no life neither death, nor corruption nor incorruption, happiness nor misery, neither sense nor insensibility.

verse 11 “For it must needs be, that there is an opposition in all things.”

Here is a profoundly important principle. Try to imagine, if you can, a world without opposition. What would life be like? Would happiness be possible if there were no sadness? Would growth be possible if there were no adversity and no need to strive? With no ethical issues, could we learn to use our agency in an edifying manner? Indeed, would we in fact possess any meaningful agency? McConkie and Millet wrote: “No virtue can exist without its corresponding evil: without the evil of danger there could be no courage, without suffering there could be no sympathy, without poverty there could be no generosity, and so forth. Without darkness, there could be no light, without cold there could be no hot, without depths there could be no heights. Thus, there must be wickedness so there might be righteousness, death so there might be life, that which is satanic so there might be that which is godly” (Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, volume 1, 195).

We are here in mortality to be tested, and this cannot occur without the existence of opposition. In fact, we will learn that without opposition, man and God cannot even exist. Read on!

“all things must needs be a compound in one” This statement is simply a re-statement of the idea that there must be opposition. Man is a dual or “compound” being, having both a physical or “natural” self and a spiritual self. He must have a dual nature—he “must needs be a compound in one.” If man were only a natural or physical or temporal being (“if it should be one body”), then he would be entirely subject to natural law. He would have no agency. The natural law would be his sole determinant. There would be no concept of right or wrong, no wickedness or righteousness. The condition of man would resemble this hypothetical condition if there were no opposition in the world. He could not progress. Such a man might as well “remain as dead”—he might as well not even exist. There would be no purpose in creation. Indeed, God might as well not exist. He would have no purpose.

“nor corruption nor incorruption” The words corruption and incorruption are used in the Book of Mormon to contrast the nature of mortal things (corruption) and spiritual things (incorruption). In most cases “corruption” refers to the mortal body, which is subject to death and dissolution, and “incorruption” refers to the immortal body, which is resurrected, spiritual, and will abide forever (2 Nephi 9:7; Mosiah 16:10; Alma 5:15; 11:45; 12:18; 40:2; 41:4; Mormon 6:21).

12 Wherefore, it must needs have been created for a thing of naught; wherefore there would have been no purpose in the end of its creation. Wherefore, this thing must needs destroy the wisdom of God and his eternal purposes, and also the power, and the mercy, and the justice of God.

verse 12 The pronoun “it” here seems to refer to the earth and the sum total of all creation. The purpose of all creation, as we understand it, is to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man (Moses 1:39). Man cannot grow toward godhood without being able to exercise his agency in a world where there is opposition. If there were no opposition, the world would have been created in vain or “for a thing of naught.” God would have no purpose. His powers and other virtues would be negated. He would have no reason to be God.

There is, of course, opposition in the world, and it is precisely these opposites coupled with the agency of man that gives purpose to life and to the creation of the world. Man is the center and essence of the universe. He is not simply an accident of nature subject only to natural laws. Joseph Smith taught that happiness of man is the object and design of the world’s existence (TPJS, 55, 255). This world did not come into existence by chance, rather it was created by God for the mortal probation of man.

verses 13-15 These verses continue Lehi’s defense of the proposition that there “must needs be” opposition.

13 And if ye shall say there is no law, ye shall also say there is no sin. If ye shall say there is no sin, ye shall also say there is no righteousness. And if there be no righteousness there be no happiness. And if there be no righteousness nor happiness there be no punishment nor misery. And if these things are not there is no God. And if there is no God we are not, neither the earth; for there could have been no creation of things, neither to act nor to be acted upon; wherefore, all things must have vanished away.

verse 13 This verse implies that the concepts of law, sin, righteousness, punishment, and God are so intimately interdependent upon one another that one cannot exist without the others. Intuitively it is easy to understand that if law didn’t exist, there would be no sin. Without sin there could be no wickedness or righteousness. Hence there could be no misery or happiness. Less intuitively obvious, however, is the obligatory interdependence of God and the law. Could God exist even if there were no law? Or, could the law exist even if there were no God? God became God in a setting characterized by law, sin, punishment, righteousness, misery, happiness. He could have become God in no other way. Without these things, there could be no God. If there were no God, then there could be no creation. Hence, there would be no earth and no man, indeed nothing would exist.

We ascribe to God the epitome of intelligence and the quintessence of spiritual gifts. Each of us, at our very core, is an intelligence. It is notable that the very word intelligence implies the characteristic of agency. The word intelligence comes from the latin intelligere which is a variant form of inter meaning between and legere meaning to choose. Thus, the word intelligence teaches that an intelligence, by its very nature, possesses agency or the ability to choose.

14 And now, my sons, I speak unto you these things for your profit and learning; for there is a God, and he hath created all things, both the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them are, both things to act and things to be acted upon.

verse 14 “God . . . hath created all things” The Father did not “create” all things out of nothing or ex nihilo. As he began the process of creation, he was given, by the family of Gods, a vast repository of primal building blocks—elements (unorganized matter) and intelligences which he organized together. We may thus rephrase Lehi’s statement, “God . . . hath organized all things.

“things to act and things to be acted upon” In one sense these may be regarded as the building blocks available to the Father as he began the process of creation. The “things to act” are the vast host of intelligences. They are capable of exercising their agency or acting for themselves. The “things to be acted upon” are the elements or matter. These are incapable of acting for themselves and are instead acted upon. In spite of the implication of this verse, both of these entities are eternal. Neither was created, and neither can be destroyed. They can only be organized, disorganized, and reorganized.

15 And to bring about his eternal purposes in the end of man, after he had created our first parents, and the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air, and in fine, all things which are created, it must needs be that there was an opposition; even the forbidden fruit in opposition to the tree of life; the one being sweet and the other bitter.

verse 15 The “eternal purposes” of God are “to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man” (Moses 1:39). The phrase “in the end of man” is perhaps best interpreted as meaning “in the life of man” or “in the lives of men.”

The expression “in fine” means in conclusion or in summary.

This verse simply states that in order to bring about his purpose—the eternal life of man, the presence on the earth of opposition—good and evil—is essential. Without an opportunity to sin, man cannot progress. Without an opportunity to excel in obedience, he cannot be exalted. It is notable that God created neither good nor evil. They have always existed and are characteristics of every individual intelligence. Intelligences have also always existed. Every intelligence has a “natural” self and a “spiritual” self. The natural self is the greatest source of evil in the universe. When the spiritual self has its way with us, the result is “good.”

“even the forbidden fruit in opposition to the tree of life” The “forbidden fruit” is symbolic of the world and its worldliness. The “tree of life” is symbolic of Christ and eternal life in his presence (see 1 Nephi 11:7). The “forbidden fruit” is “in opposition to the tree of life” since failing to overcome the world leads to failure to achieve the presence of God.

Note that the adjectives (“sweet” and “bitter”) modifying the phrases “forbidden fruit” and “tree of life” are in reverse order.

The specific nature of the forbidden fruit has not been revealed. Elder Bruce R. McConkie suggested that when Adam and Eve partook of this fruit they “complied with whatever the law was that brought mortality into being” (A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, 86). The issue may not have been so much one of sin versus righteousness. God’s prohibition against partaking of the “forbidden fruit” may have been more of a statement of consequences—what would come about if and when they did partake. The Lord said that if Adam “wished to remain as he was in the garden, then he was not to eat the fruit, but if he desired to eat it and partake of death he was at liberty to do so” (Joseph Fielding Smith, “Was the Fall of Adam Necessary?” Improvement Era 65 [April 1962]: 231).

16 Wherefore, the Lord God gave unto man that he should act for himself. Wherefore, man could not act for himself save it should be that he was enticed by the one or the other.

verse 16 “the Lord God gave unto man that he should act for himself” We often say that God has given to man his agency. Strictly speaking, this is not true. God did not give to any man his agency, as every man has always possessed agency. God also cannot remove a man’s agency. God did place man in a situation where his agency is operational—in mortality, man may use his agency to progress spiritually. See Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 13, Agency and Freedom.

“man could not act for himself save it should be that he was enticed by the one or the other” Also we are instructed that in order for man to exercise fully his agency, both good and evil choices must be associated with some enticement. Certainly, the Spirit of God and the “spirit of Christ” within each of us do entice a man to do good, but does God entice a man to do evil? Certainly not. The natural self of man is all the enticement a man needs to do evil. Indeed, the natural self of man is the greatest source of evil in the universe.

17 And I, Lehi, according to the things which I have read, must needs suppose that an angel of God, according to that which is written, had fallen from heaven; wherefore, he became a devil, having sought that which was evil before God.

verse 17 Satan would be allowed to come to earth to entice men to do evil. Let us not be guilty of being too simplistic, however, and failing to understand Satan’s role. Satan is not the creator or author of evil. The origin of evil resides deep within each of us and has always done so. It is our “natural self” or “natural-man self” (see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapters 5 and 6, The “Natural Self” and “Spiritual Self” and The Gospel and the Two Natures of Man). While Satan did not create our natural self, he certainly rejoices in our giving in to it. Because of Satan's strategies and efforts, it is more difficult for us to resist our natural selves. See Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 16, The Role of Satan.

Biblical references to the fall of Lucifer are very scarce and veiled (Isaiah 14; Revelation 12). We must look to modern-day revelation for a clear understanding (Moses 4:1-4 which is the same as JST Genesis 3:1-5). The Book of Mormon also, beginning with the prophet Lehi, teaches a clearer perspective of Satan than the Hebrew Bible. Note here in this verse that Lehi "supposed" the existence of Satan based on reading something he encountered in the plates of brass. He indicates a knowledge of Satan's falling from heaven and becoming the devil. Lehi may have been referencing a passage he had read from Isaiah's writings: "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! Art thou cut down to the ground, which did weaken the nations!" (2 Nephi 24:12; Isaiah 14:12). Lehi's perspective of Satan was then picked up by his sons Nephi and Jacob and perpetuated and developed further by subsequent Book of Mormon prophets and authors.

"according to the things which I have read" Obviously Lehi had learned something of the plan of salvation from reading the brass plates. However, he was apparently not taught as many of the specific details of that plan as we have today in this final dispensation. It was necessary for him to "suppose" some of the details, while today we have been taught many of the specifics of the Grand Council, the rebellion of Lucifer, and his being cast out of heaven with a third of the hosts of heaven.

"[Satan] sought that which was evil before God." Here is the essential reason for Satan's fall from glory in the pre-existence. Knowing first hand of the existence and preachings of the Father and the Son, he not only gave in to his "natural self," but he began to contend openly against the teachings of the Father and the Son. In this case part of his underlying "natural" inclinations were certainly profound fears that he would fail to return to his former place of prominence.

18 And because he had fallen from heaven, and had become miserable forever, he sought also the misery of all mankind. Wherefore, he said unto Eve, yea, even that old serpent, who is the devil, who is the father of all lies, wherefore he said: Partake of the forbidden fruit, and ye shall not die, but ye shall be as God, knowing good and evil.

verse 18 Here we learn that Satan's very objective is to bring about "the misery of all mankind." His motivation is a profound application of the old saw: "misery loves company."

Note Satan's statement to Eve. As he attempts to deceive her, he does so in a most effective manner. He combines truth and falsehood. The falsehood is, "Partake of the forbidden fruit, and ye shall not die.” The second part of his statement, “Ye shall be as God, knowing good and evil,” is, of course, true.

“be as God” We know it is a righteous desire of all who cleave to gospel truths to seek to one day “be as God.”

19 And after Adam and Eve had partaken of the forbidden fruit they were driven out of the garden of Eden, to till the earth.

verse 19 As mentioned previously, we are left to wonder and speculate as to the literal or symbolic nature of the “forbidden fruit.” Whatever the fruit was, it was rendered enticing, at least to Eve, by Satan’s verbal manipulations. On the other hand, we know that ultimately Adam and Eve’s choice to leave the garden was a deliberate one. They saw their loftiest responsibility as multiplying and replenishing the earth.

20 And they have brought forth children; yea, even the family of all the earth.

verse 20 “the family of all the earth” We believe that all human inhabitants of the earth are lineal descendants of Adam. In the premortal world, these were the spirit children of God and came into mortality on the path to progress toward godhood.

21 And the days of the children of men were prolonged, according to the will of God, that they might repent while in the flesh; wherefore, their state became a state of probation, and their time was lengthened, according to the commandments which the Lord God gave unto the children of men. For he gave commandment that all men must repent; for he showed unto all men that they were lost, because of the transgression of their parents.

verse 21 “the days of the children of men were prolonged” The use of the word “prolonged” here is a curiosity since the time a man spends on this earth is certainly a relative thing. In other words, the days of the children of men were “prolonged” compared to what or to whom? The same concept is restated later in this verse—“their time was lengthened.” This same phraseology is used elsewhere, several times in the scriptures (Deuteronomy 4:40; 5:16,30; 6:2; 11:9; 30:18; 32:47; Isaiah 13:22; 53:10; Helaman 15:4,10; 2 Nephi 23:22; Alma 9:18). A study of these references suggests that the verb “prolonged” might also be interpreted as “given sufficient time.”

Apparently, the lives of Adam and his children before the Flood were lengthened so that no one died during Adam’s dispensation without first having had the opportunity to accept or reject the gospel (see D&C 29:42). Further, it would seem that in that dispensation the Lord was particularly inclined to send to the earth angels to preach his gospel (Moses 5:58; 7:27). Thus, through the preaching of Adam, Enoch, Noah, angels from heaven, and even God himself (see Moses 5:58), no one who died before the Flood died in ignorance. This longevity changed with the Flood (see Genesis 6:3), and it then became possible for people to die in ignorance.

The apostle Peter describes the missionary work in the spirit world as beginning among these disobedient antediluvian souls, those “which sometime were disobedient [not ignorant], when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah” (see 1 Peter 3:20). Elder James E. Talmage has explained:

The disobedient who had lived on earth in the Noachian [pre-Flood] period are especially mentioned as beneficiaries of the Lord’s ministry in the spirit world. They had been guilty of gross offenses, and had wantonly rejected the teachings and admonitions of Noah. . . We are not to assume from Peter’s illustrative mention of the disobedient antediluvians that they alone were included in the blessed opportunities offered through Christ’s ministry in the spirit realm; on the contrary, we conclude in reason and consistency that all whose wickedness in the flesh had brought their spirits into the prison house were sharers in the possibilities of expiation, repentance, and release (Jesus the Christ, 672-73).

Also, we are taught in modern revelation that when Christ introduced missionary work to the spirit prison almost immediately following his resurrection, he did not actually personally minister among the spirits in prison (D&C 138:18-20).

To this point in this chapter, Lehi has logically outlined the essential steps in man’s progression toward godhood. He “gave” man his agency (actually God placed man in a situation where man could use his agency to progress to become more like God—verse 16) and a set of commandments whereby man might progress. In order to make this agency operative in an especially meaningful way, he allowed Satan to operate in the world. Satan would encourage adherence to the enticing alternatives to the gospel plan. One other essential step remains. That is for mankind to fall from God’s presence into the obligatory state of probation where they will be tested in a setting where opposition abounds.

“he showed unto men that they were lost because of the transgression of their parents” Are all men really “lost” because of the sins of Adam and Eve? Only in the sense that they became mortal (subject to death) and temporarily separated from God.

To review: The Fall of man has a two-fold nature. (1) First, there is the fall of Adam. Adam transgressed, and by this transgression he brought two types of death into the world: physical death (all men must eventually die) and spiritual death (all men are temporarily separated from God during mortality). (2) Secondly, each man falls on his own. Man is not separated from God permanently because of Adam’s sin. Only his own sins result in a lasting separation. No one lives without sin. A man’s own sins result in his “permanent” spiritual death or separation from God. This spiritual death is actually “permanent” only until the law of justice is satisfied. The law of justice is very exact. If even one sin is committed, man cannot qualify for entry back into God’s presence or indeed into any kingdom of glory.

verses 22-26 In all of the scripture, these five verses are unique in that they make clear truths about the Creation, the Fall, and the Atonement that are found nowhere else in scripture.

22 And now, behold, if Adam had not transgressed he would not have fallen, but he would have remained in the garden of Eden. And all things which were created must have remained in the same state in which they were after they were created; and they must have remained forever, and had no end.

verses 22-23 Here we are taught that if Adam had not fallen, “all things” would have remained forever in the state in which they had been created. This is usually interpreted to mean that all things, including Adam, Eve, plants, and animals were created in an innocent and paradisiacal state at least in the area specified to be the Garden of Eden. They would have remained so if Adam and Eve had not fallen. Elder Bruce R. McConkie wrote:

The initial creation was paradisiacal; death and mortality had not yet entered the world. There was no mortal flesh upon the earth for any form of life. The Creation was past, but mortality as we know it lay ahead. All things had been created in a state of paradisiacal immortality. It was of this day that Lehi said: “And all things which were created must have remained in the same state in which they were after they were created; and they must have remained forever, and had no end” (2 Nephi 2:22). If there is no death, all things of necessity must continue to live everlastingly and without end (“Christ and the Creation,” 9-15).

Some committed members of the Church, because of their scientific backgrounds, have questioned whether or not all things on the earth in every age of the earth were, in fact, created in an immortal or paradisiacal state (Trent D. Stephens and D. Jeffrey Meldrum, Evolution and Mormonism, 134-38). They point out that, while Elder McConkie’s interpretation of 2 Nephi 2:22 is one possible interpretation, “It has not received official sanction as a doctrine; and it has no explicit foundation in scripture. Furthermore, it is inconsistent with the fossil record and other well-established scientific data indicating a very old earth in which natural processes (life and death) have been at work for billions of years.”

Two other plausible explanations have been proffered for 2 Nephi 2:22:

1. Some have divided the period of the earth’s physical creation into two major eras:

- The first is the period of preparatory creation when the earth was prepared for the advent of modern life forms including man on the earth. This period may well have lasted millions upon millions of years, and included the period of the dinosaurs and other ancient life forms. It was during this period that the fossil fuels, minerals, soil, precious metals, and other vital stores were accumulated upon the earth so that there might be “enough and to spare” (D&C 104:17) to support the family of man when they eventually arrived on the earth. During this period, all life lived in a purely mortal form—subject to death. Following this creative era, once the earth was ready, all living things may have been removed from the earth.

- The second period is the actual placement of modern life forms on the earth. All life forms placed upon the earth at the outset of this era (human, animals, and plants) initially existed in a paradisiacal or “spiritual” state.

After the fall of Adam, all forms of life became mortal.

2. Another explanation is that the creation story applies selectively to only a specific location on the earth—the Garden of Eden. Only in the Garden were living things all created in a “spiritual” or paradisiacal state. Only in the Garden was there no death prior to Adam’s fall.

The book of Moses explains that all things were “spiritual” in the day in which they were created. The word spiritual in this context may have two possible meanings:

1. The first is that all things were not subject to death or change. This meaning of spiritual is important and pertains in other verses of scripture. For example, Amulek described the resurrection as a state in which body and spirit are united “never to be divided; thus the whole becoming spiritual and immortal, that they can no more see corruption” (Alma 11:45, italics added). This same meaning was intended by Paul. Speaking of the physical body, he said, “It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body” (1 Corinthians 15:44). Those who do not understand this meaning of the word spiritual have concluded that Paul was saying that in the world to come we will exist only as spirits. We know of course that Paul intended to teach that resurrection is the inseparable union of spirit and an immortal and incorruptible body.

We thus learn that when the Lord described the Creation by saying that it was “spiritual in the day that I created it; for it remaineth in the sphere in which I, God, created it, yea, even all things which I prepared for the use of man” (Moses 3:9), we understand that the Lord may have been saying that there was no death or corruption among God’s creations, at least at the time of—or in the location of Adam, Eve, and the Garden.

2. The Lord has explained in D&C 29:34: “Wherefore, verily I say unto you that all things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal; neither any man, nor the children of men; neither Adam, your father, whom I created.” Something that is “spiritual” in this context is not just temporal but has eternal implications.

“they would have remained in a state of innocence” “Innocence” means that they lived in a bland and naive state where there was little opposition and they had a limited concept of the difference between good and evil. Though Adam and Eve did have some knowledge of good and evil, in their innocent state, they had insufficient knowledge to enable them to grow or progress spiritually in an optimal way.

“they would have had no children” In the paradisiacal or spiritual state no living thing could enjoy the privilege of procreation.

It is sound logic that joy cannot exist in the absence of misery, and righteousness cannot exist when there is no possibility of sin.

24 But behold, all things have been done in the wisdom of him who knoweth all things.

verse 24 “all things have been done in the wisdom of him who knoweth all things” The fall of man was planned in advance by God. Even though Adam and Eve were warned by God of the consequences of partaking of the forbidden fruit, they were given to act for themselves (see 2 Nephi 2:16), and God knew they would fall. It was all according to divine plan and purpose.

25 Adam fell that men might be; and men are, that they might have joy.

verse 25 “Adam fell that men might be” This statement implies that Adam knowingly fell (transgressed) in order to enable the human family to come into mortality. He knew that in their original created state, he and Eve could not have posterity (Moses 5:10).

The apostate doctrine of original sin, taught today in Catholic and Protestant churches, seems to be based in part on the notion that Adam and Eve’s disobedience was an act of overt rebellion against God, an attempt to usurp the knowledge available only to the gods. This notion paints a dark and negative picture of Adam and Eve. The notion then evolved to the assumption that all mankind inherited their evil tendencies. How much more ennobling and soul-satisfying is the true doctrine of the fall and the true notion of Adam, the assurance that Adam “fell that men might be; and men are, that they might have joy.” Adam’s and Eve’s actions in Eden were intelligently thought through, selfless, and nobly executed. There is nothing of evil or wickedness about their conduct in the garden.

This verse and the few that precede it (2 Nephi 2:17-24) are a reminder to us that some “plain and precious” doctrines have been lost from the Bible and have been restored by modern LDS scripture (Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and Pearl of Great Price). We learn in these Book of Mormon verses here in 2 Nephi 2 that Adam and Eve deliberately transgressed so that they might have children (“Adam fell that men might be”); the fall of Adam and Eve brought about mortality, death, and opposition; and the fall provided all of God’s children with the opportunity to experience eternal joy. We learn that while man inherited a fallen nature, we nonetheless are not “totally depraved,” as opposed to what has been generally understood and preached concerning of the fall since the time of Augustine. Instead, we understand from Lehi's teachings that we all now have the freedom to choose "liberty and eternal life, through the great Mediator of all men, or to choose captivity and death, according to the captivity and power of the devil" (2 Nephi 2:27).

Where did Lehi learn these "plain and precious" facts about the fall of Adam and Eve? He told Jacob that his teachings about the Fall are based on "the things which I have read" (2 Nephi 2:17), presumably from the plates of brass. The origins of Lehi's understanding, therefore, came from sources already available to him.

In trying to understand the background to the Book of Mormon's teachings on the Fall, one LDS scholar, Stephen D. Ricks, examined portrayals of Adam and the Fall in ancient Jewish writings that were not included in the Bible ("Adam's Fall in the Book of Mormon, Second Temple Judaism, and Early Christianity," in The Disciple as Scholar: Essays on Scripture and the Ancient World in Honor of Richard Lloyd Anderson, ed. Stephen D. Ricks, Donald W. Parry, and Andrew Hedges, Provo: FARMS, 2000, 595–606). After giving several examples, Ricks provided the following summary of teachings common to both the Book of Mormon and later Jewish texts:

1. Satan's expulsion from the presence of God was a necessary precondition for the temptation and fall (see 2 Nephi 2:17-18).
2. Adam's fall resulted in the conditions of mortality (see 2 Nephi 2:19; 2 Baruch).
3. Man becomes "natural," i.e., predisposed to sin, but he remains free to choose among available alternatives (2 Nephi 2:26–27; Mosiah 3:19).
4. Adam's transgression resulted in expulsion from paradise (see Alma 42 [also see 2 Nephi 2:19]; Apocalypse of Moses 28:3).

These extra-biblical texts come from the era scholars call the Second Temple Period, which is after the time Lehi left Jerusalem. This commonality between Lehi's teachings and later Jewish texts on the fall suggests that these doctrines may indeed have been present several hundred years earlier than is previously thought.

We usually emphasize the negative consequences of the fall of Adam. There are, however, two positive or desirable effects. The first has just been mentioned: they could procreate. The second is that they could distinguish good from evil. They could then possess a more comprehensive knowledge of good and evil and grow spiritually at a rate limited only by their own willingness to overcome their natural self and obey the Lord's commands.

It has been suggested that Lehi's understandings of the doctrine of the Fall of Adam and Eve might have come from his exposure to the temple in Jerusalem. Kevin Christensen has pointed out that several ideas presented in 2 Nephi 2 are considered to be part of ancient "temple theology," as proposed by biblical scholar Margaret Barker. This notion includes "not only a discussion of Eden and the creation, but also of the fall of Adam . . . the fallen angels, the atonement of the Messiah, the Holy One, and coming judgment" (Kevin Christensen, "The Temple, the Monarchy, and Wisdom: Lehi's World and the Scholarship of Margaret Barker,” in Glimpses of Lehi’s Jerusalem, ed. John W. Welch, David Rolph Seely, and Jo Ann H. Seely, Provo, Utah: FARMS, 2004, 461).

John W. Welch notes, “Several of the main doctrines taught by Lehi seem to echo and presage temple types and teachings.” Welch finds that is not only true about 2 Nephi 2, but throughout Lehi’s various discourses found in 2 Nephi 1–4. Lehi’s central themes “are readily at home in the context of the ancient temple typologies” (John W. Welch, “The Temple in the Book of Mormon: The Temples at the Cities of Nephi, Zarahemla, and Bountiful,” in Temples of the Ancient World: Ritual and Symbolism, ed. Donald W. Parry, Salt Lake City, Utah: Deseret Books and FARMS, 1994, 322).

Bruce M. Pritchett Jr. has found that careful investigation shows that hints of the doctrine of the Fall can be found in Old Testament writings that likely come from before or around Lehi’s time (Bruce M. Pritchett Jr., “Lehi’s Theology of the Fall in Its Preexilic/Exilic Context,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 3/2, 1994: 49–83). Pritchett specifically examined Psalms 82:7, Hosea 6:7, Job 31:33, and Ezekiel 28:11–19 as references to the Fall, noting that the Hebrew ke-ādām, translated as “like man” in the KJV, could just as easily be read as “like Adam.” Based on his analysis, Pritchett concluded: “Though the Old Testament never refers to Adam’s sin by using the word fall, it does teach or reflect the following basic elements of this doctrine in various scriptures: (1) that Adam’s sin resulted in a metamorphosis from immortality to mortality, (2) that mankind inherited its mortal state from Adam, (3) that all mankind has fallen into sin, and (4) that evil and suffering in the world could be for man’s benefit as well as his punishment (Pritchett, “Lehi’s Theology of the Fall,” 77).

Significantly, three of the four Old Testament passages used by Pritchett—from the Psalms, Job, and Ezekiel—are believed by some scholars to be connected to the temple. For the Psalms, see David J. Larsen, “Ascending into the Hill of the Lord: What the Psalms Can Tell Us About the Rituals of the First Temple,” in Ancient Temple Worship: Proceedings of the Expound Symposium 14 May 2011, ed. Matthew B. Brown, Jeffrey M. Bradshaw, Stephen D. Ricks, and John S. Thompson (Orem, UT and Salt Lake City, UT: Interpreter Foundation and Eborn Books, 2014, 171–188). For Job, see Mack C. Stirling, “Job: An LDS Reading,” in Temple Insights: Proceedings of the Interpreter Matthew B. Brown Memorial Conference—The Temple on Mount Zion, 22 September 2012, ed. William B. Hamblin and David Rolph Seely (Orem, Utah: Interpreter Foundation and Eborn Books, 2014, 99–143). Ezekiel was a temple priest. See Kevin Christensen, “Prophets and Kings in Lehi’s Jerusalem and Margaret Barker’s Temple Theology,” (Interpreter: A Journal of Mormon Scripture, 2013: 187).

For a more comprehensive discussion of the doctrine of the Fall of Adam and Eve, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 1, “Understanding Eden—the Fall.”

“men are, that they might have joy” It is the purpose of man’s very existence to obtain true joy. This joy, however, can only be obtained by an individual who has the opportunity and the ability to choose between good and evil, and he selects the good. True joy exists only when there is spiritual growth. The ultimate joy man seeks is the joy of exaltation in the celestial heaven for eternity.

The reader should also be reminded that there is much poetry in the Book of Mormon but it is printed in prose form. This verse is a good example. If, for example, we wanted to emphasize the poetic structure of this verse we may arrange it:

Adam fell that men might be;
and men are, that they might have joy.

26 And the Messiah cometh in the fulness of time, that he may redeem the children of men from the fall. And because that they are redeemed from the fall they have become free forever, knowing good from evil; to act for themselves and not to be acted upon, save it be by the punishment of the law at the great and last day, according to the commandments which God hath given.

verse 26 Here again is the expression “fulness of time” which refers to the period of Christ’s mortal sojourn.

If there had been no atonement, the fall of man would have been permanent. Man would never have had the freedom to return to God’s presence and realize his ultimate potential. He would have been subject to Satan’s buffetings forever. The atonement has enabled man to follow either God or Satan. Ultimately, however, all men will be blessed or not blessed according to their obedience to the commandments of God. Man has agency and can choose for himself, but he cannot escape the consequences of the eternal law.

27 Wherefore, men are free according to the flesh; and all things are given them which are expedient unto man. And they are free to choose liberty and eternal life, through the great Mediator of all men, or to choose captivity and death, according to the captivity and power of the devil; for he seeketh that all men might be miserable like unto himself.

verse 27 In order to understand this verse, it is important to distinguish between two separate concepts, agency and freedom. It is suggested that the reader study the chapter, Agency and Freedom found in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 13, prior to continuing. In short summary, agency is the power to choose among available alternatives. It need not be earned since each of us has always had and will always have our agency. Freedom is the blessing of having abundant alternatives. Freedom is not free. It must be earned by conforming our life to true principles.

“men are free according to the flesh” This phrase seems to refer to man’s agency. The phrase “according to the flesh” in the Book of Mormon is often used to remind the reader that the current topic is literal and practical and not referred to in any figurative or symbolic sense. Hence, here in mortality—“according to the flesh”—man has his agency.

An alternate, but less likely, explanation of this phrase suggests that it refers more to freedom than to agency. The freedoms we possess here in mortality depend partly on our obedience to gospel law, but not entirely. Sometimes our circumstances here in mortality are such that limitations are imposed upon us by forces from without ourselves, forces that we cannot control. Freedom can be limited by physical laws or physical infirmities. It might also be compromised by the actions of others including government. Thus, “men are free,” that is, they have their freedom “according to the flesh”—according to the circumstances of their mortality. For clarity, we might even add to this phrase as follows: “men are free or not free according to the flesh.”

“they are free to choose liberty and eternal life” This expression, and the remainder of the verse, refers to the principle of agency. To summarize again, agency is simply the right to choose among available alternatives. Agency is a “free gift.” We did nothing to earn it. We have always possessed it, and it cannot be taken from us.

In this phrase “liberty” is another word for freedom, and “eternal life” is the ultimate freedom, available only to those who have earned it through their obedience to the Lord’s commandments. This phrase does not, of course, mean to imply that man automatically has the freedom to choose eternal life. Rather, it means that man has the agency to choose alternatives that are available to him—whether or not to obey the commandments—whether or not to choose the course to eternal life.

The number of alternatives that any given man might have available to him might vary considerably. The blessing of having many alternatives has nothing to do with agency. Rather that blessing is freedom. Freedom is having abundant desirable alternatives. Freedom is not a free gift, however, but must be earned. In spiritual matters, we earn our freedom by exercising our agency and obeying the commandments of the gospel of Jesus Christ. A man who is disobedient to the commandments of the Lord, will experience decreasing freedoms in spiritual matters.

“all things are given them which are expedient unto man” This comforting statement simply assures us that sufficient alternatives will be available to each and every man while they are here on earth to allow them to grow spiritually and obtain exaltation if they might the righteous choices among their alternatives. No mortal will ever find himself subject to conditions here on earth that would prevent him from exercising his agency in a way that will result in his spiritual growth and his ultimate exaltation. These guaranteed alternatives are here in the form of commandments of the Lord. These commandments, when obeyed, will eventually result in the freedom to choose to enter the celestial heaven.

28 And now, my sons, I would that ye should look to the great Mediator, and hearken unto his great commandments; and be faithful unto his words, and choose eternal life, according to the will of his Holy Spirit;

29 And not choose eternal death, according to the will of the flesh and the evil which is therein, which giveth the spirit of the devil power to captivate, to bring you down to hell, that he may reign over you in his own kingdom.

verses 28-29 “choose eternal life . . . and not eternal death” The Book of Mormon does not teach the concept of “multiple heavens” or multiple degrees of salvation. Rather it teaches a simplistic view of the life hereafter which is living either with God (exaltation) or with Satan (in outer darkness) (see the commentary for Mosiah 2:33).

verse 29 “the will of the flesh and the evil which is therein” The Book of Mormon does not teach the doctrine of human depravity, but it does teach that man has a “fallen” or “natural” nature that is prone to disobedience and ingratitude. Within each individual is the “natural man” or “natural self” which tends to be attracted to things of the world. This natural side of man will lead all men to commit sin. Let us also not make the mistake of assuming that the “natural” inclinations of man began at the time of the fall. It seems clear that man’s natural self has always existed.

30 I have spoken these few words unto you all, my sons, in the last days of my probation; and I have chosen the good part, according to the words of the prophet. And I have none other object save it be the everlasting welfare of your souls. Amen.

verse 30 “I have chosen the good part, according to the words of the prophet.” In the previous two verses, Lehi urged his sons to choose good over evil. Here he seems to be saying that he has chosen the Lord’s way. The identity of “the prophet” is unknown but probably is Isaiah or perhaps Moses. There is probably a scripture written by a major prophet which refers to “choosing the good part” and which is lost to us today. It was probably this lost scripture to which Jesus referred to in Luke 10:42 when he spoke of choosing “that good part.”

Let me just add one thought at the conclusion of this chapter. If you are normal, you probably feel that you have just studied a truly complex chapter. In fact, you probably feel that in order to understand everything well in this chapter, you should probably read it again, and then perhaps again. This is normal. I can assure you, however, that with repeated study, all of the concepts in this chapter are compatible with one another. They fit together seamlessly into “one great whole.”

Was Joseph himself—or any other man—the author of these materials and the concepts contained in them? Of course not!

2 Nephi Chapter 3

Scripture Mastery

2 Nephi 3:11-12 Lehi's prophecy of the latter-day seer, Joseph Smith. But a seer will I raise up out of the fruit of thy loins; and unto him will I give power to bring forth my word unto the seed of thy loins.

In this chapter, Lehi quotes prophecies originally made by ancient Joseph who was sold into Egypt (verses 5 through 21). He found these prophecies upon the plates of brass. These prophecies are not contained in the Bible. Why are they not found in the Bible? It would seem that two possible explanations might apply. First, perhaps they were never included in any detail in the Bible. After all, the Bible is the record or "stick" of Judah, not Joseph. It is the Book of Mormon and the plates of brass that are each the record or "stick" of Joseph (or Ephraim). It is in these latter two records that we might expect to find more of the prophecies of Joseph. Secondly, perhaps the biblical manuscripts did contain a detailed account of Joseph's prophecies, but they were lost from the biblical writings when many "plain and precious parts" were taken away (see 1 Nephi 13:24-29).

In this chapter, we will speak of ancient Joseph and the prophet Moses. In order that we might be chronologically oriented relative to these two biblical figures, let us review a few dates having to do with these two great prophets (see the supplemental article, Chronology of The Bible and the Book of Mormon). The ancient prophet Jacob, or Israel, traveled to Egypt with his family to escape the famine in Palestine in about 1700 BC. Joseph, you will recall, had previously been exiled to Egypt by his resentful brothers. Joseph had achieved an important and influential position in the Pharaoh's government. In Egypt Joseph received his family warmly and provided sustenance for them. The Israelite exile in Egypt lasted from about 1700 to 1260 BC. In about the latter year, the prophet Moses led the Israelites out of Egypt into the wilderness. Joshua was finally allowed by the Lord to lead the Israelites into the Promised Land in 1220 BC. Here they were ruled initially by the Judges and then by the succession of kings: Saul, David, and Solomon. At Solomon's death in 931 BC the Israelites were divided as the rebellious military leader Jeroboam led many to the north where they established the Kingdom of Israel with its center in the city of Ephraim. The dominant tribe of this group was the tribe of Joseph and his birthright son Ephraim. Some of the Israelites remained behind in Judah under the leadership of Solomon's son Rehoboam. Here they became the Kingdom of Judah with its center in Jerusalem. The dominant tribe, of course, was that of Judah.

Let us not make the mistake of underestimating the importance and stature of ancient Joseph as a prophet. We know that he had a personal visitation from the Lord, and he prophesied specifically of the Lord's raising up Moses to lead captive Israel out of bondage in Egypt (JST, Genesis 50:24). The Lord also covenanted with him regarding his posterity with a solemn oath (JST, Genesis 50:34). Joseph was moved to prophesy of his seed by virtue of this covenant, and prophesy he did. We will study at least a part of this prophecy in this chapter. Evidently there are some additional writings of Joseph that have never been made available to us. Joseph Smith reported that at the same time he received the record of Abraham from Michael Chandler, he also received a record of ancient Joseph which he apparently intended to translate, but it has never been made available to us (HC, 2:348, 350-51).

As you study this chapter, it is important to keep straight in your mind the first person or speaker of each verse you are studying. To simplify this task I will summarize the speakers: verses 1-5: Lehi to his son Joseph; verse 6: ancient Joseph; verses 7-13: the Lord is speaking to ancient Joseph; verses 14-16: ancient Joseph; verses 17-21: the Lord to ancient Joseph; and verses 22-25: Lehi to his son Joseph. As we come to these verses, I will again remind you of the speaker.

1 And now I speak unto you, Joseph, my last-born. Thou wast born in the wilderness of mine afflictions; yea, in the days of my greatest sorrow did thy mother bear thee.

verse 1 Lehi now turns his attention to his youngest son Joseph. Lehi is the speaker or first person in verses 1-5.

“wilderness of mine afflictions” Apparently both Joseph and his elder brother Jacob were born during the most difficult parts of Lehi's colony's journey in the wilderness. See the commentary for 2 Nephi 2:1. In all four standard works, this colorful phrase is unique to the Book of Mormon and is found only in this verse and in verse 3 of this chapter.

Regarding Lehi and Sariah's naming of their children, Hugh Nibley observed:

It should be noted in speaking of names, that archaeology has fully demonstrated that the Israelites, then as now, had not the slightest aversion to giving their children non-Jewish names, even when those names smacked of a pagan background. One might, in a speculative mood, even detect something of Lehi's personal history in the names he gave to his sons. The first two [Laman and Lemuel] have Arabic names—do they recall his early days in the caravan trade? The second two [Sam and Nephi] have Egyptian names, and indeed they were born in the days of his prosperity. The last two, born amid tribulations in the desert, were called with fitting humility, Jacob and Joseph. Whether the names of the first four were meant, as those of the last two sons certainly were, to call to mind the circumstances under which they were born, the names are certainly a striking indication of their triple heritage, and it was certainly the custom of Lehi's people to name their children with a purpose (Helaman 3:21; 5:6) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 6, 76-77.)

2 And may the Lord consecrate also unto thee this land, which is a most precious land, for thine inheritance and the inheritance of thy seed with thy brethren, for thy security forever, if it so be that ye shall keep the commandments of the Holy One of Israel.

verse 2 Obviously, Lehi's blessing to Joseph and, indeed, most all of heaven's blessings, are conditional. Again, take note of the duration of this covenant. Does this mean the covenant will still be in force when the earth is in its terrestrial phase during the Millennium? What about during the earth's celestial phase?

"may the Lord consecrate also unto thee this land" Lehi may have been giving Joseph his specific "land of inheritance" within the broader land (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 1:30-32).

3 And now, Joseph, my last-born, whom I have brought out of the wilderness of mine afflictions, may the Lord bless thee forever, for thy seed shall not utterly be destroyed.

verse 3 Even though the Nephite nation will eventually largely be destroyed, Joseph is promised not only that his descendants will never be annihilated, but in a later verse he promised that his seed will also accept the Book of Mormon (verse 23). The doctrine that there are descendants of Joseph among today's native Central and perhaps North Americans is implied in a modern revelation to Joseph Smith (D&C 3:16-18). Are there descendants of the Nephites alive in this final dispensation? Weren't they all killed by the Lamanites? Following the Savior's visit to the New World, there followed a two-hundred-year period of peace, when the people joined together into one unified group in which there were no "-ites." After this so-called "mini-millennium" the people broke up into Nephite and Lamanite groups again. This time the division was not according to lineage but by righteousness or unrighteousness. The "Nephites" were those that wanted to live the commandments of God, and the "Lamanites" were those that did not (see 4 Nephi 1:38). Therefore, there were descendants of Laman, Lemuel, Nephi, Jacob, Joseph, and Zoram in both groups, and undoubtedly some of their descendants are among indigenous Americans today (see the supplemental article, Book of Mormon Myths).

4 For behold, thou art the fruit of my loins; and I am a descendant of Joseph who was carried captive into Egypt. And great were the covenants of the Lord which he made unto Joseph.

verse 4 "I am a descendant of Joseph" It is interesting that Lehi uses the occasion of the blessing of his son Joseph to deliver a sermon on his ancestor, ancient Joseph "who was carried captive into Egypt." Lehi was a descendant of ancient Joseph's son Manasseh (see Alma 10:3), and Ishmael was of Ephraim (see JD, 23:184). Thus the Book of Mormon people represented both branches of Joseph's posterity.

Joseph "who was carried captive into Egypt" is the prototype of the gatherers of Israel. Remember how he delivered his brothers and saved their lives when they came out of famine-ravaged Canaan to Egypt. Joseph told his brothers: "God did send me before you to preserve life . . . to preserve you a posterity in the earth, and to save your lives by a great deliverance" (Genesis 45:5, 7). Not only was Joseph a great deliverer, but his actions were a type of the Savior's future deliverance, as he offered life to his brothers who had rejected him.

"great were the covenants of the Lord which he made unto Joseph" These covenants are contained in the verses that follow and are summarized as follows: A righteous branch of Joseph's descendants would be "broken off," that is, separated from the main body of Joseph's descendants. The "seed" or descendants of this branch would be scattered through wickedness, but they would not be completely destroyed. Rather, they would be delivered through another of Joseph's descendants, Joseph Smith, Jr., by means of the Book of Mormon. They would be taught their true identity as a branch of Israel. The Messiah would be manifest to them. They would be converted and drawn back into the Lord's Church. These covenants are not contained in the biblical record, and this fact has caused the gentile world to stumble over the truths restored to Joseph Smith.

verses 5-7 The prophecies of ancient Joseph contained in these verses were taken from the brass plates (2 Nephi 4:2). There is a remarkable similarity between the content of these verses and the content of JST Genesis 50:24-28. Pause for a moment and consider the question of why there should be such a similarity. Perhaps the concepts are similar because they are true and come from the same God. Or, perhaps, Joseph Smith learned these important concepts from the Book of Mormon, and this learning aided him in his revision of these verses in the book of Genesis 50. An even more interesting explanation has been suggested. It is likely that the JST serves, in some instances, an important restorative function, that is, in doing his inspired revision, Joseph restored knowledge and understanding which had been lost from the Bible since its original writing, especially the deletion and alteration that occurred at the hand of the great and abominable church (see 1 Nephi 13:39-40). Thus Joseph's revisions found in the JST today may occasionally allow us to see how those same scriptures might have been found in their original form such as would have been found on the brass plates. However, the reader should be cautious about assuming that Joseph's purpose, in producing the JST, was to restore the Bible text to its original form. One area in which the average member of the Church almost always misunderstands our theology is the relationship between the JST and the biblical text.

Just what is the JST? First of all, the JST is not canonized scripture except for JST Genesis 1-6 and Matthew 24, which are both found in the Pearl of Great Price and several assorted verses found in the section titled “Joseph Smith Translation, Excerpts Too Lengthy for Inclusion in Footnotes” found between the Bible Dictionary and the Gazetteer.

The JST is not the LDS version of the Bible. The King James Version is and always has been. We believe that the JST is “inspired,” but that is not the same thing as saying it always restores the original texts of the biblical books. In 1828 the word translation was broader in its meaning than it is now, and the Joseph Smith translation (JST) should be understood to contain additional revelations, alternate readings, prophetic commentary or midrash, harmonizations, clarifications, and corrections of the original. Though some may object to this interpretation of the word translation, it is a matter of record that Joseph used the term this broadly to mean “render,” “interpret,” or “adapt.” How else than by granting this broader meaning of “translate” can the JST, which starts with the KJV English and ends up still in English, be considered a “translation” at all? Joseph Smith often saw more than one meaning in a passage and brought many of these explicitly to our attention by means of the JST. See the supplemental article in Learning to Love the Doctrine and Covenants, Joseph Smith’s Inspired Revision of the Bible—The JST.

5 Wherefore, Joseph truly saw our day. And he obtained a promise of the Lord, that out of the fruit of his loins the Lord God would raise up a righteous branch unto the house of Israel; not the Messiah, but a branch which was to be broken off, nevertheless, to be remembered in the covenants of the Lord that the Messiah should be made manifest unto them in the latter days, in the spirit of power, unto the bringing of them out of darkness unto light—yea, out of hidden darkness and out of captivity unto freedom.

verse 5 Joseph saw Lehi’s day and prophesied among the seed of Joseph that there would rise up, in the words of Joseph’s father Jacob, a “fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well; whose branches run over the wall” (Genesis 49:22). In other words, a branch of the house of Joseph (representing both the tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh) would be broken off and cross the ocean and come to the western hemisphere. These are the Lehites. They would eventually drift into “darkness,” but later, in the “latter days,” the Messiah would be manifest unto them, and his spirit would lift them “out of darkness unto light.”

“not the Messiah” In the Scriptures a “branch” often refers to the Messiah, as for example in Isaiah 11:1-5. But here, Lehi explains that Joseph did not refer to the Messiah, but to someone who was to be broken off from Joseph’s genealogical tree and yet be remembered in the latter days.

“hidden darkness” This phrase may refer to the fact that the true identity of the remnant of Joseph of Egypt in the western hemisphere was unknown for many centuries until the Lord revealed it through Joseph Smith, Jr.

“out of captivity unto freedom” This phrase may have political as well as spiritual connotations.

6 For Joseph truly testified, saying: A seer shall the Lord my God raise up, who shall be a choice seer unto the fruit of my loins.

verse 6 The speaker in this verse is ancient Joseph. The “seer” seen by ancient Joseph is Joseph Smith, Jr. Probably the principal doctrine taught in chapter 3 is that Joseph Smith was a choice seer foreordained to come forth in the latter days.

7 Yea, Joseph truly said: Thus saith the Lord unto me: A choice seer will I raise up out of the fruit of thy loins; and he shall be esteemed highly among the fruit of thy loins. And unto him will I give commandment that he shall do a work for the fruit of thy loins, his brethren, which shall be of great worth unto them, even to the bringing of them to the knowledge of the covenants which I have made with thy fathers.

verse 7 Notice that beginning in this verse and ending in verse 13, ancient Joseph in Egypt is reporting a revelation from the Lord. Thus, the speaker in these verses is the Lord who is speaking to ancient Joseph. Where did Lehi obtain this record of ancient Joseph? From the brass plates, of course (2 Nephi 4:1-2). It seems likely that Moses reported Joseph’s words on the plates of brass. This conjecture is based on 1 Nephi 5:11-14 which suggests that the earliest records contained on the plates of brass are “the five books of Moses.” Also, JST Genesis 50:24-38 has Moses quoting the writings of Joseph. Presumably, then, in a similar fashion Moses quoted the writings of Joseph on the plates of brass.

“he shall do a work . . . which shall be of great worth” This, of course, includes the restoration of the gospel and the bringing forth of the Book of Mormon.

“the covenants which I have made with thy fathers” The Abrahamic covenants are summarized in the commentary for 1 Nephi 14:8.

8 And I will give unto him a commandment that he shall do none other work, save the work which I shall command him. And I will make him great in mine eyes; for he shall do my work.

verse 8 Joseph Smith, Jr., during his ministry, was commanded to give his primary attentions to spiritual matters rather than temporal or worldly affairs (D&C 24:9).

“I will make him great in mine eyes” Joseph will be given the keys of God’s earthly “kingdom, and a dispensation of the gospel for the last times; and for the fulness of times” (D&C 27:13).

9 And he shall be great like unto Moses, whom I have said I would raise up unto you, to deliver my people, O house of Israel.

verse 9 “And he shall be great like unto Moses” Moses was the great gatherer. Keep in mind the essential function of the restored gospel and Church in this final dispensation in gathering scattered Israel (the reader may wish to review the commentary for 1 Nephi 20).

10 And Moses will I raise up, to deliver thy people out of the land of Egypt.

verses 9-10 Here we have the Lord, through ancient Joseph, prophesying specifically of the great deliverer Moses. There are other ancient documents that have ancient Joseph prophesying of Moses. A second-century AD translation of the Bible into Aramaic, Targum Neofiti, has Joseph prophesying of the captivity of Israel in Egypt and their deliverance from captivity by “Moses, Aaron, and Miriam” (Martin McNamara, trans., Tarfum Neofiti 1: Genesis, The Aramaic Bible, vol. 1A, Collegeville, Minn.: Liturgical Press, 1992, 182).

From the standard account in Genesis 50:24-25, it is clear that Joseph was aware that the Israelites would someday leave Egypt, though he says nothing about the bondage they would endure in the meanwhile. But Pirque de Rabbi Eliezer 48 (attributed to Rabbi Eliezer ben Hyrqnas, who lived in the latter half of the first century AD and through the first decades of the second century), citing the Genesis passage, has Joseph prophesying the bondage of the Israelites and their deliverance by God. The second century AD Targum Pseudo-Jonathan on Genesis 50:24 has Joseph telling his family, “behold you will be enslaved in Egypt, but do not make plans to go up out of Egypt until the time that two deliverers come and say to you, ‘The Lord surely remembers you’” (Michael Maher, Targum Pseudo-Jonathan: Genesis [The Aramaic Bible, vol. 1B] [Collegeville, Minn.: Liturgical Press, 1992], 166).

verse 10 The world is not aware that the Lord raised up Moses to deliver the children of Israel out of Egypt in fulfillment of a covenant he entered into with Joseph of Egypt (see also 2 Nephi 3:17). This verse is a record of that covenant with ancient Joseph.

It is likely that Moses descended from Levi, one of ancient Jacob’s sons.

11 But a seer will I raise up out of the fruit of thy loins; and unto him will I give power to bring forth my word unto the seed of thy loins—and not to the bringing forth my word only, saith the Lord, but to the convincing them of my word, which shall have already gone forth among them.

verse 11 In reading the first few phrases in this verse, emphasis should be placed on the word “thy.” After mentioning the prophet Moses in the previous verse, the Lord says, “But a seer will I raise up out of the fruit of thy loins” (emphasis added). The Lord here is speaking, of course, to ancient Joseph, and the seer, as previously mentioned, is Joseph Smith, Jr. Not only will he bring forth the Book of Mormon, but through the Book of Mormon the “seed of [Joseph’s] loins” will be convinced of the truth of the Bible (“my word, which shall have already gone forth among them”). Make careful note of this interesting point: This prophetic verse states that the Book of Mormon will be used to prove the truth of the Bible rather than the converse.

12 Wherefore, the fruit of thy loins shall write; and the fruit of the loins of Judah shall write; and that which shall be written by the fruit of thy loins, and also that which shall be written by the fruit of the loins of Judah, shall grow together, unto the confounding of false doctrines and laying down of contentions, and establishing peace among the fruit of thy loins, and bringing them to the knowledge of their fathers in the latter days, and also to the knowledge of my covenants, saith the Lord.

verse 12 Moses initiated the record later continued by the seed of Judah—the Bible. Joseph Smith, of the “fruit of [the] loins” of Joseph of Egypt translated the Book of Mormon. These two records would eventually “grow together” to teach the latter-day seed of Joseph of Egypt about their true identity as a branch of Israel and about the covenants the Lord made with their fathers.

The reader may wish to review the supplemental article, Biblical Prophecies of the Book of Mormon.

Consider, for a moment, how important it is for the Book of Mormon to stand together with the Bible as a second witness. McConkie and Millet point out that, “In the historical sense, the Bible [by itself] has been a book of war and bloodshed as men and nations have quarreled over its meaning; innumerable martyrs have been left in its wake, and Europe was virtually torn asunder” (Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, volume 1, 207-8). Alone, the Bible is subject to an almost endless array of interpretations. From it has come a “war of words and tumult of opinions” (JS-H 1:10). Speaking of his search to know which church he should join, Joseph Smith said that the teachers of religion “understood the same passages of scripture so differently as to destroy all confidence in settling the question by an appeal to the Bible” (JS-H 1:12). Resolution of this doctrinal contention comes in the union of the Bible and the Book of Mormon.

13 And out of weakness he shall be made strong, in that day when my work shall commence among all my people, unto the restoring thee, O house of Israel, saith the Lord.

verse 13 “And out of weakness he shall be made strong” “He,” of course, is the seer, Joseph Smith. Why does the Lord choose the weak things, or the weak men, of the earth through whom to perform his works? The answer is that it is vital that man learn to lean upon the true source of power, instead of leaning upon themselves. The Lord chooses people as his agents who could not possibly fail—even expending all their own resources—to demonstrate to all where the power really lies. In Judges 7:2 we read: “Lest Israel vaunt themselves against me, saying, Mine own hand hath saved me.” Paul recorded: “I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent” (1 Corinthians 1:19). Of those whom the Lord calls to labor in his vineyard, Paul wrote: “not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called: but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are: that no flesh should glory in his presence” (1 Corinthians 1:26-29). Joseph Smith, Jr., was one of those “weak things” (see D&C 35:13-14, 17- 18). He came of humble circumstances and had natural weaknesses.

14 And thus prophesied Joseph, saying: Behold, that seer will the Lord bless; and they that seek to destroy him shall be confounded; for this promise, which I have obtained of the Lord, of the fruit of my loins, shall be fulfilled. Behold, I am sure of the fulfilling of this promise; verse 14 The speaker now changes again. In verses 14 through 16 the speaker is ancient Joseph. Here we learn that Joseph Smith was protected from serious harm until, in the Lord’s economy, it was expedient that he and his brother Hyrum should give their lives in order to seal their testimonies of the Book of Mormon and the restored gospel (D&C 71:7-10; 135:1).

15 And his name shall be called after me; and it shall be after the name of his father. And he shall be like unto me; for the thing, which the Lord shall bring forth by his hand, by the power of the Lord shall bring my people unto salvation.

verse 15 Ancient Joseph continues to prophesy, and he confirms the identification of the “seer.” It is Joseph Smith, Jr., the son of Joseph Smith, Sr.

“the thing, which the Lord shall bring forth . . . shall bring my people unto salvation” The restored gospel in this final dispensation is, of course, the means for the gathering of scattered Israel. Review the commentary or introduction for 1 Nephi 20. An interesting meaning of the Hebrew name which is equivalent to Joseph, Asaph, is “he who gathers,” “he who causes to return,” or “God gathereth” (O. Odelain and R. Sequeineau, Dictionary of Proper Names and Places in the Bible, 40).

“he shall be like unto me” One far-reaching similarity between ancient Joseph and Joseph Smith, Jr., is that they were both gatherers and Saviors. Ancient Joseph gathered his family in Egypt and saved them from the famine. The Joseph of this dispensation began the gathering of the house of Israel that all who gather might be saved in the presence of God.

verses 16-18 These verses draw a parallel between the gathering function of the latter-day seer, Joseph Smith, Jr., and that of Moses.

16 Yea, thus prophesied Joseph: I am sure of this thing, even as I am sure of the promise of Moses; for the Lord hath said unto me, I will preserve thy seed forever.

verse 16 “I am sure of this thing” Ancient Joseph is confident of the Lord’s promise of a latter-day seer, just as he is convinced of the Lord’s promise to raise up Moses to lead captive Israel out of Egypt. This promise of the Lord is summarized in the following verse.

17 And the Lord hath said: I will raise up a Moses; and I will give power unto him in a rod; and I will give judgment unto him in writing. Yet I will not loose his tongue, that he shall speak much, for I will not make him mighty in speaking. But I will write unto him my law, by the finger of mine own hand; and I will make a spokesman for him.

verse 17 Once again the speaker changes. In verses 17 through 21, the Lord is speaking to ancient Joseph.

“a Moses” This refers to Moses himself.

“I will give power unto him in a rod” Moses’s rod played a role in many incidents during Moses’s ministry (Exodus 4:1-5,17,20; 7:15-18; 8:5,16-17; 9:23; 10:13; 14:16; 17:9).

“I will give judgment unto him in writing.” Moses was blessed with the gift of being able to write, yet:

“I will not loose his tongue” The gift of being able to communicate effectively with the spoken word was withheld.

“I will write unto him my law, by the finger of mine own hand” This is a reference, of course, to Sinai (Exodus 31:18) and the commandments Moses received there.

“I will make a spokesman for him.” This spokesman is Moses’s brother Aaron. The Joseph Smith Translation of the Bible also contains this prophecy. It reads, “And I will make a spokesman for him” (JST Genesis 50:35).

18 And the Lord said unto me also: I will raise up unto the fruit of thy loins; and I will make for him a spokesman. And I, behold, I will give unto him that he shall write the writing of the fruit of thy loins, unto the fruit of thy loins; and the spokesman of thy loins shall declare it.

verse 18 The Lord is still speaking to ancient Joseph. The Lord is going to “raise [a man] up unto the fruit of thy [ancient Joseph’s] loins.” This man will also be a writer who shall write “unto the fruit of thy loins.” Apparently, the Lord will raise up, for the benefit of ancient Joseph’s posterity, a writer. And that writer will have a “spokesman.” Some have suggested that the writer is Joseph Smith, Jr. who “wrote” or translated the Book of Mormon. Further, it has been suggested that perhaps the spokesman is a composite personality including Oliver Cowdery (D&C 28:3) and Sidney Rigdon (see D&C 100:9; 124:103-4; 35:19-23; JD, 25:126- 27), who were both important spokesmen for the Church.

Elder Bruce R. McConkie has provided yet another interpretation of this verse: “The individual of the lineage of Joseph who would be raised up to write the record of Joseph (the Book of Mormon) is the prophet Mormon. The ‘spokesman’ of the word is Joseph Smith, Jr.” (A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, 426.)

The phrase “fruit of thy loins” in its initial usage in this verse seems to refer to the latter-day descendants of ancient Joseph. The Lord will “raise up [a writer] unto” them.

Speaking of the “writer,” the Lord says, “he shall write the writing of the fruit of thy loins [the writings of the Nephite prophets], unto the fruit of thy loins [to the latter-day remnants of the tribe of Joseph].”

19 And the words which he shall write shall be the words which are expedient in my wisdom should go forth unto the fruit of thy loins. And it shall be as if the fruit of thy loins had cried unto them from the dust; for I know their faith.

verse 19 “the words which he shall write” The writer, then, is either Joseph Smith, Jr. or the prophet Mormon.

As in the previous verse, the phrase “fruit of thy loins,” which appears twice in this verse, has a different meaning with each usage. With the first usage, the meaning seems to be the latter-day remnant of the lineage of Joseph. In context, the meaning is that the Book of Mormon will go forth unto that remnant. The second usage of the phrase “fruit of thy loins” appears to refer to the ancient prophet writers of the Book of Mormon. It will be as if these authors cry unto “them”—the latter-day remnant of the seed of ancient Joseph—from the dust. Since the plates of the Book of Mormon were unearthed by Joseph Smith, the book is said to be as a “cry from the dust.”

“the words which are expedient in my wisdom” One of the definitions of expedient in Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language is, “tending to promote the object proposed; fit or suitable for the purpose; proper under the circumstances.”

“for I know their faith” The Lord is aware of the virtue of the prophet writers of the Book of Mormon.

20 And they shall cry from the dust; yea, even repentance unto their brethren, even after many generations have gone by them. And it shall come to pass that their cry shall go, even according to the simpleness of their words.

verse 20 “And they shall cry from the dust” As in the previous verse, the Book of Mormon authors shall “cry from the dust.”

“even after many generations have gone by them” This phrase apparently refers to the centuries, or “many generations,” that the Book of Mormon plates lay sleeping in the dust before they were brought forth to “cry” repentance to the latter-day posterity of Joseph and to others. They will cry repentance in a forthright manner that is easy to understand.

21 Because of their faith their words shall proceed forth out of my mouth unto their brethren who are the fruit of thy loins; and the weakness of their words will I make strong in their faith, unto the remembering of my covenant which I made unto thy fathers.

verse 21 “Because of their faith their words shall proceed forth out of my mouth unto their brethren who are the fruit of thy loins” Because of the faith of the Book of Mormon prophets, they are able to perceive and communicate God’s mind to their latter-day progeny.

“the weakness of their words will I make strong in their faith” This phrase is reminiscent of D&C 1:24. Speaking of the revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants, the Lord said, “These commandments are of me, and were given unto my servants in their weakness, after the manner of their language, that they might come to understanding.”

“covenants which I made unto thy fathers” Again, you can review these covenants, the so-called Abrahamic covenants in the commentary for 1 Nephi 14:8.

22 And now, behold, my son Joseph, after this manner did my father of old prophesy.

verse 22 The final speaker change in this chapter occurs here. In verses 22 through 25 the speaker, Lehi, is again speaking to his son Joseph.

“My father of old,” of course, is ancient Joseph.

23 Wherefore, because of this covenant thou art blessed; for thy seed shall not be destroyed, for they shall hearken unto the words of the book.

verse 23 “this covenant” This refers to the covenant the Lord has just outlined in 2 Nephi 3:18-21.

24 And there shall rise up one mighty among them, who shall do much good, both in word and in deed, being an instrument in the hands of God, with exceeding faith, to work mighty wonders, and do that thing which is great in the sight of God, unto the bringing to pass much restoration unto the house of Israel, and unto the seed of thy brethren.

verse 24 To whom does this interesting prophecy refer? Generally it has been thought to refer to Joseph Smith, Jr. However, Presidents Joseph Fielding Smith (Doctrines of Salvation, 2:251) and Spencer W. Kimball ("The Lamanites," Improvement Era, November 1947, 717, 762-65) have suggested this will be a future prophet yet to be raised up among the Lamanite people. The far-reaching extent of this prophecy will be better understood when it is fulfilled.

25 And now, blessed art thou, Joseph. Behold, thou art little; wherefore hearken unto the words of thy brother, Nephi, and it shall be done unto thee even according to the words which I have spoken. Remember the words of thy dying father. Amen.

2 Nephi Chapter 4

Scripture Mastery

2 Nephi 4:16-35 The Psalm of Nephi

1 And now, I, Nephi, speak concerning the prophecies of which my father hath spoken, concerning Joseph, who was carried into Egypt.

verse 1 “I, Nephi, speak concerning the prophecies . . . concerning Joseph”

Nephi is about to write concerning some prophecies “concerning Joseph.” The next verse indicates that the prophecies not only concerned ancient Joseph, but were in fact written by him. But which prophecies are being referred to here? At least in part they are the ones discussed by father Lehi in the previous chapter as he blessed his son Joseph (2 Nephi 3:5-21).

2 For behold, he truly prophesied concerning all his seed. And the prophecies which he wrote, there are not many greater. And he prophesied concerning us, and our future generations; and they are written upon the plates of brass.

verse 2 Again we are reminded that ancient Joseph was truly one of the great prophets, yet the world does not regard him so. The reason is obvious. They do not have access to the “stick of Joseph”—the plates of brass and the Book of Mormon (see Ezekiel 37:15-19; D&C 27:5).

3 Wherefore, after my father had made an end of speaking concerning the prophecies of Joseph, he called the children of Laman, his sons, and his daughters, and said unto them: Behold, my sons, and my daughters, who are the sons and the daughters of my first-born, I would that ye should give ear unto my words.

verse 3 As is well known, when the words of the Book of Mormon were translated “by the gift and power of God,” there was no punctuation at all in the early manuscripts, and that is the way the translated text was delivered to E.B. Grandin’s print shop. Typesetter John Gilbert reported that when he sat down to prepare the text for publication, “every chapter . . . was one solid paragraph, without a punctuation mark, from beginning to end” (Royal Skousen, “John Gilbert’s 1892 Account of the 1830 Printing of the Book of Mormon” in The Disciple as Witness: Essays on Latter-day Saint History and Doctrine in Honor of Richard Lloyd Anderson, ed. Stephen D. Ricks, Donald W. Parry, and Andrew H. Hedges, 402). So, he added punctuation and paragraphing as he went along. He did a good job, especially for someone reading the book for the first time, but there are a few sentences that could have been punctuated in more than one way, with slightly different results. The punctuation of the Book of Mormon does not enjoy the same revealed status as the words themselves. Hence from time to time there are some verses in which it may be worth considering alternate punctuation.

This particular verse is a good example. Grant Hardy has speculated as to punctuation changes that might well be made here (FARMS Insights, volume 24, number 2, 2-3). Here the word called means summoned, but with the deletion of a couple of commas, the meaning shifts dramatically: “Wherefore, after my father had made an end of speaking concerning the prophecies of Joseph, he called the children of Laman his sons and his daughters, and said unto them . . .” In this latter reading, when Lehi “called the children of Laman his sons and his daughters,” he was actually adopting his grandchildren as his own children. This may seem counterintuitive, but it makes sense of the words that follow in that this same verse (“Behold, my sons, and my daughters, who are the sons and the daughters of my first-born”) as well as in verse 5, where he definitely refers to his grandchildren as his own sons and daughters. Even more compelling, in support of this suggested emendation, is the fact that Lehi’s actions echo those of the patriarch Jacob, who in a similar situation—giving last blessings and dividing territory—adopted the sons of his son Joseph (Ephraim and Manasseh) and made them independent tribes (see Genesis 48:1-6). Note also that Lehi similarly adopts the children of Lemuel in 2 Nephi 4:8-9.

As with other passages in the Bible, Genesis 48 has been thoroughly analyzed by generations of scholars. Adoption was rare in ancient Israel and is not mentioned in the Mosaic Law, but this instance seems fairly straightforward. Jacob says to his son Joseph: “And now thy two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, which were born unto thee in the land of Egypt before I came unto thee into Egypt, are mine; as Reuben and Simeon, they shall be mine. And thy issue, which thou begettest after them, shall be thine, and shall be called after the name of their brethren in their inheritance” (Genesis 48:5-6). In fact, the placing of the children on Jacob’s lap, mentioned in verse 12 (“and Joseph brought them out from between his [Jacob’s] knees”), is often regarded as a part of an ancient adoption ceremony (see also Genesis 30:3). And Jacob specifically mentions that his actions are the result of a revelation about his descendants in the land of promise.

As he came to the end of his life, Lehi, like Jacob, is trying to prepare his family for a future in a new land. In particular, he is concerned about the children of his two oldest sons, Laman and Lemuel, who have already shown signs of rebellion. He adopts these grandchildren in an effort to tie them more closely to himself and to the covenant given by the Lord (in the following verse he reminds them of the terms of that covenant: “Inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments ye shall prosper in the land”).

This adoption is a bold move, but it is not entirely new. It is part of the family history of a man who, after God called him to relive sacred history by traveling to a promised land, named his next two sons Jacob and Joseph. This was something of a departure in his family. None of the four older boys were named after patriarchs.

With the deletion of a few commas, the Hebrew roots of Lehi's last words come more clearly into focus. How was John Gilbert to know? For other examples of conjectural punctuation emendations, see the commentaries for Alma 54:23-24 and Alma 56:48.

4 For the Lord God hath said that: Inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments ye shall prosper in the land; and inasmuch as ye will not keep my commandments ye shall be cut off from my presence.

verse 4 Here, again, is an important “vintage” Book of Mormon theme—the so-called promise-curse of the Book of Mormon. For a more complete elaboration of this theme see 2 Nephi 1:7, 9-10.

5 But behold, my sons and my daughters, I cannot go down to my grave save I should leave a blessing upon you; for behold, I know that if ye are brought up in the way ye should go ye will not depart from it.

verse 5 “if ye are brought up in the way ye should go ye will not depart from it” In this statement there is an implied commandment. It is that parents should train up and teach their children in the ways of truth and righteousness. In this manner the children will be given the best chance of holding fast to the gospel throughout their lives. The entire statement, however, creates the impression of a doctrinal proclamation. The implication is that if the parents provide the child with sufficient teaching and training, the child will never depart from the ways of truth. And if the child does rebel against the truth, perhaps the parental nurturing was somehow deficient.

While it is true that a child brought up with gospel principles will often adhere to those principles throughout his life, it is by no means certain that he will do so. Adam and Eve were certainly conscientious and diligent parents who taught their children the truths of the gospel, yet at least one of their children rebelled. In Book of Mormon times, when the people of King Benjamin were all converted by his preaching, they surely must have taught their children the gospel; yet, many of them later fell away (see Mosiah 26:1-4). We may thus conclude that while this statement in verse 5 is a statement of doctrine, it is a doctrine that herein is incompletely elaborated. For a discussion of other such “incomplete” doctrinal pronouncements, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 3:7.

6 Wherefore, if ye are cursed, behold, I leave my blessing upon you, that the cursing may be taken from you and be answered upon the heads of your parents.

verse 6 “if ye are cursed, behold, I leave my blessing upon you, that the cursing may be taken from you” Father Lehi already has the premonition that the Lamanites will bring upon themselves the “curse” of being cut off from the Spirit of the Lord by their own rebelliousness. He indicates, however, that this cursing is not intended to be eternal—“that the cursing may be taken [eventually] from you.” For further discussion of the curse and the mark of the curse, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 5:20-23.

“and be answered upon the heads of your parents” We would not, of course, expect that any child would be held accountable for the sins of a parent. Here Lehi reassures the righteous posterity of Laman that they will not be held accountable for the “cursing” placed upon their parents. It is implied further that the parents will be held accountable and punished for failure to teach their children. Ancient Israelite law placed upon the parents the obligation to teach the law to their children (Genesis 18:19; Deuteronomy 4:9; 6:7; 11:8-9; 32:46; Exodus 12:26-27; 13:8-15).

7 Wherefore, because of my blessing the Lord God will not suffer that ye shall perish; wherefore, he will be merciful unto you and unto your seed forever.

verse 7 “because of my blessing the Lord God will not suffer that ye shall perish” Notwithstanding the unrighteous proclivities of Laman and Lemuel, their posterity are promised a choice blessing (see also verse 9). Their family line will never be destroyed to the point of extinction, and ultimately the Lord, in his mercy, will provide for them some type of blessing (“in the end thy seed shall be blessed”—verse 9), perhaps an opportunity to hear the gospel. This verse implies that these blessings will occur “because of [Lehi’s] blessing.” One is reminded of the verse in James: “The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much” (James 5:16).

8 And it came to pass that after my father had made an end of speaking to the sons and daughters of Laman, he caused the sons and daughters of Lemuel to be brought before him.

9 And he spake unto them, saying: Behold, my sons and my daughters, who are the sons and the daughters of my second son; behold I leave unto you the same blessing which I left unto the sons and daughters of Laman; wherefore, thou shalt not utterly be destroyed; but in the end thy seed shall be blessed.

10 And it came to pass that when my father had made an end of speaking unto them, behold, he spake unto the sons of Ishmael, yea, and even all his household.

verse 10 “it came to pass” In his editing for the 1837 edition of the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith removed at least forty-seven instances of this well-worked phrase from the text. In most cases, there were two or more examples of “it came to pass” in close proximity. In many cases, nothing new had, in fact, “come to pass.” One example is this particular verse. In the original manuscript, this verse read, “and it came to pass that when my father had made an end of speaking unto them behold it came to pass that he spake unto the sons of Ishmael yea and even all his household.” This phrase corresponds to the Hebrew word “way hí.” It seems that this phrase in Hebrew is simply a discourse marker which facilitates textual cohesion. Perhaps it should be considered equivalent to “and then” or “and so” (“The Original Language of the Book of Mormon: Upstate New York Dialect, King James English, or Hebrew?” a FARMS reprint, Royal Skousen).

11 And after he had made an end of speaking unto them, he spake unto Sam, saying: Blessed art thou, and thy seed; for thou shalt inherit the land like unto thy brother Nephi. And thy seed shall be numbered with his seed; and thou shalt be even like unto thy brother, and thy seed like unto his seed; and thou shalt be blessed in all thy days.

verse 11 “thou shalt inherit the land like unto thy brother Nephi . . . and thy seed shall be numbered with his seed” Here Lehi seems to be indicating that Sam’s posterity would not have a separate tribe or land of inheritance but would be merged with Nephi’s (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 1:30-32). The consequence is that in the Book of Mormon there are Nephites, Jacobites, Zoramites, Lamanites, Lemuelites, Ishmaelites, and Josephites but never any “Samites.”

In the Book of Mormon text, we have only the barest sketch of Sam. He will later be referred to in the book of Alma as a “just and holy” man (Alma 3:6). We know nothing of Sam’s childhood, nor do we know how old he was when the events in 1 Nephi began. His name has Egyptian roots, and he was probably born in the days of Lehi’s prosperity (see Hugh Nibley, An Approach to the Book of Mormon, 76). It is conjectured that Nephi was in his mid-teens when his family left Jerusalem. If so, then Sam must have been in his late teens or early twenties. He was a witness to the persecutions of his father in Jerusalem before the family departed into the wilderness, and he was present during the arduous journey to the New World. Early in their journey in the wilderness, while camped at the valley of Lemuel, Nephi wrote, “I did cry unto the Lord; and behold he did visit me.” Significantly, Nephi first shared this experience with his brother Sam. From this, one can deduce a special relationship of trust between these two brothers.

There are a couple of enigmatic incidents that involved Sam. While camped in the valley of Lemuel, Nephi and his brothers were sent back to Jerusalem to get Ishmael and his family. On their way back to valley of Lemuel, Nephi’s brothers Laman and Lemuel and others rebelled against Nephi, Ishmael, and others. Nephi’s brothers “did bind [Nephi] with cords, [and] they sought to take away [his] life” (1 Nephi 7:16). One cannot help but wonder where Sam was during this event. Was it simply a matter of being outnumbered? Was he restrained in some way? The record does not mention what Sam did. The problem was ultimately diffused by pleadings from Ishmael’s family.

Also on the boat when the group “began to make themselves merry,” where was he when Nephi was tied up? It is obvious that Sam was generally a good and faithful man. I have little on which to base my speculation, but I have wondered about the possibility of Sam’s having been somewhat incapacitated, either mentally or physically.

12 And it came to pass after my father, Lehi, had spoken unto all his household, according to the feelings of his heart and the Spirit of the Lord which was in him, he waxed old. And it came to pass that he died, and was buried.

verse 12 Where was Lehi buried? In the land referred to in the Book of Mormon as the “place of the fathers’ first inheritance” (Alma 22:28). This is the coastal area where Lehi and his family initially settled.

13 And it came to pass that not many days after his death, Laman and Lemuel and the sons of Ishmael were angry with me because of the admonitions of the Lord.

verse 13 “not many days” Perhaps Lehi, while alive, had a restraining influence upon Laman and Lemuel. Immediately after Lehi’s death, their suppressed rage erupted into a firm determination to kill Nephi.

“because of the admonitions of the Lord” As the next verse points out, Nephi had felt constrained to deliver these admonitions which might be expected to be poorly received.

14 For I, Nephi, was constrained to speak unto them, according to his word; for I had spoken many things unto them, and also my father, before his death; many of which sayings are written upon mine other plates; for a more history part are written upon mine other plates.

verse 14 “mine other plates” This phrase refers to the portion of the large plates of Nephi that reported Lehi’s dealings with his older two sons. Was this part of the book Lehi? We don’t actually know what title was given to the first part of the large plates of Nephi, if any title was given at all. The book of Lehi is actually the first part of Mormon’s abridgement of the large plates of Nephi. Mormon wrote his abridgement onto the plates of Mormon. We already know that the large plates of Nephi contained “a more history part”—more of a historical emphasis than a spiritual one. Apparently the book of Lehi on the plates of Mormon extended from the family’s time in Jerusalem to the reign of King Benjamin. It was this portion of Joseph’s translation of the plates of Mormon that was lost by Martin Harris or his wife.

15 And upon these I write the things of my soul, and many of the scriptures which are engraven upon the plates of brass. For my soul delighteth in the scriptures, and my heart pondereth them, and writeth them for the learning and the profit of my children.

verse 15 “upon these I write the things of my soul” “These,” on the other hand, are the unabridged small plates of Nephi, from which we are now reading.

“my soul delighteth” This is an interesting phrase that is used in the Book of Mormon text only by the prophet Nephi. It is used ten additional times in Nephi’s writings. He may have obtained the expression from Isaiah’s writings as it is found also in Isaiah 42:1. If any one author had written the Book of Mormon, wouldn’t we expect to find this phrase scattered randomly throughout the Book of Mormon rather than finding it uniquely used by Nephi? Credit for this observation goes to Richard Rust, professor of English at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill (FARMS Insights, No. 3, May 1992).

“my heart pondereth them” Figuratively, do we “ponder” with the “heart” or with the mind? Apparently, both are important processes, as a point of truth may be felt before it is understood. As we acquire a testimony of a spiritual concept, the initial step is often to develop a positive feeling for the idea in one’s heart. We might not even understand the truth at first, but we persist in mulling it over in our “heart.” Only later does the mind catch up. This process is alluded to by Matthew (Matthew 15:13). To be complete and firm, a testimony must be characterized by an understanding of both the heart and the mind (D&C 8:1-3).

verses 16-35 These verses contain a poetic segment of the Book of Mormon which has been called the Psalm of Nephi. A psalm is not a sermon or doctrinal exposition, but rather is a poem or a song of praise. It is a prayerful expression of a personal religious experience. Nephi’s psalm contains themes that have been found commonly in Hebrew literature. They include sorrow for sin, communion with and joy in God, the quest for perfection, humility when being reproved, and triumph over evil.

What factors provoked Nephi’s writing of this prayer? Some clues might be found in the text of the psalm itself. Before reading the psalm, consider the severe emotion Nephi was experiencing as he wrote it. He had just written of the death of his father (verse 12) and the renewed hatred of his brothers. Just how devastating was Lehi’s death to Nephi? Lehi was the only force holding the family together. Lehi was the only one who shared with Nephi the responsibility for spiritual guidance of their people. Without Lehi, Nephi was bereft and alone. His position of leadership must have seemed terribly lonely. Particularly so because his enemies had just renewed their commitment to oppose him. He had no father to turn to, so he turned to his Father in heaven, crying unto him for strength. As you read this psalm or prayer of Nephi, keep in mind this poignantly human element, and enjoy!

Perhaps it would be of interest to the reader to consider, in a bit more detail, the relationship between the pattern of Nephi's psalm with the pattern of Old Testament psalms in general.

LDS scholar Matthew Nickerson ("Nephi's Psalm: 2 Nephi 4:16–35 in Light of Form-Critical Analysis," Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 6, no. 2, 1997: 26–42) established that Nephi's Psalm fits the biblical psalm type termed "individual lament," which has five structural units: (1) invocation, (2) complaint, (3) confession of trust, (4) petition, and (5) vow of praise (For examples in the Psalms of "individual laments" with this basic structure, see Psalms 3, 5-7, 9, 12-14, 17, 22, 25, 28, 31, 35, 38, 39, 51, 53-58, 61, 64, 69 71, 77, 83, 86, 88, 102, 109, 130, 139-44).

- Invocation: 2 Ne 4:16-17
- Complaint: 2 Ne 4:17-19
- Confession of trust: 2 Ne 4:20-30
- Petition: 2 Ne 4:31-33
- Vow of praise: 2 Ne 4:34-35

LDS scholars Kenneth Alford and D. Bryce Baker have highlighted similarities in the structure and language of 2 Nephi 4 to wording found in the sequence of Psalms 25 to 31 (Kenneth L. Alford and D. Bryce Baker, "Parallels between Psalms 25–31 and the Psalm of Nephi," in Ascending the Mountain of the Lord, 312–28.). This group of psalms is mostly composed of individual laments and also songs of praise and thanksgiving to the Lord. Some of the shared language includes:

Nephi's Psalm (2 Nephi 4)

2 Nephi 4:17, 19 "great goodness of the Lord, in showing me his great and marvelous works" . . . "I know in whom I have trusted"

2 Nephi 4:17–19 "my soul grieveth because of mine iniquities" and "my heart groaneth because of my sins"

2 Nephi 4:23, 25 "he hath heard my cry" . . . "I will lift up my voice unto thee; yea I will cry unto thee, my God"

2 Nephi 4:26 "[The Lord] hath visited men in so much mercy"

Parallel in Psalms 25–31

Psalm 31:19 "Oh how great is thy goodness . . . which thou hast wrought for them that trust in thee."

Psalm 25:17–18 "The troubles of my heart are enlarged . . . Look upon mine affliction and my pain; and forgive all my sins."

Psalm 30:8 "I cried to thee, O Lord; and unto the Lord I made supplication."

Psalm 25:6 "Remember, O Lord, thy tender mercies and thy loving kindnesses, for they have been ever of old.”

2 Nephi 4:20, 29 “mine afflictions”

Psalms 25:16 “I am desolate and afflicted”

2 Nephi 4:22, 27, 29–33 “mine enemies”

Psalms 27:11–12 “Lead me in a plain path, because of mine enemies. Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies.”

2 Nephi 4:28 “Rejoice, O my heart”

Psalms 28:7 “My heart trusted in him, and I am helped; therefore my heart greatly rejoiceth.”

2 Nephi 4:31 “O Lord, wilt thou redeem my soul?”

Psalms 25:20 “O keep my soul, and deliver me.”

One important aspect of the series of Psalms 25 to 31 is their focus on the themes of covenant-making. Psalms scholar Peter Craigie notes: “The attitude of trust is the key to the psalmist’s preparation, for trust signifies dependence and hope based upon the covenant character of God. He trusts because God is faithful as the God of the covenant promises; he trusts because those who have trusted in the past have experienced the presence and help of God” (Peter C. Craigie and Marvin E. Tate, Psalms 1-50, World Biblical Commentary, vol. 19, Bruce M. Metzger, gen. ed., Second Edition; Nashville: Thomas Nelson, 2004, 218).

As part of this covenant-making process, the psalmist typically does five things:

1. He recognizes his sins
2. He pleads for forgiveness so that the covenant curses come not upon him, but that they fall upon his enemies, the wicked
3. He dedicates himself to keeping the covenant / commandments of the Lord
4. He petitions the Lord to guide him in the right way
5. He rejoices because of the Lord’s help and thanks / praises God

Nephi’s Psalm shares all of these covenant-making features.

16 Behold, my soul delighteth in the things of the Lord; and my heart pondereth continually upon the things which I have seen and heard.

verse 16 “my heart pondereth continually upon the things which I have seen and heard” It seems likely that a prophet may receive a revelation and then spend the rest of his life coming to understand it. Nephi’s vision experience reported in 1 Nephi 11-15 probably provided him a lifetime of material for pondering.

17 Nevertheless, notwithstanding the great goodness of the Lord, in showing me his great and marvelous works, my heart exclaimeth: O wretched man that I am! Yea, my heart sorroweth because of my flesh; my soul grieveth because of mine iniquities.

verse 17 “my soul grieveth because of mine iniquities” Apparently Nephi’s sense of anguish over his own sins motivated the writing of his psalm. It seems somehow comforting to know that even the great prophet Nephi stumbled, just as each of us has, in his struggles with the “flesh.” We are left to wonder what specific sins produced his grief. Look in verse 27 for possible clues.

18 I am encompassed about, because of the temptations and the sins which do so easily beset me.

verse 18 “I am encompassed about” It is interesting to note that the expression “encompassed about” is found only three times in all four standard works, and all three are in the Book of Mormon (see also Ether 3:2; 6:7). “Encompassed about” means encircled or surrounded, but in these three verses of scripture the expression “encompassed about” implies something further. It suggests being surrounded by something that is threatening or dangerous and nearly overwhelming. In this case Nephi is “encompassed about” by temptation and sin.

The word beset here is similar in its meaning. Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines beset as, “To surround; to inclose [sic]; to hem in; to besiege. To press on all sides, so as to perplex; to entangle, so as to render escape difficult or impossible; to waylay.”

19 And when I desire to rejoice, my heart groaneth because of my sins; nevertheless, I know in whom I have trusted.

verse 19 Nephi’s heart is laden even to the point of making it difficult for him to experience joy, but then he remembers his most trusted friend—the Lord.

verses 20-25 In these verses Nephi refers to personal spiritual experiences, apparently all specific incidents, with which he has been blessed.

20 My God hath been my support; he hath led me through mine afflictions in the wilderness; and he hath preserved me upon the waters of the great deep.

21 He hath filled me with his love, even unto the consuming of my flesh.

verses 20-21 Apparently, Nephi has reference here to his experiences in the wilderness of Arabia before arriving at Bountiful and his experiences aboard ship reported in 1 Nephi 17:48 when he was filled with the power of God “even unto the consuming of [his] flesh.” What is meant by the phrase “consuming of my flesh”? The Prophet Abinadi had an experience which paralleled that of Nephi. When the priests of King Noah tried to seize him before he had a chance to deliver his complete message, he was transformed by the Spirit of the Lord so that his “face shone with exceeding luster, even as Moses’s did while in the mount of Sinai, while speaking with the Lord.” It seems logical that the process by which Moses, Abinadi, and Nephi were transformed is referred to here as the “consuming of my flesh.”

22 He hath confounded mine enemies, unto the causing of them to quake before me.

verse 22 This verse likely refers to Nephi’s experience with his rebellious brothers reported in 1 Nephi 17:53-55. In this context, to confound means to put to shame or to silence Nephi’s enemies.

verses 23-25 These verses refer to Nephi’s marvelous vision of the tree of life reported in 1 Nephi 11-15.

23 Behold, he hath heard my cry by day, and he hath given me knowledge by visions in the night-time.

24 And by day have I waxed bold in mighty prayer before him; yea, my voice have I sent up on high; and angels came down and ministered unto me.

25 And upon the wings of his Spirit hath my body been carried away upon exceedingly high mountains. And mine eyes have beheld great things, yea, even too great for man; therefore I was bidden that I should not write them.

verse 25 “upon the wings of his Spirit hath my body been carried away upon exceedingly high mountains” This is the only verse in all scripture that contains the beautiful phrase “upon the wings of his Spirit.” Was Nephi’s being “carried away” to a high mountain a literal or a figurative phenomenon? See the commentary for 1 Nephi 11:1.

26 O then, if I have seen so great things, if the Lord in his condescension unto the children of men hath visited men in so much mercy, why should my heart weep and my soul linger in the valley of sorrow, and my flesh waste away, and my strength slacken, because of mine afflictions?

verse 26 “the Lord in his condescension unto the children of men” To review the concept of “condescension of God,” see the commentary for 1 Nephi 11:16.

Nephi asks, “Since I have been a witness to the condescension of the Savior, why am I so troubled by my own trivial afflictions?”

“hath visited men in so much mercy” The 1830 printer’s manuscript has this phrase as “hath visited me in so much mercy.” It was the printer John H. Gilbert who changed “me” to “men.” This change may have been unconsciously influenced by the earlier occurrence of “men” on the same line. The correct text is “me,” with Nephi marveling at the Lord’s love for him.

We may summarize the meaning of this verse: If I am so highly favored of the Lord, and since I know that the Lord suffered immeasurably and is so merciful unto me, then why am I suffering so much?

27 And why should I yield to sin, because of my flesh? Yea, why should I give way to temptations, that the evil one have place in my heart to destroy my peace and afflict my soul? Why am I angry because of mine enemy?

verse 27 Perhaps Nephi’s sense of spirituality or inner peace was disturbed by anger he felt against his older brothers, Laman and Lemuel, or perhaps he struggled, as all of us do, with other pulls of the flesh.

verses 28-33 We share a profound moment of insight with Nephi as he realizes that there is an alternate course of action. In the verses that follow he vows to eliminate from his mind the feelings that are eroding his inner peace.

28 Awake, my soul! No longer droop in sin. Rejoice, O my heart, and give place no more for the enemy of my soul.

verse 28 “enemy of my soul” Here Nephi is speaking to his own inner soul, his “heart.” The enemy of his soul is his natural-man self including his unsatisfactorily controlled anger, and his giving in to the pulls of the flesh. The next verse confirms this conclusion.

29 Do not anger again because of mine enemies. Do not slacken my strength because of mine afflictions.

verse 29 Still speaking to his own heart, he urges himself to try to avoid anger and also to stop allowing guilt to undermine his inner peace.

30 Rejoice, O my heart, and cry unto the Lord, and say: O Lord, I will praise thee forever; yea, my soul will rejoice in thee, my God, and the rock of my salvation.

verse 30 “the rock of my salvation” The metaphor “rock,” which is found often in the scriptures, is usually interpreted as firm supporter, refuge, fortress, or one of impregnable strength. Here and in other verses (Deuteronomy 32:15; 2 Samuel 22:47; Psalm 62:7; 94:22; Isaiah 17:10; and 2 Nephi 4:35) there is an additional implication or shade of meaning—the “rock” also implies author or source.

31 O Lord, wilt thou redeem my soul? Wilt thou deliver me out of the hands of mine enemies? Wilt thou make me that I may shake at the appearance of sin?

verse 31 Again, Nephi’s “enemies” here and in verse 33 are likely his temptation to anger and perhaps his human inclination to respond to other pulls of the flesh.

32 May the gates of hell be shut continually before me, because that my heart is broken and my spirit is contrite! O Lord, wilt thou not shut the gates of thy righteousness before me, that I may walk in the path of the low valley, that I may be strict in the plain road!

verse 32 “low valley . . . plain road” These charming metaphors, which are not found elsewhere in the scriptures, apparently imply humility and purity.

33 O Lord, wilt thou encircle me around in the robe of thy righteousness! O Lord, wilt thou make a way for mine escape before mine enemies! Wilt thou make my path straight before me! Wilt thou not place a stumbling block in my way—but that thou wouldst clear my way before me, and hedge not up my way, but the ways of mine enemy.

verse 33 “wilt thou encircle me around in the robe of thy righteousness” In his dedicatory prayer for the Kirtland temple, Joseph spoke of the first resurrection: “That when the trump shall sound for the dead, we shall be caught up in the cloud to meet thee, that we may ever be with the Lord; that our garments may be pure, that we may be clothed upon with robes of righteousness, with palms in our hands, and crowns of glory upon our heads, and reap eternal joy for all our sufferings” (D&C 109:75-76, emphasis added).

“Wilt thou make my path straight before me! Wilt thou not place a stumbling block in my way—but that thou wouldst clear my way before me, and hedge not up my way” A hedge is planted to protect that which the hedge surrounds by blocking the intrusion of outsiders. To “hedge up the way” of someone is to block their path. Nephi pleads with the Lord to keep his escape route clear but asks the Lord to place blocks in the ways of his enemy.

The straight path in this verse is characterized by having no “stumbling block.” Thus, the meaning of straight in this verse is not “not-crooked” but rather clear or unencumbered. The use of the word straight (rather than strait) in this verse is appropriate as discussed in the supplemental article, Strait and Straight in the Book of Mormon.

verses 34-35 Finally Nephi comes to the great truth that no man is redeemed by the arm of flesh—that each of us must put our ultimate trust in God.

34 O Lord, I have trusted in thee, and I will trust in thee forever. I will not put my trust in the arm of flesh; for I know that cursed is he that putteth his trust in the arm of flesh. Yea, cursed is he that putteth his trust in man or maketh flesh his arm.

verse 34 “the arm of flesh” Scriptural examples of specific things which fit under this label include: weapons (Psalm 20:7; 44:6); governments or heads of government (Psalm 146:3; Isaiah 30:2); your own understanding (Proverbs 3:5); riches (Proverbs 11:28); the work of a man’s hands (2 Nephi 12:8); vanity (Isaiah 59:4); friends (Micah 7:5); teachers—unless he be a man of God (Mosiah 23:14); and persuasions of men (D&C 5:21).

“cursed is he that putteth his trust in the arm of flesh” In what sense is such a man cursed? Does God do the cursing? In Hebrew culture a cursing is the consequence of breaking an oath, covenant, or contract. Here it would seem likely that the natural consequence of placing your trust in “the arm of flesh” is to suffer the “curse” which is to be cut off from the presence or Spirit of God. We learn here that a man who “maketh flesh his arm” is one who puts his trust in man and not God.

35 Yea, I know that God will give liberally to him that asketh. Yea, my God will give me, if I ask not amiss; therefore I will lift up my voice unto thee; yea, I will cry unto thee, my God, the rock of my righteousness. Behold, my voice shall forever ascend up unto thee, my rock and mine everlasting God. Amen.

verse 35 “if I ask not amiss” The Lord said, “Whatsoever ye ask the Father in my name it shall be given unto you, that is expedient for you; and if ye ask anything that is not expedient for you, it shall turn unto your condemnation” (D&C 88:64-65).

The word amiss, in Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language, is defined as “in a faulty manner; contrary to propriety, truth, law, or morality.”

“rock of my righteousness” See the commentary for verse 30.

2 Nephi Chapter 5

Scripture Mastery

2 Nephi 5 Nephi and his followers separate from the Lamanites and move to land of Nephi. They build a temple after the manner of the temple of Solomon. Nephi is commanded to make the small plates of Nephi and begin engraving upon them.

1 Behold, it came to pass that I, Nephi, did cry much unto the Lord my God, because of the anger of my brethren.

verse 1 Obviously Nephi had difficulty dealing with the rancor of his elder brothers to the point where he sought the Lord's counsel. He may well have been motivated by concern for their eternal welfare, but the next verse suggests that, in some large measure, fear might have also prompted his appeal to the Lord.

2 But behold, their anger did increase against me, insomuch that they did seek to take away my life.

3 Yea, they did murmur against me, saying: Our younger brother thinks to rule over us; and we have had much trial because of him; wherefore, now let us slay him, that we may not be afflicted more because of his words. For behold, we will not have him to be our ruler; for it belongs unto us, who are the elder brethren, to rule over this people.

verse 3 Here again, the animosity of Nephi's older brothers surfaces. This verse suggests that their resentment may have had at least in part a cultural origin. See the commentary for 1 Nephi 16:37 and 2 Nephi 1:28-29. This same resentment will become deeply ingrained in the cultural heritage of the Lamanite people and will surface again and again (see Enos 1:2; Mosiah 10:12-17; Alma 43:7-8; 54:17).

The notion that the eldest son had the right to rule after the death of his father was perhaps also preserved in the Nephite and Jaredite practice of often appointing a king's or chief judge's son, likely the eldest, to reign or preside after his father (e.g., Omni 1:23; Mosiah 1:2, 9-10; 11:1; 19:26; 29:6-7, 42; Alma 50:39; Ether 6:25).

4 Now I do not write upon these plates all the words which they murmured against me. But it sufficeth me to say, that they did seek to take away my life.

verse 4 "These plates," of course, are the small plates of Nephi.

5 And it came to pass that the Lord did warn me, that I, Nephi, should depart from them and flee into the wilderness, and all those who would go with me.

6 Wherefore, it came to pass that I, Nephi, did take my family, and also Zoram and his family, and Sam, mine elder brother and his family, and Jacob and Joseph, my younger brethren, and also my sisters, and all those who would go with me. And all those who would go with me were those who believed in the warnings and the revelations of God; wherefore, they did hearken unto my words.

verse 6 “and also my sisters” This is the first time Nephi mentions having sisters. When did they come onto the scene? There seem to be two possibilities. First, they could have been born to Lehi and Sariah either in the wilderness or even in the New World. In this case, it seems a bit peculiar that their births were not mentioned, though this is probably compatible with oriental (eastern) custom which is decidedly male-oriented. Also, Lehi did refer to Joseph as his “last born” (2 Nephi 3:1). Again, though, neglecting to mention the birth of females is probably compatible with the custom of the time. Another possibility is that Nephi’s sisters were the wives of Ishmael’s two sons. If this be the case, it is remarkable that these sisters were willing to leave their husbands, provided they were still living, to go with Nephi. Keep in mind that Ishmael’s two sons and their wives did rebel against Nephi in the wilderness as they were coming out of Jerusalem to join Lehi in the wilderness (1 Nephi 7:6) (Sidney B. Sperry, “Did Father Lehi Have Daughters Who Married the Sons of Ishmael?” a FARMS reprint).

“And all those who would go with me were those who believed in the warnings and the revelations of God” Does the Book of Mormon portray the New World as essentially empty and devoid of other peoples at the time of the arrival of the Lehites? This phrase is thought by some to suggest that the Lehites encountered and lived among people not of Jaredite, Lehite, and Mulekite descent. This phrase perhaps refers to those indigenous, native inhabitants who were converted by Nephi’s teachings and chose to relocate and travel with him up to the land and city of Nephi.

7 And we did take our tents and whatsoever things were possible for us, and did journey in the wilderness for the space of many days. And after we had journeyed for the space of many days we did pitch our tents.

verse 7 “journey in the wilderness” In our minds the word wilderness conjures up an image of an area which is uninhabited and contains little vegetation or animal life, like the desert area referred to in 1 Nephi 2:4. In other places in the Book of Mormon, as here, it is not likely referring to barren deserts, but more likely fertile areas that are “wilderness” because they are difficult to negotiate and sparsely populated or completely uninhabited (see also 1 Nephi 18:6, 24-25).

8 And my people would that we should call the name of the place Nephi; wherefore, we did call it Nephi.

verse 8 John L. Sorenson (An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, 141) and others interested in the geographic aspects of the Book of Mormon (e.g. Joseph L. Allen, Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon, 26) have selected the area of present-day Guatemala City as the likely site for “Nephi,” the city of Nephi. An ancient ruin in Guatemala City called Kaminaljuyu has been shown by archaeological studies to have originated at about this time in Book of Mormon history. The date of Nephi’s departure from the land of first inheritance and his establishment of the city of Nephi is not known but is estimated to be between 588 and 570 BC, probably about 580 BC. The city of Nephi will become the center of the larger land of Nephi. It will eventually be renamed the city of Lehi-Nephi. This land will serve as the Nephite capital for some 360 to 380 years. In about 210 BC, the Nephite king Mosiah will lead the Nephites out of the land of Nephi “down” to the land of Zarahemla. Subsequent to that time, in the Book of Mormon story, the land of Nephi forms the center of Lamanite culture and activity.

The distance, as the crow flies, between the proposed sites for the land of first inheritance and the city of Nephi is about one hundred miles. However, the terrain is mountainous, Nephi would have had with him women and children and perhaps flocks. It might well have taken them twenty days or so to negotiate this distance. This twenty days is compatible with the “many days” mentioned in the previous verse.

Was this place they called Nephi already populated when Nephi and his people settled there? Would they join with others—indigenous people in the area? Perhaps so. Many have supposed that Nephi’s party found the future City of Nephi to be uninhabited because Nephi failed to mention other peoples. We know, however, that after his arrival in the new land, Nephi and his people would build a temple “after the manner of the temple of Solomon” (see verse 18). Such a building project would have been made easier if they had been able to add to their numbers by joining with some indigenous peoples.

As mentioned, we will read that about 370 years from this time Mosiah and his followers will flee from the land of Nephi. They will travel north and settle in the city of Zarahemla. They will discover that the people of Zarahemla (the Mulekites) will already be established there. In fact, the city will be named for the Mulekites’ leader, Zarahemla (Omni 1:18). Nephi was the first to establish the place called Nephi, and so it was originally called Nephi. Regarding this custom of naming places after the first to possess them, we will later read: “Now it was the custom of the people of Nephi to call their lands, and their cities, and their villages, yea, even all their small villages, after the name of him who first possessed them; and thus it was with the land of Ammonihah (Alma 8:7). It does seem possible that there may have been a major city populated with non-Nephites near the city of Nephi (see the commentary for Jacob 2:28).

9 And all those who were with me did take upon them to call themselves the people of Nephi.

verse 9 Here is the first mention of the people of Nephi or the “Nephites.”

10 And we did observe to keep the judgments, and the statutes, and the commandments of the Lord in all things, according to the law of Moses.

verse 10 It is important to keep in mind that Lehi and his righteous posterity believed in and kept the law of Moses which was an integral part of their cultural inheritance (see also Alma 30:3).

Note here that Nephi, in conveying the simple idea that his people kept the law uses three different words for the law: “judgments,” “statutes,” and “commandments.” Why did he use more than one word? Do they not all mean the same? John W. Welch has pointed out that in Hebrew there are several words used to express slightly different semantic aspects of the word “law.” For example, judgment in Hebrew is mishpat and the mishpatim are the standards of behavior required by God or the judgments or verdicts pronounced by God. A statute in Hebrew is felt to be synonymous with ordinance, and both are rendered Huqqah or hoq. These may be defined as accepted customs or cultural rules. Commandment in Hebrew is Mitzvah and refers to divine commandments in general (bar mitzvah means “son of the commandment”).

The law—the law of Moses itself—in Hebrew is the Torah which refers to teachings or instructions. A testimony or witness in Hebrew is edut and is often a monument, stela, or book of the law. When an author writing in Hebrew wants to refer to the law and be certain that he has covered all the bases, he often uses multiple terms such as Nephi does in this verse, and as do other Book of Mormon authors (see also 1 Nephi 17:22; Mosiah 6:6; Alma 8:17; 30:3; 58:40; Helaman 3:20; 15:5). (“Statutes, Judgments, Ordinances, and Commandments” in Reexploring the Book of Mormon, edited by John W. Welch, Salt Lake City: Deseret Book, 1992, 62-65.)

Notice also, in this verse, the repeated use of the article the. Unlike English, in which a series of nouns can be introduced by a single definite article (the), Hebrew repeats the definite article for each noun. This kind of repetition is seen throughout the Book of Mormon. This verse is a prime example of this particular Hebraism.

11 And the Lord was with us; and we did prosper exceedingly; for we did sow seed, and we did reap again in abundance. And we began to raise flocks, and herds, and animals of every kind.

verse 11 “we did reap again in abundance” The Book of Mormon people had been previously blessed with an abundant harvest on their arrival in the promised land (1 Nephi 18:24). It obviously continued here in the land of Nephi.

12 And I, Nephi, had also brought the records which were engraven upon the plates of brass; and also the ball, or compass, which was prepared for my father by the hand of the Lord, according to that which is written.

verse 12 “which was prepared for my father by the hand of the Lord, according to that which is written” The Liahona is the only mechanical device, of which we have knowledge, which was constructed by the hand of the Lord for use by mortal man (see also Mosiah 1:16; Alma 37:38). A possible exception is the device used for translation, the Urim and Thummim. We are not really given to know the origin of this latter device.

“according to that which is written” This phrase also implies that Nephi had access to a scriptural reference to the Liahona, which is not available to us today. Perhaps it was contained on the plates of brass. It is interesting to note that there exists an ancient tradition among those of Hebrew culture of divining with arrows (Hugh Nibley, “The Liahona’s Cousins,” a FARMS reprint). Perhaps this ancient tradition had its origins in scriptural writings.

13 And it came to pass that we began to prosper exceedingly, and to multiply in the land.

14 And I, Nephi, did take the sword of Laban, and after the manner of it did make many swords, lest by any means the people who were now called Lamanites should come upon us and destroy us; for I knew their hatred towards me and my children and those who were called my people.

verse 14 “the people who were now called Lamanites” This is the first mention of “Lamanites.” If one contemplates carefully this phrase, one may find herein the implication that Lehi’s brothers Laman and Lemuel probably allied themselves with other peoples who were already in the New World. Archeological evidence indicates that peoples already were settled in most parts of the western hemisphere at the time Lehi and his party landed there. They likely did not land on a pristine and uninhabited land. Perhaps the offspring of Laman and Lemuel merged and intermarried with the indigenous culture that was already in the New World. This might help to explain the mark of the dark skin that was later placed upon the Lamanites. Also, it may help to explain why the population of the Lamanites was always larger than that of the Nephites (An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, John L. Sorenson, 193; see also Jarom 1:6).

15 And I did teach my people to build buildings, and to work in all manner of wood, and of iron, and of copper, and of brass, and of steel, and of gold, and of silver, and of precious ores, which were in great abundance.

verse 15 In times past, critics of the Book of Mormon have enjoyed pointing out that archaeologists have felt that metals were not used in Mesoamerica until AD 900. It is now known that metals were used in Mesoamerica in Book of Mormon times (“A Reconsideration of Early Metal in Mesoamerica,” John L. Sorenson, Katunob 9, March 1976:1-18).

Where and when did Nephi acquire all these skills that he was able to pass along to his people? Certainly, his experiences in building the ship on which the Lehites sailed to the New World could have contributed much to his practical abilities.

16 And I, Nephi, did build a temple; and I did construct it after the manner of the temple of Solomon save it were not built of so many precious things; for they were not to be found upon the land, wherefore, it could not be built like unto Solomon's temple. But the manner of the construction was like unto the temple of Solomon; and the workmanship thereof was exceedingly fine.

verse 16 This is the first time temple building is mentioned in the Book of Mormon. For a summary of the temples mentioned in the Book of Mormon, see the commentary for Alma 16:13. We will learn that these temples are important buildings to the Nephite people. The Nephites will gather at their temples for their coronations, their covenant ceremonies, for religious instructions, important sermons, and to perform sacrifices and sacred ordinances.

Is it reasonable to suppose that a small group of people could build a temple “after the manner of the temple of Solomon”? After all, it took many years and considerable resources for the entire Israelite kingdom to build Solomon’s temple in Jerusalem. In relatively recent times, archaeologists have indeed found small Israelite temples, or “mini-temples” in Palestine constructed “after the manner” of the temple in Jerusalem. Israeli archaeologist Avraham Negev commented on one of these temples: “The most remarkable discovery at Arad is the temple which occupied the north-western corner of the citadal. . . . Its orientation, general plan and contents, especially the tabernacle, are similar to the Temple of Solomon” (“Arad: A Biblical City in Southern Palestine,” Archaeology 17 [1964]: 43-53). In other words, Nephi’s construction of a simpler version of Solomon’s temple in a remote location, once he had established his people in a permanent city, was not a unique event in Jewish history, but rather an expected occurrence.

Solomon’s temple was apparently distinctive in its design. It consisted of three rooms, one behind the other, on a straight line, and the building was the same width all along its length. The middle room was the largest, and the third or the innermost room was the most holy, being known as the Holy of Holies.

On the subject of temples built outside of Jerusalem, Brother Hugh Nibley wrote:

The Elephantine Papyri . . . show us a Jewish community living far up the Nile, whither they had fled for safety, possibly at the destruction of Jerusalem in Lehi’s day. In 1954 some of these records, the Brooklyn Aramaic Papyri, were discovered. . . Perhaps the most surprising discovery about these Jews settled so far from home was their program for building a temple in their new home. Not long ago, learned divines were fond of pointing out that Nephi’s idea of building a temple in the New World was quite sufficient in itself to prove once and for all the fraudulence of the Book of Mormon, since, it was argued, no real Jew would ever dream of having a temple anywhere but in Jerusalem (Since Cumorah, 53).

Speaking further of this temple built by a colony of Jews on the island of Elephantine in Egypt, Hugh Nibley wrote: “The discovery of the Elephantine documents in 1925 showed that colonies of Jews actually did flee into the desert in the manner of Lehi, during his lifetime, and for the same reasons; arriving in their new home far up the Nile, they proceeded to build a replica of Solomon’s Temple, exactly as Lehi did upon landing in the New World.” Speaking of the Nephites, Nibley accordingly summarized elsewhere, “In all these things they were simply following in the established line without any break from the past” (Hugh Nibley, An Approach to the Book of Mormon, The Collected Works of Hugh Nibley: Volume 6, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1988, 160. See also Hugh Nibley, Teachings of the Book of Mormon: Semester 1, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1993, 285–86).

Righteous Israelites in antiquity were a temple-building people. In their poverty, they constructed a tabernacle in the wilderness as the Lord commanded them to do. Wanting to keep the Lord’s presence central in their personal lives and community, the observant Israelites transported that precursor of the temple with them as they wandered for forty years in the desert and even long after they had settled in their promised land. Once the time was right, Solomon built a permanent temple in Jerusalem. In a similar manner, Nephi and his people followed this pattern of consecrated devotion once they had reached the land of promise given to them by the Lord their God.

17 And it came to pass that I, Nephi, did cause my people to be industrious, and to labor with their hands.

18 And it came to pass that they would that I should be their king. But I, Nephi, was desirous that they should have no king; nevertheless, I did for them according to that which was in my power.

verse 18 It was appropriate that this group of Hebrew people, few in number though they were, should want a king to rule over them. In ancient Hebrew culture, the king had significant religious as well as political functions. Nephi’s reluctance to become king may have been due to the negative experience he had with the kings in Jerusalem (Jehoiakim and Zedekiah) who opposed Lehi and the other prophets like Jeremiah and Uriah (Jeremiah 26). Despite the righteous rule of a few Book of Mormon kings (the elder Mosiah, Benjamin, and Benjamin’s son Mosiah), the prophet leaders of the Book of Mormon all counseled against an autocratic system of government because of the spiritual risks involved (see, for example, Mosiah 23:7-9, 12-13; 29:13, 16-17, 21-23).

It is not entirely clear from the text whether or not Nephi did in fact assume the monarchical role. It is likely he did acquiesce to the people’s demand and become their king (see 2 Nephi 6:2). It is also clear that he anointed his successor to be king. It is unusual for an Israelite king to occupy that role without being anointed by a prophet, and at this point in time there is apparently no prophet available to anoint him. Even if he was not anointed king, he still filled all the kingly functions for the Nephites until he died. He set a pattern of kingship in the Nephite society that would last until the institution of the reign of the judges almost five hundred years later.

19 And behold, the words of the Lord had been fulfilled unto my brethren, which he spake concerning them, that I should be their ruler and their teacher. Wherefore, I had been their ruler and their teacher, according to the commandments of the Lord, until the time they sought to take away my life.

verse 19 It is clear that the Lord intended for Nephi to preside over his elder brothers (see 1 Nephi 17:48-55; 2 Nephi 1:25-29).

20 Wherefore, the word of the Lord was fulfilled which he spake unto me, saying that: Inasmuch as they will not hearken unto thy words they shall be cut off from the presence of the Lord. And behold, they were cut off from his presence.

verse 20 It is likely that Nephi here is recalling his father's account of his vision of the tree of life (1 Nephi 8). It was during that experience that Lehi had revealed to him that Laman and Lemuel would not heed his advice and would likely be cut off (1 Nephi 8:17-18, 35-38).

"they were cut off from his presence" This is the prophesied curse that was to fall upon Laman and Lemuel and all those who chose to affiliate with them (1 Nephi 2:23). This phrase refers to being cut off from or losing the Spirit of the Holy Ghost. It would seem that one cannot suffer a greater loss in mortality than to lose the Spirit of the Lord. To be without the Spirit is to be in a wholly carnal state. It is to be "without God in the world" and, therefore "in a state contrary to the nature of happiness" (Alma 41:11).

21 And he had caused the cursing to come upon them, yea, even a sore cursing, because of their iniquity. For behold, they had hardened their hearts against him, that they had become like unto a flint; wherefore, as they were white, and exceedingly fair and delightsome, that they might not be enticing unto my people the Lord God did cause a skin of blackness to come upon them.

22 And thus saith the Lord God: I will cause that they shall be loathsome unto thy people, save they shall repent of their iniquities.

23 And cursed shall be the seed of him that mixeth with their seed; for they shall be cursed even with the same cursing. And the Lord spake it, and it was done.

verses 21-23 The "sore cursing" that came upon the Lamanites was not the "skin of blackness." Rather the cursing was losing the Spirit or being cut off from the presence of the Lord (as stated in the previous verse). The Lord did not curse the Lamanites in this way, rather they cursed themselves by their own iniquities (Alma 3:19). It is apparent that the Lamanites would still have become what they did become even if they had never been marked with the “skin of blackness.” The dark skin was not, in and of itself, a curse. There is nothing inherently good or evil about the color of one’s skin. It is not only racist but completely false doctrine to believe that white skin is “good” or righteous and that black skin is somehow less than that. The dark skin here is only a mark or symbol that functioned to identify those who had separated themselves from the Spirit. The Lord intended that those with the dark skin remain separate from those with the lighter skin (Alma 3:8) and that they not intermarry. The mark was intended to protect the spiritually immature early Nephites from being overwhelmed by the false traditions of the Lamanites. Later on, at the time of the prophet Jacob (Jacob 1:14-16), the protection probably occurred in the other direction—that is, the Lamanites were probably protected from the spiritually fatal immoralities of the Nephites.

There can be no question that the altering of the Lamanites’ skin color was God’s will. God might well have brought this to pass, however, in a “natural” way. There is a precedent, after all, for God’s bringing about this type of curse in such a “natural” way. Cain’s posterity had a “blackness” come upon them after the Lord cursed their land “with much heat” (Moses 7:8). It has been suggested that the “skin of blackness” may have resulted because the descendants of Laman and Lemuel intermarried with the indigenous native population. This is perhaps not, in fact, the way it happened, however. Please note that Nephi is describing this skin of blackness as occurring in his own lifetime (verse 21). Thus, there has not been sufficient time for this black skin to occur by simple intermarrying and genetic mixing.

As stated in the commentary for 2 Nephi 4:6 above, it was never intended that the “curse” or the banishment of the Lamanites from the Lord’s presence be eternal. See the commentary for Alma 23:6-7. One group of Book of Mormon people who experienced a reversal of the dark skin color was those Lamanites converted by the sons of Mosiah during their fourteen-year mission. These were the “Anti-Nephi-Lehies” (see the commentary for Alma 23:6). With their conversion, the cause of the curse was done away. Therefore, there was no continuing reason for the “mark,” the dark skin, to persist. It is likely that the dark skin was removed from them making them the first Lamanites to become physically white as well as spiritually “pure and . . . delightful.” The mark would also be removed from others (3 Nephi 2:14-16).

For a useful summary of the history of the Lamanites, particularly regarding their skin color, see the commentary for Mormon 5:15.

24 And because of their cursing which was upon them they did become an idle people, full of mischief and subtlety, and did seek in the wilderness for beasts of prey.

verse 24 As Satan gained an ever greater hold over the Lamanites, they descended deeper and deeper into barbarism (see also Enos 1:20, Jarom 1:6, and Alma 17:14-15).

You might wonder if “subtlety” here is indeed a derogatory quality. It usually means having the ability to make fine distinctions. Another meaning of “subtle,” however, is crafty, sly, cunning, and devious.

“did seek in the wilderness for beasts of prey” Apparently, they hunted and killed animals for sport. This is a practice roundly condemned in the scriptures (JST, Genesis 9:10-11).

25 And the Lord God said unto me: They shall be a scourge unto thy seed, to stir them up in remembrance of me; and inasmuch as they will not remember me, and hearken unto my words, they shall scourge them even unto destruction.

verse 25 Here is another of those verses that is difficult to understand unless we can keep the pronouns straight. Keep in mind that a “scourge” is a cause of affliction or a means of inflicting punishment or suffering. Thus, throughout the Book of Mormon, we will read how the pugnacious Lamanites will serve as a scourge, a constant reminder, an ever-present warning to the rebellious Nephites. The first “they” refers to the Lamanites. “Them” refers to the Nephites. The next “they” refers to the Nephites. The final “they” refers to the Lamanites, and the final “them” refers to the Nephites.

26 And it came to pass that I, Nephi, did consecrate Jacob and Joseph, that they should be priests and teachers over the land of my people.

verse 26 To “consecrate” in this context is to “set apart” or “devote to.”

“that they should be priests and teachers over the land of my people”

These were not the offices of priest and teacher as we know them today in the Aaronic priesthood. It is believed that the Aaronic or Levitical priesthood did not exist among the Nephites unless it was brought during Christ’s visit among them. From the time of Moses to the mortal advent of Jesus Christ, the Aaronic or Levitical priesthood could only be held by a descendant of the tribe of Levi.

Levi was the third son of ancient Jacob, and thus Levi’s descendants constitute one of the twelve tribes of Israel. Moses and his brother Aaron were Levites. The Lord designated that this lesser priesthood was to be conferred only on men from the tribe of Levi. Also within the tribe of Levi only the direct descendants of Aaron should be designated to the highest office within that priesthood—the “priest.” The presiding priest, the “high priest,” could be called only from among the firstborn of the descendants of Aaron. There were no descendants of Levi or Aaron among the Nephites. An interesting aside is that after the law of Moses was fulfilled by the atonement of Jesus Christ the tribal restrictions applied to ordination to the Aaronic priesthood were no longer in effect. Subsequent to Christ’s atonement, then, the Nephites could ordain non-Levite men to all of the offices in the Aaronic priesthood just as we do today in the Church.

There is good evidence that the Nephite leaders held the Melchizedek priesthood, since they performed the ordinances of the law of Moses which they could not have done unless they had priesthood authority. The Melchizedek priesthood could be held by an Israelite without regard to his tribal lineage. Also, the Melchizedek priesthood encompasses all the powers and authorities of the Aaronic.

Joseph Fielding Smith explained that “the fact that plural terms priests and teachers were used indicated that this was not a reference to the definite office in the priesthood in either case, but it was a general assignment to teach direct, and admonish the people. Otherwise the terms priest and teacher would have been given in the singular” (Answers to Gospel Questions. 5 volumes. Salt Lake City. Deseret Book, 1963, 1:124).

The use of the word “priests” might have come from Joseph Smith himself. The word priest was used in his day to refer to any ordained minister or preacher (Joseph Smith, Jr. HC, 1:2).

27 And it came to pass that we lived after the manner of happiness.

28 And thirty years had passed away from the time we left Jerusalem.

29 And I, Nephi, had kept the records upon my plates, which I had made, of my people thus far.

verse 29 The phrase “my plates” refers to the large plates of Nephi. Review the supplemental article, Those Confusing Book of Mormon Plates.

30 And it came to pass that the Lord God said unto me: Make other plates; and thou shalt engraven many things upon them which are good in my sight, for the profit of thy people.

31 Wherefore, I, Nephi, to be obedient to the commandments of the Lord, went and made these plates upon which I have engraven these things.

verses 30-31 The “other plates” and “these plates upon which I have engraven these things” are the small plates of Nephi. We are, of course, now reading and studying Joseph’s translation of the unabridged small plates of Nephi. It has previously been pointed out that Nephi’s account on the small plates of Nephi was likely begun a full thirty years after Lehi and his company left Jerusalem (verse 28).

We tend to read the record taken from the small plates of Nephi, especially 1 Nephi and 2 Nephi as though it were a daily journal. Instead it is a retrospective account.

32 And I engraved that which is pleasing unto God. And if my people are pleased with the things of God they will be pleased with mine engravings which are upon these plates.

verse 32 Again, “these plates” are the small plates of Nephi.

33 And if my people desire to know the more particular part of the history of my people they must search mine other plates.

verse 33 “mine other plates” These are the large plates of Nephi.

34 And it sufficeth me to say that forty years had passed away, and we had already had wars and contentions with our brethren.

verse 34 We know that Nephi made the small plates of Nephi and began writing upon them about thirty years after the people left Jerusalem (see verses 30 and 31 above). Thus, we learn here that it took Nephi ten years to write the first twenty-seven chapters (1 Nephi plus the first five chapters of 2 Nephi).

2 Nephi Chapter 6

Scripture Mastery

2 Nephi 6-10 Jacob delivers an important two-day sermon to the Nephites.

In 2 Nephi chapters 6-10 we find a lengthy sermon delivered to the people by Nephi's brother Jacob. Jacob was born to Sariah some time during the eight years the family was traveling in the wilderness between Jerusalem and the land Bountiful. He was no stranger to hardships having traveled with his family in the wilderness. He was a first-hand witness of the rebellion of Laman and Lemuel. He was exceptionally sensitive and gifted in spiritual matters. Even as a youth he was visited by the Savior and "beheld his glory." He also was favored with "many revelations," and he "heard the voice of the Lord speaking to him in very word, from time to time" (2 Nephi 2:4; 10:3; 11:3; Jacob 7:5). He is indeed one of the major doctrinal teachers in the Book of Mormon. For a more detailed discussion of this great prophet, see the introductory comments for the book of Jacob.

Apparently, Nephi appointed Jacob to speak at a special gathering of the people, and Nephi requested that his topic include those parts of Isaiah which we know as chapters 49 through 52. We are not told the exact nature of this gathering but assume it must have been some type of conference. Even though Jacob's sermon in 2 Nephi 6-10 occupies thirteen pages of the Book of Mormon text, we know that this account is only a portion of what Jacob said on that occasion. Jacob's complete discourse was so long that it took Jacob two days to deliver it, and Nephi was able to include only a part of the sermon on his "small" plates (2 Nephi 11:1). It seems obvious that Nephi had great respect for the spiritual and oratorical prowess of his brother Jacob.

One LDS scholar, John S. Thompson, has discovered that Jacob's two-day sermon contains elements that discernibly parallel salient features of the ancient Israelite autumn festivals (especially the Feast of Tabernacles or Sukkot).

Thompson begins his study by observing that 2 Nephi 6–10 follows a pattern called the "covenant pattern" which is now widely recognized as being found "throughout much of the ancient Near East." This pattern consists of:

1. A preamble—2 Nephi 6:1–4
2. A historical overview and covenant speech—2 Nephi 6:5–9, 22
3. Defining the stipulations of the covenant—2 Nephi 9:23–26
4. Promising blessings and cursings for upholding or breaking the covenant—2 Nephi 9:27–43
5. A witness formula—2 Nephi 9:44
6. The recording of the covenant—2 Nephi 9:52.4

Thompson wrote, “The presence of this structure in Jacob’s sermon” strongly suggests he is delivering it during the Feast of Tabernacles, where, according to some scholars, this same pattern was sometimes followed anciently by the children of Israel in renewing their covenant with Jehovah or in installing a new earthly king (John S. Thompson, “Isaiah 50–51, the Israelite Autumn Festivals, and the Covenant Speech of Jacob in 2 Nephi 6–10,” in Isaiah in the Book of Mormon, ed. Donald W. Parry and John W. Welch, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1998, 124–127). In speaking about a covenant-renewal celebration, Thompson is referring to an event where members of a covenant community renew their covenants with God and rededicate themselves to keep his commandments. An example of this can be seen in Joshua 24, where Joshua gathered “all the tribes of Israel” to renew their covenants before claiming the land of Canaan as their inheritance (Joshua 24:1). This included swearing loyalty to and faith in the Lord and not worshipping other gods.

Considering that this sermon was delivered at a time when the Nephites were similarly establishing themselves in a new land, it becomes clear that Jacob’s words reflect this ancient Israelite religious covenant-renewal custom.

In addition, Jacob’s use of words from Isaiah 49–52 and other passages (such as Leviticus 16, 23; Deuteronomy 31; Isaiah 55) makes sense in light of the fact that these chapters also “reflect much of [the] traditional scenario” involving the enthronement of earthly kings during the autumn festivals (Ibid., 140).

1 The words of Jacob, the brother of Nephi, which he spake unto the people of Nephi:

2 Behold, my beloved brethren, I, Jacob, having been called of God, and ordained after the manner of his holy order, and having been consecrated by my brother Nephi, unto whom ye look as a king or a protector, and on whom ye depend for safety, behold ye know that I have spoken unto you exceedingly many things.

verse 2 “his holy order” This phrase refers to the higher or Melchizedek priesthood, and this verse seems to confirm the fact that the ordinations that Jacob and his brother Joseph received were ordinations in the Melchizedek priesthood (see also 2 Nephi 31:18; Alma 13:1; and Alma 43:2). As previously stated, the Aaronic priesthood under the law of Moses was held exclusively by the tribe of Levi, and as far as we know there were no Levites among the Book of Mormon peoples.

An important principle should also be stated here. With the priesthood comes order. When the priesthood exists upon the earth, the church organization also exists. Thus the Church of Jesus Christ exists here under the leadership of Nephi. We, however, know little about this church from the Book of Mormon.

Though the Book of Mormon is not explicit on this point, it seems certain that the Melchizedek Priesthood was received by worthy men beginning with Lehi and Nephi

(see the Alma 13 and its commentary). It is by this authority that they baptized, confirmed, ordained, and offered sacrifices.

There are actually three priesthood-directed organizations, or churches, of varying structure established among the Nephites over a period of a thousand years:

1. The existence of the first of these churches is not specifically mentioned, though this verse provides evidence of its existence. It is apparent that Nephi functioned as the head of the church. Here we read of Nephi's ordaining and consecrating his brother Jacob to service in the church. We will later read of Nephi and his brethren "labor[ing] diligently" in testifying of Christ, the gospel, and its relationship to the law of Moses (2 Nephi 25:23-30; 31:1-33:1). After the deaths of Nephi and Jacob, other priests and teachers will be mentioned together with "exceedingly many prophets" (Enos 1:22; cf. Jarom 1:11).

It is interesting to observe the interactions between the church and the law of Moses. Although Nephi wrote, "The law [of Moses] hath become dead unto us" (2 Nephi 25:25), the law and its rituals were strictly observed (1 Nephi 4:15-16; 2 Nephi 5:19; Jarom 1:5), and a temple patterned after that of Solomon's was built (2 Nephi 5:16). This church will seem to come to an end prior to the eventual migration north of the Nephites out of the land of Nephi, led by the Nephite king Mosiah (Omni 1). Nephi's brother Jacob will write of the causes of the demise of the church (Jacob 1:15-16; 3:4). Following Jacob's death, the generations will come and go as unnamed prophets and priests will labor to persuade the Nephites to honor their covenants with God. In the end, these prophetic warnings will be to no avail. By about 280 BC, Amaron will write, "The more wicked part of the Nephites were destroyed" (Omni 1:5).

We will learn that when the remnant of believing Nephites are led northward by king Mosiah in about 210 BC to the Land of Zarahemla, they will encounter the people of Zarahemla. This latter people had no scriptures and no belief in God (Omni 1:15-17; Helaman 8:21). Consequently, they had to be schooled in the preparatory law of Moses before they could receive the higher law of Christ. Thus, although the prophets knew of and were committed to Christ (Omni 1:26), the learning and the living of the preparatory law appears to have been the dominant religious concern of the people during the reigns of Mosiah and his son Benjamin.

2. The second church among the Nephites will appear when Alma, a priest of the wicked king Noah, is converted through the preachings of the prophet Abinadi (Alma 11-17). Alma will restore the gospel and the church among his converts. Alma and his followers will be "called the church of God, or the church of Christ, from that time forward" (Mosiah 18:17; cf. Alma 5:3). This will be the first specific reference in the Book of Mormon to a church of God among the Nephites. When Alma and his followers arrive back in Zarahemla, they will join with the inhabitants of Zarahemla, many of whom having been prepared to enter into the covenants of the gospel and church by the ministrations of king Benjamin (Mosiah 4:3; 5:7). Benjamin will have appointed priests among his people to teach the gospel and remind the people of the oath they had made (Mosiah 6:3).

Upon Alma's arrival in Zarahemla in about 120 BC, he will be designated the presiding high priest and authorized by king Mosiah to form branches or "churches" of the one "church of God" throughout "all the land of Zarahemla" and ordain priests to declare Alma's doctrines (Mosiah 25:19-24; 26:8-12). Having "power and authority from God" (Alma 5:3) to restore the church in his day, Alma will be acknowledged by the Nephites in the land of Zarahemla as "the founder of their church" and the first presiding high priest (Mosiah 29:42, 47). According to Mormon, this will be "the first church which was established among them after their transgression" (3 Nephi 5:12; cf. Omni 1:12-13). When the senior Alma dies, the leadership of the church will be assumed by his son Alma (Mosiah 29:42-45). The office of elder will be mentioned for the first time in his administration (Alma 4:7; 6:1). This church will then struggle with apostasy for many decades, but remnants of the church will survive.

3. Whereas there had been a pronounced break between Nephi's original church in the land of Nephi and the multi-branched organization established by Alma throughout the land of Zarahemla, the third church will be described in 3 Nephi 11-26 (at the time of Christ's personal ministry among the Nephites) and will emerge out of Alma's church, which still existed at the time of the great destructions accompanying Jesus's crucifixion (3 Nephi 7:15-26). One dispensation will end and a new one begin. The law of Moses will be fulfilled with Jesus's death (3 Nephi 15:3-5). For the first time, twelve disciples will be appointed to preside over the church (3 Nephi 11:18-22; 12:1; 18:36-37). Blood sacrifice will be replaced with a new ordinance, one that Jesus will personally introduce to commemorate his atonement: the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper (3 Nephi 18:1-11). This church will be formally named the Church of Jesus Christ (3 Nephi 27:3-10). It will thrive during the years following Christ's personal appearance to the Nephites at Bountiful, but it will begin to fragment about AD 194 when a "small part" of the people will assume the name Lamanites (4 Nephi 1:20). From then on the church will rapidly deteriorate and ultimately be lost. In AD 360 the prophet Mormon will make one last effort to redeem the church, but his efforts will fail. The Church would not be restored until some fourteen hundred years later.

3 Nevertheless, I speak unto you again; for I am desirous for the welfare of your souls. Yea, mine anxiety is great for you; and ye yourselves know that it ever has been. For I have exhorted you with all diligence; and I have taught you the words of my father; and I have spoken unto you concerning all things which are written, from the creation of the world.

verse 3 "I speak unto you again" In the previous verse Jacob points out to the people of Nephi that he has already "spoken unto [them] exceedingly many things." It is clear that Jacob was a lively and energetic preacher of the gospel.

“all things which are written, from the creation of the world” Jacob is referring here to those things written upon the plates of brass. Jacob was also obviously a serious student of the scriptures.

4 And now, behold, I would speak unto you concerning things which are, and which are to come; wherefore, I will read you the words of Isaiah. And they are the words which my brother has desired that I should speak unto you. And I speak unto you for your sakes, that ye may learn and glorify the name of your God.

verse 4 “I would speak unto you concerning things . . . which are to come”

Contrary to the belief of modern biblical scholars, we believe that Isaiah and other prophets were at times granted the privilege of seeing events in the future. Most modern biblical scholars, on the other hand, have developed what might be termed a naturalistic bias. For example, they believe that it cannot be concluded that any event had or has a divine or supernatural cause. They also feel that prophecy can only be interpretive and not predictive. That is, a prophet cannot possibly know, preach, or write in specific terms about an event before it occurs. Such naturalistic thinking has been applied to the Book of Mormon by modern-day scholars. For example, Blake Ostler, in order to explain the several specific prophecies of Christ’s birth and ministry in the Book of Mormon has developed what he calls the “expansion theory” (“The Book of Mormon as a Modern Expansion of an Ancient Source.” Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, [Spring 1987] 20:66-123). He concludes that specific references to Christ and his message must be “expansions” added after the time of Christ. He says, “The Christian motifs in the Book of Mormon require either that a Christian has been at work during some stage of the compilation or that it is Christian in origin.” He then concludes that these “expansions must [have] come from Joseph Smith.” Those of us committed to the authenticity and integrity, in absolute terms, of the Book of Mormon as an ancient document might well recognize the seeds of apostasy in Ostler’s “expansion theory.”

“I will read you the words of Isaiah.” In this chapter, Jacob quotes Isaiah 49:22-26 (verses 6-7, 16-18). In the next two chapters, 2 Nephi 7-8, Jacob quotes Isaiah 50, 51, and 52:1-2. Then in chapters 9-10 he provides us with a commentary on these writings of Isaiah.

5 And now, the words which I shall read are they which Isaiah spake concerning all the house of Israel; wherefore, they may be likened unto you, for ye are of the house of Israel. And there are many things which have been spoken by Isaiah which may be likened unto you, because ye are of the house of Israel.

verse 5 “Concerning all the house of Israel” We must keep in mind that biblical prophecy is concerned with more than just the Jews. The house of Israel includes the other tribes as well.

Here Jacob confirms the validity of applying the teachings of Old Testament prophets to ourselves, a process called “likening the scriptures,” even though those prophets may have been mainly preaching and prophesying to their own people about problems of their own day (see also the commentary for 1 Nephi 19:23).

Jacob also appropriately reminds his listeners that they are a branch of the house of Israel.

verses 6-7 Here Jacob quotes Isaiah 49:22-23.

6 And now, these are the words: Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people; and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders.

verse 6 The phrase “I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people” refers to the Lord’s delivering the everlasting gospel to the great Gentile nation in the latter days (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 15:13). This great Gentile nation will then take the gospel message to those of the house of Israel—the Lamanites, the Jews, and other scattered Israelites. Scattered Israel, including its sons and daughters, will be nourished and gathered by the Gentiles. This missionary work or gathering is represented by the phrase, “they [the Gentiles] shall bring thy [Israel’s] sons in their [the Gentiles’] arms, and thy [Israel’s] daughters shall be carried upon their [the Gentiles’] shoulders.”

The concept of the “standard” may have had its beginnings as the Israelites were led by Moses from Egypt to Palestine. As the Israelites prepared to march they would gather in ranks or tribes. To aid in this gathering, a representative of each tribe would raise a banner or “standard” high on a pole around which the tribes could rally and quickly find their places (Numbers 2). In like manner, Israel will gather around the standard of the gospel in the latter days.

7 And kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and their queens thy nursing mothers; they shall bow down to thee with their faces towards the earth, and lick up the dust of thy feet; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord; for they shall not be ashamed that wait for me.

verse 7 There is a sign that awaits the gathering Israelites in the latter days: The very elect and righteous among the “Gentiles” (the “kings” and “queens”) will bow down to the Israelites and humbly serve them and teach the gospel to them without shame, for true humility is seen among the disciples of Christ. Hence the verse may be restated: “And the very elect of the Gentiles shall be thy (Israel’s) nursing fathers and mothers; they (the very elect of the Gentiles) shall bow down to thee (Israel) with their face towards the earth, and lick up the dust of thy (Israel’s) feet; and thou (Israel) shalt know that I am the Lord; for they that wait for (serve and trust in) me (the elect of the Gentiles) shall not be ashamed.”

This verse implies the more specific suggestion that some government(s) of the Gentiles will support the effort of gathering the scattered remnants of Israel.

8 And now I, Jacob, would speak somewhat concerning these words. For behold, the Lord has shown me that those who were at Jerusalem, from whence we came, have been slain and carried away captive.

verse 8 Jacob here reports a vision in which the Lord made known to him the destruction of Jerusalem by Babylon. Nephi had previously had a similar vision (2 Nephi 1:4; see also 2 Nephi 25:6-10).

Babylon’s practice in that day was to forcibly relocate conquered peoples, particularly the upper classes. The mass deportations and relocations were probably based on a belief that persons removed from their homelands and struggling to provide for daily needs elsewhere would be easier to control. A sense of national identity will be weakened in a new land, and national gods were frequently viewed as having power only in their home states, being thus unable to help their people in a foreign environment.

It is notable that the young future prophets Ezekiel and Daniel were among those taken at that time, and soon they will proclaim the Lord’s word among their fellow expatriates (e.g., Ezekiel 1:1-3).

During the Exile, Babylonia became a spiritual and intellectual capital of Judahite life. In their new environment, the people reinterpreted their religion in light of new realities: exile from their promised land, the demise of their Davidic rulers, worship without a temple, and eventually religion without prophets. Over the next few centuries, Judaism was born, with such distinctive characteristics as rabbis and rabbinical schools, worship in synagogues, and veneration of the law. The term “Jews” in the modern sense is properly used to designate the people of Judah from the point of the Exile onwards.

After conquering Babylon in 539 BC, king Cyrus of Persia announced to the Babylonian Jews that they could return to their ancestral homeland. Some moved to Judah, now in the Persian empire, but most by then were second-or third-generation citizens of Babylon and chose not to uproot themselves to go to a land that they had never known. Those who did return rebuilt Jerusalem and its temple (Ezra 1-6; Nehemiah 1-7). By the time of Jesus, Jerusalem with its temple had become the Jews’ spiritual capital, but two-thirds of the world population of Jews lived outside the land of Israel, and the center of intellectual life was to a large degree in Mesopotamia. Thousands of Jews still live in Mesopotamia (now Iraq) into the twentieth century AD.

“now I, Jacob, would speak somewhat concerning these words” An interesting observation has been made with the word words contained in this phrase and words found in 2 Nephi 33:4. The Printer's Manuscript reads "things" at both locations. All other editions (except the 1830 edition at 2 Nephi 33:4), however, have changed this to read "words." As it turns out, either rendering is a good reading. The Hebrew word from which this word is taken is accurately translated either "things" or "words" (Reexploring the Book of Mormon, edited by John W. Welch, Deseret Book Company and FARMS, 78-79).

While we are discussing the particulars of this verse, it may also be pointed out that the word whence means "from what place." The word from just prior to whence is thus redundant.

9 Nevertheless, the Lord has shown unto me that they should return again. And he also has shown unto me that the Lord God, the Holy One of Israel, should manifest himself unto them in the flesh; and after he should manifest himself they should scourge him and crucify him, according to the words of the angel who spake it unto me.

verse 9 "the Lord has shown unto me that they should return again" Jacob also saw in vision the gathering of Israel which followed the Babylonian captivity (for a summary of the "gatherings" and "scatterings" of Israel see the commentary for 1 Nephi 20-22). This gathering occurred in 539 BC when the Babylonian empire was conquered by Cyrus, King of Persia. Cyrus allowed the Jews to return to their ancestral homes.

Jacob was also shown in vision the mortal advent of the Savior.

"according to the words of the angel" We are not given to know this angel's identity.

10 And after they have hardened their hearts and stiffened their necks against the Holy One of Israel, behold, the judgments of the Holy One of Israel shall come upon them. And the day cometh that they shall be smitten and afflicted.

verse 10 "the judgments of the Holy One of Israel shall come upon them" This verse seems to refer to the final scattering of Israel in AD 70 after the Savior's mortal ministry. Some four years previously the Jews had revolted against ruthless Roman leadership. Rome retaliated in force, and in August of AD 70, Jerusalem fell. Hundreds of thousands of its inhabitants were slaughtered or died from the famine incident to the siege, and thousands more were sent to the arena as victims for Roman entertainment, sold into slavery, or forced into exile. The Jerusalem temple was burned to the ground, and Jerusalem itself was leveled. The scattering of Israel was thus complete.

"the day cometh that they shall be smitten and afflicted" From the time of this final scattering the Jews became wanderers, a people without a country, a nation without a home.

11 Wherefore, after they are driven to and fro, for thus saith the angel, many shall be afflicted in the flesh, and shall not be suffered to perish, because of the prayers of the faithful; they shall be scattered, and smitten, and hated; nevertheless, the Lord will be merciful unto them, that when they shall come to the knowledge of their Redeemer, they shall be gathered together again to the lands of their inheritance.

verse 11 “many shall be afflicted in the flesh, [yet] shall not be suffered to perish” Even though the Lord allows Israel to be scattered and even persecuted, his protective hand will ever remain over them. The prayers of the faithful of Israel shall be instrumental in this protection.

“when they shall come to the knowledge of their Redeemer, they shall be gathered together again to the lands of their inheritance” Note the plural form of the word “lands.” This refers to the final latter-day gathering of Israel in Zion or Palestine in the eastern hemisphere and to Zion the New Jerusalem in the western hemisphere. It is an important principle that no one has the right to return to their covenant lands of inheritance until they have accepted Christ as their Savior and dedicated their lives to the pattern and example he set.

Have the Jews in Palestine today begun “to come to the knowledge of their Redeemer”? President Joseph Fielding Smith made an interesting observation regarding this question:

They have accepted him as one of their great teachers; they have said that, “He is Jew of Jews, the greatest Rabbi of them all,” as one has stated it. When the gospel was restored in 1830, if a Jew had mentioned the name of Christ in one of the synagogues, he would have been rebuked. Had a rabbi referred to him, the congregation would have arisen and left the building. And so, we see the sentiment has changed. Now I state this on Jewish authority that they are beginning to believe in Christ, and some of them are accepting the gospel. But in the main they will gather to Jerusalem in their unbelief; the gospel will be preached to them; some of them will believe. Not all of the Gentiles have believed when the gospel has been proclaimed to them, but the great body of the Jews who are there assembled will not receive Christ as their Redeemer until he comes himself and makes himself manifest unto them (Doctrines of Salvation, 3:9).

Thus, the Jews will not fully accept Christ until the onset of the Millennium.

12 And blessed are the Gentiles, they of whom the prophet has written; for behold, if it so be that they shall repent and fight not against Zion, and do not unite themselves to that great and abominable church, they shall be saved; for the Lord God will fulfil his covenants which he has made unto his children; and for this cause the prophet has written these things.

verse 12 “blessed are the Gentiles” Review the role of the Gentiles (non-Jews) in the latter days in the commentary for verses 6-7 above.

“The prophet” in both instances in this verse is Isaiah.

“that great and abominable church” This is the entity described by Elder Bruce R. McConkie: “the world; it is all the carnality and evil to which fallen man is heir, it is every unholy and wicked practice; it is every false religion, every supposed system of salvation which does not actually save and exalt man in the highest heaven of the celestial world. It is every church except the true church, whether parading under a Christian or a pagan banner” (Doctrinal New Testament Commentary, 3:552). It is especially anyone who makes war against the saints.

“they shall be saved” The word “saved” here probably does not refer to exaltation. More is required for exaltation than simply failing to fight against Zion. This promise which the Lord has extended to those who “shall repent and fight not against Zion” is not exaltation but rather an assurance that they will not be destroyed when the wicked perish. Today, we know that they will inherit a kingdom of eternal glory.

“the Lord God will fulfil his covenants . . . and for this cause the prophet has written these things” God will fulfil his covenants, and that is why Isaiah wrote of them.

13 Wherefore, they that fight against Zion and the covenant people of the Lord shall lick up the dust of their feet; and the people of the Lord shall not be ashamed. For the people of the Lord are they who wait for him; for they still wait for the coming of the Messiah.

verse 13 “they that fight against Zion and the covenant people of the Lord shall lick up the dust of their feet” It is easy to misread the first sentence of this verse. It speaks of those who fight against two things: (1) Zion, and (2) the covenant people of the Lord. This verse suggests that the day will come when those who have fought against Zion and against God’s covenant people will voluntarily or involuntarily humble themselves abjectly before the chosen people of the Lord.

“the people of the Lord shall not be ashamed” Those who are truly the Lord’s people will never be ashamed of their Lord.

14 And behold, according to the words of the prophet, the Messiah will set himself again the second time to recover them; wherefore, he will manifest himself unto them in power and great glory, unto the destruction of their enemies, when that day cometh when they shall believe in him; and none will he destroy that believe in him.

verse 14 “The prophet,” again, is Isaiah.

“the Messiah will set himself again the second time to recover them” This refers to the second gathering of Israel. The classification of the “gatherings” of Israel is somewhat variable from place to place in the scriptures (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 20-22). In this verse the original gathering of Israel to the land of Palestine under the leadership of Moses and Joshua is ignored as the first gathering. It seems to be assumed that the first took place following the Babylonian captivity. Some have even suggested that the time of Christ's mortal ministry constituted a "gathering." After all, the keys of gathering were given by Moses to Peter, James, and John on the Mount of Transfiguration at that time. Certainly this was an attempted gathering when the Lord "set his hand" to gather Israel. It turned out to be, however, a gathering that did not quite succeed. This second gathering, then, is that which is occurring in this latter day and is now in progress as Israel gathers to the gospel and to the stakes of Zion.

"he will manifest himself unto them in power and great glory, unto the destruction of their enemies" This refers to the great destructive cleansing of the earth prior to the Savior's second coming. This destruction occurs during the "second gathering" described here in this verse. This destruction is described in the following verse.

"when that day cometh when they shall believe in him; and none will he destroy that believe in him" Some people will be spared in the great destruction in the latter days. We learned in verse 12 of this chapter that those spared in the final cleansing of the earth are those who do not fight against Zion—those of both celestial and terrestrial ilk.

15 And they that believe not in him shall be destroyed, both by fire, and by tempest, and by earthquakes, and by bloodsheds, and by pestilence, and by famine. And they shall know that the Lord is God, the Holy One of Israel.

verse 15 This verse describes the fate of those who were part of the great and abominable church, those who war against Zion in the latter days.

verses 16-18 Here Jacob quotes from Isaiah 49:24-26.

16 For shall the prey be taken from the mighty, or the lawful captive delivered?

verse 16 The speaker in this verse is Israel herself. The "prey" is also Israel, and the "mighty" symbolizes Israel's captors throughout her long dispersion. All of this prophecy on the gathering of Israel seems too much to believe. Therefore, Israel asks, "Is it really possible to free imprisoned Israel from her captors?"

17 But thus saith the Lord: Even the captives of the mighty shall be taken away, and the prey of the terrible shall be delivered; for the Mighty God shall deliver his covenant people. For thus saith the Lord: I will contend with them that contendeth with thee—

verse 17 The Lord reassures Israel that not only is it possible, it will be done! The “mighty” and the “terrible” are scattered Israel’s oppressors. The Lord will “contend with them.”

18 And I will feed them that oppress thee, with their own flesh; and they shall be drunken with their own blood as with sweet wine; and all flesh shall know that I the Lord am thy Savior and thy Redeemer, the Mighty One of Jacob.

verse 18 Isaiah comments upon the fate of those who war against the Israelites in the last days. Those Israelites spoken of here are those who have been converted to the gospel of Jesus Christ and have thus learned of their own true identity and their proper place in the chosen or royal family. The fate of those who contend against Israel is graphically described, “I will feed them that oppress thee with their own flesh; they shall be drunken with their own blood as with sweet wine.” The specific meaning of these phrases is given by Nephi in 1 Nephi 22:13: Those who afflict Israel shall eventually become internally divided and make destructive war upon each other.

2 Nephi 7-8 Isaiah 50-51

In chapters 7 and 8, Nephi's brother Jacob quotes chapters 50, 51, and 52:1-2 of the book of Isaiah. In these chapters, Isaiah speaks specifically to covenant Israel. Let us proceed with Isaiah chapter 50.

verses 1-3 Israel has drifted away from the Lord and has suffered much punishment, but there is no cause to fear that this separation will be permanent. These verses are a call to Israel to return to the Lord and make him their strength. There is likely no specific time period to which Isaiah's counsel applies since Israel has been estranged from the Lord almost continuously since Isaiah's day. Isaiah is speaking messianically, that is, as if he were the Lord.

1 Yea, for thus saith the Lord: Have I put thee away, or have I cast thee off forever? For thus saith the Lord: Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement? To whom have I put thee away, or to which of my creditors have I sold you? Yea, to whom have I sold you? Behold, for your iniquities have ye sold yourselves, and for your transgressions is your mother put away.

verse 1 The Lord, through Isaiah, introduces the metaphor of a marriage between God and Israel, with Israel being the bride, or the children of the bride, and the Lord being the bridegroom.

"Have I put thee away, or have I cast thee off forever?" These two questions (1) "Have I put thee away?" and (2) "have I cast thee off forever?" have identical meanings. The Lord is saying, "Do you really think that I put my people Israel away permanently like a man who divorces his wife?" The reference here is to Hebrew law which held that a man who found his wife to be unworthy could legally and permanently "put her away" or divorce her by presenting her with a "bill of divorcement." He could not divorce her without presenting her with a legal bill of divorcement (Deuteronomy 24:1-4). The implication of these questions is whether or not the separation between the Lord and Israel is permanent like a divorce or only a temporary one.

"Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement?" The reference to "your mother's divorcement" (emphasis mine) implies that the Lord is speaking to the descendants of those Israelites who were estranged from the Lord. A "bill" is a scroll or document providing evidence of something. The Lord continues, "If I intended to put you away permanently, then where are the divorce papers that prove that I divorced your mother and thus you yourselves?" The implication is that the separation between God and Israel is not a permanent “divorce,” but only a temporary separation. Again, Isaiah’s time framework is indefinite, but he may have reference here to the Babylonian captivity between 586 BC and 538 BC.

“To whom have I put thee away, or to which of my creditors have I sold you?” “Do you really think I sold you into captivity like a man selling his own children into slavery?” In Isaiah’s day, if a man was pressured by his creditors he had the option of selling his children into a state of indentured servitude temporarily until the debt was paid. Also in that day if the man died without clearing his debt, the creditor could take the man’s children as payment of the debt. The meaning of this analogy is that the Lord is in debt to no one and therefore was not forced to sell Israel as slaves.

“for your iniquities have ye sold yourselves, and for your transgressions is your mother put away” Finally the Lord avers that Israel, actually her “mother,” had been put away, but no one but Israel herself was responsible for her separation from God. She sold herself into captivity. Her sins and apostasy resulted in the rift.

2 Wherefore, when I came, there was no man; when I called, yea, there was none to answer. O house of Israel, is my hand shortened at all that it cannot redeem, or have I no power to deliver? Behold, at my rebuke I dry up the sea, I make their rivers a wilderness and their fish to stink because the waters are dried up, and they die because of thirst.

verse 2 “when I came, there was no man; when I called, yea, there was none to answer” When the Lord came to Israel willing to redeem her from captivity, no one requested his help, and they even rejected him. They separated from him because of their sins. Again, this statement might apply to any time period. In almost every generation there are few or even none to receive the Lord. It does fit nicely with the period of the Lord’s mortal ministry. Though Isaiah is speaking in the past tense, he may well be prophesying of events yet in the future. This is the principle of the “prophetic perfect” verb tense.

Another possibility is the context of the second coming. Evidence for this is found in the fact that Isaiah 50:2-3 are repeated, with some changes in D&C 133:66-69, and the latter verses have obvious reference to the Lord’s second coming. The Israelites are like Amulek before he repented: “I was called many times and I would not hear” (Alma 10:6).

“is my hand shortened at all that it cannot redeem, or have I no power to deliver?” The hand and arm of the Lord are symbols of his power. He who has a “shortened hand” is weak and powerless. The Lord is asking, “Am I so weak that I cannot redeem Israel”? The answer is, of course, “certainly not!” The opposite of the shortened hand is the Lord’s stretching out or extending his hand or arm to deliver his people. His hand is indeed stretched out and not shortened.

“Behold, at my rebuke I dry up the sea, I make their rivers a wilderness and their fish to stink because the waters are dried up, and they die because of thirst”

The Lord then confirms that he does, of course, have sufficient power, and he illustrates this power by recalling the miracles which the Lord performed at the time of the exodus from Egypt. He dried up the sea with his command (Exodus 7:21; 14:26-31). He turned the rivers into a desert so that the fish in them died for lack of water; and (in verse 3) he darkened the sky as if it were mourning for the dead (Exodus 10:21).

When Oliver Cowdery produced the printer’s manuscript from the original manuscript, he made, on the average, two or three changes per manuscript page. These changes were mostly simple errors and do not significantly affect the text of the Book of Mormon. The errors frequently occurred in groups suggesting that Oliver was tired. In this verse and in verse 4 there are some examples of simple errors that were made that have remained in the text even until our present edition. For example two phrases contained in this verse in the original manuscript read: “I make the rivers a wilderness” and “they dieth because of thirst” (emphasis added). In verse 4: “he wakeneth morning by morning” and “he wakeneth mine ear” (“Piecing Together the Original Manuscript,” Royal Skousen, a FARMS reprint).

3 I clothe the heavens with blackness, and I make sackcloth their covering.

verse 3 The dark sky heralds the coming judgments, as well as Christ’s second coming. The Lord said in Matthew 24:29-30: “Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken: And then . . . they shall see the son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory.”

Elder Bruce R. McConkie gave another interpretation:

“I clothe the heavens with blackness” (Isaiah 50:3), and there is no more revelation. . . Thus saith our God. Such is his promise, spoken prophetically of our day. And here, given in modern times, is his announcement that as he spake, so has it come to pass: “Verily, verily, I say unto you, darkness covereth the earth, and gross darkness the minds of the people, and all flesh has become corrupt before my face (D&C 112:23) (Millennial Messiah: The Second Coming of the Son of Man, 39).

“Sackcloth” is the clothing of mourning. Perhaps this symbolizes the mourning of the wicked at the second coming of Christ. Or it may symbolize the mourning of the righteous over the wickedness of the earth.

verses 4-9 Isaiah now stops speaking messianically. That is, he stops speaking as if he were the Lord. These verses contain another “servant song,” a poetic statement of a righteous and devoted servant or missionary of the Lord. The servants who are the objects of these servant songs are usually the Savior or another individual who is a type of Christ. Here the servant describes how he was rejected by the people. Whether or not a specific identity of this servant is intended is unknown. Perhaps the most acceptable identity of this particular servant is Jesus Christ himself. Some of the events described in the servant song are similar to those experienced by the Savior during his mortal ministry.

Others have suggested that the servant might be Isaiah. A more universal application to all righteous servants of the Lord also seems appropriate as well.

4 The Lord God hath given me the tongue of the learned, that I should know how to speak a word in season unto thee, O house of Israel. When ye are weary he waketh morning by morning. He waketh mine ear to hear as the learned.

verse 4 “The Lord God hath given me the tongue of the learned, that I should know how to speak a word in season” The Lord God (the Father) has given the servant (probably Jesus) the power to speak. We may alternatively word this verse, “The Father has taught me what to say to the people of Israel at an appropriate time—‘in season.’ He has blessed me with knowledge and eloquence.” This servant intends to be a missionary for the Lord among those of captive and scattered Israel, and his daily responsibility is to hear and speak the words of God.

“When ye are weary he waketh morning by morning.” Though Israel would rather slumber spiritually, the Father repeatedly awakens her to his word of truth and righteousness.

“He waketh mine ear to hear as the learned.” The Father speaks to and teaches his servant in continuing revelation.

5 The Lord God hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious, neither turned away back.

verse 5 The Lord God through revelation has given me great understanding, and I have not turned away from him.

verses 6-7 These two verses are particularly messianic; that is to say, they particularly suggest that the “servant” is the Savior.

6 I gave my back to the smiter, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair. I hid not my face from shame and spitting.

verse 6 Apparently, this servant’s responsibility is to hear and speak the words of God, and this obligation will not be accomplished without adversity. The verse may be interpreted as, “I exposed my back to those who would beat me, and I did not stop them when they insulted me by pulling the hairs out of my beard and by spitting in my face.” In Isaiah’s day, the beard was regarded as a sign of dignity and respect. To pluck hairs out of the beard was to show utter contempt. The servant submitted himself to great insult for his testimony, and there was no inclination for retaliation. These torments are, of course, reminiscent of Christ during his arrest, trial, and crucifixion.

“I hid not my face” The servant did not try to hide or escape from persecution. Nephi wrote of Christ: “And the world, because of their iniquity, shall judge him to be a thing of naught; wherefore they scourge him, and he suffereth it; and they smite him, and he suffereth it. Yea, they spit upon him, and he suffereth it, because of his loving kindness and his long-suffering towards the children of men” (1 Nephi 19:9).

7 For the Lord God will help me, therefore shall I not be confounded. Therefore have I set my face like a flint, and I know that I shall not be ashamed.

verse 7 “Confounded” means disgraced. Their insults cannot hurt me because of the help I receive from the Father. I am able to brace myself to withstand the insults, and I know that I will not be disgraced.

8 And the Lord is near, and he justifieth me. Who will contend with me? Let us stand together. Who is mine adversary? Let him come near me, and I will smite him with the strength of my mouth.

verse 8 “he justifieth me” The “Lord” (the Father) will validate all that the servant has done in his ministry and will hold him blameless.

“Who will contend with me?” If the Father is willing to defend me, then who would dare bring charges against me or fight with me.

“Let us stand together.” The servant appeals to the Father to stand by him and defend him.

“Who is mine adversary?” With the Lord God standing by me, who would dare become my adversary?

“I will smite him with the strength of my mouth.” With the Father’s help, I can effectively answer any of my adversary’s accusations.

9 For the Lord God will help me. And all they who shall condemn me, behold, all they shall wax old as a garment, and the moth shall eat them up.

verse 9 “all they shall wax old as a garment, and the moth shall eat them up” One of the definitions of wax in Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language is, “To pass from one state to another; to become.” My accusers will all be destroyed as cloth is destroyed by time and moths.

verses 10-11 Isaiah ends this chapter by admonishing Israel to follow the “servant”—either Christ or his prophets.

Two classes of people are contrasted in these two verses. One class consists of those who fear the Lord and obey his servant (verse 10). They will not walk in spiritual darkness but will have spiritual light. The other class consists of those who seek to be spiritually self-sufficient, relying on themselves instead of on God. They attempt to create their own light (verse 11), but their efforts produce no more than sparks when compared to the bright light that comes from God. Those in this latter group will eventually receive judgments from the Lord that result in sorrow.

10 Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of his servant, that walketh in darkness and hath no light?

verse 10 To walk “in darkness” is to be without spiritual light.

Isaiah asks, “Who fears the Lord and obeys God’s servant, yet still walks in darkness?” The answer is, No one. The implication is that since Israel is walking by her own light rather than God’s, her people were obviously not fearing God and obeying his servant.

11 Behold all ye that kindle fire, that compass yourselves about with sparks, walk in the light of your fire and in the sparks which ye have kindled. This shall ye have of mine hand—ye shall lie down in sorrow.

verse 11 Once again, Isaiah speaks messianically, or as though he were the Lord.

“Behold all ye that kindle fire, that compass yourselves about with sparks, walk in the light of your fire and in the sparks which ye have kindled.” This expression refers to those who walk in their own way, according to their own will, rather than according to the will and direction of the Lord.

As a side note here, Dr. Royal Skousen has argued persuasively that Oliver Cowdery misheard Joseph Smith’s dictation of this passage. Though the text of the original manuscript for this passage is missing, he suggests that it should more appropriately read “kindle a fire” which, of course, sounds very similar and is consistent with Isaiah 50:11.

“This shall ye have of mine hand—ye shall lie down in sorrow.” To “lie down” probably means to die. You shall die in spiritual misery.

Latter-day revelation provides evidence that the proper context for 2 Nephi 7 (Isaiah 50) is the last days at the time of the second coming. D&C 133, the so-called appendix to the Doctrine and Covenants records prophecies of the latter-day, pre-millennial period:

And upon them that hearken not to the voice of the Lord shall be fulfilled that which was written by the prophet . . . Malachi: For, behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch.

Wherefore, this shall be the answer of the Lord unto them: In that day when I came unto mine own, no man among you received me, and you were driven out. When I called again there was none of you to answer; yet my arm was not shortened at all that I could not redeem, neither my power to deliver. Behold, at my rebuke I dry up the sea. I make the rivers a wilderness; their fish stink, and die for thirst.

I clothe the heavens with blackness, and make sackcloth their covering. And this shall ye have of my hand—ye shall lie down in sorrow.

Behold, and lo, there are none to deliver you; for ye obeyed not my voice when I called to you out of the heavens; ye believed not my servants, and when they were sent unto you ye received them not. Wherefore, they sealed up the testimony and bound up the law, and ye were delivered over unto darkness. These shall go away into outer darkness, where there is weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth. Behold the Lord your God hath spoken it. Amen (D&C 133:63-74).

2 Nephi Chapter 8

Chapter 8 consists of Jacob's quoting Isaiah's writings from the plates of brass. These writings correspond to Isaiah 51 and Isaiah 52:1-2 of our modern-day book of Isaiah.

It seems likely that the events in this chapter are most appropriately placed in the last days. The Lord calls to his people Israel, and perhaps most specifically to members of his Church, asking them to hearken to his words. At the conclusion of the last days, as the Lord ushers in the Millennium, he will bring an end to the fallen condition of the earth. He will renew the earth and restore it to its Edenic or millennial state. The Lord will dwell among his people. As the events of the last days unfold, the Lord assures us that if we are righteous, we need not fear the works of man. The Lord is greater than any man, and he will help us. He reminds us of his works of power in times past. By that same power he will bring Zion and fulfill all his promises to her.

verses 1-2 In these verses, Isaiah reminds his people of their heritage, namely that they are descended from Abraham with whom important covenants of great posterity and lands were made. Here Isaiah again is speaking messianically, as though he were the Lord.

1 Hearken unto me, ye that follow after righteousness. Look unto the rock from whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit from whence ye are digged.

verse 1 "Hearken unto me, ye that follow after righteousness." Listen to me and follow me, all of you that seek exaltation. To "follow after righteousness" is to choose the good and godly way of life, to follow our God in all things.

"Look unto the rock from whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit from whence ye are digged." Look to your ancestry, your origins, your noble heritage. Remember the rock and quarry from whence you came. Israel had her beginnings in father Abraham, and Israel must keep the covenants that God made with him.

2 Look unto Abraham, your father, and unto Sarah, she that bare you; for I called him alone, and blessed him.

verse 2 "she that bare you" For Nephites and Lamanites also, of course, Abraham was their ancestor, their "father," and Sarah was "she that bare you" (cf. Alma 13:15).

"for I called him alone, and blessed him" These phrases have reference to the unique Abrahamic covenant which the Lord made with Abraham alone. With this covenant the Lord blessed the house of Israel.

3 For the Lord shall comfort Zion, he will comfort all her waste places; and he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the Lord. Joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving and the voice of melody.

verse 3 It is likely that these events are millennial and refer to the millennial restoration.

Isaiah's reference here to "Zion" is somewhat problematic. The reader must decide which definition of Zion is applicable. Isaiah may have had reference to latter-day Jerusalem. Jerusalem was laid waste by Babylon in 586 B.C. and by Rome in AD 70. Or perhaps Isaiah may have envisioned latter-day Zion, the "New Jerusalem," and those Israelites who gather there. In this latter case the term "Zion" would refer to latter-day gathered Israel. Perhaps both meanings are appropriate. Isaiah was certainly shown by revelation the future scatterings of Israel. Keep in mind that Assyria captured the northern ten tribes between 732 and 722 BC which was during Isaiah's lifetime. Thus the scattering and laying waste to Israel was very much a current and pertinent topic. If the reader desires to study a detailed discussion of the concept of Zion, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 27, Zion.

"For the Lord shall comfort Zion" "he will comfort all her waste places" Jerusalem, which was wasted, will be blessed and restored. Also the Lord will show compassion to those latter-day Israelites who are scattered and assist them in gathering and build them up physically and spiritually.

"he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the Lord" The land of Jerusalem or Israel, which has long been as desolate as a desert, will be made into a fruitful garden like Eden. Actually, the whole earth will be changed. The tenth Article of Faith states: "The earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory." In a more spiritual and metaphorical vein, when we truly come to Zion, which implies a union with one another and with our God, the wilderness and desert areas of our souls will be renewed and blessed.

"Joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving and the voice of melody" In contrast with the sorrow and misery suffered by the exiled Israelites who have been wandering in sin, among gathered Israelites—in latter-day Zion—there will be songs of thanks and rejoicing and praise unto God.

4 Hearken unto me, my people; and give ear unto me, O my nation; for a law shall proceed from me, and I will make my judgment to rest for a light for the people.

verse 4 "Hearken" and "give ear," of course, mean listen.

"My people" are likely all of Israel, or perhaps in a more narrow sense, particularly those who have gathered unto the Lord.

"a law shall proceed from me" The Lord, "our lawgiver" (Isaiah 33:22), will reveal the gospel law. He will restore his gospel to the earth.

“I will make my judgment to rest for a light for the people” The Lord’s “judgment” (justice or law) is a “light” in that it is steady, reliable, and true. Also, the Lord himself is a light or beacon for the people. It would seem that the phrase “to rest for” may mean “to act as.”

5 My righteousness is near; my salvation is gone forth, and mine arm shall judge the people. The isles shall wait upon me, and on mine arm shall they trust.

verse 5 “My righteousness is near; my salvation is gone forth” The time of my second coming is at hand.

“mine arm shall judge the people” The Lord’s “arm” refers to his power. The Lord’s arm of judgment is his justice. The Lord himself will be our judge: “He employeth no servant there” (2 Nephi 9:41).

“The isles shall wait upon me” The word “isles” refers to scattered Israel and perhaps in this case gathering Israel wherever they may be found on the earth. These look to me.

“on mine arm shall they trust” To trust in the arm of the Lord is to trust in the Lord himself. This is in contrast to the arm of flesh, or the ability of man (including our own selves), in which we must never trust.

6 Lift up your eyes to the heavens, and look upon the earth beneath; for the heavens shall vanish away like smoke, and the earth shall wax old like a garment; and they that dwell therein shall die in like manner. But my salvation shall be forever, and my righteousness shall not be abolished.

verse 6 “Lift up your eyes to the heavens” Here, clearly, the Lord speaks of his second coming and the events surrounding it. In this verse, when the Lord speaks of the heavens’ and earth’s passing away, he is foretelling the events either immediately prior to the Millennium or after the Millennium. This latter time is before the earth’s celestial transformation.

“heavens shall vanish” Though the earthly heavens and the earth itself as we know them seem permanent, they will vanish or “pass away” when the Lord comes again in glory. They will be replaced by new heavens (2 Peter 3:10; 3 Nephi 26:3; D&C 45:22) and a new earth—a terrestrial or paradisiacal earth and heavens. It is difficult, if not impossible, for us—with our current limited state of understanding—to understand the meaning of a “new heaven” or “new heavens.”

“like smoke” Smoke is visible in the air only briefly and then vanishes.

“the earth shall wax old like a garment” This phrase is good example of a figure of speech known as a simile (see the introductory commentary for Jacob 5).

It is part of Latter-day Saint theology that the earth is a living entity with a spirit (or spirits) and a body (or bodies), and that it will die and then be resurrected. Though heaven and earth will pass away, just as all clothing deteriorates and disintegrates, the Lord and his righteousness continue forever.

7 Hearken unto me, ye that know righteousness, the people in whose heart I have written my law, fear ye not the reproach of men, neither be ye afraid of their revilings.

verse 7 “ye that know righteousness” Again Isaiah speaks messianically to the Lord’s people—his Church.

“in whose heart I have written my law” We are truly of God when not only our acts reflect obedience to God’s law but when our hearts—meaning our true feelings, desires, attitudes, and intentions—are all turned to do his will. When we submit ourselves to God, he writes his law in our hearts even as he wrote the law on tablets of stone in Moses’s day.

“fear ye not the reproach of men, neither be ye afraid of their revilings” For those of you who accept the Lord there will be inevitable opposition, but do not be afraid when people taunt and insult you.

8 For the moth shall eat them up like a garment, and the worm shall eat them like wool. But my righteousness shall be forever, and my salvation from generation to generation.

verse 8 “the moth shall eat them up like a garment” All things earthly, including the godless men who would reproach the Lord’s people, are transitory and subject to corruption and decay, as is a garment. But the Lord’s righteousness is permanent and never ends.

“from generation to generation” This phrase symbolizes forever.

verses 9-11 Now the first person or speaker changes. Isaiah is no longer speaking messianically as though he were the Lord. The speaker is Israel herself, especially those of Israel who “follow after righteousness.” They cry unto the Lord for assurance that he will indeed bring the promised blessings.

9 Awake, awake! Put on strength, O arm of the Lord; awake as in the ancient days. Art thou not he that hath cut Rahab, and wounded the dragon?

verse 9 “Awake, awake!” Please awaken to our plight, Lord, and help us!

“Put on strength, O arm of the Lord . . . as in the ancient days.” The Hebrew reads “clothe yourself with strength.” Use thy power and authority to save us, as you did in ancient times. The phrase “ancient days” here has reference to the time of Moses—the miracles in Egypt, the exodus, the wanderings in the wilderness, and the entry into Palestine.

“Rahab” Was it not you who cut the dragon Rahab into pieces? At the time of Isaiah an ancient myth existed regarding the creation of the world. According to the myth, Rahab the dragon was vanquished by the Lord and cut in two, to form the heaven and the earth. Rahab signified chaos. Chaos is overcome through creation. In other words, the question being asked here might be “Was it not you who created heaven and earth?”

Alternatively, the symbol of Rahab the dragon was commonly used to refer to Egypt. Perhaps Isaiah is reminding the people of the Lord’s victory over Egypt when he worked his miracles there. The next verse suggests that this latter was Isaiah’s intent.

In any case the point of the imagery here is that the Lord has power over all of the elements and all of his enemies.

10 Art thou not he who hath dried the sea, the waters of the great deep; that hath made the depths of the sea a way for the ransomed to pass over?

verse 10 Here, clearly, Isaiah has reference to the Lord’s miracles in leading the Israelites out of Egypt. God dried up the sea so the children of Israel could cross.

“the ransomed” To “ransom” is to obtain the release of a captive by paying the price. “The ransomed” are obviously the Israelites whom the Lord rescued from bondage in Egypt, which is a type for the bondage of sin from which Christ ransomed humankind.

11 Therefore, the redeemed of the Lord shall return, and come with singing unto Zion; and everlasting joy and holiness shall be upon their heads; and they shall obtain gladness and joy; sorrow and mourning shall flee away.

verse 11 As were the ancient Israelites at the time of Moses, scattered Israel will be ransomed and redeemed in the latter days. As the Latter-day Saints gather in Zion, they will sing and shout for joy.

The “everlasting Joy and holiness” which “shall be upon their heads” suggests priesthood ordinances, specifically the ordinances of the temple.

As the Israelites gather, they will do so with great rejoicing, as they will realize that the prophecies are being fulfilled. This joy will even displace the sorrows resulting from Israel’s trials.

verses 12-16 In these verses Isaiah again speaks as though he were the Lord and asks scattered Israel three questions. He then answers them in reverse order. The three questions are: Why do you fear mortal man? Have you forgotten your Creator? Why fear your oppressors? The answers are (in reverse order): You will be freed from your oppressors. I am the great Creator. You are my people, and I will teach and protect you.

12 I am he; yea, I am he that comforteth you. Behold, who art thou, that thou shouldst be afraid of man, who shall die, and of the son of man, who shall be made like unto grass?

verse 12 “I am he that comforteth you” I am the one who strengthens you.

Why should you fear mortal man and his offspring who are no more enduring than grass? Grass, of course, withers quickly and dies easily as do humans. The expression “son of man” (without a capital “m”) refers not to Jesus Christ but to the offspring of mortal man.

13 And forgettest the Lord thy maker, that hath stretched forth the heavens, and laid the foundations of the earth, and hast feared continually every day, because of the fury of the oppressor, as if he were ready to destroy? And where is the fury of the oppressor?

verse 13 The first sentence in this verse is complex, and its construction makes it difficult for the reader to realize that he is reading a question. This question contains two separate ideas. The first is, “Have you forgotten the Lord who created you—the same who created heaven and earth?” The second is, “Why should you live in constant fear of the fury of those who oppress you and those who seem ready to destroy you?”

“and hast feared continually every day” And hast thou feared continually? Scattered Israelites throughout history have often lived as scattered and fragmented groups living among other dominant cultures. In this situation, living outside of Zion and outside of the comfort and protection of a major body of Israelites, they have often lived as a repressed and oppressed minority. They have been regarded by those who rule over them with suspicion and even jealousy.

“And where is the fury of the oppressor?” This question is really the Lord’s first answer: Their fury can no longer touch you.

14 The captive exile hasteneth, that he may be loosed, and that he should not die in the pit, nor that his bread should fail.

verse 14 “The captive exile hasteneth, that he may be loosed” Again, the “captive exile” is scattered Israel. The captive’s period of exile hastens to its conclusion, and he is freed.

“and that he should not die in the pit” He will not be allowed to die in exile. The “pit” is a place of captivity, such as a dungeon. It can also refer to Sheol, the place of the dead.

“nor that his bread should fail” He will not be allowed to starve in exile—to suffer for lack of nourishment, either physical or spiritual.

15 But I am the Lord thy God, whose waves roared; the Lord of Hosts is my name.

verse 15 This verse seems to have a few words missing. What was probably intended was “I am the Lord thy God, that divided the sea whose waves roared” as is found in Isaiah 51:15 (“Conjectural Emendation and the Text of the Book of Mormon,” Stan Larson, a FARMS reprint).

“I am the Lord thy God” “the Lord of Hosts is my name” Here is the answer to the second question. The phrase “Lord of Hosts” implies that he is the ruler over great numbers on earth and in heaven, even a great heavenly army.

16 And I have put my words in thy mouth, and have covered thee in the shadow of mine hand, that I may plant the heavens and lay the foundations of the earth, and say unto Zion: Behold, thou art my people.

verse 16 “And I have put my words in thy mouth” I have provided you with instruction, with my gospel, and with ongoing revelation.

“and have covered thee in the shadow of mine hand” Even though the Lord has allowed his people to be scattered and punished, he has provided them a measure of protection to keep them from being destroyed.

“that I may plant the heavens and lay the foundations of the earth” As the Lord created the heaven and the earth originally, so will he create a new heaven and a new earth in the millennial day.

“and say unto Zion: Behold, thou art my people” The Lord avers that those of Israel are indeed his chosen people. He has not forgotten them.

He thus answers the first question by saying, “You are my people. I have not forgotten you. You have no need to fear any mortal man.”

verses 17-23 Here Isaiah seems to admonish a specific part of scattered Israel, those descended from the land of Judah—largely the Jews. Because of an incessant and almost refractory tendency to apostatize from the truths of the gospel, the ancient Jews were many times punished. They were carried captive to Babylon. Later, some were allowed to return to Jerusalem to rebuild the temple. Soon, however, their spiritual fabric would rend again to the point where most of them would reject Christ during his mortal ministry. Because of their iniquity they would again be scattered under the fist of Rome. However, dispersion and persecution will not be their permanent lot. These verses provide promise that the Lord will again bless and gather them as they return to Christ.

17 Awake, awake, stand up, O Jerusalem, which hast drunk at the hand of the Lord the cup of his fury—thou hast drunken the dregs of the cup of trembling wrung out—verse 17 “Awake, Awake, stand up” Rouse yourself, O Judah, and get up! Hearken to the voice of God.

“which hast drunk at the hand of the Lord the cup of his fury” You have drunk the cup the Lord gave you to drink. The “cup of his fury” is his judgments. You have suffered the relentless oppressions the world has heaped upon you. And no one but you is to blame.

“thou hast drunken the dregs of the cup of trembling wrung out” “Dregs” refers to the last vestiges, the sediment remaining at the bottom of a cup of wine; the last remaining, unwanted part of something. You drank the cup of the Lord’s punishment down to the last drop (“those drops wrung out”), and it made you reel and stagger. The “cup” here is a symbolic expression for the bitter or poisonous potion typifying experiences of suffering.

18 And none to guide her among all the sons she hath brought forth; neither that taketh her by the hand, of all the sons she hath brought up.

verse 18 There is no one among your people to take you spiritually by the hand and lead you. This verse explains the sorry spiritual state of the Jews. They have no prophets or inspired leaders among their own people (“among all the sons she hath brought forth”). Since there is no one among her own people, she must look elsewhere for spiritual guidance, perhaps to the other remnants of Israel or even to the Gentiles. Unfortunately, there has been an unyielding proud tendency not to do so.

19 These two sons are come unto thee, who shall be sorry for thee—thy desolation and destruction, and the famine and the sword—and by whom shall I comfort thee?

verse 19 “These two sons are come unto thee, who shall be sorry for thee” Perhaps these two sons are the two witnesses who will be instrumental in keeping enemy armies from totally defeating the Jews (Revelation 11:1-6). These will be sent by the Lord because there is no priesthood leadership among the Jews. John the Revelator describes two great servants of God who will stand and fight for Jerusalem against the armies of the world. For three and one-half years they will have power over the heavens, earth, and their enemies. Then they will be killed (Revelation 11:3-13). Joseph Smith prophesied concerning these two witnesses, calling them “two prophets that are to be raised up to the Jewish nation in the last days, at the time of the restoration (D&C 77:15).” Elder Bruce R. McConkie suggests that these two prophets may be Latter-day Saints, perhaps members of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles or of the First Presidency (Doctrinal New Testament Commentary, 3:507-11). For a more complete discussion of the two prophets, see the subtitle “Two prophets in Jerusalem to prophesy, die, and be lifted up after three days” in the section titled “Signs of the Seventh Seal—Prior to the Lord’s Second Coming” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 26, Signs of the Lord’s Second Coming—Those that Punish and Cleanse.

“thy desolation and destruction, and the famine and the sword” A threefold calamity has befallen you—your lands have been devastated by war, your people have starved, and many of your people have fallen by the sword.

“by whom shall I comfort thee?” There is no one to offer you sympathy and comfort.

20 Thy sons have fainted, save these two; they lie at the head of all the streets; as a wild bull in a net, they are full of the fury of the Lord, the rebuke of thy God.

verse 20 “Thy sons have fainted” The Jews have no spiritual leadership among their own people.

“save these two; they lie at the head of all the streets; as a wild bull in a net” These two “sons” or prophets are depicted as a “wild bull in a net.” A bull may be captured, but it is still dangerous until it is worn down or killed. While these two cannot stop the eventual overthrow of Jerusalem, they somehow stay off the destruction until they are finally subdued and killed.

“they are full of the fury of the Lord, the rebuke of thy God” They have been imbued with and they wield the power of God’s anger.

21 Therefore hear now this, thou afflicted, and drunken, and not with wine:

verse 21 “Hear this, you who stagger as though you were drunk.” The Jews are depicted as being drunk and afflicted, not with wine but because they have drunk from the cup of the wrath and punishment of God.

22 Thus saith thy Lord, the Lord and thy God pleadeth the cause of his people; behold, I have taken out of thine hand the cup of trembling, the dregs of the cup of my fury; thou shalt no more drink it again.

verse 22 “Your Lord defends you and says, I am removing the cup which I gave you in my anger—the ‘cup of my fury.’” You will no longer have to drink this “wine” of punishment that renders you drunk and afflicted.

Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines dregs as, “The sediment of liquors; grounds; feculence; any foreign matter of liquors that settles to the bottom of a vessel.”

23 But I will put it into the hand of them that afflict thee; who have said to thy soul: Bow down, that we may go over—and thou hast laid thy body as the ground and as the street to them that went over.

verse 23 “I will put it into the hand of them that afflict thee” I will give the same “wine” or punishment or judgment to those who unrighteously oppress you.

“who have said to thy soul: Bow down, that we may go over—and thou hast laid thy body as the ground and as the street to them that went over” The oppressors of the Jews are characterized as those who made them lie down in the street so that they might trample them, and the Jews had complied with their request. In some ancient societies, the vanquished were forced to lie on the ground while the victor walked over them.

verses 24-25 In this chapter's concluding verses, Jacob quotes from Isaiah 52:1-2. Again, the first person is either Isaiah or the Lord. It would now appear that he is speaking more to gathering Israel in general and not just to the Jews.

24 Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city; for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean.

verse 24 Here is the rallying cry for the latter-day scattered Israel, particularly to their priesthood leaders, to gather Israel.

“Awake, awake” While scattered you have been spiritually sleeping. Here is a call for the covenant people of the Lord to measure up to their responsibilities in the Abraham covenant.

“O Zion . . . O Jerusalem” Zion and Jerusalem are the two capital cities of the Lord's latter-day kingdom. They symbolize all of his gathered covenant people.

“put on thy strength” Roust out your priesthood leaders (see D&C 113:7- 8).

“put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city” Jerusalem (the Jews) must increase in beauty and holiness before the Lord in preparation for their gathering. They must replace her slave garments with beautiful garments, perhaps the garments of royalty and dignity or the holy garments of the temple.

“for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean” They must also purge themselves of those who are disobedient and unrighteous, including disbelieving Gentiles, who will not gather.

25 Shake thyself from the dust; arise, sit down, O Jerusalem; loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion.

verse 25 “Shake thyself from the dust” The Lord's people must rid themselves of “the dust” which represents sin, humiliation, and servitude.

“arise, sit down” The Lord's people are instructed to get up out of the dust, where slaves must sit, and sit instead in a place of honor, as on a throne.

“loose thyself from the bands of thy neck” These bands hold an individual captive. Here these bands are the curses of God placed upon scattered Israel. These curses are removed as members of the house of Israel return to the Lord and repent of their sins. You will be able to free yourselves from the curses that God has placed upon you.

2 Nephi Chapter 9

Scripture Mastery

2 Nephi 9 Jacob's two-day sermon includes teachings on the atonement.

2 Nephi 9:8-9 If there had been no atonement, our spirits must become like him, and we become devils, angels to a devil, to be shut out from the presence of our God, and to remain with the father of lies forever.

2 Nephi 9:21 And he cometh into the world that he may save all men if they will hearken unto his voice; for behold, he suffereth the pains of all men, yea, the pains of every living creature, both men, women, and children, who belong to the family of Adam.

2 Nephi 9:28-29 Intellectualism. When men are learned, they think they are wise, and they hearken not unto the counsel of God, for they set it aside, supposing they know of themselves, wherefore, their wisdom is foolishness and it profiteth them not. And they shall perish. But to be learned is good if they hearken unto the counsels of God.

2 Nephi 9:41 The keeper of the gate is the Holy One of Israel.

Keep in mind that we are still studying the lengthy sermon delivered by Nephi's brother Jacob. Jacob's discourse in this chapter is in fact a commentary on 2 Nephi 7 or Isaiah 50. Commenting on 2 Nephi 7:1-3, Jacob teaches that the Jews will be restored to the true church of God and be reestablished in the land of Palestine (2 Nephi 9:2). In 2 Nephi 7:4-9, Jacob sees a prophecy of the coming of Jesus Christ to the earth. He teaches of the fall of man and the Lord's atonement (2 Nephi 9:4-27). Jacob uses 2 Nephi 7:10-11 as a text to exhort his people to give heed to revelations and the truths of the gospel and not to rely upon their own wisdom (2 Nephi 9:28-43). Finally, using the end of verse 11 of 2 Nephi 7, Jacob exhorts mankind to repentance, and he discourses on the final judgment, the time when all mankind will stand before God to be judged (2 Nephi 9:44-54).

Before studying this chapter, please read Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 19, The Essence of the Lord's Atonement, and volume 2, chapter 2, Consequences of the Savior's Atonement. The several scriptural passages that are especially useful in helping us to understand the Lord's atonement are contained in these chapters and also in 2 Nephi 2, Mosiah 3, and Alma 12, 34, and 42.

1 And now, my beloved brethren, I have read these things that ye might know concerning the covenants of the Lord that he has covenanted with all the house of Israel—verse 1 "I have read these things" Jacob has reference to chapters 7 and 8 of 2 Nephi which are actually chapters 50 and 51 of the book of Isaiah. Verse 54 of this chapter suggests that Jacob read these two Isaiah chapters from the brass plates and then delivered chapter 9 as a major oral address or sermon on one particular day.

2 That he has spoken unto the Jews, by the mouth of his holy prophets, even from the beginning down, from generation to generation, until the time comes that they shall be restored to the true church and fold of God; when they shall be gathered home to the lands of their inheritance, and shall be established in all their lands of promise.

verse 2 “that they shall be restored to the true church and fold of God . . . [and] be gathered home to the lands of their inheritance” Keep in mind that “gathering” has two separate components, spiritual and temporal. This phrase refers to both. A people is gathered spiritually as they accept Christ and join his church. They may be then gathered temporally to a “land of promise” or to a “land of their inheritance.” Here Jacob might be prophesying of the return of the Jews from captivity in Babylon during the time period 538 to 515 BC, though a latter-day final gathering in Palestine seems more likely when the Jews will accept Jesus as their Messiah. Also, as discussed below, Jacob’s use of the term “Jews” here may include more than just the tribe of Judah.

“shall be established in all their lands of promise” The members of the tribe of Judah have been promised one specific land as their “land of inheritance,” the land of Palestine. In this phrase Jacob uses the word “lands” in its plural form which is even further emphasized by the modifier “all.” Also in the next verse Jacob seems to apply this promise of restoration to a “land of inheritance” to his contemporaries whom he is addressing there in the western hemisphere. It would thus seem likely that Jacob may have intended his use of the word “Jews” to include more than just the tribe of Judah. He seems to be including at least the tribe of Joseph to which he and his brethren belong. The promised land of the tribe of Joseph is the western hemisphere. The term “Jews” here likely refers to all those who inhabited the kingdom of Judah, which may have included people from each of the twelve tribes of Israel. It may, in fact, include all of scattered Israel.

3 Behold, my beloved brethren, I speak unto you these things that ye may rejoice, and lift up your heads forever, because of the blessings which the Lord God shall bestow upon your children.

verse 3 Obviously, Jacob believes that the promises of restoration promised to the “Jews” apply to the descendants of his own tribe, the tribe of Joseph whom he refers to here as “your children.”

4 For I know that ye have searched much, many of you, to know of things to come; wherefore I know that ye know that our flesh must waste away and die; nevertheless, in our bodies we shall see God.

verse 4 Jacob now changes the subject and begins to discourse on the doctrines of the fall, the atonement, and resurrection.

“ye have searched much” A sobering question that might be asked of any member of the Church in this latter day is, “When was the last time you made a sincere and diligent effort to search, through prayer and scripture reading, for spiritual truths?”

“our flesh must waste away and die” Because of the fall of Adam, decay and death are the literal inheritance of every human being on this earth. There is no escape, and there are no exceptions.

“nevertheless, in our bodies we shall see God” Jacob introduces his discussion of the doctrine of the resurrection which will continue in verses 5-7 that follow. Please note that the first time the doctrine of the resurrection was given to the earth was not during the mortal ministry of Christ. The doctrine was understood by Adam (Moses 5:10) and likely by all subsequent prophets.

5 Yea, I know that ye know that in the body he shall show himself unto those at Jerusalem, from whence we came; for it is expedient that it should be among them; for it behooveth the great Creator that he suffereth himself to become subject unto man in the flesh, and die for all men, that all men might become subject unto him.

verse 5 “in the body he shall show himself to those at Jerusalem” The phrase “in the body” suggests that this verse applies to Christ’s appearances following his resurrection. Christ in his resurrected body, of course, did show himself to his disciples in Jerusalem. Also, he will yet appear to those at Jerusalem at his second coming.

“for it is expedient that it should be among them” This provocative phrase suggests that there was a particular reason why the resurrected Lord appeared to those “at Jerusalem,” or in the area of Jerusalem. What is that reason? Perhaps he appeared to these particular people as a witness to the world that whereas he was at one time subject to death and to those in the area of Jerusalem who executed him, now he has demonstrated to people in the same area that death and all men are subject to him.

“it behooveth the great Creator . . . that all men might become subject unto him” Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines behooveth as, “To be necessary for; to be fit for; to be meet for, with respect to necessity, duty, or convenience.” Christ’s ordeal in Gethsemane and on the cross was absolutely essential according to the law of justice and served to qualify him to be able to cleanse each of us of our sins as we repent and obey his commandments.

verses 6-16 These verses are among the most valuable in all scripture in providing truths about the Fall and the Atonement.

6 For as death hath passed upon all men, to fulfil the merciful plan of the great Creator, there must needs be a power of resurrection, and the resurrection must needs come unto man by reason of the fall; and the fall came by reason of transgression; and because man became fallen they were cut off from the presence of the Lord.

verse 6 “death hath passed upon all men” The death inherited from the fall of Adam is of two kinds, physical and spiritual.

Intuitively we all understand physical death—the separation of body and spirit. Spiritual death is spiritual alienation from God. It may or may not imply a physical separation from God. Some have distinguished a first spiritual death from a second spiritual death. The separation from God we experience because of the fall of Adam is temporary, and we are not to blame. This is the “first spiritual death.” When a person reaches the age of accountability, understands the difference between good and evil, and commits sin, he suffers the “second spiritual death.” It is the same spiritual death suffered by all accountable individuals. If such a person fully repents, accepts the gospel, and is properly baptized of water and of the Spirit, he can be spiritually born again through the cleansing action of the Holy Ghost and he may qualify to enter God’s presence. In our lifetime, we will all likely experience many second spiritual deaths and, through sincere repentance, many rebirths.

Because of Adam’s sin, we are (1) all obligated to suffer physical death and (2) we are all assigned a temporary physical and spiritual separation from God. All are redeemed unconditionally from both of these by the Savior’s resurrection. Thus, all will be resurrected, and all will be returned to the presence of God, at least long enough to be judged.

Because of our own sins, however, we suffer a “permanent” spiritual death, we become “permanently” separated from God. This “permanent” alienation has a solution. Read on!

“merciful plan of the great Creator” This is the “plan of salvation.” Man has always had a deep need to discern some design, purpose, pattern, or plan regarding his existence. This has been referred to as man’s “architectonic” need. That our God is a God of order and has a well-defined plan for the redemption of his children is clear from other references in the Book of Mormon. The “plan of salvation” is also mentioned in the Book of Mormon in Jarom 1:2, Alma 24:14, and Alma 42:5. The same plan is referred to by other names several times in the Book of Mormon including: “the way of deliverance of our God” (2 Nephi 9:11), “the plan of our God” (2 Nephi 9:13), the “eternal plan of deliverance” (2 Nephi 11:5), “the great plan of redemption” (Jacob 6:8),

“the plan of redemption” (Alma 12:25), the “plan of happiness” (Alma 42:8), and the “plan of mercy” (Alma 42:15). It is interesting to note that nowhere in the Bible is it even mentioned that God has a plan for the salvation of his children. We know, however, that Old and New Testament authors knew about the plan of salvation. We read, for example, in the books of Abraham and Moses in the Pearl of Great Price about the pre-earth life and the Grand Council that we attended there. In these books, these concepts are mentioned but briefly. Evidently, they were assumed to be common knowledge among those for whom these books were originally written. Peter’s reference to Christ’s visit to the spirit world also illustrates this point. He obviously did not intend to give a discourse on the subject. Rather, his reference to spirit prison was only used in making another point (1 Peter 3:18-19).

Actually, three Book of Mormon prophets are responsible for most of the teachings in the book on the Lord’s plan of salvation. These are Lehi, Jacob, and Alma the Younger. Though all three taught the same doctrines, Lehi’s emphasis was focused more on the fall, opposition, and the agency afforded to all to choose between good and evil. Jacob, meanwhile, put more emphasis on the atonement, resurrection, and the eternal outcome from choosing either righteousness or filthiness. Alma, reflecting the needs of his time, emphasized repentance, redemption, justice and mercy, and the resultant happiness that the righteous will enjoy in the rest of the Lord.

Having access to the fullness of the Plan of Salvation is one of the most profound and distinctive blessings that sets Latter-day Saints apart from the world. And it is the Book of Mormon that, first and foremost, repeatedly lays out the foundational doctrines of the Father’s plan. Making this Plan of Salvation known is one of the things the Book of Mormon does best.

“To fulfil” The end result of this plan of salvation is to be resurrected and exalted and return to the presence of God. This verse might be made slightly clearer by removing the comma after the word Creator. We might also add “in order” prior to the words “to fulfill.” Then we would read, “In order to fulfill the merciful plan of the great Creator there must needs be a power of resurrection.” In other words, God’s plan for us cannot be fulfilled without our being resurrected.

“there must needs be a power of resurrection” The power of resurrection resulted from Christ’s suffering in Gethsemane and on the cross and is given freely to all men born into mortality—all will be resurrected.

“the resurrection must needs come unto man by reason of the fall” At first reading, this phrase suggests that the resurrection resulted from the fall. This is not the case. Rather, the resurrection was made necessary by the fall. Adam’s sin, also referred to as the fall of Adam, resulted in the inevitable physical death of all men born into mortality. Thus, it became necessary that man be eventually resurrected.

“the fall came by reason of transgression” Many would distinguish between transgression and sin. Transgression implies simply breaking of a law, whereas sin implies willful disobedience. President Joseph Fielding Smith taught that Adam and Eve were not guilty of sin—only transgression. He said, “I never speak of the part Eve took in this fall as a sin, nor do I accuse Adam of a sin” (Doctrines of Salvation 1:114). Joseph Smith said, “Adam did not commit sin in eating the fruit, for God had decreed that he should eat and fall” (The Words of Joseph Smith, 63). Adam and Eve knowingly broke a commandment so that they might become parents to the children of God. They knowingly partook of the fruit. They had to deliberately break one commandment in order to keep a greater one. They were, then, were guilty of transgression and not sin.

“they were cut off from the presence of the Lord” This phrase is discussed in the commentary for the phrase “death hath passed upon all men” at the beginning of this verse.

7 Wherefore, it must needs be an infinite atonement—save it should be an infinite atonement this corruption could not put on incorruption. Wherefore, the first judgment which came upon man must needs have remained to an endless duration. And if so, this flesh must have laid down to rot and to crumble to its mother earth, to rise no more.

verse 7 “infinite atonement” What is an “infinite atonement” or “infinite sacrifice” (Alma 34:10)? Actually, the Savior’s atonement is infinite in a number of ways:

1. It is infinite because of the scope and comprehensiveness of its coverage. The effects of the atonement extend to all of the worlds that Christ has created and to all mankind therein (Moses 1:33; 7:30; see also McConkie’s Mormon Doctrine, 65; Marion G. Romney, “Jesus Christ, Lord of the Universe,” 46). Elder McConkie observed: “Just as the creative and redemptive powers of Christ extend to the earth and all things thereon, as also to the infinite expanse of worlds in immensity, so the power of the resurrection is universal in scope. Man, the earth, and all life thereon will come forth in the resurrection. And the resurrection applies to and is going on in other worlds and other galaxies” (Mormon Doctrine, 642).

What about other forms of life? What about the animals, the plants, the lower forms of life? And what about the earth itself with all of the “inanimate” materials that constitute the earth? Are these not simply embodied intelligences? Are they not also subject to the fall of Adam, and do they not maintain their agency and are they not capable of sin and thus capable of sinning and falling on their own? Do not all intelligences have their agency and the opportunity to test themselves against opposition? Will they all experience a temporal death? And what about a spiritual death? Are they not all also in need of the blessings of the atonement? They are.

Elder Joseph Fielding Smith spoke directly to this point: “It is a very inconsistent notion which is held by some, that the resurrection will only come to human souls, that the animals and plants have no spirits and therefore are not redeemed by the sacrifice of the Son of God, and hence they are not entitled to the resurrection” (Answers to Gospel Questions, 5:7). The Lord promised that “all old things shall pass away, and all things shall become new, . . . both men and beasts, the fowls of the air, and the fishes of the sea” (D&C 29:24). President Brigham Young wrote: “Christ is the author of this Gospel, of this earth, of men and women, of all the posterity of Adam and Eve, and of every living creature that lives upon the face of the earth, that flies in the heavens, that swims in the waters, or dwells in the field. Christ is the author of salvation to all this creation; to all things pertaining to this telestial globe we occupy. . . he has redeemed the earth; he has redeemed mankind and every living thing that moves upon it” (JD, 3:80-81). Elder Bruce R. McConkie, in discussing the “heresy” of believing that man was the end product of evolution, said: “When those who espouse this view talk of a fall and an atonement, they falsely assume such applies only to man rather than to the earth and all forms of life, as the scriptures attest” (“Seven Deadly Heresies,” Devotional Speeches of the Year [Provo: BYU Press, 1980], 7-8). Elder Talmage shared similar feelings “We learn from scripture that Adam’s transgression brought about a fallen condition, not of mankind alone, but likewise of the earth itself. In this and in numerous other epochal events, . . . nature is seen to be in intimate relation with man” (Essential James E. Talmage, 211).

The inanimate earth also is experiencing a life cycle analogous with that of man. It was created or “born” spiritually when the intelligences that inhabit the inanimate materials of the earth were embodied with bodies of spirit matter. It experienced a mortal creation or birth when the spirit earth was embodied with mortal matter. In the early period of the earth’s creation, the earth was located “near Kolob,” that great star near the throne of God, and thus not in its present solar system (John Taylor, The Mormon, August 29, 1857). At the time of the fall of Adam, the earth fell from its original location into its present solar system (JD, 17:143; see also JD, 9:317; Mormon Doctrine, 212). The earth experienced its baptism by the flood at the time of Noah. Perhaps its “baptism by fire and the Holy Ghost” will occur prior to the Lord’s second coming, and it is possible that at that time all of the telestial elements will be purged from the earth. Finally, at the end of the thousand years, the earth will die, shed all of its terrestrial elements, and be resurrected with a celestial eternal body. It will return back the presence of God and become the abode of all celestial beings. The prophet Joseph explained: “The earth shall be rolled back in pristine purity, into its primeval orbit, and the inhabitants thereof dwell upon it in perfect peace and righteousness” (Biography and Family Record of Lorenzo Snow, 333).

Joseph Fielding Smith spoke of the death of the earth and its subsequent quickening or resurrection made possible only by the atonement: “The earth, as a living body, will have to die and be resurrected, for it, too, has been redeemed by the blood of Jesus Christ” (Doctrines of Salvation, 1:74). Thus, we may conclude that animals, fish, fowl, trees, and even the “inanimate” earth itself are heirs to the plan of redemption. So all-inclusive and so glorious are the atonement's far-reaching powers that every form of life will "praise the name of the Lord" (Psalm 148:13; see also Revelation 5:7-9, 13), and "declare his name forever and ever!" (D&C 128:23; see also D&C 77:2-3).

2. It is infinite because of its completeness and depth. It is infinite not only in who it covers, but what it covers. It covers all sins except for the sin against the Holy Ghost. There is no escape for those guilty of the unpardonable sin. This is not because the atonement lacks in any degree in its infinite nature, but rather because these souls rejected the gift of repentance that had been offered. To reject a gift is not to disprove its existence. One is reminded of the friend of Galileo who refused to look through his telescope "because he really did not want to see that which he had so firmly denied." Simply put, the atonement can open the door to salvation if we will but turn the key.

The atonement completely overcomes a universal reality, in fact the most universal reality of which we are aware, physical death and the first death. The latter is the temporary spiritual death due to the fall of Adam. It also makes possible the overcoming of the second spiritual death—the spiritual death due to a man's own sins—for all mankind.

3. It is infinite because of its timelessness. Its effects are timeless—that is, they apply to people born from the time of Adam to the end of the Millennium and even before and after. It applies to all of God's creations, past, present, and future. In the premortal council, the Savior covenanted with the Father to perform the atonement. John Taylor wrote, "A covenant was entered into between him and his Father, in which he agreed to atone for the sins of the world" (Mediation and Atonement, 97), and hence he became known as "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Revelation 13:8; see also Moses 7:47).

Even though he did not actually atone until his mortal ministry, his covenant, his pledge was considered good enough by those who enforce the demand of the law of justice. God "cannot break" a covenant (D&C 84:40). And what about the premortal world? Do those spirits need the blessings of the atonement? Do the blessings of atonement apply there? In the premortal world, there is good and evil. There is agency and a need for repentance. There is spiritual growth and a lack of spiritual growth. Hence the blessings of the atonement are vital there as well.

Orson Pratt believed and taught: "We see no impropriety in Jesus's offering himself as an acceptable offering and sacrifice before the Father to atone for the sins of his brethren, committed, not only in the second, but also in the first estate" (The Seer, 1 [number 4]: 54, italics mine). The Doctrine and Covenants seems to confirm this notion: "Every spirit of man was innocent in the beginning [referring to our spirit birth]; and God having redeemed man from the fall [referring to the atonement], men became again, in their infant state [referring to mortal birth], innocent before God" (D&C 93:38). Every man was also innocent at the moment of his birth into mortality. This includes those born before the Savior's atoning experience in Gethsemane and at Calvary.

Nevertheless, this innocence at birth was and is possible only by virtue of the Lord's infinite atonement.

And, finally, what about the post-mortal spirits? Of course, the atonement is operative there as well (see D&C 138:19, 58).

4. It is infinite because its source was infinite. The atonement was wrought by a divine, immortal, infinite being who made a perfectly sinless offering. The one who atoned was a God who is infinite in knowledge, power, and glory. He had committed no sin and therefore was not subject to the fall of Adam. He was able to die, yet he was not inevitably subject to death. He had power over death, yet he laid down his life voluntarily.

5. It is infinite in the extent of suffering endured by the Redeemer. He came to know the sum total of the human plight, not just because he witnessed it, but because he embraced and experienced it. The Savior's plunge into humanity was not a toe-dipping experience. It was a total immersion. He did not experience some pains and not others. His life was not a random sampling, a spot audit. It was a total confrontation with—and internalization of—every human experience, every human plight, every human trial. Somehow his sponge alone would absorb the entire ocean of human affliction, weakness, and suffering. For this descent, he would fully bare his human breast. There would be no godly powers exercised that would shield him from one scintilla of human pain. "He suffered the pain of all men, that all men might repent and come unto him" (D&C 18:11). His suffering was something far deadlier than death.

Christ's atonement was a descent into the seemingly "bottomless pit" of human agony. He experienced the sufferings of the most wretched of all sinners. He descended beneath the cruelest tortures devised by man. He experienced the agony of loneliness, the burden of depression, the pain of inadequacy, the suffering of infirmities and sickness. He suffered all sorrow, all mental, emotional, and physical hurt, and all weakness of every kind that afflicts mankind. He knows the depth of sorrow from bereavement. He knows the widow's anguish. He understands the agonizing parental pain when children go astray. He has felt the striking pain of cancer and every other debilitating ailment heaped upon man. Impossible as it may seem, he has somehow taken upon himself those feelings of inadequacy, sometimes even utter hopelessness, that accompany our rejections and weaknesses. There is no mortal condition, however gruesome or ugly or hopeless it may seem, that has escaped his grasp or his suffering. The Lord has reminded us of our inability to fully empathize.

While speaking to the prophet Joseph Smith he described his own sufferings: "How sore you know not, how exquisite you know not, yea, how hard to bear you know not" (D&C 19:15). For a more complete discussion of this most essential aspect of the Lord's atonement, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 19, The Essence of the Lord's Atonement.

It is also clear that no mortal man could have withstood that which the Savior suffered and remained alive for the entire ordeal. Death would have come to other men as a welcome relief long before the intensity and duration of this infinite ordeal had reached its zenith. Joseph Fielding Smith testified: "I do not care what his fortitude, what his power, there was no man ever born into this world that could have stood under the weight of the load that was upon the Son of God, when he was carrying my sins and yours. . . . [It] was beyond the power of mortal man either to accomplish or endure" (Doctrines of Salvation 1:130-31).

The very name Gethsemane has possibly symbolic significance. Geth or gat in Hebrew means "press," shemen means "oil." Olive oil is created when seasoned olives are placed on a stone in strong bags. Then they are crushed with a huge stone to press out the oil. Brother Truman Madsen has observed that, "the symbolism of the place is inescapable" ("Olive Press," Radiant Life, 58).

We say that the Savior has experienced the suffering of the vilest sinner. Do sinners suffer because of their sins? If a sinner espouses a sinful way of life, does he not come to equilibrium with sin and even take pleasure in it? No, he does not. Every law has both a blessing and a punishment affixed to it. Whenever the law is obeyed, a blessing is given that results in happiness (joy). Whenever the law is disobeyed, a punishment is given which results in unhappiness (misery). Thus "wickedness never was happiness" (Alma 41:10) and it never will be (see 2 Nephi 2:13).

Samuel the Lamanite included the same thought in these words to the wicked Nephites: "Ye have sought all the days of your lives for that which ye could not obtain; and ye have sought for happiness in doing iniquity, which thing is contrary to the nature of that righteousness which is in our great and Eternal Head" (Helaman 13:38). The sinner is miserable, and the ultimate sinner, Satan himself, is the most miserable of all. True happiness lies only in living the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ. We must also add to the sinner's burden the pain of him who is committed to repent—the guilt, the remorse, the embarrassment, and the shame.

But the Savior suffered more than the unhappiness and misery of the vilest sinner. He also suffered all of the adversities and vicissitudes which any individual on earth can ever suffer. It is these adversities that often lead to sin. In a world without adversity, without opposition, there would be no temptation or need to sin. Every adversity, in its way, is a temptation to sin. The Lord experienced all adversities including those that lead to sin and those that result from sin.

In the course of his divine descent Jesus was assaulted with every temptation inflicted on the human race. After our futile attempts to explain the awesome depths of this unspeakable experience, we come back again to those simple but expressive words of the scriptures, "He descended below all things" (D&C 88:6).

An important part of the human experience is to confront temptation. It comes to all. On occasion, it roars like thunder. On others, it whispers in subtle, soothing tones.

With chameleon-like skill it camouflages its ever-present nature, but it is there, always there. Every temptation proves a crossroad where we must choose between the high road and the low road. We are always choosing, always taking sides. That is part of the human experience—facing temptations on a daily, almost moment-by-moment basis—facing them not only on the good days but on the days we are down, the days we are tired, rejected, discouraged, or sick. The Savior drank from the same cup. He faced every temptation of the flesh. As Paul said, he “was in all points tempted like as we are” (Hebrews 4:15).

We know that the Savior did not yield to temptation; he literally gave no heed to them (Mosiah 15:5; D&C 20:22). Some may contend that the Savior cannot empathize with those who succumb to temptation because he never yielded and, therefore, he could not understand the apparently unique circumstances of those who did. The fallacy of such an argument is exposed by C. S. Lewis:

No man knows how bad he is till he has tried very hard to be good. A silly idea is current that good people do not know what temptation means. This is an obvious lie. Only those who try to resist temptation know how strong it is. After all, you find out the strength of the German army by fighting it, not by giving in. You find out the strength of a wind by trying to walk against it, not by lying down. A man who gives in to temptation after five minutes simply does not know what it would have been like an hour later. That is why bad people, in one sense, know very little about badness. They have lived a sheltered life by always giving in. We never find out the strength of the evil impulse inside us until we try to fight it: and Christ, because he was the only man who never yielded to temptation, is also the only man who knows to the full what temptation means—the only complete realist (Inspirational Writings of C. S. Lewis, 337-38).

What role, if any, did Satan have in the process of the Savior’s atonement? Probably no role at all. It was an experience wholly orchestrated by the Father (3 Nephi 11:11; D&C 76:107).

Skeptics have also wondered if Christ really had to exercise faith while he was here upon the earth. Does not each of us here on earth confront those moments in life when faith and the reason of the world are seemingly incompatible, and we must choose between the two? Did the Savior, with his infinite faculties, both spiritually and intellectually, ever really face that dilemma? Was there ever a time he did not know the end from the beginning? Like all other mortals, did he ever have to choose faith in God over his own powers of reason? Was this, too, a part of his experience? If not, did he truly experience the totality of the human plight?

C. S. Lewis spoke of Christ’s foreknowledge preceding his impending death.

It is clear that this knowledge [of his death] must somehow have been withdrawn from him before he prayed in Gethsemane. He could not . . . have prayed that the cup might pass and simultaneously known that it would not. That is both a logical and psychological impossibility. You see what this involves? Lest any trial incident to humanity should be lacking, the torments of hope—of suspense, anxiety—were at the last moment loosed upon him—the supposed possibility that, after all, he might, he just conceivably might, be spared the supreme horror. There was precedent. Isaac had been spared: he too at the last moment, he also against all apparent probability. . . . But for this last (and erroneous) hope against hope, and the consequent tumult of the soul, the sweat of blood, perhaps he would not have to be the very Man. To live in a fully predictable world is not to be a man (Joyful Christian, 171-72).

To live a fully predictable life, a life devoid of anxiety, suspense, and faith, is a pseudo-human life—it is no more than a façade. But this is clearly not the case with the Savior. Never was more faith required of any man, at any hour, than when the Savior, hanging on the cross, faced the terrifying aloneness of the moment when the Father withdrew his spirit and left him comfortless. More faith was required of him than was ever exacted from any mortal.

It is clear that the Savior's suffering was physical, spiritual, intellectual, and emotional pain of the highest order, all wrapped into one. It was of such colossal magnitude that it caused "even God, the greatest of all, to tremble because of pain, and to bleed at every pore" (D&C 19:18). It is also clear that he did not live out his mortal sojourn and atonement with a divine shield to protect him from life's sufferings. He lived life much as a man. Paul wrote, "For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham. Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren" (Hebrews 2:16-17). Alma taught that "the Son of God suffereth according to the flesh" (Alma 7:13). The Savior voluntarily let his humanity take precedence over his divinity. His godhood was summoned for one reason only. It was to hold off the unconsciousness and death that would have brought an earlier end to his suffering had he only the strength of a man. He simply brought a larger cup to hold the bitter drink.

It is notable that during the Savior's ordeal in Gethsemane, an angel came from heaven for the purpose of "strengthening him" (Luke 22:43-44). Who was this divine messenger? Elder Bruce R. McConkie suggests it was Michael or Adam ("The Purifying Power of Gethsemane," Ensign, May 1985, 9). While we do not know for certain the identity of this heaven-sent comforter, there are at least four reasons why it may indeed have been Adam. First, Adam was a co-creator of this earth with Jehovah. He was also the patriarch of mortal man. He would surely have had a keen interest in man's ultimate destiny. Certainly, he had a vested interest to see that this earth was not created in vain. Second, it seems appropriate that he who triggered in part the need for the atonement would now be the agent to assist him who pled for its redemption. Third, as taught by Joseph Smith, Adam has a presiding role in the hierarchy of divine beings, since all "angels are under the direction of Michael or Adam" (TPJS, 168). No messenger would be more suited to strengthen and bless than he who was the presiding archangel. Fourth, Adam enjoyed a unique relationship with the Savior. Not only did he join with him in the creation process, but likewise as he led the heavenly forces in battle (Revelation 12:7). Now, once again, Adam might momentarily stand beside him as the Savior participated in the most crucial battle of all. Adam could not take the Savior's place (for the Savior must bear this alone), but what he could do, he no doubt wanted to do. Perhaps he was there to console him, to comfort him, to support him, maybe even to give him a blessing. The scriptural account is silent as to the nature of the exchange between Christ and his angelic comforter. Perhaps this was one of those moments so sacred it was not to be recorded in the annals of man. Certainly, this was a moment of transcendent pathos. It would not be surprising to learn that each wept and transmitted an intensity of love known only by the gods and angels. Surely this was a sacred, intimate, and eternal friendship. Perhaps the angel offered words of comfort and reassurance. Or perhaps the strength of his silent presence was sufficient. Whatever the divine exchange may have been, the Savior found sufficient strength, in the midst of unfathomable suffering, to press on.

For reasons that are not clear to us, Christ had to shed his blood during the process of atoning in order for the process to be valid (Leviticus 17:11; 1 John 1:7; 1 Nephi 12:10). This he did when he sweat great drops of blood in Gethsemane, when he was flogged, when his hands and wrists and feet were nailed to the cross, and when his side and heart were pierced with a sword. John Taylor observed, "Why it was necessary that his blood should be shed is an apparent mystery. . . Without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins; but why this? Why should such a law exist? It is left with us as a matter of faith" (JD, 10:114). Paul does give us a partial insight into why blood must be shed. While speaking of animal sacrifices under the Mosaic law and the redeeming powers of blood, he adds: "It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these" (Hebrews 9:23). He seems to be saying that animal sacrifices are an earthly prototype or counterpart of heavenly sacrifices, but that Christ is the actual or "better" sacrifice that satisfies all heavenly requirements for purification.

Near the end of the Savior's experience on the cross, he uttered, in a moment of ultimate pathos, that never-to-be-forgotten cry, "My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken me?" (Matthew 27:46; Mark 15:34). This was no rhetorical question. It was the earnest pleading of a divine being, who, under intense pain and stress, sought answers and comfort in his hour of need. The Spirit of God had been withdrawn from him. Why was it necessary for the Father to withdraw his Spirit? Apparently, if it had not been withdrawn, Christ would not have fully known the full extremity of all human agony. Elder James E. Talmage wrote: "That the supreme sacrifice of the Son might be consummated in all its fulness, the Father seems to have withdrawn the support of his immediate presence, leaving to the Savior of men the glory of complete victory over the forces of sin and death" (Jesus the Christ, 612). There was something in the comprehensiveness of his sacrifice—something in the depth of it—that required him to sever all mortal and heavenly ties, and to stand alone, absolutely alone.

Questions have been repeatedly asked about the extent of his suffering: “Why did he have to suffer so much?” “Was the extent of his suffering carefully measured and meted out?” “Are we certain that he did not suffer more than was necessary?” B. H. Roberts wrote: “It is inconceivable that either God’s justice or his mercy would require or permit more suffering on the part of the Redeemer than was absolutely necessary to accomplish the end proposed. Any suffering beyond that which was absolutely necessary would be cruelty, pure and simple, and unthinkable in a God of perfect justice and mercy” (The Truth, The Way, The Life, 428).

6. It is infinite because of the motivation of the Redeemer. His motivation was pure. He was motivated by an infinite and incomprehensible love, mercy, and grace for us.

This was a personal and not a mass atonement. Somehow, every soul was individually (as well as cumulatively) accounted for, suffered for, and redeemed for. Christ tasted “death for every man” (Hebrews 2:9). Isaiah suggests that Christ may have envisioned each of us as the atoning sacrifice took its toll—“when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed” (Isaiah 53:10; see also Mosiah 15:10-11). Just as he listens to our prayers one by one, so, perhaps, he suffered for us, one by one. C. S. Lewis wrote: “He [Christ] has infinite attention to spare for each one of us. He does not have to deal with us in the mass. You are as much alone with him as if you were the only being he had ever created. When Christ died, he died for you individually just as much as if you had been the only man in the world” (Quotable Lewis, 248). Moses’s vision of the world may offer some insight on how the pains and infirmities of countless individuals could be perceived in a relatively short time, perhaps even concurrently. Moses saw the numerous inhabitants of the earth, but the scriptures make it clear this was not merely some mass panoramic vision. To the contrary, the sacred record reads, “There was not a soul which he beheld not; and he discerned them by the Spirit of God” (Moses 1:28).

7. It is infinite because of the infinite blessings it bestows. See the supplemental article, Justification and Sanctification.

“this corruption could not put on incorruption” For a discussion of the terms corruption and incorruption, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 2:11. Were it not for the infinite nature of the atonement, fallen man could never be resurrected, that is, the mortal body (corruptible or corruption) should never become immortal (incorruptible or incorruption).

“Wherefore, the first judgment which came upon man must needs have remained to an endless duration.” If there had there been no atonement made, we would all have been subject eternally to the “first judgment.” What is this “first judgment”? It was: “Thou shalt surely die!” (Genesis 2:17). The first judgment is the physical and spiritual deaths which were the decreed consequences of Adam and Eve's transgression in the Garden of Eden. Without the Lord's atonement, we would live forever in our spirit bodies separate from God and subject to the will of Satan (see verse 8 and 9 below).

“this flesh must have laid down to rot and to crumble to its mother earth, to rise no more” If there had been no infinite atonement, there would be no resurrection of the body. There would also have been another major consequence had there been no atonement. See the next two verses.

verses 8-9 Also without the atonement, “Our spirits, stained with sin, unable to cleanse themselves, would be subject to the author of sin everlastingly; we would be followers of Satan; we would be sons of perdition” (Bruce R. McConkie, A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, 130). Now don't make the mistake of regarding these verses as just so much rhetoric. They are vitally important verses that spell out what our eternal fate would have been had not Christ suffered the agony in Gethsemane and on the cross. We would have all become sons of perdition! We would all have lived in our spirit bodies with Satan forever. The reason is simple. Without the Savior's atoning sacrifice, there could be no law of mercy, and every being would be subject to only the law of justice. By this law “no unclean thing can enter the presence of God” (1 Nephi 15:34; Alma 11:37). In fact, we know that without the possibility of justification or forgiveness, no man could enter into any degree of glory. There could have been no exceptions to this tenet of the law of justice, and there would have been no kingdom of glory available to any of the Father's children. This doctrine is taught repeatedly in the Book of Mormon (see Mosiah 2:39; 15:19; 16:4; Alma 34:9, 35) but is not clearly taught in any of the other standard works. See also the commentary for Mosiah 15:19.

8 O the wisdom of God, his mercy and grace! For behold, if the flesh should rise no more our spirits must become subject to that angel who fell from before the presence of the Eternal God, and became the devil, to rise no more.

9 And our spirits must have become like unto him, and we become devils, angels to a devil, to be shut out from the presence of our God, and to remain with the father of lies, in misery, like unto himself; yea, to that being who beguiled our first parents, who transformeth himself nigh unto an angel of light, and stirreth up the children of men unto secret combinations of murder and all manner of secret works of darkness.

verse 9 “angel of light” We know that Satan has the ability to deceive man by appearing to be a light-giving messenger of God (see D&C 129:8). Webster's 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines beguiled as, “Deluded; misled by craft; eluded by stratagem.”

10 O how great the goodness of our God, who prepareth a way for our escape from the grasp of this awful monster; yea, that monster, death and hell, which I call the death of the body, and also the death of the spirit.

verse 10 “that monster, death and hell” The “monster” in this case is not Satan, but rather Jacob has personified “death and hell” and referred to them as “that monster.” “Death and hell” refer to physical and spiritual death. It is interesting to note that Jacob was not the first or the only prophet to compare death and hell to a monster.

Although the use of the term "monster" is rare in the Bible, Daniel Belnap, BYU Professor of Ancient Scripture, stated, “The personification of death as a monstrous entity is not unique to the Book of Mormon, but found throughout the Bible” (Daniel Belnap, “I Will Contend with Them That Contendeth with Thee’: The Divine Warrior in Jacob’s Speech of 2 Nephi 6–10,” Journal of the Book of Mormon and Restoration Scripture 17/1–2, 2008: 30). Jacob recited Isaiah’s use of similar imagery to depict the victory of God over “Rahab,” “the dragon,” and the Red Sea, “the waters of the great deep,” in order to demonstrate the Lord’s power to redeem his people from Isaiah 51:9–10 (2 Nephi 8:9–10).

Isaiah uses similar terms elsewhere to likewise portray the future triumph of Jehovah as He delivers Israel from the forces of evil. Isaiah 27:1 reads: “In that day the LORD with his sore and great and strong sword shall punish leviathan the piercing serpent, even leviathan that crooked serpent; and he shall slay the dragon that is in the sea.

Another poignant example is in Psalms 89:8–10: “O LORD God of hosts, who is a strong LORD like unto thee? or to thy faithfulness round about thee. Thou rulest the raging of the sea: when the waves thereof arise, thou stillest them. Thou hast broken Rahab in pieces, as one that is slain; thou hast scattered thine enemies with thy strong arm.

In Psalm 18, the psalmist compares “the snares” of death and hell to drowning in “many waters.” He recounted how only the Lord could save him. “The sorrows of death compassed me, and the floods of ungodly men made me afraid. The sorrows of hell compassed me about: the snares of death prevented me. In my distress I called upon the Lord, and cried unto my God: he heard my voice out of his temple, and my cry came before him, even into his ears. He sent from above, he took me, he drew me out of many waters (Psalm 18:4–6, 16).

These symbols of Rahab, the (Sea) Dragon, Leviathan (a sea monster), the raging waves of the sea, and other similar imagery are found not only in the Old Testament but also in ancient Near Eastern literature generally (Othmar Keel, The Symbolism of the Biblical World: Ancient Near Eastern Iconography and the Book of Psalms, London: SPCK, 1972, 47&ndasah, 56, 73–75). Together, they all symbolized the powers of chaos, or those forces that endanger the lives of mortal beings, and are personifications or symbols of death and hell.

Finally, it can also be noted that there are Mesoamerican parallels to the idea of the “chaos monster.” John Sorenson has elaborated on the fact that ancient Mayan and Aztec myths depict “a monster and the waters in which it existed” that “symbolized chaos.” He noted that the “monstrous creature therein had been fought, defeated, and tamed by a beneficent divinity when the earth was created.” Sorenson compared this Mesoamerican “earth monster” to similar imagery in the ancient Near East (John L. Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex: An Ancient American Book, Salt Lake City: Deseret Book and NAMI, 2013, 455-458. See also, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1985, 187–188).

11 And because of the way of deliverance of our God, the Holy One of Israel, this death, of which I have spoken, which is the temporal, shall deliver up its dead; which death is the grave.

verse 11 “the way of deliverance of our God, the Holy One of Israel” Here is another name for the plan of salvation (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:6). In this verse, however, this phrase seems to refer to one specific aspect of the plan of salvation—the Lord’s atonement.

12 And this death of which I have spoken, which is the spiritual death, shall deliver up its dead; which spiritual death is hell; wherefore, death and hell must deliver up their dead, and hell must deliver up its captive spirits, and the grave must deliver up its captive bodies, and the bodies and the spirits of men will be restored one to the other; and it is by the power of the resurrection of the Holy One of Israel.

verse 12 Because of the atonement of the Savior, “spiritual death shall deliver up its dead.” That is, those who have sinned now have an opportunity to be reunited with their God. We now know that this will happen in a kingdom of glory.

“which spiritual death is hell” This phrase speaks of spiritual death or the estrangement of man from God, and it refers to this state as “hell.” Though we may enjoy, from time to time, the ministrations of the Spirit of the Holy Ghost, all of us in this mortal life are in a state of spiritual death, separated from God. Also, those who pass into the spirit prison after this life are in the same state.

The phrase “death and hell” generally refers to the combination of physical death and spiritual death. This combined state delivers up its captives. Hell delivers “its captive spirits” only on conditions of their repentance and obedience. “The grave,” on the other hand, delivers up “its “captive bodies” to be resurrected unconditionally without any effort or merit on the part of him who is resurrected. The overcoming of both of these deaths is possible only because of Christ’s atoning sacrifice.

13 O how great the plan of our God! For on the other hand, the paradise of God must deliver up the spirits of the righteous, and the grave deliver up the body of the righteous; and the spirit and the body is restored to itself again, and all men become incorruptible, and immortal, and they are living souls, having a perfect knowledge like unto us in the flesh, save it be that our knowledge shall be perfect.

verse 13 “the plan of our God” Another name for the plan of salvation. See the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:6 above.

“For on the other hand” In the previous verse we have just discussed the “captive spirits” who can earn their way out of spiritual death on condition of their repentance. “For on the other hand” those spirits who are in the paradise of God have already earned their exaltation. Their trial is over. They will be resurrected and exalted in the Kingdom of God.

“the spirit and the body is restored to itself again” The construction of the phrase seems awkward since the two nouns “spirit and the body” are the antecedents of the singular verb “is” and the singular reflexive pronoun “itself.” In the Church today, we have a singular name for the combination of the spirit and body. It is the soul of man (D&C 88:15). In this phrase the “spirit and the body” are obviously regarded as a single entity, the soul. The same type of construction is found in Alma 11:43: “The spirit and the body shall be reunited again in its perfect form” (emphasis added).

“all men become incorruptible, and immortal” The resurrected body which all men will receive will not be subject to infirmity, alteration, imperfection, error, or impurity, and it will live forever (see Mormon 6:17).

“they are living souls, having a perfect knowledge like unto us in the flesh, save it be that our knowledge shall be perfect” The scriptural concept of “perfect knowledge” apparently refers to that sure knowledge a man obtains when he is able to corroborate and confirm a fact with his own senses. In contrast, in order to “know” a fact that cannot be perceived with the senses, one must exercise faith. The knowledge thus obtained is, by definition, imperfect knowledge (see Alma 32:26, 29; Ether 3:20). After a person is exalted, his knowledge of God and other eternal verities will become “perfect knowledge” since he will be able to verify his knowledge with his senses. He will know, for example, that Jesus Christ lives because he can see him and speak to him and touch him. This is the same way we learn things here on earth, but in the hereafter our knowledge will be purer, loftier, more permanent, indeed more perfect.

14 Wherefore, we shall have a perfect knowledge of all our guilt, and our uncleanness, and our nakedness; and the righteous shall have a perfect knowledge of their enjoyment, and their righteousness, being clothed with purity, yea, even with the robe of righteousness.

verse 14 “we shall have a perfect knowledge” After our resurrection, we will perceive “perfectly” our performance in mortality relative to the commandments of God. All pretense, all denial, all that is false will be stripped away. We will see ourselves as God sees us. For those who have wasted the days of their mortality this will be a confrontation of exquisite pain never to be forgotten. For those who have been wise in the use of their probationary period it will be a moment of affirmation and satisfaction. It seems likely that this perfect self knowledge is essential so that we may be able to strip away from us everything that is unbecoming and begin in earnest our growth toward godhood.

The term “perfect knowledge” does not refer to a fulness of knowledge or omniscience. Our knowledge in mortality will rise with us. We will not know all things at the time of our resurrection. Rather, will come to know all things as God knows them “in due time” (D&C 93:19).

“being clothed with purity, yea, even with the robe of righteousness” In a previous verse, this terminology was used to describe those blessed to come forth in the morning of the first resurrection (see 2 Nephi 4:33 and its commentary). Perhaps to be “clothed with purity” or to wear “robe of righteousness” is to have a celestial eternal body.

15 And it shall come to pass that when all men shall have passed from this first death unto life, insomuch as they have become immortal, they must appear before the judgment-seat of the Holy One of Israel; and then cometh the judgment, and then must they be judged according to the holy judgment of God.

verse 15 “when all men shall have passed from this first death unto life, insomuch as they have become immortal” This phrase refers to the resurrection. Here Jacob teaches that after the resurrection, all must come before Christ to be judged. Is this really the proper sequence? Does the judgment come after the resurrection?

First, it may seem self evident to you, but let us define resurrection. Resurrection is simply the inseparable union of the spirit with an eternal body (see Alma 11:45; D&C 138:17). Actually, the judgment occurs concomitantly with the resurrection. The type of immortal body in which we come forth in the resurrection is the judgment. We will come forth in a celestial body, a terrestrial body, or a telestial body. As we stand before the “judgment seat” of Christ, we will do so in our immortal bodies. The judgment will have already been made. Thus, this final judgment is, at least for those righteous destined to inherit a degree of glory, in a sense a formality—a simple declaration of their blessed eternal state. For the wicked, however, those who will go with Satan to outer darkness, it will be a dramatic moment of confrontation and humiliation when they will acknowledge that Jesus is Lord and that his judgments are just.

The sequence of resurrection. All men are not resurrected at the same moment. There exists a pre-defined order and sequence in which man is resurrected. Let us summarize this sequence. The apostle Paul said, “For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order” (1 Corinthians 15:22-23; italics added).

Two resurrections. Actually, there are two separate resurrections. One is the first resurrection (also called the “resurrection of the just”), and the other is the second resurrection (also referred to as “the resurrection of damnation” or “the resurrection of the unjust”).

The first resurrection. The first resurrection is divided into two parts: the “morning of the first resurrection” and the “afternoon of the first resurrection.” Those who merit a celestial body come forth in the “morning” of the first resurrection. These are they who once resided in paradise, those who bore the title “just men made perfect,” those referred to as “the just” (D&C 76:17), meaning that they are justified, ratified, sealed, and approved of God. These are they who have had their calling and election made sure—they who have received the promise by revelation that they shall be equal with him in “power, might, and dominion” (see D&C 76:95). Those who come forth in this resurrection will live with God and enjoy eternal life which is God’s life.

The morning of the first resurrection began at the time of the resurrection of Jesus, and it is likely continuing at the present time. The final phase of the “morning” is the major resurrection that will occur at the time of Christ’s second coming just prior to the Millennium. Of course, those who live during the Millennium and merit celestial glory will receive their celestial bodies during the millennial period (see D&C 132:19). Actually the phrase “morning of the first resurrection” refers not so much to a time as to a quality of resurrection. In other words, those who inherit the celestial kingdom rise in the morning of the first resurrection, whether they are resurrected at the time of Christ, at his second coming, during the Millennium, or sometime in between these events.

Those who will inherit a terrestrial body arise in the “afternoon” of the first resurrection. The afternoon of the first resurrection begins some time after the onset of the Millennium and ends before the end of the thousand years. As mentioned, it is during this phase that those bound for the terrestrial glory will receive their bodies. These are called “Christ’s at his coming” (D&C 88:99). These are they “who have received their part in that prison which is prepared for them, that they might receive the gospel, and be judged according to men in the flesh” (Ibid.). These have accepted Christ but not to the degree that would result in their exaltation.

The second resurrection. The second resurrection begins at the end of the Millennium. The first to come forth in the second resurrection are those who have been cleansed of their sins and have thus earned the celestial glory. Then, finally, those who have earned no glory and who are destined to spend the rest of eternity with Satan in outer darkness come forth with their bodies. Even “hell” or the spirit prison cannot purge these of their filth. They were given a sure witness and knowledge of heaven's secrets, but they denied it all and came out in open rebellion striving to destroy the church. Thus, they "crucify Christ afresh." Their fate is unknown, but some have speculated that they may eventually experience dissolution of their resurrected bodies and exist forever as naked or disembodied intelligences in outer darkness. It has been suggested that in the absence of the life-sustaining powers of God's Spirit, sons of perdition will eventually become disorganized and return to "native element" (JD, 1:349-52; 5:271; 7:358-59). However, scripture declares that "the soul can never die" (Alma 12:20) and that in the resurrection the spirit and the body are united "never to be divided" (Alma 11:45; cf. 12:18; D&C 93:33). The ultimate fate of sons of perdition will be made known only to those who are partakers thereof and will not be definitely revealed until the last judgment (D&C 29:27-30; 43:33; 76:43-48; TPJS, 24).

16 And assuredly, as the Lord liveth, for the Lord God hath spoken it, and it is his eternal word, which cannot pass away, that they who are righteous shall be righteous still, and they who are filthy shall be filthy still; wherefore, they who are filthy are the devil and his angels; and they shall go away into everlasting fire, prepared for them; and their torment is as a lake of fire and brimstone, whose flame ascendeth up forever and ever and has no end.

verse 16 "his eternal word, which cannot pass away" His word will never cease to be relevant, applicable, and binding (see verse 17).

"they who are righteous shall be righteous still, and they who are filthy shall be filthy still" The Book of Mormon here simplifies our post mortal destiny into two possibilities only—those who "are righteous and shall be righteous still" and "they who are filthy shall be filthy still." The Book of Mormon makes no mention of the three degrees of glory. The former group—"they who are righteous"—likely refers to those who are exalted in the celestial kingdom. The precise identification of this latter group is problematic—"they who are filthy shall be filthy still." These could be only those who go with Satan and his angels to live in outer darkness forever, though the sweeping application of this penalty here suggests that it may also refer to a large group of people—those who enter that part of the spirit world we call spirit prison.

The remainder of this verse outlines the fate of the "filthy" in graphic, if somewhat hyperbolic, images.

Another idea that seems to be expressed in this verse is that our death does not change our basic nature. After death we will possess precisely the same motivation, disposition, spiritual inclinations, and desires that we possessed here on earth.

"as a lake of fire and brimstone" There are several references in the Book of Mormon to the suffering of those in the spirit prison and also those who eventually go with Satan as sons of Perdition (2 Nephi 9:26; 2 Nephi 28:23; Jacob 3:11; Jacob 6:10; Mosiah 3:27; Alma 12:17; Alma 14:14). They shall be cast into the lake that burns with fire and brimstone where there shall be “weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth.” Brimstone is sulfur, and what could be more noxious than burning sulfur? The “lake of fire and brimstone” is, of course, figurative or symbolic. Joseph Smith taught the meaning of this symbolism as he spoke of the spirit prison: “A man is his own tormenter and his own condemner. . . . The torment of disappointment in the mind of man is as exquisite as a lake burning with fire and brimstone” (TPJS, 357). “The great misery of departed spirits in the world of spirits . . . is to know that they come short of the glory that others enjoy and that they might have enjoyed themselves” (Ibid., 310-11). It is thus easy to understand why we maintain that hell is both a place—either the spirit prison or outer darkness (less often, the telestial kingdom) and a state—a condition of the mind characterized by keen realization of what might have been.

As we understand the “spirit prison” today, there is another reason it might be referred to as “hell.” Those spirits who failed to be granted a state of paradise at their deaths are placed under a clear and challenging obligation. They must learn about, confess, and commit to and covenant to follow and obey Jesus Christ. And they have a precise deadline. They must repent and commit themselves to Jesus Christ prior to the resurrection and final judgment. If they do not, they will remain “filthy still” (see also Mormon 9:14; D&C 88:35) and they will go with Satan and his angels forever. And, as might be intuitively obvious, some of these “imprisoned” spirits have a long way to go to sincerely fulfill the requisite obligations. This awesome obligation and deadline can often be most challenging. So much so, that it may be referred to as “hell.”

17 O the greatness and the justice of our God! For he executeth all his words, and they have gone forth out of his mouth, and his law must be fulfilled.

verse 17 “O the . . . justice of our God!” It is sobering to know that each of us will be dealt with by an all-knowing God who is perfectly just. And justice is certainly an important factor in our final judgment. How do we measure up relative to the commandments of God? What do we really deserve? What are our real motivations and desires and feelings? We can hide nothing.

18 But, behold, the righteous, the saints of the Holy One of Israel, they who have believed in the Holy One of Israel, they who have endured the crosses of the world, and despised the shame of it, they shall inherit the kingdom of God, which was prepared for them from the foundation of the world, and their joy shall be full forever.

verse 18 It is sobering to learn that more than just a passive belief is necessary in order to earn our exaltation. We must actively endure the “crosses”—the challenges and problems and lusts, of the world. They are “crosses” in that they are contrary to our spiritual nature and must be resisted with determination, overcoming all obstacles.

To “despise the shame” of the world is to go on clinging to the iron rod in spite of the mockery and scorn that flow over us from the multitudes in that great and spacious building seen by father Lehi.

“the kingdom of God, which was prepared for them from the foundation of the world” We doubtless knew of the possibility of our exaltation in the pre-mortal world.

19 O the greatness of the mercy of our God, the Holy One of Israel! For he delivereth his saints from that awful monster the devil, and death, and hell, and that lake of fire and brimstone, which is endless torment.

verse 19 There is a unique LDS definition of salvation. Joseph Smith crystallized it into a crisp statement: “Salvation is for a man to be saved from all his enemies” (The Words of Joseph Smith, Ehat and Cook, 205-07). In other words, salvation means to be placed beyond the power of all our enemies. Then Joseph continued in his definition and explained that these “enemies” are death, hell, and the devil. In this case, it might be difficult to know specifically what Joseph had in mind by “death” and “hell,” but we can speculate. “Death” is physical death or separation of body and spirit. “Hell” is either spirit prison or outer darkness.

Consider the following question: By this definition of salvation, is a person who inherits the telestial kingdom “saved”? Is he placed beyond the power of death? Of course. He has been resurrected and will never again be separated from his immortal body. Is he protected from the devil and from hell? Yes. He has been redeemed from the devil and has been placed in a kingdom of glory. Thus, he is indeed “saved.”

The terms “salvation” and “saved,” when used in scripture, almost always mean “exalted.” It is this definition that pertains in statements such as, “There is no gift greater than the gift of salvation” (D&C 6:13); or “salvation consists in the glory, authority, majesty, power, and dominion which Jehovah possesses and in nothing else” (Lectures on Faith, Joseph Smith, Jr., vol. 7:9). Even our own third Article of Faith intends this meaning when it states: “We believe that through the Atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.”

Is it possible to be saved in the celestial kingdom and yet not exalted? Yes, those who do not wish to comply with the law of eternal marriage become, in the celestial heaven, “ministering angels” who live “separately and singly without exaltation, in their saved condition, to all eternity” (D&C 132:16-17). For further discussion of this subject, see chapter 7 of volume 3, Salvation, in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine.

“lake of fire and brimstone” See the commentary for this phrase in verse 16.

“endless torment” This term, as in this verse, is used by Jacob (see also verse 26 and Jacob 6:10), Nephi (2 Nephi 28:23), and Mormon (Mosiah 28:3). Similar expressions are used by other Book of Mormon authors. For example, “eternal torment” is used by Alma (Mosiah 27:29; Alma 36:12) and “never-ending torment” is used by an angel and king Benjamin (Mosiah 2:39; 5:5). For the devil and his angels, those who are sons of perdition, this torment is truly endless, eternal, and never-ending in the usual sense of those terms. Through accepting the atonement of Jesus Christ, however, all others will be released from such suffering in time. The younger Alma, for example, will explain that he suffered “eternal torment” (Alma 36:20-21).

How something “endless,” “eternal,” and “never-ending” can come to an end is explained in D&C 19 where we are taught that “Endless” and “Eternal” are names for God. Thus “endless” punishment and “eternal” punishment simply refers to God’s punishment (see the commentary for D&C 19:4; see also D&C 19:10-12). These terms have nothing to do with the duration of the torment.

20 O how great the holiness of our God! For he knoweth all things, and there is not anything save he knows it.

21 And he cometh into the world that he may save all men if they will hearken unto his voice; for behold, he suffereth the pains of all men, yea, the pains of every living creature, both men, women, and children, who belong to the family of Adam.

verse 21 “that he may save all men if they will hearken unto his voice” To be saved in a lesser kingdom or exalted in the celestial sphere, one must be obedient and repentant—in other words “hearken unto his voice.”

“he suffereth . . . the pains of every living creature” While we cannot comprehend the extent of suffering, qualitatively or quantitatively, that Christ experienced as he atoned in Gethsemane and on the cross, this verse attempts to give some idea as to the quantitative magnitude of his agony. It certainly was not his fear of death or even the physical torture of crucifixion that caused the large part of his suffering. Somehow during the process of atonement, he suffered, and thus came to know intimately, every kind of suffering experienced by the inhabitants of earth (see also Alma 7:11-12; Hebrews 2:18). For further discussion of this subject, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 19, The Essence of the Lord's Atonement.

“both men, women, and children, who belong to the family of Adam” We have additional truth on this matter. We know that Christ’s atonement was efficacious not only for mankind on this earth, but for the human family on other earths as well. In his poetic version of D&C 76, the Prophet Joseph wrote of the many worlds the Savior had organized:

Whose inhabitants, too, from the first to the last,
 Are sav’d by the very same Savior of ours;
 And, of course, are begotten God’s daughters and sons
 By the very same truths and the very same powers.

The Book of Mormon is silent on this doctrine.

22 And he suffereth this that the resurrection might pass upon all men, that all might stand before him at the great and judgment day.

23 And he commandeth all men that they must repent, and be baptized in his name, having perfect faith in the Holy One of Israel, or they cannot be saved in the kingdom of God.

24 And if they will not repent and believe in his name, and be baptized in his name, and endure to the end, they must be damned; for the Lord God, the Holy One of Israel, has spoken it.

verses 23-24 Keep in mind that one of the most important tools available to Joseph Smith to aid in his learning the gospel in 1828 and 1829 was the text of the Book of Mormon itself. As he translated, he likely clung to every word of doctrinal discourse he translated. He was obviously an apt pupil and very much prepared to “soak up” every word of gospel teaching he encountered. As you read these two verses, imagine how Joseph and Oliver Cowdery might have reacted as they pondered their meaning. Would they have had a desire to be properly baptized? How would they have felt about the importance of faith, repentance, and enduring to the end?

Was the ordinance of baptism practiced among the Nephites? Most certainly it was. There can be no mistaking that the Book of Mormon teaches that baptism for the remission of sins is a fundamental principle of the gospel (see also 2 Nephi 31:5-13;17). We know that baptism has been practiced since the time of Adam (Moses 5:58; 6:52, 64-65).

“they must be damned” To be damned is to be judged and found to be unworthy and therefore condemned to some eternal disadvantaged state. The Book of Mormon speaks of damnation in two contexts: (1) being denied a fulness of salvation (exaltation or eternal life); and (2) being delivered up to the devil for eternity (perdition or outer darkness).

The verb to damn comes from a Latin root meaning “to condemn,” or “to pronounce guilty.” It is unrelated to the similar verb to dam, meaning to stop or to block. There exists a common confusion of these two verbs. This probably has arisen since the effect of being damned might also be to be dammed in one's spiritual progress. President Spencer W. Kimball, for example, stated that to be “damned means stopped in progress” (“Marriage and Divorce,” an address, 29). Thus, those who, through the exercise of their agency, choose darkness over light are stopped in their progress of acquiring light and truth” (D&C 93:27). They literally descend toward hell and darkness (2 Nephi 26:10). Joseph Smith taught that “if we are not drawing towards God . . . we are going from him and drawing towards the devil. . . As far as we degenerate from God, we descend to the devil and lose knowledge, and without knowledge we cannot be saved; thus, we are damned!” (HC, 4:588).

We may summarize this matter. To be “damned” does not merely mean having one’s progress stopped. It means to be condemned, to be judged guilty or worthy of punishment. In a spiritual sense, it means being declared guilty of sin, the exact opposite of being “justified” or declared innocent of sin. In answer to the question, “Will everybody be damned, but Mormons?” the Prophet responded, “Yes, and a great portion of them [the Mormons], unless they repent, and work righteousness” (TPJS, 119).

25 Wherefore, he has given a law; and where there is no law given there is no punishment; and where there is no punishment there is no condemnation; and where there is no condemnation the mercies of the Holy One of Israel have claim upon them, because of the atonement; for they are delivered by the power of him.

verse 25 “condemnation” A censure or penalty invoked by those who keep the law of justice upon all those who violate a commandment. For one to receive condemnation, a law must first exist, one must be subject to that law, and one must of his own volition trespass that law. The degree of condemnation one receives is related to the light and knowledge one possesses (D&C 82:3).

“where there is no condemnation the mercies of the Holy One of Israel have claim upon them, because of the atonement” This phrase may well lead to some confusion. It would seem that the central purpose of the verse is to emphasize the vital necessity of law. Where there is no law, there can be no punishment or condemnation. How, then, might we explain this specific phrase? See the commentary for verses 25 and 26 below.

26 For the atonement satisfieth the demands of his justice upon all those who have not the law given to them, that they are delivered from that awful monster, death and hell, and the devil, and the lake of fire and brimstone, which is endless torment; and they are restored to that God who gave them breath, which is the Holy One of Israel.

verses 25-26 These verses introduce an important doctrine, but if we take the verses at their face value, then the doctrine they describe is a bit confusing. Let us analyze the verses. First, what spiritual blessing is promised to those spoken of in the verses? They are “restored to that God who gave them breath.” In other words, they are promised exaltation in the presence of God. Next, just who are these people who are promised their exaltation? They are “those who have not the law given to them.” Do the verses make sense, then? Those who do not have an opportunity to hear and accept the law are promised their exaltation! No, of course they don’t make complete sense. There is something missing. What is the missing concept? These verses actually apply to those who did not have the opportunity to receive the law on this earth but who would have embraced the gospel had they had the chance.

Here, then, is an important doctrine. We already know that the promise of exaltation is extended to those who hear and accept and endure in the gospel on this earth. In addition, the full benefits of the atonement of Christ (including exaltation in the presence of God hereafter) are extended also to all those who lived on the earth but had no opportunity to receive the law of the gospel or to participate in its saving ordinances but who would have fully accepted the gospel had they had the opportunity to hear it (see also Mosiah 3:11; Moroni 8:22; D&C 137:5-9). Indeed, in all the human family, no one will be denied a blessing because of circumstances beyond that person's control. No one will be condemned for not observing a commandment or participating in an ordinance of which that person was ignorant. Our Lord knows all things. Only he is the perfect judge of all mankind (John 5:22). His qualification to judge was perfected in him through his suffering in Gethsemane and on the cross and through his atoning death (Alma 7:11-12; Hebrews 2:18). Because he atoned, he is the perfect judge (perfectly just and perfectly empathetic and merciful) of all mankind, including those who died having not adequately heard of Jesus Christ or the law.

It should be noted that no man of accountable age dies in perfect ignorance since the spirit of Christ, that spiritual entitlement given to all men as they come into mortality, provides all men an intuition that urges obedience to the law.

This doctrine is corroborated in D&C 137:5-9 where we are taught: "All who have died without a knowledge of this gospel, who would have received it if they had been permitted to tarry, shall be heirs of the celestial kingdom of God; also all that shall die henceforth without a knowledge of it, who would have received it with all their hearts, shall be heirs of that kingdom; for I, the Lord, will judge all men according to their works, according to the desire of their hearts." And the phrase, "the desire of their hearts" does not refer to an individual's preferences. Rather, it refers to just exactly what that person truly is.

There is an old saying: "The road to hell is paved with good intentions." The intended meaning of this old adage is that all manner of good intentions are of little value if they are not translated into meaningful actions. There is much truth in this aphorism if the reason the pure intentions are not converted to action is procrastination. However, we have just learned that if an individual is prevented from converting his noble intentions to honorable actions by external circumstances, then he will be judged by an all-knowing Lord as if he had translated his thoughts to actions.

In his helpful article, "Redemption Through the Holy Messiah," found in Studies in Scripture, Volume Seven, 1 Nephi to Alma 29, 115-30, Brother Robert L. Millet quoted Elder Dallin H. Oaks to illustrate this point:

When someone genuinely wanted to do something for my father-in-law but was prevented by circumstances, he would say: "Thank you. I will take the good will for the deed." Similarly, I believe that our Father in heaven will receive the true desires of our hearts as a substitute for actions that are genuinely impossible.

Here we see [a] contrast between the laws of God and the laws of men. It is entirely impractical to grant a legal advantage on the basis of an intent not translated into action. “I intended to sign that contract” or “We intended to get married” cannot stand as the equivalent of the act required by law. If the law were to give effect to intentions in lieu of specific acts, it would open the door for too much abuse, since the laws of man have no reliable means of determining our innermost thoughts.

In contrast, the law of God can reward a righteous desire because an omniscient God can discern it. As revealed through the prophet of this dispensation, God “is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart” (D&C 33:1). If a person refrains from a particular act because he is genuinely unable to perform it, but truly would if he could, our Heavenly Father will know this and can reward that person accordingly (“The Desires of Our Hearts,” in Brigham Young University 1985-86 Devotional and Fireside Speeches [Provo, Utah: Brigham Young University Publications, 1986], 30).

What is the practical application of this doctrine? It would seem likely that, at death, the people to whom these verses apply are heirs of exaltation. They are either admitted immediately into “paradise” in the world of spirits or perhaps they are placed temporarily in the spirit “prison” where their ordinance work is done for them, and they enter into paradise.

Why are these individuals not simply placed in the spirit prison where they will surely eventually manifest their celestial nature? Is it not possible for those who are assigned to the spirit prison to eventually repent and embrace the gospel and endure in it to a point where they will come to merit exaltation in the presence of God? It is apparent from studying the scriptures that those assigned to spirit prison are those who are judged to be destined to inherit the terrestrial or telestial kingdoms or the state of outer darkness. This mortal life is the probationary state, and when we die a vital “partial judgment” will be made by God, assigning us to our exaltation or to a lesser glory (Joseph F. Smith, Gospel Doctrine, 448). We are taught in Alma: “For behold, this life is the time for men to prepare to meet God; yea, behold the day of this life is the day for men to perform their labors” (Alma 34:32). See also the verse commentary for Alma 34:32 and Alma 12:24; 42:10, 13. It would seem that it is most unlikely or even impossible that an individual pass from the spirit prison into exaltation. Conversely, is it possible to fall from the state of paradise and lose one’s exaltation? Apparently, that will not happen. Once a person has achieved the state of paradise in the world of spirits, his mortal probation period is ended, and he will no longer be at risk of falling.

Does this doctrine help us to understand D&C 137:10? “And I also beheld that all children who die before they arrive at the years of accountability are saved in the celestial kingdom of heaven.” Perhaps it does. Many have chosen to interpret this verse at face value. Others have been troubled by its sweeping implications. When viewed in the context of the world’s history, which includes extensive backward cultures with high infant mortality rates, then those who earn their way to the celestial kingdom by dying before the years of accountability may even outnumber all of those who inherit other kingdoms. Also, when the verse is accepted without qualifications, one must assume that God must have intended and sanctioned each of those premature deaths. Certainly, our God is capable of directing a righteous spirit, who has no need of a probationary experience, into each of those infant bodies who would suffer death before the age of eight years. But this is a degree of intervention and influence that does not quite square with the general manner in which God seems to deal with the family of Adam here in mortality. In addition, one might ask the question: Even though the millions of children that have died before the age of accountability are sinless, will each of them be suited for and be comfortable in the celestial kingdom? Might some of them be more “at home” in another degree of glory? Some feel that D&C 137:10 must be interpreted in light of D&C 137:5-9, quoted above. Those spiritually innocent children who would have accepted the gospel, according to the judgment of an omniscient God, had they tarried upon the earth will enter the state of “paradise” and later return to their God. Others will surely be judged as deserving of a lesser glory.

verses 27-38 These verses have been referred to as Jacob’s ten commandments and are couched in negative terms (Jacob’s ten woes). These are vastly important and summarize the most important principles of the Nephite religion. For the Book of Mormon peoples, these “ten woes” function indeed as the ten commandments. Jacob probably had Deuteronomy 5 and Exodus 20 in mind both of which detail Moses’s ten commandments. But Jacob’s woes are not simply a reiteration or paraphrasing of the ten commandments. Rather, Jacob’s list stresses the consequences of breaking the law. A state of “wo” is a condition of deep suffering from misfortune, calamity, affliction, or grief. The ten woes may be paraphrased as follows:

1. Wo unto them who know God’s laws and commandments yet transgress them because they think they are learned and wise. Their wisdom is foolishness, and they shall perish (verses 27-29).

2. Wo unto the rich. Because they are rich, they despise the poor. Their treasure is their God, and their treasure shall perish with them (verse 30).

3. Wo unto the deaf who will not hear, for they shall perish (verse 31).

4. Wo unto the blind who will not see, for they shall perish also (verse 32).

5. Wo unto the uncircumcised of heart, for a knowledge of their iniquities shall smite them at the last day (verse 33).

6. Wo unto the liar, for he shall be thrust down to hell (verse 34).

7. Wo unto the murderer who deliberately kills, for he shall die (verse 35).

8. Wo unto them who commit whoredoms, for they shall be thrust down to hell (verse 36).

9. Wo unto those who worship idols, for the devil of all devils delights in them (verse 37).

10. Wo unto all those who die in their sins, for they shall return to God, behold his face, and remain in their sins (verse 38).

27 But wo unto him that has the law given, yea, that has all the commandments of God, like unto us, and that transgresseth them, and that wasteth the days of his probation, for awful is his state!

verse 27 “wo unto him” In his book Prophecy in Early Christianity and the Ancient Mediterranean World, biblical scholar David E. Aune sets forth the various formulaic expressions that characterize prophetic speech in the Old Testament (see Donald W. Parry, “Thus Saith the Lord: Prophetic Language in Samuel’s Speech,” JBMS 1/1 [1992]:181-83). These expressions serve to formally introduce vital, sacred utterances and to announce that the Lord is the source behind them. The Book of Mormon prophets used the same formulas in their prophetic discourse. This particular expression, “wo unto . . .” is called the woe oracle (Isaiah 5:8, 11, 20; Habakkuk 2:9, 12, 15). About forty examples of this formula are found in the Book of Mormon (e.g., 1 Nephi 1:13; 2 Nephi 15:21). Often part of a judgment speech, it is used to pronounce anguish and distress upon a person or group of people.

Here Jacob warns the person who sins against light. “For of him unto whom much is given much is required; and he who sins against the greater light shall receive the greater condemnation” (D&C 82:3).

“wasteth the days of his probation” From man’s viewpoint, the length of time we spent living as spirits in the pre-existence was virtually infinite. Joseph Smith seemed to have taught that our lives there lasted about 2,555,000 years (letter of W.W. Phelps to William Smith, December 25, 1844 in Times and Seasons, vol. 5, 758 and letter of Oliver Cowdery to William Frye, Messenger and Advocate, Kirtland, December 1835, vol. 2, 235-37). Imagine the time and effort spent in developing our talents and preparing for this mortal phase. Imagine the longing and waiting and anxiety we must have experienced as we anticipated coming to the earth to engage the vital trials awaiting us here. The duration of this mortal trial is relatively only an instant. The key moment is now. We have prepared almost an eternity for this brief season. Are we now to waste this day of our probation?

28 O that cunning plan of the evil one! O the vainness, and the frailties, and the foolishness of men! When they are learned they think they are wise, and they hearken not unto the counsel of God, for they set it aside, supposing they know of themselves, wherefore, their wisdom is foolishness and it profiteth them not. And they shall perish.

verse 28 Jacob warns those who “refuse to acknowledge the true Source of all knowledge and wisdom, but choose instead to worship at the shrine of intellect” (Robert L. Millet, Studies in Scripture, Volume Seven, 1 Nephi to Alma 29, 126). Intellectualism is not necessarily wisdom. Man's understanding cannot supplant God's counsel. Man cannot lean on his own sophistication and logic in matters of the Spirit.

Not all truths are of the same worth. It may be more important, for example, to know that seat belts reduce the chance of dying in an automobile accident than to know that toilet paper costs one penny per roll less at Dan's Food Store. Also, one type of truth may be more important than another. There are, for example, secular truths and spiritual truths. Secular truths are learned through the five senses and are often helpful and very important. Spiritual truths cannot be learned through the natural senses, rather they may only be learned Spirit to spirit, by revelation from the Holy Ghost. It is impossible to be exalted in the celestial kingdom without learning some spiritual truths. One cannot truly know that Jesus is the Christ, for example, except one has this knowledge revealed by the Holy Ghost. Spiritual truths are revealed only to those who strive and seek to obey the commandments of God, whereas secular truths can be learned without regard to moral status. The Apostle Paul taught that it is impossible for the natural man to truly know spiritual truths (1 Corinthians 2:14).

“that cunning plan of the evil one” Satan would have us trust in things of the earth—materialism, wealth, and intellectualism—rather than things of the Spirit. An individual ensnared in worldliness to the exclusion of things of the Spirit is guilty of the sin of pride. The word cunning here has a negative meaning: deceitful, designing, tricky. This is in contrast to its meaning in 2 Nephi 13:3.

29 But to be learned is good if they hearken unto the counsels of God.

verse 29 Properly channeled intellect, however, is vastly important as is affirmed in this verse. It would be very difficult to acquire a testimony of Jesus without striving first to know something of his life and mission. We are commanded, after all, to seek learning “by study and also by faith” (D&C 88:118).

We must be competent but resist pride. Joseph F. Smith firmly declared, “Of those who speak in his name, the Lord requires humility, not ignorance” (Gospel Doctrine, 206). All are susceptible to the pervasive curse of pride, but scholars are above average in the pride category. We know by sad experience that when people get a little power, their natural disposition is to exercise unrighteous dominion (D&C 121:39), and clearly, knowledge is a form of power.

We must learn with a purpose, and then give purpose to our learning. The bridge between faith and reason is purposeful activity. Study gives us facts, truth, and knowledge. Faith gives us values, goodness, and objectives. Both are necessary. Knowledge, in and of itself, is morally neutral until it is put to work in support of some chosen purpose. There is a trouble with truth: Satan knows a lot of truth. He knows the laws of physics, physiology, psychology, and social behavior. What he lacks is the willingness to do what is good. That conviction comes through the light of Christ and with faith in Jesus. Without the love of Christ, truth is dangerous. No one, scholars included, operates above the moral law. We will read in Alma 32 that what we learn when we plant the seed is not that the seed is true but that it is good. We should know that the gospel is both good and true, for our knowledge will “operate toward [our] salvation or condemnation as it is used or misused” (Joseph F. Smith, Gospel Doctrine, 206).

30 But wo unto the rich, who are rich as to the things of the world. For because they are rich they despise the poor, and they persecute the meek, and their hearts are upon their treasures; wherefore, their treasure is their God. And behold, their treasure shall perish with them also.

verse 30 This verse does not condemn all of those “who are rich as to things of this world.” Rather it rebukes those who allow their earthly treasures to become their principal motivation and loyalty, their idol, indeed “their god.” The danger does not lie in riches, in and of themselves. The prophet Jacob will point out that nothing would please the Lord more than to have everyone rich: “Think of your brethren like unto yourselves, and be familiar with all and free in your substance, that they may be rich like unto you” (Jacob 2:17).

31 And wo unto the deaf that will not hear; for they shall perish.

32 Wo unto the blind that will not see; for they shall perish also.

verses 31-32 Those who are spiritually deaf and blind in the face of ample revealed knowledge and abundant evidence of God’s hand in our physical world were described aptly by the Lord: “They are walking in darkness at noon- day” (D&C 95:5-6).

33 Wo unto the uncircumcised of heart, for a knowledge of their iniquities shall smite them at the last day.

verse 33 The “uncircumcised of heart” are those who have spiritual impurities which need to be cut away. These fail to yield their hearts to God. It was father Lehi’s contemporary, Jeremiah, who commanded the Israelites to “circumcise yourselves to the Lord, and take away the foreskins of your heart” (Jeremiah 4:4).

“a knowledge of their iniquities shall smite them at the last day” See the commentary for verse 14 of this chapter.

34 Wo unto the liar, for he shall be thrust down to hell.

verse 34 We have mentioned previously that the word “hell” may refer to one of three states or places. Here it seems to refer to either spirit prison or the telestial kingdom. In other places in scripture it may refer to outer darkness where Satan and his adherents will spend eternity.

35 Wo unto the murderer who deliberately killeth, for he shall die.

verse 35 The word “die” here probably refers to the state of spiritual death or separation from God experienced by those in the telestial kingdom. The premeditated shedding of innocent blood is a “sin unto death” (1 John 5:16- 17) meaning a sin for which there is “no forgiveness” (D&C 42:79). Is this true? Is the shedding of innocent blood the same as “the unpardonable sin”? Can a man not repent and be cleansed of this sin?

The ultimate and “unpardonable sin” is to shed the only completely innocent blood, the blood of Jesus Christ. Once an individual has been converted to the divinity of Jesus Christ by the Spirit of the Holy Ghost and has come to know God and have an absolute witness, then that individual has a most serious and binding obligation. If he should ever turn altogether against the Church and come out in open rebellion against it, then he is guilty of the unpardonable sin. It as though he “crucifies [Christ]” afresh or “assent[s] unto [his] death” (D&C 76:35; 132:27). Such an individual will be resurrected but will not inherit a kingdom of glory. Rather he will spend eternity with Satan and his angels.

The unjustified shedding of human life is the “unforgivable sin” second only to the unpardonable sin in its gravity. A murderer may repent and be cleansed in the post-mortal life, and he may be admitted to a kingdom of glory, the telestial kingdom. He cannot, however be forgiven to the point of being worthy for the celestial, or even the terrestrial, kingdom. He may become a “servant of the Most High; but where God and Christ dwell they cannot come” (D&C 76:112).

Some have suggested that this verse condones capital punishment for murderers. See a discussion of this question in the commentary for Alma 34:12.

36 Wo unto them who commit whoredoms, for they shall be thrust down to hell.

verse 36 Again, most adulterers will inherit the telestial kingdom. This is the first use of the word “whoredoms” in the Book of Mormon. It will be used twenty-six more times before the book’s end. It is the general Book of Mormon term for unchastity in all of its forms.

37 Yea, wo unto those that worship idols, for the devil of all devils delighteth in them.

verse 37 Those who “worship idols” are those whose primary dedication and loyalty are attached to things other than Jesus Christ and his gospel. What are some of these idols? How about power, influence, wealth, careers, titles, offices, social status, and fashions?

The “devil of all devils” is Satan.

38 And, in fine, wo unto all those who die in their sins; for they shall return to God, and behold his face, and remain in their sins.

verse 38 “In fine” means in conclusion or in summary.

“all those who die in their sins” These are unrepentant at death—those who have not repented of their sinful nature.

This verse may be interpreted to be referring to the final judgment of God. In this case these individuals shall eventually “return to God” after a period of suffering in the spirit prison. They will stand before him and “behold his face” at the great final judgment. The judgment they receive will be fairly suited to each individual. These will receive a lesser kingdom or be cast out to outer darkness.

Another possibility is that this verse refers to an earlier event, the so-called “partial judgment” that occurs immediately upon a man’s death (Joseph F. Smith, Gospel Doctrine, 448). In this judgment we are assigned to either paradise or prison. Who is the gatekeeper who renders this judgment? It seems likely that this judgment is made by an all-knowing Jesus Christ (see 2 Nephi 9:41 and the commentary for Alma 40:11-12).

“remain in their sins” It is apparent that a man’s nature and character, relative to belief and obedience of gospel principles, is no different after his death than it is prior—indeed, “their works shall follow them” (D&C 59:2).

39 O, my beloved brethren, remember the awfulness in transgressing against that Holy God, and also the awfulness of yielding to the enticings of that cunning one. Remember, to be carnally-minded is death, and to be spiritually-minded is life eternal.

verse 39 “O, my beloved brethren” Remember that Jacob is delivering this sermon to his fellow Nephites.

“to be carnally-minded is death” Carnal means “of the flesh” or “of the world.” Clearly, he who is “carnally-minded” will suffer eternal separation from God. Who is this unfortunate soul? What does it mean to be “carnally-minded”? Perhaps the primal and most fundamental challenge of mortality is the incessant struggle of having to choose between things of the world and things of the Spirit. Literally, such decisions are required of us each and every day. The pattern of choices we make gradually begins to define our eternal character. The “judgment of God” does not take place at a finite point in time. Rather it occurs gradually and insidiously as we make the myriad decisions required of us in mortality. How will we choose today? Will we decide for the world or for the Spirit? Will we select immediate gratification, convenience, pleasure, ease, and expediency even though a spiritual “principle” may be slighted here and there? Or will we manage to stick to the principle even if it means self denial? There is no black and white on the spectrum of carnal versus spiritual. There is every shade of grey, and our shade may change a little every day. It is a dynamic and constantly fluid process. The key seems not so much to be our absolute position along this spectrum, rather the quality of our motivations and the velocity and direction in which we are moving. He who manages to travel a considerable distance down the road toward things of the Spirit is never completely immune to a change in direction, but the likelihood of his “going back” diminishes.

40 O, my beloved brethren, give ear to my words. Remember the greatness of the Holy One of Israel. Do not say that I have spoken hard things against you; for if ye do, ye will revile against the truth; for I have spoken the words of your Maker. I know that the words of truth are hard against all uncleanness; but the righteous fear them not, for they love the truth and are not shaken.

verse 40 “for if ye do, ye will revile against the truth” This statement teaches an important truth about people who will not accept the gospel. Those who reject the gospel truths do not usually do so in an indifferent or passive way. There is a tendency for those who reject principles of truth to “revile against [that] truth.” It would seem that man cannot usually reject the gospel without some element of ambivalence. There is a basic spirit in all man, perhaps the spirit of Christ, that is not completely suppressed even in those who openly reject the gospel. This spirit produces in them a nagging, itching awareness, however subtle it may be, that they are rejecting their own eternal nature. The frustration produced by this ambivalence often results in angry rejection of the gospel and a need to self justify.

“your Maker” To whom does this phrase refer? Is it God the Father or his son Jesus Christ? It probably refers to Jehovah or Jesus Christ (see 3 Nephi 22:5, wherein Jesus himself quoted Isaiah chapter 54 which refers to Jesus as “thy maker”).

41 O then, my beloved brethren, come unto the Lord, the Holy One. Remember that his paths are righteous. Behold, the way for man is narrow, but it lieth in a straight course before him, and the keeper of the gate is the Holy One of Israel; and he employeth no servant there; and there is none other way save it be by the gate; for he cannot be deceived, for the Lord God is his name.

verse 41 “the way for man is narrow, but it lieth in a straight course before him” Brother Paul Hoskisson has questioned the use of “straight” in this phrase. He suggests that strait may be more appropriate. Please see the discussion of this issue in the supplemental article Strait and Straight in the Book of Mormon.

The tradition in Christianity that Peter is the keeper of the gate is false and without scriptural foundation. Not only is the Savior the “keeper of the gate,” but he is the gate. Only by coming to him and to his gospel is a man admitted into a degree of glory. He waits at the gate, not only to sanction us, but also to welcome us. How humbling yet thrilling to contemplate a personal audience with our Savior. He will be there in person to greet us, as “he employeth no servant there.”

Your author has frequently pondered the question, “But which gate?” Will we encounter the Savior at the time of our death when we are subjected to the “partial judgment” (Joseph F. Smith, Gospel Doctrine, 448)? Or, must we wait until we present ourselves, clothed in our resurrected eternal body, at the celestial gate? Certainly the importance of the discerning judgment made at the time of the “partial judgment” requires the participation of the one true judge (John 5:22). Only time will provide the answer to my question, but I yearn to see him and kneel before him. And, the sooner the better!

42 And whoso knocketh, to him will he open; and the wise, and the learned, and they that are rich, who are puffed up because of their learning, and their wisdom, and their riches—yea, they are they whom he despiseth; and save they shall cast these things away, and consider themselves fools before God, and come down in the depths of humility, he will not open unto them.

verse 42 Notice this sweeping condemnation of those who are “puffed up” because of their supposed “learning,” “wisdom,” and “riches.” Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines puffed as, “inflated with vanity or pride.” The gatekeeper will keep the gate closed to them.

“they are they whom he despiseth” The Lord “despiseth” (regards with contempt or scorn) the sin of pride, not the individual who is proud. The sin of pride may be defined as giving in excessively to the pulls of the world.

“come down in the depths of humility” This is the first mention of the word humility in the Book of Mormon. Humility may be defined as the realization of one’s dependence upon God, and a willingness to seek and follow his will. It is the opposite of pride, as the proud man often evidences loftiness, haughtiness, and stubbornness of heart. Humility is a gift of the Spirit, and can only be experienced when one has deliberately “put off the natural man” by obeying in spite of the “natural” pulls of his flesh. A synonym for humility seems to be “a broken heart and contrite spirit.”

43 But the things of the wise and the prudent shall be hid from them forever—yea, that happiness which is prepared for the saints.

verse 43 Those proud individuals described in the previous verse will never be able to comprehend spiritual truths which are understood by those who are spiritually “wise” and “prudent.”

It would seem that some of those in the world who are truly intellectual and learned are inclined to acquire humility as they gain knowledge. It has been your author’s experience that the truly great intellects—those who are considered “world class”—are often inclined to be humble and not “lifted up” in pride. They readily admit to those things which they do not know or understand. Their considerable knowledge has caused them to sense the inadequacy of man compared to the vastness of the knowledge yet to be learned. They also come to yearn for a higher meaning, a loftier purpose. This humility is vital, for without it a man is unreceptive to the Spirit. He cannot be taught spiritual truths.

44 O, my beloved brethren, remember my words. Behold, I take off my garments, and I shake them before you; I pray the God of my salvation that he view me with his all-searching eye; wherefore, ye shall know at the last day, when all men shall be judged of their works, that the God of Israel did witness that I shook your iniquities from my soul, and that I stand with brightness before him, and am rid of your blood.

verse 44 Here we learn from Jacob the importance of obeying gospel principles when they are taught by a prophet. By declaring the message, the prophet discharges his responsibility and clears his skirts of the responsibility of other men's sins, leaving the hearer without excuse. The hearer will obey or be damned.

"I take off my garments, and I shake them before you" The word garments is used frequently in the Book of Mormon, and it may well relate to the temple ordinances. To "shake" one's garments is a figurative expression for absolving oneself of responsibility of another's sins by teaching them spiritual truths and issuing an appropriate warning for them to repent. The prophet shakes the sinner's iniquities from his soul and is thus "rid of [his] blood."

Keep in mind that the symbol of the "all-searching eye" is associated today with the temple, the place where we prepare ourselves to enter his kingdom. No unclean thing can enter his presence and nothing can be hidden from his eyes.

45 O, my beloved brethren, turn away from your sins; shake off the chains of him that would bind you fast; come unto that God who is the rock of your salvation.

verse 45 We shouldn't pass by this verse without calling to mind the imagery found in the vision of Enoch reported in Moses 7:26: "[Enoch] beheld Satan; and he had a great chain in his hand, and it veiled the whole face of the earth with darkness; and he looked up and laughed, and his angels rejoiced."

46 Prepare your souls for that glorious day when justice shall be administered unto the righteous, even the day of judgment, that ye may not shrink with awful fear; that ye may not remember your awful guilt in perfectness, and be constrained to exclaim: Holy, holy are thy judgments, O Lord God Almighty—but I know my guilt; I transgressed thy law, and my transgressions are mine; and the devil hath obtained me, that I am a prey to his awful misery.

verse 46 See the commentary for verse 14 of this chapter.

"that ye may not shrink with awful fear; that ye may not remember your awful guilt in perfectness" Jacob pleads: "Oh, that you do not present yourself at the final judgment with great fear and awful regret for your sins."

47 But behold, my brethren, is it expedient that I should awake you to an awful reality of these things? Would I harrow up your souls if your minds were pure? Would I be plain unto you according to the plainness of the truth if ye were freed from sin?

48 Behold, if ye were holy I would speak unto you of holiness; but as ye are not holy, and ye look upon me as a teacher, it must needs be expedient that I teach you the consequences of sin.

verses 47-48 To “harrow up” is to vex or cause mental distress.

God’s teachings are provided to a people in a timely and relevant manner. A rebellious people are less likely to be instructed in holy and sacred matters, and are more likely to be taught of sin and its consequences.

49 Behold, my soul abhorreth sin, and my heart delighteth in righteousness; and I will praise the holy name of my God.

verse 49 “my soul abhorreth sin” One spiritual reward given, over time, to the repentant individual who makes a sincere effort to live righteously is a diminished desire to sin and an increased affinity for righteous living (see the response to King Benjamin’s speech by some who listened attentively in Mosiah 5:1-2). This reward comes in the form of gifts of the Spirit (attributes of God) which are inevitably associated with a purging of evil from the soul. This process has been referred to as sanctification. The Holy Ghost is the sanctifier. Sanctification is a two step process. It is associated with justification or forgiveness of sin. Sanctification occurs when an individual overcomes his or her natural self and obeys a commandment, the Holy Ghost (in his role as Holy Spirit of Promise) sanctifies the individual. He (1) purges—“as if by fire”—an increment of the natural self from the soul of the obedient and (2) grants to the individual, by personal revelation, the appropriate gift or gifts of the Spirit that relate to the individual’s obedience. A person in mortality is never completely unsanctified or entirely sanctified. A wide spectrum exists between the unholy and the holy. Eventually an individual may be sanctified to the point where he will hate worldliness and sin and love righteousness. Such an individual is unlikely to succumb to temptation.

verses 50-51 Here Jacob quotes Isaiah 55:1-2.

50 Come, my brethren, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters; and he that hath no money, come buy and eat; yea, come buy wine and milk without money and without price.

verse 50 Here Isaiah invites all mankind to partake of a free gift. The gift is portrayed symbolically as a drink of three different liquids, water, wine, and milk. The water is to satisfy the thirst or fulfill the need of man. The wine was traditionally used in times of rejoicing. The milk provides strength, nourishment, and growth. Using Isaiah's words, Jacob is here concluding his sermon on the atonement by inviting all to come to Christ and accept his redemption.

51 Wherefore, do not spend money for that which is of no worth, nor your labor for that which cannot satisfy. Hearken diligently unto me, and remember the words which I have spoken; and come unto the Holy One of Israel, and feast upon that which perisheth not, neither can be corrupted, and let your soul delight in fatness.

verse 51 Why waste your money on worldly things of no lasting value?

We are urged to "feast upon that which perisheth not." Christ is the "living water" and the "bread of life" (John 4:13; 6:47-51) whose gifts and teachings are of supreme eternal worth and are free to all men. Webster's 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines fatness as, "That which gives fertility; the privileges and pleasures of religion; abundant blessings."

52 Behold, my beloved brethren, remember the words of your God; pray unto him continually by day, and give thanks unto his holy name by night. Let your hearts rejoice.

53 And behold how great the covenants of the Lord, and how great his condescensions unto the children of men; and because of his greatness, and his grace and mercy, he has promised unto us that our seed shall not utterly be destroyed, according to the flesh, but that he would preserve them; and in future generations they shall become a righteous branch unto the house of Israel.

verse 53 "how great the covenants of the Lord" For a discussion of the Lord's "technique" of asking us to enter into covenants with him, see Covenants and Covenant Making in chapter 3, volume 2 of Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine.

"how great his condescensions unto the children of men" For a discussion of the condescension of God, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 11:16.

"our seed shall not utterly be destroyed" This covenant was originally made with Lehi (see 1 Nephi 13:30). Even though the Gentiles will eventually scatter and abuse the descendants of the Book of Mormon peoples, the Lord will never allow the Book of Mormon peoples to become extinct.

"according to the flesh" This promise is not to be understood in mere figurative or metaphorical terms. Rather, it will find literal fulfillment among Lehi's descendants.

54 And now, my brethren, I would speak unto you more; but on the morrow I will declare unto you the remainder of my words. Amen.

verse 54 Jacob's reference here is apparently to his teachings contained in the following chapter.

2 Nephi Chapter 10

This chapter contains more of Jacob's personal commentary on the Isaiah passages which he has just quoted in 2 Nephi chapters 6 (verses 7, 14, and 16-18) and chapters 7 and 8.

1 And now I, Jacob, speak unto you again, my beloved brethren, concerning this righteous branch of which I have spoken.

verse 1 “this righteous branch of which I have spoken” The point has been made previously that the families of Lehi, Ishmael, and Zoram and all their descendants comprised a “righteous branch” of the house of Israel, specifically from the tribe of Joseph. Jacob has just made mention of this entity in 2 Nephi 9:53.

2 For behold, the promises which we have obtained are promises unto us according to the flesh; wherefore, as it has been shown unto me that many of our children shall perish in the flesh because of unbelief, nevertheless, God will be merciful unto many; and our children shall be restored, that they may come to that which will give them the true knowledge of their Redeemer.

verse 2 “promises unto us according to the flesh” Again, these promises were not extended by the Lord in any figurative or symbolic sense. Rather they are intended literally.

“our children shall be restored” Jacob teaches that after a long period of apostasy, his descendants will repent and gain access to the priesthood and to revelation and to the Church of Jesus Christ and thereby become a “righteous branch” of the house of Israel with a true knowledge of Christ.

Again, we may speculate as to the specific time period being referred to here. This period of restoration might be the mini-millennium following the Savior's appearance to the Nephites at Bountiful. “That which will give them a true knowledge of their Redeemer” may be Christ's personal visit to the earth at that time. Also this prophecy might have application in this final dispensation.

3 Wherefore, as I said unto you, it must needs be expedient that Christ—for in the last night the angel spake unto me that this should be his name—should come among the Jews, among those who are the more wicked part of the world; and they shall crucify him—for thus it behooveth our God, and there is none other nation on earth that would crucify their God.

verse 3 “as I said unto you, it must needs be expedient that Christ . . . should come among the Jews” Jacob previously taught of Jesus's mortal ministry among the Jews in 2 Nephi 6:9.

“Christ . . . should come” Most all commentaries on the Book of Mormon state that this is the first time the word “Christ” is used in the Book of Mormon (excluding the title page which was written by Moroni much later). In our current edition, and in all editions of the Book of Mormon since 1837, this is the first time the word “Christ” is found. However, in the first edition of the book in 1830, the verse 1 Nephi 12:18 (which was on page 28 of the 1830 edition) contained the name “Jesus Christ” in place of “the Lamb of God” which is found in the current edition. This change was probably made by Joseph Smith, Jr., some time after 1830.

Here the prophet Jacob prophesies that Jesus’s name or title will be “Christ” which means “the anointed one” or “the Messiah.” This verse has been the cause of some ridicule by critics of the Book of Mormon. The word “Christ” is a word of Greek origin (“Christos”) and would not have been in common usage in Palestine at the time Lehi left Jerusalem. Common Greek (“koine” Greek) was not commonly spoken in the Middle East, until after Alexander the Great conquered most of the known world, including Palestine, in about 330 B.C. The word “Christ” is not, found in the Old Testament of the King James Version of the Bible (except in several chapter headings of the LDS version).

The simple answer to this criticism is that when Joseph and Oliver “translated” the Book of Mormon in the spring of 1829, Joseph simply read the words written on his seerstone, placed in the bottom of a hat. And he read the word “Christ” (see the chapter The Process of Translating the Book of Mormon in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, appendix A).

Prior to the elucidation of the process of translation of the Book of Mormon, we spoke often of the translation process consisting of Joseph’s somehow coming to understand a concept and then putting it into his own words. We cannot exclude an element of Joseph’s own vocabulary entering into the “translation” of the Book of Mormon, but mostly Joseph simply read and dictated.

This verse is one of the many examples of detailed and specific prophecy contained in the Book of Mormon. Since many people do not believe that a prophet actually can foretell specific events beyond his own historical horizon, verses like this have caused some criticism of the Book of Mormon. Other examples of specific and detailed prophecy contained in the Book of Mormon include “Mary,” the mother of Jesus (Mosiah 3:8; see also Alma 7:10), Nazareth, Jesus’s boyhood home (1 Nephi 11:13), and John the Beloved (1 Nephi 14:19-27). For a more complete summary of specific prophecies regarding the Savior, see the commentary for Mosiah 15:5-7.

Regarding the names of Jesus used in the Book of Mormon, Latter-day Saint scholar Susan Easton Black counted over 100 different name-titles for the Savior in the Book of Mormon (Susan Easton Black, Finding Christ Through the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 1987, 16–18). Different Book of Mormon personalities display a preference for certain names and titles over others. “Of these names,” wrote John and Gregory Welch, “many were used exclusively by one author, while others were used almost universally” (John W. Welch and J. Gregory Welch, Charting the Book of Mormon: Visual Aids for Personal Study and Teaching, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1999, 44. There is no pagination, numbers refer to the chart number). Each name-title emphasizes different attributes of Christ. Thus, the names and titles preferred by each author often reflect the ways in which they most related to the Savior. John W. Welch explained, “Judging simply from the names and titles that they used in referring to the Lord, we can see that each Book of Mormon prophet related to and testified of Jesus in his own personal ways,” thus not only telling us about the Lord but also revealing things about themselves (John W. Welch, “Ten Testimonies of Jesus Christ in the Book of Mormon,” FARMS Preliminary Reports, 1994, 3. Developed further in John W. Welch, “Ten Testimonies of Jesus Christ from the Book of Mormon,” in Doctrines of the Book of Mormon, ed. Bruce A. Van Orden and Brent L. Top, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 1992, 223–242; reprinted in A Book of Mormon Treasury, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and BYU Religious Studies Center, 2003, 316–342).

Lehi, for example, used 17 different names for Christ (Welch and Welch, Charting the Book of Mormon, 46). According to Welch, “Lehi’s terminology manifests greater variation than that of any other Book of Mormon prophet” (Welch, “Ten Testimonies of Jesus Christ,” 4). Amidst this variety, however, Welch discerned a concentration “around the redemptive and mediating functions” (Ibid.). He notes how this helps us better understand Lehi himself:

These points take on added meaning in the context of Lehi’s personal experiences. To Lehi, who fled from Jerusalem and the lands of his inheritance, the Messiah would be, above all, a Messiah and a Redeemer who would come to restore the fallen, the lost, and the displaced. He would restore them to the lands of their inheritance (John W. Welch, “Ten Testimonies of Jesus Christ in the Book of Mormon,” FARMS Preliminary Reports, 1994, 4), Lehi’s son Jacob had a slightly different focus. Jacob was consecrated a priest by his brother Nephi (see 2 Nephi 5:26). Jacob’s concern about priestly matters such as holiness may be seen in the fact that Jacob used the divine title “Holy One of Israel” more than any other Book of Mormon writer. Furthermore, Welch noticed, “Jacob’s priestly functions are reflected in the testimony that he bears of Christ” (John W. Welch, “Ten Testimonies of Jesus Christ in the Book of Mormon,” FARMS Preliminary Reports, 1994, 7). For example, Jacob used the title of “Christ” in 2 Nephi 10:3, where he explained, “for in the last night the angel spake unto me that this should be his name” (2 Nephi 10:3).

“in the last night the angel spake unto me” We have mentioned previously that this sermon was delivered by Jacob on two successive days. Apparently, the night which separated these two days was one never to be forgotten!

“there is none other nation on earth that would crucify their God” Let us never be guilty of allowing ourselves to believe or preach the unqualified half truth that the Jews crucified our Savior. Keep in mind that most of Jesus’s adherents during his mortal ministry were Jews. The vast majority of Jews in Jerusalem did not even know that Jesus was being crucified, and they likely would have dealt with him in a more gentle way if it had been up to them. Christ’s crucifixion was engineered by a relative few of the Jewish leaders, largely Pharisees and Sadducees, whose positions of power and influence were threatened by Jesus. It is these few to whom this verse refers. It is specifically these who were “the more wicked part of the world.”

“they shall crucify him” Jacob was not the first prophet to announce in scripture the crucifixion, that is, death on a cross, of Jesus. Enoch saw in vision “the Son of Man lifted up on the cross” (Moses 7:55), as did Zenock (1 Nephi 19:10). Crucifixion, the execution and public humiliation by hanging on a cross, seems to have had its origins in ancient Phoenician (Canaanite) and Persian cultures. It was not practiced by the Hebrews but may well have been known to them. If you wish to review the practice of Crucifixion, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 14, Crucifixion.

4 For should the mighty miracles be wrought among other nations they would repent, and know that he be their God.

verse 4 Jesus’s “mighty miracles” were a powerful testimony to the world of his divinity—a testimony which the few wicked Jewish leaders rejected. Other nations, however, would have been more inclined to acknowledge Jesus as God.

5 But because of priestcrafts and iniquities, they at Jerusalem will stiffen their necks against him, that he be crucified.

verse 5 “because of priestcrafts” “Priestcrafts” and “priestcraft” are words with a rather specific meaning. If a man represents himself as a priesthood or church leader, yet his primary motive is personal popularity, power, or financial gain rather than the selfless serving of his fellow man, then he is guilty of practicing priestcrafts or priestcraft. In other words, if his primary motive is worldly—the stuff of pride—then he is guilty of priestcraft. Might this occur within the Church of Jesus Christ as well as without the Church? What would you think might be the antithesis of priestcraft? How about selfless service in the kingdom of God?

6 Wherefore, because of their iniquities, destructions, famines, pestilences, and bloodshed shall come upon them; and they who shall not be destroyed shall be scattered among all nations.

verse 6 Scattering of the Lord’s chosen occurs only when they fail to accept and abide gospel principles or when they apostatize from the truth. The descendants of the tribe of Judah will be scattered and persecuted because of their rejection of Jesus Christ and his gospel, not because they crucified Christ. The Jews as a nation and a tribe and a culture did not crucify the Savior, rather a few of their wicked leaders did (see the commentary for verse 3 above). The contiguity of this verse to the preceding three verses might lead to the mistaken notion that the Jews have suffered persecution over the years because they were somehow guilty of plotting his crucifixion. The ultimate heinous aberration of this idea is that the historical persecution of the Jews has somehow been deserved.

verses 7-9 These verses promise a day of restoration to the Jews and, by implication, to the rest of scattered Israel.

7 But behold, thus saith the Lord God: When the day cometh that they shall believe in me, that I am Christ, then have I covenanted with their fathers that they shall be restored in the flesh, upon the earth, unto the lands of their inheritance.

verse 7 Here Jacob begins to speak messianically—that is, as if he were the Lord. He will continue to speak messianically through verse 19.

Here we learn that the Jews will be restored “in the flesh” (literally and not figuratively) to their homeland Palestine according to the Abrahamic covenant only when they accept Jesus as the Messiah. We may thus conclude that those Jews who constitute the present Zionist movement in the land of Israel have no permanent claim over the land and, indeed, will not have until they accept Jesus Christ as their Messiah and Lord.

8 And it shall come to pass that they shall be gathered in from their long dispersion, from the isles of the sea, and from the four parts of the earth; and the nations of the Gentiles shall be great in the eyes of me, saith God, in carrying them forth to the lands of their inheritance.

verse 8 “isles of the sea . . . and . . . four parts of the earth” These terms refer simply to scattered Israel, wherever they may be found upon the earth. See also verse 21.

“the nations of the Gentiles shall be great in the eyes of me” Keep in mind that the Gentiles who inhabit the great Gentile nation and who accept the gospel shall, in the latter days, have a vital role in preaching the gospel to scattered Israel and gathering them back to “Zion.” See the introductory comments for 1 Nephi 20. The use of the word “nations” here in its plural form is intriguing. Perhaps the reference is to those Gentiles who accept the gospel in their homelands prior to emigrating to that singular great Gentile nation, the United States of America.

9 Yea, the kings of the Gentiles shall be nursing fathers unto them, and their queens shall become nursing mothers; wherefore, the promises of the Lord are great unto the Gentiles, for he hath spoken it, and who can dispute?

verse 9 The interpretation of this verse has been previously given—see the commentary for 2 Nephi 6:7. Please see that commentary. For the convenience of the reader, I will repeat part of that commentary here:

There is a sign that awaits the gathering Israelites in the latter days: The very elect of the “Gentiles” (the “kings” and “queens”) will bow down to the Israelites and humbly serve them and teach the gospel to them without shame, for true humility is seen among the disciples of Christ. Thus, a magnificent and vital role is prophesied for the “Gentiles” in the latter days. Keep in mind that many of these Latter-day Gentiles will be descendants of the house of Israel. The strict Book of Mormon definition of Gentile includes all those not of the tribe of Judah, or those who did not live in Palestine in the days of Lehi. Thus, those scattered Israelites, in those days, were considered Gentiles.

10 But behold, this land, said God, shall be a land of thine inheritance, and the Gentiles shall be blessed upon the land.

verse 10 “this land” In the broadest sense this phrase likely refers to the western hemisphere or the Americas. The land, however, which will become the great Gentile nation is the United States of America.

Here Jacob is speaking to his people and to their descendants, the seed of ancient Joseph. North America is a promised land for this segment of the house of Israel.

verses 11-14 Here again is the same conditional promise we read in 2 Nephi 1:7. If the land’s inhabitants remain righteous they will never be captured and will remain free of the oppression of monarchic governments.

11 And this land shall be a land of liberty unto the Gentiles, and there shall be no kings upon the land, who shall raise up unto the Gentiles.

12 And I will fortify this land against all other nations.

13 And he that fighteth against Zion shall perish, saith God.

14 For he that raiseth up a king against me shall perish, for I, the Lord, the king of heaven, will be their king, and I will be a light unto them forever, that hear my words.

15 Wherefore, for this cause, that my covenants may be fulfilled which I have made unto the children of men, that I will do unto them while they are in the flesh, I must needs destroy the secret works of darkness, and of murders, and of abominations.

verse 15 Here the Lord declares war upon those forces of evil described in the next verse.

16 Wherefore, he that fighteth against Zion, both Jew and Gentile, both bond and free, both male and female, shall perish; for they are they who are the whore of all the earth; for they who are not for me are against me, saith our God.

verse 16 “whore of all the earth” Here is a clear definition of this entity which has essentially the same meaning as the “kingdom of the devil” (1 Nephi 22:22-23) and the same as the “great and abominable church” as defined in 1 Nephi 14. These titles all refer to those who fight against the kingdom of God.

17 For I will fulfil my promises which I have made unto the children of men, that I will do unto them while they are in the flesh—verse 17 The Lord, through the prophet Jacob, prefaces two promises which shall find literal fulfillment. These are explained in the two verses that follow.

18 Wherefore, my beloved brethren, thus saith our God: I will afflict thy seed by the hand of the Gentiles; nevertheless, I will soften the hearts of the Gentiles, that they shall be like unto a father to them; wherefore, the Gentiles shall be blessed and numbered among the house of Israel.

verse 18 “I will afflict thy seed by the hand of the Gentiles” Here Jacob prophesies of the persecution of the native American Indians (including, or perhaps especially, those of Mesoamerica) by the early European American settlers, both in North and perhaps especially in Central America.

“I will soften the hearts of the Gentiles” After these native Americans are “scattered . . . and . . . smitten” (1 Nephi 13:14) before the Gentiles, some of the Gentiles will be touched by the Spirit. They will become more sympathetic toward the native Americans. Some of these Gentiles will accept the gospel, and be “numbered among the house of Israel.”

19 Wherefore, I will consecrate this land unto thy seed, and them who shall be numbered among thy seed, forever, for the land of their inheritance; for it is a choice land, saith God unto me, above all other lands, wherefore I will have all men that dwell thereon that they shall worship me, saith God.

verse 19 Nevertheless, Jacob outlines what is possible for the descendants of the Book of Mormon people if they should repent and accept the gospel of Jesus Christ. The Lord will consecrate the lands of the western hemisphere unto them forever. Why does he say forever? This mortal phase will not last forever. Perhaps the same lands will belong to the descendants of the Book of Mormon peoples even after the world has been celestialized and become the eternal abode of those of the celestial glory.

“a choice land . . . above all other lands” In all of the scriptures this expression or variations of this expressions are used only to describe the Americas (1 Nephi 2:20; 13:30; 2 Nephi 1:5; Ether 2:7,10,15; 9:20; 13:2). Is there something of hyperbole here? Or is this expression actually true in absolute terms? It is food for thought.

“I will have all men that dwell thereon that they shall worship me” The Lord, again through the prophet Jacob, outlines the ideal situation: “I would that all men who dwell thereon should worship me.” This, of course, will not actually come to pass.

A simplified definition of worship is imitation. A man tends to imitate that person whom he worships.

This is the last verse wherein Jacob speaks messianically—as though he were the Lord.

20 And now, my beloved brethren, seeing that our merciful God has given us so great knowledge concerning these things, let us remember him, and lay aside our sins, and not hang down our heads, for we are not cast off; nevertheless, we have been driven out of the land of our inheritance; but we have been led to a better land, for the Lord has made the sea our path, and we are upon an isle of the sea.

verse 20 “we have been driven out of the land of our inheritance” Jacob doubtless speaks here of Palestine. When Joshua led the Israelites into Palestine in about 1407 B.C., the belief was doubtless prevalent that they were being directed by God to their “Promised Land.” Thus that area was the “land of [their] inheritance.”

“we are upon an isle of the sea” As Jacob studied Isaiah’s writings, he doubtless learned that Isaiah’s figurative term for the location of scattered Israel, wherever they may find themselves in the world, was “upon the isle (or isles) of the sea.” In fact, Isaiah on one occasion addressed scattered Israel as “O isles” (see Isaiah 49:1). It is, of course, also possible that the Nephite people, never having explored the land in its entirety, did believe that they were on an island. Notice also the use of this term in the following verse.

One of Jacob’s favorite themes, perhaps from his own experience living in exile, was the preservation of scattered Israel, the idea that God would never abandon his chosen people. He had been exiled twice—first wandering with his family across the desert and great sea—then, second, fleeing from the “land of first inheritance” on the coast of the western Hemisphere even deeper into the wilderness (see 2 Nephi 5:5-6). He seems to take special comfort in the promises made to the Israelites. He obviously acknowledged that he and his people were among those of scattered Israel.

21 But great are the promises of the Lord unto them who are upon the isles of the sea; wherefore as it says isles, there must needs be more than this, and they are inhabited also by our brethren.

22 For behold, the Lord God has led away from time to time from the house of Israel, according to his will and pleasure. And now behold, the Lord remembereth all them who have been broken off, wherefore he remembereth us also.

verses 21-22 “wherefore as it says isles” Here Jacob is calling attention to the plural form of the word “isle” that is used in verse 21. His meaning is clear. He is suggesting that there are other pockets of scattered Israelites in other “isles of the sea” throughout the world.

23 Therefore, cheer up your hearts, and remember that ye are free to act for yourselves—to choose the way of everlasting death or the way of eternal life.

verse 23 “ye are free to act for yourselves” You have your agency which is a sacrosanct characteristic that each man has always possessed, and it cannot be taken away.

24 Wherefore, my beloved brethren, reconcile yourselves to the will of God, and not to the will of the devil and the flesh; and remember, after ye are reconciled unto God, that it is only in and through the grace of God that ye are saved.

verse 24 “after ye are reconciled unto God” Here the phrase “reconciled unto God” means simply that your spiritual status is completely acceptable to God. You have qualified yourself to receive the Lord’s grace.

Usually, when it is found in the scriptures, the phrase “reconciled unto God” means to be justified—to be considered by God to be worthy of exaltation in the celestial kingdom. For a more complete discussion of this concept, see the discussion of the “law of justice” in the introductory commentary for Alma 5 and in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 17, Justification and Sanctification.

“it is only in and through the grace of God that ye are saved” This is a most vital and important concept. It cannot be properly understood without understanding the concepts of “law of justice,” “atonement,” “law of mercy,” and the “grace of God.” Please review these most important concepts in the same two references mentioned in the previous paragraph.

25 Wherefore, may God raise you from death by the power of the resurrection, and also from everlasting death by the power of the atonement, that ye may be received into the eternal kingdom of God, that ye may praise him through grace divine. Amen.

verse 25 “may God raise you from death” Here the term “death” refers to physical death or the separation of the body and spirit.

“everlasting death” This refers to spiritual death or the separation of man from God due to the sins of each individual, and not that due to the fall of Adam..

“that ye may praise him through grace divine” You will have the opportunity to enter “the eternal kingdom of God” and praise him face to face only because of his “grace divine”—that incomparable love which he has for us that impels him to forgive us our sins and extend to us sublime blessings even though we are unworthy—we do not fully merit the forgiveness or the blessings.

2 Nephi Chapter 11

Scripture Mastery

2 Nephi 11:2-4 And now I, Nephi, write more of the words of Isaiah, for my soul delighteth in his words. For I will liken his words unto my people, and I will send them forth unto all my children, for he verily saw my Redeemer, even as I have seen him. And my brother, Jacob, also has seen him as I have seen him; wherefore, I will send their words forth unto my children to prove unto them that my words are true. Wherefore, by the words of three, God hath said, I will establish my word. Nevertheless, God sendeth more witnesses, and he proveth all his words. Behold, my soul delighteth in proving unto my people the truth of the coming of Christ; for, for this end hath the law of Moses been given; and all things which have been given of God from the beginning of the world, unto man, are the typifying of him.

1 And now, Jacob spake many more things to my people at that time; nevertheless only these things have I caused to be written, for the things which I have written sufficeth me.

verse 1 Nephi is now once again the speaker or “first person.”

2 And now I, Nephi, write more of the words of Isaiah, for my soul delighteth in his words. For I will liken his words unto my people, and I will send them forth unto all my children, for he verily saw my Redeemer, even as I have seen him.

verse 2 “I, Nephi, write more of the words of Isaiah, for my soul delighteth in his words” Nephi seems to have had a great bond with the prophet Isaiah. Both of them had been residents of Jerusalem, and thus they shared a common cultural background. Both were familiar with the manner of teaching among the Jews and had special insight into the teachings of the ancient prophets (see 2 Nephi 25:5). They both had seen the Savior and had sweeping visions of the destiny of the earth. They were both “prophets of the restoration,” that is many of their writings dealt with latter-day events leading to the establishment of the kingdom of God.

Attempting to get through the Isaiah chapters in 1 and 2 Nephi, however, is often considered one of the most difficult aspects of reading the Book of Mormon and, as a result, their sacred and significant messages are often bypassed. Yet it is apparent that for many reasons, it is important and helpful to read Isaiah intelligently and insightfully. The Savior commanded all people to take the words of Isaiah seriously. In 3 Nephi, Christ told the Nephites specifically: “And now, behold, I say unto you, that ye ought to search these things. Yea, a commandment I give unto you that ye search these things diligently; for great are the words of Isaiah” (3 Nephi 23:1).

The problem that most readers of the Book of Mormon have with its Isaiah passages may be remedied, at least in part, by learning that there was something of great import that Nephi had in common with Isaiah. It was something that has been called the “Nephite prophetic view.” Nephi learned that he shared with Isaiah basically the same “worldview”—the same beliefs about what will happen prior to the end of the world. Isaiah’s perspective coincided closely with Nephi’s “Nephite prophetic view.” Isaiah shared with Nephi the same worldview. Let me explain.

The books of 1 and 2 Nephi include eighteen chapters of the Book of Isaiah, in addition to other quotations and paraphrases: Isaiah 2–14 and 48–51 either fully or in part. Nephi includes these passages from Isaiah in his record in order to help his audience understand important prophecies from the Lord to a great prophet, Isaiah. Nephi found that he and Isaiah shared the same view regarding the future of the human race.

Actually, Nephi first stated this “Nephite prophetic view” in his vision of the tree of life in 1 Nephi chapters 11–14. The framework of these chapters contains Nephi’s worldview or prophetic view—just what would happen to the people of earth between his day and the “end of the world”—which phrase refers to the Savior’s second coming to earth.

Brother John W. Welch explained that there are four stages of this prophetic view that are apparent in 1 Nephi 11–14:

Stage 1: Christ’s coming to earth in the flesh (1 Nephi 11). Nephi’s vision of the Savior in 1 Nephi 11 is the clearest prophecy of the coming of the Savior on record. Perhaps no other prophet before Christ knew the Savior so well.

Stage 2: the rejection of Christ by the Jews and the Lord’s scattering of the Jews (1 Nephi 12);

Stage 3: the “times (or the “day”) of the Gentiles (1 Nephi 13). This is the period of time beginning with the restoration of the gospel through Joseph Smith in which the fullness of the gospel is taken to “Gentile” nations. Actually, any nation that does not have prophets at its head, revelation as its constitution, and the Messiah as its king, is a Gentile nation. Hence all nations of the earth are Gentile nations. The “times of the Gentiles” are the last or latter days.

Stage 4: the restoration of Israel and the Lord’s ultimate victory of good over evil (1 Nephi 14). This includes the second coming of the Lord to the earth and his cleansing the earth of evil, the destruction of the wicked, and the reward of the righteous. These days may also be referred to as the “end times” or the “day of visitation” (2 Nephi 20:3, Isaiah 10:3) and is the day of Lord’s second coming in power and glory.

The period called the “times of the Gentiles” culminates or is fulfilled at or near the second coming of the Lord, after the Gentiles have had a full opportunity to receive the gospel. Gospel preaching will then be directed principally to the Jews.

The pattern formed by these four stages offers insight into interpreting not only the words of Isaiah but also the prophetic outlook of all writers in the Book of Mormon. For example, Nephi's brother, Jacob, conveniently and consciously summarized the four stages of the Nephite prophetic view in seven verses right near the beginning of his impressive covenant speech in 2 Nephi 6–10.

2 Nephi 6:9 (Stage 1, Christ's coming): "the Lord God . . . should manifest himself unto them in the flesh"

2 Nephi 6:10 (Stage 2, Christ's rejection of the Jews): "after they have hardened their hearts . . . against the Holy One of Israel . . . they shall be smitten and afflicted"

2 Nephi 6:11-13 (Stage 3, the day of the Gentiles): "And blessed are the Gentiles . . . if it so be that they shall repent and fight not against Zion . . . they shall be saved"

2 Nephi 6:14-15 (Stage 4, restoration and victory): "the Messiah will set himself again the second time to recover them . . . he will manifest himself unto them in power and great glory"

This prophetic overview of God's plans for the House of Israel and all humanity lines up with and informs Nephi's and Jacob's understanding of Isaiah's prophecies. When Nephi includes passages from Isaiah in his writing, he chooses chapters and verses that align with this prophetic view. For example, the last four chapters of 1 Nephi deal with the future of Nephi's people in their new land of promise. The order of the topics in these four chapters, 1 Nephi 19-22, tightly follow the order the same four stages found in 1 Nephi 11–14 and 2 Nephi 6.

Along with his presentation of this prophetic pattern, Nephi quotes Isaiah 48 and 49, which correspond to stages 2 and 3, respectively.

1 Nephi 19 (Stage 1): Christ's coming, mission, suffering, crucifixion

1 Nephi 20 / Isaiah 48 (Stage 2): rejection of Christ by the Jews and their scattering

1 Nephi 21 / Isaiah 49 (Stage 3): the Lord's plans for the Gentiles—the times (or the days) of the Gentiles.

1 Nephi 22 (Stage 4): the restoration of Israel and the Lord's final victory over evil which comes in the form of the Savior's second coming.

The book of 2 Nephi contains a large block of quoted material, consisting of Isaiah 2–14. The following illustrates how the chapters from Isaiah that Nephi chose to utilize can be aligned with elements in his four-stage prophetic view. Nephi will make this alignment evident as he interprets these passages in 2 Nephi 25-30, as is briefly illustrated as follows:

2 Nephi 12-14 / Isaiah 2-4 (Stage 4): the day of the Lord—his second coming—the law going forth, the victory over evil (see 2 Nephi 29-30)

2 Nephi 15 / Isaiah 5 (Stages 2 and 3): Jews taken into captivity, God's wrath not turned away; "he will lift up an ensign to the nations" and 2 Nephi 16 / Isaiah 6 (Stage 2): Jews reject Gospel, Lord has "removed men far away" (see 2 Nephi 26-27).

2 Nephi 17 / Isaiah 7 (Stage 1): “A virgin shall conceive, and shall bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel” (see 2 Nephi 25)

2 Nephi 18 / Isaiah 8 (Stage 3): Gentile powers have success over Israel

2 Nephi 19 / Isaiah 9 (Stage 1): “The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light” . . . “For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given.”

2 Nephi 20-24 / Isaiah 10-14 (Stage 4): “The Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people”; Babylon, the wicked and proud will be destroyed; Lucifer will be brought down; “the Lord hath founded Zion, and the poor of his people shall trust in it” (see 2 Nephi 29-30).

Reading Isaiah using Nephi’s prophetic framework illuminates Isaiah’s witness of the Savior. By using this pattern in his vision to select and interpret Isaiah, Nephi helps readers to see how and why Nephi read Isaiah Christologically (their writings apply directly to Jesus Christ), all of which brings clarity to readers today.

“for he verily saw my Redeemer, even as I have seen him” The word verily means really; in truth; in fact. But what evidence do we have that Isaiah actually saw the Lord Jesus? What in Isaiah’s writings made Nephi feel that Isaiah had seen the Savior as clearly as he had?

One answer is in Isaiah’s prophetic call. The Book of Mormon opens with Lehi’s vision of “God sitting upon his throne, surrounded with numberless concourses of angels” with a Messianic figure “descending out of the midst of heaven” (1 Nephi 1:8–9). Nephi’s vision of the Savior, at the top of a high mountain, also appears to have been before the throne of God and his divine assembly (David E. Bokovoy, “‘Thou Knowest That I Believe’: Invoking the Spirit of the Lord as Council Witness in 1 Nephi 11,” Interpreter: A Journal of Mormon Scripture 1, 2012: 1–23). Isaiah too had his vision of God on his throne (2 Nephi 16; Isaiah 6), which is quite comparable to Lehi’s, and which Nephi quotes (See Stephen D. Ricks, “Heavenly Visions and Prophetic Calls in Isaiah 6, 2 Nephi 16, the Book of Mormon, and the Revelation of John,” in Isaiah in the Book of Mormon, 171–190). In Isaiah’s call, one of the seraphim cleanses Isaiah to make him worthy to stand in the midst of the divine council (2 Nephi 16:6–7; Isaiah 6:6–7). Latter-day Saint biblical scholar David Bokovoy explained, “Though the literal identity of this fiery angelic being is ambiguous in the text, one possible LDS reading would interpret the seraph who cleanses Isaiah as an allusion to Christ” (David E. Bokovoy, “On Christ and Covenants: An LDS Reading of Isaiah’s Prophetic Call,” Studies in the Bible and Antiquity 3, 2011: 45). Bokovoy further commented: “Interpreting the Lord seated upon the throne as God the Father and the seraph who heals Isaiah as an allusion to Christ would allow the chapter to serve as an illustration of Isaiah’s role as an eyewitness of Jesus who, as Nephi observed in his commentary, had been sent to testify of the Redeemer (Ibid.).

3 And my brother, Jacob, also has seen him as I have seen him; wherefore, I will send their words forth unto my children to prove unto them that my words are true. Wherefore, by the words of three, God hath said, I will establish my word. Nevertheless, God sendeth more witnesses, and he proveth all his words.

verse 3 “I will send their words” “Their” refers to Isaiah’s and to Nephi’s brother Jacob’s words or writings.

“by the words of three, God hath said, I will establish my word” Nephi, Jacob, and Isaiah have been considered by some to be the three great witnesses of the Book of Mormon. Together, their testimonies fulfill the Lord’s law of witnesses (Deuteronomy 19:15). The testimonies of these three eye-witnesses of the Savior are contained on the small plates of Nephi. Is it possible that we would not have these testimonies had Martin Harris not lost the 116 pages of manuscript? This is a meaningless question since the Lord knew that Martin would lose them and that the small plates would be substituted for them. As fascinating as it would be to be able to read that lost manuscript, it is apparent that the small plates of Nephi contain materials that are even more important than that lost portion (D&C 10:45). It might even be that the central purpose of the small plates of Nephi is to bring to us the testimonies of these three witnesses.

Have you considered the faith of these great pre-advent prophets? As we exercise our faith in him today, we have advantages over them. For example, we have available to us the benefit of eye-witness scriptural accounts of the Savior’s ministry and miracles. Nephi, Jacob, and Isaiah had not the faith-enriching benefit of a Christ who already had come in the flesh. They had only a faith and consummate hope of his eventual birth centuries later. Their tremendous faith earned them the ultimate privilege of being allowed to see the Christ.

For additional discussion of the law of witnesses, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 29:8.

4 Behold, my soul delighteth in proving unto my people the truth of the coming of Christ; for, for this end hath the law of Moses been given; and all things which have been given of God from the beginning of the world, unto man, are the typifying of him.

verse 4 “all things . . . the typifying of him” A “type,” or something that “typifies,” is a symbol or pattern of something else. The law of Moses is replete with “types” of Christ. Elder Bruce R. McConkie taught: “It follows that if we had sufficient insight, we would see in every gospel ordinance, in every rite that is part of revealed religion, in every performance commanded of God, in all things Deity gives his people, something that typifies the eternal ministry of the Eternal Christ” (The Promised Messiah: The First Coming of Christ, 378).

Let us now summarize the types and shadows of Christ that are contained in the law of Moses and should be visible to all of the righteous who lived under that law.

It should not be surprising that the law of Moses includes many things that are symbolic of Jesus Christ. Indeed, the very purpose of the law of Moses was to be a prophetic series of types, shadows, symbols, and prefigurations of him. And not just the law of Moses alone—indeed the scriptures are clear that all things bear witness of him. Nephi wrote, “We did observe to keep the judgments, and the statutes, and the commandments of the Lord in all things, according to the law of Moses. . . Behold, my soul delighteth in proving unto my people the truth of the coming of Christ; for, for this end hath the law of Moses been given; and all things which have been given of God from the beginning of the world, unto man, are the typifying of him” (2 Nephi 5:10; 11:4, italics added). The prophet Moses wrote, “And behold, all things have their likeness, and all things are created and made to bear record of me, both things which are temporal, and things which are spiritual; things which are in the heavens above, and things which are on the earth, and things which are in the earth, and things which are under the earth, both above and beneath: all things bear record of me” (Moses 6:63).

A great deal of material, primarily rabbinic refinement and commentary on the original Mosaic writings, has been added to the original law of Moses. In fact, so much was added in the first millennium of its existence, and so obscure became its original requirements even in that relatively brief period of time, that while living in mortality he who had given the law in its purity was repeatedly accused of breaking some minute aspect of it. This complexity in and occasional confusion about the development of the Mosaic code as presently taught poses challenges for the student of the Old and New Testaments even today. Elder Bruce R. McConkie outlined the dilemma this way: “We cannot always tell . . . whether specific sacrificial rites performed in Israel were part of the Mosaic system or whether they were the same ordinances performed by Adam and Abraham as part of the gospel law itself. Further, it appears that some of the ritualistic performances varied from time to time, according to the special needs of the people and the changing circumstances in which they found themselves. Even the Book of Mormon does not help us in these respects. We know the Nephites offered sacrifices and kept the law of Moses. Since they held the Melchizedek Priesthood and there were no Levites among them, we suppose their sacrifices were those that antedated the ministry of Moses” (The Promised Messiah: The First Coming of Christ, Salt Lake City: Deseret Book Co., 1978, 436).

This possibly confounding factor notwithstanding, let us consider several aspects of the law of Moses which are clearly symbolic of Jesus Christ:

1. Moses (like Isaac, Joseph, and so many others in the Old Testament) was himself a prophetic symbol of the Christ who was to come. As the Father said to him, speaking through Jehovah, “I have a work for thee, Moses, my son; and thou art in the similitude of mine Only Begotten; and mine Only Begotten is and shall be the Savior, for he is full of grace and truth” (Moses 1:6). As the children of Israel were fleeing Egypt and making their way to the promised land (note the Messianic prefiguration of delivering, of saving, of rescuing a covenant people from the sins and evils of the unbelieving world), Moses told them: “The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken. . . . And the Lord said unto me . . . I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him” (Deuteronomy 18:15, 18-19). Just what is it the Lord will require of him who does not believe in and follow the Lord? We will learn that it is spiritual death.

This Prophet (note the upper-case P in the text) who would be raised up like unto Moses is, of course, Jesus Christ. As the footnotes in the LDS edition of the scriptures indicate, this passage from Deuteronomy is quoted, with some variation, twice in the New Testament, twice in the Book of Mormon, and once in the Pearl of Great Price. In every instance, those references make it clear that Christ is the future prophet to whom they refer. The earliest of those declarations comes from Nephi, who said, “This prophet of whom Moses spake was the Holy One of Israel; wherefore, he shall execute judgment in righteousness” (1 Nephi 22:21). Not surprisingly, the most authoritative declaration of this truth also comes in the Book of Mormon from the lips of the resurrected Savior himself. To the Nephites gathered at his feet, Christ said, “Behold, I am he of whom Moses spake, saying: A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass that every soul who will not hear that prophet shall be cut off from among the people” (3 Nephi 20:23; see also Acts 3:22-23). This “cut[ting] off from among the people” is surely being cut off eternally from the people of God—spiritual death.

2. The law of Moses included a host of “performances and ordinances” such as sacrifices and offerings that were directly linked with the future atonement of Christ and were meant to be in every way “a similitude of him.” The sacrifices were performed in similitude of the coming sacrifice of their Messiah. The rituals out of which they gained forgiveness of sins were tokens of what was to be in the life of him whose atonement made forgiveness possible. Their every act, every ordinance, every performance pointed the hearts and minds of believing worshipers forward to Jesus Christ and him crucified. All this was understood by those among them who were faithful and true. The rebellious and slothful were like their modern counterparts, unbelieving, nonconforming, unsaved.

Paul named several of the Mosaic ordinances and performances and said they were a “shadow of heavenly things” (Hebrews 8:4-5). The “meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation,” he said, were designed as “a figure [a symbol or type] for the time then present.” He spoke of the various formalities involved in sprinkling blood as “patterns” of things of a much higher nature. Perhaps Amulek's statement is the clearest and best of them all. He said: “This is the whole meaning of the law, every whit pointing to that great and last sacrifice; and that great and last sacrifice will be the Son of God, yea, infinite and eternal” (Alma 34:14).

Sacrifice was a way of worship in Israel. The divine decree, given to Adam, that men should repent and call upon God in the name of the Son forevermore, was still in force among them. Compliance with that decree still required them to “offer the firstlings of their flocks” as sacrifices in “similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father” (Moses 5:5-8).

3. Feast of the Passover. At the time appointed for their deliverance from Egyptian bondage, the Lord commanded each family in Israel to sacrifice a lamb, to sprinkle its blood on their doorposts, and then to eat unleavened bread for seven more days—all to symbolize the fact that the destroying angel would pass over the Israelites as he went forth slaying the firstborn in the families of all the Egyptians; and also to show that, in haste, Israel should go forth from slavery to freedom. As a pattern for all the Mosaic instructions yet to come, the details of the performances here involved were so arranged as to bear testimony both of Israel's deliverance and of her Deliverer. Among other procedures, the Lord commanded, as found in Exodus 12:

a. “Your lamb shall be without blemish, a male of the first year,” signifying that the Lamb of God, pure and perfect, without spot or blemish, in the prime of his life, as the Paschal Lamb, would be slain for the sins of the world.

b. They were to take of the blood of the lamb and sprinkle it upon the doorposts of their houses, having this promise as a result: “And the blood shall be to you for a token upon the houses where ye are: and when I see the blood, I will pass over you, and the plague shall not be upon you to destroy you,” signifying that the blood of Christ, which should fall as drops in Gethsemane and flow in a stream from a pierced side as he hung on the cross, would cleanse and save the faithful; and that, as those in Israel were saved temporally because the blood of a sacrificial lamb was sprinkled on the doorposts of their houses, so the faithful of all ages would wash their garments in the blood of the Eternal Lamb and from him receive an eternal salvation.

c. As to the sacrifice of the lamb, the decree was, “Neither shall ye break a bone thereof,” signifying that when the Lamb of God was sacrificed on the cross, though they broke the legs of the two thieves to induce death, yet they brake not the bones of the Redeemer, “that the scripture should be fulfilled, A bone of him shall not be broken” (John 19:31-36).

d. As to eating the flesh of the sacrificial lamb, the divine word was, “No uncircumcised person shall eat thereof,” signifying that the blessings of the gospel are reserved for those who come into the fold of Israel, who join the Church, who carry their part of the burden in bearing off the kingdom; signifying also that those who eat his flesh and drink his blood, as he said, shall have eternal life and he will raise them up at the last day” (John 6:54).

e. As “the Lord smote all the firstborn in the land of Egypt” because they believed not the word of the Lord delivered to them by Moses and Aaron, even so should the Firstborn of the Father, who brings life to all who believe in his holy name, destroy worldly people at the last day, destroy (spiritual death) all those who are in the Egypt of darkness, whose hearts are hardened as were those of Pharaoh and his minions.

4. Feast of Pentecost. One of the three great feasts to which all the males of Israel must go each year was the Feast of Weeks, the Feast of Firstfruits, the Feast of the Harvest, or, as we are wont to say, the Feast of Pentecost. It came fifty days after the beginning of the Feast of the Passover. The burnt offerings of Pentecost included a sin-offering and a peace-offering, indicating that the great purpose of the feast was to gain a remission of sins and obtain a reconciliation with God.

With the closing of the Old and the opening of the New Dispensation, the Feast of Pentecost ceased as an authorized time of religious worship. And it is not without significance that the Lord chose the Pentecost, which grew out of the final Passover, as the occasion to dramatize forever the fulfillment of all that was involved in the sacrificial fires of the past. Fire is a cleansing agent. Filth and disease die in its flames. The baptism of fire, which John promised Christ would bring, means that when men receive the actual companionship of the Holy Spirit, then evil and iniquity are burned out of their souls as though by fire. The sanctifying power of that member of the Godhead makes them clean. In similar imagery, all the fires on all the altars of the past, as they burned the flesh of animals, were signifying that spiritual purification would come by the Holy Ghost, whom the Father would send because of the Son. On that first Pentecost of the so-called Christian Era such fires would have performed their purifying symbolism if the old order had still prevailed. How fitting it was instead for the Lord to choose that very day to send living fire from heaven, as it were, fire that would dwell in the hearts of men and replace forever all the fires on all the altars of the past. And so it was that “when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost” (Acts 2:1-4). For further discussion of the imagery of sanctification by fire and the Holy Ghost, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 18, Baptism, the Ordinance that Brings Spiritual Growth.

5. Feast of Tabernacles. Another of the three great feasts at which the attendance of all male Israelites was compulsory, the Feast of Tabernacles, was by all odds Israel’s greatest feast. Coming five days after the Day of Atonement, it was thus celebrated when the sins of the chosen people had been removed and when their special covenant relation to Jehovah had been renewed and restored. Above all other occasions, it was one for rejoicing, bearing testimony, and praising the Lord. In the full sense, it is the Feast of Jehovah, the one Mosaic celebration which, as part of the restitution of all things, shall be restored when Jehovah comes to reign personally upon the earth for a thousand years. Even now we perform one of its chief rituals in our solemn assemblies, the giving of the Hosanna Shout, and the worshipers of Jehovah shall yet be privileged to exult in other of its sacred rituals.

Also, known as the Feast of Booths, because Israel dwelt in booths while in the wilderness, and as the Feast of Ingathering, because it came after the completion of the full harvest, it was a time of gladsome rejoicing and the extensive offering of sacrifices. More sacrifices were offered during the Feast of the Passover than at any other time because a lamb was slain for and eaten by each family or group, but at the Feast of Tabernacles more sacrifices of bullocks, rams, lambs, and goats were offered by the priests for the nation as a whole than at all the other Israelite feasts combined. The fact that it celebrated the completion of the full harvest symbolizes the gospel reality that it is the mission of the house of Israel to gather all nations to Jehovah, a process that is now going forward, but will not be completed until that millennial day when “the Lord shall be king over all the earth,” and shall reign personally thereon. Then shall be fulfilled that which is written: “And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations . . . shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles. And it shall be, that whoso will not come up of all the families of the earth unto Jerusalem to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, even upon them shall be no rain” (Zechariah 14:9-21). That will be the day when the law shall go forth from Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. Manifestly when the Feast of Tabernacles is kept in that day, its ritualistic performances will conform to the new gospel order and not include the Mosaic order of the past.

6. The Day of Atonement. Now we come to the heart and core and center of the whole Mosaic structure, namely, the atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ. This is what the law of Moses is all about. The law itself was given so that men might believe in Christ and know that salvation comes in and through his atoning sacrifice and in no other way. Every principle, every precept, every doctrinal teaching, every rite, ordinance, and performance, every word and act—all that appertained to, was revealed in, and grew out of the ministry of Moses, and all the prophets who followed him—all of it was designed and prepared to enable men to believe in Christ, to submit to his laws, and to gain the full blessings of that atonement which he alone could accomplish. And the chief symbolisms, the most perfect similitudes, the types and shadows without peer, were displayed before all the people once each year, on the Day of Atonement.

On one day each year—the tenth day of the seventh month—Israel’s high priest of the Levitical order, the one who sat in Aaron’s seat, was privileged to enter the Holy of Holies in the house of the Lord, to enter as it were the presence of Jehovah, and there make an atonement for the sins of the people. In the course of much sacrificial symbolism, he cleansed himself, the sanctuary itself, the priesthood bearers as a whole, and all of the people. Sacrificial animals were slain and their blood sprinkled on the mercy seat and before the altar. Incense was burned, and all of the imagery and symbolism of the ransoming ordinances was carried out.

One thing, applicable to this day only, is of great moment. Two goats were selected, lots were cast, and the name of Jehovah was placed upon one goat. The other was called Azazel, the scapegoat. The Lord's goat was then sacrificed as the Great Jehovah would be in due course, but upon the scapegoat were placed all of the sins of the people, which burden the scapegoat then carried away into the wilderness. The high priest, as the law required, "lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat" and confessed "over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat." The goat then bore upon him "all their iniquities unto a land not inhabited," even as the Promised Messiah should bear the sins of many. "For on that day shall the priest make an atonement for you, to cleanse you," Moses said, "that ye may be clean from all your sins before the Lord" (Leviticus 16).

We know that sins are remitted in the waters of baptism. Baptisms were the order of the day in Israel. We know also that provision must be made for repentant persons to free themselves from sins committed after baptism. We see in the annual performances of the Day of Atonement one of the Lord's provisions for renewing the covenant made in the waters of baptism and receiving anew the blessed purity that comes from full obedience to the law involved. In our day, we gain a similar state of purity by partaking worthily of the sacrament of the Lord's supper.

The symbolism and meaning of the ordinances and ceremonies performed on the Day of Atonement are set forth by Paul in his Epistle to the Hebrews. He calls the tabernacle-temple "a worldly sanctuary," wherein sacrificial ordinances were performed each year by Levitical priests to atone for the sins of men and prepare them to enter the Holy of Holies. These ordinances were to remain "until the time of reformation," when Christ should come as a high priest of "a greater and more perfect tabernacle," to prepare himself and all men, by the shedding of his own blood, to obtain "eternal redemption" in the heavenly tabernacle. The old covenant was but "a shadow of good things to come . . . For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins. . . But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins forever, sat down on the right hand of God" (Hebrews 9 and 10). How perfectly the Mosaic ordinances testify of him by whom salvation comes and in whose holy name all men are commanded to worship the Eternal Father forevermore!

For a more complete discussion of the law of Moses, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 16, The Law of Moses.

5 And also my soul delighteth in the covenants of the Lord which he hath made to our fathers; yea, my soul delighteth in his grace, and in his justice, and power, and mercy in the great and eternal plan of deliverance from death.

verse 5 “the covenants of the Lord which he hath made to our fathers” God covenanted with the forefathers of the house of Israel that he would gather and redeem their descendants in a future time. This would occur in the latter days.

The “great and eternal plan of deliverance from death” seems to refer specifically to the atonement and perhaps, in a more general way, to the plan of salvation. The concepts of “grace,” “justice,” and “mercy” are allied concepts and are reviewed Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 2, Consequences of the Lord’s Atonement.

6 And my soul delighteth in proving unto my people that save Christ should come all men must perish.

verse 6 Without the atonement, “Our spirits, stained with sin, unable to cleanse themselves, would be subject to the author of sin everlastingly; we would be followers of Satan; we would be sons of perdition” (Bruce R. McConkie, A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, 130). See also the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:8-9.

7 For if there be no Christ there be no God; and if there be no God we are not, for there could have been no creation. But there is a God, and he is Christ, and he cometh in the fulness of his own time.

verse 7 “if there be no Christ there be no God” If there were no Savior to redeem man from his fallen state, then all mankind would be doomed to spend eternity with Satan, and none could qualify to spend eternity with God in his presence. Thus, God would have no purpose, no reason to exist.

“if there be no God we are not” Mankind could not have been born as his spirit offspring, eventually to inherit a physical body.

“But there is a God, and he is Christ, and he cometh in the fulness of his own time.” Here is the grand testimony of the Book of Mormon: Christ is God, the God of the Old Testament. He is also the God of creation and the God of our salvation.

“he cometh in the fulness of his own time” We have previously read of the period of Jesus’s mortal ministry referred to as the “fulness of time” (2 Nephi 2:3,26). Here, we read a variation of that term.

8 And now I write some of the words of Isaiah, that whoso of my people shall see these words may lift up their hearts and rejoice for all men. Now these are the words, and ye may liken them unto you and unto all men.

verse 8 Nephi must have believed that the following quotations from Isaiah (2 Nephi 12 through 24) were of tremendous value, since the space on the small plates of Nephi was limited, and he was very selective about what he chose to include on these plates (1 Nephi 19:6).

The Isaiah quotations in the Book of Mormon follow, to a large extent, word-for-word the King James Translation. This leaves us to wonder why this is so. We know that in the translation of the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith was allowed to read every word in English as he dictated to Oliver Cowdery and other scribes. We know that he used no reference papers or books—and no Bible. He simply peered into his hat and read (see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, appendix A, “The Process of Translating the Book of Mormon”).

Royal Skousen’s work on the critical text of the Book of Mormon (restoring the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon to its true and accurate form) provides important clues about the Isaiah chapters which may help answer questions about the relationship between the King James Version of the Bible and the Isaiah passages in the Book of Mormon. Brother Skousen has utilized the process of “textual criticism” to learn more about this relationship.

By textual criticism scholars do not mean negatively judging the text, but rather using scholarly tools to study it closely. As Richard N. and R. Kendall Soulen explained, “The function and purpose of textual criticism is of a dual nature: (1) to reconstruct the original wording of [a given text]; and (2) to establish the history of the transmission of the text through the centuries” (Richard N. Soulen and R. Kendall Soulen, Handbook of Biblical Criticism, Louisville, Kentucky: Westminster John Knox Press, 2011, 210). By studying the original text of the Book of Mormon’s Isaiah chapters with the tools of textual criticism, Brother Skousen has identified eight important findings.

1. “The base text for the Isaiah quotations in the Book of Mormon is indeed the King James Version of the Bible” (Royal Skousen, “Textual Variants in the Isaiah Quotations of the Book of Mormon,” in Isaiah in the Book of Mormon, ed. Donald W. Parry and John W. Welch, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1998, 373). It seems clear that the “translated” English text of the Isaiah passages of the Book of Mormon follows the King James Bible closely and, yet, was not read from notes or books by Joseph as he translated. Also, the English text of the Isaiah passages made available to Joseph Smith to read, as he translated, was not wholly the product of that divine person or committee who translated, into English, the plates of Mormon and the small plates of Nephi—which translation was made available to Joseph Smith as he “translated” the Book of Mormon. This means that that unknown person or committee would not have been inclined to translate the Book of Mormon plates (plates of Mormon and small plates of Nephi) with the exact same wording found in the King James Version of the Bible. Rather than translating these Isaiah passages, they made a conscious decision to provide the King James Version to Joseph as he read from his seerstone.

2. Brother Skousen has found evidence in the original Book of Mormon manuscript that shows that the Isaiah passages and other biblical quotations were “dictated by Joseph Smith; no physical copy was given to Oliver Cowdery to copy from” (Skousen, “Textual Variants in the Isaiah Quotations,” 377). This finding agrees with what the witnesses of the translation said, namely that Joseph Smith used no books or notes in bringing forth the Book of Mormon text. Likewise, Skousen also points out that this can be confirmed by Oliver Cowdery’s misspellings of certain words, which makes sense if he was hearing a text being dictated and not copying from a printed page. We can only conclude that the Lord or his divine faculty of translators deliberately chose to utilize the King James Bible text and make it available to Joseph as he translated.

3. It is noteworthy that “the original Book of Mormon chapter divisions of the Isaiah quotations follow a larger thematic grouping, not the interruptive chapter system found in the King James Bible” (Skousen, “Textual Variants in the Isaiah Quotations,” 378). Expressed in another way, “the original Book of Mormon chapter divisions [of Isaiah’s writings] ignore the chapter system found in the King James Bible” (Skousen, “Textual Variants in the Isaiah Quotations,” 378). Instead, as other scholars have noted, the Book of Mormon’s division of Isaiah follows an intricate and larger literary or thematic scheme (See for instance John Gee, “‘Choose the Things That Please Me’: On the Selection of the Isaiah Passages in the Book of Mormon,” in Isaiah in the Book of Mormon, 67–94; David Rolph Seely, “Nephi’s Use of Isaiah 2–14 in 2 Nephi 12–30,” in Isaiah in the Book of Mormon, 151–170; Grant Hardy, Understanding the Book of Mormon: A Reader’s Guide, New York, N. Y.: Oxford University Press, 2010, 58–86).

4. “The original Book of Mormon text is closer to the King James Version” (Skousen, “Textual Variants in the Isaiah Quotations,” 379). By this Skousen means Oliver Cowdery made a few alterations, whether purposely or inadvertently, to the Isaiah quotations as he prepared the Printer’s Manuscript of the Book of Mormon for publication. As such, the Original Book of Mormon manuscript is closer to the King James Version than subsequent editions of the Book of Mormon text (Skousen, “Textual Variants in the Isaiah Quotations,” 381).

5. In the King James Bible, italics identify words that are necessary in English to round out and complete the sense of a phrase but were not present in the Hebrew or Greek text of the manuscript used. Such additions were necessary because in some instances the manuscript was inadequate, and the translators felt obliged to clarify it in the translation. In other instances, italics were necessary in cases where the grammatical construction of English called for the use of words that were not needed to make the same thought in Hebrew or Greek. Italics thus represent the willingness of the translators to identify these areas. It appears that generally, though not always, their judgment was justified in their choice of italicized words.

“The majority of differences between the Book of Mormon text and the Isaiah text are not associated with italicized words in the King James Version” (Skousen, “Textual Variants in the Isaiah Quotations,” 381). The significance of this remains a point of contention among scholars, since some changes do align with the italicized (supplied) word in the King James Version, and how closely the Book of Mormon follows the King James Version's italics may indicate whether Joseph was directly copying from or subconsciously influenced by the King James Version (Brant Gardner, The Gift and Power: Translating the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2011, note 5).

6. "Corrections in the [Book of Mormon's] original manuscript give very little evidence for the hypothesis that Joseph Smith altered the text while he supposedly read it off from a King James Bible" (Skousen, "Textual Variants in the Isaiah Quotations," 382). Essentially, Brother Skousen finds no evidence that Joseph Smith was consciously editing or correcting himself as he dictated the Isaiah passages in 2 Nephi (Skousen, "Textual Variants in the Isaiah Quotations," 385).

7. "The few Isaiah passages that have been quoted more than once in the Book of Mormon may provide evidence for helping to restore the original reading" (Skousen, "Textual Variants in the Isaiah Quotations," 385). Here Skousen has in mind the few instances where the Book of Mormon quotes the same Isaiah passage twice (such as Isaiah 11:4–9 in 2 Nephi 21:4–9 and again in 2 Nephi 30:9, 11–15). These cross-checks show a consistency in Joseph's translation processes, as he would not have turned back to that block of text in his printed Bible as he wove those verses into Nephi's explanation of that passage quoted earlier.

8. "Joseph Smith's 'New Translation' of the Bible used the 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon as a source for changing some of the corresponding biblical text in Isaiah" (Skousen, "Textual Variants in the Isaiah Quotations," 387). From the available evidence, it would appear that the Prophet based some of his revisions of the biblical text (called today the Joseph Smith Translation) on the Book of Mormon, not on the King James Version. Skousen explains, "The Joseph Smith Translation . . . shows that Joseph Smith sometimes used the Book of Mormon text to make changes in the Isaiah text of the Bible. . . It is not surprising that Joseph Smith viewed the Book of Mormon as an inspired text and thus felt free to use the Book of Mormon in altering the biblical text of Isaiah [in the JST]. But apparently, he did not realize the extent to which his copy text, the 1830 edition, contained textual errors. As a consequence, these errors were carried over into the JST (Skousen, "Textual Variants in the Isaiah Quotations," 387–388).

Without a doubt, the words of Isaiah are difficult to interpret. They were probably hard for people in Isaiah's day to understand, and they are even harder to grasp today. But the Book of Mormon encourages and enables modern readers to find great value in Isaiah's important prophecies. The sheer volume of Isaiah chapters in the small plates of Nephi tells us that Lehi, Nephi, and Jacob saw Isaiah (who died only about twenty years before Lehi was born) as the guiding star of Israelite prophets in their day.

Where differences occur, scholars may wonder what those differences may or may not mean. This examination of minute variants is indeed a complex subject, and ordinary readers may well find the payoffs to be less than the effort required to delve deeply into this complex and arcane (understood only by those with special knowledge) topic. It is still helpful and worth knowing, however, that such textual criticism provides insight into the textual history of our sacred Book of Mormon text, where every word counts. It also helps readers understand a little better how the text was revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith (Skousen, "Textual Variants in the Isaiah Quotations," 389).

Even though this topic is indeed complex, these issues "never prevent us from understanding the spiritual message of the Book of Mormon" (Skousen, "Textual Variants in the Isaiah Quotations," 389). In the details of the Book of Mormon's text we can find joy and rich meaning, especially in Isaiah's prophecies concerning the coming of the Redeemer and the gathering of Israel in the last days. We can likewise better appreciate the concentration and inspiration that went into the translation of the Book of Mormon on the part of the Prophet Joseph Smith and the meticulous diligence of his scribes who recorded his carefully dictated words.

2 Nephi Chapter 12

2 Nephi 12-24 Isaiah 2-14

This chapter is the first of thirteen consecutive chapters that Nephi will quote from the book of Isaiah (Isaiah 2-14). You may find it helpful, as you prepare to study these chapters, to read the two supplemental articles which are intended to provide background material to assist your study of the Isaiah materials in the Book of Mormon. These articles are, Historical Setting of the Book of Isaiah, and Introduction to the Book of Isaiah.

One might well ask the question: Why did Nephi feel it important to quote such a large quantity of the writings of Isaiah on the small plates of Nephi? Why is it that these writings were judged to be so vital both to the Nephites and to latter day Israelites? Let's consider a few reasons. First, Isaiah died less than a hundred years before Lehi and his family left Jerusalem. Thus, he was regarded as an almost contemporary prophet, and his writings were likely considered by the Nephites to be pertinent and relevant. Second, the Nephites were an important branch of the house of Israel, and Isaiah often wrote of the destiny of the house of Israel (2 Nephi 6:5) and of God's covenants and promises to the house of Israel. Third, Isaiah frequently wrote of the coming of Jesus Christ the Messiah, a subject obviously dear to the hearts of Nephi, Jacob, and other righteous Nephites (2 Nephi 11:2-4). Finally, Isaiah also treated the themes of repentance and the judgments of God and key events relating to the latter days, themes valuable to Nephi and the other Book of Mormon prophets who will quote from Isaiah's writings.

verses 1-5 These verses contain a prophecy that speaks to us in this final dispensation. The principle themes of these verses are the gathering of Israel, temples, and temple service. Joseph Smith summarized the connection between the gathering of Israel and temple service: "The object of gathering the Jews, or the people of God in any age of the world . . . was to build unto the Lord a house whereby he could reveal unto his people the ordinances of his house and the glories of his kingdom, and teach the people the way of salvation" (HC, 5:423).

1 The word that Isaiah, the son of Amoz, saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem:

verse 1 "The word that Isaiah the son of Amoz saw" This statement and other similar statements (for example, see 2 Nephi 18:5: "The Lord spake also unto me, again, saying") indicates prophetic authority.

Please note that when the following material was revealed to Isaiah, he “saw” it. How did he “see” the word? Perhaps he saw in vision the things described in his prophecies and then recorded them in a scroll or book. Or perhaps he saw them written out on a scroll or in a vision of a heavenly book as did Lehi (see 1 Nephi 1:11-14) or Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon (D&C 76:11-12, 28).

“concerning Judah and Jerusalem” This vision of Isaiah certainly deals primarily with Jerusalem and the kingdom of Judah. The latter had been in existence for about 200 years at the time of this writing. But Isaiah’s prophecies also deal with the entire house of Israel, including the lost ten tribes, as the Book of Mormon abundantly testifies. Nephi wrote, “Hear ye the words of the prophet [Isaiah] . . . which were written unto all the house of Israel” (1 Nephi 19:24; 2 Nephi 6:5, 3 Nephi 23:2).

Using his typical dualistic approach, in this chapter, Isaiah insightfully connects major problems in Judah during his day with important prophecies of conditions and events in the latter days.

verses 2-4 One interesting point is that the wording of Isaiah 2:2-4 is also found, with only slight variation, in Micah 4:1-4. Micah was a prophet who was a contemporary of Isaiah. He lived in a rural village twenty-five miles southwest of Jerusalem. Why the similar wording? Did Micah borrow the words of his mentor Isaiah? Did they both borrow the words of an older prophet? Did they both see the same heavenly vision, and were they inspired to record it in essentially the same words?

2 And it shall come to pass in the last days, when the mountain of the Lord’s house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it.

verse 2 When are the “last days”? Secular biblical scholars generally believe that this term refers to the meridian of time, or the period of Christ’s ministry. We know, however, that the “last days” are the “latter days” or this final dispensation. The term also includes the Millennium.

“it shall come to pass in the last days” What exactly is being prophesied to occur in the last days? The two verses that follow this one do itemize the things that will occur. Is the establishment of “the mountain of the Lord’s house . . . in the top of the mountains” specifically prophesied to occur in this verse? For reasons that are not clear, Joseph Smith translated one phrase in this verse as “when the mountain of the Lord’s house shall be established” instead of “that the mountain of the Lord’s house shall be established” (from the KJV). This leaves this awkward sentence without a subject. In spite of this, it seems likely that the intent of the verse is that the establishment of the temple or temples is an integral part of the prophecy.

“the mountain of the Lord’s house shall be established in the top of the mountains” The phrase “mountain of the Lord’s house” refers to the temple or temples of God.

The temples “shall be established in the tops of the mountains,” but which mountains? This prophecy might be fulfilled in one of five ways:

1. The temple in Salt Lake City and other nearby temples are certainly located in the tops of the Rocky Mountains. Might the expression “all nations shall flow unto it” refer to the great family history organization to which people of all nations flow in order to do ancestral research? In the dedicatory prayers of both the Salt Lake and the Idaho Falls temples, mention was made of the fulfillment of Isaiah’s prophecy in verse 2.

In General Conference in April 1971, Elder LeGrand Richards said of Isaiah 2:2 (2 Nephi 12:2), “How literally that has been fulfilled, in my way of thinking, in this very house of the God of Jacob right here on this block! This temple, more than any other building of which we have any record, has brought people from every land to learn of his ways and walk in his paths” (Elder LeGrand Richards, “In the Mountain of the Lord’s House,” April 1971 General Conference Address, online at lds.org).

Speaking at the Conference Center shortly after it was built, President Hinckley taught, “I believe that prophecy applies to the historic and wonderful Salt Lake Temple. But I believe also that it is related to this magnificent hall. For it is from this pulpit that the law of God shall go forth, together with the word and testimony of the Lord” (President Gordon B. Hinckley, “This Great Millennial Year,” October 2000 General Conference Address, online at lds.org).

2. The day is yet in the future when a temple will be built on that “Mount Zion” which is “the city of New Jerusalem” in Jackson County, Missouri (D&C 84:2-4).

3. When the Jews gather in old Jerusalem, they will assemble in “the mountains of the Lord’s house” (D&C 133:13), and a temple will be built there in the mountains of Judea as a part of the final work of restoration (Ezekiel 37:24- 28) (Jeffrey R. Chadwick, “The Great Jerusalem Temple Prophecy: Latter-day Context and Likening Unto Us,” in Ascending the Mountain of the Lord: Temple, Praise, and Worship in the Old Testament, ed. David R. Seely, Jeffrey R. Chadwick, and Matthew J. Grey, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and Religious Studies Center, 2011, 367–383).

4. This prophecy may refer to all of the Lord’s temples built in these latter days (McConkie, Millennial Messiah, 275). This interpretation might explain how “all nations” could flow to the temple of the Lord, for it is quite impossible that all peoples could come to a temple or temples in the mountains of North America (Donald W. Parry, Visualizing Isaiah, Provo, UT: FARMS, 2001, 98).

5. Matthew Roper and John Gee have pointed out that because the land of Nephi, where his people built their temple (2 Nephi 5:16), was at a higher elevation, it would have been easy for Nephi to liken this prophecy to his situation and his people (John Gee and Matthew Roper, “‘I Did Liken All Scriptures Unto Us’: Early Nephite Understandings of Isaiah and Implications for ‘Others’ in the Land,” in The Fulness of the Gospel: Foundational Teachings from the Book of Mormon, ed. Camille Fronk, Brian M. Hauglid, Patty A. Smith, and Thomas A. Wayment, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 2003, 58).

It is clear that a prophecy may have multiple applications. Many of Isaiah’s prophecies have numerous meanings and have been fulfilled in different ways at different times.

Perhaps more important than the location of any specific temple, this prophesied sign is the latter-day establishment of the temple ordinances.

“shall be exalted above the hills” Spiritually, the temples represent, figuratively, the highest point on earth, which symbolically connects heaven and earth. It is where God’s word is revealed to his prophet.

“all nations shall flow unto it” For something to “flow” up a mountain, there must needs be a power operating stronger than gravity, certainly the power of God and the drawing power of the temple. People of all nations shall come to the temples to receive their blessings. Joseph Smith taught that “there should be a place where all nations shall come up from time to time to receive their endowments” (TPJS, 367).

3 And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.

verse 3 Both expressions, “the mountain of the Lord” and “the house of the God of Jacob,” also refer to the temple or temples of God.

“he will teach us of his ways” In the temples we have the opportunity to be close to the Spirit of God. Through the mediation of the Spirit we may receive personal revelation (see Isaiah 54:13) or the Spirit may confirm to us the truth of the scriptures and the truths of the revelations given through his apostles and prophets. Once we learn his ways, we are able to “walk in his paths,” that is, walk the walk of Jesus Christ.

This verse seems to differentiate between two separate headquarters of the church in the latter days, “Zion” (the New Jerusalem in the western hemisphere) and “Jerusalem.” Those remnants of Israel that are of the house of Joseph, those descendants of the other ten tribes, and Gentiles that become church members are to gather to Zion, and the Jews to Jerusalem: “Let them therefore who are among the gentiles flee unto Zion. And let them who be of Judah flee unto Jerusalem” (D&C 133:12-13).

“out of Zion shall go forth the law” What “law”? Which “Zion”? Zion is a title often used to describe both Old and New Jerusalem. In this dispensation, some church general authorities have interpreted this passage. Each has suggested that “Zion” refers to the latter-day Church of Jesus Christ with its headquarters in the United States of America. Elder Mark E. Petersen, for example, identified the general conferences of the Church as the fulfillment of this passage—especially as these conferences are broadcast to the world by radio and television (Why the Religious Life, 200-01, 305-07). President George Albert Smith taught a broader concept as he dedicated the Idaho Falls temple. He taught the “going forth” of the “law” as the establishment in the world of governments similar to our divinely-inspired constitutional form of government (Improvement Era, October, 1945, 564). The prophet Joseph Smith equated the “law” with the theocracy of Jesus Christ who will rule during the Millennium from Zion in Jackson County, Missouri, which serve as the seat of government (TPJS, 248-52).

“and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem” In what sense will the word of the Lord proceed forth from Jerusalem? Joseph Smith taught the manner in which the Lord’s word would proceed forth: “Moses received the word of the Lord from God himself; he was the mouth of God to Aaron, and Aaron taught the people, in both civil and ecclesiastical affairs; . . . so will it be when the purposes of God shall be accomplished [during the Millennium]; when ‘the Lord shall be king over the whole earth’ and ‘Jerusalem his throne.’ ‘The law shall go forth from Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem’” (TPJS, 252).

4 And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plow-shares, and their spears into pruning-hooks—nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

verse 4 This verse depicts the cleansing judgments of God that will usher in the Millennium. Weapons of destruction are turned into tools of production, symbolizing millennial peace. During the Millennium, peace will prevail. We will have a world without war.

“And he shall judge among the nations” The Hebrew term hokiyach means to “settle the case.” Here and in the King James Version it is translated judge. When the Savior makes his “great and dreadful” appearance on the earth, he will be the judge of the world (John 5:27; Acts 10:42; Hebrews 12:23).

“Plowshares” are the cutting blades of a plow.

A “pruninghook” is a tool with a hooked blade that is used for pruning plants.

“Swords” and “spears” represent war and destruction, and “plowshares” and “pruninghooks” represent peace and prosperity (TPJS, 248).

“neither shall they learn war any more” Not only will the nations destroy their weapons and convert them into useful implements, but also they will not even learn—study or gain knowledge of—war.

5 O house of Jacob, come ye and let us walk in the light of the Lord; yea, come, for ye have all gone astray, every one to his wicked ways.

verse 5 “for ye have all gone astray” This verse, interpreted literally in a prophetic sense, might be taken to imply that there would be a complete apostasy before the time of establishment of the “mountain of the Lord’s house.” An alternate interpretation, however, might be that Isaiah’s attention has shifted from the future back to his own people. He is rebuking them for their pride and idolatry.

verses 6-9 Isaiah presents a list of sins committed by Israel including practicing false temple worship (verse 6), seeking after earthly riches (verse 7), building up arms and weaponry (verse 7), worshiping idols (verse 8), and indulging in pride (verse 9). People in our day are also guilty of such sins.

6 Therefore, O Lord, thou hast forsaken thy people, the house of Jacob, because they be replenished from the east, and hearken unto soothsayers like the Philistines, and they please themselves in the children of strangers.

verse 6 “O Lord” This expression is not found in the King James Bible and indicates that Isaiah is addressing the Lord in prayer.

“thou hast forsaken thy people” The term “forsaken” carries the sense of abandoning the house of Israel and leaving them without the Spirit of God and without revelation through prophets.

“they be replenished from the east” “East” is ordinarily the sacred direction. Holy temples are oriented eastward and the Lord at his second coming will come from the east (Matthew 24:27). Here, however, the Israelites have sought to be spiritually directed (replenished) by apostate religious systems from heathen countries in the east, especially Assyria and Babylonia.

The “Philistines” were a group of people who occupied southwest Palestine and who often warred against Israel.

“hearken unto soothsayers” Soothsayers are persons who pretend to prophesy or predict the future—false prophets.

“they please themselves in the children of strangers” The Hebrew sepiyqu means to “clasp hands.” Another possible translation of this phrase is that the Israelites shake hands with and enter into covenants with people outside the house of Israel (“strangers”) who are unsavory people. This phrase might also refer to God’s command not to intermarry with those outside the house of Israel.

7 Their land also is full of silver and gold, neither is there any end of their treasures; their land is also full of horses, neither is there any end of their chariots.

verse 7 “Silver,” “gold,” and “treasures” are symbolic of worldly materialism. The Lord’s people are ever commanded to seek him rather than the riches of this world.

“Horses” and “chariots” are symbolic of warfare and military might.

Isaiah's repeated use of the word "full" here and in the following verse corresponds to the phrase "fully ripe" which implies completely wicked and fully ready for destruction by the Lord (see Alma 37:31; 45:16; D&C 101:11; 43:26; and 26:17).

8 Their land is also full of idols; they worship the work of their own hands, that which their own fingers have made.

verse 8 "Idols" are both the heathen deities constructed of wood and stone and also more abstract things that men become excessively devoted to, including worldly wealth, honors of men, and things of the flesh.

verses 6-8 We may summarize these three verses: For thou, O Lord, hast withdrawn thy blessings and influence from thy chosen people because they have become filled with false religious ideas. They have accepted the paganistic and idolatrous teachings of false mystics from the East. They have come to believe in fortune tellers as do the Philistines, and they have entered into covenants with unsavory people outside the house of Israel—foreigners. These foreigners bring a coarser, baser influence to Israel which damages Israel's spirituality. The Lord's chosen have filled their land with all manner of worldly possessions. The form of worship among some Israelites has even deteriorated to a point of idol worship, probably including the institutional fornication which was part of the ancient fertility cults.

9 And the mean man boweth not down, and the great man humbleth himself not, therefore, forgive him not.

verse 9 The "mean man"—the common or ordinary man—has not been humbled, neither has the man of importance. Both are guilty of pride. Therefore, Lord, do not forgive them. Isaiah is still praying to the Lord.

verses 10-22 These verses contain one of the greatest prophecies recorded in the standard works of Christ's second coming and his judgments on the proud.

10 O ye wicked ones, enter into the rock, and hide thee in the dust, for the fear of the Lord and the glory of his majesty shall smite thee.

verse 10 "The "wicked ones" are obviously the wicked of the earth.

This verse presents a scenario similar to one in Revelation 6:15: "And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountain" due to their "fear of the Lord."

"the glory of his majesty" The terms "glory" and "majesty" refer to God's royalty and kingship.

11 And it shall come to pass that the lofty looks of man shall be humbled, and the haughtiness of men shall be bowed down, and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day.

verses 10-11 Here Isaiah begins an elaborate warning and threat that extends to the end of chapter 12. The time frame for these verses is not at first apparent. The sectarian scholars still cling to the idea that Isaiah is looking forward to the “Messianic age,” or the time of the Savior’s mortal ministry. It seems clear, however, that instead they refer to his second advent, his second coming, that pre-millennial period of cleansing when the telestial-bound souls will be purged from off the earth, and all the rest will be abased and humbled before the Lord’s power and majesty when he appears to all the world in glory.

“Lofty looks” and “Haughtiness” refer to pride. For a discussion of the sin of pride, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 5, “The ‘Natural Self’ and the ‘Spiritual Self,’” under the heading of “Pride.” Please recall that the essence of the sin of pride is given in excessiveness to the pulls of your natural self.

These warnings likely apply specifically to those who remain on earth after the great purging of the wicked. Hence their meaning becomes: O ye wicked ones (since those of telestial merit have already been purged, this greeting is likely directed to the proud and worldly who are deserving of a terrestrial, reward), even though you hide in the rocks or in the dust (John the Revelator foretells the same event in Revelation 6:15-16), you will not escape. All those who do not humble themselves shall be forced into a state of humility by the power and glory of the Lord’s coming. Every knee will bow and every tongue confess that Jesus is the Christ. It is better for us to humble ourselves than to be “compelled to be humble” (Alma 32:13-15).

In this hour, the Lord alone shall be exalted.

verses 12-16 These verses stress the universal application of the pre-millennial purging and humbling to be dealt to the “proud” of all nations. Isaiah uses symbolisms to represent the major flaws in the character and institutions of ancient Israel.

12 For the day of the Lord of Hosts soon cometh upon all nations, yea, upon every one; yea, upon the proud and lofty, and upon every one who is lifted up, and he shall be brought low.

verse 12 The term “Lord of Hosts” means Lord of Armies. It implies ruler over great numbers. The same title is found in the Doctrine and covenants as “Lord of Sabaoth” (D&C 87:7; 88:2; 95:7). Sabaoth means hosts or armies and should not be confused with Sabbath.

The Lord’s hosts or armies consist of ancient Israel, which was called “the armies of the living God” (1 Samuel 17:26, 36); the hosts of heaven, also called armies (Daniel 4:35; Revelation 19:14; D&C 88:112); and the latter-day Church, described as being “terrible as an army with banners” (D&C 5:14) and “the army of Israel” (D&C 105:26, 30-31; 109:73). As the Lord’s army, we are equipped with the “whole armor of God” (Ephesians 6:11-17; D&C 27:15-18), spiritual armor designed to assist us to use light and truth in the battle against the forces of evil. Jehovah is the “captain” (2 Chronicles 13:12), “leader” and “commander” (Isaiah 55:4), and “man of war” (Exodus 15:3) who will lead us against the armies of evil.

The “day of the Lord of Hosts” is the second coming of the Savior and all those happenings associated with that magnificent event.

Throughout the writings of Isaiah, the phrases “day of the Lord,” “in that day,” “day of visitation,” “day of his fierce anger,” “and day of the Lord’s vengeance” are found more than fifty-five times, underscoring how frequently Isaiah’s writings emphasize the last days and the second coming.

As part of this “day” and prior to his actual coming, the wicked will be purged from off the earth. Among those who remain will be many proud and haughty whose arrogance will be stripped away. This is the Lord’s day. All who remain to inhabit the earth will humbly acknowledge him as Lord.

“soon cometh” The implication of this phrase is that we must always be prepared for the Lord’s coming, for he will come “soon” or “quickly” (D&C 33:18; 34:12; 49:28)—he will come unexpectedly.

“upon all nations” The Lord’s judgment will be universal.

13 Yea, and the day of the Lord shall come upon all the cedars of Lebanon, for they are high and lifted up; and upon all the oaks of Bashan;

verse 13 “the day of the Lord” This is the same as “the day of the Lord of Hosts” in the previous verse.

The “cedars of Lebanon” and the “oaks of Bashan” are symbols of both worldly strength and material splendor. Those who are mighty and strong and wealthy will be brought low.

The oak forests of Bashan are located east of the northern part of the Jordan River. The hardwoods of cedar or oak were rare in Palestine and to own them was a status symbol.

14 And upon all the high mountains, and upon all the hills, and upon all the nations which are lifted up, and upon every people;

verse 14 In this context the “high mountains” and “hills” represent apostate temple systems that attempt to imitate the Lord’s true temple, the “mountain of the Lord” (Isaiah 2:2-4).

15 And upon every high tower, and upon every fenced wall;

verse 15 The “high tower” and “fenced wall” represent man’s misguided trust in man made defenses—leaning on the arm of flesh. A “fenced wall” is also a wall around a city.

16 And upon all the ships of the sea, and upon all the ships of Tarshish, and upon all pleasant pictures.

verse 16 The “ships” represent the people’s commercial enterprises. The “ships of Tarshish” were probably used as an analogy by Isaiah to represent wealth and economic prosperity. The precise location of Tarshish is unknown, but it was probably a prosperous and bustling Mediterranean seaport. Perhaps because of the city’s connection with wealth and affluence, the destruction of Tarshish and its ships symbolizes the Lord’s judgment on the proud and arrogant.

The term “pleasant pictures” is more correctly translated in modern translations as “pleasant ships.” These were apparently the pleasure boats in which the wealthy traveled throughout the Mediterranean.

Isaiah thus prophesies that in that pre-millennial period, the Lord will abase all these superficial symbols of wealth and power. The general theme that God’s justice will ultimately prevail and triumph over evil is probably the most important theme found in Isaiah’s writings (see also 2 Nephi 13:1-8, 10-26; 14:1- 6; 15:5-6, 25-30; 17:17-25; 18:6-8; 19:1-21; 20:5-19, 24-27; 21:6-9, 14-16; 23:1-22; and 24:1-21).

Contained in this verse is an interesting point that testifies of the Book of Mormon’s authenticity as a translation of an ancient document. If you compare this verse with the King James Version of Isaiah 2:16, you will note a phrase not present in the latter—“upon all the ships of the sea.” Apparently, this phrase was contained in the Isaiah writings on the brass plates. Yet for some reason it did not make it into the King James Version. It is intriguing that the phrase “upon all the ships of the sea” is found in another version of the Old Testament, the ancient Greek version called the Septuagint. Tradition has it that this version was translated from the Hebrew into Greek by seventy elders (thus the name Septuagint, meaning seventy and the common symbol used for this version—LXX) probably some time before the third century BC. There is no evidence that the twenty-three-year-old Joseph Smith possessed or even knew about the Septuagint when he translated the Book of Mormon. If he had had access to it, he would not have been able to read it since it was written in Greek. It is of further interest that the same verse in the Greek does not contain the phrase “upon all the ships of Tarshish.” Thus, the Book of Mormon contains the most complete translation of this verse.

17 And the loftiness of man shall be bowed down, and the haughtiness of men shall be made low; and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day.

18 And the idols he shall utterly abolish.

verse 18 To “abolish” means to destroy.

19 And they shall go into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth, for the fear of the Lord shall come upon them and the glory of his majesty shall smite them, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth.

verses 17-19 A reiteration of the fate of the proud and worldly. The earth’s proud and wicked attempt to hide in the cavities of the earth because they feel more comfortable, as do moles and bats in darkness. They try to hide from God and his glory, and they find themselves in Satan’s domain, beneath God and his saints’ dwelling place.

Again, those being addressed here are not the wicked telestial souls who will be purged from the earth. Rather this prophecy pertains to those terrestrial individuals who qualify to remain to receive Christ at his second coming but who need be brought low and humbled in his great day.

Verse 19 refers to the display of the Lord’s power, when he comes in glory, which will cause the earth to tremble. Many prophets have placed earthquakes in the context of the end of the earth (Ezekiel 38:19-20; JS-M 1:29; Revelation 6:12-17; 16:18).

Might it be that the haughty and proud terrestrial souls that inhabit the earth at the time of the Lord’s second coming in glory will become aware of the terrible destruction occurring and that this is what causes them to hide.

20 In that day a man shall cast his idols of silver, and his idols of gold, which he hath made for himself to worship, to the moles and to the bats;

verse 20 The imagery of this verse is striking. The people will bury their idols in the ground (the habitation of moles) or pile them in caves (the habitation of bats). The irony here is that people who lusted after these beautiful material objects made of precious metals, will throw these precious items to animals who are blind from living so long in darkness and who will not be able to see or appreciate them at all. They will cast away their idols when they realize how meaningless they are.

21 To go into the clefts of the rocks, and into the tops of the ragged rocks, for the fear of the Lord shall come upon them and the majesty of his glory shall smite them, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth.

verse 21 “Clefts of the rocks” are crevices or caves into which the wicked will flee in order to hide from the Lord. Perhaps these “clefts” and “ragged” rocks will result from the earthquakes in verse 19.

22 Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils; for wherein is he to be accounted of?

verse 22 “Cease ye from man” Isaiah exhorts Israel to stop placing confidence in man and his status symbols and idols and trust in the Lord. This is one of the most important themes in all of the writings of Isaiah (see also 2 Nephi 17:1-16; 18:1-4, 9-15; 20:24-34; 24:32).

“whose breath is in his nostrils” Man is never more than a few breaths away from death. Therefore, anyone who leans on the arm of flesh may see his support disappear in an instant.

“wherein is he to be accounted of” How much is he worth? Is he worth patterning your life after?

2 Nephi Chapter 13

Chapter 13 is taken from Isaiah's writings which are found in Isaiah chapter 3. Isaiah continues his set of prophecies of destruction. In Isaiah's day, perhaps he had in mind the pending destruction of the southern kingdom of Judah. In this chapter, Isaiah makes a series of prophecies that will eventually find fulfillment on at least four different occasions: (1) Although Jerusalem was spared when Assyria attacked and pillaged Judah in 701 BC, much of the country around Jerusalem was destroyed. (2) In 586 BC, Jerusalem was captured by the Babylonians. (2) In AD 70, the last great scattering of the Jews occurred when Jerusalem was demolished by the Romans. (3) In the latter days, Jerusalem will find itself under siege for three and one half years during the great battle of Armageddon (for a summary of the essential facts surrounding this great final battle, see the introductory commentary for chapter 14 below). Some students of Jewish history even suggest fulfillment in the Nazi holocaust.

Isaiah prophesies that anarchy and ruin will come upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem and Judah, during each of these periods of destruction, because of the sinful nature of their inhabitants, whose speech and actions are directed against the Lord and his commandments. Their sins are likened to the sins committed in Sodom before its destruction (verses 8-9).

Anarchy may also come because of the Lord's removing the supply of bread and water (famine or drought). In Isaiah's day, the culture of the people was predominantly an agrarian one. The fertility of the land was therefore of utmost concern, and the threat of famine was particularly poignant. One specific awful fulfillment of this prophecy was the devastating famine that occurred during the Roman siege of Jerusalem in AD 70. Josephus's account includes an instance in which a woman roasted her suckling child for food (Wars of the Jews, 6:3).

Anarchy may also come by the loss of righteous leadership in the region, for we are told that God will remove the region's individuals who have earned honor and status in the community. In their place, children and base types will become the rulers (verses 4, 12).

We have mentioned the possible ancient settings where these prophecies of destruction apply. As always, we may wish to draw a latter-day application as well. Perhaps this chapter also warns latter-day covenant people that the Lord will not allow them to prosper in wickedness. It particularly warns that they must avoid pride, vanity, selfishness, worldliness, and oppression of the needy. It should remind them that true joy is found in trusting in the Lord's plan of happiness and in the Lord's covenants, for the worldly selfish avenues one might pursue will surely pass away, leaving only sorrow.

1 For behold, the Lord, the Lord of Hosts, doth take away from Jerusalem, and from Judah, the stay and the staff, the whole staff of bread, and the whole stay of water—verse 1 “from Jerusalem, and from Judah” These refer to the inhabitants of Jerusalem and Judah. In a symbolic sense, these can also refer to an apostate people in the latter days who will be subjected to such judgments as are detailed here.

“the stay and the staff” The word “stay” means protector, and the “staff” is the support or walking stick. When the two are used together, an entirety or wholeness is implied. Thus, Isaiah seems to be prophesying that the Lord will withdraw all his support from Israel. Probably this includes more than just physical support—likely spiritual support as well. In the Old Testament, the Lord is repeatedly referred to as the “stay” and “staff” (see Isaiah 48:2; Micah 3:11; Isaiah 26:3).

“bread” “water” These are perhaps representative of all forms of physical nourishment, but they also have spiritual connotations in reference to the Lord, who is metaphorically the “bread of life” (John 6:35) and the “living water” (John 4:6-14; 7:37-38).

Thus, this prophecy foresees both physical and spiritual famine.

2 The mighty man, and the man of war, the judge, and the prophet, and the prudent, and the ancient; verses 2-3 In a time of crisis, it is a serious affliction to be without reliable leadership. Isaiah prophesies that in the hour of Israel’s distress, they will find themselves without any leadership.

3 The captain of fifty, and the honorable man, and the counselor, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent orator.

The several following terms are used in the sense that a totality of the leaders will be removed. These include “the mighty man”—political or governmental leader; “the man of war” and the “captain of fifty”—military leader; “the judge”—civic leader; “the prophet”—the religious leader; “the prudent”—the man who practices divination; “the ancient”—the older wise man from whom one may seek guidance; “the cunning artificer”—the skilled craftsman (cunning can also have a negative meaning as in 2 Nephi 9:28); “the eloquent orator”—the individual gifted in the ability for public speaking. The reader may decide for himself who is meant by the “honorable man” and the “counselor.”

It is evident that Judah will be relieved of anyone with any leadership ability, whether it be governmental, military, social, or cultural. This, in fact happened during the Babylonian captivity in 586 BC when Nebuchadnezzar, according to Josephus, “slew such as were in the flower of their age, and such as were of the greatest dignity. . . He also took the principal persons in dignity for captives . . . among whom was the prophet Ezekiel” (Antiquities of the Jews, 10:6).

4 And I will give children unto them to be their princes, and babes shall rule over them.

verse 4 Who are the “children” or “babes” that will rule over Israel? There seems to be at least three plausible interpretations of this verse.

1. With the leaders of society killed or taken into captivity, only the poor, weak masses remained. Therefore, the “children” or “babes” which shall rule over Israel may refer to people of childish understanding who can hardly face successfully the challenge of bringing order to anarchy.

2. The “children” or “babes” may be Gentiles who, between the time of Isaiah and today, have ruled over Israel for some 2,500 years. The land of Palestine itself has been controlled by a succession of “Gentiles” including, to name but a few, the Babylonians, the Greeks, the Romans, the Arabs, the Turks, and the British. Also, the Jews have been scattered among the Gentiles of the world who have ruled over them. The terms “children” or “babes” are terms of derision used by Israelites to refer to those without the house of Israel.

3. The verse may lend itself to a literal interpretation. Many of the Jewish kings before the Babylonian captivity came to rule at a very early age. For example, the wicked Manasseh succeeded his father Hezekiah at age twelve. Amon, the son of Manasseh, came to Israel’s throne at age twenty-two. Josiah came to the throne at age eight after his father Amon was murdered. Jehoahaz reigned only three months when he was twenty-three years old. Jehoiakim became king at age twenty-five. Jehoiachin was eighteen, and also reigned for only three months. Zedekiah, the last king of Judah took office at age twenty-one.

Jacob or Israel had blessed Judah with the political leadership of all the house of Israel until the birth of Christ (see Genesis 49:8, 10). This leadership should have been exercised through the priesthood (see TPJS, 157). Since, in Old Testament times, the priesthood was not bestowed until age thirty (see Numbers 4:3), and since all of these leaders but one were referred to as “evil” in the Bible, it is obvious that these “children” or “babes” ruled without the priesthood.

5 And the people shall be oppressed, every one by another, and every one by his neighbor; the child shall behave himself proudly against the ancient, and the base against the honorable.

verse 5 The entire culture will collapse to the point where people, because of a lack of love for one another, will “oppress” one another, even their neighbors. To “oppress” is to tyrannize, trample down, or to trouble. Children will “behave . . . proudly”—show no deference or honor for and even show arrogance towards their elders. The honorable men will command no respect even among “the base,” those who are inferior, vile, wretched, and vulgar. A state of anarchy is portrayed.

6 When a man shall take hold of his brother of the house of his father, and shall say: Thou hast clothing, be thou our ruler, and let not this ruin come under thy hand—verse 6 “a man shall take hold of his brother of the house of his father” In this time of social lawlessness, fathers will desert their families leaving them in upheaval. In such a situation, leadership of the family would fall upon the eldest brother—the one with the “clothing,” the cloak of authority or “Simlah.” Others in the family will plead with the eldest brother to lead them in this difficult time lest they should come to ruin.

On a national level, no one will want to rule the people because of the hopeless state of anarchy that has beset Judah and Jerusalem. In desperation, the people will importune the man with “clothing” to rule over them. Perhaps his clothing indicates some degree of wealth or preparedness. The people desperately hope that someone will help to limit or reverse the “ruin” (political, economic, and spiritual) that has beset them. In the midst of ruin and “childish” rule, Isaiah prophesies that the people will be willing and anxious to accept any sort of credentials as a prerequisite for leadership.

7 In that day shall he swear, saying: I will not be a healer; for in my house there is neither bread nor clothing; make me not a ruler of the people.

verse 7 The eldest brother will refuse the honor of being the “healer,” however, because he and the family are in abject poverty. There are not even provisions sufficient to sustain his own family. A healer is someone who binds up wounds or sores.

8 For Jerusalem is ruined, and Judah is fallen, because their tongues and their doings have been against the Lord, to provoke the eyes of his glory.

verse 8 The meaning of this verse is obvious. “Their tongues and their doings” means their speech and their actions. The term “to provoke the eyes of his glory” is translated in the New American Standard Bible as “to rebel against his glorious presence.” It is to defy or anger the Lord.

9 The show of their countenance doth witness against them, and doth declare their sin to be even as Sodom, and they cannot hide it. Wo unto their souls, for they have rewarded evil unto themselves!

verse 9 The “show of their countenance,” the very appearance of the faces of the people of Judah, will betray their sins and witness against them. What sins might be seen in the appearance of a face? The “sin as Sodom” is generally held to be homosexuality. In ancient times those participating in degenerate sexual fertility rites, sacramental intoxications, and the taking of hallucinogenic drugs from exotic plants usually identified themselves with peculiar hair styles, bizarre beards, and decorative embellishments, including marks in the flesh. All these the Lord strictly forbade (see Leviticus 19:27-28). Evil imposes its own demeanor upon him who persists in it. Contrariwise, we are taught that the born-again person receives the image of Christ in his countenance (see Alma 5:14).

Sodom, of course, was a city destroyed by the Lord because of its sexual iniquity and other forms of pride. The mention of “Sodom” in this verse is a type of all wicked cities that suffer the judgments of God.

“for they have rewarded evil unto themselves” A better translation is provided by the New International Version: “They have brought disaster upon themselves.”

10 Say unto the righteous that it is well with them; for they shall eat the fruit of their doings.

verse 10 Here is the only note of hope in this entire pronouncement which extends from verses 1 through 15. In the midst of all this degeneracy, the few righteous are affirmed by the Lord with the phrase, “it is well.” This is a statement of approval and blessing (Mormon 7:10; Moroni 7:47; D&C 124:110). These righteous are promised that they will eventually “eat the fruit of their doings,” that is, reap their spiritual rewards no matter how severe their trials may be. Paul said it another way: “Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap” (Galatians 6:7).

11 Wo unto the wicked, for they shall perish; for the reward of their hands shall be upon them!

verse 11 How simple, yet profound, it is to read that the wicked will reap “the reward of their [own] hands.” They will suffer the consequences of their actions.

12 And my people, children are their oppressors, and women rule over them. O my people, they who lead thee cause thee to err and destroy the way of thy paths.

verse 12 A reiteration of the fact that “children” will rule over Judah (see the commentary for verse 4). The essential meaning here would seem to be that Judah’s leaders will not hold the priesthood. The phrase “and women rule over them” implies either that they will literally be ruled over by women who do not hold the priesthood, or that their leaders will be as weak as women—an insult in ancient Israelite culture. It would appear that Isaiah and the entire ancient Israelite culture of his day were avowedly chauvinistic.

The phrase “destroy the way of thy paths” is perhaps more clearly translated “confuse the direction of your paths.”

13 The Lord standeth up to plead, and standeth to judge the people.

verse 13 The setting is a divine courtroom scene. The defendant is the house of Israel. The Lord stands as both attorney/advocate/prosecutor and judge. The Lord arises to “plead” with his chosen people. To “plead” means to contend with or to take issue with. He then stands to judge the people. Standing was important in the ancient Israelite courtroom, where the judge stood to pronounce judgment.

14 The Lord will enter into judgment with the ancients of his people and the princes thereof; for ye have eaten up the vineyard and the spoil of the poor in your houses.

verse 14 The Lord’s judgment will likely fall first and hardest upon the apostate “ancients” or older men, who should know better, and the corrupt “princes” or political leaders who have combined to eat up “the vineyard”—exploit the nation. The “spoil [or plunder] of the poor in your houses” means, “You have stolen by taxes or fraud the essentials of life from impoverished people.”

15 What mean ye? Ye beat my people to pieces, and grind the faces of the poor, saith the Lord God of Hosts.

verse 15 The Lord is addressing these influential leaders among his chosen people. He says, “What do you mean by, or how can you possibly justify crushing my people and grinding the faces of the poor in the dirt, that is, oppressing the poor?” These phrases may refer to actual physical abuse or to economic hardships due to insufferably high taxes and duties imposed on the poor. According to the law of Moses oppressing the poor was a grievous offense (e.g., Exodus 22:21-24; Deuteronomy 15:7-11).

verses 16-26 The remaining verses of chapter 13 enumerate the sins of ancient Israel and, indeed, those of our own dispensation. Some have applied a narrow interpretation to these verses and have viewed them as a denouncement of the vain and vulgar womanly fashions of the day. It seems likely that the meanings are far more inclusive.

16 Moreover, the Lord saith: Because the daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with stretched-forth necks and wanton eyes, walking and mincing as they go, and making a tinkling with their feet—verse 16 “daughters of Zion” The term “daughters of Zion” does not really refer to “women,” but rather it is a metaphor, a Hebrew idiom, which refers to Israel—those who are espoused, or under covenant, to Jehovah. The singular form, daughter of Zion, is used more commonly (Lamentations 1:6-8; 2:8-11; Zechariah 9:9; 2 Nephi 8:25) and refers to the inhabitants of Jerusalem and Judah. This phrase may also be used as a personification for Jerusalem (e.g., Isaiah 1:8).

“Haughty” means proud, vain, and arrogant. A person who is haughty treats others as if they were lower than himself. He is proud of self and scornful of others. Haughtiness is an outward manifestation of a self-perceived higher status and is diametrically opposite to humility.

“Stretched forth necks” may refer to haughtiness or an air of affectation. This expression portrays women who look sideways to see if others notice their beauty as they prance along the way or as they look upwards with high heads in a proud manner. The expression denotes a people who pay idolatrous heed to others rather than to God above.

“Wanton eyes” are flirtatious or seductive eyes open to lustful things but not to spiritual things.

“Walking and mincing” is a type of walking with short steps used by women who love to display their physical charms and to make their ankle jewelry tinkle as they walk. It is the type of walking typical of one who is advertising one’s person for sale. Perhaps the application of this phrase should not be limited to women. It is likely more descriptive of the type of life a person leads rather than the actual physical movement of his or her gait. To refer to a person as “walking and mincing” implies that the person is worldly, lewd, and unchaste.

“Making a tinkling with their feet” means to adorn oneself with anklets that contain bells and make a tinkling noise. Anciently this practice was characteristic of a woman desirous of attracting attention often for unwholesome purposes.

17 Therefore the Lord will smite with a scab the crown of the head of the daughters of Zion, and the Lord will discover their secret parts.

verse 17 The phrase “smite with a scab the crown of the head” means to cause a disease which results in baldness. For the “woman” who is being used here as a symbolic analogy, it implies a great disgrace which will come to her.

“the Lord will discover [make bare] their secret parts” This expression implies a singular and ultimate disgrace. Figuratively, the “woman” will be subjected to the indignity of being stripped naked and held up to the leering gaze of the crowd. This phrase is a metaphor for humiliation. Isaiah is prophesying that the whole earth shall see in detail the shame and great wickedness of the unrighteous in Israel.

verses 18-23 In these verses, several items of apparel are mentioned which the Lord will take away because of Israel’s sinfulness. They are all symbols of the vanity and iniquity of the people. There is perhaps a significant symbolism in some of the items mentioned. In the commentary for these verses, the possible secondary or figurative meanings will be suggested, though they are included only for interest. We have no way of knowing whether or not Isaiah had in mind symbolic meanings.

18 In that day the Lord will take away the bravery of their tinkling ornaments, and cauls, and round tires like the moon; verse 18 “In that day” This expression refers to any day in which the unfaithful of Israel are brought down or humbled by the Lord.

“the Lord will take away the bravery” The term “bravery” might be misleading here. It is better translated “beauty, finery, or ostentation.” A modern translation of Isaiah renders this phrase, “the Lord will snatch away their finery” (NIV).

“Tinkling ornaments” are bangles or bracelets.

“Cauls” are headbands.

“Round tires like the moon” are necklaces shaped like a crescent moon which were worn on the necks or heads of men, women, and even camels. These “moonstones” were symbolic of purity.

In context, Isaiah is saying that the real beauty and splendor of Zion (perhaps the priesthood of God) shall be removed and lost. All that will be left will be the tinkling of ornaments—outward form or show with no substance. Isaiah is making reference to the fact that sacred teachings had been replaced by the workings of magic, astrology, soothsaying, pride, arrogance, and vain piety. The humble worshipper had been replaced by the signs of piety and pretended holiness.

19 The chains and the bracelets, and the mufflers; verse 19 “Chains” are dangling earrings. “Mufflers” are a woman’s veils.

20 The bonnets, and the ornaments of the legs, and the headbands, and the tablets, and the ear-rings;

verse 20 “Bonnets” are ornamental head coverings. “Ornaments of the legs” may refer to “stepping chains” which were worn by women fastened to a band around each ankle which forced the wearer to walk elegantly with short feminine steps. Bells were often fastened to this chain to make sounds while walking.

There is another, perhaps more far-reaching, meaning. The same Hebrew term is used in 2 Samuel 5:24 to describe a sound heard in the trees which indicated that God was going to fight the battles of Israel. Isaiah may have had both meanings in mind: Not only would the Lord take away the attractions of women, but he would cease to fight Israel’s battles.

“Headbands” is an interesting word which apparently has little to do with a band worn about the head. The Hebrew word actually means a band or sash worn about the waist. In Isaiah 49:18, the same term is used to describe a binding or tying together of children to parents. Is it possible that Isaiah might have intended a veiled reference to the sealing ordinances? Keep in mind the context. Isaiah is here saying that all these things will be taken away because of the wickedness of the people.

“Tablets” is translated from two words in Hebrew which are more accurately translated “receptacles for intimate things.” Modern translations have translated the term “perfume bottles.” These “receptacles for intimate things” at the time of Isaiah may have evolved into the Jewish custom of wearing Tefillah or Phylacteries which were small boxes or containers worn on the left arm or forehead. These were secured to the body by leather ties. They contained tiny scrolls containing certain passages of scripture.

“Ear-rings” is translated from the Hebrew word meaning amulet, charm, or superstitious ornament upon which magical formulae or phrases were inscribed. They were worn about the neck or in their ears (see Genesis 35:4), and were an apostate tradition.

21 The rings, and nose jewels; verse 21 “Rings” refers to signet rings—that type of ring which is pressed into a soft substance to affix a seal of authority. In context, perhaps Isaiah was saying that the Lord would remove his seal or his authority.

“Nose jewels” are nose rings, another type of amulet or charm like the “ear-ring” except that it is worn in the nose.

22 The changeable suits of apparel, and the mantles, and the wimples, and the crisping-pins;

verse 22 “Changeable suits of apparel” may refer to a splendid or costly garment or robe which was worn on only special occasions. Could it be that Isaiah had reference to temple clothing? Remember, Isaiah is saying that all these things will be taken away.

“Mantels” are capes—large sleeveless tunics that covered the entire body worn by men over other clothing. The same term is used in Exodus 28:31 to refer to the garment worn by the high priest in the temple.

“Wimpels” are cloaks

“Crisping-pins” are pouches or purses.

23 The glasses, and the fine linen, and hoods, and the veils.

verse 23 “Glasses” are mirrors.

“Fine linen” refers to linen undergarments.

“Hoods” are tiaras or jeweled crowns—religious hats for men. The same term in Zechariah 3:5 is translated “mitre” as in the Catholic bishop’s mitre.

“Veils” are shawls, large hoods worn over a woman’s head and shoulders. In context, the term probably meant that a protective covering of divine protection would be removed, and the people would be left uncovered and conquered.

24 And it shall come to pass, instead of sweet smell there shall be stink; and instead of a girdle, a rent; and instead of well set hair, baldness; and instead of a stomacher, a girding of sackcloth; burning instead of beauty.

verse 24 This verse contains more information on the devastated condition of Israel after the prophesied purgings.

The “sweet smell” implies the artificial aromas of perfumes. These will be replaced by rottenness, putrefaction, and poverty.

A “girdle,” is a wealthy man’s sash or expensive belt. It will be replaced with a “rent” which is a rope by which the man will be led as a slave.

“Well-set hair,” is a fancy, artificially twisted hair-do. “Baldness”—the Hebrew root means to make naked, to shame, or to carry away into exile.

A “stomacher,” is a grand robe of significant beauty, whereas a “girding of sackcloth,” is a rude or coarse garment worn for mourning.

“Burning” is a term which refers to the branding or scarring as might have been inflicted upon a slave by a conqueror.

Verse 24 implies that the artificially or superficially beautiful people will be stripped of their trappings and will be killed or taken away into exile, slavery, and bondage.

25 Thy men shall fall by the sword and thy mighty in the war.

verse 25 The men in Judah will be killed in the destruction or war.

26 And her gates shall lament and mourn; and she shall be desolate, and shall sit upon the ground.

verses 25-26 That the destruction outlined in these verses will come through invading armies is supported by these verses.

“The war” means simply “in battle.”

Notice that in verse 26 Jerusalem is again personified as a woman, in this case a fallen woman. Her gates or entrances will cry out that there is nothing inside—only desolation. She will be left “lamenting,” crying and mourning and sitting upon the ground “desolate” or alone. Sitting upon the ground is a visible symbol of those who mourn. Most all her people will be dead or carried away captive.

The destruction of Israel prophesied in this chapter will be followed by a restoration. Isaiah prophesies of the restoration and blessings that would be poured out upon a righteous remnant of Israel, called the “branch of the Lord” (2 Nephi 14:2). The Lord will cleanse and purify his people in the millennial day (2 Nephi 14:4), and he will manifest his presence among them as he did in the days of the Exodus with a cloud of smoke by day and a flaming fire by night (2 Nephi 14:5; cf. Exodus 13:21).

2 Nephi Chapter 14

This chapter is a translation of Isaiah's writings which are also found in Isaiah chapter 4. In verses 2-6, Isaiah describes a period of peace that follows the purging and cleansing of the house of Israel. Perhaps a latter-day or pre-Millennial time frame is most appropriate for these verses.

Let us review the facts that will surround the great last war against the Jews—the Battle of Armageddon (see Revelation 16:16). This battle will take place, in part, near the city of Megiddo, perhaps in the Jezreel Valley nearby. A powerful coalition of gentile nations (Gog and Magog) will sweep down upon Judah from the north in the latter days and lay siege to Jerusalem for three and one half years (see Revelation 11:2; Daniel 7:25).

Two prophets of God will use the power of the priesthood to hold back the attacking hosts, but finally the Lord will allow them to be killed. Half of the city of Jerusalem will be ravished and conquered. Just as the invading forces are about to sweep down upon the rest of the city, the two prophets will be raised up from the dead, and the Savior will appear upon the Mount of Olives to rescue his people in a great display of power (see Revelation 11:3-13; D&C 45:48).

At the first opportunity, the Jews will gather round their Messiah in great rejoicing. Apparently, he will “withhold his glory” or not reveal his glory as resurrected beings are able to do when they wish (see Hebrews 13:2), and the Jews will look upon him as a mortal until someone notices the evidence of deep wounds in his hands and feet. They will then ask him the meaning of these, and he will tell them that these are the wounds “with which I was wounded in the house of my friends” (Zechariah 13:6; D&C 45:51-53).

For the first time the Jews will realize that their Messiah really did come in the meridian of time, and that he was rejected and crucified by their ancestors. Then all the people will mourn for thirty days. It is of note that there is currently no missionary work being done in modern-day Israel. In the Church today, a prevalent feeling exists that no substantial conversion of the Jewish people will occur until the time of the Lord's second coming.

Finally, after a period of cleaning up (seven months burying the dead and seven years burning the discarded weapons), the people will enjoy a glorious period of peace and prosperity which Isaiah describes in verses 2-6 of this chapter. It is likely that this period of peace occurs prior to the great purging of the telestial elements from the earth which will occur at the time of the Lord's second coming in glory. For a more complete discussion of the battle or battles at Jerusalem and their relationship to the great destructive purging of the earth by fire at the second coming of the Lord, see the subtitle, “The Battle at Jerusalem” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 4, chapter 26, Signs of the Lord's Second Coming—Those that Punish and Cleanse.

1 And in that day, seven women shall take hold of one man, saying: We will eat our own bread, and wear our own apparel; only let us be called by thy name to take away our reproach.

verse 1 This verse fits in context better at the end of chapter 13. Interestingly both the JST and the Hebrew Bible place this verse there. Note that the “fallen woman” motif is continued in this verse.

“And in that day” See the introductory commentary for 2 Nephi 13 for suggestions as to the time periods to which these prophecies apply. Perhaps most appropriately they apply to a pre-Millennial setting following Armageddon.

“seven women shall take hold of one man” Following the great war which results in the destruction of Israel, very few men will be left to marry (2 Nephi 13:25), or at least very few will be capable of fathering children (the effects of nuclear war?). Isaiah foresees the time when several women will approach one man desiring a polygamous type of relationship.

“We will eat our own bread, and wear our own apparel” The women even offer to remain economically independent rather than to make the man responsible for their care. The “reproach” that they desire to remove from themselves is the stigma or disgrace of being unmarried and childless. Women in ancient Israel needed a husband not only to provide for the family but also to father a son so that the family inheritance could be passed on and to ensure that there would be someone to care for them in their old age. Hence singleness and childlessness were viewed as a “reproach.” The number “seven” may be literal or symbolic (seven is symbolic of perfection).

In periods of rebellion and unrighteousness, some women seek to avoid childbearing and motherhood, wanting to remain “liberated” from such responsibilities. However, in the humiliated state described herein, women will abandon such ideas and become desperate to have children.

This verse has been interpreted by some as a prophecy of plural marriage to be practiced in the latter-day Church. However, a close examination suggests that Isaiah was not prophesying of plural marriage as practiced under the authority of the priesthood. Note, for example, that the women are proposing to the man, and they are offering to remain economically independent. Both of these points are incompatible with the eternal principle of eternal marriage.

2 In that day shall the branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious; the fruit of the earth excellent and comely to them that are escaped of Israel.

verse 2 “In that day” Again, as in verse 1, this phrase seems likely to refer to this final dispensation. There seems to be two latter-day events referred to here that will bless specific groups of righteous Israel. The first is the latter-day restoration of the gospel. The second is the great purging of the people of the earth to occur at the time of the Lord’s second coming in glory. This latter event, however, will bless the lives of both the terrestrial and celestial-bound people of earth, since it is only the wicked that will be purged.

This specific verse has been interpreted in two, quite distinct, ways.

1. According to the first interpretation, the word “branch” should be capitalized. It is a symbolic name for the Messiah. At his second coming, he will be “beautiful and glorious,” that is, he will appear in all his glory. He will be spiritual food (“fruit”) for the “escaped of Israel.” These are the scattered remnants who are then gathered or gathering. These remnants include people from all of the tribes of Israel. “Comely” means pleasant to look at, attractive, fair.

2. An alternate interpretation seems more likely for the term “branch” in the context of this verse. “Branch” refers to the descendants of Joseph, or, more generally, to Israel, or to the people of the Lord. The prophet Lehi, who was a descendant of Joseph commented on the fulfillment of this blessing: “Wherefore, Joseph [who was sold into Egypt] truly saw our day. And he obtained a promise of the Lord, that out of the fruit of his loins the Lord God would raise up a righteous branch unto the house of Israel; not the Messiah, but a branch which was broken off” (2 Nephi 3:5). According to this interpretation, Isaiah sees the day when this “branch” will be purged (just before the second coming of the Lord) and then become righteous (“beautiful and glorious”). This seems most likely to refer to the latter-day restoration of the gospel. The “fruit of the earth” that blesses the survivors of the great purging probably represents the blessings of the restored gospel including the temples.

“to them that are escaped of Israel” These are the blood of Israel—perhaps those who survive the great purging at the time of the Savior’s second coming and who also have the fulness of the restored gospel.

3 And it shall come to pass, they that are left in Zion and remain in Jerusalem shall be called holy, every one that is written among the living in Jerusalem—verse 3 Some have interpreted this verse as meaning that the only ones left on earth after the purging by fire are the “holy” or the celestial-bound saints living in Zion—either in the New Jerusalem or in Old Jerusalem. Actually, we know that those purged from the earth will be the telestial-bound souls, the “wicked.” Those remaining on the earth will include those “honorable” souls worthy of the terrestrial glory as well as those worthy to be called saints—the “holy” who, if they persist in righteousness, will live with the Savior in the celestial heaven.

“written among the living” Those who are counted among the mortal living—those who survived the great war of judgment.

4 When the Lord shall have washed away the filth of the daughters of Zion, and shall have purged the blood of Jerusalem from the midst thereof by the spirit of judgment and by the spirit of burning.

verse 4 The reference to “daughters of Zion” is not limited to the females of Israel but is a figurative reference to all people of the house of Israel. The “washing away the filth” and “purging the blood of Jerusalem” and the “burning” recall the ancient techniques of sacrifice in which the offerings were rinsed to remove impurities. Then they were sacrificed by blood letting or burning.

The “filth” of the children of Israel—their iniquity (including us in our dispensation)—will be washed away by the ordinance of baptism (1 Nephi 20:1; Alma 7:14) and cleansed by the blood of Jesus (Malachi 3:2-3; Hebrews 9:22; Revelation 7:14), a process in which the Holy Ghost plays a prominent role. The Hebrew word for filth has reference to human excrement (Brown, Driver, and Briggs, Hebrew and English Lexicon, 844). This term is used symbolically to emphasize the terrible nature of the sins of Israel, and the impurities found within the “daughters of Zion.”

“spirit of judgment and . . . the spirit of burning” As we strive to become acquainted with our Savior through studying the scriptures, we may perceive some of the scriptural descriptions of him as being contradictory. On the one hand, he is “judging” and “burning” and trampling the wicked underfoot (Isaiah 63:3-4; D&C 133:50-51) while during his mortal ministry he seemed more loving, long suffering, lenient, and quick to forgive (Matthew 18:21-22; John 8:3-11). It would seem that both assessments are correct and merit our thoughtful consideration. Even in his judgmental mode, the Savior has our eternal benefit—indeed, our exaltation—in mind. God’s fire destroys the wicked while at the same time purging the humble and repentant.

verses 5-6 When Moroni visited Joseph Smith in September 1823, he quoted Isaiah 4:5-6 which verses correspond to these next two verses (Messenger and Advocate 1 [April 1835]: 110). He said this prophecy would soon find fulfillment. Obviously, this prophecy has direct relevance for us. In these verses there is reference to temples and the implication that saints become holy through temple worship. There is also a description of the function of Zion in the latter days.

5 And the Lord will create upon every dwelling-place of mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud and smoke by day and the shining of a flaming fire by night; for upon all the glory of Zion shall be a defense.

verse 5 “every dwelling-place of mount Zion” In this verse Isaiah suggests that every individual home in Zion and every gathering of the saints is, in a way, a temple, emphasizing the sanctity of Zion and her people in this glorious day.

“a cloud and smoke by day” These are elements connected with a theophany or the presence of God. The cloud emphasizes the Lord’s glory. The people of the latter-day Zion will be so righteous that they will all enjoy such blessings as the presence of the Lord (Exodus 13:21-22).

“shining of flaming fire by night” This is the presence of God.

“defense” Defense is protection. The word “defense” should read “canopy” or “protective covering.” Hence Zion and her inhabitants will be protected by God from spiritual harm in the same way that individuals are protected from physical injury or harm by seeking shelter during the heat of the day or in great storms.

In this latter day, the Lord will place upon all the temples or “mount Zions,” and upon all the saints in Zion, a “cloud and smoke by day and the shining of a flaming fire by night.” This is not a new phenomenon. The “cloud” is identified in D&C 84:5 as the “glory of the Lord,” and it will fill the temples of God in that day. Similarly, the “flaming fire” also represents his glory. These manifestations of the Lord’s glory will serve as a defense for those in Zion against a tumult of destruction and wickedness outside of Zion.

6 And there shall be a tabernacle for a shadow in the daytime from the heat, and for a place of refuge, and a covert from storm and from rain.

verse 6 “there shall be a tabernacle or a shadow” The “tabernacle,” in a historical context, is a holy yet temporary place of shelter (“a shadow”), often a tent. For protection and safety in this latter day the saints will flee not to one place but to “holy places” (D&C 87:8). These places are the stakes of Zion. In Moses’s day, the “cloud” filled only the “Holy of Holies” in the “tabernacle,” but in this latter time Isaiah saw that the Lord in the “cloud and flaming fire” would manifest himself to all the saints in Zion. In the latter-day “tabernacles” or latter-day temples, the saints will find refuge, peace, protection, and succor.

“covert” While the word “covert” is usually used as an adjective in which case it means hidden or secret, as a noun it means a shelter or protected place. In modern-day revelation Zion is called “a city of refuge” and “a place of safety.” It will be a “land of peace,” and “the terror of the Lord also shall be there, insomuch that the wicked will not come unto it . . . and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another. And it shall be said among the wicked: Let us not go up to battle against Zion, for the inhabitants of Zion are terrible; wherefore we cannot stand” (D&C 45:66-70; 115:6). Jesus, of course, is our ultimate refuge and shelter from life’s battles (Isaiah 25:4).

“from storm and from rain” These are symbols of God’s judgments on the wicked (Psalm 83:15). The storms remove the wicked from their places as chaff is removed from the wheat (Job 21:18; 27:21), while the righteous, like wheat, are gathered into protected units and preserved in the Lord’s temples and other holy places.

2 Nephi Chapter 15

Chapter 15 is a translation of Isaiah's writings which are also found in Isaiah chapter 5. This chapter may be outlined as follows:

Verses 1 through 7 comprise the parable of the vineyard, sometimes called the Song of the Vineyard. Isaiah's parable of the vineyard has been described by various commentators as a "little masterpiece," "a passage of singular beauty and grace," and "the finest example of the prophet's art and skill in the whole book of Isaiah. In this parable, Isaiah illustrates that although God has done everything possible for his people, they still reject him. This is one of many scriptural parables and allegories used to describe the relationship between the Lord (the owner of the vineyard) and the house of Israel (the vineyard). See, for example Romans 11:17-24; Jacob 5; and D&C 101:43-62. It is also a love poem (verse 1) that features the bridegroom (the Lord) and his bride (the house of Israel).

The symbolism in the parable of the vineyard includes the following:

vineyard—the House of Israel choice vine—the people of Israel from whom the Lord expects much choice grapes—the righteous of the House of Israel wild Grapes—the wicked Israelites who have broken their covenant.

master of the vineyard—Jehovah

Verses 8 through 25 contain a series of six pronouncements, or six woes, upon wicked Israel. In this section, Isaiah lists Israel's major sins and warns of destruction, desolation, and scattering. Again, the foreseen destruction may find its fulfillment on at least four different occasions: (1) From 732-722 BC when the Assyrians routed the northern kingdom of Israel in Samaria and carried their most influential citizens captive back to Assyria. Also in 701 B.C., Assyria destroyed much of Judah and besieged Jerusalem. (2) In 586 BC Jerusalem was captured by the Babylonians. (3) In AD 70 Jerusalem was demolished by the Romans. (4) In the latter days, there will be the battles against Jerusalem and the destruction of the wicked by fire at the time of the Lord's second coming.

Finally, verses 26 through 30 conclude the chapter with the promise of an ensign to the nations, a gathering of Israel, and a mighty army of soldiers (or missionaries) bringing peace to Israel.

1 And then will I sing to my well-beloved a song of my beloved, touching his vineyard. My well-beloved hath a vineyard in a very fruitful hill.

verse 1 "And then" It is interesting to note that the King James version of this verse (Isaiah 5) begins with the word "now" instead of "and then." The Book of Mormon's inspired modification temporally connects this verse to the previous chapter and identifies the time period being referred to in chapter fifteen as the future rather than the days of Isaiah. While Isaiah may be speaking of the specific judgments and destructions to come upon Judah, the pronouncements of judgment and the promises spoken of in verses 26 through 30 definitely have an apocalyptic flavor—that is, they refer to the last days just before the Lord’s second coming.

“will I sing” The first person is Isaiah. He is about to sing a love song to his “well-beloved” master of the vineyard, Jehovah. The parable of the vineyard begins as a love song. Isaiah speaks (sings) about the vineyard and its master using third person narration. The vineyard represents the house of Israel, and its master is the Lord Jehovah.

“touching” Touching is better translated “concerning” or “about.”

“vineyard” This term represents the house of Israel, the Lord’s covenant people in all ages.

“very fruitful hill” This is better translated “very fertile hill.” The Hebrew literally means “a horn, a child of fatness,” likely referring to a horn-like mountain peak with exceptionally fertile soil. This is a metaphor for the promised covenant land of Israel where God planted his vineyard, or the house of Israel.

Isaiah is about to sing a love song to the Lord. Isaiah’s song will describe the destruction of the vineyard which represents the scattering of the tribes of Israel. What destruction was Isaiah prophesying of? Here’s one of those double, triple, or even quadruple applications. He may have had reference to Assyria’s conquering of the northern kingdom, Babylon’s conquering of Judah, Rome’s conquering of Judah, or the Lord’s great destruction of the wicked at his second coming.

2 And he fenced it, and gathered out the stones thereof, and planted it with the choicest vine, and built a tower in the midst of it, and also made a wine-press therein; and he looked that it should bring forth grapes, and it brought forth wild grapes.

verse 2 “he fenced it” The master put up a fence and planted the best available grape vines which represent the people of the house of Israel. He has great expectations of these vines.

An alternate reading is based on the fact that the Hebrew reads yerazeqehu which is “he dug up the soil” rather than “fenced it” (Brown, Driver, and Briggs, Hebrew and English Lexicon, 740).

“choicest vine” The Lord lovingly cultivated his vineyard and planted in it the “choicest vine” which represents the people of the house of Israel, or perhaps more specifically the tribe of Judah. The “choicest vine” in Isaiah’s time was a special variety, the soreq bluish-red grape instead of the more common variety, the gephen grape. The soreq produced a red wine famous for its bouquet and taste.

“built a tower” The Lord built a watchtower in the midst of the vineyard which was a common practice in ancient Palestine. From the “tower” watchmen, could watch for impending danger to the vineyard, such as wild animals or thieves. Metaphorically, these watchmen are the prophets who watch for impending danger and evil and then warn the children of Israel (Ezekiel 3:17; 33:1-7; D&C 101:43-62). Some have speculated that the “tower” might refer to Solomon’s temple.

“also made a wine-press therein” The Lord expected an abundant harvest, so he also made a winepress, a machine used to press grapes into wine. The winepress is a powerful image or symbol of Jesus’s atonement (Isaiah 63:1-6; D&C 76:107).

“it brought forth wild grapes” He looked for the vineyard to produce choice grapes, but instead, it produced only “wild grapes” (from the Hebrew word meaning stinking, sour, worthless things)—which are bitter and virtually useless for pressing into wine. The Hebrew phrase for “wild grapes” might better be translated “sour grapes” (Brown, Driver, and Briggs, Hebrew and English Lexicon, 93). Choice grapes represent the righteous. Sour grapes symbolize those who have fallen from the covenant and left God’s kingdom.

3 And now, O inhabitants of Jerusalem, and men of Judah, judge, I pray you, betwixt me and my vineyard.

verse 3 Notice now that the first person is no longer Isaiah, but rather the Lord. In the final verses of this chapter, Isaiah will switch back to a third person narration.

“O inhabitants of Jerusalem, and men of Judah” Although the inhabitants of Judah are the immediate audience for Isaiah’s song, the song may be sung to all Israel throughout all generations.

“I pray you” Please.

“judge . . . betwixt me and my vineyard” “Betwixt” is archaic for “between.” The Lord appeals to his audience. He is about to ask, “What could I have done more?”

4 What could have been done more to my vineyard that I have not done in it? Wherefore, when I looked that it should bring forth grapes it brought forth wild grapes.

verse 4 The Lord addresses Isaiah’s reading audience and asks them to judge between the master and the people of the house of Israel represented by the vineyard. They will certainly judge the master blameless and above reproach, and they will empathize with his disappointment in the small, sour grapes. A poignant comparable verse evidences the Lord’s great compassion: “The Lord of the vineyard wept, and said . . . What could I have done more for my vineyard?” (Jacob 5:41).

“when I looked that it should bring forth grapes” This might be more smoothly translated “when I hoped that it would bring forth grapes.”

“it brought forth wild grapes The wild or sour grapes symbolize evil people who reject Christ and his atonement. These sour grapes will be trodden down by the Lord in great fury at the time of his second coming, causing his robe to be red (D&C 133:50-51).

5 And now go to; I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard—I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up; and I will break down the wall thereof, and it shall be trodden down;

verse 5 The expression “go to” is generally a positive expression of send-off and an encouragement similar to “God speed” or “good luck.” Its use here is puzzling.

The “hedge” and the “wall” signify God’s protection of the house of Israel. God will remove them so that wild beasts and invading armies may trample the vineyard. He will allow his people to be destroyed by their enemies.

“Eaten up” is from the Hebrew leba’er which means “to be burned” or “consumed” (Ibid., 128-29). This may refer to the eventual burning of the wicked of Israel at his second coming.

6 And I will lay it waste; it shall not be pruned nor digged; but there shall come up briers and thorns; I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it.

verse 6 Finally, the master resolves that he will destroy the vineyard. Rather than uprooting the vines, however, he simply tears down the protective walls and allows travelers to trample, and animals to eat up the vines. This process of abandoning the vineyard exemplifies the judgments of God, who usually doesn’t destroy or severely punish a wicked person, but rather simply leaves him alone to face the challenges of life and the buffetings of Satan without the protection of the Spirit.

“it shall not be pruned nor digged” The master will not hoe, weed, or otherwise cultivate. In other words, he will remove the blessings usually given to those in his earthly kingdom.

“briers and thorns” These represent the world and its inhabitants bereft of the Lord’s blessings which he is wont to bestow upon the people of his kingdom. Here this phrase may be a metaphor referring to another people displacing the covenant people. For example, following 722 B.C., pagan peoples were introduced into the northern kingdom (2 Kings 17:24), and after the destruction of the temple by the Romans in AD 70 foreign peoples inhabited the lands of the southern kingdom.

“I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it.” We have our first indication that this Lord of the vineyard is more powerful than a normal mortal landowner. “Rain” represents revelation and the word of God.

Spiritually, the house of Israel (the vineyard) became a wasteland through apostasy and rejection of the kindnesses, love, and care of the Master of the vineyard. God would not have laid waste the vineyard had it been fruitful.

7 For the vineyard of the Lord of Hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plant; and he looked for judgment, and behold, oppression; for righteousness, but behold, a cry.

verse 7 This final verse of the parable gives its interpretation: The vineyard represents the House of Israel. The “pleasant plant” or choice vine is the people of Israel from whom the master expects much. It may also represent Judah whom the Lord expected to provide leadership to Israel.

The people of Judah will receive a punishment commensurate with their sins. The last three lines of this verse are a type of word play that cannot be appreciated because of the translation into English. Isaiah illustrates the irony of Judah’s disobedience by using words in Hebrew which sound alike but have opposite meanings: and he looked for judgment (justice), [Hebrew: mishpat] but behold, bloodshed; [Hebrew: mispach] for righteousness, [Hebrew: tsedakah] but behold, a cry (a cry of distress)! [Hebrew: tse’akah] (from the New American Standard Bible, emphases added)

The irony here is that the Lord expected much of the tribe of Judah, but his expectations were not to be realized. Thus he (the Lord) looked among the people of Judah for justice (fair play, consideration), but he saw only bloodshed. The Lord had promised Israel that he would hear them cry (Exodus 22:23; Genesis 18:20-21).

This style of parable is a powerful device in which the audience unknowingly condemns itself before they realize that they themselves are the ones being spoken about. Isaiah’s parable of the vineyard condemns Israel for failing to serve the Lord.

verses 8-25 Now Isaiah will accuse Israel by presenting “six woes” or six specific areas in which Israel has serious spiritual troubles or deficiencies, and thus stands condemned before the Lord. Specifically, “woe” means severe anguish and distress resulting from God’s judgments, which will come upon the guilty in all ages of the world, including our own. He also pronounces three major punishments that are to fall upon Israel—the desolation of their land, their scattering throughout the world, and the hell of spirit prison.

verses 8-10 The first woe speaks out against the improper use of land.

8 Wo unto them that join house to house, till there can be no place, that they may be placed alone in the midst of the earth!

verse 8 In ancient Israel there was a law governing ownership of property called the “law of the Jubilee.” This law specified that a family’s lands were to remain with that family as a perpetual inheritance and were not to be sold. Although drought, sickness, or economic setback might require a farmer to sell his land or indenture himself to cover his losses, the year of Jubilee, every fifty years, was established during which all debts were forgiven and lands returned to the original owners. A Zion society is based upon the individual ownership of property and cannot exist when a wealthy few monopolize the land and means of production.

In Isaiah's time, this law was abused by wealthy landowners who bought up lands until those lands bordered one another ("join house to house") thus creating a monopoly. Thus, the poor small farmers were displaced as their lands were absorbed and the wealthy farmer had sole ownership of large tracts of land. The poor, meanwhile, having no land ("there can be no place"), were forced to move to the cities or live on the property as indentured servants or slaves. Judah's penalty for this practice is to be "placed alone in the midst of the earth" or scattered among the nations of the earth.

The expression "join house to house," then, has the general meaning to covet and to steal other people's property or to obtain property through legal but unethical means. Or even to take any advantage of others for material gain.

Monte Nyman, in his book Great are the Words of Isaiah (43-44), suggests that the phrases "join house to house" and "no place, that they may be placed alone in the midst of the earth" imply a warning against that a people's or any people's allowing a strong form of central government to control property thus forfeiting individual rights.

9 In mine ears, said the Lord of Hosts, of a truth many houses shall be desolate, and great and fair cities without inhabitant.

verse 9 The Lord had told Isaiah (in his ears) that the day would come when the beautiful and lavish homes of the wealthy few would be uninhabited. This would occur because the land would be cursed by the Lord and become unproductive, desolate, and uninhabitable.

Brother Nyman (Ibid.) further suggests that this verse confirms the warning that if Judah gives up her individual personal freedoms to a strong central government, her people will be scattered—her "great and fair" cities will be left desolate.

10 Yea, ten acres of vineyard shall yield one bath, and the seed of a homer shall yield an ephah.

verse 10 The meager harvest which the land would yield is graphically portrayed.

The phrase "ten acres" is derived from the Hebrew phrase "ten yokes." "Ten yokes" is the amount of land ten yoke of oxen can plough in a day and equals about five modern-day acres.

A harvest of grapes from this much land would ordinarily yield dozens of gallons of wine. In its cursed condition, however, this parcel of land yields only one "bath." A “bath” is a Hebrew unit for measuring liquid and equals about five and one half gallons or one barrel of wine.

A “homer” is a Hebrew unit of capacity—about six bushels. A “homer” of seed will yield only one “ephah” of seeds when harvested. An “ephah” is just over a bushel. Thus, the ground yields only one sixth of the expected harvest.

verses 11-17 The second woe condemns those who, with evil intent, eat, drink, and make merry.

11 Wo unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink, that continue until night, and wine inflame them!

verse 11 This verse condemns alcohol abuse. It is well recognized today that a man who feels a need for alcoholic drink in the morning hours is in an advanced stage of alcoholic addiction. After drinking all day, he is roaring drunk by evening. “There shall be many which shall say: Eat, drink, and be merry, for tomorrow we die; and it shall be well with us” (2 Nephi 28:7).

12 And the harp, and the viol, the tabret, and pipe, and wine are in their feasts; but they regard not the work of the Lord, neither consider the operation of his hands.

verse 12 This verse condemns not only the people’s drinking, but the riotous lifestyle associated with it. At their feasts they had musical instruments for merry making.

A “viol” or lyre is a type of harp with three to twelve strings. A “tabret” or timbrel is a type of drum or tambourine. A “pipe” is a flute.

“feasts” In this context “feasts” does not refer to religious feasts and festivals but to bacchanalian (a drunken feast) revelry.

Worldly music, lightmindedness, and a raucous lifestyle displaces in their minds the things of the Spirit.

13 Therefore, my people are gone into captivity, because they have no knowledge; and their honorable men are famished, and their multitude dried up with thirst.

verse 13 “my people are gone into captivity” Note the use of the “prophetic perfect” verb tense. Even though he is prophesying of events in the future, Isaiah speaks in the past tense. This was common verb construction form among the Hebrew prophets. Isaiah is prophesying of the scattering of the Jews, perhaps especially that scattering that will occur following the Savior’s rejection and crucifixion. Nephi’s branch of “the Jews” will also eventually be smitten, afflicted, and scattered.

This verse teaches us that this worldly lifestyle and its attendant disregard of spiritual understanding (“knowledge”) leads to “captivity,” hunger, and “thirst” (Alma 12:9-11).

On a personal or physical level, alcohol leads to physical addiction (“captivity”) and continual craving (“thirst”). On a national level, the Lord warns of consequent captivity by the Assyrians (they captured the northern ten tribes between 732 and 722 BC), the Babylonians (they captured Judah in 587 B.C.), and perhaps others. This because the “honorable men” or leaders failed to listen to the prophets. On a spiritual level, this lifestyle leads to spiritual captivity with hunger and “thirst” representing a loss of the Spirit. “Behold, the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord” (Amos 8:11). The wicked lack an understanding of Jesus Christ and the power of his atonement. They do not partake of the “bread” (John 6:33, 48) and “waters” (Jeremiah 2:13; 17:13; 1 Nephi 2:9; Ether 12:28) of life which refer to Jesus Christ.

14 Therefore, hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure; and their glory, and their multitude, and their pomp, and he that rejoiceth, shall descend into it.

verse 14 The people’s raucous lifestyle will cause the spirit prison (“Sheol” or “hell”) to swell its ranks (“enlarge herself, and opened her mouth without measure”) with the merry makers (those “that rejoiceth”) and all their trappings (“their glory . . . and their pomp”).

15 And the mean man shall be brought down, and the mighty man shall be humbled, and the eyes of the lofty shall be humbled.

verse 15 Both the “mean man” (the common, average, or ordinary man) and the “mighty man” (the haughty man of some worldly prominence and ability) shall be humbled in “hell.” All wicked individuals, regardless of social status, will be humbled when God’s judgments come upon them.

“the eyes of the lofty shall be humbled” This phrase refers to those who covet, lust, and are greedy.

16 But the Lord of Hosts shall be exalted in judgment, and God that is holy shall be sanctified in righteousness.

verse 16 This verse contains two parallel statements separated by a comma.

“the Lord of Hosts shall be exalted in judgment” This statement stands in sharp contrast to the idea in the previous verse that wicked men will be brought and humbled. A reminder that in spite of all manner of apostasy and worldliness, that eventually the Lord, Zion, and the things of the Spirit will prevail. This prevalence will begin at the Lord’s second coming.

“God that is holy shall be sanctified in righteousness” The New International Version of the Bible presents a better reading of this phrase: “God will show himself holy by his righteousness.”

17 Then shall the lambs feed after their manner, and the waste places of the fat ones shall strangers eat.

verse 17 The destruction portrayed in earlier verses has become so complete that where the “vineyard of the Lord” once stood, lambs and goats now graze. The “waste places of the fat ones” likely refers to the now desolate lands, or ruins, of the once rich and prosperous but wicked covenant people (“the fat ones”), now inhabited by another people.

The warnings and judgments of this verse echo the words given by Moses in Deuteronomy. Moses told Israel that the Lord was giving them a bountiful land for which they did not need to work. Because it was a free gift, he warned them to “beware lest thou forget the Lord, which brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, from the house of Bondage” (Deuteronomy 6:12). He later warned them that if they did forget the Lord, then: “The Lord shall bring a nation against thee . . . and he shall eat the fruit of thy cattle and the fruit of thy land, until thou be destroyed” (Deuteronomy 28:49, 51).

verses 18-19 The third woe is directed against those who are wicked and mock God and his divine plan.

18 Wo unto them that draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and sin as it were with a cart rope;

verse 18 The third woe deals with the person who makes no attempt to hide his great iniquity. The common thief is at least recognized as such and is condemned for his sins by everyone. However, on a grander scale, the man who has won great material wealth, prestige, and status by his far greater iniquity wears the trappings of his iniquity with vain pride (he draws “iniquity with cords of vanity”). He pulls around his large burden of sins as animals pull a loaded cart (he pulls his “sin as it were with a cart rope”).

19 That say: Let him make speed, hasten his work, that we may see it; and let the counsel of the Holy One of Israel draw nigh and come, that we may know it.

verse 19 He has lost the Spirit to the point where he has the incredible audacity to dictate to the Lord and challenge him and even presume to judge his works. Rather than humbly waiting upon the Lord and receiving a spiritual witness according to the Lord’s schedule, the proud one throws a challenge with the same spirit as that offered to Alma by Korihor: “If thou wilt show me a sign, that I may be convinced that there is a God, yea, show unto me that he hath power, and then will I be convinced of the truth of thy words” (Alma 30:43).

“let the counsel of the Holy One of Israel draw nigh and come” Let’s hear the advice or counsel of this supposed Holy One of Israel.

verse 20 The fourth woe speaks out against liars and those who fight against the things of God.

20 Wo unto them that call evil good, and good evil, that put darkness for light, and light for darkness, that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter!

verse 20 The meaning of the fourth woe is clear and requires no amplification. Without the Spirit, there can be no power of eternal discernment. Thus: Abortion is good—it is the right of a woman to do with her own body what she will. Giving birth to more than one or two children is evil. Domesticity is a stifling condition of woman who needs to get out of the house and become liberated. Physical appetites are normal and their mutual satisfaction, between “consenting adults,” is the natural thing. Wealth, pleasure, and status are all to be sought for. “Wherefore, take heed, my beloved brethren, that ye do not judge that which is evil to be of God, or that which is good and of God to be of the devil” (Moroni 7:14).

verse 21 The fifth woe deals with conceited individuals who believe themselves to be wise.

21 Wo unto the wise in their own eyes and prudent in their own sight!

verse 21 In pronouncing the fifth woe, Isaiah warns that intellectualism is not necessarily wisdom. Man’s understanding cannot supplant God’s counsel. Man cannot lean on his own sophistication and logic in matters of the Spirit (see also 2 Nephi 9:28).

But there is broader meaning implied here. Isaiah is warning against the universal sin of pride. It is important that you read and become fully familiar with the concept of pride. Please see “Pride” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 5, The “Natural Self” and the “Spiritual Self.”

Pride is the sin of giving to excess to the pulls of your natural self and, hence, being general disinclined to obey the Lord’s commandments.

BYU professor David Rolph Seely wrote, “Pride is a central theme of the prophecies of Isaiah that Nephi quotes and also of Nephi’s own prophecies. Recognizing this theme can help us better understand and appreciate these passages and to identify the metaphors used by Isaiah and Nephi to warn us against pride” (David Rolph Seely, “Nephi’s Use of Isaiah 2–14 in 2 Nephi 12–30,” in Isaiah in the Book of Mormon, ed. Donald W. Parry and John W. Welch, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1998, 156–157).

Brother Seely identified the theme of pride in the following Isaiah chapters that are also quoted in the Book of Mormon:

- Isaiah 2:11–12 = 2 Nephi 12:11–12
- Isaiah 3:16–17 = 2 Nephi 13:16–17
- Isaiah 5:15 = 2 Nephi 15:15
- Isaiah 6:10–11 = 2 Nephi 16:10–11
- Isaiah 10:13–15 = 2 Nephi 10:13–15
- Isaiah 14: 14–15 = 2 Nephi 24: 14–15

verses 22-23 The sixth woe accuses those who give bribes and belittle the righteous.

22 Wo unto the mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to mingle strong drink;

verse 22 In the sixth woe, Isaiah uses mockery, and he also employs the symbolism of “strong drink” as the antithesis of righteousness. He speaks to men who would boast of their strength. He, in effect, says, “You are strong and mighty and heroic and valiant all right—heroic at drinking wine, and champions at mixing drinks.

23 Who justify the wicked for reward, and take away the righteousness of the righteous from him!

verse 23 “justify the wicked for reward” You are drunk with your own ambition. To further your position, you would acquit the guilty for a bribe and deprive the innocent of his rights.

“take away the righteousness of the righteous” You deprive the good man of his legal rights. You cheat him. Actually, this expression may imply more than simply a warning against cheating others. “The righteous” is Jesus Christ (see 1 John 2:1,29). Isaiah condemns those who would refer to Jesus as only a “great teacher” or a “super star.”

24 Therefore, as the fire devoureth the stubble, and the flame consumeth the chaff, their root shall be rottenness, and their blossoms shall go up as dust; because they have cast away the law of the Lord of Hosts, and despised the word of the Holy One of Israel.

verse 24 After defining and pronouncing the six woes, Isaiah then pronounces the judgments which will rapidly come, one after another.

Stubble is straw left on the ground after harvest. Chaff is husk after the wheat is winnowed. The Lord has referred to the gathering of the saints as the “harvest” (see D&C 101:64). After the harvest, the stubble and chaff remain. Thus, this analogy likening the wicked to the stubble and the chaff is apt, and likening their fate to a stubble fire is certainly descriptive.

In the second part of the verse, an analogy is employed wherein an individual is likened to a plant. His “roots” are his progenitors, his “blossom” refers to his descendants. Since he has denied the Lord (“the Holy One of Israel”), he has denied the priesthood with its sealing power. This will result in a disintegration or decay (“rotteness,” “blossoms shall go up as dust”) of his family as an eternal unit (see JSH 2:38-39 and 3 Nephi 25:1-6). He will not be allowed posterity.

25 Therefore, is the anger of the Lord kindled against his people, and he hath stretched forth his hand against them, and hath smitten them; and the hills did tremble, and their carcasses were torn in the midst of the streets. For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

verse 25 “he hath stretched forth his hand against them” It seems more likely that rather than the Lord’s actively smiting his people, he simply withdraws his protective support leaving them vulnerable. He thus allows the natural enemies of the people to do the punishing.

“the hills did tremble” Even the earth’s elements respond to the power of God.

“their carcasses were torn in the midst of the streets” The corpses of the people were regarded as garbage. The setting is likely one of war.

Isaiah concludes this verse with a two-fold promise: “For all this his anger is not turned away” and “his hand is stretched out still.” Most often this scriptural sentence is interpreted as meaning that while the Lord’s judgment and punishment still hang over the people and there can be no mistaking his anger at them, his hand is always stretched forth to help them and receive them if they accept him. An analogous verse which confirms this interpretation is 2 Nephi 28:32: “Wo be unto the Gentiles, saith the Lord God of Hosts! For notwithstanding I shall lengthen out mine arm unto them from day to day, they will deny me; nevertheless, I will be merciful unto them, saith the Lord God, if they will repent and come unto me; for mine arm is lengthened out all the day long, saith the Lord God of Hosts.”

Two modern translations support an alternate and quite opposite interpretation of the second of these two phrases. Today’s English Version of the Bible renders them: “Yet even so the Lord’s anger is not ended; his hand is still stretched out to punish.” Also the Jerusalem Bible: “Yet his anger is not spent, still his hand is raised to strike.” In this context, please see the commentary for 2 Nephi 19:12.

verse 26-30 If taken in a contemporary historical context at the time of Isaiah, these verses probably describe the Assyrian army with all their terrible power. They struck with speed, seemed to need no rest, and did not pause long enough to take off their shoes. Their weapons were ready, their roar was like that of a lion, and when they seized their prey, none could stop them. Their destruction was so swift and complete that even in daylight, there was darkness (perhaps from the smoke of burning cities) and gloom (defeat) that hung over the people. God's judgment was wrought upon Israel by the Assyrians between 732 and 722 BC when Assyria conquered the northern kingdom in Samaria and carried away the Ten Tribes. Also in 701 B.C., Assyria destroyed much of Judah and besieged Jerusalem.

Scriptural evidence is strong, however, that Isaiah intended also another meaning for these verses. He apparently foresaw the latter days just prior to the Savior's second coming.

This section introduces two divine activities that will attract members of the house of Israel to gather to their lands of promise. He will hold up a flag, or standard, unto all the nations of the earth around which Israel may rally. Also, he will attract the attention of Israel through a "hiss" or a whistle. These activities symbolize the manner by which the earth's inhabitants will be called to Zion in the latter days after they accept the gospel of Jesus Christ. We will learn in this section that nothing will impede those who come to Zion.

26 And he will lift up an ensign to the nations from far, and will hiss unto them from the end of the earth; and behold, they shall come with speed swiftly; none shall be weary nor stumble among them.

verse 26 "he will lift up an ensign to the nations" In these latter days the Lord will lift up an "ensign to the nations" from afar off which will inspire and exhort members of the house of Israel to gather to their promised lands. The word "ensign" means a signal, a standard, a flag, or a rallying point. This "ensign" is the restored gospel of Jesus Christ. Various aspects of the restored gospel which will serve as a "standard" to the world in that day are: (1) The gospel teachings and covenants will serve as "a standard for my people, and for the gentiles to seek to it" (D&C 45:9). (2) The powers of the priesthood including missionary work will serve as "an ensign, and for the gathering of my people in the last days" (D&C 113:6). (3) The Book of Mormon will "hiss forth [whistle or ring out] unto the ends of the earth, for a standard unto my people, which are of the house of Israel" (2 Nephi 29:2). (4) Zion. The people that gather unto the Church in that latter day will live a lifestyle that contrasts with that lifestyle lived by the rest of the world. Thus, the people themselves will serve as an "ensign" to the nations (see D&C 115:5-6).

Using this "ensign," the Lord will signal or whistle or "hiss," unto Israel who are scattered in all parts of the earth. This will doubtless occur by the promptings of the Spirit.

Then, "they shall come with speed swiftly"—scattered Israel shall gather to Zion swiftly.

In this dispensation, the initial gathering to Zion (on the western hemisphere) and to Jerusalem has been slow and fraught with much trial and suffering. Certainly the pace of gathering is quickening, however. Perhaps the suggestion is implicit herein that the day will come when the pace of gathering will be even more accelerated.

verses 27-29 Imagine yourself in Isaiah's day being shown in vision the latter-day gathering of Israel which will surely take place by modern modes of transportation. You would, of necessity, describe the phenomenon using symbols extant in your own day.

27 None shall slumber nor sleep; neither shall the girdle of their loins be loosed, nor the latchet of their shoes be broken;

verse 27 Those gathering to Zion will come so fast—on an airplane—that during their journey they will not have to sleep or grow weary, and they won't even have to change clothes en route! The "girdle of their loins" is their waist cloth. "Nor the latchet of their shoes be broken." Isaiah obviously did not foresee the role of the present government's TSA.

28 Whose arrows shall be sharp, and all their bows bent, and their horses' hoofs shall be counted like flint, and their wheels like a whirlwind, their roaring like a lion.

verse 28 Once gathered in Zion, this mighty army of the Lord will turn their attention to spreading the gospel throughout the world. Armed with God's power (the priesthood) and his word, their "arrows are sharp" and "all their bows bent" with excitement. A "bent bow" is one that is strung and ready.

In Isaiah's day, it was not customary to shoe horses with metal shoes. Thus, firmness and solidity of a horse's hoof—"like flint"—was a very desirable quality. Here Isaiah comments on the quality of this army of missionaries. Not only are they strong but fast ("wheels like a whirlwind") and bold ("their roaring like a lion").

29 They shall roar like young lions; yea, they shall roar, and lay hold of the prey, and shall carry away safe, and none shall deliver.

verse 29 This army of young missionaries ("young lions") shall preach with authority ("roar").

The phrase "carry away safe" is translated correctly from the Hebrew. The Hebrew verb carries with it the idea of "to place in safety or to escape from danger." This is awkward for modern translators or commentators. How can a lion lay hold of prey and carry it away "safe"? Some modern translations have omitted the idea of "safety." Being aware of the verse's latter-day and missionary context, however, it is easy to understand. The "prey" or converts shall be "carried away" safe to Zion. Zion will serve as “a defense, and . . . a refuge from the storm, and from wrath when it shall be poured out without mixture upon the whole earth” (D&C 115:5-6).

“none shall deliver” No one will take their “prey” from the gathering missionaries.

30 And in that day they shall roar against them like the roaring of the sea; and if they look unto the land, behold, darkness and sorrow, and the light is darkened in the heavens thereof.

verse 30 “they shall roar against them” They refers to the young lions, the young missionaries. These missionaries will “roar” or preach against them, or those who would try to take their prey from them (see the phrase “none shall deliver” in the previous verse).

Some, of course, will not believe. The missionaries will encounter, in that day, considerable corruption. They shall preach (“roar”) against the wicked and the wickedness. This verse presents a contrast between the light of the gospel and the darkness of the apostate condition of the earth. Much evil and darkness will shroud the light of God’s work in the last days. The “land” is the land of the wicked which will contain great sin and wickedness to the point of “darkness and sorrow.” Spiritual light will not be found among these unrighteous peoples.

As we read, in scripture, about the “end times” or the great destruction that will accompany the Lord’s Second Coming, it is natural that we experience some apprehension. This is especially so since we have been taught that we live in the “day of the Gentile” or the last days. Latter-day prophets and apostles continue to warn and teach about the last days, stressing that many of the calamities ancient prophets like Isaiah and Nephi warned of are being fulfilled now. The common refrain is to prepare now, for we do not know exactly when the Lord will come. President Ezra Taft Benson taught: “Are we not witnessing the fulfillment of these signs today? The gospel is being extended to all nations which permit our missionaries to penetrate their countries. The Church is prospering and growing. Yet in undiminished fury, and with an anxiety that his time is short, and it is Satan, that great adversary to all men, [who] is attempting to destroy all we hold dear.” President Benson acknowledged, “this is an unpleasant topic on which to dwell. I take no delight in its portrayal, nor do I look forward to the day when calamities shall come upon mankind. But these words are not my own; the Lord has spoken them.” He was quick to note, “to an otherwise gloomy picture there is a bright side—the coming of our Lord in all His glory. His coming will be both glorious and terrible, depending on the spiritual condition of those who remain” (“Prepare Yourself for the Great Day of the Lord,” New Era, May 1982).

Dallin H. Oaks pointed out, “the Lord declares that some of these signs are His voice calling His people to repentance.” Elder Oaks taught, “We need to make both temporal and spiritual preparation for the events prophesied at the time of the Second Coming" ("Preparation for the Second Coming," address given at the April 2004 General Conference; online at lds.org). The need for spiritual preparation constantly grows in this increasingly secular world. Prophets both ancient and modern have warned of impending dangers of the last days but have also marked the safe way forward.

2 Nephi Chapter 16

In this chapter (Isaiah 6), Isaiah describes how he received his call to be the Lord's prophet through a direct vision from the Lord in the year 742 B.C. In that year, times were perilous for Judah. King Uzziah, who had righteously ruled Judah for over forty years, had died earlier that same year, and his son Jotham ruled in his stead. Jotham was not particularly wicked, but he was the first of a series of less able and less righteous rulers. Socioeconomically, Israel had become divided into a poor oppressed class and a wealthy and generally corrupt one. Spiritually, many Israelites continued to observe traditional religious practices, but their hearts had turned from the Lord. Also in that same year, Assyria, under the capable leadership of Tiglath-Pileser III or Pul, as he is known in the Bible, had been threatening Palestine for three years.

As a general outline, chapters 12 through 15 of 2 Nephi serve to emphasize Israel's separation from the "master of the vineyard," and chapters seventeen through twenty-one promise deliverance and the "millennial day." Chapter sixteen serves to connect the first group with the second. Chapter sixteen easily divides into two parts. Isaiah's vision of the Lord comprises verses 1 through 7, and his actual call is found in verses 8 through 13.

There is no need to suppose that the full priesthood authority of the office of prophet was given to Isaiah during this vision experience alone. This authority must have come through proper priesthood channels, though we are not given a record of his actual ordination.

Joseph Smith informs us that Isaiah's vision was also a time when his calling and election were made sure and he was given the gift of the Second Comforter, Jesus Christ (TPJS, 150-51). For more discussion of this phenomenon, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 16, Calling and Election Made Sure.

1 In the year that king Uzziah died, I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple.

verse 1 "In the year that king Uzziah died" As stated above, king Uzziah died in about 742 B.C. Details of his reign are recorded in 2 Kings 15:1-7 where his name is rendered Azariah, and in 2 Chronicles 26.

Isaiah relates his story in the first person. Isaiah saw a vision of the Lord Jehovah sitting upon a high and lofty throne. His "train," or the skirts of his robe, "filled the temple." Isaiah was likely in the temple in Jerusalem at the time of this vision, but it seems likely that the "temple" here referred to is the throne room or holy of holies of the heavenly or celestial temple.

2 Above it stood the seraphim; each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly.

verse 2 Attending the Lord and standing above his throne were animal-like creatures that reside in God's presence called seraphs or seraphim. The singular form is seraph. Seraphim are apparently a high order of animals that serve the Lord in his heavenly court. Their name comes from the Hebrew root sarap, which means "to burn." The name seraphim is plural and therefore means "the burning ones" or "bright, shiny ones" which likely refers to their glory.

Isaiah describes them as having three pair of wings. With one pair ("twain" means two), the seraphs cover their faces (one modern translation renders it "veil their presence"), with another pair they cover their legs (the same translation renders it "conceal their location"), and with the third pair they fly about. Exactly why the seraphim covered their face and feet and whether this covering is symbolic or literal is unknown. Below, in verse 6, Isaiah will describe them as having "hands" also.

Actually, the wings themselves could be figurative here rather than literal. D&C 77:4 describes the wings as being symbolic of the power to move or to act.

Many animals and plants live in God's presence, and it is likely that we have never heard of or seen many of them. John the Revelator saw and heard such animals in God's presence (Revelation 5:8-14), and Joseph Smith recorded how these animals praised and glorified God (TPJS, 291-92).

In D&C 109:79, Joseph Smith describes Seraphs in God's presence. Joseph refers to them as "bright, shining seraphs." Joseph also taught that God dwells in "everlasting burnings" and that righteous beings (human and animal) dwell with him in a state of continual burning or glory (TPJS, 372-73, 347, 361).

Another type of winged heavenly creature that deserves mention is the cherub (singular) or cherubim (plural). Ezekiel teaches that cherubim also have hands and faces (Ezekiel 10:7, 14). Mesopotamian tradition and art represent them as winged bulls with human faces, but this need not necessarily correspond with the truth.

An alternate explanation of seraphim and cherubim is that they are angels in the celestial presence of God who belong to the human family, and that the descriptions of their non human parts ("wings") is only figurative and symbolic. Perhaps their "wings" are figurative representations of their power to move and to act.

3 And one cried unto another, and said: Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of Hosts; the whole earth is full of his glory.

verse 3 One of the seraphs cried unto another praising God.

"Holy, holy, holy" This threefold exclamation also plays a significant role in John the Revelator's vision of the heavenly temple (see also Revelation 4:8). This cry of "holy, holy, holy" may refer to God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

4 And the posts of the door moved at the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with smoke.

verse 4 Isaiah describes a door whose posts, or foundations, moved or trembled as one seraph spoke. Perhaps the trembling or quaking was also due to God's presence. What door? Perhaps this is the door leading into the Holy of Holies of the celestial temple, or perhaps the heavenly doorway leading to the celestial kingdom itself. The concept of a door leading into God's presence (the "pearly gates") is spoken of in other scriptural verses (John 10; 2 Nephi 9:41; Isaiah 22:22).

The "smoke" that filled "the house," the temple, is likely the same as the "cloud of darkness" that filled the temple at the dedication of Solomon's temple. A cloud of darkness filled the temple and then became a radiant medium of glory as the Lord appeared (1 Kings 8:10-12). Thus, the smoke could be a symbol of the glory of God (Exodus 19:18).

5 Then said I: Woe is unto me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips; and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of Hosts.

verse 5 Recognizing that he is in the presence of the Lord, Isaiah is struck with his own feelings of unrighteousness and unworthiness, the immensity of his personal sins ("woe is me; I am unqualified!"), and the realization of his own mortal weakness ("for I as a man of unclean lips"). The expression "unclean lips" means unworthiness. It seems likely that Isaiah's confession comes, not from a life that is grossly sinful, but rather from the profound humility resulting from his finding himself in the Lord's presence.

It is interesting that the usual reactions of a man on finding himself in a divine presence are often marked feelings of unworthiness, fear of judgment, or even impending destruction. Often the first message given to such a favored man is "Fear not" or "Peace be with you." After this, the favored mortal usually feels comfortable—free from guilt, and he regards the visitation to be a blessing not a condemnation (Exodus 3:6; Judges 6:22-23; Moses 6:31-32; Helaman 5:43- 48; JS-H 1:17).

6 Then flew one of the seraphim unto me, having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar;

verse 6 "Then flew one of the seraphim unto me" The original text of the Book of Mormon contains Hebrew-like constructions that have been removed from the text of the Book of Mormon because of their non-English character. An example of a typical Hebrew form is the double plural form "seraphims." It was found in both the original text of the Book of Mormon and is also found in the King James Bible (Isaiah 6:6). It has been removed and replaced by the more appropriate English form, seraphim.

“having a live coal in his hand” The live coal (fire) here suggests a purifying agent such as the cleaning power of the Holy Ghost.

The “altar” here is a place where sacrifices are offered in similitude of the atonement. If the vision is of the Jerusalem temple, this altar could be the great altar for burnt offerings in front of the temple or the incense altar in the holy place before the veil.

7 And he laid it upon my mouth, and said: Lo, this has touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged.

verses 6-7 The “live coal” represents divine fire and the cleansing or purging power of the atonement just as our ordinances of baptism and the sacrament represent the same. By touching Isaiah’s lips, the coal not only purged him from being a “man of unclean lips” but it also consecrated him to speak in righteousness as a mouth piece of the Lord (Jeremiah 1:9).

The word “purged” here actually means to be removed through ritual washing.

During Isaiah’s call, one of the seraphim cleanses Isaiah to make him worthy to stand in the midst of the divine council (2 Nephi 16:6–7; Isaiah 6:6–7). Latter-day Saint biblical scholar David Bokovoy explained, “Though the literal identity of this fiery angelic being is ambiguous in the text, one possible LDS reading would interpret the seraph who cleanses Isaiah as an allusion to Christ” (David E. Bokovoy, “On Christ and Covenants: An LDS Reading of Isaiah’s Prophetic Call,” Studies in the Bible and Antiquity 3, 2011: 45). Bokovoy further commented: “Interpreting the Lord seated upon the throne as God the Father and the seraph who heals Isaiah as an allusion to Christ would allow the chapter to serve as an illustration of Isaiah’s role as an eyewitness of Jesus who, as Nephi observed in his commentary, had been sent to testify of the Redeemer” (Bokovoy, “On Christ and Covenants,” 45).

This reading suggests that, like Lehi and Nephi, Isaiah’s witness of the Redeemer came as part of a divine council vision. This, however, does not offer the same kinds of details found in Nephi’s vision.

8 Also I heard the voice of the Lord, saying: Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then I said: Here am I; send me.

verse 8 Now, forgiven of his sins and worthy to be in God’s presence, Isaiah overhears the Lord’s voice addressing an unknown congregation—perhaps a heavenly council. The plural pronoun “us” suggests that there were others in God’s heavenly throne room. In John’s vision of the heavenly temple (Revelation 4-5), we read of exalted saints and others near God’s throne in heaven (Genesis 1:26; 3:22; 11:7).

Isaiah volunteers for the calling even before it is directly offered to him in a manner reminiscent of the Lord’s own response in that Great Council in the pre-existent phase of our existence (Abraham 3:27). Although some great prophets like Enoch, verses 9-10 During his mortal ministry, the Savior will later refer to these verses of scripture as he explains to his disciples why he veils the truths in his teachings by teaching in parables (Matthew 13:10-15). Apparently, Jesus intended that those who were spiritually sensitive should understand his teachings, while those who were spiritually deaf should not. The implication is that the latter group had not earned the privilege of hearing a clear and explicit explanation of sacred truths. Another suggested reason for parables is that in using parables as a teaching method, the Savior was mercifully protecting the unprepared from being held responsible for those teachings.

Moses, and Jeremiah were initially reluctant to accept their prophetic callings, Isaiah responds without hesitation.

9 And he said: Go and tell this people—Hear ye indeed, but they understood not; and see ye indeed, but they perceived not.

verse 9 The Lord charges Isaiah to go and preach the gospel to the people. Implicit in this charge, as evidenced by the following verse, is the idea that Isaiah should preach and write in a partially hidden or veiled form which would be difficult for the spiritually hard hearted or disbelieving to understand. He further prophesies that they will in fact hear and see but not comprehend:

As has been noted previously, notice the use here of the “prophetic perfect” verb tense. Even though he is prophesying of events in the future, Isaiah speaks in the past tense (“they understood not; and . . . they perceived not”). This was common verb construction form among the Hebrew prophets.

10 Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes—lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and be converted and be healed.

verse 10 At first reading it seems that Isaiah is here being charged to deliberately confuse the people because the Lord does not want them to repent and be “healed” spiritually. We know that this cannot be true. The Lord wants all of his children to eventually repent and return to his presence. There can be no mistaking, however, that the Lord is charging Isaiah to teach and write in such a way that the truths contained in his teachings will not be easily understood by the spiritually unprepared. Isaiah is commanded to deliberately keep them in the dark. There is no question but that Isaiah responded to this charge. His writings are, in fact, difficult to understand. His style, symbolism, and poetry are not interpreted readily. Now we know that he intended his writings to be difficult to understand.

“Fat hearted” means “hard hearted” or unresponsive to the gospel message.

“lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and convert, and be healed” It seems clear that the Lord did not want part of Isaiah's audience to fully understand Isaiah's teachings at that particular time. A valid question is why not? It is clear from this verse and from Christ's teachings in Matthew 13:10-15 that certain sensitive gospel truths are not for the eyes and ears of the unworthy. We do know from Christ's earthly ministry that it is possible to cast "pearls" before "swine" (Matthew 7:6). The intent of Christ's warning not to cast "pearls" before "swine" which are the spiritually unprepared and unworthy would seem to be to protect those truths from being trampled under foot—that is, ridiculed and cheapened.

This verse, however, implies that if an unprepared and unworthy individual were to hear a clear explanation of precious truths, it may result in his untimely conversion. Is this true? Is it possible that a man may be converted too easily, without sufficient effort on his part, by a premature, too-clear explanation of gospel truths? It would seem to be most unlikely that an unworthy "hard hearted" individual would be converted even on hearing important and precious truths explained clearly.

We are still left with this verse's strong implication that an unworthy or unprepared individual might be converted and "healed" by an untimely, presumably premature, clear presentation of gospel truths. What is the answer to this dilemma? The problem is created by the word lest.

The solution to this misinterpretation is simple. The first part of the verse states that the people of Isaiah's day will be insensitive and unresponsive to the eternal truths of Isaiah's message because of their rampant iniquity and the grossness of their hearts. Hence, "For this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed." The word lest may be interpreted here as "were it not so." In other words, Were it not so that this people's hearts were unresponsive, then "they [would] see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and [would] understand with their heart, and [would] be converted, and I [would] heal them.

11 Then said I: Lord, how long? And he said: Until the cities be wasted without inhabitant, and the houses without man, and the land be utterly desolate; verse 11 After he was called, Isaiah asked the Lord how long he would prophesy and preach before his words would be understood and believed. The Lord answered that Isaiah's prophecies would not be understood until after Judah was ravaged, its cities depopulated, and its land left desolate. To what specific time period is this likely referring? See the commentary for verse 13 below.

12 And the Lord have removed men far away, for there shall be a great forsaking in the midst of the land.

verse 12 Another event prophesied by Isaiah to occur before the people of Judah would begin to repent was that its inhabitants would be scattered to far places leaving even the formerly populated areas in the midst of the land uninhabited. This is an allusion to the scattering of Israel that will occur between 732 and 722 BC, 587 B.C., and AD 70.

“the Lord have removed men far away” This expression refers to the scattering of Israel. Note the past perfect tense used in referring to future events.

“a great forsaking in the midst of the land” The Lord will be forsaken by his people, and therefore his people will not be allowed to remain in the “midst of the land.” Rather, they will be scattered.

13 But yet there shall be a tenth, and they shall return, and shall be eaten, as a teil-tree, and as an oak whose substance is in them when they cast their leaves; so the holy seed shall be the substance thereof.

verse 13 Finally, Isaiah prophesies that a righteous remnant (a “tenth”) of Judah shall return to Jerusalem. This could refer to those of Judah who returned from Babylonian captivity in about 538 BC and rebuilt the temple which had been leveled by Babylon. It might also refer to a few righteous in Israel after the Roman purging in AD 70 or even a few righteous there today or in the future those who repent, return to the Lord, and receive the spiritual gifts necessary to understand Isaiah. This verse does not seem to have reference to the gathering of the lost ten tribes of Israel since they will not return as a “tenth” but as a great host which shall have greatly multiplied (Isaiah 54:1-3).

In this verse this remnant is compared to the shoots of a teil tree or an oak tree. A teil tree is a linden tree which is a tree of fine white grain and dense heart-shaped leaves. It has the ability to sprout up new shoots even from an old stump which has been cut down. The oak also has the ability to regenerate after it has shed its leaves and been pruned.

The remnant of Judah that returns to Jerusalem shall have been “eaten,” that is, pruned or purged of its unrighteous elements. Those who return will likely be of a new generation.

Even though the “tree” of Judah has been defoliated, pruned, or its stump burned up, its stump still maintains the capacity for growth—the essence of life, the “holy seed.” The “holy seed” are those righteous, covenant few who maintain the ability to regenerate this chosen line of people and to spread the message of Christ’s gospel to the world. The “holy seed” could also refer to the Savior. The word substance refers to the results or consequences of the regeneration of the holy seed.

It is probably fair to conclude that the general pattern of the call of a prophet of God is illustrated in this chapter by the call of the prophet Isaiah. Every prophet has been called in a heavenly council, thus the authority for each call may be traced directly to the throne of God (TPJS, 365).

2 Nephi Chapter 17

Chapter seven of the book of Isaiah, which is the source of 2 Nephi 17, is often called the “Virgin Birth” chapter or the chapter of the Immanuel Prophecy, and it is often quoted at Christmas time. Let us review the historical setting for this chapter.

Isaiah’s vision and calling, spoken of in chapter 16, had occurred about 742 BC, the year the good King Uzziah died of leprosy. Uzziah had ruled Judah since 783 BC. He was succeeded by his son Jotham who was also a righteous king who ruled until about 736 BC. When Jotham died, his unrighteous son Ahaz succeeded him and ruled until about 715 BC. Ahaz was eventually to apostatize completely from the truths of the gospel and even embrace the heathen cult of the Canaanites and “burn his children in the fire, after the abomination of the heathen” (2 Chronicles 28:3). The events of 2 Nephi chapter 17 took place before he had degenerated that far, in fact they probably occurred during the first year or two of his rule.

In about 745 BC, a capable leader had gained the throne in Assyria. This was Tiglath-Pileser III or “Pul” as he is called in the Bible. Under his leadership, the terrible Assyrian army began moving out from Nineveh (capital city of Assyria) and sought to force the small Palestinian nations to the southwest into a state of vassalage and tribute. To avoid a massacre and blood bath, for which the Assyrian army was infamous, some nations volunteered to pay tribute. One of these nations was the Kingdom of Israel (inhabited by the northern ten tribes) led by King Menahem. After the death of Menahem in 738 BC, his son Pekahiah succeeded him and intended to continue paying tribute to Assyria. Menahem’s son Pekahiah, however, was assassinated by Pekah, the captain of the guard who thus became king of Israel in a military coup in about 737 BC. Pekah refused to pay tribute. In fact, he wrote a letter to King Ahaz of Judah and to King Rezin in Damascus, Syria urging that they join together in a federation to resist and fight the Assyrians (Rezin had already been paying tribute to the Assyrians). Rezin agreed to join with Pekah and Israel, but Ahaz of Judah did not. Rezin will eventually be killed in a battle against Assyria (2 Kings 16:7-9). Pekah would reign over the kingdom of Israel for about five years and then be murdered by his successor to the throne, named Hosea. It will be during King Hosea’s reign that the northern tribes of Israel (the ten tribes) will be captured and deported by Assyria.

Because Ahaz refused to join their alliance, Pekah and Rezin decided to attack Judah and replace Ahaz with a leader more sympathetic to their anti-Assyrian policies, a man known only as the son of Tabeal. It was under the gloom of this impending assault on Jerusalem that the events in chapter 17 took place.

The war between the anti-Assyrian coalition and Judah was to be a bitter one. In one battle, Pekah’s army slew 120,000 men of Judah and took 200,000 captives in one day (see 2 Chronicles 28:6-15). It appeared that Judah would fall. Reports of enemy successes in the north caused Ahaz to fear greatly for the safety of Jerusalem.

As chapter 17 opens, Judah had already been attacked by the combined armies of Israel and Syria, but Ahaz's forces had been successful in repulsing the attack. Expecting further attacks and realizing that Jerusalem's most vulnerable strategic point of military assault was its water supply, Ahaz was out inspecting the city's water system.

Before beginning our study of chapter 17, it should be noted that the prophecy contained therein was literally fulfilled in the days of the prophet Isaiah. Nevertheless, it likely also has a direct application for us today. Assyria is a type and symbol of the warring nations that will exist in the latter days shortly before the Lord's second coming. The message we may take from this chapter is that if we trust in the Lord's words, as communicated to us by his prophets, rather than rely on the arm of flesh, we will be protected during the wars in the last days.

verses 1-2 In order to understand the various references to places in chapter 17, let us review the names by which the nations involved in this incident were called. A nation might be referred to by the name of its king, its capital city, or its predominant tribe:

Nation	Judah	Syria	Israel
King	Ahaz, of the house of David	Rezin	Pekah, son of Remaliah
Capital City	Jerusalem	Damascus	Samaria
Predominant Tribe	Judah	Aram	Ephraim

1 And it came to pass in the days of Ahaz the son of Jotham, the son of Uzziah, king of Judah, that Rezin, king of Syria, and Pekah the son of Remaliah, king of Israel, went up toward Jerusalem to war against it, but could not prevail against it.

verse 1 "Ahaz the son of Jotham" Remember, that Jotham was a righteous king and was the son of Uzziah. Ahaz is also the father of Hezekiah who will turn out to be a righteous king of Judah.

"Pekah the son of Remaliah, king of Israel" In the Book of Mormon "Israel" is most often used in reference to all of the descendants of Jacob, especially in the phrase "house of Israel" and the titles of Deity such as "God of Israel" and "Holy One of Israel." In this verse, however, Isaiah uses the term Israel in referring to the descendants of Jacob in the northern kingdom as opposed to those in the southern kingdom of Judah (see also 2 Nephi 19:8, 12, 14; 21:12).

"went up toward Jerusalem" Jerusalem, of course, is at higher elevation than the surrounding country side.

“but could not prevail against it” As stated in the introduction, as this chapter opens, there had already been a preliminary attack on Jerusalem which had been repelled.

2 And it was told the house of David, saying: Syria is confederate with Ephraim. And his heart was moved, and the heart of his people, as the trees of the wood are moved with the wind.

verse 2 The “house of David” refers to the kings of the Davidic dynasty in Judah including Ahaz. Ahaz and the people of Judah had heard of the initial successes of their enemy, and both Ahaz and his people were shaken and frightened (“his heart was moved, and the heart of his people”) like trees of the forest are shaken by the wind.

“Confederate with” means united with or in league with.

3 Then said the Lord unto Isaiah: Go forth now to meet Ahaz, thou and Shearjashub thy son, at the end of the conduit of the upper pool in the highway of the fuller’s field;

verse 3 Isaiah is instructed to take his son, Shear-jashub and meet with Ahaz. The name of Isaiah’s son means “a remnant shall return.” This boy was to become a living symbol to the Jews (2 Nephi 8:18) and a reminder to the Israelites that a remnant would return to their land and to their God (2 Nephi 6:11-13).

At the time of Isaiah’s visit, Ahaz is inspecting the city’s water supply to the east of the city. The only water source for Jerusalem was the Gihon Spring located just outside the city wall in the Kidron Valley. This external water supply made Jerusalem more vulnerable to attack since an enemy could cut off the water supply without having to enter the city. Since Ahaz would be deciding how to protect the water supply from the two invading forces, this would be an opportune time for Isaiah to deliver his message regarding how the city might be protected by the Lord.

Isaiah will find Ahaz at the end of the “conduit” which means canal, aqueduct, or tunnel. In this case, it is likely the aqueduct or canal that carried water from a pool formed by the Gihon spring in the Kidron valley that borders the eastern side of ancient Jerusalem. This pool was on the road to the fuller’s field. A “fuller” is a launderer, one who cleans, shrinks, and bleaches newly shorn wool and newly woven cloth before it is used in making garments. Perhaps he also cleaned the finished clothing. Thus, the fuller located his plant near a water supply. Also, a field was used in which the material was sun bleached. Because of its unpleasant odors, the fuller’s plant was located outside the city walls. This particular fuller’s field is thought to have been located at the confluence of the Hinnom and Kidron valleys to the south of Jerusalem.

In biblical times the concept of the fuller’s cleansing is used metaphorically in referring to persons who are cleansed of evil (Psalm 51:7; Jeremiah 2:22; 4:14). The messenger of the Lord is a “refiner” or “fuller” (Malachi 3:2). The garments of the transfigured Christ are whiter than any fuller could make them (Mark 9:3; Matthew 17:2).

4 And say unto him: Take heed, and be quiet; fear not, neither be faint-hearted for the two tails of these smoking firebrands, for the fierce anger of Rezin with Syria, and of the son of Remaliah.

verse 4 Isaiah is instructed to say to Ahaz, “take heed” (be careful, watch for danger), “be quiet” (keep calm), and “fear not, neither be faint-hearted” (don’t be afraid).

Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines firebrand as, “An incendiary; one who inflames factions, or causes contention and mischief.” The two angry kings of Israel (Samaria) and Syria are likened to “two tails of these smoking firebrands.” The other meaning of the word firebrand is the smoldering remains of a piece of wood or a torch that has been burned. When it has served its purpose and burned out, it becomes nothing but a “smoking firebrand” with tails of smoke rising from its spent ashes. The implication is that while these kings were once burning fires with the power to consume (firebrands), the days of their power are numbered. They are now merely “two tails of . . . smoking firebrands.” They had been or would soon be spent, and they were no longer to be feared. In other words don’t lose heart because of the smoke of these two burned out kings. Also don’t be frightened by the anger of Rezin and Pekah. Note the scorn Isaiah evidences as he refers to Pekah. Isaiah refers to him as “the son of Remaliah” rather than calling him by name.

Isaiah is commanded to say to Ahaz, in effect, “Don’t be afraid of (“for”) these two burned out kings. Also don’t be afraid of (“for”) the anger of Rezin of (“with”) Syria and Pekah.

5 Because Syria, Ephraim, and the son of Remaliah, have taken evil counsel against thee, saying:

verse 5 Because Syria, Israel, and Israel’s leader Pekah have plotted your ruin, saying:

6 Let us go up against Judah and vex it, and let us make a breach therein for us, and set a king in the midst of it, yea, the son of Tabeal.

verse 6 To “vex” is to disturb, and to “breach” is to make a hole by continual attacks. Let us invade Judah, terrorize it, tear it apart, and divide it among ourselves. We will make Tabeal’s son king over Judah.

Tabeal or Tabeel was apparently a Syrian whose son would function as a puppet king over Judah while it was controlled by Israel and Syria. Tabeel’s son apparently fought with the armies of Israel and Syria.

verses 7-9 The divine pronouncement in these verses contains five segments—three prophetic and two historical. The combination of history and prophecy is characteristic of Isaiah’s writings.

The three prophetic segments are: (1) The alliance’s goals will not come to pass. (2) Within sixty-five years, Ephraim (Israel) will be scattered. (3) If you (Ahaz and Judah) do not believe, you will not be protected.

The fulfillment of the first prophecy came to pass because Tiglath-Pileser III (Pul) attacked Syria and Israel in 732 BC, distracting these two countries from their assault on Judah. The second prophecy began to be fulfilled between 732 and 722 BC (within twelve or thirteen years of the time the prophecies were made) when Assyria besieged Samaria, and Samaria fell. After the Israelite captives were taken from Samaria to Nineveh, the capital city of Assyria, large groups of Israelites fled from Assyria to the remote areas northward and became the ten lost tribes of Israel. Within about fifty years of their leaving Assyria, they were scattered so widely that many tribes no longer existed as cohesive groups. Therein was Isaiah’s prophecy to Israel fulfilled and just within the prescribed time table. The third prophecy or warning was not heeded by Ahaz. Rather than rely on the Lord, Ahaz relied upon the Assyrians for deliverance. Consequently, Judah found herself paying tribute to Assyria to avoid annihilation.

The two historical segments are merely statements of historical fact that are self explanatory: (1) For the head (center or capital) of Syria is Damascus, and the head (king) of Damascus is Rezin. (2) For the head (center) of Ephraim (Israel) is Samaria, and the head (leader) of Samaria is Remaliah’s son (Pekah).

7 Thus saith the Lord God: It shall not stand, neither shall it come to pass.

verse 7 “Thus saith the Lord” This phrase is found some forty-six times in the writings of Isaiah and introduces prophetic language—prophecy. Its purpose is to announce both the divine authority and the origin of the revelation (Isaiah in the Book of Mormon, edited by Donald W. Parry and John W. Welch, a FARMS publication, “Nephi’s Keys to Understanding Isaiah,” Donald W. Parry, 54).

Now, the prophetic message of comfort is delivered to Ahaz and Judah: The feared destruction of Jerusalem will not take place, it will not happen.

In subsequent verses, Isaiah will pronounce a fate upon Israel that Israel sought to impose upon Judah—a destruction and scattering.

8 For the head of Syria is Damascus, and the head of Damascus, Rezin; and within three score and five years shall Ephraim be broken that it be not a people.

9 And the head of Ephraim is Samaria, and the head of Samaria is Remaliah’s son. If ye will not believe surely ye shall not be established.

verse 9 “ye shall not be established” To be “established” means to be protected and allowed to prosper.

10 Moreover, the Lord spake again unto Ahaz, saying:

11 Ask thee a sign of the Lord thy God; ask it either in the depths, or in the heights above.

verses 10-11 In order to prove the authenticity of his words, Isaiah invites, even commands Ahaz in the name of the Lord to ask for a sign. Not just any sign but a spectacular sign (“either in the depths, or in the heights above”). This situation is obviously somewhat unique and different from the setting in which divine signs are usually given to mortals. Ordinarily signs are not given to the wicked but only to the righteous (see D&C 63:9). The Savior’s once said of signs, “an evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign” (Matthew 12:39). Ahaz was not deserving, but for the sake of the Lord’s chosen people he was offered a sign.

12 But Ahaz said: I will not ask, neither will I tempt the Lord.

verse 12 To “tempt” is to test or to try. Ahaz refused to ask for a sign even when the prophet of the Lord gave him the opportunity. This verse makes Ahaz’s refusal sound almost virtuous—he refused to put the Lord to a test. However, it is probable that Ahaz refused to ask for a sign because he had no confidence in the Lord. He was more inclined to place his trust in the military protection of the king of Assyria. Ahaz quotes Deuteronomy 6:16 (“Ye shall not tempt the Lord your God.”) in order to justify his act of refusing the proffered sign. The irony of quoting a scripture out of context in refusing to follow the prophet of the Lord further evidences his disbelief.

13 And he said: Hear ye now, O house of David; is it a small thing for you to weary men, but will ye weary my God also?

verse 13 Isaiah is speaking. Again, addressing Ahaz as “house of David,” Isaiah expresses his exasperation at Ahaz’s intransigence. To “weary” is to wear out. The word is used to indicate that someone has had enough of an opponent’s argument. “It is one thing for you to frustrate me, but will you frustrate the Lord as well”?

verses 14-25 These verses contain the best known and most quoted prophecy in all of the Isaiah’s writings, the Immanuel Prophecy. Simply stated, as a sign to Ahaz and the people of Judah, Isaiah prophesies the birth of a male infant to a virgin who will name the child “Immanuel.” The Hebrew appellation Immanuel literally means “with us [is] God,” clearly foreshadowing the coming of God himself into the world (Matthew 1:21-23). Actually the Immanuel Prophecy consists of three parts or segments, each a “sub-prophecy” in its own right. Each segment is contained in a separate verse (verses 14, 15, and 16). Verse 14 contains the prophecy that the infant will be born, verses 15 and 16 prophesy more about the child Immanuel.

One might assume, as many have, that Isaiah's prophecy refers to the virgin birth of Jesus Christ in the meridian of time. Secular biblical scholars, however, have objected to this interpretation, claiming that such a sign—the miraculous birth of a Messiah more than seven centuries later could hardly have served as a sign to Ahaz or to Ahaz's Judah. We will consider this question further in the next verse.

14 Therefore, the Lord himself shall give you a sign—Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and shall bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel.

verse 14 Here is the important first segment of the Immanuel Prophecy. An interesting question, then, is whether the Immanuel Prophecy is a Messianic prophecy—a prophecy of the future birth of Jesus Christ—or a prophecy having to do with a male child to be born in the days of Isaiah. It seems most likely that the prophecy will find application in both time periods. An interesting ancillary question is: What meaning did Isaiah himself intend or understand for this prophecy? Did he know of the virgin birth of the Lord, or did he have in mind only a contemporaneous application? Again, Isaiah was an inspired prophet of God and surely knew of the future birth and ministry of the Savior (Jacob 4:4; 3 Nephi 23:1-3).

To reiterate the question, then: Is the Immanuel Prophecy a Messianic prophecy, or was its fulfillment to occur in the eighth century BC, or is it both? Let us explore the scriptural and “reasonable” evidences.

Let us first consider the evidences supporting the idea that the sign was to occur in Isaiah's day.

1. A careful reading of verses 13 and 14 certainly leaves the impression that Isaiah intended for the sign to be witnessed by his contemporaries in Judah. Ahaz and his people needed to develop faith in the fact that the Lord could deliver them from Pekah and Rezin. The sign seems to have been intended to engender that faith.

2. Some maintain that the Hebrew word almah which is translated “virgin” in the King James Bible is actually more correctly translated “young woman of marriageable age.” And, if Isaiah had intended to make clear the idea of a miraculous virgin birth, he would have used the more specific Hebrew term bethulah which means “virgin.” The biblical scholars that have raised this objection do concede however, that the “young woman of marriageable age” might be a virgin. Others contend that the Hebrew almah does indeed mean “virgin.”

3. Isaiah promised the sign when Jerusalem was being threatened by the Syro-Ephraimite coalition. The Immanuel Prophecy goes on to promise that before the child Immanuel is old enough to know good from evil, the threat will be removed (verse 16).

As to what particular event, or which particular child in Isaiah's time might have fulfilled this prophecy, only speculations can be made. It has been suggested that Isaiah's second son, Maher-shalal-hash-baz might have been intended. This suggestion would depend upon a rather contrived set of circumstances including the fact that the wife would have to be a second wife (actually an anticipated second wife) of Isaiah's, since Isaiah already has a son, and therefore his wife was not a virgin. Or, perhaps Isaiah's wife was "virgin" in the sense that she was pure and undefiled by the world. This son would also have to have a second name—Immanuel. Some scholars see this as a reference to the birth of Hezekiah, son of Ahaz, who will become a righteous king of Judah.

Perhaps the prophecy refers to a child of a specifically designated woman. The Hebrew article rendered "a" virgin in verse 14 is actually more correctly translated "the" virgin. But who might this woman be?

Perhaps no specific child was implied. Possibly a number of children named Immanuel were intended. Could it be that because of the rapid dissipation of the Syro-Ephraimite threat, women who were then pregnant would, in gratitude, name their children "God is with us," or "Immanuel."

Now let us turn to those evidences which suggest that the Immanuel Prophecy is in fact a Messianic prophecy that foretells the birth of our Lord.

1. In New Testament times, Matthew referred to Isaiah's prophecy in trying to convince the Jews of Matthew's day that Jesus was in fact born in a miraculous way and was in fact the Messiah. Referring to Mary, Matthew wrote: "And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins. Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us" (Matthew 1:21-23). Some of the critical Bible scholars suggest that Matthew was overzealous and misguided in doing so and shouldn't have used this Isaiah passage. They point out that Matthew would have used for his Old Testament source the Greek Septuagint version of the Old Testament writings which used the word "virgin" rather than the earlier Hebrew manuscripts which might have simply implied "young woman." However, Elder Hugh B. Brown considered Matthew's quoting of Isaiah 7:14 an evidence that Isaiah was prophesying of the Savior's birth (CR, October 1960, 93). Elder Mark E. Petersen agreed (CR, October 1965, 60). Actually, many general authorities in this dispensation have expressed their belief that the Immanuel Prophecy applies to the Savior's birth.

2. Other Old Testament and Book of Mormon prophets have also testified of the birth of the Savior (see Jacob 4:4, Luke 24:27, 44), and so it should not be surprising for Isaiah to do so. For example, Nephi had a vision of a beautiful virgin, exceedingly fair, who was carried away in the Spirit and who returned bearing the Son of God in her arms (1 Nephi 11:13-21). King Benjamin prophesied specifically about Jesus's birth (Mosiah 3:8). Alma prophesied that a virgin in the land of Jerusalem was to be the mother of the Son of God (Alma 7:10).

3. Verse 13 implies that the sign was intended for the house of David or Judah (“Hear ye now, O house of David”). God had promised David that “thy kingdom shall be established forever” (2 Samuel 7:16). The “King of Kings” was to come through Judah and David’s lineage (Genesis 49:10). The Immanuel Prophecy, then, might be regarded simply as a reminder of this promise to Judah and David and a declaration of how the Lord would bring about its fulfillment in spite of a wicked king or a wicked generation.

4. The Book of Mormon opens with Lehi’s vision of “God sitting upon his throne, surrounded with numberless concourses of angels” with a Messianic figure “descending out of the midst of heaven” (1 Nephi 1:8–9). Nephi’s vision of the Savior, at the top of a high mountain, also appears to have been before the throne of God and his divine assembly. Isaiah too had his vision of God on his throne (2 Nephi 16; Isaiah 6), which is quite comparable to Lehi’s, and which Nephi quotes (See Stephen D. Ricks, “Heavenly Visions and Prophetic Calls in Isaiah 6, 2 Nephi 16, the Book of Mormon, and the Revelation of John,” in Isaiah in the Book of Mormon, 171–190).

In Isaiah’s call, one of the seraphim cleanses Isaiah to make him worthy to stand in the midst of the divine council (2 Nephi 16:6–7; Isaiah 6:6–7). We have already discussed the following, but let me reiterate. Latter-day Saint biblical scholar David Bokovoy explained, “Though the literal identity of this fiery angelic being is ambiguous in the text, one possible LDS reading would interpret the seraph who cleanses Isaiah as an allusion to Christ” (David E. Bokovoy, “On Christ and Covenants: An LDS Reading of Isaiah’s Prophetic Call,” Studies in the Bible and Antiquity 3, 2011: 45). Bokovoy further commented: “Interpreting the Lord seated upon the throne as God the Father and the seraph who heals Isaiah as an allusion to Christ would allow the chapter to serve as an illustration of Isaiah’s role as an eyewitness of Jesus who, as Nephi observed in his commentary, had been sent to testify of the Redeemer” (Bokovoy, “On Christ and Covenants,” 45).

This reading suggests that, like Lehi, Isaiah’s witness of the Redeemer came as part of a divine council vision. He had actually seen Jesus Christ as was a witness of the Savior. Isaiah saw and knew the Lord. Elder Jeffrey R. Holland has testified: “Isaiah was prepared from birth—and of course we would say from before birth—to testify of the Messiah and bear such witness of the divinity of Christ’s coming” (Elder Jeffrey R. Holland, “‘More Fully Persuaded’: Isaiah’s Witness of Christ’s Ministry,” in Isaiah in the Book of Mormon, 4).

5. In another place in his writings, Isaiah rejoiced, “For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called, Wonderful, Counselor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace” (2 Nephi 19:6; Isaiah 9:6). Among the titles of the Messianic child are “Everlasting Father” and “Mighty God.”

15 Butter and honey shall he eat, that he may know to refuse the evil and to choose the good.

verse 15 This is the second segment of the Immanuel Prophecy. The child Immanuel will eat “butter” or curds and “honey”—in other words the food of poverty, the fare of the common man. Curds were prepared by pressing the churning fresh milk in a goatskin. The symbolic meaning here is that he will experience the hardships, temptations, and vicissitudes of mortality and thus learn first hand the differences between good and evil. Remember that only Jesus Christ learned perfectly the differences between good and evil and thus lived a sinless life.

16 For before the child shall know to refuse the evil and choose the good, the land that thou abhorrest shall be forsaken of both her kings.

verse 16 This is the third segment. Before the child Immanuel is old enough to know right from wrong, the land of the two kings that are threatening Judah will be laid waste. If we assume that the Immanuel Prophecy applies only to the birth and childhood of Jesus, then it is difficult to explain this verse. The verse seems to indicate that the birth of the child Immanuel was a sign to the Judah of Isaiah’s day, and before the child is old enough to know the difference between good and evil, the current threat from the Kingdoms of Israel and Syria will have passed. Those who contend that Isaiah intended that his own wife might be the contemporaneous fulfillment of the Immanuel prophecy find support in Isaiah 8:3-4 (2 Nephi 18:3-4). Isaiah’s son Maher-shal-hash-baz was still under the age of eight when both Syria and Israel fell to Assyria.

In a rather imaginative, if somewhat contrived, explanation of how this verse might still apply only to Jesus’s birth, Brother Monte S. Nyman in his book Great Are the Words of Isaiah wrote:

Most of the critics have assumed that the child spoken of in verse 16 is the same child spoken of in verses 14 and 15. Could not the child in verse 16 be just any child? A child is accountable at age eight in the eyes of the Lord (see D&C 68:25). In his first eight years he is to learn to distinguish between good and evil. Therefore, Isaiah could be prophesying that the kings of Syria and Ephraim [Israel] are both going to be forsaken of their kings in less than eight years (58).

Pekah, king of Samaria, was killed about three years after Ahaz became king. Rezin, the king of Syria, was killed by the Assyrians in response to Ahaz’s plea for help. Thus, this third segment of the Immanuel Prophecy was fulfilled within three years of the time it was delivered.

The question of the proper application of the Immanuel Prophecy is still an open one, and each student must decide for himself. What did Isaiah understand, and what did the Lord intend in inspiring Isaiah to write this prophecy? It seems likely that Isaiah intended at least in part that the sign would be given to Ahaz and the Judah of the eighth century BC. Whether or not Isaiah understood or intended another application is unknown. Could it be that Isaiah understood that the sign would apply to the people of his day, and yet the Lord would properly have us interpret Isaiah's writings as a prophecy of his own miraculous birth? Perhaps so.

17 The Lord shall bring upon thee, and upon thy people, and upon thy father's house, days that have not come from the day that Ephraim departed from Judah, the king of Assyria.

verse 17 After prophesying to Ahaz that trusting in the Lord would result in deliverance from Syria and Israel, Isaiah then prophesies of the dangers of inviting Assyria to come to Judah's aid. Isaiah knew that Ahaz was inclined toward requesting Assyria's help in the conflict, and he issues a stern warning against such action.

In this verse, which is constructed somewhat awkwardly, Isaiah warns Ahaz that if he does enlist Assyria's help, he will bring upon Judah a situation even worse than that which occurred at the time of the rebellion of the ten tribes under the leadership of Jeroboam in 931 BC, and the problems will be caused by Assyria. The Lord will use the king of Assyria and his armies to punish King Ahaz, his family ("upon thy father's house"), and his kingdom ("upon thy people").

18 And it shall come to pass in that day that the Lord shall hiss for the fly that is in the uttermost part of Egypt, and for the bee that is in the land of Assyria.

verse 18 "in that day" This is a phrase used by Isaiah which often seems to pertain to our day (see also verses 20, 21, 23), though certainly it also has application to Isaiah's day.

"the Lord shall hiss for the fly . . . and for the bee" The Lord shall whistle for, or call for a tormentor. The fly was, and still is, notorious in Egypt, and the honeybee was apparently notorious in Assyria—possibly a type of killer bee? It has been suggested that the reference to the fly might be symbolic of the swarming nature of invading Egyptian armies. The nation of Egypt was seeking resurgence during Isaiah's time.

It seems clear that the Assyrian armies, and their stinging nature, are here referred to as "bees." Bee-keeping was common in Assyria. The Lord shall signal or prompt the Assyrian armies to come down on Judah. The Lord's whistling to the bees is a symbol built on an actual ancient practice, for Cyrillus of Alexandria (ca. AD 400) wrote about beekeepers who whistled to bees to get them to return to their hives (Watts, John D. W. Isaiah 1-33, [Waco, Texas: Word Books, 1985], 107).

Some have tried to suggest that the flies represent the armies of Egypt. This seems unlikely, however, since the invasion by the latter never really occurred.

19 And they shall come, and shall rest all of them in the desolate valleys, and in the holes of the rocks, and upon all thorns, and upon all bushes.

verse 19 Just as the bee and the fly are able to penetrate every area of the valleys, rocks, thorns, and bushes, so too would the Assyrian soldiers penetrate every area of the kingdom of Judah. No part of the land will be free of enemy occupation.

20 In the same day shall the Lord shave with a razor that is hired, by them beyond the river, by the king of Assyria, the head, and the hair of the feet; and it shall also consume the beard.

verse 20 After Isaiah prophesied to Ahaz, Ahaz summarily rejected Isaiah's words. Ahaz then went straight to the temple, stripped off all its precious ornaments, and sent them to the king of Assyria as a bribe to induce him to immediately attack Syria and Israel before they attacked Judah.

“shall the Lord shave with a razor that is hired” A hired foreign mercenary will destroy the people. Isaiah continued prophesying: The “hired gun” (or in this case the “hired razor”), Assyria, will one day turn on him who hired it. Verse 20 is more smoothly translated: “In that day the Lord will use a razor hired from beyond the river [Euphrates]—the king of Assyria—to shave your head and the hair of your legs, and to take off your beards also” (NIV). The shaving of the head, feet, and face symbolizes the complete conquest of the people and the land.

The Assyrians cut off all the hair from their captives for three reasons: humiliation, sanitation (especially while traveling under crude conditions to Assyria), and separation. If any slaves escaped while being moved from their home land, they could not blend in with other peoples since their hairless state would betray them. Thus they could be quickly recaptured.

It is interesting to note that Isaiah occasionally, as in this verse, uses the metaphor of sea and river to denote an evil power. This may have originated in ancient Near Eastern mythology wherein the terms sea and river denote the evil powers which the god Baal must overcome before he assumes the throne of El, the father god. A few other passages in Isaiah associate the arch tyrant with sea or river (see also 2 Nephi 15:30; 18:7).

21 And it shall come to pass in that day, a man shall nourish a young cow and two sheep;

22 And it shall come to pass, for the abundance of milk they shall give he shall eat butter; for butter and honey shall every one eat that is left in the land.

verses 21-22 People will retain only a fraction of their original herds and flocks, yet the population will be so decimated that even this limited livestock will provide ample milk and curds. Verse 22 is more clearly rendered: “And because of the abundance of the milk they give, he will have curds to eat. All who remain in the land will eat curds and honey” (NIV).

23 And it shall come to pass in that day, every place shall be, where there were a thousand vines at a thousand silverlings, which shall be for briers and thorns.

verse 23 The abundance of honey in the land doubtless results from the large land areas that are left uncultivated and turn to wild flowers, weeds, and other blossom-producing plants. The once valuable and carefully cultivated lands (planted with a thousand vines) will turn to briers and thorns. “Silverlings” are small pieces of silver. The expression “at a thousand silverlings” means worth a thousand silver shekels—very valuable.

24 With arrows and with bows shall men come thither, because all the land shall become briers and thorns.

verse 24 The land will be overrun with “briers and thorns” (a metaphor for desolation), and only hunters will use the land.

25 And all hills that shall be digged with the mattock, there shall not come thither the fear of briers and thorns; but it shall be for the sending forth of oxen, and the treading of lesser cattle.

verse 25 A modern translation is clearer: “As for all the hills once cultivated by the hoe [mattock], you will no longer go there for fear of the briers and thorns; they will become places where cattle are turned loose and where sheep run” (NIV).

2 Nephi Chapter 18

This chapter is a translation of the same materials found in Isaiah chapter 8 of the King James Version of the Bible.

In this chapter, Isaiah presents three symbols of Jesus Christ. They are water (verse 6), a temple (verse 14), and light (verses 17-22). See the verse commentary for a further elucidation of these symbolisms.

The prophecies in this chapter, unlike many of Isaiah's other prophecies in previously quoted chapters, seem to apply largely to the time of Isaiah. They are still of value to us as we may observe how the Lord deals with his people when they are disobedient.

1 Moreover, the word of the Lord said unto me: Take thee a great roll, and write in it with a man's pen, concerning Maher-shalal-hash-baz.

verse 1 A "great roll" is either a scroll, roll, or tablet, perhaps a wooden writing tablet with a wax writing surface. The Lord said to Isaiah, "Take a large scroll and write on it with an ordinary pen: Maher-shalal-hash-baz which means "Quick to the plunder, swift to the spoil." Spoil is riches taken in war, booty. This large scroll was intended for public display and was to serve as a prophecy and a warning.

Keep in mind the setting of this incident: King Ahaz, against Isaiah's advice, had just appealed to Assyria for help against the combined armies of Samaria and Syria. Isaiah had warned him not to form an alliance with Assyria, but rather to trust only in the Lord. Additionally, the northern Kingdom of Israel had sunk to an advanced state of disobedience and apostasy. This message, then, recorded on a scroll was a prophecy of the dire consequences of disobeying the Lord's counsel. Once written on a large parchment, this message was to be carried to the people to warn that an Assyrian attack was imminent. It is an inspired message of judgment and condemnation.

The name on this large scroll was to serve as a sign of the great quickness ("quick" and "swift") with which Assyria would plunder Israel. The message was doubtless delivered to the people both in Judah and Israel, as Isaiah was the Lord's mouthpiece for both groups. The warning was intended for both nations.

2 And I took unto me faithful witnesses to record, Uriah the priest, and Zechariah the son of Jeberechiah.

verse 2 Isaiah called in two reliable witnesses to witness the recording of the prophecy. Two witnesses were required by the law of Moses (Deuteronomy 17:6; 19:15). Uriah was a well-known figure who worked as a priest in the Jerusalem temple (2 Kings 16:10-16). Little is known of Zechariah other than that he was the son of Jeberechiah and was considered to be a faithful witness. He may have been the same Zechariah who was King Ahaz's father-in-law (2 Kings 18:2).

3 And I went unto the prophetess; and she conceived and bare a son. Then said the Lord to me: Call his name, Maher-shalal-hash-baz.

verse 3 The "prophetess" is Isaiah's wife. It has been suggested that she was referred to as the "prophetess" because she was the bearer of the Lord's word, incarnate in her son. That is, the name of her son became a great prophecy (Motyer, J. Alec, Prophecy of Isaiah: An Introduction and Commentary, Downer's Grove, Illinois: InterVarsity, 1993, 90). Or, the title may suggest that she, like her husband, enjoyed the spiritual gift of prophecy. The same title is given to Miriam (Exodus 15:20), Deborah (Judges 4:4), and Huldah (2 Kings 22:14).

4 For behold, the child shall not have knowledge to cry, My father, and my mother, before the riches of Damascus and the spoil of Samaria shall be taken away before the king of Assyria.

verse 3-4 Isaiah gave his second son this inspired message as his name. Again, the interpretation of this name is "Quick to the plunder, swift to the spoil." See the commentary for verse 1 for an explanation of this peculiar name. Isaiah then prophesied that even before his son was old enough to know how to say, "My father" or "my mother," (within two or three years) both Syria and the Northern kingdom of Israel would be carried off by Assyria. This prophecy began to be fulfilled in 734-732 BC when Tiglath-Pileser III, king of Assyria, captured both lands and plundered their riches. Syria never recovered. Samaria did recover but was conquered again between 732 and 722 BC.

5 The Lord spake also unto me again, saying:

verse 6 In the following verse the symbol of water is used by Isaiah to represent Jesus. Jesus is as essential to our spiritual salvation as water is to our physical salvation. Without water we will die physically, and without Jesus we will die spiritually. In scripture the image of waters is often symbolic of Jesus. He is the "fountain of all righteousness" (Ether 12:28; 8:26; 1 Nephi 2:9). He cleanses the righteous who enter the waters of baptism. He also invites us to drink from the waters of salvation, which forever quench the thirst of those who partake.

6 Forasmuch as this people refuseth the waters of Shiloah that go softly, and rejoice in Rezin and Remaliah's son; verses 5-6 "waters of Shiloah that go softly" Shiloah was a conduit that was part of the elaborate water system of Jerusalem. It is not certain where it was. Here it is a metaphor of peace and serenity representing trust in the Lord. The water came out of the perennial Gihon spring in the Kidron Valley east of the city wall. King Hezekiah, the son of Ahaz, will soon build a tunnel to bring the water inside the city wall. This cool gentle flow supplied more than enough water for the city of Jerusalem.

The “waters of Shiloah” represent the tender reliable care the Lord provides to his chosen people through the gentle promptings of the Holy Ghost. The Israelites, including those of the northern kingdom, had rejected the word of the Lord given them through Isaiah and had instead embraced the apostate leadership of Pekah, the son of Remaliah and Rezin the king of Syria.

7 Now therefore, behold, the Lord bringeth up upon them the waters of the river, strong and many, even the king of Assyria and all his glory; and he shall come up over all his channels, and go over all his banks.

verse 7 “the waters of the river” The river spoken of here is the great Euphrates that flowed through Assyria. In contrast to verse 6 wherein the “waters of Shiloah” represent the Savior and his gentle ministrations, the waters of the Euphrates are dangerous and destructive. The Euphrates was a great river that commonly flooded out of control. The waters of Shiloah bring life to those who drink them. The Euphrates brings death to those who are swept up in its flood. The waters of the Euphrates represent the king of Assyria. Inasmuch as the inhabitants of Israel had rejected Jesus, the waters of Shiloah, the Lord set upon them the king of Assyria, the strong and mighty waters of the river that would overflow its banks and cover the entire land with its destruction.

8 And he shall pass through Judah; he shall overflow and go over, he shall reach even to the neck; and the stretching out of his wings shall fill the breadth of thy land, O Immanuel.

verse 8 The completion of the fulfillment of this prophecy began between 732 and 722 BC when Shalmaneser or perhaps his son Sargon II conquered Syria and the northern kingdom.

An interesting note is that Ahaz’s son Hezekiah, a righteous king of Judah, later revolted against Assyria by refusing to send tribute. Assyria retaliated in 701 B.C. and destroyed many of the cities of Judah. Although Assyria was thwarted from crushing Judah’s head, it did besiege Jerusalem “even to the neck.” Jerusalem, therefore, was miraculously preserved at that time (Isaiah 36-37).

“stretching out of his wings” Now we see a change of metaphor. The Assyrian, like a huge bird of prey, overshadows the whole land, ready to pounce.

“O Immanuel” Isaiah concludes his warning to Israel by warning in turn those nations which rise against Judah. He says, referring to the nation of Judah, “God is with us!”

verse 9-10 Isaiah continues his warning to those nations anticipating the overthrow of Judah: His meaning is: If you dare do battle with Judah, it will mean your own eventual overthrow. This warning may have been directed to the alliance between Syria and the northern kingdom.

9 Associate yourselves, O ye people, and ye shall be broken in pieces; and give ear all ye of far countries; gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces; gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces.

verse 9 An alternate translation is: Form alliances (“associate yourselves”) to do battle with Judah, and you shall be shattered. Listen, all you distant lands. Arm yourselves and prepare for battle (“gird yourselves”), and you shall be shattered. Arm yourselves and prepare for battle, and be shattered.

“gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces” The twice-repeated phrase is probably the result of a scribal error, since this repetition is not found in the Isaiah Scroll of the Dead Sea Scrolls (Donald W. Parry, Jay A. Parry, Tina M. Peterson, Understanding Isaiah, [Deseret Book: Salt Lake City, Utah], 85).

10 Take counsel together, and it shall come to naught; speak the word, and it shall not stand; for God is with us.

verse 10 “Naught” (pronounced “not”) means nothing. Plot your strategy, and it will be thwarted. Propose your plan, but it will not stand, for God is with us.

Note that he again concludes verse 10 with the same warning with which he concluded verse 8: “for God is with us!” He may have reference to the sign prophesied in verses 14 and 15.

11 For the Lord spake thus to me with a strong hand, and instructed me that I should not walk in the way of this people, saying:

verse 11 The Lord sternly and powerfully (“with a strong hand”) warned Isaiah not to fear the people or cater to them by believing what they believe and by teaching what they want to hear.

12 Say ye not, A confederacy, to all to whom this people shall say, A confederacy; neither fear ye their fear, nor be afraid.

verse 12 Do not agree with the people when they are wrong. For example, in the present political situation, don’t over emphasize the threat posed by the conspiracy or confederacy which Israel and Syria have formed against Judah, and thus don’t speak for an alliance with Assyria just because that is the popular idea. Do not fear what they fear. Rather, trust in the Lord.

verses 13-14 In the following two verses, the Savior is represented by the symbol of a building, a temple. He is our cornerstone, our sure foundation.

13 Sanctify the Lord of Hosts himself, and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread.

verse 13 “Sanctify the Lord of Hosts himself” The literal translation from the Hebrew reads, “make him a temple, the Lord of Hosts,” meaning let the Lord be your temple, your place of holiness. The same idea is contained in the following verse in the phrase “And he shall be for a sanctuary.” Peter and Nephi used similar language: “But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts” (1 Peter 3:15) and “they shall sanctify my name, and sanctify the Holy One of Jacob” (2 Nephi 27:34).

“let him be your fear” Be reverent and humble before God. Fear only him. To fear the Lord is to honor, revere, trust, and obey him. Only he is to be regarded as holy. Only he is to be feared or revered. The noun “dread” means the object of fear mixed with reverence or awe.

14 And he shall be for a sanctuary; but for a stone of stumbling, and for a rock of offense to both the houses of Israel, for a gin and a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

15 And many among them shall stumble and fall, and be broken, and be snared, and be taken.

verse 14-15 To be snared is to be entangled; to be brought into unexpected evil, perplexity, or danger.

“both the houses of Israel” This phrase refers to both of the kingdoms of the house of Israel—Israel and Judah. To both of these the Lord will be a sanctuary, a temple, a place of refuge and protection. But he and his teachings will also be a “stone of stumbling,” “a rock of offense” that causes unbelieving Israelites to stumble and a rock that makes them fall. For the people of Jerusalem, he will be a “gin”—a trap or a snare.

16 Bind up the testimony, seal the law among my disciples.

verse 16 The Lord commands Isaiah to record, tie up with a strip of leather or a cord, and seal the manuscript containing his testimony with wax (“bind up” and “seal”) as a symbol that the prophecies and testimonies are complete. Thus, they may stand (with the testimonies of the other prophets—the combination forming “the law”) as a permanent witness against the people.

A divine sequence is illustrated here. The Lord’s people must first receive the law by covenant. Then they warn the world’s inhabitants of God’s coming judgments. After they have testified to and warned the nations, they will figuratively “bind,” “tie up,” or “shut up” their testimonies and “affix a seal” to the law of God. Finally the judgments of God will come (see D&C 88:84; 109:38, 46; 133:72) (TPJS, 92).

verses 17-22 These verses contain the subtle imagery of light and darkness. As we walk through mortality, we pass through shadow and darkness. We must come to yearn for and search for and recognize the light which is symbolic of the Savior (see also 2 Nephi 19:2).

17 And I will wait upon the Lord, that hideth his face from the house of Jacob, and I will look for him.

verse 17 To “wait upon the Lord” is to hope for and anticipate expected blessings. The phrase implies a significant element of patience and long suffering. Isaiah will wait patiently for the Lord’s will to be revealed and for his promises to be fulfilled even when the Lord chooses to remain silent (“hideth his face”) for the time being because of Israel’s intransigence.

“I will look for him” The literal translation reads, “I will hope for him” (Jacob 4:4).

18 Behold, I and the children whom the Lord hath given me are for signs and for wonders in Israel from the Lord of Hosts, which dwelleth in Mount Zion.

verse 18 Isaiah identifies his own symbolic name and that of his two sons as special signs given to the people by the Lord. Isaiah means “Jehovah is salvation.” The names of his two sons, Shear-jashub and Maher-shalal-hash-baz mean, respectively, “the remnant shall return” and “quick to the plunder, swift to the spoil.” For a discussion of the significance of the name Shear-jashub, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 16:3, 13. For a discussion of the meaning of the name Maher-shalal-hash-baz, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 18:1.

“Mount Zion” In almost a mythical sense, the Lord was said by the ancient Hebrews to dwell on Mount Zion. “Mount Zion” probably refers to the top of Mount Moriah in Jerusalem where the ancient temples of Solomon, Zerubbabel, and Herod were built.

19 And when they shall say unto you: Seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep and mutter—should not a people seek unto their God for the living to hear from the dead?

verse 19 “them that have familiar spirits” These are sorcerers or mediums who commune with the dead by witchcraft.

“wizards that peep and mutter” These are also sorcerers or mediums.

20 To the law and to the testimony; and if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.

verse 19-20 A clearer translation: You have been advised to consult with mediums and spiritualists. Wouldn't it be better to consult with God? How else might the living expect to hear from the dead? The diviner who does not speak according "to the law" [the discourses of Moses, the scriptures] and "to the testimony" [the scriptural witnesses of the prophets] is not of God.

verses 21-22 Again, referring to the diviner or false prophet, Isaiah observes: Displaced and hungry, they will pass through (roam) the land. When they become famished they will become enraged and look upward and curse God. Then they will look earthward and see only distress, gloom, and darkness.

21 And they shall pass through it hardly bestead and hungry; and it shall come to pass that when they shall be hungry, they shall fret themselves, and curse their king and their God, and look upward.

verse 21 "hardly bestead" Hard pressed, distressed, perplexed, beset by troubles or enemies, in a plight.

"they shall fret themselves" They shall worry.

22 And they shall look unto the earth and behold trouble, and darkness, dimness of anguish, and shall be driven to darkness.

It would seem that Nephi's inclusion of this prophecy, which pertains largely to the times of the prophet Isaiah, is for us today a call to faith. There can be no salvation in foreign alliances, rather our hope must rest in the assurance that our Savior stands at our side as we remain true to the principles of his gospel.

2 Nephi Chapter 19

In chapters 19 and 20, the historical setting still involves the Assyrian conflict of 736 to 701 BC. For a review of these events, see the supplementary article, The Historical Setting of the Book of Isaiah. By the time chapter 19 begins, Ahaz has ignored Isaiah's warning not to form an alliance with Assyria, and the confederation between Judah and Assyria is an accomplished fact. In these chapters, Isaiah warns specifically of the impending captivity of the northern ten tribes, and he prophesies also of a later Assyrian attack upon the southern kingdom. This latter siege did occur under the leadership of the Assyrian Sennacherib.

The Immanuel prophecy is further elaborated in chapter 19 as Isaiah prophesies of a "new light" and a new leader for Israel. Again, the old question of what time period Isaiah had in mind is raised. Was he foretelling a new leader to appear in his own time—perhaps young King Hezekiah—or was he prophesying of the Savior's birth some 700 years hence. If Isaiah thought his prophesying applied to his own time, it seems probable that the giver of the revelation had in mind a dual meaning, as any Immanuel of his own day was surely only a type and a foreshadowing of the deliverer to come in the meridian of time.

Chapter 19 is a translation of the same materials that are contained in Isaiah chapter 9 of the King James Version of the Bible. It may be outlined as follows: Verses 1-7 are a continuation of the messianic prophecy in chapter 18. Verses 8-21 consist of a prophecy of judgment against the northern kingdom of Israel. This judgment was, of course, fulfilled by the Assyrian conquest and exile between 732 and 722 BC.

1 Nevertheless, the dimness shall not be such as was in her vexation, when at first he lightly afflicted the land of Zebulun, and the land of Naphtali, and afterwards did more grievously afflict by the way of the Red Sea beyond Jordan in Galilee of the nations.

verse 1 "Nevertheless, the dimness shall not be such as was in her vexation, when at first he lightly afflicted the land of Zebulun, and the land of Naphtali" The word "nevertheless" links this verse with the prophecies in chapter 18. In this phrase, Isaiah refers to two separate time periods in Israel's history: a former darker period and a later time of relative light.

The former time is likely the gloomy period of Isaiah's own life ("in her vexation," during her great trouble or period of distress) when the Assyrians were afflicting (albeit relatively "lightly") the Israelites particularly the northern kingdom of Israel and especially those living in two lands located to the west and southwest of the Sea of Galilee, Zebulun and Naphtali (see the illustration, Territories of the Tribes). It is in these lands where Jesus will spend most of his mortal ministry. These lands were occupied by the first major tribes to be later crushed and deported to Assyria.

The latter time period (when “the dimness shall not be such as was in her vexation”) probably refers to the time of Christ’s mortal ministry which was a time of blessings and light. Matthew noted that during his time Jesus dwelt in Capernaum, a city that was located “in the borders of Zabulon and Nephthalim,” as a fulfillment of this prophecy (Matthew 4:13-16).

The New International Version of the Bible renders this phrase: “There will be no more gloom for those who were in distress.”

There are other possibilities for the identity of the former dark period and the later time of light. These include: (1) The darkness is Assyria and the light is King Hezekiah who was victorious over Assyria. (2) The darkness may represent Israel’s wickedness and apostasy, and the light symbolizes the dramatic religious reform that took place after Ahaz’s death under the leadership of both Hezekiah and Isaiah. (3) The dark, again, is wickedness and apostasy, and the light is the ministry of Jesus Christ (see Matthew 4:12-16). (4) Even a latter-day setting may be applicable. The darkness is the time of great destruction before the Savior’s second coming. The light is the Millennium when Christ shall reign personally upon the earth.

As the following verses unfold, note how all five interpretations might apply.

“Nevertheless, the dimness shall not be such as was in her vexation” Here Isaiah refers to Israel and says that in the later time period there will be no gloom for “her” (Israel) to compare to that which afflicted her in the former time. While in the former time (Isaiah’s day) Israel was afflicted by Assyria, Isaiah promises that in the latter time period Israel will know no such gloom.

“and afterwards did more grievously afflict by the way of the Red Sea beyond Jordan in Galilee of the nations” This phrase suggests that at some unspecified later time, God will “more grievously afflict” Israel. This is confusing since the first phrase of the verse promises a gloomy former time and a less gloomy later time. The Hebrew verb which is here translated “more grievously afflict” is kaved which literally means “make heavy.” Translators differ as to the meaning of this verb in the context of this verse. It would seem that a more plausible translation is one that is used in more modern translations of the Bible. These contain the idea that the Lord will “make glorious” (Revised Standard Version) or “exalt” (Avraham Gileadi) Israel in the later time period. These modern translations are more consistent with the next verse and also more compatible with the gospel writer’s interpretation of the verse (Matthew 4:12-16).

In the later time period, where is this “brighter day” supposed to begin? The King James Version of Isaiah 9:1 indicates that it will occur “by way of the sea, beyond Jordan in Galilee of the nations.” This might be more clearly rendered “on the sea route by the Jordan in the Galilee.” Matthew felt that this phrase referred to Capernaum, the town on the northern shore of the Sea of Galilee (Matthew 4:13-16). In these verses, Matthew presents the fulfillment of the prophecy found in Isaiah 9:1-2. Matthew felt that the cause of the happier time was Jesus Christ's moving to Capernaum to begin his ministry (Matthew 4:13-16).

The inclusion on the brass plates version of the adjective "Red" in this verse—"by way of the Red Sea" is confusing. Perhaps Isaiah had in mind a broader land area.

2 The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light; they that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined.

verse 2 Keep in mind that Isaiah never specifically spells out the times of the former (when "the people . . . walked in darkness" and when "they . . . dwell in the land of the shadow of death") and later (when "the people . . . have seen a great light" and when "upon them hath the light shined") time periods. In your consideration of the next few verses, keep in mind the specific possibilities for these periods discussed in the commentary for verse 1.

Here Isaiah further describes the contrast between these two time periods. In the former time the people "walked in darkness" and "[dwelt] in the land of the shadow of death." The land of the shadow of death is a land peopled by those who do not know Jesus Christ and his gospel; therefore, they walk in darkness. These phrases describe a people in a condition of apostasy and captivity. In the later period, they "have seen a great light" (they have heard of Christ), and "upon them hath the light shined." Whether the context is spiritual or political or personal or social is not specified (cf. John 1:5).

If the later time period was indeed to be in Isaiah's future, which seems likely, note that in this verse Isaiah refers to it as if it had already happened ("have seen a great light" and "upon them hath the light shined"). This is common verb usage among Hebrew prophets I have often referred to—the "prophetic perfect" verb tense.

3 Thou hast multiplied the nation, and increased the joy—they joy before thee according to the joy in harvest, and as men rejoice when they divide the spoil.

verse 3 Isaiah is still referring to the later time period spoken of in verses 1 and 2 when the people will experience great joy and great light. A proper interpretation of this verse and the verses that follow depends to some extent upon which specific time and place Isaiah had in mind for this future blessed period. Again, the possibilities are discussed in the commentary for verse 1 in this chapter. If he is referring to Hezekiah, then this verse describes the Israelites' joy at their deliverance from Assyria. If he is describing a righteous people fighting against wickedness, then the verse describes their joy as they find success. If Isaiah is prophesying of Jesus Christ, then this verse describes his many followers rejoicing over the spiritual blessings he will provide.

“Thou hast multiplied the nation” This phrase seems to be connected to the Abrahamic covenant, wherein the righteous were promised a great multiplication of their posterity (Abraham 3:14; cf. Isaiah 26:15; Nehemiah 9:23).

Isaiah’s analogy illustrating the extent of the people’s joy in this later time period might cause you to raise an eyebrow. They will be as happy as people are at harvest time or as happy as men are when they are dividing the spoils of battle—the territory or goods taken from a defeated foe. Since this later time period is apparently a time of righteous rejoicing, perhaps Isaiah should have reconsidered this latter analogy.

verses 4-7 These verses explain three reasons why the people’s joy shall be increased in this later time period. The first (verse 4) is that the Lord has relieved Israel of its yoke of oppression. The second (verse 5) is that the tools of war shall be destroyed or burned and war will be no more. The third (verses 6-7) is that a child will be born who will establish his righteous government and establish peace among the nations.

4 For thou hast broken the yoke of his burden, and the staff of his shoulder, the rod of his oppressor.

verse 4 The “his’s” in this verse refer to Israel. A “yoke,” of course, is a device to enable one to carry a heavy burden. These burdens might also be carried across one’s shoulders with a “staff.” To brake the yoke or the staff is to relieve Israel of “his” problems. The “staff of his shoulder” refers to a taskmaster’s staff used to smite slaves.” It is a symbol of oppression. The “rod of his oppressor” is bondage.

Depending, again, on Isaiah’s intent, this verse describes the defeat of the Assyrians, the defeat of wickedness, or the victories which Jesus’s ministry will bring. Perhaps most aptly it describes the destruction of the wicked in the latter days that the commencement of the Savior’s earthly reign during the Millennium.

5 For every battle of the warrior is with confused noise, and garments rolled in blood; but this shall be with burning and fuel of fire.

verse 5 The Revised Standard Version of the Bible renders the verse: “For every boot of the tramping warrior in battle tumult and every garment rolled in blood [or stained with blood] will be burned as fuel for the fire.”

Boots, garments, weapons, chariots, and other items used during a holy war were not to become part of the booty or spoil of the victors. Such property was under a ban and had to be burned with fire (Joshua 7:23-26; 11:6, 9; Psalm 46:9; Ezekiel 39:9-10). The specific application of this verse may be something like: The tools of the nations’ armies will burn when the Messiah comes to rule. Symbolically and prophetically, the tools of war may refer to all unclean and corruptible things that will be burned with fire at Jesus’s glorious second coming (3 Nephi 25:1; D&C 64:23-24).

6 For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called, Wonderful, Counselor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace.

verse 6 “For” This is a transitional word that means because. It connects the preceding verses to the idea that follows. The joy of the nation has increased, the yoke of the people has been lifted, and oppression and warfare have been removed because Jesus has become the king and now reigns.

“unto us” Unto the house of Israel.

The phrase “unto us a child is born” is actually more accurately translated from the Hebrew “a child has been born to us.” Here is yet another use of the prophetic perfect verb tense.

Clearly the verse refers to a messianic figure, a deliverer. As has been discussed earlier, some scholars believe that the leader being promised in this verse was Hezekiah. Indeed, Hezekiah was a righteous king and helped to bring Judah to a higher spiritual plane. He also brought some measure of peace to the land. It seems almost certain, however, that if Isaiah was writing of Hezekiah, then he viewed him as a “type” of the future Messiah—a symbol of Jesus Christ.

This verse describes some of the titles and roles of the deliverer. While some might apply to Hezekiah, they seem much more appropriately applicable to the Savior.

The titles “child” and “son” refer to his divine parentage. Not only was he the “only begotten” that is, the only man born into mortality as the product of a mortal mother (Mary) and an immortal father—God the Father, but he is also the “Firstborn” that is, the first intelligence in the premortal world to be clothed in a body of spirit by the process of divine procreation.

“the government shall be upon his shoulder” This phrase refers to the vesting right of a king who, during his coronation, has the robe of authority placed upon his shoulders.

“Wonderful, Counselor” Even though a comma is placed between these two titles, the Hebrew reading apparently dictates that these two names be used together as “Wonderful Counselor” without the comma. “Wonderful” therefore is an adjective modifying “Counselor” and not a separate title on its own. A counselor is an advocate, one who argues cases in court. Jesus is our advocate with the Father (John 17:3; 3 Nephi 19:19-29).

“Mighty God” “Mighty” suggests warrior and refers to his role in overcoming the nations and all forms of oppression.

“Everlasting Father” We know that Jesus Christ did apply the titles “Son” and “Father” to himself. He specifically said to the brother of Jared: “Behold, I am Jesus Christ. I am the Father and the Son” (Ether 3:14).

On June 30, 1916, the First Presidency published “The Father and the Son: A Doctrinal Exposition by the First Presidency and the Twelve” (see Talmage, Articles of Faith, 465-73). In this exposition, they acknowledge that Christ is not our literal parent, but that in scripture he is referred to as our “Father” for three of reasons. These include:

1. He is our Father since he is the Creator. “That Jesus Christ, whom we also know as Jehovah, was the executive of the Father, Elohim, in the work of creation is set forth in the book Jesus the Christ, chapter 4. Jesus Christ, being the Creator, is consistently called the Father of heaven and earth in the sense explained above; and since His creations are of eternal quality. He is very properly called the Eternal Father of heaven and earth” (Ibid).

2. Jesus is the “Father” of those who abide in his gospel and thereby become heirs of eternal life. In a revelation given through Joseph the Prophet to Emma Smith the Lord Jesus addressed the Emma as “my daughter,” and said: “for verily I say unto you, all those who receive my gospel are sons and daughters in my kingdom” (D&C 25:1). In many instances the Lord has addressed men as his sons (D&C 9:1; 34:3; 121:7).

3. Jesus is the “Father” by divine investiture of authority. In all His dealings with the human family Jesus represents the Father and possesses the Father’s full power and authority. To the Jews he said: “I and my Father are one” (John 10:30; see also 14:10; 17:11, 22). Also, he said, “I am come in my Father’s name” (John 5:43; see also 10:25). The same truth was declared by Christ himself to the Nephites (see 3 Nephi 11:27; compare 9:15; 19:23; 28:10), and has been reaffirmed by revelation in our present dispensation (D&C 50:43). This is true of Jesus and the Father in premortal life as well as during and after the Savior’s mortal sojourn. In other words, God the Father and his firstborn spirit Son, whether acting as the premortal Jehovah or later as the resurrected Lord, were so unified in mind and will that what one thought, said, and did, the other one thought, said, and did—exactly.

It wasn’t simply exalted status, superior knowledge, or intense power and influence that made Jesus God in our premortal existence. If that were so, then Lucifer’s claim to that very position (Moses 4:1-2; Abraham 3:27-28) would have had some validity, for he possessed a lofty and exalted position among the Father’s spirit children (D&C 76:25). Another ingredient was requisite for Godhood. One had to be endowed and invested—indeed, ordained—with the power and authority to speak and act as God the Father. To speak and act in the place of God the Father was not an honor that could be arrogated unto oneself, as the story of Satan’s attempts shows us.

President Joseph Fielding Smith taught the following:

All revelation since the fall has come through Jesus Christ, who is the Jehovah of the Old Testament. In all of the scriptures, where God is mentioned and where he has appeared, it was Jehovah who talked with Abraham, with Noah, Enoch, Moses, and all the prophets. He is the God of Israel, the Holy One of Israel; the one who led that nation out of Egyptian bondage, and who gave and fulfilled the Law of Moses. The Father [Elohim] has never dealt with man directly and personally since the fall, and he has never appeared except to introduce and bear record of the Son (Doctrines of Salvation, 1:27).

We may add yet a fourth reason for referring to Jesus Christ as the Father. In his role of Jehovah, God of the Old Testament, he became known as the God or Father of Heaven.

“Prince of Peace” Christ is part of God’s royal family. He is a prince who shares the throne with the Father. He eliminates war and contention and reigns over a peaceful kingdom.

7 Of the increase of government and peace there is no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth, even forever. The zeal of the Lord of Hosts will perform this.

verse 7 Here Isaiah describes the duration of the reign of the deliverer of Israel. He will reign eternally.

“Of the increase of government and peace there is no end” This new sovereign government and the peace which accompanies it shall have no end.

“upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth, even forever” On the throne and over David’s kingdom (the house of Israel), his rule—that of the deliverer—will be organized with a terrestrial (during the Millennium) and later a celestial order (“to order it”) and established by virtue of justice and righteousness forever.

“The zeal of the Lord of Hosts will perform this.” This phrase, also found in 2 Kings 19:31 and in Isaiah 37:32, is a promise that the Lord will use his strength to fulfill his word.

8 The Lord sent his word unto Jacob and it hath lighted upon Israel.

verse 8 Isaiah’s attention is now turned to the rebellious northern kingdom with its dominant tribe of Ephraim and its capital in Samaria. It also has application to the covenant people of our day.

“The Lord sent his word unto Jacob and it hath lighted upon Israel.” The Lord sent his warnings to “Jacob” (the house of Israel), particularly to “Israel” (the northern Kingdom of Israel). The Lord has begun to send his judgments against the northern kingdom, and those judgments will eventually punish the entire kingdom of Israel if they fail to repent.

The initial part of the Assyrian invasion has already occurred with the deportation of major portions of the northernmost Israelite tribes, Zebulun and Naphtali (again, see the illustration, Territories of the Tribes). The kingdom of Israel has had a taste of the Lord's judgment but apparently has not learned or profited from it.

In the next several verses, the Lord issues four specific warnings. He warns against pride (verses 9-12); against the wickedness of the leaders (verses 13-17); against selfishness and the lack of love and kindness (verses 18-21); and against neglecting the poor and needy—social injustice (2 Nephi 20:1-4). Each of these specific warnings is part of a single prophecy but is divided structurally with an identical poetic refrain at the end of each section: "For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still." This prophecy has a dual fulfillment: first, when the ancient kingdom of Israel was destroyed, and second, when the world will be destroyed at the time of the second coming of Christ.

9 And all the people shall know, even Ephraim and the inhabitants of Samaria, that say in the pride and stoutness of heart:

verse 9 The terms "Ephraim" and "Samaria" are used by Isaiah to refer to Israel's Northern Kingdom. The dominant tribe is Ephraim, and the capital city is Samaria.

"stoutness of heart" Pride or haughtiness. The opposite is "a broken heart and a contrite spirit" (3 Nephi 9:20).

10 The bricks are fallen down, but we will build with hewn stones; the sycamores are cut down, but we will change them into cedars.

verses 9-10 "Hewn stones" are stones shaped with tools. "Sycamores" are fig trees. The people are bragging.

One might expect those of the northern kingdom ("Ephraim and the inhabitants of Samaria") to learn important lessons from the destruction occurring around them. These lessons might include humility, appropriate fear, and a desire to repent. Instead, these northern Israelites betray pride and arrogance of heart by boasting that they will rebuild a civilization more glorious and luxurious than the one that is beginning to be destroyed.

11 Therefore the Lord shall set up the adversaries of Rezin against him, and join his enemies together; verse 11 Keep in mind that at this time, Rezin was the king of Syria residing in Damascus. Isaiah outlines the consequences of Israel's pride. First, Rezin's enemy, Assyria, would overthrow Syria. Assyria would then unite the conquered Syrians with the conquered Philistines. The Philistines were enemies of Israel who lived in the south of Palestine near the Mediterranean coast. At this time in history, the Philistines had been subdued by Assyria. Then these united enemies of Israel will turn against Israel.

The antecedent of “him” and “his” in this verse is not clear. It is likely Israel.

12 The Syrians before and the Philistines behind; and they shall devour Israel with open mouth. For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

verse 12 Together the Syrians, Philistines, and Assyrians will sweep into the kingdom of Israel and swallow it up with one gulp. The Syrians are located “before” (in the northeast), and the Philistines are “behind” (in the west).

“they shall devour Israel with open mouth” This phrase is symbolic of the attack of a lion. The prophets often compare warring nations to lions that mangle and destroy. Israel, in this phrase refers not to the entire house of Israel, but to the northern Kingdom of Israel.

“For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.” See the commentary for 2 Nephi 15:25. Some have taught that this sentence teaches the idea that while the Lord’s judgment and punishment still hang over the people, and he is angry about the sins of the people, his hand is always mercifully stretched forth to help them and receive them if they accept him. This teaching probably represents a misunderstanding of this verse.

Within the ancient Israelite and broader ancient Near Eastern context, the true meaning of this phrase seems to be quite the opposite. John Gee, a Latter-day Saint and professional Egyptologist, explained, “The English sentence is constructed to say that in spite of the punishments afflicted (‘for all this’), the punishments do not satisfy the Lord’s anger (‘his anger is not turned away’).” Gee continued, “In other words, to the contrary (‘but’), the hand of the Lord is still ‘stretched out.’” Gee thus concluded, “So a stretched-out hand, by any careful reading of the English, is a hand administering punishment” (John Gee, “A Different Way of Seeing the Hand of the Lord,” Religious Educator 16, no. 2, 2015: 114.), or, at least, threatening or beginning to do so. This is not just a product of the English translation, either. “The Hebrew is also clear on the subject. The idiom is yadô neṭūyâ, which means that the hand is hanging over, threatening or bent. It is thus a threatening gesture” (Ibid.). The two lines form a synonymous parallelism, both stressing the anger of the Lord. Biblical scholar J.J.M. Roberts, explained, “Despite the judgments, Israel had remained adamant in its sinful rebellion, and God’s anger remained unabated. This point is made by the refrain, ‘For all this his anger is not turned away and his hand is stretched out still,’ which is repeated three times . . . each time following an account of judgment” (See the textual arrangement in J.J.M. Roberts, First Isaiah: A Commentary, Hermeneia: A Critical and Historical Commentary on the Bible (Minneapolis, MN: Fortress Press, 2015, 157).

13 For the people turneth not unto him that smiteth them, neither do they seek the Lord of Hosts.

verse 13 Isaiah explains why the Lord allowed the northern kingdom to be overrun: The people did not turn to the Lord, nor did they seek him.

“him that smiteth them” This refers, of course, to the Lord. To “turn” is to repent.

14 Therefore will the Lord cut off from Israel head and tail, branch and rush in one day.

verse 14 “Head” represents the elders and old men of the community, and “tail” symbolizes false prophets (see the following verse). The “branch” is a palm branch, located high up on the tree, representing society’s leaders. “Rush” is a stiff, grass-like plant and represents the common people. Again in this phrase, Israel refers not to the entire house of Israel, but rather to the northern Kingdom of Israel.

“in one day” Quickly.

15 The ancient, he is the head; and the prophet that teacheth lies, he is the tail.

verse 15 The Lord will cause the northern kingdom’s leaders to be carried away captive.

16 For the leaders of this people cause them to err; and they that are led of them are destroyed.

verse 16 The northern kingdom’s leaders are leading them astray, and both the leaders and those who are being led astray shall suffer the consequences.

17 Therefore the Lord shall have no joy in their young men, neither shall have mercy on their fatherless and widows; for every one of them is a hypocrite and an evildoer, and every mouth speaketh folly. For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

verse 17 Virtually all in the northern kingdom are apostate and have incurred the Lord’s wrath, even those whom the Lord ordinarily favors—the youth, the orphans, and the widows. Nearly all of them are hypocrites and evil doers and speak “folly” or foolishness.

“For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still Again, the same two-fold promise found in 2 Nephi 15:25 and 2 Nephi 19:12 is given. For its interpretation see the commentary for 2 Nephi 19:12.

18 For wickedness burneth as the fire; it shall devour the briers and thorns, and shall kindle in the thickets of the forests, and they shall mount up like the lifting up of smoke.

verse 18 All of this wickedness in the northern kingdom will be consumed by the fire and the sword of the Assyrians. The destruction will sweep through the entire land including the forests with their thickets, briars, and thorns. Isaiah compares the wicked to undesirable plants such as briars, thorns, and thickets.

“They shall mount up like the lifting up of smoke” is better translated: “They shall all roll upward in a column of smoke” (Revised Standard Version).

The burning of the wicked here is a type and shadow of the burning that will occur at the Lord’s second coming.

19 Through the wrath of the Lord of Hosts is the land darkened, and the people shall be as the fuel of the fire; no man shall spare his brother.

verse 19 The fire and smoke of the impending destruction will darken the land and the Israelites will be consumed in the fire.

“no man shall spare his brother” Even in the midst of this all-consuming destruction, the people will evidence their self centeredness by turning upon one another rather than looking out for one another.

20 And he shall snatch on the right hand and be hungry; and he shall eat on the left hand and they shall not be satisfied; they shall eat every man the flesh of his own arm—verse 20 In the chaos of destruction there will be a great shortage of food, and the people will go hungry and will “snatch” and steal from one another whatever they can. Yet circumstances are so difficult that even then they will remain hungry even possibly to the point of cannibalism.

21 Manasseh, Ephraim; and Ephraim, Manasseh; they together shall be against Judah. For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

verse 21 Since the northern ten tribes had broken away from Judah in 931 BC, in the north the tribe of Joseph had been the dominant and leading tribe. The expression “Manasseh, Ephraim; and Ephraim, Manasseh” implies that during the coming crisis the tribe of Joseph will be internally divided. Manasseh will fight against Ephraim, and Ephraim will contend against Manasseh. Only their common hatred of Judah will unite them in making war on the southern kingdom.

“For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.” Yet again, Isaiah repeats the two-fold promise found in 2 Nephi 15:25, 2 Nephi 19:12, and 2 Nephi 19:17. For an interpretation, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 19:12.

2 Nephi Chapter 20

This chapter is a translation of the same materials found in Isaiah chapter 10 in the King James Version of the Bible. It may be outlined as follows: Verses 1-11: Because of the sins of Israel, the Lord permits the Assyrian army, the Lord's rod, to war against the apostate Israelites. Verses 12-19: Because of its pride and overzealousness, Assyria will then be destroyed by her enemies. The fire that will destroy Assyria foreshadows the fire that will destroy the wicked at the second coming. Verses 20-27: A remnant of Israel will return to their lands of promise and "unto the mighty God." Verses 28-32: The march of the great Assyrian army southward towards Jerusalem. As the army traveled it sacked and destroyed all towns and villages in its path. Verses 33-34: Jehovah, as the great forester, uses his mighty iron ax to chop down Assyria's armies as they approach Zion.

verses 1-2 Isaiah continues his warnings and exhortations of the northern kingdom. Particularly, he focuses on those leaders who proclaim laws and regulations that oppress the poor and needy.

1 Woe unto them that decree unrighteous decrees, and that write grievousness which they have prescribed;

verse 1 This verse is more clearly translated: "Woe to those who decree iniquitous decrees, and the writers who issue oppressive decrees."

"Wo" is severe distress and anguish resulting from God's judgments.

One of the major themes found in Isaiah's writings is the concept that the covenant people have social and moral obligations. Particularly did he stress the responsibility of society to care for the needs of its less fortunate members, especially the widows and orphans. He condemned the rich who oppressed the poor.

"unrighteous decrees" These are unjust laws which serve the rich and powerful while preying upon the weak, such as the fatherless and the widows.

"write grievousness" To write oppressive laws.

2 To turn away the needy from judgment, and to take away the right from the poor of my people, that widows may be their prey, and that they may rob the fatherless!

verse 2 "Judgment" here means justice.

"To take away right from the poor" means to rob the poor of their rights.

These unrighteous leaders who create unjust laws (verse 1) prey upon the socially deprived, including the needy, the poor, the widows, and the fatherless.

3 And what will ye do in the day of visitation, and in the desolation which shall come from far? to whom will ye flee for help? and where will ye leave your glory?

verse 3 The Lord changes the pronoun from “they” used in verses 1-2 to “ye” referring to the wicked leaders of Samaria. Because of the wickedness of Samaria’s leaders, the Lord, through Isaiah, warns them that in the coming onslaught, they will be left bereft of divine help.

“The day of visitation” and “the desolation which shall come from far” refer to the day of punishment or the coming onslaught against the kingdom of Israel by Assyria. Second meanings for “the day of visitation” and “the desolation which shall come from far” might be the Lord’s second coming and the desolation or destruction that will precede that second coming.

“to whom will ye flee for help?” This is a rhetorical question. A rhetorical question is a question that you ask without expecting an answer. The question might be one that does not have an answer. Or it might also be one that has an obvious answer but you have asked the question to make a point, to persuade or for literary effect. This rhetorical question means that during the day of visitation the wicked will have no one to turn to for help, for they will have rejected God.

“and where will ye leave your glory” This phrase may be restated, “and where will you hide your wealth?” At the day of judgment, one’s riches will be meaningless and will not assist in saving one’s soul.

4 Without me they shall bow down under the prisoners, and they shall fall under the slain. For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

verse 4 “bow down under the prisoners” In the desperation and fear produced by the coming onslaught, some Israelites, having been left bereft of divine help, will try to escape by hiding among their fellow Israelite prisoners, and they will even hide among the slain.

“For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.” Again, the oft-repeated, two-fold promise. See its interpretation in the commentary for 2 Nephi 19:12.

5 O Assyrian, the rod of mine anger, and the staff in their hand is their indignation.

verse 5 The Lord is speaking in verses 5-7. A less confusing translation is, “Ah, Assyria, the rod of my anger, the staff of my fury!” (Revised Standard Version). “O Assyrian” refers to the king of Assyria as well as to his nation. Here the Lord reveals that he has allowed Assyria to become a powerful nation, a “rod” and “staff” that will smite and chasten, so that he might utilize that nation to mete out his judgments upon various deserving nations, especially apostate Israel. But Assyria, her leaders, and her armies will soon be destroyed according to God's plan.

The latter-day application is that Assyria represents the wicked nations of the last days that will worship idols and false gods and goddesses, war against Israel, and eventually be consumed by the Lord's glory and majesty during the second coming.

6 I will send him against a hypocritical nation, and against the people of my wrath will I give him a charge to take the spoil, and to take the prey, and to tread them down like the mire of the streets.

verse 6 The emphasis here is that the Lord is doing the sending. He is allowing Assyria's army to have success as they come against the northern kingdom of Israel to whom the Lord refers as "a hypocritical nation" (because they will not keep their covenants) and "the people of my wrath" (they are to be punished because of their hypocrisy). The "spoil" is the money, land, and other valuable possessions which the victorious Assyrians will take from their victims—their "prey." The Assyrians will stomp or walk upon them ("tread them") in the filth or refuse of the streets ("the mire"). The "spoil" and "prey" also allude to the prophetic name of Isaiah's son, Maher-shalal-hash-baz, which name means Quick to the plunder, swift to the spoil. This suggests that Isaiah's earlier prophecy as communicated in the name of his son finds at least partial fulfillment in Assyria's capturing and plundering of Israel.

verses 7-19 Here Isaiah, in eloquent poetic style, castigates the Assyrian king for failing to realize that only through the Lord's behest has Assyria been allowed to come to power. Because he has attributed his power to his own virtues, Assyria's army will themselves feel the hand of the Lord in punishment.

7 Howbeit he meaneth not so, neither doth his heart think so; but in his heart it is to destroy and cut off nations not a few.

verse 7 "Howbeit he meaneth not so, neither doth his heart think so" However, the Assyrian king does not understand, in his heart and mind, the real perspective of this event as stated in verse 6. He does not comprehend whence his power comes.

"in his heart it is to destroy and cut off nations not a few" He intends to go on destroying several other nations, even the world, for his own purposes, not the Lord's. He means to gain glory and riches for himself.

8 For he saith: Are not my princes altogether kings?

verse In verses 8 and 9, the Assyrian king is the speaker. The Assyrian king asks, "Are not my commanders all 'kings' and deserving of their own conquered lands which they can rule over"? His implication is also, "Am I not the king of kings"?

9 Is not Calno as Carchemish? Is not Hamath as Arpad? Is not Samaria as Damascus?

verse 9 The Assyrian king does not distinguish among his various conquests—he sees no divine purposes. They are all only conquests. Calno, Carchemish, Hamath, and Arpad are Mesopotamian, Syrian, and Israelite cities already captured by Assyria. Is not Samaria, the land of the ten tribes of Israel, just another of my conquests like Damascus in Syria?

10 As my hand hath founded the kingdoms of the idols, and whose graven images did excel them of Jerusalem and of Samaria;

11 Shall I not, as I have done unto Samaria and her idols, so do to Jerusalem and to her idols?

verses 10-11 Now the Lord is speaking. He says, in effect, “I have extended my power even to pagan kingdoms (“kingdoms of the idols” with their “graven images,”—artistic representations of animate creatures such as paintings or statues which serve as idols or objects of worship) whose worship of idols even exceeds that of the apostate Israelites. I have empowered even them so that my purposes might be carried out. As I have allowed Samaria to be destroyed to purge it of its wickedness and apostasy, so will I do one day to Jerusalem.”

“My hand hath founded” might be interpreted, “my power has reached or been extended to.”

“whose graven images did excel them of Jerusalem and of Samaria” The Lord, in order to accomplish his purposes, has even extended his power to pagan countries which worship more idols than do the Israelites. The Lord here condemns Israel for her apostasy—“her idols.”

12 Wherefore it shall come to pass that when the Lord hath performed his whole work upon Mount Zion and upon Jerusalem, I will punish the fruit of the stout heart of the king of Assyria, and the glory of his high looks.

verse 12 After the Lord has allowed Assyria to punish the Israelites including Jerusalem (“Mount Zion” refers to the temple of Jerusalem and the mountain upon which it stood), he will then deal with the king of Assyria who claimed victory due to his own strength and did not rightfully give credit to the Lord. The phrase “stout heart” here means “proud; resolute; obstinate” (Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language).

As was implied in the preceding verse, the Lord states again that Jerusalem will actually be attacked by Assyria as was Samaria. This prophesied invasion took place in 701 BC when the Assyrian commander Sennacherib besieged Judah and Jerusalem. He captured or destroyed many settlements in Judah. Before Jerusalem could be taken, however, the Lord sent a terrible epidemic illness through the Assyrian army camp killing many and causing them to have to beat a hasty retreat.

The Lord will punish the Assyrian king for “the fruit of the stout heart”—his evil works and arrogant boasting—and “the glory of his high looks”—his haughty pride—both of which are demonstrated in verses 13 and 14.

As mentioned in the previous paragraph, partial fulfillment of this promise of punishment came when an “angel of the Lord went out, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians,” destroying 185,000 people while they were besieging Jerusalem in 701 BC (2 Kings 19:35).

13 For he saith: By the strength of my hand and by my wisdom I have done these things; for I am prudent; and I have moved the borders of the people, and have robbed their treasures, and I have put down the inhabitants like a valiant man;

verse 13 The king of Assyria said: “I have been able to conquer because of my own strength.”

“for I am prudent” “I am wise and have good judgment.”

“I have moved the borders of the people” “I have done away with the borders between nations. I have joined their lands with my own kingdom.”

“like a valiant man” Assyria’s king boasts that he has succeeded in robbing them of their properties, goods, and treasures “like the courageous man that I am.”

14 And my hand hath found as a nest the riches of the people; and as one gathereth eggs that are left have I gathered all the earth; and there was none that moved the wing, or opened the mouth, or peeped.

verse 14 The Assyrian king continues saying, “As I raided the ‘hen house,’ no one dared lift a finger to stop me.” He boastfully claims he had gathered the riches of peoples he conquered as one gathers eggs from an abandoned nest.

15 Shall the ax boast itself against him that heweth therewith? Shall the saw magnify itself against him that shaketh it? As if the rod should shake itself against them that lift it up, or as if the staff should lift up itself as if it were no wood!

verse 15 Shall the axe vaunt itself over him who swings it? Shall the saw place itself above him who cuts with it? Just as these questions are silly, it would be just as absurd if the rod should manipulate him who wields it or if the staff should lift itself as though it were not an inanimate object. In other words, the king of Assyria functioned as mere rod and staff in the hand of the Lord to smite the unrighteous deserving, yet he sought to aggrandize himself and to assume the role of world leader on his own supposed merits.

16 Therefore shall the Lord, the Lord of Hosts, send among his fat ones, leanness; and under his glory he shall kindle a burning like the burning of a fire.

verse 16 The specific punishments to be meted out by the Lord to the Assyrian king are spelled out: The Lord will send among his “fat ones” (those with abundance) leanness (poverty and deprivation). He will “send a wasting sickness among his stout warriors” (Revised Standard Version). Perhaps Isaiah is prophesying here of the specific malady which befell the Assyrian army when they laid siege to Jerusalem in 701 BC. See the commentary for verse 12 above.

“under his [the Assyrian king’s] glory he [the Lord] shall kindle a burning like the burning of a fire” The haughty pride of the Assyrian king will be burned up and destroyed.

17 And the light of Israel shall be for a fire, and his Holy One for a flame, and shall burn and shall devour his thorns and his briers in one day;

verse 17 This verse symbolically states that the God of Israel will burn or destroy Assyria. The Lord is “the light of Israel” and Israel’s “Holy One.”

The first two phrases of the first line of this verse state the same idea and are an example of synonymous parallelism wherein the second phrase restates the idea expressed in the first phrase. The idea is that the God of Israel will do the burning, the destroying.

The antecedent of the pronoun “his” in the first line is “Israel.” Thus, the reference is to Israel’s Holy One, or to the God of Israel. The second “his” in the second line of this verse refers, of course, to the Assyrians.

“shall devour his thorns and his briers” In a figurative single day the Lord will destroy Assyria. “Thorns” and “briers” are metaphor for the wicked. The “thorns” and “briers” in this verse and the “forest” and “fruitful field” in the following verse when combined with one another seem to signify the whole of Assyria—complete annihilation—of both “soul and body.”

18 And shall consume the glory of his forest, and of his fruitful field, both soul and body; and they shall be as when a standard-bearer fainteth.

verse 18 The “forest” represents the people, in this case the people of Assyria, and the “field” symbolizes the world. The destruction of the forest and the field signifies the totality of destruction, as does their destruction “both soul and body.”

“they shall be as when a standard-bearer fainteth” In battle the “standard-bearer” was the man who carried the flag which served as a focal point and rallying cry to keep the warriors organized. Without the standard-bearer and his standard, the fighting men were likely to be reduced to a state of ineffective chaos.

19 And the rest of the trees of his forest shall be few, that a child may write them.

verse 19 After the destruction of Assyria, the “trees” of her “forest,” which figuratively represents the number of surviving Assyrians, will be so few that even a child could “write them”—list them or count them. Some time later Assyria was destroyed so completely by Babylon and Persia that Assyrians ceased to be a distinct people.

20 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the remnant of Israel, and such as are escaped of the house of Jacob, shall no more again stay upon him that smote them, but shall stay upon the Lord, the Holy One of Israel, in truth.

verse 20 Here Isaiah again prophesies that scattered Israel will one day return to the Lord and their promised land. The theme of a “remnant” returning is a recurrent theme in Isaiah’s writings. A “remnant” of Israel implies those that are remaining—those that are still inclined to seek out the Lord after the physical and spiritual scattering (apostasy) which will befall the house of Israel.

Isaiah’s “remnant” may be divided into two groups. First, there is the “historical remnant.” These are perhaps the scattered Israelites of ancient Palestine who remained in Assyria or Babylon after the sieges and destructions between 732 and 722 BC and that in 587 BC. Some eventually returned to their lands and to their temple. Second, Isaiah also promises the return of a future righteous remnant. We may refer to this latter group as the “eschatological remnant.” Eschatology (pronounced es-kat-ology) is the study of “last things.” Thus, this remnant will return to the Lord and to Zion in a latter-day setting following the great wars of destruction that will occur before the Lord’s second coming.

“it shall come to pass in that day” What “day” is being referred to here? As discussed in the introduction to 1 Nephi chapter 20, there are only two major gatherings of Israel known to us which followed Isaiah’s day. The first was in 538 B.C. when the Israelites were released from captivity in Babylon by Cyrus the Persian. The only other gathering is now occurring in this final dispensation as missionaries of the Savior’s Kingdom on earth spread the gospel, and those who are converted gather to Zion.

“such as are escaped of the house of Jacob” These are members of the house of Israel who will “survive” the desolation and ruin of the physical and spiritual scatterings of Israel. These are the righteous “remnant” who are inclined to return again to the Lord. You might also want to review the various “scatterings” of Israel discussed in the introduction to 1 Nephi chapter 20. These scatterings will occur between 732 and 722 BC when the northern kingdom of Israel will be captured by Assyria; in 587 BC when the southern kingdom of Judah will be crushed by Babylon; and in AD 70 when the Romans will destroy Jerusalem.

“stay upon him that smote them” “stay upon the Lord” To “stay upon” is to remain faithful to. The righteous remnant of Israelites will not be “converted” to the Assyrian culture and its heathen ways, rather they will remain faithful to the Lord.

21 The remnant shall return, yea, even the remnant of Jacob, unto the mighty God.

verse 21 “The remnant shall return” This phrase recalls Isaiah’s prophecy which he made in naming his son, Shear-jashub, whose name literally means “the remnant shall return.” The word “return” also means “repent.”

Exactly which remnant and precisely when they shall return and repent is not specified in this verse. While certainly a few Israelites taken captive into Assyria between 732 and 722 BC did escape and make their way back to their own land, there was no major gathering of the northern kingdom of Israel once they were taken captive. Isaiah was likely prophesying of a future “remnant” such as those Jews who returned from captivity in Babylon in 538 BC after the defeat of Babylon by Cyrus the Persian or even of the “eschatological remnant” spoken of in the commentary for the preceding verse who will gather to Zion in this final dispensation.

22 For though thy people Israel be as the sand of the sea, yet a remnant of them shall return; the consumption decreed shall overflow with righteousness.

verse 22 Insert the word “only” after “yet” for clarity. Though those born into the house of Israel are as numerous as the sands of the sea, only a relatively small number of them shall return to the Lord.

“the consumption decreed shall overflow with righteousness” Consumption implies massive destruction or annihilation of humanity (see also Isaiah 28:22 and Daniel 9:27). This devastation is decreed by the Lord due to apostasy, but eventually righteousness and restoration shall occur. The prophet Joseph Smith wrote: “The saints have not too much time to save and redeem their dead, and gather together their living relatives, that they may be saved also, before the earth will be smitten, and the consumption decreed falls upon the world” (TPJS, 330).

23 For the Lord God of Hosts shall make a consumption, even determined in all the land.

verse 23 For the Lord will carry out the complete destruction decreed upon the whole land. Again this applies to Assyria and later to Jerusalem (in both 587 B.C. and AD 70) and even later to all the earth in the last day.

24 Therefore, thus saith the Lord God of Hosts: O my people that dwellest in Zion, be not afraid of the Assyrian; he shall smite thee with a rod, and shall lift up his staff against thee, after the manner of Egypt.

verse 24 O people of Zion don’t be afraid of the Assyrians even when they smite you with the rod and lift up their staff against you as did the Egyptians. Isaiah promises Israel that the Lord will eventually relieve them of Assyrian oppression. The concept of Zion is always attached to a promised land, temple worship, and a covenant people who possess pure hearts.

“after the manner of Egypt” While Egypt often verbally threatened the area of Palestine, it never mounted a serious attack.

Assyria and Egypt were two of Israel’s chief enemies in biblical times. They are also symbolic of the worldly powers that will fight against Zion in the last days. Isaiah tells those who dwell in Zion to trust God and be not afraid of the Assyrian, for his power will be temporary and limited. Eventually God will destroy the Assyrian and save the remnant of Israel.

25 For yet a very little while, and the indignation shall cease, and mine anger in their destruction.

verse 25 Israel was scattered because of her transgressions against God. But in due time—“yet a very little while”—the Lord’s anger at the Israelites will cease and his wrath will be directed toward the destruction of Assyria.

26 And the Lord of Hosts shall stir up a scourge for him according to the slaughter of Midian at the rock of Oreb; and as his rod was upon the sea so shall he lift it up after the manner of Egypt.

verse 26 “the Lord of Hosts shall stir up a scourge for him” To “stir up a scourge for him” is to lash him with a whip. After Assyria serves the Lord’s purposes by smiting Israel, he will lash the Assyrians with a whip, meaning he will punish them for their pride and wickedness. The Lord will wield against the Assyrians a scourge as when he smote the Midianites at the rock of Oreb.

“according to the slaughter of Midian at the rock of Oreb” See Judges chapters 6-8 for a description of this event. The ancient Israelites were plagued at harvest time by “camel raids” by the Midianites who came from across the Jordan River to seize the hard-earned farm products of the Israelites, particularly those in the area just west of the Jordan and in the Jezreel Valley. The coming of these raiders was like a plague of locusts. There seemed to be little the Israelites could do to protect themselves against these invasions, so they fled with their produce into caves and mountain hideouts. In this desperate setting, the Lord called into service the Israelite Gideon. With the help of a mere three hundred men, hand picked by the Lord, Gideon led a surprise attack against the Midianite camp at the change of the guard—perhaps 10 PM. Apparently the Midianites were provoked into self slaughter by the confusion produced by the unexpected attack. Gideon then pursued the surviving Midianites, caught them, and slew two Midianite princes “upon the rock Oreb.” By this means did Gideon rid the Israelites permanently of the Midianite camel raids.

“as his rod was upon the sea so shall he lift it up after the manner of Egypt” This refers to the event described in Exodus 14:26-27 when the Egyptians were thwarted in their pursuing of the Israelites by the previously divided Red Sea's closing over them. Moses had used his rod to divide the Red Sea.

27 And it shall come to pass in that day that his burden shall be taken away from off thy shoulder, and his yoke from off thy neck, and the yoke shall be destroyed because of the anointing.

verse 27 “His burden” and “his yoke” refer to the Assyrian oppression of Israel. “Thy shoulder” refers to the shoulder of Israel.

“because of the anointing” This phrase may be a Messianic prophecy of sorts. Jesus Christ is the “Anointed One” meaning that he is the one anointed of the Father to be his personal representative in all things pertaining to this earth. Because of this anointing, the ultimate yokes of damnation, physical death, and spiritual death will be lifted from the shoulder of mankind. Thus the deliverance of Israel from the Assyrians is a type or symbol of deliverance through Jesus Christ, the Anointed One.

verses 28-32 These verses prophesy of the progression of the Assyrian army toward Jerusalem. Many scholars believe that this prophecy was fulfilled when King Sennacherib invaded Judah in 701 BC. This section may also refer to a future campaign against Israel when some of the world's nations war against her. It is quite possible that this prophecy might be fulfilled in the last days.

28 He is come to Aiath, he is passed to Migron; at Michmash he hath laid up his carriages.

verse 2 Assyria's army passes through and likely conquers a series of towns on its way to Jerusalem.

“laid up his carriages” The army stores its equipment and supplies at Michmash, perhaps so that it will not be burdened as it approaches Jerusalem.

29 They are gone over the passage; they have taken up their lodging at Geba; Ramath is afraid; Gibeah of Saul is fled.

verse 29 “gone over the passage” This phrase means crossed over the pass—an unnamed mountain pass on its way to Jerusalem.

“they have taken up their lodging at Geba” The Assyrian army temporarily halts their advancements to rest at Geba.

“Ramath” Note that this town is called “Ramah” in the parallel verse in Isaiah 10:29. Did Joseph Smith err in dictating a “t” in the name of this town? It is of some interest that in a couple of later translations of this verse the name is rendered “Ramata” (Targum Pseudo-Jonathan version) and “Rameta” (Christian Syriac Peshitta version). Neither of these versions would have been available to Joseph Smith (Reexploring the Book of Mormon, edited by John W. Welch, Deseret Book Company and FARMS, 77).

“Gibeah” was the place of Saul’s birth and his residence while he was king.

30 Lift up the voice, O daughter of Gallim; cause it to be heard unto Laish, O poor Anathoth.

31 Madmenah is removed; the inhabitants of Gebim gather themselves to flee.

verses 30-31 Other Israelite towns are occupied and routed. It was common for the prophets to refer to Near Eastern cities as “daughter of . . .” In verse 31 the phrase “is removed” means is in flight.

32 As yet shall he remain at Nob that day; he shall shake his hand against the mount of the daughter of Zion, the hill of Jerusalem.

verses 32 The Assyrian army is described as approaching so close to Jerusalem that they will be able to shake their fists at the city (threaten the city) and thus make a mockery of the temple, ancient Israel’s chief religious symbol. The city of Nob is thought by Biblical scholars to have possibly been located on Mount Scopus, just a mile north and east of the city of Jerusalem.

As mentioned previously, it has been suggested that this description of the invasion of Jerusalem may have dual meaning—that is it may refer to both the historical event of Assyria’s attack upon Jerusalem and also to an eschatological (latter-day) attack on Jerusalem by forces from the north just prior to the Lord’s second coming. The argument for Isaiah’s having in mind a future event here is strengthened by the fact that 2 Nephi 21, the chapter which follows, is definitely a prophecy to be fulfilled in the latter days.

verses 33-34 In these verses, Isaiah will symbolically compare the nation of Assyria to a mighty tree, particularly the trees (cedars) of Lebanon, and avers that the Lord will cut them down to preserve Jerusalem.

33 Behold, the Lord, the Lord of Hosts shall lop the bough with terror; and the high ones of stature shall be hewn down; and the haughty shall be humbled.

verse 33 The “Lord of Hosts” enters as a forester with an axe to prevent Assyria from destroying all his children.

“lop the bough with terror” The Lord will prune the boughs, or chop down the tree, with terrifying power. This includes Assyria’s proud and haughty people. Haughty means proud and disdainful; having a high opinion of one’s self with some contempt for others; lofty and arrogant; supercilious; imperious.

34 And he shall cut down the thickets of the forests with iron, and Lebanon shall fall by a mighty one.

verse 34 The Lord shall cut down the “forests” with iron (an axe), and Lebanon and its majestic trees (Assyria’s leaders) will fall. Lebanon is a place noted anciently for its spectacular forests of cedar trees, which are often used as a type for pride (cf. 2 Nephi 12:13).

“a mighty one” This refers to Jehovah.

2 Nephi Chapter 21

Scripture Mastery

2 Nephi 21:6-9 Conditions during the Millennium. The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf and the young lion and fatling together; and a little child shall lead them.

On the night of September 21, 1823, the prophet Moroni visited the seventeen-year-old boy Joseph Smith, Jr. in his log cabin family home in Manchester, New York. Among the several items Moroni taught Joseph was, “. . . he quoted the eleventh chapter of Isaiah, saying it was about to be fulfilled” (JS-H 1:40). Isaiah 11 is a translation of the same materials from which this chapter was translated.

This chapter begins with Isaiah’s prophesying of new trees or leaders who will emerge out of the house of Israel to bless the earth.

Before beginning this chapter, let’s briefly clarify a couple of background items. First, Jesse was the father of the ancient King David. He was of the tribe of Judah and resided in Bethlehem. He was thus the ancestor of all of the kings of Judah and also of Jesus Christ. If someone descends from Jesse, then they, at least in part, have Jewish origins.

Next, there is the tree analogy used by Isaiah. Picture in your mind’s eye a stout tree with a solid root structure under the ground. Protruding from the ground is a trunk, stump, or “stem.” Branches, shoots, or “rods” are growing out of that trunk. When the tree is used as an analogy to illustrate genealogical succession, the sequence is root to trunk to branches, or root to stem to rod.

The roots of Isaiah’s tree represent the descendants of Jesse. Jesse himself is the ancestor of the roots, and therefore, in our analogy, we may consider him the seed of the tree from which the roots sprang. The trunk or “stem” of the tree, which is referred to as the stem of Jesse, represents one particular descendant of Jesse. In modern revelation, we are told that this is Jesus Christ: “Who is the Stem of Jesse spoken of in the 1st , 2d, 3d, 4th, and 5th verses of the 11th chapter of Isaiah? Verily thus saith the Lord: It is Christ” (D&C 113:1-2).

Chapter 21 prophesies of one or perhaps two latter-day descendants of Jesse who are also descendants of Jesus Christ. They are represented in the tree analogy as branches, “rods,” or shoots of the trunk. The trunk, again, is the stem of Jesse. There is one confusing aspect of Isaiah’s tree analogy. In addition to the terms “branch” and “rod” which refer to these two latter-day descendants of Jesse, he also uses the term “root of Jesse.” According to the tree analogy, one might think that a “root” is an ancestor and not a descendant. Here, however, the opposite is true. These two “roots” of Jesse are, in fact, descendants and not ancestors. Don’t be confused by this use of the word root. In the Old Testament, “root” is often used to mean offspring and not ancestor. Therefore, in this chapter we need not always assume the conventional succession of root to trunk to branch, and “root of Jesse” does not mean Jesus’s ancestor but rather his descendant.

Isaiah, at one point refers to the fact that one of these branches will grow out of the roots of Jesse. Here the roots of Jesse are in fact the descendants of Jesse, and these two latter-day servants will be at least in part descendants of the tribe of Judah.

Now, let us speculate for a moment regarding the identity of this latter-day descendant of Jesus Christ—this branch of the stem of Jesse—or perhaps there are two latter-day descendants of the Savior. This descendant, or these two descendants, are mentioned in verses 1 and 10 of 2 Nephi 21.

The first is mentioned in verse 1 and is referred to by Isaiah as a “rod” or “branch.” We are taught in modern revelation that this individual is “a servant in the hands of Christ, who is partly a descendant of Jesse [of Jewish descent] as well as of Ephraim, or of the house of Joseph, on whom there is laid much power” (D&C 113:3-4). Some have speculated that this “branch” might be Joseph Smith, Jr. Others have suggested an alternate identity.

Several Old Testament verses mention a latter-day “branch” or leader who will stand witness of the Lord’s final victory in the last days (see, for example, Zechariah 3:8-9; Jeremiah 23:3-8; and Jeremiah 33:15). Some of these Old Testament references even give this latter-day prophet a name—David (Ezekiel 37:21-28 and Hosea 3:4-5). Therefore, this servant referred to in 2 Nephi 21:1 (and in Isaiah 11:1) may be Joseph Smith, Jr., or perhaps a great leader of Israelite descent named David who will live in the last days and who will be an instrument in the Lord’s hand to help fulfill his divine plan before the Millennium. Church leaders in this final dispensation have even referred to this latter-day David. For example, Joseph Smith said, “The throne and kingdom of David is to be taken from him and given to another by the name of David in the last days, raised up out of his lineage” (HC, 6:253). Orson Hyde, in his dedicatory prayer on the Mount of Olives, said, “Raise up Jerusalem . . . and constitute her people a distinct nation and government, with David thy servant, even a descendant from the loins of ancient David to be their king” (HC, 4:457).

The second mention of a branch descending from the stem of Jesse is in verse 10. Here he is referred to as the “root of Jesse.” Again, in modern revelation we are taught that he is “a descendant of Jesse, as well as of Joseph, unto whom rightly belongs the priesthood, and the keys of the kingdom, for an ensign, and for the gathering of my people in the last days” (D&C 113:5-6). We will learn that the word ensign is considered often to be the Book of Mormon—a major work of the Prophet Joseph. It is generally held that this servant is Joseph Smith, Jr., or any one or all of those who have held the office of prophet / president of the latter-day Church of Jesus Christ. As we marshal evidence to support this suggestion, keep in mind the characteristics of this servant outlined in D&C 113:5-6 quoted above. They are: He is a descendant of Jesse and Joseph. He is a rightful heir to the priesthood and a holder of the keys to the kingdom. His work (especially the Book of Mormon) will become an ensign to the nations, and he will have a role in the gathering of Israel in the last days. Review the Book of Mormon prophecy regarding a descendant of the ancient Joseph who would also be named Joseph and who would do a great work of salvation among the Israelites to bring them to the knowledge of God's covenants in the last days (2 Nephi 3:6-11, 14-15). Certainly, this Joseph of 2 Nephi 3 is Joseph Smith, Jr. His patriarchal blessing identifies him as a descendant of Ephraim, the son of ancient Joseph. There is less evidence that Joseph was a descendant of Jesse, but there were occasions in early church history when some of the brethren, including Joseph Smith, claimed that they shared lineage with Jesus Christ (see Life of Heber C. Kimball, 185; JD, 4:248; Journal of President Rudger Clawson, 374-75; Ivins Journal, 21). We know from modern day revelation that Joseph received the priesthood and was given the keys of that priesthood including the keys of the gathering of Israel (D&C 110). Certainly, the Church and the Book of Mormon today are an ensign to the world.

It is interesting to note that in Jewish tradition there are two “saviors” or “messiahs.” These are “Messiah ben David” (a messiah descended from David) and “Messiah ben Joseph” (a messiah descended from Joseph).

1 And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a branch shall grow out of his roots.

verse 1 The “stem of Jesse” is Jesus Christ.

Here is prophecy concerning a great latter-day servant or leader whose identity is speculated upon in the introductory remarks for this chapter. It is either Joseph Smith, Jr. or a latter-day leader named David.

This verse is an example of synonymous parallelism, a Hebrew poetic device used frequently by Isaiah (see the supplemental article The Hebrew Language and the Book of Mormon). The same thing is said twice but with different wording:

- (a) And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse,
- (b) And a branch shall grow out of his roots.

Thus, we see that “rod” and “branch” are synonyms. A “rod” is a new growth or shoot of a plant. Also, we learn that according to Isaiah’s tree analogy, the branch (or rod) may grow out of its trunk (or stem) or it may also grow directly out of its roots. Thus, both the “rod out of the stem of Jesse” and the “branch [which] shall grow out of his [Jesse’s] roots refer to a latter-day descendant of Jesus Christ.

verses 2-5 These verses describe some important characteristics of the great latter-day servant introduced in verse 1. This leader is likely Joseph Smith, Jr. But if he turns out to be the latter-day David, he might not even be a member of the latter-day Church of Jesus Christ. Indeed, he might not even be a Christian!

2 And the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord;

3 And shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord; and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears.

verses 2-3 His gift of discernment among other gifts will come through the influence of the Spirit of God, the Holy Ghost.

“fear of the Lord” This might well be translated, “reverence for the Lord.” The Spirit shall teach him easily this reverence for the Lord.

verse 3 This servant shall judge or “reprove” (correct) others by what the Spirit teaches him, not by what he sees and hears with his physical senses.

4 But with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth; and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked.

verse 4 He shall judge fairly the poor and the lowly.

An alternate translation of “righteousness” is “equity.”

“and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth” With fairness he will arbitrate for the lowly of the earth.

“with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked” The eloquence and power of this latter-day servant will be something to behold.

5 And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins.

verse 5 A “girdle” is the innermost piece of clothing.

Righteousness and faithfulness shall be characteristic of him—as a girdle or band about his “loins” and “reins.” “Loins” anciently referred to the genital parts which were regarded as the seat of strength or procreative power. His “reins” refers to his waist.

verses 6-9 These verses mark a sudden change in the subject. These are the classic and oft-quoted verses which describe the millennial period of peace between wild and domestic animals and between people and potentially dangerous animals. Satan will be bound, righteousness will prevail, and knowledge of the gospel will fill the earth.

6 The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf and the young lion and fatling together; and a little child shall lead them.

verse 6 This verse mentions six animals. Three are wild carnivores (wolf, leopard, lion) that ordinarily would feed on the three tame animals (lamb, kid, calf).

“the calf and the young lion and fatling together” The term “fatling” may refer to any young animal (calf, kid, lamb, or pig) which is being fattened before being slaughtered. In commenting upon the use of the word “fatling” here, Parry, Parry, and Peterson, in their book Understanding Isaiah, wrote: “The King James Version translation of fatling is probably incorrect. The Jerusalem Bible suggests ‘calf and lion cub feed together,’ replacing fatling with the verb feed” (119). One problem with their suggestion is that the word fatling is also found here in the Book of Mormon.

“a little child shall lead them” Little children will not only feel safe and secure among the ordinarily ferocious beasts but will have control over them and lead them.

7 And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together; and the lion shall eat straw like the ox.

verse 7 “the lion shall eat straw like the ox” There will be no shedding of blood during the Millennium by man or beasts. Carnivores will become herbivores. During the Millennium, “the enmity of man, and the enmity of beasts, yea, the enmity of all flesh, shall cease from before my face” (D&C 101:26).

8 And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice’s den.

verse 8 The label “asp” may refer to any of a number of poisonous snakes. A “cockatrice” in biblical writings is an unidentified deadly serpent, also probably a poisonous snake.

9 They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.

verse 9 In all of the Lord’s kingdom, nothing hurtful or destructive will occur. Enmity will be removed from the earth, and peace, love, and kindness will rule. The term “holy mountain” may refer to the entire earth in its temple-like condition. The earth shall be filled with devotion to the Lord just as water fills the great seas.

“the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord” Nephi cited this verse and explained that “all things shall be made known unto the children of men,” including “things of all nations,” “secret” things, “work[s] of darkness,” and things that have been revealed (2 Nephi 30:15-18).

10 And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek; and his rest shall be glorious.

verse 10 Here is introduced the second of the two latter-day servants discussed in the introductory remarks for this chapter. He is at least in part a “root” or descendant of Jesse and the tribe of Judah. He is generally understood to be the prophet Joseph Smith, Jr.

“[he] shall stand for an ensign of the people” In the ancient Near East, the ensign or banner was a royal symbol which had the function of rallying an army of supporters. In this instance, this “root” of Jesse, and his work, shall serve as the Lord’s ensign and rally people to the Lord’s cause. Since the earliest days of the Restoration, Latter-day Saints have interpreted the coming forth of the Book of Mormon as the “ensign” meant to signal to all nations that the gathering of Israel has begun (Terryl L. Givens, By the Hand of Mormon: The American Scripture that Launched a New World Religion, New York: Oxford University Press, 2002, 64–71). In his prophetic commentary following the Isaiah block, although not using the word “ensign,” Nephi would link the coming forth of the Book of Mormon with the gathering of Israel, saying, “And when the two nations shall run together the testimony of the two nations shall run together also” (2 Nephi 29:8). To the same end, the resurrected Lord promised that the coming forth of the Book of Mormon would be “a sign” to the world of the beginning of the final gathering and fulfillment of God’s covenants (3 Nephi 21:1–7) (Victor L. Ludlow, “The Father’s Covenant People Sermon: 3 Nephi 20:10-23:5,” in Third Nephi: An Incomparable Scripture, ed. Andrew C. Skinner and Gaye Strathearn, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2012, 161–165).

“to it shall the Gentiles seek” Perhaps a better translation of this phrase is, “he shall be sought by all nations.” The implication is that this servant’s task is to summon a nation of righteous Israelites from all the nations of the world where they live in captivity and dispersion. This servant is the Lord’s right hand (see verse 11) who serves as the Lord’s agent for gathering his people.

“his rest shall be glorious” This is the first mention in the Book of Mormon of the rest of the Lord. What is his rest? Ultimately, to enter into the rest of the Lord refers to reaching the end of our probationary state when the test of mortality is over and the struggles of life are done. For some, this would occur at death. For others, the probationary state continues through both phases of our probation—both our mortal life and our time in the spirit world prior to our resurrection (HC, 1:252). These will enter into the rest of the Lord at their resurrection. The ultimate and absolute rest is to dwell or rest with the Lord for eternity (Alma 57:36; 60:13). It is to first pass from this mortal existence into paradise where you may find “rest” or freedom from the afflictions of mortality. Subsequently you will inherit a fulness of celestial glory and live eternally in his presence. This rest is the same as having one's calling and election made sure. It is celestial, "glorious," and "the fulness of his glory" (D&C 84:24).

One may argue that a person may also achieve a relative rest from the rigors of mortal probation while he is still here in mortality. There may be two types of this relative rest:

1. Those who fully accept the gospel and abide in its truths may be granted by the Spirit of the Lord a growing and blessed state of peace and security during this life. It is freedom from the confusion and fear that is engendered by false and apostate religious doctrines. It is a comfortable assurance that you have found the truth. It is the blessed knowledge and confidence that you are considered worthy of exaltation. This knowledge, or rest, can only come by personal revelation from the Spirit of God. This rest is closely related to, or even identical to, the gift of hope.

2. There is perhaps a second type of this relative rest. It is the personal privilege of being received into the personal presence of the Lord while one is still mortal. This is really the privilege of being sealed up to eternal life by the Second Comforter, the Savior himself in person. Concerning the higher priesthood, the Lord taught: "And this greater priesthood administereth the gospel and holdeth the key of the mysteries of the kingdom, even the key of the knowledge of God. Therefore, in the ordinances thereof, the power of godliness is manifest. And without the ordinances thereof, and the authority of the priesthood, the power of godliness is not manifest unto men in the flesh; For without this no man can see the face of God, even the Father, and live. Now this Moses plainly taught to the children of Israel in the wilderness, and sought diligently to sanctify his people that they might behold the face of God; But they hardened their hearts and could not endure his presence; therefore, the Lord in his wrath, for his anger was kindled against them, swore that they should not enter into his rest while in the wilderness, which rest is the fulness of his glory" (D&C 84:19-24). Moses desired to make available to Israel the highest privilege of the priesthood—the privilege of seeing the face of God, of coming directly into the divine presence. However, because of Israel's disobedience, the Lord said, "I have sworn in my wrath, that they shall not enter into my presence, into my rest, in the days of their pilgrimage" (JST-Exodus 34:2).

Are we actually going to rest in heaven? While this verse may not refer to the rest which is freedom from labor, let's hope there will also be some of that type of rest as well!

11 And it shall come to pass in that day that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea.

verse 11 "in that day" This refers to our day, or the last days.

“the remnant of his people which shall be left” After the scattering of the house of Israel, only a “remnant”—a few—will be left who are inclined to accept the gospel of Jesus Christ and gather with the saints.

12 And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth.

verses 11-12 These two verses are parallel in their meaning and further define the role of the latter-day servant in gathering Israel and serving as an ensign to the world. Actually, these verses refer to the second gathering of Israel. The first took place when the Lord led his people out of bondage in Egypt, or perhaps following the Babylonian captivity. The second gathering is now in progress as Israel gathers to the gospel and to the stakes of Zion.

Appropriately, Moses, who led the first gathering from Egypt, was entrusted with the keys of the gathering of Israel which he restored to the prophet Joseph Smith in the Kirtland Temple in 1836 (D&C 110:11). During this second gathering, as opposed to the first, the remnants will return from all directions. This fact is depicted or symbolized by the several different countries mentioned which surrounded ancient Israel. Assyria is modern Iraq; Egypt and Pathros are Egypt; Cush (or Nubia) is Ethiopia; Elam is Iran; Shinar is Iraq; Hamath is Syria. This list of countries metaphorically represents the entire world, the “four corners of the earth.” God will gather the covenant people from all the nations of the earth to his covenant lands.

The “islands of the sea” is the symbolic designation for widely scattered Israel.

Since we know that these two verses are parallel in meaning, we can see that the Lord’s “hand” and his “ensign” are synonymous. They both personify the Lord’s latter-day servant and his work.

Again, in verse 12, “Israel” refers not to the entire house of Israel, but to the northern Kingdom of Israel.

13 The envy of Ephraim also shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off; Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim.

verse 13 During the gathering, all envy and enmity between Judah and the northern kingdom of Israel (Ephraim) will end.

“The envy of Ephraim also shall depart” The jealousy or enmity which Ephraim has for Judah shall cease to exist.

“the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off” The harassments or persecutions that Judah has leveled against Ephraim shall stop.

The final two phrases in this verse have the same meanings as do these first two phrases in keeping with the AB, AB form of parallelism.

To “vex” is to irritate or bother greatly.

14 But they shall fly upon the shoulders of the Philistines towards the west; they shall spoil them of the east together; they shall lay their hand upon Edom and Moab; and the children of Ammon shall obey them.

verse 14 Once reunited, this combined Israel will work together as a unit and prevail over their earlier enemies. These include the Philistines to the west, in the area which is now called the Gaza Strip. and also, those enemies on the east which include Edom, Moab, and Ammon (today's Jordan).

“they shall fly upon the shoulders of the Philistines” The pronoun “they” refers to Israel—probably Ephraim and Judah together—as they overcome their ancient enemies Philistia, Edom, Moab, and Ammon. This description of Israel’s victory over their ancient enemies is a type of latter-day Israel’s overcoming the world. Edom, or Idumea, is a type of the world (D&C 1:36).

The combined forces of Ephraim and Judah shall “pounce on [or attack] the back of Philistia” (New Jewish Version).

“they shall spoil them of the east together” Together the combined forces of Ephraim and Judah shall plunder their enemies to the east.

“they shall lay their hand upon Edom and Moab” Edom and Moab will become subject to them. Also, the “children of Ammon shall obey [become subject to] them.”

15 And the Lord shall utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea; and with his mighty wind he shall shake his hand over the river, and shall smite it in the seven streams, and make men go over dry shod.

verse 15 The Lord will dry up the “tongue of the Egyptian sea.” Various suggestions have been proffered for the specific identity of the “tongue of the Egyptian sea.” It is not certain whether it is land or water. These suggestions include the western most “tongue” of the Red Sea (including the Gulf of Suez and the Gulf of Aqaba) and the delta of the Nile which protrudes as a “tongue” from the northern coast of Egypt into the Mediterranean Sea. The most attractive possibility, however, is the large inland sea created each spring as the Nile overflows its banks and floods a large area of the lower Nile valley. This sea forms a “tongue” of the Mediterranean Sea which protrudes far inland. This “tongue of the Egyptian sea” has indeed been dried up or “destroyed” by the building of the Aswan Dam with its consequent controlled Nile River drainage.

The Lord will “shake [raise] his hand over the river” (usually interpreted to be the Euphrates River) using the might of a great wind and divert it into seven small streams so that men might walk across it “dry shod,” that is, without getting their shoes wet. Three elements in this passage—“mighty wind,” “hand,” and “go over dry shod”—recall the Israelites’ miraculous crossing of the Red Sea (Exodus 14:21-22) and the Jordan River (Joshua 3:7-17). The same powers that guided the ancient Israelites out of Egypt will guide modern Israel out of Egypt and Assyria (both representing the world) to their gathering places.

The implication of this verse is that the Lord's power will insure that no force or obstacle will stop the latter-day gathering of Israel. He will prepare the way that the righteous remnant of Israel will be allowed to gather.

16 And there shall be a highway for the remnant of his people which shall be left, from Assyria, like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt.

verse 16 Also the Lord will prepare a highway for the remnant of Israel coming from Assyria (the land on the other side of the Euphrates River). This "highway" will resemble the one prepared for Israel when it left the land of Egypt. This highway might be, in fact, literally a road, but the concept of "highway" might also refer figuratively to a mode of transportation such as airline travel or train travel. Obviously the Lord did not create a literal road for ancient Israel when they left Egypt, but he did prepare the way for them as they traveled to Palestine. He will do the same for gathering Israelites in the latter days.

Chapter 22 is a translation of the same materials found in Isaiah chapter 12. This chapter probably most appropriately applies to the latter-day period just prior to the Millennium. It consists of two brief psalms or songs of worship that gathered Israel will sing to the Lord in the future.

As the chapter begins, Isaiah is speaking to gathered Israel. He admonishes them to give thanks and praise to the Lord for providing the blessings of the Millennium and the opportunity for exaltation. He suggests to them a song they might sing. We recall a modern-day revelation that promises, "The song of the righteous is a prayer unto me, and it shall be answered with a blessing upon their heads" (D&C 25:12).

It seems evident in this chapter that Isaiah knew of the Millennium and yearned for the Lord's blessings granted in that glorious period. He expresses the gratitude each of us should feel as the Lord's prophesied works come to pass among men.

The first psalm is a "thanks psalm," one which gives thanks to the Lord for his blessings. It consists of verses 1 and 2 (and perhaps verse 3). The second psalm consists of verses 4 through 6 and is a "praise psalm" which primarily gives praise to the Lord.

1 And in that day thou shalt say: O Lord, I will praise thee; though thou wast angry with me thine anger is turned away, and thou comfortedst me.

verse 1 "And in that day thou shalt say" The time period being referred to has just been discussed in the introductory comments for this chapter. Isaiah is speaking to gathered Israel just prior to the Millennium.

"O Lord, I will praise thee" The speaker (or singer) is now gathered Israel.

"thou wast angry with me" Because of mine iniquity and apostasy over the centuries thou sawest fit to scatter me (the house of Israel) to the four corners of the world.

"thine anger is turned away, and thou comfortedest me" Thou hast forgiven my sins and thou hast allowed me to be restored to a knowledge of the true gospel and gathered to my lands of inheritance.

2 Behold, God is my salvation; I will trust, and not be afraid; for the Lord Jehovah is my strength and my song; he also has become my salvation.

verse 2 The song continues. In this verse the speaker or singer is still gathered Israel.

"God is my salvation" It is God, Jehovah, even Jesus Christ who has given me the opportunity for exaltation.

“the Lord Jehovah is my strength and my song” The Lord is the source of my strength and the object of my adoration.

The divine name is usually translated as simply Lord in the KJV. Here, of course, it is translated as “Lord Jehovah.” This is the first time the title Jehovah is found in the Book of Mormon. The word Jehovah is the anglicized word for the Hebrew personal name for God which is the four letters (tetragrammaton) JHWH, which is pronounced Yahweh. JHWH is derived from the Hebrew word hyh which means “to be” or “to exist.” Thus Jehovah may be translated as something like “the existing one” or “the one who exists” or “I am.”

In this context, it is interesting that when Jehovah spoke to Moses at the burning bush, Moses asked, in effect, “What is thy name.” “And God said unto Moses, I AM THAT I AM: and he said, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you” (Exodus 3:13-14). The Hebrew expression, ‘ehyeh ‘asher ‘ehyeh, rendered “I AM THAT I AM” in the King James translation, is a penetrating statement, and one which has received much attention over the centuries. The word ‘ehyeh is a conjugation of the verb hyh—“to be.” There are many possible meanings or explanations for the phrase “I AM THAT I AM.” Some have suggested that it represents a causative form of the verb. In short, the Lord’s words would mean “I cause to exist,” or “I cause to be.”

Jehovah is a word that is written out in full only four times in the King James Version (Exodus 6:3; Psalm 83:18; Isaiah 12:2; 26:4). It would seem that the true principle and commandment to avoid taking the name of the Lord in vain (Exodus 20:7) was adulterated by many over the centuries, until, by the time of the Savior in the meridian of time, the Jews had come to believe it blasphemous to even speak the personal name of the Lord. Thus, Jesus was attacked and almost stoned because he declared his divine sonship in these words: “Before Abraham was, I AM,” or, stated another way, “Before Abraham, was I, Jehovah.” The King James translators, presumably desiring to hallow the sacred name, substituted “LORD” (with capital letters) for YHWH, in all but the four cases mentioned above.

“he also has become my salvation” Here is a repeat of the same thought stated in the first phrase of this verse. The Lord is the means of my deliverance, triumph, or exaltation.

3 Therefore, with joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation.

verse 3 The speaker here is not entirely clear. It seems likely that Isaiah is addressing and prophesying to gathered Israel.

“water out of the wells of salvation” The “waters of salvation” might be better translated “springs of salvation,” which depicts living, flowing water. The “waters of salvation” or “springs of salvation” represent Jesus Christ. To “draw water out of the wells of salvation” is to partake of those things necessary for eternal life and receive exaltation in the celestial kingdom and therefore drink eternally from the wells of salvation.

4 And in that day shall ye say: Praise the Lord, call upon his name, declare his doings among the people, make mention that his name is exalted.

verse 4 Isaiah continues as the speaker, and he is addressing gathered Israel.

“And in that day” The time frame still seems to be the latter days, just prior to the Millennium. Isaiah now suggests another song which gathered Israel will sing.

“call upon his name” Proclaim his name.

“declare his doings among the people” Make known his deeds among the people, especially those doings that bring salvation to mankind.

“make mention that his name is exalted” Declare that his name is exalted.

5 Sing unto the Lord; for he hath done excellent things; this is known in all the earth.

verse 5 “Sing unto the Lord” Sing in praise of the Lord.

“he hath done excellent things” He has performed glorious wonders, most notably he wrought the infinite atonement.

“this is known in all the earth” The New Jewish Version of the book of Isaiah renders this, “Let this be made known in all the world!”

6 Cry out and shout, thou inhabitant of Zion; for great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee.

verse 6 The terms “cry out,” “shout,” “inhabitant,” and “thee” are feminine forms in the Hebrew and depict Christ’s bride, Zion, who is ready to be received by the Holy One of Israel. Zion is depicted as the bride elsewhere (Isaiah 54:1-6; Revelation 21:2, 9; and D&C 109:73-74), and Jehovah is also portrayed elsewhere as the husband (Isaiah 54:5).

“thou inhabitant of Zion” One living in the millennial day.

“in the midst of thee” Christ, the Holy One of Israel, will personally reign over the saints during the Millennium.

2 Nephi Chapter 23

Chapters 23 and 24 of 2 Nephi are a translation of the same materials found in Isaiah chapters 13 and 14. These chapters contain Isaiah's inspired warnings to Babylon. Actually, Assyria and not Babylon was the dominant nation in the Fertile Crescent during Isaiah's lifetime. But even during the so-called Assyrian period, Babylon still represented the best of culture, learning, and literature. It was also the center of apostate pagan religion. Babylonian culture and its pagan ideologies spread throughout the Middle East. Accordingly, in these two chapters Isaiah often uses Babylon and her king as symbols of the world and its wickedness (cf. D&C 1:16). Thus, you should keep in mind that the term "Babylon" has both literal and figurative meanings. It refers to a specific ancient kingdom and to a spiritual condition. Sometimes it is difficult to know whether Isaiah is referring to physical or spiritual (figurative) Babylon.

In addition to warnings to Babylon, chapter 24 also contains some warnings to Assyria and Philistia. Philistia, or the land of the Philistines, is the southern Mediterranean coastal area of Palestine.

The whole of chapter 23 and the first 23 verses of chapter 24 have been termed thematically "the fall of Babylon." It should be noted that the prophesied destruction of Babylon in chapters 23 and 24 is a type of the destruction which will come upon the wicked just prior to the Lord's second coming. Isaiah likely had both the historical meanings and the latter-day implications in mind as he wrote these chapters. He writes of the Davidic king ultimately destroying the Assyrian and Babylonian kings. This is strong evidence for Isaiah's latter-day intent and application since historically, no Davidic king ever defeated a king of Assyria or a king of Babylon. On the contrary, successive Assyrian and Babylonian kings defeated Israel and exiled her people. In a latter-day context, however, the great king Jesus Christ will prevail over spiritual Babylon.

These two chapters may be outlined as follows: introduction (23:1); the Lord summons his forces (23:2-5); the anger and power of the Lord are leveled against spiritual Babylon (23:6-13); physical consequences will befall the land of Babylon and its inhabitants (23:14-22); the Lord will be merciful to Israel (24:1-3); a taunt song against the king of Babylon (24:4-21); the destruction of physical Babylon (24:22-23). To complete the outline of these two chapters, verses 24 through 27 of chapter 24 contain the prophecy of the fall of Assyria, and verses 28 through 32 of chapter 24 tell of the fall of Philistia.

1 The burden of Babylon, which Isaiah the son of Amoz did see.

verse 1 A “burden” is a prophecy of doom or judgment against a people. The “burden of Babylon” is actually Isaiah’s inspired oracle or divine declaration of judgment or doom against Babylon. When a prophet like Isaiah delivers such a message, indeed it can become a “burden” for the people since additional knowledge and responsibility is placed upon them.

Again, keep in mind the probable dual meaning here. Historically, in Isaiah’s day (689 BC), Babylon was attacked and destroyed by Assyria under Sennacherib (Babylon was rebuilt shortly thereafter). In the latter days, spiritual Babylon will be attacked and destroyed by the righteous members of the Lord’s kingdom on the earth.

“which Isaiah the son of Amoz did see” This phrase explains the means by which Isaiah received this message of warning or “burden.” He saw it in vision of the future.

verses 2-5 Here the Lord is the speaker. He summons his forces from the ends of the earth in preparation for a “holy war.” Who are his forces? Historically it was the army of the king of Assyria that destroyed Babylon. Thus, from that historical standpoint, it is Assyria’s army and later the army of Persia (539 BC) that are being rallied here. From a broader, latter-day perspective, it is the army of believers, members of the kingdom of God on the earth who are being summoned.

2 Lift ye up a banner upon the high mountain, exalt the voice unto them, shake the hand, that they may go into the gates of the nobles.

verse 2 “Lift ye up a banner upon the high mountain” Raise the battle flag on top of the hill. A banner may also be termed an ensign. In this dispensation members of God’s army will figuratively lift up an ensign, the gospel banner, upon the high mountain. The “high mountain” symbolizes the temple.

“exalt the voice unto them, shake the hand, that they may go into the gates of the nobles” Shout to the soldiers and raise your arm as the signal for them to attack the gates of the proud city Babylon and her noble inhabitants. In this dispensation, we might interpret this phrase as having an almost opposite meaning: Lift up a voice of warning to the enemy, wave the hand and beckon them to enter the gates or entrances of Zion and to the temple.

Here the word exalt means to raise, as the voice.

3 I have commanded my sanctified ones, I have also called my mighty ones, for mine anger is not upon them that rejoice in my highness.

verse 3 “I have commanded my sanctified ones, I have also called my mighty ones” In ancient Israel the soldiers prepared for the holy war by participating in holy rituals connected with the temple (Deuteronomy 23:10-15). Thus, the Lord says, “I have called out my righteous and strong warriors.” Here is perhaps further evidence that a latter-day time frame is also intended. Would the Assyrian or Persian armies, for example, be referred to by the Lord as “my sanctified ones”?

In this dispensation, he calls out his saints, those who are temple worthy who are made holy by Christ’s power. These will battle against evil using his weapons. His “mighty ones” are heroes and men of valor.

“mine anger is not upon them that rejoice in my highness” “Highness” refers to the Lord’s exaltation. I am not angry with those who take pride in me, those who accept my sovereignty.

4 The noise of the multitude in the mountains like as of a great people, a tumultuous noise of the kingdoms of nations gathered together, the Lord of Hosts mustereth the hosts of the battle.

verse 4 The multitudes gathered to do battle, either in Isaiah’s day or in this last dispensation, are noisy. Elsewhere Isaiah likens the noise of a great multitude of people to the “noise of the seas” and “the rushing of mighty waters” (Isaiah 17:12).

In his day he gathered them to do battle with Babylon. In the latter days they are gathered with the intent of defeating evil and building Zion.

“in the mountains like as of a great people” This seems to have reference to the gathering of the saints in the Rocky Mountains. On August 6, 1842, Joseph Smith prophesied that some of the saints would “live to go and assist in making settlements and build cities and see the saints become a mighty people in the midst of the Rocky Mountains” (TPJS, 255).

5 They come from a far country, from the end of heaven, yea, the Lord, and the weapons of his indignation, to destroy the whole land.

verse 5 Those who join the Lord’s army will be gathered from all the nations of the earth.

“the weapons of his indignation” These represent the Lord’s powers. Compare this to Jeremiah 50:25: “The Lord hath opened his armory, and hath brought forth the weapons of his indignation.”

In his anger, the Lord is coming to destroy the whole country or the sum total of all evil on the earth.

verses 6-13 Again, the ancient city of Babylon, with all its pomp, arrogance, and worldliness, is symbolic of the world in the last days. These verses describe the effects of the Lord’s anger and power when they are directed against spiritual Babylon in the latter days.

In verses 6-10, Isaiah is the speaker.

6 Howl ye, for the day of the Lord is at hand; it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty.

verse 6 “Howl ye” This expression is used repeatedly by Isaiah (16:7; 23:1, 6, 14; 65:14). It implies that the wicked (those who belong to Babylon) are like dogs and wolves who howl while under duress.

“the day of the Lord” The “day of the Lord” is a day in which the Lord metes out rewards or punishments. Here, this expression refers to our day, or the last days. More specifically “the great and dreadful day of the Lord” refers to the Savior’s coming in glory. For the righteous it is a “great” day. For the wicked, the times have been “dreadful.”

“it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty” Christ will destroy the wicked in preparation for his second coming.

7 Therefore shall all hands be faint, every man’s heart shall melt; verse 7 The residents of spiritual Babylon will be immobilized by their fear. Their arms will hang down limp, likely in fear or despondency.

8 And they shall be afraid; pangs and sorrows shall take hold of them; they shall be amazed one at another; their faces shall be as flames.

verse 8 The people of Babylon in the day of the Lord shall all be terrified and overcome with “pangs and sorrows”—physical and emotional pain. Apparently, there is a particularly noxious type of fear that will beset the wicked at a time of their impending destruction (read the graphic example of this fear in Revelation 6:15-17).

“they shall be amazed one at another” The New International Version reading is more descriptive: “They will look aghast at each other” because of the terrible happenings.

“their faces shall be as flames” Their faces will flush with guilt and shame. This expression may also refer to the fact that prior to the Lord’s second coming the wicked will burn with fire.

When this verse is compared with the parallel at Isaiah 13:8 in the King James Version, it becomes apparent that the Book of Mormon text is different in that the latter does not have the following clause: “they shall be in pain as a woman that travaileth.” This difference between the Book of Mormon and the Bible could be accounted for by asserting either that the clause was added to the Bible account or deleted from the Book of Mormon account. Since the words “they shall be” begin the missing part as well as the immediately following clause, it may indicate that someone’s eye skipped from one set of words to the other and thus account for their absence in the Book of Mormon. These words may have been lost when the printer’s manuscript was made from the original manuscript, though the original is unavailable to substantiate the situation one way or another. The omission of this phrase in the Book of Mormon interferes with the fine balance of the characteristic poetic parallelism that is present when the phrase is added back. This suggests that indeed an error was made when the Book of Mormon was being produced.

9 Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate; and he shall destroy the sinners thereof out of it.

verse 9 Again, the “day of the Lord” refers to that day in which he metes out rewards and punishments. Here it refers to the latter days and the Lord’s second coming. That day is a cruel day for those who are not prepared. The Lord is capable of “wrath” and “anger.” This is the day of the Lord’s vengeance against those who reject him whether they be in ancient Babylon or in latter day “Babylon.” The land will be made a wilderness, and every sinner will be destroyed. The Lord will destroy all corruptible things at his glorious coming, including the wicked.

The agents of the eventual fall of ancient Babylon were invaders from Persia, who in 539 BC conquered Babylon and supplanted its international dominance with their own. Babylon never again rose to power and eventually simply disappeared as a city.

10 For the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light; the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine.

verse 10 A cosmic upheaval will accompany the day of the Lord’s vengeance and the heavenly lights will be darkened. Every star and constellation will all cease to shine. The sun will be dark when it rises, and the moon will give forth no light. This verse possibly refers to some of the so-called “signs of the coming of the son of man” prophesied to occur in the latter days (D&C 45:39-42). The prophet Amos prophesied that for the wicked “the day of the Lord is darkness, and not light” (Amos 5:8).

11 And I will punish the world for evil, and the wicked for their iniquity; I will cause the arrogance of the proud to cease, and will lay down the haughtiness of the terrible.

verse 11 The Lord again becomes the speaker. The “world” is synonymous for evil. I will punish all of the wicked for their sins. I will humble everyone who is proud and punish everyone who is arrogant and cruel. Those remaining will obviously be the righteous and humble.

The “terrible” are those who cause fear. The phrase “will lay down the haughtiness of the terrible” is better translated, “will put an end to the pride and ruthlessness of the tyrants and oppressors.”

12 I will make a man more precious than fine gold; even a man than the golden wedge of Ophir.

verse 12 “Precious” in this context means rare. Those mortals who survive will be scarcer than gold. Ophir is a region of unknown location, in biblical times known for its production of fine gold. Your author can find no non-biblical or other biblical reference to “the golden wedge of Ophir,” thus, the expression may not refer to a specific precious object. Rather the “golden wedge of Ophir” may simply be a general reference to the gold of Ophir.

Another idea called to mind here is that those who remain on the earth, those who survive the furnace of affliction will be purified like gold. They will no longer possess dross (sin).

“even a man than the golden wedge of Ophir” This awkward phrase might be better written: “a man who survives will even be more precious than the golden wedge of Ophir.”

13 Therefore, I will shake the heavens, and the earth shall remove out of her place, in the wrath of the Lord of Hosts, and in the day of his fierce anger.

verse 13 I will make the heavens tremble and the earth shall be shaken out of its place on that day when I, the Lord, show my anger. This imagery suggests earthquakes and cosmic disasters causing panic among the people who will scatter like a chased roe (deer) or fleeing gazelle and like sheep who have no shepherd.

The prophecy that the heavens will shake and the earth moved out of her place has, subsequent to Isaiah, been repeated by many prophets and placed in the context of Christ’s second coming (Joel 3:16; D&C 43:18; 45:48; 49:23; 84:118; Moses 7:6). Both Haggai (Haggai 2:6-8, 21-23) and Paul (Hebrews 12:26-29) explained this prophecy.

verses 14-22 These verses graphically describe the physical consequences that will befall the land and its inhabitants.

14 And it shall be as the chased roe, and as a sheep that no man taketh up; and they shall every man turn to his own people, and flee every one into his own land.

verse 14 As mentioned, the imagery here implies that wicked people during the judgments of the last days will be like hunted and frightened deer. They will flee for their lives and they will be like sheep without a shepherd (those “that no man taketh up”), implying that those who have not accepted Jesus as their shepherd may not receive his protection.

“they shall every man turn to his own people, and flee every one into his own land” During the Lord’s latter day judgments the wicked will flee to their own lands and homes in Babylon (meaning the world) looking for safety. The righteous will flee from Babylon and its carnal preoccupations to Zion and its temples.

15 Every one that is proud shall be thrust through; yea, and every one that is joined to the wicked shall fall by the sword.

verse 15 The arrogant inhabitants of the city will be stabbed to death (“thrust through”). This idea is repeated twice in a parallel fashion. The “sword” here represents war and its instruments. In the last days, the wicked will destroy themselves during the many wars and battles of which the prophets have prophesied.

16 Their children also shall be dashed to pieces before their eyes; their houses shall be spoiled and their wives ravished.

verse 16 The wicked shall experience great devastation. While they look on helplessly, their babies will be “dashed to pieces,” that is, thrown against something hard and battered to death, their homes will be looted, and their wives will be seized and raped.

17 Behold, I will stir up the Medes against them, which shall not regard silver and gold, nor shall they delight in it.

verse 17 “I will stir up the Medes against them” Historically, the Medes were a people who came from Media, located in northwest Persia or Iran. Media became part of the Persian Empire when the Medes were conquered in the middle of the sixth century BC by Cyrus the Great of Persia. Under Cyrus, the Persians and Medes easily conquered Babylon in 538 BC. Some twenty years later the walls of Babylon were demolished, following which the city never again became the capital of an independent people. Two centuries later, after the Greeks, under Alexander the Great, conquered the Persians, Babylon rapidly declined in commercial and cultural importance as Seleucia became the major city in the area. By the time of Christ, only a few astronomers and mathematicians continued to live in the ancient, sparsely populated city. After they left, Babylon remained a deserted tell (mound), which sand and brush gradually covered until it became a hill used only by wild animals and as grazing land for nomadic flocks (Interpreters Dictionary of the Bible, 1:335).

“which shall not regard silver and gold, nor shall they delight in it” The Medes will not go into battle to obtain plunder (silver and gold). Instead, their motivation is to kill, and gain power and control.

Perhaps the Medes or Persians are symbolic of latter day nations who have wicked designs upon one another.

18 Their bows shall also dash the young men to pieces; and they shall have no pity on the fruit of the womb; their eyes shall not spare children.

verse 18 Again, the archer’s bow and arrow symbolize war and its various instruments. With their bows and arrows the Medes will slaughter the young men. One meaning of the word dash in Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines is “To break; to destroy.” The merciless soldiers will also slay children (“the fruit of the womb”).

“their eyes shall not spare children” Another phrase emphasizing the fact that no one will be spared during the wars. Even small children are killed so that future generations will not arise in rebellion to avenge their parents’ deaths.

19 And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees’ excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah.

verse 19 Isaiah seems again to be the speaker in this verse, and the Lord resumes as the first person in the following verse and throughout the remainder of the chapter.

Babylon, with its riches, glorious gardens, magnificent temples, fortified walls, and high towers, was legendary in the ancient world. It was the most glorious of all the world’s kingdoms. Again, Babylon is symbolic of the world in the latter days.

“the beauty of the Chaldees’ excellency” The Chaldeans of the first millennium BC were a Semitic people. They were a founding people of the Neo-Babylonian Empire, whose marvelous capital, Babylon, was a monument to their accomplishments. Chaldea is often used as a synonym for Babylon. Nebuchadnezzar was a Chaldean. It was under Nebuchadnezzar (605-562 BC) that Babylon reached its zenith of power, pomp, and splendor, but his empire fell only a generation after his death” (New Layman’s Bible Commentary, 781).

“shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah” Sodom and Gomorrah are regarded as prototype examples of God’s divine judgment on all those who are evil (Jude 1:7). These cities became a heap of ruins (Genesis 18-19) as will ancient Babylon and latter-day “Babylon.”

Bible scholars have suggested that Sodom may have been leveled by a great explosion and fire caused by the ignition, perhaps by a stroke of lightning, of the naturally occurring petroleum products including gases in the area.

20 It shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation: neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there; neither shall the shepherds make their fold there.

verse 20 Isaiah’s prophecy in this verse certainly came to pass. Babylon did become an uninhabited wasteland.

“from generation to generation” This expression implies a very long time.

“Arabian” refers to nomadic wanderers of the region. Apparently, Babylon was to be so devastated that even these hardy people would not choose to camp there.

To “make their fold” is to enclose and tend sheep during the night.

21 But wild beasts of the desert shall lie there; and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures; and owls shall dwell there, and satyrs shall dance there.

verse 21 Wild animals of the desert will come to infest the site. The “houses” or buildings of Babylon will overflow with “doleful creatures.” Doleful means sad. Isaiah identifies creatures of the night that are ritually impure and are not domesticated. Such creatures will inhabit desolate Babylon, even taking over the abandoned houses.

“owls shall dwell there” Isaiah uses the images of bitterns and owls to characterize desolate places.

“Satyrs shall dance there” Satyrs are goat-like creatures in Greek mythology. The Hebrew word actually means “he-goats.”

John the Revelator wrote that “Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird” (Revelation 18:2).

22 And the wild beasts of the islands shall cry in their desolate houses, and dragons in their pleasant palaces; and her time is near to come, and her day shall not be prolonged. For I will destroy her speedily; yea, for I will be merciful unto my people, but the wicked shall perish.

verse 22 “And the wild beasts of the islands shall cry in their desolate houses” Apparently “wild beasts of the islands” are hyenas. Hyenas will cry in the abandoned palaces of destroyed Babylon.

“and dragons in their pleasant palaces” The Hebrew word for dragon means “wild dogs” or “Jackals.” Jackals or wild dogs will cry or howl in Babylon’s palaces. The fact that palaces will be inhabited by creatures indicates that even wealthy, upper-class groups will not be exempt from God’s destructions and judgments.

“her time is near to come, and her day shall not be prolonged” Babylon’s time, or end, is near! Babylon (the worldly) will possess worldly honor for only a moment and will then be quickly destroyed.

I, the Lord, will destroy her speedily sparing only the righteous.

2 Nephi Chapter 24

1 For the Lord will have mercy on Jacob, and will yet choose Israel, and set them in their own land; and the strangers shall be joined with them, and they shall cleave to the house of Jacob.

verse 1 “Jacob” refers to members of the twelve tribes or house of Israel. In one setting, after Babylonian captivity, he will allow them to return to their own land. The Lord will yet again have mercy on the people of Israel, and he will choose them anew (“choose Israel”) as his elect and allow them to be redeemed and gathered to their covenant or promised lands (“set them in their own land”).

In the latter days, they will finally be gathered to their promised lands yet again. “Strangers” (or better translated “foreigners”)—actually non-Israelites—will come and live among them. These non-Israelites will flee to Zion for safety. They will be preached to and converted (“joined with them”). They will also “cleave to”—be adopted into—the house of Israel.

Some have seen these “strangers” as those non-Israelite inhabitants encountered by the Lehites on their arrival in the New World described in the commentary for 2 Nephi 5:6.

It seems clear that when the Lehites arrived in the New World, they encountered and interacted with indigenous peoples in the areas they settled. This view makes sense of the archeological and genetic data that indicate the presence of non-Book of Mormon people many thousands of years before the arrival of Nephi and his family (On this, see “Book of Mormon and DNA Studies,” online at <https://www.lds.org/topics/book-of-mormon-and-dna-studies?lang=eng>). Rather than describing an empty continent, the Book of Mormon is a history of a small branch of scattered Israel at times interacting with its Gentile neighbors in the land (Hugh Nibley, Lehi in the Desert / The World of the Jaredites/ There Were Jaredites, The Collected Works of Hugh Nibley: Volume 5, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1988, 250; John L. Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex: An Ancient American Book, Provo, UT: Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2013, 104–108).

2 And the people shall take them and bring them to their place; yea, from far unto the ends of the earth; and they shall return to their lands of promise. And the house of Israel shall possess them, and the land of the Lord shall be for servants and handmaids; and they shall take them captives unto whom they were captives; and they shall rule over their oppressors.

verse 2 “And the people shall take them and bring them to their place” The restoration of Jacob to their lands of promise will be assisted by other peoples. Perhaps this refers to Persians who supported the return of Judah in ancient times or, alternatively, to latter-day Gentile missionaries of modern times. The latter-day Gentile missionaries (“the people”) will help the scattered people of Israel gather to their promised lands. These missionaries will also gather the Gentiles from the ends of the earth. These gathered Gentiles will repent, join the Church, and be adopted into the house of Israel. The promised lands of the Israelites are America and the Holy Land. Each of these two promised lands is “the place for the city of Zion” (D&C 57:2), a place for the temple of the Lord (D&C 124:38), and a place of refuge against the forces of the world. Symbolically, these lands are a type and shadow of heaven, which is “a far better land of promise” (Alma 37:45). The Israelites and Gentiles will be gathered from a wide diversity of nations (“from far unto the ends of the earth”).

“the house of Israel shall possess them” Once these Israelites and Gentiles are gathered, they will, by adoption, fully belong to the covenant house of Israel.

The promised land belongs to the Lord, hence it is “the land of the Lord.” The Israelites gathered to the promised lands are in part the humble common people (“servants” and “handmaids”). These common people will become eternal rulers in God’s kingdom, ruling over those in their former lands who oppressed them.

3 And it shall come to pass in that day that the Lord shall give thee rest, from thy sorrow, and from thy fear, and from the hard bondage wherein thou wast made to serve.

verse 3 “in that day” This expression also may have dualistic meaning, referring either to the ancient times or to the latter days. The Lord will provide the people of Israel with relief from the hardships of bondage. Temporal rest from fear and hard bondage came to the house of Israel anciently under the leadership of King David and King Solomon, both of whom were types and shadows of the King of kings, Jesus Christ, who will give the house of Israel eternal rest. The expression “hard bondage” recalls the time the Israelites spent in Egypt as slaves of the Egyptian taskmasters or when scattered Israel lived subject to oppressive governments.

verses 1-3 Historically these verses were fulfilled when Cyrus the Great of Persia captured Babylon and issued an edict allowing all captive peoples in Babylon to return to their place of origin. The first group of Jews returned to Judah in about 538 BC and began to rebuild their homeland. Another great exodus of Jews from Babylon began in 520 BC. Eventually the Jews were able to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, the city itself, and the temple. Later on, the Jews began to enjoy autonomy and prosperity. They began to flourish and even began to proselyte other people in the area and to grow in numbers. Indeed, the population of the Jews grew into the millions by the time of Christ. While Babylon became desolate, Judea flourished.

verses 4-21 Isaiah prophesies that the Israelites, once back in their homeland, will recite a taunt-song about the “king of Babylon.”

In verses 4-11 the object of the taunt song is the king of Babylon. If Isaiah had in mind an ancient historical setting, then the object of the song is indeed the historical character, the king of Babylon. If Isaiah, on the other hand, intended a latter day setting for these verses, then the king of Babylon is symbolic of Satan. In verses 12-20 the song is clearly directed at Satan himself. Likely these verses have two applications: Lucifer's fall from heaven during the premortal existence, and the time when Lucifer will be cast down to hell (outer darkness) after the Millennium.

4 And it shall come to pass in that day, that thou shalt take up this proverb against the king of Babylon, and say: How hath the oppressor ceased, the golden city ceased!

verse 4 "it shall come to pass in that day" The meaning of the time reference "in that day" depends on the intended subject of this prophecy. If ancient Babylon's king is intended, then it might refer to the time of Israel's return to Palestine in about 538 BC. If Satan and a latter-day context is intended, then the latter-day reference is likely. Perhaps both meanings were intended by Isaiah.

"thou shalt take up this proverb against the king of Babylon" A proverb is a song or saying. In this case, it is a song of derision against the king of Babylon. "Thou shalt sing this taunt-song, or satirical song, about the king of Babylon."

The taunt song shall say, "How the cruel king of Babylon has fallen, and how the tyranny has ceased." The "golden city" is the proud city of Babylon. Again, the king of ancient Babylon is a type for Satan in all dispensations.

5 The Lord hath broken the staff of the wicked, the scepters of the rulers.

verse 5 The Lord has terminated the power of these evil rulers, either the king of Babylon or Satan. The "staff" and "scepters" are the symbols of the rulers' power.

6 He who smote the people in wrath with a continual stroke, he that ruled the nations in anger, is persecuted, and none hindereth.

verse 6 A "continual stroke" implies constant and repeated blows. He who angrily oppressed the people and never stopped persecuting the nations he had conquered is brought down. This angry and wicked oppressor is either the king of Babylonia or Satan.

"none hindereth" No one restrains the bringing down of the Babylonian king. No one helps him or comes to his aid.

7 The whole earth is at rest, and is quiet; they break forth into singing.

verse 7 Babylon is destroyed; Satan is thrust down to hell. Now, at last, the whole earth enjoys rest and peace, and its people break forth into songs of joy. Enoch asked the Lord, "When shall the earth rest?" (Moses 7:58), to which the Lord responded, “for the space of a thousand years the earth shall rest” (Moses 7:64), referring to the Millennium, when Satan is bound and powerless.

8 Yea, the fir-trees rejoice at thee, and also the cedars of Lebanon, saying: Since thou art laid down no feller is come up against us.

verse 8 This imagery illustrates how those who once were persecuted by the king of Babylon will rejoice when he has become powerless. Fir trees, cypress, and Lebanon cedars may have been chosen for the imagery because Babylon harvested ancient forests of these species to support their extravagant building practices. The cypress trees and the cedars of Lebanon rejoice over the fallen king—the king of Babylon or Satan, saying: Since you are “laid down” in death, there is no one to cut us down. This verse recalls other scriptures in which God’s creations (the trees, forest, mountains, earth, and heavens) “break forth into singing” when the Lord redeems Jacob (Isaiah 44:23), comforts his people, and has mercy on the afflicted.

A “feller,” of course, is a woodsman or tree cutter and represents the king of Babylon or Satan.

9 Hell from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming; it stirreth up the dead for thee, even all the chief ones of the earth; it hath raised up from their thrones all the kings of the nations.

verse 9 Hell is the translation of the Hebrew Sheol meaning the underworld or the place of the dead. Sheol is translated as “grave” in verse 11. “Hell from beneath”—hell below is preparing to welcome the king of Babylon or Satan.

“it stirreth up the dead for thee” The New International Version reading here is instructive. It says that hell “rouses the spirits of the departed to greet you—all those who were leaders in the world, they are caused to rise from their thrones.” These will marvel that the mighty king of Babylon or Satan has been cut down and become like them.

10 All they shall speak and say unto thee: Art thou also become weak as we? Art thou become like unto us?

verse 10 All these dead kings in hell call out to the king of Babylon or Satan saying, “Now even you are as powerless as we are! You have become weak just like us!” During mortality, the king of Babylon, of course, ruled with glory and power and possessed great wealth and importance.

11 Thy pomp is brought down to the grave; the noise of thy viols is not heard; the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee.

verse 11 Now your glory and vanity are lost once you are placed in the grave. The “noise” or sound of your “viols”—the fiddles or violin-like instruments that previously honored thee, are no longer heard.

“the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee” Literally, “Your bed is maggots and your blanket is worms.” This describes a fallen and disgusting condition.

12 How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! Art thou cut down to the ground, which did weaken the nations!

verse 12 Lucifer, bright morning star, “you have fallen from heaven. You are thrown to the ground (actually cast out of heaven and into the earth), you who did previously conquer nations.” Lucifer was once a mighty individual, a truly eminent person in the premortal existence, before the Father cast him to earth with his angels. Referring to Satan, we read in modern revelation: “And was called Perdition [the lost one], for the heavens wept over him—he was Lucifer [the light bearer or “shining one”], a son of the morning” (D&C 76:26).

Isaiah indicates here that the object of this taunt song is no longer just the ancient historical king of Babylonia. Especially “honored” by the song now is Satan himself.

“which did weaken the nations” Satan’s work among the nations has brought dishonor, corruption, perversion, anarchy, immorality, exploitation, war, greed, and a myriad of other evils to every nation and people since the beginning: “And the children of men were numerous upon all the face of the land. And in those days Satan had great dominion among men, and raged in their hearts; and from thenceforth came wars and bloodshed; and a man’s hand was against his own brother, in administering death” (Moses 6:15).

13 For thou hast said in thy heart: I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God; I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north; verse 13 You have said resolutely, “I will climb up to heaven and place my throne above the stars of God. I will sit like a king on that mountain in the north where the gods assemble.”

To exalt here is to “raise with pride; to make undue pretensions to power, rank, or estimation” (Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language).

“thou hast said in thy heart” Satan was and is a self-centered individual who secretly makes his own plans without seeking God’s guidance.

“I will ascend into heaven” Even though Lucifer enjoyed a position of prominence in the premortal world, he was not content with his status, as it was below that of the Father. He said to the Father, “Give my thine honor” (D&C 29:36-37).

“I will exalt my throne above the stars of God” The inordinately ambitious Lucifer errs here in at least two regards. First, he believes that he is able to exalt or deify himself. Yet, the scriptures inform us that no one can become exalted without Jesus Christ and his atonement. Secondly, Lucifer speaks concerning his “throne.” Yet no one can possess a heavenly throne without overcoming the world and receiving God’s permission and blessing. “To him that overcometh will I grant to set with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne” (Revelation 3:21).

The “stars of God” are righteous people who are favored of God. Satan desires a throne higher than these righteous sons of God.

“the mount of the congregation” Alternate translations render this phrase “assembly of the gods” or “the mountain where the gods assemble.” This refers to the general assembly of the exalted where decisions have been made or are being made concerning the creation of the worlds and other eternal events. Lucifer desires to become part of this assembly which would give him equal power and authority with the gods.

“in the sides of the north” This is alternately translated “in the farthest north” and is an allusion to heaven, meaning a place far away from the habitations of humanity.

14 I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the Most High.

verse 14 I will ascend above the clouds—to heaven—and be like unto God. Ironically Lucifer wanted to ascend to heaven, yet he fell and was “cut down to the ground” (see verse 12).

The term “Most High” suggests a vertical hierarchy. God is higher than all. He is the Most High.

15 Yet thou shalt be brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit.

verse 15 Instead you will be thrust down into the deepest and darkest parts of hell—actually outer darkness. Satan sought a high position in heaven. Instead God will send him to the place farthest from heaven.

16 They that see thee shall narrowly look upon thee, and shall consider thee, and shall say: Is this the man that made the earth to tremble, that did shake kingdoms?

verse 16 Hell’s inhabitants will be amazed that Lucifer, who shook kingdoms with his evil intentions, has been brought down to the depths. They will “narrowly look upon thee,” that is, stare or squint at you—look at you “closely and with minute scrutiny” (Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language) and ask, “Is this the man who shook the earth and made kingdoms tremble?”

The word “man” here is Isaiah’s reminder that Lucifer is by no means a god.

17 And made the world as a wilderness, and destroyed the cities thereof, and opened not the house of his prisoners?

verse 17 Is this the man who turned the world into a desert and destroyed cities? Is this the man who never allowed his captives to go free?

“and opened not the house of his prisoners” This is perhaps a reference to the fact that Lucifer does not want his spiritual captives, or those bound by sin, to be released.

18 All the kings of the nations, yea, all of them, lie in glory, every one of them in his own house.

verse 18 “all of them, lie in glory, every one of them in his own house” The kings who ruled over telestial earth are buried in magnificent tombs decorated with marble. The implication is that Lucifer will not even enjoy this privilege.

19 But thou art cast out of thy grave like an abominable branch, and the remnant of those that are slain, thrust through with a sword, that go down to the stones of the pit; as a carcass trodden under feet.

verse 19 Here is imagery describing how the king of Babylon, a type of fallen Lucifer, will be treated. This verse conveys the idea that both the king of Babylon and Satan will ultimately receive no respect.

The grave of Nebuchadnezzar, Babylon’s king, has never been discovered, and Lucifer will never have a grave or a monument because he never received a body. The implication is that the body has never been buried, but abandoned like garbage. Thus Nebuchadnezzar, and also Satan, share the fate of the dead among the poorest people, like those stabbed in a brawl. Symbolically they are simply dumped into a stone-lined pit and left to the birds and animals.

This verse is a quote of Isaiah 14:19 where the word “raiment” in the book of Isaiah is rendered “remnant” here in this verse. Brother Sidney Sperry feels that the word raiment is more appropriate and should have been used. He suggested that the meaning of the verse is: “Clad with the slain, i.e., the corpse of the King of Babylon is surrounded by other dead bodies [in a common grave]” (Book of Mormon Compendium, 242).

20 Thou shalt not be joined with them in burial, because thou hast destroyed thy land and slain thy people; the seed of evil-doers shall never be renowned.

verse 20 “Renowned” means remembered by future generations. You are guilty of destructive and murderous acts against mankind and nature. Accordingly, you will not be buried like other kings with their large monumental tombs.

“the seed of evil-doers shall never be renowned” None of your evil kind will ever be honored. As mentioned above, Satan never received a body, and thus he cannot ever receive an honorable burial. We might interpret this as meaning that Satan and his sons of Perdition will be cast into outer darkness where there is none of God’s glory.

21 Prepare slaughter for his children for the iniquities of their fathers, that they do not rise, nor possess the land, nor fill the face of the world with cities.

verse 21 “Prepare slaughter for his children for the iniquities of their fathers” Let the slaughter begin. The children of evildoers will perish because they espoused the sins of their fathers.

“that they do not rise, nor possess the land, nor fill the face of the world with cities” The righteous will possess the lands of promise and build cities of Zion for the pure in heart. The wicked, however, will not be blessed to inherit such cities of Zion.

verses 22-23 These verses foretell the destruction of physical Babylon.

22 For I will rise up against them, saith the Lord of Hosts, and cut off from Babylon the name, and remnant, and son, and nephew, saith the Lord.

verse 22 The Lord says, “I will attack Babylon and bring it to ruin. I will leave no children or other survivors.

The phrase “the name, and remnant, and son, and nephew” implies that all will be destroyed. Absolutely all inhabitants will be destroyed.

23 I will also make it a possession for the bittern, and pools of water; and I will sweep it with the besom of destruction, saith the Lord of Hosts.

verse 23 I will turn Babylon into a marsh haunted by such as the “bittern.” A bittern is a fowl native to Europe. It has long legs and neck, and stalks among reeds and sedge, feeding upon fish. I will sweep Babylon with the “besom,” or broom, of destruction. Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines besom as, “a broom; a brush of twigs for sweeping.”

Isaiah uses the images of bitterns and owls to characterize desolate places.

There are a number of instances in original manuscript of the Book of Mormon where Dr. Royal Skousen feels that Oliver made a mistake in transcribing Joseph Smith’s dictation. If a word or a phrase was unknown to him, he substituted a more common word or phrase (but with varying degrees of success). In each of these cases, the substitution is found in the original manuscript and was later copied into the printer’s manuscript. It was then either corrected by the typesetter or appeared in the 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon. This verse offers such an example. In the original and printer’s manuscripts, this verse read “. . . and I will sweep it with the bosom of destruction.” The word bosom was changed to besom by the typesetter, and it therefore appeared in the 1830 edition. Dr. Skousen feels that the reading in the present edition is the correct one.

verses 24-27 Isaiah now continues with a short warning to Assyria.

24 The Lord of Hosts hath sworn, saying: Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed, so shall it stand—verse 24 The Lord God has sworn an oath: “What I have intended (“purposed”) will happen. What I have determined to do will be done.” And what is it the Lord has determined to do?

25 That I will bring the Assyrian in my land, and upon my mountains tread him under foot; then shall his yoke depart from off them, and his burden depart from off their shoulders.

verse 25 I will destroy the Assyrians in my land of Israel and trample them on my mountains. I will free my people from “his yoke” (Assyria’s vassalage) and from the burdens Israel has had to bear at Assyria’s hand. This defeat of Assyria likely occurred in 701 BC during the reign of King Hezekiah. The Assyrians under Sennacherib had laid siege to Jerusalem. Assyria seemed about to crush Jerusalem when a peculiar catastrophe suddenly struck the Assyrian army. Some accounts have it that 185,000 of the Assyrian soldiers died though this may have been a greatly exaggerated legend. At any rate Sennacherib departed quickly back to Nineveh (capital city of Assyria), never to return. For a more complete historical description of this event see the supplemental article, Historical Setting for the Book of Isaiah.

Symbolically or figuratively speaking the yoke of Assyria (which represents the world) is removed from covenant Israel as Israel accepts Jesus Christ and forsakes their sins.

26 This is the purpose that is purposed upon the whole earth; and this is the hand that is stretched out upon all nations.

verse 26 “This is the purpose that is purposed upon the whole earth” This is my plan for or my promise to the world, and it will surely come to pass.

“and this is the hand that is stretched out upon all nations” The Lord is in control of all nations and has power over all the earth, to punish and to reward.

27 For the Lord of Hosts hath purposed, and who shall disannul? And his hand is stretched out, and who shall turn it back?

verse 27 Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines disannul as, “To annul; to make void; to deprive of authority or force; to nullify; to abolish.” When the Lord has a plan, who has the ability to cancel or nullify his plans? He has stretched out his arm to punish or protect, and who shall stop him?

verses 28-32 Isaiah concludes with a warning to Philistia. The Philistines occupied the area of Palestine which is on the Mediterranean coast of Judah. The Philistines were often at war with the Israelites.

28 In the year that king Ahaz died was this burden.

verse 28 A “burden” is a prophecy of desolation or destruction on a wicked nation. Thus, this verse states that the following prophecy or warning to Philistia was given by Isaiah in the year that Ahaz died which was about 715 BC. The reader will recall that Ahaz was an unrighteous king of Judah who refused to follow Isaiah’s counsel (see the introductory commentary for 2 Nephi 17 and the supplemental article, Historical Setting for the Book of Isaiah).

29 Rejoice not thou, whole Palestina, because the rod of him that smote thee is broken; for out of the serpent’s root shall come forth a cockatrice, and his fruit shall be a fiery flying serpent.

verse 29 Before offering an interpretation of this verse, let us review a brief historical note. During the time of Isaiah, Philistia survived attacks by the Assyrian army under two different Assyrian kings, Shalmaneser and Sargon. The latter captured the Philistine city of Ashdod. At the time of the writing of this verse, yet another destruction of Philistia lay in the future. A third Assyrian king, Sennacherib, would later capture several Philistine cities and render them vassals of Assyria.

“Palestina” is Philistia or Palestine which consists of the five kingdoms, Gaza, Ekron, Gath, Ashdod, and Ashkalon.

“Rejoice not thou, whole Palestina, because the rod of him that smote thee is broken” People of Philistia, you have no reason to be glad simply because the rod that beat you is broken. The rod[s] that beat Philistia were the Assyrian kings Shalmaneser and Sargon. Isaiah warns the Philistines that they have no reason to rejoice just because Shalmaneser and Sargon are dead and that Assyria has lost her leader. Another oppressor king will follow.

“for out of the serpent’s root shall come forth a cockatrice” Apparently “the serpent’s root” is that place from which it gives birth. A “cockatrice” is a venomous snake. When one snake dies a more poisonous one comes in its place. The metaphor in this verse suggests that Philistia’s next oppressor will be somehow related to its first, perhaps a descendant.

“and his fruit shall be a fiery flying serpent” Isaiah again uses imagery to describe how the poisonous snake (Assyria) will yet produce offspring that will war against the Philistines. The serpent is called fiery probably because of its terrible burning venom. It is call flying probably because of the speed with which it strikes.

30 And the first-born of the poor shall feed, and the needy shall lie down in safety; and I will kill thy root with famine, and he shall slay thy remnant.

verse 30 “And the first-born of the poor shall feed, and the needy shall lie down in safety” The Lord will provide for those who are humble and righteous and who suffer (the poor and needy) even among the Philistines. They will join with the Zion people and be protected. The New International Version of the Bible suggests that the first-born of the poor are the “poorest of the poor.”

“I will kill thy root with famine, and he shall slay thy remnant” “Thy root” is your posterity. In essence Isaiah is saying, “But because of your disobedience, the Lord will send a terrible famine upon you Philistines (in Philistia or Palestine) that will kill all of you.” Note how the King James Version has Isaiah speaking for the Lord in both the first person (“I will kill thy root with famine”) and the third person (“he shall slay thy remnant”).

“he shall slay thy remnant” Even those few who survive the famine (“thy remnant”) shall be destroyed.

31 Howl, O gate; cry, O city; thou, whole Palestina, art dissolved; for there shall come from the north a smoke, and none shall be alone in his appointed times.

verse 31 “Dissolved” means destroyed.

“Howl and cry for help, all you Philistine cities! Be terrified, all of you. A cloud of dust is coming from the north—it is the Assyrian army, and none whom the Lord has designated shall avoid it.

Philistia was repeatedly invaded by Assyrian armies. It was finally Babylon, however, and Nebuchadnezzar who snuffed out any remaining sparks of Philistine independence in 604 BC.

“none shall be alone in his appointed times” The Jerusalem Bible reads “there are no deserters in those attacking Assyrian battalions,” which means that all enlisted men who belong to the Assyrian army are mighty warriors; there are no cowards or stragglers among them.

32 What shall then answer the messengers of the nations? That the Lord hath founded Zion, and the poor of his people shall trust in it.

verse 32 What then shall we tell the messengers or envoys that come to the promised land inquiring from other nations how they might be saved from Assyria’s destructive forces? We will tell them that the Lord has established Zion, and the meek and obedient shall find safety there. The poor also will find both temporal and spiritual salvation in Zion.

2 Nephi Chapter 25

Scripture Mastery

2 Nephi 25:23 For we labor diligently to write, to persuade our children, and also our brethren, to believe in Christ, and to be reconciled to God; for we know that it is by grace that we are saved, after all we can do.

2 Nephi 25:26 And we talk of Christ, we rejoice in Christ, we preach of Christ, we prophesy of Christ, and we write according to our prophecies, that our children may know to what source they may look for a remission of their sins.

Chapters 25 through 31 of 2 Nephi include Nephi's inspired "midrash" or commentary on Isaiah chapters 2 through 14 which were just quoted in 2 Nephi chapters 12 through 24. Chapters 25 through 33 of 2 Nephi may also be viewed as Nephi's final testimony or final warnings. He addresses his remarks primarily to three main groups of people: the Jews, the descendants of Lehi, and the Gentiles. Much of these final nine chapters in 2 Nephi contain prophecies including many applicable to the "last" or latter days.

Anciently the Jews were a blessed people, highly favored of the Lord. The tribe of Judah, along with the other tribes of Israel, was provided a choice promised land. Theirs was the calling to rule over Israel, and they did so in the form of the great kings like David and Solomon. To maintain their "covenant people" status, they had only to keep the commandments of God as taught and written by their prophets. Prior to Lehi's leaving Jerusalem, Israel's prophets taught the law of Moses, but they also foretold the fulfilling of that law one day by the Messiah who would be born through the Jews' own tribal lineage. In 2 Nephi 25, Nephi prophesies of the fate of the Jews—their rejection of the Savior, their scatterings and scourgings, and their eventual repentance.

After quoting thirteen consecutive chapters of Isaiah's writings in 2 Nephi 12-24 (Isaiah 2-14), Nephi begins to prophesy "in plainness." Chapter 25 might be considered a "message to the Jews"—an invitation for them to repent and return to the fold.

verses 1-7 In these verses Nephi identifies five important reasons why many of his own people cannot understand the writings of Isaiah (Isaiah in the Book of Mormon, edited by Donald W. Parry and John W. Welch, a FARMS publication, "Nephi's Keys to Understanding Isaiah," Donald W. Parry, 47-65):

1. They do not understand "the manner of prophesying among the Jews" (verse 1). Exactly what Nephi had in mind here is unclear, but he may have been referring to literary devices such as his use of symbolism, his poetic forms, and his use of unique prophetic phrases. Also, he may be referring to the historical, cultural, and theological elements that compose the prophetic style of Isaiah.

2. They were guilty of “works of darkness” and “doings of abominations” which caused them to lose their susceptibility to promptings of the Spirit of God (verse 2).

3. They lacked the “spirit of prophecy” (verse 4). See the commentary for verse 4 for a discussion of the “spirit of prophecy.”

4. They did not know the geography of the “regions round about” the city of Jerusalem (verse 6). There are, for example some forty geographic locations mentioned in the Isaiah materials in the Book of Mormon. Often Isaiah attaches a symbolic meaning to the place-name. For example, “Sodom” represents all wicked cities of the last days that will suffer the judgments of God. “Assyrian nations” represents warring nations of the last days which will fight against Israel. “Jerusalem” is symbolic of a holy or sacred city, a city of the Lord. The expression “ships of Tarshish” symbolizes the materialism and worldliness during the last days.

5. They did not live in the days in which the prophecies were fulfilled, the last days (verse 7). Some of the prophecies of Isaiah are now being fulfilled providing evidence that we live in the last days. These include the invitation for Israel to repent and cleanse themselves (Isaiah 1:16-20); the building of temples (Isaiah 2:1-5); the lifting of the ensign to the nations for Israel’s gathering (Isaiah 5:26-30; 11:11-16; 10:20-27; 14:1-3; 49:8-26; 55:12-13); the building of the army of Israel (Isaiah 13:1-5, compare D&C 105:26,31); the coming forth of the Book of Mormon (JST Isaiah 29:11-14); the welcoming of the Gentiles to the covenant (Isaiah 56:1-8); and the restoration of Zion (Isaiah 33:17-24; 35:5-10; 54:1-3).

1 Now I, Nephi, do speak somewhat concerning the words which I have written, which have been spoken by the mouth of Isaiah. For behold, Isaiah spake many things which were hard for many of my people to understand; for they know not concerning the manner of prophesying among the Jews.

verse 1 Speaking of his own people, Nephi says, “for they know not concerning the manner of prophesying among the Jews.” Nephi never completely explains what he means by this statement, so we are left to speculate (see also above). Perhaps the phrase “the manner of prophesying among the Jews” refers to the style in which the Israelite prophets preserved the Lord’s word. Isaiah’s words, for example, were written in a sophisticated literary form with abundant use of carefully crafted poetic styles and images. Understanding his writings requires an education in Jewish history, literature, cultural manners, and customs. In addition, one must have the “spirit of prophecy” spoken of in verse 4. Perhaps the writings of the Israelite prophets like Isaiah were not intended for all to understand.

The prophecies of Nephi and other Book of Mormon prophets, on the other hand, are written in “plainness” so that those who read them “may learn” (verse 4) more effectively.

“among the Jews” It might be useful to review the various meanings of the word “Jew.” In its purest sense, it refers only to the descendants of the tribe of Judah. In Nephi’s day the meaning had been expanded somewhat to include all those who lived in the southern kingdom of Judah regardless of their tribal origins. In this latter context, Nephi referred to himself and his descendants as “Jews” (2 Nephi 30:4). The term “Jew” has also been used to refer to all descendants of the house of Israel. This latter usage has been termed a “mistake” (see Bible Dictionary in 1979 LDS edition of Bible) though the usage is common today and even anciently (see 1 Nephi 5:6, 12). This latter usage probably has evolved from the Judahites’ preeminence and dominance in governmental matters within the house of Israel.

2 For I, Nephi, have not taught them many things concerning the manner of the Jews; for their works were works of darkness, and their doings were doings of abominations.

verse 2 The Promised Land culture of Nephi and his people was intended to begin afresh with a clean slate except for the vital brass plates. Thus, they would be free of the contaminating apostate influences of the Old World Jewish religious culture which was tainted with “works of darkness and . . . doings of abominations.” This fresh start, however, did produce the disadvantage of depriving Nephi’s people of the background vital to enable them to understand the somewhat esoteric writings of Israel’s prophets.

Speaking of the Hebrew poetic writing styles, the reader may notice the example of synonymous parallelism contained in this verse (see the supplemental article, The Hebrew Language and the Book of Mormon):

their works were works of darkness their doings were doings of abominations

3 Wherefore, I write unto my people, unto all those that shall receive hereafter these things which I write, that they may know the judgments of God, that they come upon all nations, according to the word which he hath spoken.

verse 3 In previous chapters, Nephi has quoted from Isaiah’s writings, and he acknowledges that many of his people will not understand these passages of Isaiah’s. Nephi intends that his own writings which follow be read and understood plainly by all those of his own culture and their descendants and by all who will read the Book of Mormon in the future.

“that they may know the judgments of God” Throughout Isaiah’s writings, Isaiah calls covenant Israel and all nations to repent of their sins and to come to the Lord. Nephi includes many of these passages in his writings as a warning to his own people and to future readers, including the Jews, the Lamanites, the Gentiles, and others of the house of Israel.

4 Wherefore, hearken, O my people, which are of the house of Israel, and give ear unto my words; for because the words of Isaiah are not plain unto you, nevertheless they are plain unto all those that are filled with the spirit of prophecy. But I give unto you a prophecy, according to the spirit which is in me; wherefore I shall prophesy according to the plainness which hath been with me from the time that I came out from Jerusalem with my father; for behold, my soul delighteth in plainness unto my people, that they may learn.

verse 4 This verse is felt to contain one of the great interpretive keys or secrets to understanding the book of Isaiah, indeed all scripture. Can you pick it out?

In order to understand the scripture an individual must be “filled” with the “spirit of prophecy.” And what is the spirit of prophecy? It is a susceptibility to the promptings of that same Spirit that has enabled the prophets to prophesy—the Holy Ghost. The angel speaking in Revelation 19:10 clearly states that “the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.” Which is it then? Is the “spirit of prophecy” a state of receptivity to the promptings of the Holy Ghost, or is it the testimony of Jesus which comes only through the ministrations, the repeated promptings, of the Holy Ghost? It seems that it is not possible to separate the two—a receptivity to the Holy Ghost and the testimony of Jesus. They are intimately and inextricably related. One cannot possess a testimony of Jesus without being susceptible to the promptings of the Holy Ghost. Such a testimony can only come through revelation, and revelation is received by mortals only through the ministrations of the Holy Spirit of God. Conversely, one cannot truly be filled with the Holy Ghost and not possess a testimony of Jesus. Indeed, the central purpose and function of the Holy Ghost is to testify of Christ! The student of the scriptures must keep in mind this vital and intimate relationship between a testimony of Jesus and susceptibility to the promptings of the Spirit!

Armed with the testimony of Jesus and the requisite relationship with the Spirit, we are prepared to read and understand the writings of Isaiah and indeed all the scriptures. We can truly come to understand the scriptures in no other way.

Lest we be guilty of being simplistic, it is important to realize that some book-learning and mental exercise is also important in understanding Isaiah’s writings. Since today most of us are not schooled in ancient Israelite culture, language, customs, and geography, it is necessary for us to have some help in these issues as we read and try to understand Isaiah (see verse 5 and its commentary).

“I give unto you a prophecy” This prophecy of Nephi comprises the remainder of Nephi’s writings in chapters 25 through 33 of 2 Nephi. A prophet, of course, cannot transmit information from God to man lest he be in tune with the Spirit. By the Spirit Nephi has come to truly understand the plans and purposes of God as he has studied the scriptures. This clear understanding enabled him to write and teach clearly and understandably—“in plainness.”

5 Yea, and my soul delighteth in the words of Isaiah, for I came out from Jerusalem, and mine eyes hath beheld the things of the Jews, and I know that the Jews do understand the things of the prophets, and there is none other people that understand the things which were spoken unto the Jews like unto them, save it be that they are taught after the manner of the things of the Jews.

verse 5 The previous verse provided us the first great key to understanding the scriptures. Now in this verse is found the second vital key. In order to be able to properly interpret scripture, a person must study and learn the sometimes-peculiar way in which the prophets wrote. He must know something about the history and culture and language of the prophet and the people to whom he is writing. No one can understand the Jewish prophetic writings, for example, lest “they are taught after the manner of the things of the Jews.” To put it in the vernacular, there is no “free lunch” in scripture study and understanding. Hard work and study are required. The Spirit seems more likely to assist those who show real effort and diligence in studying the scriptures. As contrasted with the first great key to scripture interpretation in verse 4, the “spirit of prophecy,” this second great key has been referred to as the “letter of prophecy” (Avraham Gileadi, The Book of Isaiah, a New Translation with Interpretive Keys from the Book of Mormon, 3-7). Often, assistance from other sources is also necessary and helpful to a true understanding of the scriptures.

6 But behold, I, Nephi, have not taught my children after the manner of the Jews; but behold, I, of myself, have dwelt at Jerusalem, wherefore I know concerning the regions round about; and I have made mention unto my children concerning the judgments of God, which hath come to pass among the Jews, unto my children, according to all that which Isaiah hath spoken, and I do not write them.

verse 6 Here Nephi says: Because I am educated in the culture and language of the Jews (“I, of myself, have dwelt at Jerusalem”), I am able to understand those prophecies of Isaiah and others which are applicable to my people (“I know concerning the regions round about . . . [of] . . . the judgments of God which hath come to pass among the Jews, unto my children”). I have told my people about the existence of these prophecies (“I have made mention unto my children concerning the judgments of God”), but as yet I have not written down my interpretations (“I do not write them”) nor have I taught my interpretations to my people (“I, Nephi, have not taught my children after the manner of the Jews”).

7 But behold, I proceed with mine own prophecy, according to my plainness; in the which I know that no man can err; nevertheless, in the days that the prophecies of Isaiah shall be fulfilled men shall know of a surety, at the times when they shall come to pass.

verse 7 Again, the prophet Nephi refers to the clear interpretation and explanation of Isaiah's prophecies which he is about to write. We will read this "plain" explanation in the remainder of this chapter and in 2 Nephi chapters 26-33. Those who read these chapters should be able to understand these prophecies clearly ("I know that no man can err"). Yet some will refuse to believe them until the prophecies are actually fulfilled and they are simply unable to deny them (see also the following verse).

8 Wherefore, they are of worth unto the children of men, and he that supposeth that they are not, unto them will I speak particularly, and confine the words unto mine own people; for I know that they shall be of great worth unto them in the last days; for in that day shall they understand them; wherefore, for their good have I written them.

verse 8 Take care to keep the pronouns—the "they"s and "them"s—straight in this verse Nephi is speaking of the prophecies of Isaiah and counseling those living in the latter days, particularly descendants of the Book of Mormon people, to pay heed to those prophecies.

9 And as one generation hath been destroyed among the Jews because of iniquity, even so have they been destroyed from generation to generation according to their iniquities; and never hath any of them been destroyed save it were foretold them by the prophets of the Lord.

verse 9 "And as one generation hath been destroyed among the Jews" This phrase likely has reference to the Babylonian captivity and destruction of Jerusalem in 587 BC.

"even so have they been destroyed from generation to generation" You might wonder which historical events had occurred to Jerusalem or the Jews prior to Nephi's writing this material which might correspond to this statement. Nephi, here, is writing somewhere around 550 BC. At that time, Jerusalem had been sacked by Babylon some four decades previously, but at the time of Nephi's writing Judah was still being held captive in Babylon. They weren't freed from captivity until about 538 BC. They could hardly have been "destroyed from generation to generation." Since the Babylonian captivity, they haven't been available for anyone to destroy them in their homeland. The likely explanation is that Nephi is prophesying in what is termed the "prophetic present" or the so-called "prophetic perfect" verb tense. That is, he is prophesying about events to occur in the future, yet he is using a verb form which suggests that they had already occurred.

The final concept in this verse, of course, calls to mind the oft quoted verse in Amos: "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets" (Amos 3:7).

10 Wherefore, it hath been told them concerning the destruction which should come upon them, immediately after my father left Jerusalem; nevertheless, they hardened their hearts; and according to my prophecy they have been destroyed, save it be those which are carried away captive into Babylon.

verse 10 The inhabitants of Judah had been warned by Lehi and by other prophets of their imminent destruction. This destruction was prophesied to occur shortly (“immediately”) after Lehi and his traveling company left Jerusalem. The destruction of Jerusalem by Babylon is recorded in the Bible in 2 Kings 25 and took place about 586 BC.

“according to my prophecy” Since the word “prophecy” usually concerns itself with future events, Nephi’s use of the word here is unusual. Jerusalem had already been destroyed by Babylon. “Prophecy” here means “discerning matters of the Spirit.” The “spirit of prophecy” includes the “spirit of revelation”—it is the susceptibility to receive revealed information from the Holy Ghost.

verses 11-12 Here Nephi refers to the Jews’ being taken captive in Babylon, and then he prophesies of their future.

11 And now this I speak because of the spirit which is in me. And notwithstanding they have been carried away they shall return again, and possess the land of Jerusalem; wherefore, they shall be restored again to the land of their inheritance.

verse 11 Nephi prophesies that those Jews taken captive in Babylon will one day return to the land of Jerusalem. He further prophesies (verse 15) that once back in Jerusalem, they will reject their Savior and eventually be “scattered by other nations.”

12 But, behold, they shall have wars, and rumors of wars; and when the day cometh that the Only Begotten of the Father, yea, even the Father of heaven and of earth, shall manifest himself unto them in the flesh, behold, they will reject him, because of their iniquities, and the hardness of their hearts, and the stiffness of their necks.

verse 12 “wars, and rumors of wars” Between the Jews’ return to Jerusalem in 538 BC and the Savior’s mortal advent, there was indeed considerable strife in Judah. For example, in 334 BC the young king of Macedon in Greece, Alexander the Great, conquered Palestine and introduced a hundred and fifty years of Greek rule to the area. The Greeks continually tried to choke out the Jewish religion and replace it with their own pagan form of worship. In 165 BC the Jews, led by Judas Maccabeus or Judas Hasmonaeus, rose up against this oppressive Greek rule. This was the so called Maccabean revolt and turned out to be a prolonged bitter civil war between the Jews and the ruling Greeks. The latter were finally driven out of Palestine in 143 BC, resulting in the Hasmonean dynasty. After nearly a century of Hasmonean or Maccabean rule, the descendants of the original Maccabees become incompetent and corrupt, and eventually the Jews rose up against them. In one battle some fifty thousand Jews died, and on another occasion about eight hundred Pharisees were crucified in Jerusalem, and their wives and children were killed before them as they hung on crosses. In 63 BC the Roman general Pompey marched on Jerusalem. As he stormed the temple, some twelve thousand Jews died. In 40 BC the Parthians or Persians invaded Palestine and deposed the ruling Roman puppet leaders. Three years later Rome retook control of the area.

“they will reject him, because of their iniquities” Sin renders man unqualified to possess the discerning power of the Spirit, and that man is inclined to reject eternal truths. Yet this rejection is often not without some evidence of ambivalence. When a truly vital truth, such as the divinity of Jesus, is rejected, the result is invariably bitterness, “hardness” of the heart, and “stiffness” of the neck. It is almost as if the individual who rejects the Savior senses that he might have made a fatal error and seeks for justification in trying to destroy that which he has rejected. See the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

13 Behold, they will crucify him; and after he is laid in a sepulchre for the space of three days he shall rise from the dead, with healing in his wings; and all those who shall believe on his name shall be saved in the kingdom of God. Wherefore, my soul delighteth to prophesy concerning him, for I have seen his day, and my heart doth magnify his holy name.

verse 13 “they will crucify him” Note here that even the specific manner of Jesus’s death was foreseen by prophets. They taught that he would die on a cross.

“with healing in his wings” This expression is also found in Malachi 4:2 where its contextual meaning is clear. After describing the latter-day cleansing of the earth where the wicked will “burn as stubble” just prior to the Lord’s second coming, Malachi describes Christ’s coming “with healing in his wings.” Christ’s coming will have salutary or healing effects on the death, misery, and destruction that will result from the cataclysmic cleansing of the earth. In the context of verse 13, it may be also assumed that Christ’s resurrection will have vital healing effects. He will solve the problems of physical and spiritual death and thus “heal” mankind of these afflictions.

“Wherefore, my soul delighteth to prophesy concerning him, for I have seen his day, and my heart doth magnify his holy name” This phraseology of Nephi’s bears a striking resemblance to the “Magnificat,” or song of praise, recited by Mary on meeting her cousin Elisabeth (see Luke 1:46-55). To magnify is to praise.

“I have seen his day,” of course, refers to the day of Christ’s mortal ministry which Nephi has seen in vision (1 Nephi 11:26-28).

verses 14-17 See the commentary for 1 Nephi 19:14 and 2 Nephi 9:2. These verses discuss why the Lord scatters a people.

14 And behold it shall come to pass that after the Messiah hath risen from the dead, and hath manifested himself unto his people, unto as many as will believe on his name, behold, Jerusalem shall be destroyed again; for wo unto them that fight against God and the people of his church.

verse 14 “hath manifested himself unto his people” This seems to refer to those relatively few to whom Jesus appeared between his resurrection and ascension.

“Jerusalem shall be destroyed again” Nephi has already been shown in vision the great destruction of Jerusalem by Babylon in 587 BC (2 Nephi 1:4). The final great destruction of Jerusalem came in AD 70 when Roman legions, led by Titus, besieged and ransacked the city and leveled the temple.

15 Wherefore, the Jews shall be scattered among all nations; yea, and also Babylon shall be destroyed; wherefore, the Jews shall be scattered by other nations.

verse 15 After prophesying of the great final scattering of the Jews, Nephi makes it clear who will do the scattering and why Babylon will not participate. Babylon will fall to Cyrus and the Persians in 539 B.C. Therefore Babylon, which was instrumental in the great “scattering” of the Jews in 587 BC, will not participate in the great final scattering of Jews following Judah’s destruction by Rome in AD 70.

16 And after they have been scattered, and the Lord God hath scourged them by other nations for the space of many generations, yea, even down from generation to generation until they shall be persuaded to believe in Christ, the Son of God, and the atonement, which is infinite for all mankind—and when that day shall come that they shall believe in Christ, and worship the Father in his name, with pure hearts and clean hands, and look not forward any more for another Messiah, then, at that time, the day will come that it must needs be expedient that they should believe these things.

verse 16 Note how clearly this verse differentiates between God the Father and God the Son. Some have suggested that the Book of Mormon is trinitarian in nature—that it teaches of only one God. We do understand this misconception. See “Trinity Doctrine and the Book of Mormon” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 4, chapter 4, The Trinity Doctrine.

When is the day when the Jews as a body will be persuaded to believe in Christ? The scriptures suggest it will not occur until after the Lord’s second coming (see D&C 45:43-53; Zechariah 13:6). After the Jews’ conversion, they will be gathered by the Lord to their promised land and establish themselves there in righteousness.

“with pure hearts and clean hands” This phrase is almost certainly a quote from Psalm 24, a psalm about entering the Jerusalem Temple and seeing the face of the God of Israel (See, e.g., Craig C. Broyles, “Psalms Concerning the Liturgies of Temple Entry,” in The Book of Psalms: Composition and Reception, ed. Peter W. Flint and Patrick D. Miller Jr., Leiden; Boston: Brill, 2005, 248–287). Psalm 24 depicts those wanting to enter the Jerusalem Temple as asking at the temple gates, “Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? Or who shall stand in his holy place?” and receiving the answer, “He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart” (Psalm 24:3–4). Reading further into Psalm 24, one encounters the idea that the group of people desiring to enter the temple have it as their goal there to see “the face of the God of Jacob” (Psalm 24:6 NIV, ESV). Or otherwise, can ye imagine yourselves brought before the tribunal of God, with your souls filled with guilt and remorse . . . Can ye look up to God at that day with a pure heart and clean hands? . . . Can you look up, having the image of God engraven upon your countenances?

Psalm 24:6 can be understood to associate entering the temple with seeing the face of God (See Bokovoy and Tvedtnes, Testaments, 57–58. Also Andrew C. Skinner, “Seeing God in His Temple: A Significant Theme in Israel’s Psalms,” in Ascending the Mountain of the Lord: Temple, Praise, and Worship in the Old Testament, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, 2013, 270–290).

If Nephi was consciously pointing his audience to a biblical psalm regarding temple entry and seeing the face of Jehovah, why do so here, in his commentary on Isaiah? What does entering the temple have to do with Nephi’s point about the Jews recognizing the Messiah? In this verse, Nephi states that the Jews will be scattered until they begin to “believe in Christ, the Son of God, and the atonement, which is infinite for all mankind,” and “worship the Father in his name,” and “not look forward any more for another Messiah.”

In conjunction with that occurrence, Nephi then quoted from Psalm 24. Since, in the mind of most ancient Israelites, terms such as atonement, worship, and name of God likely referred to elements of the temple, invoking this memorable phrase from Psalm 24 would have made sense to Nephi and his people in this context. Properly worshipping in a holy temple, they will be able to recognize the face of the true Messiah. The fact that Nephi quoted Psalm 24 in the context of the Jews’ recognizing their Messiah and also in the beginning of his inspired commentary on Isaiah chapters 2 through 14 has further significance. The Isaiah passages he chose started off with a prophecy of how people will gather themselves to the Temple, “the mountain of the Lord’s house” (Isaiah 2:2; 2 Nephi 12:2). So, Nephi would have seen the relevance of Psalm 24:3-4 to his point at hand.

Just as Isaiah’s prophetic witness in this part of the Book of Mormon began by inviting all people to come to the temple of the Lord, Nephi’s six-chapter-long prophecy and commentary began with a call for the Jews and all other people to be worthy to enter the temple, having “pure hearts and clean hands,” so that they will be able to recognize their Savior and be gathered to Him in the latter days. The connection between living worthily and someday seeing the face of Christ should not be lost on any modern students of the scriptures. In the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus taught: “Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God” (Matthew 5:8; also quoting Psalm 24). 1 John 3:2, similarly alluding to Psalm 24, states of those who are ready: “We know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.”

“and look not forward any more for another Messiah” Through apostasy, the concept of the Messiah was perverted among the Jews. The truth is that the Messiah was to be none other than the great God who would condescend to come to earth and redeem mankind from the fall of Adam. This true concept was found recorded on the brass plates and was taught among the Nephites. However, by the time of Christ’s mortal ministry, most Jews were looking more for a political redemption by a great Davidic king who would deliver them from their Roman oppressors. Today most Jews have more of a metaphorical view of the Messiah. They no longer look for a literal Messiah, but rather anticipate the coming of a great messianic age.

“it must needs be expedient that they should believe these things” The Jews will one day accept the Book of Mormon which was written at least in part for the “convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ.”

17 And the Lord will set his hand again the second time to restore his people from their lost and fallen state. Wherefore, he will proceed to do a marvelous work and a wonder among the children of men.

verse 17 This verse refers to the final gathering of Israel after the restoration of the gospel in the latter days.

“And the Lord will set his hand again the second time to restore his people from their lost and fallen state.” In a general sense, Christ has tried many times to gather Israel together (Matthew 23:37). In a more specific sense, one might point to two major attempted gatherings. The first was at the time of the Savior’s mortal ministry when he brought the gospel to the earth. During that period the keys of gathering were delivered to Peter, James, and John by Moses on the Mount of Transfiguration (Matthew 17). The second gathering is now in progress as Israel gathers to the gospel and to the stakes of Zion. In preparation for this gathering, Moses again returned the keys to the earth (D&C 110).

“to restore his people from their lost and fallen state” The “gathering” referred to here is the spiritual gathering and not just the temporal gathering. People must be gathered spiritually (converted to the gospel of Christ) before they are gathered temporally (allowed entrance into their promised land). To make possible this final gathering, the Lord will do a “marvelous work and a wonder among the children of men.”

That is, he will restore the gospel, including the necessary priesthood and keys. He will provide the Book of Mormon and other modern scripture.

It is pertinent to note here that at this point, Nephi may have come to realize that his own writings will play an important role in restoring Israel from “their lost and fallen state.”

18 Wherefore, he shall bring forth his words unto them, which words shall judge them at the last day, for they shall be given them for the purpose of convincing them of the true Messiah, who was rejected by them; and unto the convincing of them that they need not look forward any more for a Messiah to come, for there should not any come, save it should be a false Messiah which should deceive the people; for there is save one Messiah spoken of by the prophets, and that Messiah is he who should be rejected of the Jews.

verse 18 “he shall bring forth his words unto them” The scriptures both ancient and modern will be made available to the Jews.

“false Messiah” Throughout Jewish history there have been some specific personalities which have caused speculation and raised hopes of the Messiah’s advent.

19 For according to the words of the prophets, the Messiah cometh in six hundred years from the time that my father left Jerusalem; and according to the words of the prophets, and also the word of the angel of God, his name shall be Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

verse 19 “according to the words of the prophets, the Messiah cometh in six hundred years from the time that my father left Jerusalem” See the commentary for 1 Nephi 10:4.

“his name shall be Jesus Christ, the Son of God” It is interesting to note that other prophets also had revealed to them the name of the Savior including Adam (Moses 6:51-52), Enoch (Moses 7:50), Noah (Moses 8:24), and the brother of Jared (Ether 3:14). Jesus is the Greek form of the Hebrew name Joshua or Jeshua and means God is help or Savior. The title Christ is of Greek origin and means the anointed one. The Hebrew equivalent of this title is Messiah. See also the commentary for 3 Nephi 9:15.

20 And now, my brethren, I have spoken plainly that ye cannot err. And as the Lord God liveth that brought Israel up out of the land of Egypt, and gave unto Moses power that he should heal the nations after they had been bitten by the poisonous serpents, if they would cast their eyes unto the serpent which he did raise up before them, and also gave him power that he should smite the rock and the water should come forth; yea, behold I say unto you, that as these things are true, and as the Lord God liveth, there is none other name given under heaven save it be this Jesus Christ, of which I have spoken, whereby man can be saved.

verse 20 In order to fully understand the significance of this verse, turn to Numbers 21:4-9 and read the strange little story contained in those verses. Briefly, because of the sins of the Israelites in the wilderness, the Lord sent among them poisonous serpents which bit many, and, as a result, many died. Moses petitioned the Lord for a way to save his people from these serpents. In response, the Lord commanded Moses to make a serpent of brass and place it on a pole. Whosoever was bitten by a poisonous serpent could be saved from death by looking upon the pole.

Without help from more modern revelation like the Book of Mormon, it is difficult to know what to make of this story. There are only two verses in the New Testament that help in the interpretation of this anecdote. One is in John 3:14: "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up." The other is a more oblique reference found in 1 Corinthians 10:9.

Verse 20 and other verses in the Book of Mormon help us to fully recognize the profound significance of the story of Moses and the poisonous serpents. See also Helaman 8:13-16 and 1 Nephi 17:41 and Alma 33:19. Moses was a "type" of Jesus Christ. A "type" is "a person, thing, or event that represents or symbolizes another, especially another that it is thought will appear later; symbol; token; sign" (Webster's New World Dictionary of the American Language, 2nd college edition). Notice in the story how Moses was an advocate for the people just as Jesus is an advocate for the people before the Father. The serpent placed upon the pole is also a type of Christ. Its being placed upon a pole typifies the hanging of the Savior upon a cross. Moses was, in effect, lifting Christ up for all Israel to see. He was teaching them Jesus Christ. All those that look upon or accept Christ and his gospel shall be saved or exalted. Those who fail to do so will not. It is profoundly true that throughout the Old Testament we find types of Jesus Christ.

It is interesting to note that throughout the history of the world, many cultures have used the serpent as a symbol of either Deity or the devil. The symbol used by physicians today of the snake coiled about a pole likely had its origin in this story in the book of Numbers. It is humbling for your author to realize that in my profession our symbol of healing is the symbol of the Great Healer, Jesus Christ.

The accounts of Moses's smiting a rock to produce water for the Israelites may be reviewed in Exodus 17:6 and Numbers 20:11.

"as the Lord God liveth, there is none other name given under heaven save it be this Jesus Christ . . . whereby man can be saved" Here is one of the great passages of scripture worth memorizing and repeating often! Nephi here swears with an oath ("as the Lord God liveth") that his statement is true.

21 Wherefore, for this cause hath the Lord God promised unto me that these things which I write shall be kept and preserved, and handed down unto my seed, from generation to generation, that the promise may be fulfilled unto Joseph, that his seed should never perish as long as the earth should stand.

verse 21 “for this cause” Continuing the thought in the final sentence of the previous verse, the Book of Mormon record will be preserved to come forth in the latter day to bear witness of Jesus Christ.

“that the promise may be fulfilled unto Joseph” The Lord promised ancient Joseph in Egypt that his seed should not become extinct as long as the earth should last (2 Nephi 3:16). This promise was prophesied of, years before its occurrence, by the prophet Ether (Ether 13:7).

22 Wherefore, these things shall go from generation to generation as long as the earth shall stand; and they shall go according to the will and pleasure of God; and the nations who shall possess them shall be judged of them according to the words which are written.

verse 22 “these things” This phrase, as seen from the previous verse, refers to the writings of Nephi, indeed to the entire Book of Mormon. This scriptural record will be preserved “as long as the earth shall stand.” How long is this? Certainly at least to the end of the Millennium. Thus, the Book of Mormon will continue to be a precious and valuable scriptural source throughout the Millennium. Might we still be making use of the Book of Mormon even after the earth has become celestialized and serves as the abode for those blessed souls living in the presence of God?

23 For we labor diligently to write, to persuade our children, and also our brethren, to believe in Christ, and to be reconciled to God; for we know that it is by grace that we are saved, after all we can do.

verse 23 “For we labor diligently to write” It was not easy inscribing on metal plates. It was hard work, and it required diligent labor! But the purpose of the work, as outlined in the rest of the verse, makes it all worth while.

“reconciled to God” This phrase has a very specific meaning. A synonym is “justified.” It means to be forgiven of all sin and ready for exaltation. Please review the concept of justification in the introductory commentary for Alma 5. For a more detailed discussion of justification, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 17, Justification and Sanctification.

“for we know that it is by grace that we are saved” What is grace? The word grace is most specific in its meaning. It is the love which God has for us. But, particularly, it is that aspect of his love which inclines him to extend to us blessings we do not fully deserve. Are we really saved by grace? Or is it by our good works?

“after all we can do” The answer is that we are saved (exalted) by the combination of our good works and the Savior’s grace. For a discussion of these important concepts, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 4, chapter 11, Grace and Works.

24 And, notwithstanding we believe in Christ, we keep the law of Moses, and look forward with steadfastness unto Christ, until the law shall be fulfilled.

verse 24 “notwithstanding we believe in Christ” As explained in the previous verse, even though a Nephite or any other man were to live the law of Moses and even believe in Christ, it is still not possible for him to be saved without the grace of God—that incomparable love which Christ has for us which impels him to extend the blessings of the atonement to a man even though that man has not actually earned that honor through his performance in living the commandments according to the law of justice.

The meaning of this verse, then, is: “Notwithstanding” or even though a man believes in Christ, he must still “keep the law of Moses” that is, do good works and make a sincere and persistent effort to keep the commandments. He must also look forward “with steadfastness unto Christ” to the time when the Savior’s atonement is applied to him and he is “reconciled to God”—brought into position to enter God’s presence. In this manner, we say that through Christ’s atonement, “the law [of Moses] shall be fulfilled.”

25 For, for this end was the law given; wherefore the law hath become dead unto us, and we are made alive in Christ because of our faith; yet we keep the law because of the commandments.

verse 25 The “law” (of Moses) was a necessary school master. It was given to Israel (1) because of their inability to abide the terms of the everlasting gospel, and (2) to teach them of the need for a Redeemer. However, the law may be termed “dead” unto the Nephites because they understood that living it could never result in eternal life. Nephi teaches the concept of the deadness of the law to remind us that salvation is through Christ, not through obedience to the law of Moses. Only Christ’s atonement when coupled with obedience to the commandments can give man the opportunity for exaltation. Man is thus “made alive [eternally alive] in Christ.”

The phrase “alive in Christ” characterizes the life of a person blessed by the benefits of the atonement of Jesus Christ. Being reborn to a “life which is in Christ” (2 Nephi 25:27), he has been reawakened to things of righteousness. Figuratively, he is eating the “bread of life” (John 6) and drinking the “living water” Christ offers (John 4). These benefits, of course, are available to any individual through faith and obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel.

26 And we talk of Christ, we rejoice in Christ, we preach of Christ, we prophesy of Christ, and we write according to our prophecies, that our children may know to what source they may look for a remission of their sins.

verse 26 The appropriate position of Christ in our lives and in our hearts is at the very center. We need to become consumed with trying to learn of him and emulate him and obey him. We must teach our children to do the same. Only with Christ's consent can a man be forgiven of his sins and be exalted.

27 Wherefore, we speak concerning the law that our children may know the deadness of the law; and they, by knowing the deadness of the law, may look forward unto that life which is in Christ, and know for what end the law was given. And after the law is fulfilled in Christ, that they need not harden their hearts against him when the law ought to be done away.

verse 27 This verse reviews the concepts we have discussed in the previous verses.

“we speak concerning the law that our children may know the deadness of the law” The “law” here is the law of Moses. The law of Moses is “dead” in that a man cannot be saved or exalted through the law of Moses without the application of Christ's atoning blood. See The Law of Moses in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 16.

“that life which is in Christ” Eternal life in his presence.

“and know for what end the law was given” There can be no doubt that the law of Moses was a preparatory gospel. More specifically, the very purpose of the law of Moses was the typifying and prophesying of the Savior.

“they need not harden their hearts against him when the law ought to be done away” Here is a profound warning most appropriately directed to the Jews of the last two millennia. Unfortunately, the warning has gone largely unheeded by them. See the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

28 And now behold, my people, ye are a stiffnecked people; wherefore, I have spoken plainly unto you, that ye cannot misunderstand. And the words which I have spoken shall stand as a testimony against you; for they are sufficient to teach any man the right way; for the right way is to believe in Christ and deny him not; for by denying him ye also deny the prophets and the law.

verse 28 “by denying him ye also deny the prophets and the law” There is a great irony in the Jews' rejection of Jesus Christ. First, Jesus was the very being who gave the law to Moses anciently (3 Nephi 15:5). To the Pharisees Jesus said: “Ye keep not the law. If ye had kept the law, ye would have received me, for I am he who gave the law” (JST, Matthew 9:19). Secondly, the law, if properly understood, pointed directly to Jesus as the Messiah. Jesus further said: “Why teach ye the law, and deny that which is written; and condemn him whom the Father hath sent to fulfill the law, that ye might all be redeemed?" (JST, Luke 16:20).

29 And now behold, I say unto you that the right way is to believe in Christ, and deny him not; and Christ is the Holy One of Israel; wherefore ye must bow down before him, and worship him with all your might, mind, and strength, and your whole soul; and if ye do this ye shall in nowise be cast out.

verse 29 “the right way is to believe in Christ” In the Book of Mormon, the terms belief and believe most often refer to acceptance, trust, and confidence in God, his son Jesus Christ, and in the gospel (e.g., Mosiah 4:9-10; Alma 33:22; 3 Nephi 12:9; Mormon 7:9). To believe or hold a belief is a mental process. When we believe in something that is eternally true and then act upon it, our belief begins to turn to faith—actually the revealed form of faith. See the complete discussion of the types of faith in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapters 9, 10, and 11: Revealed Faith, Deliberate Faith and Revealed Faith, and Other Notes on Faith.

This verse spells out clearly the proper relationship we should have with Jesus. Is it possible to be too casual in our relationship with him? The scriptures are clear that in a genealogical sense he is our elder brother. He is, as are we, a spirit child of our Father in Heaven. We are also told that he loves us more than we can know, and that he is merciful and willing and anxious to forgive us our faults. Given just this information, one might make the mistake of coming to regard him as just our friend, our buddy, our pal. He is so much more. He is our God, our ideal, our exemplar. His is the only name under heaven by which any of us can be saved or exalted. Our charge in mortality is to pattern our lives after his life. We must seek to know, through scripture study and through prayer how he handled a myriad of life's experiences which we will also encounter in mortality. What were his attitudes, his feelings, his motivations, his perspectives? What did he say? What did he do? What did he think? We must then seek to do the same. We must become consumed with trying to emulate him. He must come to own us, to dominate us, to possess us, to have his way with us. We must struggle to be like him. In this manner we truly worship him.

30 And, inasmuch as it shall be expedient, ye must keep the performances and ordinances of God until the law shall be fulfilled which was given unto Moses.

verse 30 It is clear that obedience to the laws and ordinances we are given will ever be an essential principle of gospel living (see also Mosiah 13:30). This is deliberate faith. It is the conscientious and deliberate obedience even when—and especially when—it goes against the grain of our “natural self.” One may philosophize and theorize and debate and discuss to one's heart's content. Plain obedience will never be supplanted as an essential tenet of the gospel.

2 Nephi Chapter 26

Scripture Mastery

2 Nephi 26:22 Speaking of Satan and his secret combinations, Nephi wrote: He leadeth them by the neck with a flaxen cord, until he bindeth them with his strong cords forever.

2 Nephi 26:24 He doeth not anything save it be for the benefit of the world; for he loveth the world, even that he layeth down his own life that he may draw all men unto him. Wherefore, he commandeth none that they shall not partake of his salvation.

This chapter is Nephi's message to Lehi's descendants and to the Gentiles.

In verse 6 of this chapter and then beginning in verse 15, Nephi will begin to utilize again the writings of Isaiah. These writings are found in chapter 29 of the book of Isaiah in our King James Version. Nephi's utilization of the material in Isaiah 29 will continue through 2 Nephi 27. Rather than directly quoting Isaiah, however, he simply "likens" and utilizes some of Isaiah's words to create his own prophecy.

Nephi's version of Isaiah 29 contains much more material than Isaiah's. The verses in Isaiah 29 utilized in chapters 26 and 27 of 2 Nephi include Isaiah 29:3-24, a total of twenty-two verses. Nephi's utilization of this material is found in 2 Nephi 26:6 and from 2 Nephi 26:15 through 2 Nephi 27:35, a total of fifty-five verses. Obviously, Nephi's account of Isaiah 29 contains information that is not found in the Bible's version. Why is this so? It seems that Nephi's "version" is much longer simply because Nephi was only borrowing some of Isaiah's words as he likened Isaiah's writings and created his own prophecy.

In these prophetic writings, Isaiah and Nephi speak of judgments and destructions to be leveled against the wicked of the house of Israel. It seems clear that Isaiah intended that these judgments will be brought against the Jews in Jerusalem. In Isaiah 29:1-2, Isaiah directs his warnings to "Ariel, the city where David dwelt." Ariel means the hearth of God or the temple. It is another name for Jerusalem. This is a clear warning to those in Jerusalem. On the other hand, Nephi states in 2 Nephi 26 and 27 that these warnings and judgments of the Lord apply to his own descendants in the New World and not to the Jews in the Old World (see 2 Nephi 26:14-16). The ancient fulfillment of these biblical prophecies in Isaiah 29 would have occurred in 587 BC when Babylon attacked Jerusalem and in AD 70 when Rome destroyed the city. Nephi's version of these prophecies makes it especially clear that a latter-day time frame is intended (see 2 Nephi 26:14).

In 2 Nephi 26 only three verses can be said to be reasonably direct utilizations of verses from Isaiah 29. These are 2 Nephi 26:15-16, 18 which correspond to Isaiah 29:3-5. Even in these few verses, Nephi's version contains more information than is found in Isaiah's biblical account.

1 And after Christ shall have risen from the dead he shall show himself unto you, my children, and my beloved brethren; and the words which he shall speak unto you shall be the law which ye shall do.

verse 1 As Nephi prophesies of the future of Lehi's descendants, one of the most important prophecies is that of the resurrected Christ's visit to the Nephites. That prophecy is found in this verse.

"my children, and my beloved brethren" Nephi is prophesying to the Nephites who will be alive some 580 years hence, at the time of Christ's appearance in the western hemisphere.

"the law which ye shall do" The Savior, when he appears in person, will give the Nephites a new law which will replace the Mosaic law. When he appears to the Nephites, he will announce the fulfillment of the law of Moses and identified himself as the law (3 Nephi 15:9).

2 For behold, I say unto you that I have beheld that many generations shall pass away, and there shall be great wars and contentions among my people.

verse 2 After looking ahead to the appearance of Jesus to the Nephites, Nephi then backs up in time and comments upon the time that would intervene between his own day and the time of the Savior's coming. He sees a period of much war and contention.

verses 3-7 Nephi saw in vision the future of his people, and he saw the wickedness, wars, and destructions that would occur among them. He prophesied that the Nephites would be informed of the birth and death of Jesus by prophets of God and by a series of signs. Yet, some of the Nephites would persist in their wickedness and disbelief. Some of the signs, such as earthquakes and other natural calamities would cause the destruction of the more wicked among them. Then Jesus in his glory would appear personally to the "more righteous" part of the people who remained.

Here is another important "type" or symbol of things to come found in Old Testament period scriptures—in this case in the Book of Mormon. The destruction of the wicked at the time of Jesus's crucifixion and the two hundred year "golden era" of the Nephites that followed is a clear type of the ultimate latter-day cleansing of the earth which will precede the Savior's second coming and the Millennium which will follow.

3 And after the Messiah shall come there shall be signs given unto my people of his birth, and also of his death and resurrection; and great and terrible shall that day be unto the wicked, for they shall perish; and they perish because they cast out the prophets, and the saints, and stone them, and slay them; wherefore the cry of the blood of the saints shall ascend up to God from the ground against them.

verse 3 “after the Messiah shall come there shall be signs given unto my people of his birth” These signs will be described in 3 Nephi 1. Actually the signs will begin before, not “after,” Christ’s birth (see 3 Nephi 1:13).

“and also [signs] of his death and resurrection” These are described in 3 Nephi 8.

“they cast out the prophets . . . and stone them, and slay them” See Helaman 13:24-29. At the time of Christ’s crucifixion, the wicked among the Nephites will be destroyed by the dramatic natural disasters that will occur in the New World at that time. These wicked Nephites were those who had rejected the counsel of the prophets. Prophets are often inspired to expose the evil designs Satan has upon humankind. In his anger, Satan would have us destroy or “stone” the prophets. President Spencer W. Kimball taught that we mentally stone the living prophets by disregarding their counsel (“To His Servants the Prophets,” Instructor [August 1960] 95:257). When we rationalize and argue that the prophets and other General Authorities are not really in touch with how things really are, we are actually aligning ourselves with Satan. We are doing his bidding.

“the cry of the blood of the saints shall ascend up to God from the ground against them” When a murderer sheds blood, and the murder has not yet been avenged—the murderer has not yet been punished—the blood of the murder victim “cries from the ground.” Under the law of Moses “Whoso sheddeth man’s blood, by man shall his blood be shed” (Genesis 9:6). The unpunished murderer “defileth the land: and the land cannot be cleansed of the blood that is shed therein, but by the blood of him that shed it” (Numbers 35:30-34). If a murderer could not be found, the elders of the city where the murder occurred were to offer sacrifice and testify that they had neither shed the blood nor seen who did it. Then they were to plead, “Be merciful, O Lord . . . and lay not innocent blood unto thy people of Israel’s charge. And the blood shall be forgiven them” (Deuteronomy 21:1-9).

4 Wherefore, all those who are proud, and that do wickedly, the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, for they shall be as stubble.

verse 4 Note the similarity between this verse and Malachi 4:1. Is Nephi quoting from the prophet Malachi? This of course would be impossible since Malachi lived and prophesied some one hundred and fifty years after the prophet Nephi. Malachi’s prophecies were not contained on the brass plates. Did Malachi quote from the prophet Nephi? No, that would not be possible. The Book of Mormon plates were not available to Old World prophets. What is the explanation for the similarities of these verses? See the discussion of this issue in the commentary for 1 Nephi 22:15. Both Malachi and Nephi were probably quoting the prophet Zenos! Isn't Nephi mis-applying this prophecy of Zenos? Zenos was likely prophesying of the destruction of the wicked to occur just prior to the Savior's second coming in the latter days (see 1 Nephi 22:15). Yet here Nephi is applying this same prophecy to the devastation of the wicked that will occur in the western hemisphere at the time of Christ's crucifixion. Is this a legitimate use of scripture? It is indeed! Nephi is making use of one of his own principles of scripture interpretation—that of "likening" the scriptures. When Nephi "likens" the prophecies of Isaiah, he applies them to events that Isaiah may not have had in mind but this application is altogether appropriate (see 1 Nephi 19:23-24; 2 Nephi 11:2, 8).

5 And they that kill the prophets, and the saints, the depths of the earth shall swallow them up, saith the Lord of Hosts; and mountains shall cover them, and whirlwinds shall carry them away, and buildings shall fall upon them and crush them to pieces and grind them to powder.

6 And they shall be visited with thunderings, and lightnings, and earthquakes, and all manner of destructions, for the fire of the anger of the Lord shall be kindled against them, and they shall be as stubble, and the day that cometh shall consume them, saith the Lord of Hosts.

verses 5-6 Here Nephi graphically and somewhat figuratively portrays the fate of the wicked Nephites at the time of Christ's crucifixion.

"the fire of the anger of the Lord" Nephi implies that the "lightnings" and the other calamities mentioned were to be actually caused by the Lord himself. Another explanation for the upheaval of the elements at the time of the Savior's crucifixion is that the elements themselves—each and every one of which contain intelligences with agency—were in such agony and anguish over the Savior's suffering that they rose up on their own.

"they shall be as stubble" Stubble left after a harvest is dry and explosively flammable. Hence when the Lord destroys the wicked it will be like fire's burning stubble—fast and furious.

"the day that cometh" This will be at the time of Jesus's crucifixion.

7 O the pain, and the anguish of my soul for the loss of the slain of my people! For I, Nephi, have seen it, and it well nigh consumeth me before the presence of the Lord; but I must cry unto my God: Thy ways are just.

verse 7 After viewing this destruction of his unrighteous descendants, Nephi laments their loss. His comments indicate that he saw in vision these calamities and realized they were sent by God.

8 But behold, the righteous that hearken unto the words of the prophets, and destroy them not, but look forward unto Christ with steadfastness for the signs which are given, notwithstanding all persecution—behold, they are they which shall not perish.

verse 8 “look forward unto Christ with steadfastness” The word steadfastness here is rich in meaning. It suggests the quiet confidence of the righteous.

Here Nephi indicates that his obedient descendants will not be destroyed. This verse and those that precede it introduce an interesting spiritual law which pertains to this mortal earth. It is that the behavior of human beings can affect and influence the “natural” phenomena. Apparently God at times uses these “natural” occurrences to punish or reward his children. See also 1 Nephi 19:10-12. Also in 3 Nephi 9-10 the voice of the Lord proclaims that it is he himself who has sent the destructions in response to the wickedness of the people.

9 But the Son of righteousness shall appear unto them; and he shall heal them, and they shall have peace with him, until three generations shall have passed away, and many of the fourth generation shall have passed away in righteousness.

verse 9 “Son of righteousness” This phrase is found in Malachi 4:2, though it is rendered there “Sun of righteousness.” Presumably, again, both Nephi and Malachi are quoting the prophet Zenos though we have no record of Zenos’s using this phrase. Also this is another instance of Nephi’s “likening” the scriptures. This prophecy of Zenos’s was intended to apply to the Savior’s second coming. Here Nephi is applying it to the coming of Jesus to the Nephites.

“until three generations shall have passed away, and many of the fourth generation shall have passed away” This has reference to the several-year period of the golden age of the Nephites or the so-called mini-millennium following Jesus Christ’s visit to the Nephites. This lasted from AD 34 to about AD 200.

10 And when these things have passed away a speedy destruction cometh unto my people; for, notwithstanding the pains of my soul, I have seen it; wherefore, I know that it shall come to pass; and they sell themselves for naught; for, for the reward of their pride and their foolishness they shall reap destruction; for because they yield unto the devil and choose works of darkness rather than light, therefore they must go down to hell.

verse 10 “a speedy destruction cometh unto my people” Nephi foresees the great destruction of his people near the hill Cumorah in about AD 385 (Mormon 6).

“they sell themselves for naught” What is “naught”? The word “naught” actually, of course, means nothing. But here the word implies pride, power, materialism, wealth, fame, and title. In short, it is worldliness which is of zero value in an eternal context.

“for the reward of their pride and their foolishness they shall reap destruction” For a discussion of pride and how it leads to spiritual destruction, see “Pride” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 5, The “Natural Self” and “Spiritual Self.”

“they must go down to hell” Where will such people ultimately find themselves? Mostly in one of the two lesser degrees of glory, but not before they spend time in spirit prison which is often referred to in scriptures as “hell.”

11 For the Spirit of the Lord will not always strive with man. And when the Spirit ceaseth to strive with man then cometh speedy destruction, and this grieveth my soul.

verse 11 “For the Spirit of the Lord will not always strive with man.” It is impossible to comprehend spiritual and eternal matters without the influence of the Holy Ghost. The Holy Ghost will attend only those who are making an effort toward righteousness.

“when the Spirit ceaseth to strive with man then cometh speedy destruction” When the Spirit is withdrawn from man, his course is invariably rapidly downhill, away from eternal things and toward carnal concerns. The withdrawal of the Spirit is the spiritual death-knell, not only of an individual, but also of any civilized society.

verses 12-13 These two verses state clearly the central purpose of the entire Book of Mormon record: “the convincing of the Jews . . . [and] Gentiles . . . that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God; and he manifesteth himself . . . unto every nation.” The wording in these two verses is so similar to that used by Moroni in writing the title page for the Book of Mormon, that some have speculated that Moroni was probably influenced by these verses as he chose his wording for the title page.

12 And as I spake concerning the convincing of the Jews, that Jesus is the very Christ, it must needs be that the Gentiles be convinced also that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God;

verse 12 Nephi speaks here of the necessity of the Jews and Gentiles being convinced that the man Jesus, the very person whom he had seen in vision (1 Nephi 11), is (1) “the very Christ” and (2) “the Eternal God.”

Just exactly what concepts is Nephi stressing here? What does Nephi intend to teach when he says that Jesus is “the very Christ”? It should be pointed out that the word “Christ” seems to have originated from the Greek word “Christos.” Nephi would have never uttered this word since the Greek language did not reach the area of Palestine until after the conquering of the known world by Alexander the Great in about 334 BC which was long after Nephi left Judah. If Nephi did not say or write the word “Christos,” then what concept did he write that caused Joseph Smith to translate it as “the very Christ”? The words “Christ” and “Messiah” both have the same meaning. They mean the anointed one. Throughout Hebrew history, the Hebrew kings were anointed as they acceded to their office. Thus the kings were referred to as “the Lord’s anointed.” There was a strong Hebrew tradition that one day a “Prince of Peace,” a descendant of David, would come to power and govern all Israel. He will rescue Israel from all her oppressors and will govern in peace, justice, and righteousness, and his reign will have no end. This is the anointed one for whom Israel keeps watch. Nephi understood clearly that Jesus would be that long-awaited Messiah or Christ. Nephi also understood that Jesus would not be just another Hebrew king. He is the special anointed one for whom Israel waits, “the very Christ”—the King of kings.

Apparently, it is also essential that the Jews and Gentiles come to understand that Jesus is “the Eternal God”—Jehovah, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob—none other than he who gave the law to Moses on Sinai.

13 And that he manifesteth himself unto all those who believe in him, by the power of the Holy Ghost; yea, unto every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, working mighty miracles, signs, and wonders, among the children of men according to their faith.

verse 13 All who strive earnestly to believe in him and do his will, regardless of their race or station, are entitled to a witness from the Holy Ghost that he is in fact (1) the Christ and (2) the Eternal God. Once an element of faith is established among a people, he will further witness his divinity by “working mighty miracles, signs, and wonders” among them. And when are these great wonders to occur? See the next verse.

14 But behold, I prophesy unto you concerning the last days; concerning the days when the Lord God shall bring these things forth unto the children of men.

verse 14 “I prophesy unto you concerning the last days” Nephi is about to quote prophecies from Isaiah’s writings recorded in the King James Version of the Bible as chapter 29.

As mentioned in the introduction to this chapter, the setting of these verses in the book of Isaiah suggests that Isaiah was primarily prophesying about the Jews and Jerusalem (see Isaiah 29:1-2). Perhaps Isaiah also had in mind a latter-day application of these verses. Nephi makes it clear in verse 14 that he will apply these prophecies to the latter days and to the descendants of Book of Mormon peoples.

verses 15-16 These verses are Nephi’s version of Isaiah 29:3-4. In these King James Version biblical verses, Isaiah seems to be describing how the Lord will come against the Jews in Jerusalem until the Jews are brought to a humble state where their fallen nation will speak “out of the ground” and “low out of the dust.” This speaking to the world from “low out of the dust” might be interpreted figuratively to mean that she (Israel) will deliver her message from the depths of her humiliation. A more literal interpretation might also be intended. Israel’s words speaking “out of the ground” might mean that her scriptural records will be preserved in the earth for a time before coming forth to the world. If Isaiah intended that his prophecy apply to the Jews in the Old World, then one might postulate that these records speaking “out of the ground” might be the Dead Sea Scrolls or other scriptural records that are now buried in the ground and will yet come forth in the Old World. On the other hand, in the New World, the Book of Mormon fits such an interpretation and seems to be the meaning that Nephi intended to give this verse.

The reader may wish to review the supplemental article, Biblical Prophecies of the Book of Mormon.

15 After my seed and the seed of my brethren shall have dwindled in unbelief, and shall have been smitten by the Gentiles; yea, after the Lord God shall have camped against them round about, and shall have laid siege against them with a mount, and raised forts against them; and after they shall have been brought down low in the dust, even that they are not, yet the words of the righteous shall be written, and the prayers of the faithful shall be heard, and all those who have dwindled in unbelief shall not be forgotten.

verse 15 In this verse, Nephi makes it clear very early that he is likening and utilizing this verse and referring not to the Jews in Jerusalem but rather to “[his] seed and the seed of [his] brethren [who] shall have dwindled in unbelief.” He describes their being “smitten by the Gentiles.” The historical fulfillment of this prophecy will occur in the latter days when any remnants of Book of Mormon peoples are driven from their lands by either Spanish conquerors or the settlers of North America (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 13:14).

“camped against them round about, and shall have laid siege against them with a mount, and raised forts against them” These phrases reflect the ancient techniques of besieging a city. It means, “I will encamp against you and surround you. I will besiege you with towers, and I will raise siege works against you.” Because the descendants of Nephi and his brethren will have dwindled in unbelief, the Lord will send other nations to afflict them.

“after they shall have been brought down low in the dust, even that they are not” After these unbelieving Israelites have been humbled and even almost annihilated.

“yet the words of the righteous shall be written” Here is a plausible reference to the Book of Mormon recorded by righteous New World prophets.

The Lord will not abandon those of Nephi's descendants who will dwindle in unbelief. The prayers of the few faithful among them will not go unheard and unheeded.

16 For those who shall be destroyed shall speak unto them out of the ground, and their speech shall be low out of the dust, and their voice shall be as one that hath a familiar spirit; for the Lord God will give unto him power, that he may whisper concerning them, even as it were out of the ground; and their speech shall whisper out of the dust.

verse 16 “for those who shall be destroyed shall speak unto them” Again, Nephi likens this Isaiah verse and utilizes it to refer to some among the descendants of the Book of Mormon people who have been destroyed, namely the Book of Mormon prophets, who will speak to “them”—the latter-day survivors of the Book of Mormon people through the pages of the Book of Mormon.

“out of the ground” “speech shall be low out of the dust” “their voice shall be as one that hath a familiar spirit” “their speech shall whisper out of the dust” Nephi causes that all of these phrases have reference to the Book of Mormon and its plates’ coming forth from the ground or being unearthed by Joseph Smith and speaking to the latter-day descendants of Book of Mormon people in a manner that will ring true to them.

The expression “familiar spirit” suggests the idea of a departed spirit, a “ghost,” with whom it is possible for mortals to communicate. It also suggests the idea that the message of the spirit is “familiar” or rings true. The expression “familiar spirit” is found a few times in the Old Testament, including Isaiah 29:4. The expression is an English translation of the Hebrew word owb that refers to either a spiritual medium or necromancer who communicates with the dead or to a ghost or spirit who speaks through a necromancer. The latter definition applies in this verse.

“for the Lord will give unto him power that he may whisper concerning them” Now the topic turns from the book of Mormon prophets to a specific man who will come or speak to the descendants of the Book of Mormon people. Who is this man—who is “him”? Also to what does “them” have reference? It would seem that “him” refers to either the prophet Mormon or the prophet Joseph Smith. The antecedent of “them” is “those who shall be destroyed”—the Book of Mormon peoples.

17 For thus saith the Lord God: They shall write the things which shall be done among them, and they shall be written and sealed up in a book, and those who have dwindled in unbelief shall not have them, for they seek to destroy the things of God.

verse 17 This verse presents another pronoun obstacle course. See if you can pick out the meanings of the pronouns in the verse. “They [the Book of Mormon prophets] shall write the things which shall be done among them [the Book of Mormon people], and they [the things which shall be done among the Book of Mormon people] shall be written and sealed up in a book, and those who have dwindled in unbelief [in the latter days] shall not have them [the things written in the Book of Mormon], for they [the people in the latter days who have dwindled in unbelief] seek to destroy the things of God.”

In summary then, the Book of Mormon will not be brought “out of the ground” until after Nephi’s seed and the seed of his brethren the Lamanites have “dwindled in unbelief” and have been “smitten by the Gentiles” who will come among them.

18 Wherefore, as those who have been destroyed have been destroyed speedily; and the multitude of their terrible ones shall be as chaff that passeth away—yea, thus saith the Lord God: It shall be at an instant, suddenly—verse 18 “as those who have been destroyed” These are the descendants of Lehi who will suffer “speedily” the prophesied judgments of God and be destroyed for their disbelief. See the commentary for verse 10.

“the multitude of their terrible ones shall be as chaff that passeth away” The multitude of the foes of Lehi’s descendants shall be numerous, like dust or wheat chaff that blows by in the wind.

“It shall be in an instant suddenly” The Lord’s judgments come suddenly and unexpectedly.

19 And it shall come to pass, that those who have dwindled in unbelief shall be smitten by the hand of the Gentiles.

verse 19 Here is the same idea discussed in verse 15 above. It is also found in 1 Nephi 13:14.

20 And the Gentiles are lifted up in the pride of their eyes, and have stumbled, because of the greatness of their stumbling block, that they have built up many churches; nevertheless, they put down the power and miracles of God, and preach up unto themselves their own wisdom and their own learning, that they may get gain and grind upon the face of the poor.

verse 20 Now Nephi turns his attention to those “Gentiles” who will one day smite his unbelieving descendants. These are likely the non-native settlers of the Western Hemisphere, especially the early European settlers of the United States of America and Central America. Nephi issues them also a stern warning.

The Gentiles will suffer, not only from too much pride, but they will have their own “stumbling block.” What is this stumbling block of the Gentiles? The record of the Nephites (the Book of Mormon) will have been “sealed up,” literally in the ground for safekeeping (see verses 16 and 17). Here it will remain untouched and unaltered by human hands. This is, of course, in contrast to the Bible which has come down to us only after being altered by the hands of men. In this context, it is likely that the “stumbling block” of the Gentiles is the lack of knowledge and spiritual understanding that results from removal of “many plain and precious parts” from the Bible. Nephi uses similar wording in 1 Nephi 13:28-35 when he says that alterations and deletions have been made in the Bible: “Because of these things which are taken away out of the gospel of the Lamb, an exceedingly great many do stumble” (italics added).

“preach up unto themselves their own wisdom and their own learning” This colorful expression is found in no other place in the scriptures. Apparently, some in the latter-day apostate gentile churches will be less concerned with eternal truths than their own personal aggrandizement.

“grind upon the face of the poor” Again, here is another colorful expression which is unique in the scriptures to this verse alone. Its meaning is clear. Some of those in the apostate latter-day churches will place themselves and their own material successes ahead of the interests of the poor.

In the next several verses Nephi describes the conditions among the Gentiles in the latter days. Obviously it is a time of spiritual destitution.

21 And there are many churches built up which cause envyings, and strifes, and malice.

verse 21 Here are more problems to be found in the apostate latter-day churches among the Gentiles.

22 And there are also secret combinations, even as in times of old, according to the combinations of the devil, for he is the founder of all these things; yea, the founder of murder, and works of darkness; yea, and he leadeth them by the neck with a flaxen cord, until he bindeth them with his strong cords forever.

verse 22 “secret combinations” It is clear that from the time of our very earliest ancestors (Moses 5:18-51) Satan has “inspired” men to join together in secret works of evil. These secret combinations will play an important role in the downfall of the Book of Mormon people, and they certainly may be found upon the earth today.

“flaxen cord” The idea of flaxen cord seems to be that the devil might convince and beguile some men so that he might initially influence them only gentle and subtle manipulation—lead them about with a flimsy, thin (“flaxen”) cord. After a while, however, he has them bound firmly with strong cords, and they are lost.

Nephi’s use of the flaxen cord analogy recalls the binding of Samson and suggests that Nephi was familiar with that story and that some version of it may have been preserved on the brass plates.

The reader will recall that Samson, relying on his unusual strength, allowed the men of Judah to bind him and deliver him to the Philistines: “. . . and the Spirit of the Lord came mightily upon him, and the cords that were upon his arms became as flax that was burnt with fire, and his bands loosed from off his hands” (Judges 15:14). When a flaxen cord is burned, the ash retains the cord’s outward form but crumbles at the touch, making burned flax a suitable image for fragility. Later, Samson playfully allowed Delilah to bind him with green withes (willows) and with new ropes and to weave his hair into a web. In each case, he escaped easily, mocking the Philistines, until at last he was betrayed by his overconfidence, deprived of his strength, and bound with unbreakable fetters.

It is also significant that, of the prophets in the Book of Mormon, only Nephi, who was familiar with the Old World, mentions flax. Flax seems to have been unavailable in the New World, where cotton and hemp were used instead.

23 For behold, my beloved brethren, I say unto you that the Lord God worketh not in darkness.

verse 23 Clandestineness, secrecy, and mystery are hallmarks of Satan’s influence.

24 He doeth not anything save it be for the benefit of the world; for he loveth the world, even that he layeth down his own life that he may draw all men unto him. Wherefore, he commandeth none that they shall not partake of his salvation.

verse 24 “He doeth not anything save it be for the benefit of the world” “He,” of course, is Jehovah. It would seem that his very purpose for being is the exaltation of all mankind (Moses 1:39)—bringing his people home to his Father. Bringing all of us to our celestial homes is his passion, his obsession, his full-time work.

“he layeth down his own life that he may draw all men unto him” This phrase refers to a profound and important eternal principle. The Savior’s atonement provided him with a powerful ability to motivate men—that is, to draw men unto him. Following the Savior’s resurrection, he taught, “For this cause have I been lifted up; therefore . . . I will draw all men unto me” (3 Nephi 27:15; see also James 4:10). Because of his atoning sacrifice the Savior exerts a form of spiritual gravity that draws and entices all men unto him. This compelling force is always extended. It reaches out, penetrates every open heart, and helps to fire the desire to repent.

But how does the atonement motivate, invite, and draw all men unto the Savior? What causes this gravitational pull—this spiritual tug? The reason is based on a fascinating principle called “righteous suffering.” There is a certain compelling power that flows from righteous suffering—not indiscriminate suffering, not needless suffering, but righteous, voluntary suffering for another. Such suffering for another is the highest and purest form of motivation we can offer to those we love. Contemplate for a moment: How does one change the attitude or the course of conduct of a loved one whose every step seems bent on self-destruction? If example fails to influence, words of kindness go unheeded, and the powers of logic are dismissed as chaff before the wind, then where does one turn? Jag Pravesh Chader suggested an alternative approach: “When [they—kindness and logic] fail to produce any salutary effect, voluntarily [one] invites suffering in his own body to open the eyes of the person who is determined to see no light” (E. Stanley Jones, Mahatma Gandhi, 110).

Fasting has often been employed for just such a purpose. Abstinence does much more than make us hungry. It does more than refine our spirits. It has within it a certain inherent motivational power that can change and soften the hearts of others, particularly when they know we are fasting for them. Therein lies a force that can penetrate the granite walls of pride, replenish the barren reservoirs of humility, and engender increased affection and gratitude for him who so suffers.

A missionary evangelist, E. Stanley Jones, once asked Mahatma Gandhi as he sat on a cot in an open courtyard of Yeravda jail: “Isn’t your fasting a species of coercion?” “Yes,” he said very slowly, “the same kind of coercion which Jesus exercises upon you from the cross.” As Jones reflected upon that sobering rejoinder, he said: “I was silent. It was so obviously true that I am silent again every time I think of it. He was profoundly right. The years have clarified it. And I now see it for what it is: a very morally potent and redemptive power if used rightly. But it has to be used rightly” (Mahatma Gandhi, 110).

Not all suffering motivates for good. There is the suffering of the prison inmate, yet the prison houses continue to overflow. There is the recurring hurt and suffering of war, yet the world resounds with war and conflict. There is the suffering of those who contract contagious diseases from immoral conduct, but thousands continue to follow suit. And then there is the suffering of those pure and noble souls who are able to suffer beyond themselves, whose suffering has more than a purifying power for self. It also brings a redemptive power to others.

Mohandas Gandhi seized upon righteous suffering as a powerful motivational tool for good. Each of his fasts possessed a certain motivational power, but none had more far-reaching effects than the fasts at Calcutta and Delhi. Calcutta was a battleground of hate. Gandhi, a Hindu, stayed at a Muslim home in the heart of the riot district. Some Hindus were incensed at Gandhi’s conciliatory conduct towards the enemy. An attempt on his life failed. Various consortiums of hot-headed Hindu youth were sent to Gandhi to convince him of the error of his ways. Each time the youth would return and repeat, “The Mahatma is right.” The war continued. Finally, Gandhi announced a fast to the death unless the foes altered their course. It would be peace for them or death for him. After three days of fasting, the suffering of one revered by an entire nation proved too much for the people to bear. The softening and persuasive powers of his suffering melted “hearts of stone.” Weapons, from knives to guns, were laid at his feet. Almost overnight the healing occurred. Lord Mountbatten, one of the military leaders present observed, “What 50,000 well-equipped soldiers could not do, the Mahatma has done. He has brought peace” (Ibid., 116-17). And so he had.

Delhi was his next challenge. The tension was screw-tight. Gandhi proposed eight points on which Hindus and Muslims must reach accord, or again he would fast to the death. All eight points favored the Muslims. The risk was staggering, but his goal was honorable: to unify a divided nation. After six days the pact of peace was signed. E. Stanley Jones, present just before the fast, wrote: “This was no cheap signing of an ordinary peace pact. There was a moral quality here that made it different. His blood and their tears cemented the pact.” He also noted, “His method and his aim were right. . . . He shook that nation to its depths—shook it morally” (Ibid., 117-18). Through the power of righteous suffering a diminutive, seventy-nine-year-old man, waning in life, literally saved a nation by bringing it to its spiritual senses.

Suffering in behalf of another seems to have its major impact for good when at least four elements are present. First, the sufferer is pure and worthy. Second, the cause for which he suffers is just. Third, the recipient knows and loves the sufferer. And fourth, the recipient appreciates the cause for which the suffering occurs. When these four elements simultaneously exist, the chemistry for human behavioral change is explosive.

Just before the Church was organized the Lord gave some instructive counsel to Joseph and Oliver. He forgave them for their shortcomings and encouraged them to be faithful and keep the commandments. In so doing, he gave them a key to spirituality: “Look unto me in every thought. . . Behold the wounds which pierced my side, and also the prints of the nails in my hands and feet” (D&C 6:36-37). The Savior knew that an honest contemplation of the atonement turns our thoughts and actions heavenward. That is why we place such great emphasis on remembering the Savior and his atonement. It is a central component of the sacramental prayers (see D&C 20:77, 79). To “remember” the Savior’s sacrifice is a repeated theme of the scriptures (2 Nephi 10:20; Mosiah 4:11, 30).

“he commandeth none that they shall not partake of his salvation” There is nothing esoteric about the gospel of Christ. It is not intended for any elect or exclusive group. No one is excluded. It is intended for all. All are warned, and all may benefit and be exalted.

25 Behold, doth he cry unto any, saying: Depart from me? Behold, I say unto you, Nay; but he saith: Come unto me all ye ends of the earth, buy milk and honey, without money and without price.

verse 25 Here Nephi borrows phraseology from Isaiah (Isaiah 55:1) to state the idea the Christ is the “living water” and the “bread of life,” and he invites all to come unto him to obtain eternal gifts that may be acquired without money.

26 Behold, hath he commanded any that they should depart out of the synagogues, or out of the houses of worship? Behold, I say unto you, Nay.

verse 26 When Joseph Smith came to this passage in his translation, he was given, and therefore read, the word “synagogue.” Synagogue is a Greek word that means “gather together.” In this context, it means a place of gathering for religious purposes or a house of worship. Please see a discussion of other Greek words found in the Book of Mormon in the commentary for Jacob 7:27.

Until relatively recently, the common wisdom about the concept of the synagogue is that it did not exist until after the Babylonian captivity. Thus, Lehi and his traveling group would have had to leave Jerusalem and the Old World without being acquainted of the concept of the synagogue or place of gathering for religious purposes. However, Lee I. Levine, a leading scholar on the history of the synagogue, has suggested that synagogues did exist before the Babylonian captivity in the form of chambers in the city gates (“The Nature and Origin of the Palestinian Synagogue Reconsidered,” Journal of Biblical Literature 115 [1996]: 425-48). These early synagogues have been excavated at such important Old Testament sites as Beersheba, Gezer, Lachish, and Megiddo. Each of these has at least one chamber or room (which is nearly square) lined with stone benches around the interior walls, a single doorway, niches likely used for storing special ritual items, perhaps even sacred scrolls. If Levine is correct, then, before the Babylonian captivity, a town’s or city’s social activities centered around the city gate, and it seems reasonable that these social activities included Sabbath worship in a chamber of the gate that resembled later synagogues and functioned similarly.

Nephi’s straightforward use of a term that meant religious meeting place in this verse implies that he was personally familiar with some form of a place of worship in his original homeland.

27 Hath he commanded any that they should not partake of his salvation? Behold I say unto you, Nay; but he hath given it free for all men; and he hath commanded his people that they should persuade all men to repentance.

verse 27 “he hath given it free for all men” Salvation or exaltation is not “free,” that is, it is not earned without effort, but everyone, without paying, has the opportunity to decide to partake of (commit to) the gospel of Christ which “persuade[s] all men to repentance.” Thus, all are given “for free” the opportunity to start down that road to their sanctification and eventual exaltation.

28 Behold, hath the Lord commanded any that they should not partake of his goodness? Behold I say unto you, Nay; but all men are privileged the one like unto the other, and none are forbidden.

verse 28 “all men are privileged the one like unto the other” While God is “no respecter of persons” (Acts 10:34) and loves all his children unconditionally and equally, he does ultimately favor the righteous with blessings (1 Nephi 17:35). Jehovah taught Samuel: “The Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart” (1 Samuel 16:7). The real issue with God is righteousness, not race.

An English teacher today would prefer the final phrase in this verse to be “none is forbidden.”

29 He commandeth that there shall be no priestcrafts; for, behold, priestcrafts are that men preach and set themselves up for a light unto the world, that they may get gain and praise of the world; but they seek not the welfare of Zion.

verse 29 This verse contains a very succinct definition of “priestcraft.” Priestcraft is roundly condemned by the Lord. See also the commentary for 2 Nephi 10:5. Are there any practicing priestcraft today? Would any of the television evangelists qualify?

30 Behold, the Lord hath forbidden this thing; wherefore, the Lord God hath given a commandment that all men should have charity, which charity is love. And except they should have charity they were nothing. Wherefore, if they should have charity they would not suffer the laborer in Zion to perish.

verse 30 “this thing” Priestcraft.

Here is the specific antidote for priestcraft. It is charity or the “pure love of Christ.” He who serves with charity has no thought for personal gain. McConkie and Millet, in their book Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, eloquently stated: “Charity is the anthem of Zion, priestcraft the psalm of Babylon” (310).

“if they should have charity they would not suffer the laborer in Zion to perish” “They” refers to those who preach to or lead in the kingdom of God. This might also be stated, “If they would have charity their primary concern would be for those over whom they preside.” For a discussion of charity, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapters 6, 7, and 8: Charity as Empathy, Charity as a Revealed Sense of Others, and Applications of the Principles of Charity.

31 But the laborer in Zion shall labor for Zion; for if they labor for money they shall perish.

verse 31 The “laborer in Zion” is the leader of the kingdom of God. Here is a profound principle worth pondering. He who seeks after that which is eternal, shall have eternal life. He who labors for that which is perishable shall perish.

32 And again, the Lord God hath commanded that men should not murder; that they should not lie; that they should not steal; that they should not take the name of the Lord their God in vain; that they should not envy; that they should not have malice; that they should not contend one with another; that they should not commit whoredoms; and that they should do none of these things; for whoso doeth them shall perish.

verse 32 Those who practice priestcraft are motivated by things of the world. They will also indulge in these specific sins of the world. It is notable that Nephi refers to six of the ten commandments as he counsels the latter-day readers of the Book of Mormon. The word “whoredoms” is apparently synonymous, in the Book of Mormon text, with adultery.

33 For none of these iniquities come of the Lord; for he doeth that which is good among the children of men; and he doeth nothing save it be plain unto the children of men; and he inviteth them all to come unto him and partake of his goodness; and he denieth none that come unto him, black and white, bond and free, male and female; and he remembereth the heathen; and all are alike unto God, both Jew and Gentile.

verse 33 Again, today’s English teacher would prefer: “For none of these iniquities comes of the Lord.”

“he doeth nothing save it be plain unto the children of men” None of us will miss our opportunity for exaltation for failure to heed a gospel principle of which we are not aware. We will all have ample opportunity to hear and understand the vital saving principles.

“he remembereth the heathen” All peoples and nations will have an opportunity to hear the gospel (D&C 133:37).

2 Nephi Chapter 27

Scripture Mastery

2 Nephi 27 Nephi's "likens" some of the wording of Isaiah 29 to produce his own prophecy.

2 Nephi 27-30 Nephi prophesies of latter-day apostasy, the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, and the restoration of the gospel.

This chapter explains the role of the Book of Mormon in the latter days.

Before studying this chapter, please review the introductory commentary for 2 Nephi 26. Basically chapter 27 is Nephi's utilizing some of the Isaiah materials found in the King James Version in Isaiah 29:6-24. As mentioned in the commentary for 2 Nephi 26, however, there are differences between Isaiah's and Nephi's versions of these materials. Nephi's version contains some information not contained in the Bible's book of Isaiah. For example, there are no materials in Isaiah 29 which correspond to 2 Nephi 27:1, 6-14 and 20-23. Nephi's intended application of these prophecies is clearly the latter days, while Isaiah likely had in mind a historical application to ancient Judah.

Basically, then, in 2 Nephi 27, Nephi writes his own prophecy using several phrases and sometimes long blocks of text from Isaiah 29. Nephi "likens" Isaiah 29 to the period of Joseph Smith and the restoration. Nephi's use of Isaiah 29 is unique. He never outright claims to be quoting this chapter, like he does with Isaiah 48-49 (1 Nephi 21-22) and Isaiah 2-14 (2 Nephi 12-24). Instead, he makes frequent use of Isaiah 29's verbiage as part of his "own prophecy." Instead of directly quoting Isaiah 29, then, Nephi utilizes some of the verbiage of Isaiah 29 and expands on it. According to Robert A. Cloward, Nephi attributes none of this verbiage directly to Isaiah. "In fact, he repeatedly claims the words are his own or attributes them to the Lord" ("Isaiah 29 and the Book of Mormon," in Isaiah in the Book of Mormon, ed. Donald W. Parry and John W. Welch, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1998, 202).

1 But, behold, in the last days, or in the days of the Gentiles—yea, behold all the nations of the Gentiles and also the Jews, both those who shall come upon this land and those who shall be upon other lands, yea, even upon all the lands of the earth, behold, they will be drunken with iniquity and all manner of abominations verse 1 "the days of the Gentiles" In all of the scriptures, this exact expression is found only in this verse. However, this same time period is referred to elsewhere in scripture as the "times of the Gentiles" (D&C 45:25, 30). This period, obviously occurring in the "last days," will be that period when the fulness of the gospel will be found in the hands of the great Gentile nation. Through the efforts of "gentile" missionaries, the gospel will be disseminated to those of the house of Israel wherever they may be found throughout the world. As the remainder of this verse states, the “days of the Gentiles” will also be a time of universal apostasy and much wickedness “even upon all the lands of the earth.” A gentile nation is any nation that does not have the Lord Jesus Christ as its king. In the “days of the Gentiles” there will be many Gentile nations on the earth where will be found great wickedness. The “great Gentile nation” is, specifically, the United States of America.

“drunken with iniquity and all manner of abominations” A metaphor for the senselessness and recklessness of those who are wicked.

2 And when that day shall come they shall be visited of the Lord of Hosts, with thunder and with earthquake, and with a great noise, and with storm, and with tempest, and with the flame of devouring fire.

verse 2 “they shall be visited of the Lord of Hosts” In the days or times of the Gentiles, after the missionaries from the great Gentile nation have borne their testimonies to the world, then will come the testimony of the Lord which he will bear to the world, or “visit” upon the world, using the forces of nature. “Tempest” is simply another word for storm.

These are the “signs of the times” spoken of in latter-day scripture (D&C 45:25-38) by which the spiritually perceptive individual will know that the hour of the Lord’s second coming is nigh. These will include “wars and rumors of wars, and the whole earth shall be in commotion, and men’s hearts shall fail them.” The “love of men shall wax cold, and iniquity shall abound.” There will be “an overflowing scourge; for a desolating sickness shall cover the land.” There will also be “earthquakes . . . in divers places, and many desolations; yet men will harden their hearts against me, and they will take up the sword, one against another, and they will kill one another.” These signs will mark the beginning of the great cleansing of the earth during which there will be great destruction of the wicked people and their wicked ways. This great destruction, while it may be considered a “sign of the times,” it is given a more specific label. It is one of the “signs of the coming of the Son of Man” (D&C 45:39-50). If the reader would like to review a more complete discussion of these signs, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapters 24, 25, and 26: Signs of the Lord’s Second Coming—Introduction, Signs of the Lord’s Second Coming—Those that Warn, and Signs of the Lord’s Second Coming—Those that Punish and Cleanse.

3 And all the nations that fight against Zion, and that distress her, shall be as a dream of a night vision; yea, it shall be unto them, even as unto a hungry man which dreameth, and behold he eateth but he awaketh and his soul is empty; or like unto a thirsty man which dreameth, and behold he drinketh but he awaketh and behold he is faint, and his soul hath appetite; yea, even so shall the multitude of all the nations be that fight against Mount Zion.

verse 3 “as a dream of a night vision” In this latter day, the wicked who fight against Zion and expect to gain power over her, will be denied their expected victory, and they will be as empty and frustrated as a sleeper who dreams of food and drink but awakens faint from hunger and thirst.

“Mount Zion” The expression “Mount Zion” may properly be used to refer to the gathering places of the saints in the latter days.

4 For behold, all ye that doeth iniquity, stay yourselves and wonder, for ye shall cry out, and cry; yea, ye shall be drunken but not with wine, ye shall stagger but not with strong drink.

verse 4 Here Nephi addresses the wicked of the latter-days who are drunk with their own sins. Those who “imbibe” the world’s materialism, immorality, and idolatry tend to become intoxicated and addicted to that way of life and to that way of thinking. Like the drunkard, they are in a spiritual stupor (“stay yourselves and wonder”). The expression “cry out, and cry” is alternatively translated, “blind yourself, and be blind” (The Interpreter’s Bible) implying that the drunkard suffers from impaired vision. Finally, like the drunkard, the wicked cannot walk a straight line. They stagger because they walk in darkness and apostasy and have lost their spiritual faculties.

5 For behold, the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep. For behold, ye have closed your eyes, and ye have rejected the prophets; and your rulers, and the seers hath he covered because of your iniquity.

verse 5 “the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep” “ye have closed your eyes” Ye have acquired spiritual blindness. These latter-day wicked have spiritually fallen asleep and have not responded to the Lord’s attempts to communicate with them. In conditions of universal unresponsiveness, the Lord may temporarily withdraw his Spirit and cease his attempts to communicate. Thus, he may “[pour] out upon you the spirit of deep sleep” or “cover” his “seers” and “rulers,” that is deny access to prophets and seers.

verses 6-14 These verses in 2 Nephi 27 are additions to Isaiah 29 in that there are no materials in Isaiah 29 which correspond to them.

6 And it shall come to pass that the Lord God shall bring forth unto you the words of a book, and they shall be the words of them which have slumbered.

verse 6 Marking the end of the great period of apostasy will be the restoration and the coming forth in the latter days of the Book of Mormon. It will contain the messages or “words” of the Book of Mormon prophets who have “slumbered” in their graves for centuries.

7 And behold the book shall be sealed; and in the book shall be a revelation from God, from the beginning of the world to the ending thereof.

verse 7 “the book shall be sealed” The “book” refers to the Book of Mormon plates rather than to the Book of Mormon itself. It is likely that this prophecy refers to the portion of the plates of Mormon that Joseph Smith described as being sealed when he took possession of them. These are the plates of Mormon. This sealed portion contained the visions of the brother of Jared including his vision of things “from the beginning of the world to the ending thereof.” For a more complete discussion of this sealed portion of the plates of Mormon, see the supplemental article, Those Confusing Book of Mormon Plates.

Again, we see that Nephi is merely likening or utilizing the words of Isaiah to write his own prophecy. In the book of Isaiah, Robert A. Cloward explained, the sealed book is symbolic. “No specific book is mentioned” by Isaiah, whose “concern was the lost vision of his people, not books. . . . Isaiah’s symbolic sealed book is still sealed today” (“Isaiah 29 and the Book of Mormon,” in Isaiah in the Book of Mormon, ed. Donald W. Parry and John W. Welch, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1998, 200). But Nephi’s sealed book is real, and it has come forth in the latter-days. Brother Cloward explained: “It was Nephi who made Isaiah’s symbolic book into a literal book. Nephi likened the symbolic book in Isaiah’s simile to a literal, specific record the Lord had commanded him to write on gold plates. Nephi also foretold the latter-day role of his record in restoring vision, understanding, and doctrine to the house of Israel (Ibid., 201).

8 Wherefore, because of the things which are sealed up, the things which are sealed shall not be delivered in the day of the wickedness and abominations of the people. Wherefore the book shall be kept from them.

verse 8 “because of the things which are sealed up” Apparently this sealed portion of the plates contains spiritual truths we are not yet ready to receive.

“the things which are sealed shall not be delivered in the day of the wickedness and abominations of the people” Bruce R. McConkie said, “It seems apparent, under all the circumstances, that the sealed portion of the Book of Mormon will not come forth until after the Lord Jesus comes” (The Millennial Messiah, 114).

“the book shall be kept from them” Here “the book” refers to the entire set of plates from which Joseph Smith translated the Book of Mormon (the plates of Mormon and the small plates of Nephi). Because of the unbelief of the people, they will not be privileged to view these plates, but rather will be expected to content themselves with studying Joseph Smith’s translation of them.

9 But the book shall be delivered unto a man, and he shall deliver the words of the book, which are the words of those who have slumbered in the dust, and he shall deliver these words unto another;

verse 9 “the book shall be delivered unto a man” The “book,” or the entire set of Book of Mormon plates, shall be delivered to Joseph Smith, Jr.

As mentioned previously, “those who have slumbered in the dust” are the Book of Mormon prophets who had been dead for centuries by the time the Book of Mormon was translated.

“he shall deliver the words of the book . . . unto another” Who is this individual unto whom Joseph Smith will deliver the words of the book? It is likely Martin Harris. We are familiar with the story of how Martin Harris took the sample of the writing on the plates to Professor Charles Anthon in New York (see JS-H 1:63-65). Perhaps this is the event to which Nephi is referring.

10 But the words which are sealed he shall not deliver, neither shall he deliver the book. For the book shall be sealed by the power of God, and the revelation which was sealed shall be kept in the book until the own due time of the Lord, that they may come forth; for behold, they reveal all things from the foundation of the world unto the end thereof.

verse 10 “the words which are sealed he shall not deliver” Joseph did not translate, or even open, any of the sealed portion of the plates.

“neither shall he deliver the book” Joseph did not allow the plates themselves to pass to another.

“until the own due time of the Lord” As discussed in the commentary for verse 8, it is suggested that we will not have access to the translation of the sealed portion of the plates until after the Lord’s second coming.

“they reveal all things” See the commentary for verse 7. The sealed portion of the plates contain a grand panoramic vision of the Brother of Jared in which he was allowed to view the earth from its beginning to its end.

11 And the day cometh that the words of the book which were sealed shall be read upon the house tops; and they shall be read by the power of Christ; and all things shall be revealed unto the children of men which ever have been among the children of men, and which ever will be even unto the end of the earth.

verse 11 “the day cometh” The “day” referred to here is the Millennium. Apparently, the Millennium will be a time of great revealed knowledge. “In that day when the Lord shall come, he shall reveal all things. Things which have passed, and hidden things which no man knew, things of the earth, by which it was made, and the purpose and the end thereof. Things most precious, things that are above, and things that are beneath, things that are in the earth, and upon the earth, and in heaven” (D&C 101:32-34). Can you imagine anything more exciting than having access to this abundant revealed knowledge!

A most interesting concept has been discovered by Brother John W. Welch which has added new insight into and raised new questions about the significance of the sealed portion of the plates of Mormon. He has discovered the fascinating and widespread ancient practice of finalizing documents, especially important legal (and by analogy covenantal documents), by having them doubled, sealed, and witnessed as part of their preservation and authentication. Essentially, a document deemed worthy of preservation or one that may need additional authentication would be (1) duplicated (typically in an abridgement) or written in two parts, with one part sealed with wax or clay impressions, (2) witnessed by two or three parties, and (3) stored for preservation (typically in an archive or some form of earthenware).

The legal ramifications for such a practice were, in part, that if disputes arose over a contract, for example, the document could be brought forth to settle the dispute. Being sealed and witnessed, the document could be counted on as carrying the utmost authenticity (John W. Welch, "Doubled, Sealed, Witnessed Documents: From the Ancient World to the Book of Mormon," in Mormons, Scripture, and the Ancient World Studies in Honor of John L. Sorenson, ed. Davis Bitton, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1998, 396-418). Brother Welch explained, "The basic concept of preserving important ancient documents by preparing them in two parts and then sealing one of the two was common throughout much of the ancient world." One can see this occurring in the Book of Mormon, where the composition of the plates followed a similar pattern. As such, "this practice seems to have been known to Nephi and may well have influenced his prophetic expectations and statements about the final form of the Nephite records (Ibid., 291).

Brother Welch has also documented this phenomenon occurring throughout Near Eastern history. Importantly, it is known to have occurred in ancient Israel circa 600 BC, thus dating this practice contemporaneously to the opening of the Book of Mormon. Two clear examples from that time period are found in Jeremiah 32:9-14 and Ezekiel 2:9-10.

Brother Welch has explained how this is directly relevant to the Book of Mormon. "One portion of the Nephite record was sealed; the other part was open," he wrote. "Consistent with the ancient practices and requirements" and "for security and preservation, the plates were buried; they were both sealed and sealed up" (Ibid., 422). In other words, part of the Book of Mormon plates were physically sealed, and the entire set of plates were sealed up, that is, hidden in the earth for preservation, following ancient practice.

With this we can better understand what the Book of Mormon means when it refers to itself as a "sealed" book. It is a book that, for all intents and purposes, an official agent has notarized, making it binding and authentic. Thus, the compilers of the Book of Mormon can now be seen as being consistent with ancient legal formalities. "To the ancient mind," Welch noted, "formalities such as these were the essence of the validating and conserving documents and proclamations of utmost significance. More specifically, the Book of Mormon is indeed a binding document, a legal warning, a proclamation, a testament, covenant, and contract. Its provisions are about covenants of the Lord." Readers can therefore better understand why Nephi, Mormon, and Moroni "would associate this legal form [of sealing a document], typically used for legal contracts, with the final presentation of the Nephite records (Ibid., 427).

Normally, an ancient Israelite would have called two or three witnesses to affix their seals and to stand as witnesses that the finished document was authentic and truthful, but, of course, Moroni had no one around to serve this role. Turning instead to the Three members of the godhead, whom he and all people can always call upon, he assured his readers that if they would inquire with a sincere heart and with real intent, then the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost would stand as his witnesses to testify the truth of this record as of all things (Moroni 10:4-5).

This concept raises an interesting question regarding the content of the sealed portion of the plates. Is the content merely a second copy of the open and available portion—which second copy is intended simply for authentication purposes? Or does it contain new material not covered in the open portion of the record? Perhaps we will just have to wait and see.

12 Wherefore, at that day when the book shall be delivered unto the man of whom I have spoken, the book shall be hid from the eyes of the world, that the eyes of none shall behold it save it be that three witnesses shall behold it, by the power of God, besides him to whom the book shall be delivered; and they shall testify to the truth of the book and the things therein.

verse 12 “the book shall be hid from the eyes of the world” Again, the word “book” refers to the plates and not to the translated Book of Mormon.

“save it be that three witnesses shall behold it, by the power of God” It seems likely that this verse (along with verse 22) was a trigger for the experience of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon. These witnesses were, of course, Oliver Cowdery, Martin Harris, and David Whitmer. It is interesting that section 17 of the Doctrine and Covenants, which concerns itself with the three special witnesses of the Book of Mormon, was received in June of 1829, about the time when the final translation of the Book of Mormon was being completed. Keep in mind that the final books to be translated were those contained on the small plates of Nephi including 1 Nephi, 2 Nephi, Jacob, Enos, Jarom, and Omni (see the supplemental article, Those Confusing Book of Mormon Plates). Thus, it seems likely that about the time this verse was translated, Joseph sought and received D&C 17. There are also other verses in the Book of Mormon that refer to special witnesses including 2 Nephi 11:3 and Ether 5:2-4.

13 And there is none other which shall view it, save it be a few according to the will of God, to bear testimony of his word unto the children of men; for the Lord God hath said that the words of the faithful should speak as if it were from the dead.

verse 13 “save it be a few” How many are a “few”? In 1 Peter 3:20, the author talks about “the days of Noah ... wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water” (emphasis added). Since Nephi also used the word few, it is plausible that Joseph Smith understood that word to call for eight further witnesses. These witnesses were Hiram Page, Joseph Smith, Sr., Hyrum Smith, Samuel H. Smith, Christian Whitmer, Jacob Whitmer, Peter Whitmer, Jr., and John Whitmer. Like the Three Witnesses, none of the Eight ever denied their testimony, despite that fact that some left the Church (Richard Lloyd Anderson, “Attempts to Redefine the Experience of the Eight Witnesses,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 14, no. 1, 2005: 18–31, 125–127).

In March 1876, when only he and his brother David remained of the eleven witnesses, John Whitmer reflected: “I have never heard that any one of the three or eight witnesses ever denied the testimony that they have borne to the Book as published in the first edition of the Book of Mormon. . . . Our names have gone forth to all nations, tongues and people as a divine revelation from God. And it will bring to pass the designs of God according to the declaration therein contained (John Whitmer to Mark H. Forest [Forscutt], March 5, 1876; cited in Anderson, “Personal Writings,” 55).

“the faithful should speak as if it were from the dead” The Book of Mormon prophets will speak to the world through the medium of the Book of Mormon as if it were “from the dead” or “from the dust” (2 Nephi 3:19).

14 Wherefore, the Lord God will proceed to bring forth the words of the book; and in the mouth of as many witnesses as seemeth him good will he establish his word; and wo be unto him that rejecteth the word of God!

verse 14 The expression “words of the book” may be taken to mean the messages and concepts taught in the Book of Mormon.

“and in the mouth of as many witnesses as seemeth him good will he establish his word” Nephi also stated that the Lord would show the plates to “as many witnesses as seemeth him good” (2 Nephi 27:14). Many Latter-day Saints are not aware that, consistent with this verse of scripture, there were other, “unofficial” witnesses to the plates. Most of these people had accidental or incidental experiences with the plates. Josiah Stowell, for instance, caught a glimpse of the plates when a corner of the covering slipped off as Joseph handed them to him (See “Mormonism,” New England Christian Herald 4, no. 6, Boston, Massachusetts; November 7, 1832; reprinted in Morning Star 8, no. 29, Limerick, Maine; November 16, 1832; transcripts online at: <http://www.sidneyrigdon.com/dbroadhu/NE/miscne01.htm#110732> <http://www.sidneyrigdon.com/dbroadhu/NE/miscMe01.htm#111632>

Significantly, Mary Whitmer, mother of four of the Eight Witnesses, had a divinely sanctioned encounter. She was shown the plates by the angel Moroni (Three different accounts are all transcribed in Royal Skousen, “Another Account of Mary Whitmer’s Viewing of the Golden Plates,” Interpreter: A Journal of Mormon Scripture 10, 2014: 35–44). Other women, such as the prophet’s mother Lucy, and his wife Emma, interacted with the plates, bore witness of their reality and testified to the truth of the Book of Mormon (See Amy Easton-Flake and Rachel Cope, “A Multiplicity of Witnesses: Women and the Translation Process,” in The Coming Forth of the Book of Mormon, 133–153).

Steven C. Harper, of the Church Historical Department, wrote that the witnesses’ testimonies “are some of the most compelling evidence in favor of its miraculous revelation and translation” and went so far as to say that, “For believers,” such testimony “approaches proof of Joseph Smith’s miraculous claims” (“The Eleven Witnesses,” in The Coming Forth of the Book of Mormon: A Marvelous Work and a Wonder, ed. Dennis L. Largey, Andrew H. Hedges, John Hilton III, and Kerry Hull, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, 2015, 119). Richard L. Bushman explained that, “The witnesses’ statements were an effective demonstration of authenticity for a skeptical age.” To that, he added, “Secular historians have never come to grips with the fact that none of the eleven who saw the plates (in addition to Joseph Smith) ever recanted” (Richard Lyman Bushman, “The Recovery of the Book of Mormon,” in Book of Mormon Authorship Revisited, 33).

Yet there is more value to their witness than mere evidence. Each of the witnesses—in his or her own, unique way—offers an example of dedication, commitment, faith, and sacrifice. None was simply a neutral observer. They were faithful and committed individuals, who were granted their witness because of their hard work, sacrifice, and dedication. After seeing the plates, all of them bore witness to what they knew to the end of their lives, even as some “tended to compete rather than cooperate with [Joseph Smith’s] leadership” (Richard Lloyd Anderson, “Cowdery, Oliver,” in Encyclopedia of Mormonism, 1:338, brackets added). When outside the Church, some faced immense peer-pressure to deny their testimonies, yet held firm to what they saw and heard. For example, William E. McLellin was an early Mormon who personally knew all of these Book of Mormon Witnesses. In a recently found collection of his writings, McLellin tells of instances where one of the witnesses stood by his testimony even when subjected to “beating and pounding . . . with whips and clubs.” On another occasion, with their lives threatened by mobbing and lynching, David Whitmer and Oliver Cowdery adamantly testified to McLellin, “Brother William, God sent his holy angel to declare the truth of the translation of it to us, and therefore we know. And though the mob kill us, yet we must die declaring its truth.” Said McLellin, “Boys, I believe you. I can see no object for you to tell me falsehood now, when our lives are endangered” (Mitchell K. Schaefer, “The Testimony of Men’: William E. McLellin and verse 15-19 These verses correspond to verses 11 and 12 in Isaiah 29. You will note that Nephi’s version in 2 Nephi 27:15-19 is expanded over that in Isaiah 29:11-12.

15 But behold, it shall come to pass that the Lord God shall say unto him to whom he shall deliver the book: Take these words which are not sealed and deliver them to another, that he may show them unto the learned, saying: Read this, I pray thee. And the learned shall say: Bring hither the book, and I will read them.

verse 15 “him to whom he shall deliver the book” This is Joseph Smith, Jr.
“another” This is Martin Harris.

The “learned” is Charles Anthon, a professor of classical studies at Columbia College.

“Bring hither the book, and I will read them.” We are familiar with the story of Martin Harris’s visit to Professor Charles Anthon in New York bearing a copy of some of the characters from the plates along with their translation. It seems likely that Martin was motivated to make this trip to satisfy his nagging doubts about the plates. Yet we see that Martin’s trip was a fulfillment of ancient prophecy. After Professor Anthon had given Martin a certificate certifying the authenticity of the copied characters which Martin had shown him, the following occurred: “I took the certificate and put it into my pocket, and was just leaving the house, when Mr. Anthon called me back, and asked me how the young man found out that there were gold plates in the place where he found them. I answered that an angel of God had revealed it unto him. He then said to me, ‘Let me see that certificate.’ I accordingly took it out of my pocket and gave it to him, when he took it and tore it to pieces, saying that there was no such thing now as ministering of angels, and that if I would bring the plates to him he would translate them. I informed him that part of the plates were sealed, and that I was forbidden to bring them. He replied, ‘I cannot read a sealed book’” (JS-H 1:61-65).

16 And now, because of the glory of the world and to get gain will they say this, and not for the glory of God.

verse 16 This verse refers to the final sentence in the previous verse, and explains Professor Anthon’s motivation in offering to translate the gold plates. It certainly was not to further God’s purposes, and it probably was not based entirely on scientific curiosity. Rather, apparently, he saw an opportunity to get rich by marketing his “translation” of the gold plates.

In 1834, Professor Anthon denied that he told Martin Harris that the Book of Mormon characters resembled Egyptian. Not only did Martin Harris report that he did confirm their authenticity, but he returned home, told his friends about the experience, and later mortgaged his property to finance the publication of the Book of Mormon. Whatever happened during Martin Harris's visit to Dr. Anthon, Harris obviously came away very reassured.

There is another piece of evidence indicating that Martin Harris and not Charles Anthon was telling the truth about their visit. In 1831 W. W. Phelps, in a letter, wrote that Anthon had translated the Book of Mormon characters and declared them to be "the ancient shorthand Egyptian." Brother Phelps could have only heard this phrase from Martin Harris, and it was not within Harris's background to make up a phrase like that. He must have heard it from Dr. Anthon himself. At the time this phrase was known to scholars, including Dr. Anthon. The world had been taught the secrets of translating ancient Egyptian hieroglyphics by the brilliant Frenchman, Jean Francois Champollion. He had broken the code by using the Rosetta Stone which contained a text repeated three times in Egyptian hieroglyphics, in Demotic or common Egyptian, and in Greek. Champollion's work had been published in 1822, and it had been reviewed in June 1827 in the American Quarterly Review, which referred to hieratic Egyptian script as "short-hand" Egyptian (Number 2 [June 1827]: 450). Anthon was familiar with this review. He owned a copy and he cited it in his Classical Dictionary. Anthon would have read this review only months before Harris's visit. Thus it is probable that W. W. Phelps heard this peculiar phrase from Harris, who in turn got it from Anthon, the only person involved who was likely to have known it. Anthon probably mentioned shorthand Egyptian because he was struck by certain obvious similarities in the transcript to hieratic or demotic Egyptian. We can only conclude that Harris told the truth about what Anthon said during their meeting. Anthon's motive for later denying his confirmation to Martin Harris was likely to protect his prestigious standing among his peers. It was a professional liability for Anthon to have been linked with the Mormons and with Joseph Smith (Re-exploring the Book of Mormon, edited by John W. Welch, 73-75).

"will they say this" Apparently Charles Anthon was not the only one who offered to translate the plates for their own selfish purposes.

17 And the man shall say: I cannot bring the book, for it is sealed.

verse 17 "The man," of course, is Martin Harris.

"for it is sealed" This apparently refers to the sealed portion of the plates of Mormon (see the supplemental article, Those Confusing Book of Mormon Plates).

18 Then shall the learned say: I cannot read it.

19 Wherefore it shall come to pass, that the Lord God will deliver again the book and the words thereof to him that is not learned; and the man that is not learned shall say: I am not learned.

verse 19 “him that is not learned” This phrase and this verse have reference to Joseph Smith, Jr.

20 Then shall the Lord God say unto him: The learned shall not read them, for they have rejected them, and I am able to do mine own work; wherefore thou shalt read the words which I shall give unto thee.

verse 20 “I am able to do mine own work” This important theme, which will be reiterated in verses 21, 23, and 26, is that the Lord will bring forth his word and bring about his purposes by faith and miracles and not by the worldly wisdom and sophistication of learned men. It is clear that the Lord did not want the Book of Mormon to come forth through the erudition of the world. It is generally by faith and miracles rather than worldly means that the Lord accomplishes his purposes (D&C 1:24; 1 Corinthians 1:27).

verses 21-23 Material corresponding directly to these verses are not found in Isaiah 29 but are an addition to Isaiah’s writings made by Nephi.

21 Touch not the things which are sealed, for I will bring them forth in mine own due time; for I will show unto the children of men that I am able to do mine own work.

verse 21 This verse and the following verse contain the Lord’s instructions to Joseph Smith, Jr. We have already speculated that the Lord’s “own due time” will be following his second coming.

“I am able to do mine own work.” See the commentary for verse 20.

22 Wherefore, when thou hast read the words which I have commanded thee, and obtained the witnesses which I have promised unto thee, then shalt thou seal up the book again, and hide it up unto me, that I may preserve the words which thou hast not read, until I shall see fit in mine own wisdom to reveal all things unto the children of men.

verse 22 As mentioned, in this verse the Lord is instructing Joseph Smith.

“then shalt thou seal up the book again” Joseph Smith will return the plates to Moroni.

“the words which thou hast not read” This is a reference to those things contained on the sealed portion of the plates.

“until I shall see fit in mine own wisdom to reveal all things unto the children of men” It seems likely that a diligent study of the scriptures available to us today is essential to our being able to fully appreciate and anticipate with relish the eventual revelation of “all things unto the children of men.”

23 For behold, I am God; and I am a God of miracles; and I will show unto the world that I am the same yesterday, today, and forever; and I work not among the children of men save it be according to their faith.

verse 23 Here is a reiteration of the important theme discussed in the commentary for verse 20. The Lord will work among the children of men according to their faith and not according to their intellectualism and erudition. Some might misconstrue this concept and conclude that intellectual pursuits are evil. They are not. The ideal balance seems to be to develop your mental capabilities to their utmost and be diligent in acquiring knowledge, but then remain humble and teachable. The consummate scholar knows well his limitations and realizes how relatively little man is given to know. Indeed, it is only after admitting his lack of understanding that he is able to acquire fresh knowledge and make new discoveries.

verses 24-35 The remaining verses in chapter 27 correspond directly to Isaiah 29:13-24.

24 And again it shall come to pass that the Lord shall say unto him that shall read the words that shall be delivered him:

25 Forasmuch as this people draw near unto me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their hearts far from me, and their fear towards me is taught by the precepts of men—verses 24-25 “him that shall read the words that shall be delivered him” Who is this individual? The clue is found in verse 22. It is Joseph Smith, Jr. To what specific interaction between Joseph Smith and the Lord are these verses referring? This is a prophecy of Joseph Smith’s first vision!

verse 25 What a chilling indictment of the latter-day Christian churches! The Lord says, in essence, “They give me lip service only but they feel no heart-felt devotion. Their actions show that they do not love me.” In other words, the Lord says, “They are hypocrites.”

“their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men” “Fear” is regard or reverence. Their worship of me is a mere repetitive litany written by men.

26 Therefore, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, yea, a marvelous work and a wonder, for the wisdom of their wise and learned shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent shall be hid.

verse 26 “I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, yea, a marvelous work and a wonder” Here is the well-known prophecy of the latter-day restoration of the gospel, including the coming forth of the Book of Mormon.

“wisdom of their wise and learned shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent shall be hid” Refers to the false teachings that will be exposed by the marvelous work and a wonder. The worldly wisdom of the apostate churches pales when compared to revealed knowledge. To “perish” is to die out. “Prudent” means wise.

Elder Bruce R. McConkie has listed eleven elements to be included in the restoration: [1] gospel knowledge, [2] opening of the heavens (visions, revelations, ministering of angels), [3] priesthood and keys, [4] coming of Elias, [5] gift of the Holy Ghost, [6] gifts of the Spirit, [7] true church with its divinely inspired organization, [8] apostles, prophets, and other church officers, [9] gathering of Israel, [10] establishment of Zion, and [11] temple ordinances (Mormon Doctrine, 635).

27 And wo unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord! And their works are in the dark; and they say: Who seeth us, and who knoweth us? And they also say: Surely, your turning of things upside down shall be esteemed as the potter’s clay. But behold, I will show unto them, saith the Lord of Hosts, that I know all their works. For shall the work say of him that made it, he made me not? Or shall the thing framed say of him that framed it, he had no understanding?

verse 27 “And wo unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord!” The Hebrew word that is here translated as “counsel” might well have been sod. This Hebrew word has a double meaning and might well be translated as secrets. See also 2 Nephi 28:9. Thus those who “seek deep to hide their counsel” are those who try desperately to hide their secret and wicked acts and thoughts from the Lord, an undertaking which is, of course, impossible. Yet they are foolish enough to think they are successfully hiding, and they ask, “Who sees us, and who knows us”?

“Surely, your turning of things upside down shall be esteemed as the potter’s clay.” Unrighteous individuals are inclined to regard some commandments as an unwarranted intrusion into their natural inclinations—“turning of things upside down.” In this verse these individuals are compared to clay and the Lord to a potter. A potter can do anything he wants with his clay. These unrighteous individuals may accuse the Lord, their Creator, “You may have formed us [as a potter forms clay], but you don’t really understand our true nature.” This metaphor makes clear the foolishness of mortals who presume to be wise or more knowledgeable than their Creator (cf. D&C 10:5-34).

The Lord answers, “I know all [your] works”—your real motivations, and especially your real potentials, your true nature. In distorting and hiding the truth, you call black white and white black. Shall the potter be regarded as less wise than his clay?

28 But behold, saith the Lord of Hosts: I will show unto the children of men that it is yet a very little while and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field; and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest.

verse 28 Lebanon is a small country just north of Palestine and west of Syria on the eastern coast of the Mediterranean Sea. The vegetation and animal life in Lebanon today apparently is not as abundant as it was anciently. In early times, it was famous for its wine (Hosea 14:7), its cedars (1 Kings 5:14), its cypresses (1 Kings 5:8), and its wild animals (2 Kings 14:9). The fragrance of its trees is alluded to in Hosea 14:7. Today its trees are mostly gone, its animals are scarce, and its foliage is scanty.

In the latter days (see the following verse), Lebanon will be restored, literally or figuratively, to its former condition. It shall be “esteemed” or regarded as a forest.

A figurative or metaphorical interpretation of this verse is most plausible. The verse is a metaphor which suggests a change of values and perceptions among humankind. As a result of the marvelous work and a wonder, the forests of Lebanon (a type for the pride and worldliness of people; 2 Nephi 2:12-13; 19:9-10) will be replaced by fruitful fields (a type for productive covenant people of the Lord; e.g., Isaiah 27:6; 37:31; cf. 2 Nephi 15:1-7). At that day these fruitful fields will be valued and esteemed just as much as the forests once were (cf. Isaiah 32:15).

29 And in that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book, and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity and out of darkness.

verse 29 In the latter days the spiritually blind and deaf will be helped to see and hear by the Book of Mormon.

30 And the meek also shall increase, and their joy shall be in the Lord, and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel.

verse 30 The “meek” and the “poor” are likely those who are unencumbered by things of the world. They are humble before God. These shall rejoice in the restoration of the gospel.

31 For assuredly as the Lord liveth they shall see that the terrible one is brought to naught, and the scorner is consumed, and all that watch for iniquity are cut off;

verse 31 “the terrible one is brought to naught” As a result of the marvelous work and a wonder, Satan and those who follow him in rejecting and fighting against the Lord and his covenants will be silenced and destroyed.

Others who will be destroyed include:

“the scorner” The scorner is one who rejects the Lord and his truth with derision and contempt.

“all that watch for iniquity” These are those who are ever alert to opportunities to do evil.

32 And they that make a man an offender for a word, and lay a snare for him that reproveth in the gate, and turn aside the just for a thing of naught.

verses 32 Others who will be destroyed include:

“they that make a man an offender for a word” Here the Lord condemns those who would look for reasons to accuse and blame others through a distorted and critical weighing of others’ words.

“lay a snare for him that reproveth in the gate” Lay an unfair trap for him who seeks to find justice or carry out justice. The area near the gate of a city was used anciently to conduct judgment and other types of business (cf. Deuteronomy 21:19; Ruth 4).

“turn aside the just for a thing of naught” With specious (intentionally misleading) arguments deny justice to the innocent. They reject truth and justice for some vain and temporal reward (cf. 2 Nephi 28:16; 29:3).

33 Therefore, thus saith the Lord, who redeemed Abraham, concerning the house of Jacob: Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face now wax pale.

verse 33 “who redeemed Abraham” In what way did the Lord redeem Abraham? It is difficult to know exactly what is meant by this phrase. The word redeem might be defined as to rescue, to buy back, to set free by paying a ransom, or to deliver from sin and its consequences. During his life, Abraham was often “rescued” by the Lord. For example, the Lord directed Abraham and Lot and their families from Haran to Canaan (Genesis 12:1), and later, because of famine, to Egypt (Genesis 12:10). While in Egypt both Abraham and his wife needed rescuing from the pharaoh (Genesis 12:17-20). The Lord intervened in the matter of Abimelech’s interest in Abraham’s wife Sarah (Genesis 20), and, of course, the Lord intervened in the matter of Sarah’s barrenness (Genesis 21). Perhaps the covenant which the Lord made with Abraham and his posterity of a promised land and numerous posterity was, in a sense, a redemption of Abraham’s posterity (Genesis 17). Perhaps Nephi is here announcing Abraham’s ultimate redemption from sin and his exaltation (see Alma 5:24; 7:25; D&C 132:29).

“thus saith the Lord . . . concerning the house of Jacob: Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face now wax pale” To “wax” is to grow or become. When a face “wax[es] pale,” it becomes white due to shame and embarrassment. The Lord through the prophets Isaiah and Nephi is announcing the latter-day restoration of the gospel. In that day, the children of Israel will no longer hang down their heads in sorrow and shame and wander about scattered in the world devoid of their own identity.

34 But when he seeth his children, the work of my hands, in the midst of him, they shall sanctify my name, and sanctify the Holy One of Jacob, and shall fear the God of Israel.

verse 34 “the work of my hands” The Lord is speaking. This phrase seems to refer to the restored gospel of Jesus Christ. The first line of this verse is awkwardly worded. The Lord seems to be saying: “When Israel sees the restored gospel in the midst of his people—his children”

Again, to “fear” God is to esteem, regard, or reverence him.

35 They also that erred in spirit shall come to understanding, and they that murmured shall learn doctrine.

verses 34-35 When Jacob (the house of Israel) in the latter days discovers in his midst the restored gospel, he will rejoice and worship the Lord. Then shall those who formerly erred, or made mistakes, in spirit come to understanding, and those who murmured shall accept instruction.

2 Nephi Chapter 28

Scripture Mastery

2 Nephi 28:3-4 Nephi's prophecy of latter-day secular churches which are built up and not unto the Lord. When one shall say to the other, behold I, I am the Lord's, and the other shall say I, I am the Lord's.

2 Nephi 28:7-9 Eat, drink, and be merry, for tomorrow we die.

2 Nephi 28:20-22 For behold, at that day shall he rage in the hearts of the children of men, and stir them up to anger against that which is good. And others will he pacify, and lull them away into carnal security, that they will say: All is well in Zion; yea, Zion prospereth, all is well—and thus the devil cheateth their souls, and leadeth them away carefully down to hell.

2 Nephi 28:29-30 Wo be unto him that shall say: We have received the word of God, and we need no more of the word of God, for we have enough! For behold, thus saith the Lord God: I will give unto the children of men line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little; and blessed are those who hearken unto my precepts, and lend an ear unto my counsel, for they shall learn wisdom; for unto him that receiveth I will give more; and from them that shall say, We have enough, from them shall be taken away even that which they have.

In chapters 28 through 30 Nephi prophesies of the latter days—that day when the Church will be restored and the Book of Mormon will be revealed to the world. Specifically, he describes the religious landscape into which the restoration of the gospel will take place including the apostate conditions of the Christian world in that day. These chapters became the favorites of early church members in the early nineteenth century since they describe with uncanny accuracy the religious state of affairs that existed at the time the Church was restored. These chapters explained for those early saints the religious world around them and served to confirm for them the authenticity of the Book of Mormon. A delightful discussion of the details of the early saints' perceptions of these chapters has been written by Grant Underwood ("Insights from the Early Years: 2 Nephi 28-30," The Book of Mormon: Second Nephi, the Doctrinal Structure, 323-339). A sampling of the details of this article will be included in the verse commentary of these three chapters.

1 And now, behold, my brethren, I have spoken unto you, according as the Spirit hath constrained me; wherefore, I know that they must surely come to pass.

verse 1 "behold, my brethren" Nephi's audience is primarily those who live in this final dispensation. He particularly addresses his descendants (see the following verse where he refers to "our seed").

“as the Spirit hath constrained me” The word constrained means compelled or urged to action.

“I know that they must surely come to pass” Those events revealed to me by the Spirit will come to pass.

2 And the things which shall be written out of the book shall be of great worth unto the children of men, and especially unto our seed, which is a remnant of the house of Israel.

verse 2 This verse has reference to the Book of Mormon and clearly identifies the time frame of this chapter to be the latter days when the Book of Mormon will be introduced to the world.

“the things which shall be written out of the book” This phrase might better have been rendered “the things which shall be written in the book.”

“our seed” This, of course, refers to the descendants of Lehi, Ishmael, and Zoram.

3 For it shall come to pass in that day that the churches which are built up, and not unto the Lord, when the one shall say unto the other: Behold, I, I am the Lord's; and the others shall say: I, I am the Lord's; and thus shall every one say that hath built up churches, and not unto the Lord—verse 3 Here is a major feature of the apostate condition of the world in the last days. Among the churches of men—those “built up, and not unto the Lord”—there will be a competitive and contentious vying for recognition and for members.

This verse and the next describe the situation that Joseph Smith, Jr., encountered in the surrounds of his home as he was growing up and wondering which church he should join.

Some time in the second year after our removal to Manchester, there was in the place where we lived an unusual excitement on the subject of religion. It commenced with the Methodists, but soon became general among all the sects in that region of country. Indeed, the whole district of country seemed affected by it, and great multitudes united themselves to the different religious parties, which created no small stir and division amongst the people, some crying, “Lo, here!” and others, “Lo, there!” Some were contending for the Methodist faith, some for the Presbyterian, and some for the Baptist.

For notwithstanding the great love which the converts to these different faiths expressed at the time of their conversion, and the great zeal manifested by the respective clergy, who were active in getting up and promoting this extraordinary scene of religious feeling, in order to have everybody converted, as they were pleased to call it, let them join what sect they pleased; yet when the converts began to file off, some to one part and some to another, it was seen that the seemingly good feelings of both the priests and the converts were more pretended than real; for a scene of great confusion and bad feeling ensued—priest contending against priest, and convert against convert; so that all their good feelings one for another, if they ever had any, were entirely lost in a strife of words and a contest about opinions (JS-H 1:5-6).

4 And they shall contend one with another; and their priests shall contend one with another, and they shall teach with their learning, and deny the Holy Ghost, which giveth utterance.

verse 4 “teach with their learning, and deny the Holy Ghost, which giveth utterance” In these false churches intellectualism and the scholarship of men will replace the promptings and gifts of the Spirit as the means for determining theological truths (D&C 50:17-22).

5 And they deny the power of God, the Holy One of Israel; and they say unto the people: Hearken unto us, and hear ye our precept; for behold there is no God today, for the Lord and the Redeemer hath done his work, and he hath given his power unto men;

6 Behold, hearken ye unto my precept; if they shall say there is a miracle wrought by the hand of the Lord, believe it not; for this day he is not a God of miracles; he hath done his work.

verses 5-6 Nephi identifies some false precepts that will be taught at the time of the restoration. These false ideas tend to instill in their adherents the notion that a restoration of the gospel is wholly unnecessary.

“they deny the power of God” The concept of priesthood is irrelevant. There is no need for a restoration of the priesthood.

“there is no God today, for the Lord and the Redeemer hath done his work” As Joseph Smith shared his account of the first vision with the Protestant preachers of his day, they responded “with great contempt, saying it was all of the devil, that there were no such things as visions or revelations in these days; that all such things had ceased with the apostles, and that there would never be any more of them” (JS-H 1:21). There will be no more miracles wrought by the power of God, for “he hath given his power unto men.” We already have a Bible and any further revelation or scripture is unnecessary, anticlimactic, and redundant.

7 Yea, and there shall be many which shall say: Eat, drink, and be merry, for tomorrow we die; and it shall be well with us.

verse 7 This verse illustrates the insidious humanistic and hedonistic philosophies. These hold that individuals should be free to gratify their own carnal desires, to set their own moral standards, to live for the pleasure of the moment, and to do all of this without guilt. In order to sin without guilt, of course, one must lower his moral standard to correspond with his behavior. This is the exact opposite of the true gospel principle which is that to remove guilt one must repent and lift his behavior to correspond to the Lord's standard. Among those who espouse these hedonistic philosophies of men, there exists a significant and poignant irony: These philosophies can never result in true happiness. The principle that "wickedness never was happiness" is absolutely true and there will never be an exception (see the discussion of this principle in the commentary for Alma 41:10).

8 And there shall also be many which shall say: Eat, drink, and be merry; nevertheless, fear God—he will justify in committing a little sin; yea, lie a little, take the advantage of one because of his words, dig a pit for thy neighbor; there is no harm in this; and do all these things, for tomorrow we die; and if it so be that we are guilty, God will beat us with a few stripes, and at last we shall be saved in the kingdom of God.

verse 8 Both justice and mercy are valid concepts. It is vital, however, that there be maintained an appropriate relationship between justice and mercy. The false doctrine described in this verse distorts this relationship by inappropriately expanding the role of mercy and diminishing the importance of justice. In scripture this is referred to as allowing "mercy to rob justice." For other examples of the erroneous philosophy wherein mercy is allowed to rob justice, see Alma 30:17 in which Korihor taught: "Whatsoever a man does is no crime." Also in Alma 1:4, Nehor testified that "all mankind should be saved at the last day," and that "in the end all men should have eternal life." When the appropriate relationship exists between justice and mercy, then mercy will not rob justice but rather will appease justice, providing, of course, the sinner sincerely repents. Anyone who would be inclined to let mercy rob justice in their lives ought to heed well Alma's final warning to his son Corianton: "O my son, I desire that ye should deny the justice of God no more. Do not endeavor to excuse yourself in the least point because of your sins, by denying the justice of God; but do you let the justice of God, and his mercy, and his long-suffering have full sway in your heart; and let it bring you down to the dust in humility" (Alma 42:30).

"take the advantage of one because of his words" This phrase refers to an individual who would lie in wait hoping to ensnare someone because of his words. Another way of expressing this sinful tendency is found in 2 Nephi 27:32: This sinner is one who waits eagerly to make another an "offender for a word." Those who are charitable tend to overlook the mistakes of others concentrating instead on the good he finds in people.

"God will beat us with a few stripes" Stripes are strokes made with a lash, whip, rod, strap, or scourge; affliction; punishment; sufferings. The spirit of this statement is that God's beating here is perfunctory and causes little discomfort.

9 Yea, and there shall be many which shall teach after this manner, false and vain and foolish doctrines, and shall be puffed up in their hearts, and shall seek deep to hide their counsels from the Lord; and their works shall be in the dark.

verse 9 “there shall be many which shall teach after this manner” In Book of Mormon times there were, indeed, many including Sherem (Jacob 7:1-20), Nehor (Alma 1:2-15), and Korihor (Alma 30:6-60). Nephi prophesies that there will be many in the last days.

In what way are these doctrines “vain”? Vain implies over concern about self—personal vanity. In obeying these erroneous doctrines, a man is self-centered. He who lies or watches for a way to ensnare or dig a pit for his neighbor is only looking to elevate himself at the expense of another. The “live-for-today” philosophy embodies the “me-first” attitude which is common today. The world would teach that we prosper only according to our own genius, and we prosper only according to our own strengths and abilities. It is us against the world. If our neighbor prospers, then he does so at our expense. This apostate philosophy may be termed the scarcity mentality or the law of the jungle.

“shall seek deep to hide their counsels from the Lord” This phrase has already been discussed in the commentary for 2 Nephi 27:27. To reiterate: The Hebrew word that is here translated as “counsel” might well have been sod. This Hebrew word has a double meaning and might well be translated as secrets. Thus those who “seek deep to hide their counsel” are those who try desperately to hide their secret and wicked acts and thoughts from the Lord, an undertaking which is, of course, impossible. The Lord, of course, perceives perfectly the hearts of men.

10 And the blood of the saints shall cry from the ground against them.

verse 10 As mentioned in the commentary for verse 3, false doctrines are a major characteristic of the apostate latter day world. The previous verse identifies another important characteristic—false teachers. They are the very antithesis of the humble and righteous teachers who preceded them. Their apostate teachings mock those that have gone before. Thus, “the blood of the saints shall cry from the ground against them.”

11 Yea, they have all gone out of the way; they have become corrupted.

verse 11 “The way” may be said to be the way of truth. In this and subsequent verses, we are taught the characteristics of false teachers—those characteristics by which they can be recognized.

12 Because of pride, and because of false teachers, and false doctrine, their churches have become corrupted, and their churches are lifted up; because of pride they are puffed up.

13 They rob the poor because of their fine sanctuaries; they rob the poor because of their fine clothing; and they persecute the meek and the poor in heart, because in their pride they are puffed up.

verses 12-13 In the previous verses, we have been discussing the sin of pride. Perhaps pride may be succinctly defined as the seeking primarily for things of the world rather than things of the Spirit. This seeking is most often competitive and disregards the rights and feelings of others. Review Moroni's memorable warning to the people of the latter day delivered near the end of the Book of Mormon.

Behold, I speak unto you as if ye were present, and yet ye are not. But behold, Jesus Christ hath shown you unto me, and I know your doing.

And I know that ye do walk in the pride of your hearts; and there are none save a few only who do not lift themselves up in the pride of their hearts, unto the wearing of very fine apparel, unto envying, and strifes, and malice, and persecutions, and all manner of iniquities; and your churches, yea, even every one, have become polluted because of the pride of your hearts.

For behold, ye do love money, and your substance, and your fine apparel, and the adorning of your churches, more than ye love the poor and the needy, the sick and the afflicted.

Behold, the sword of vengeance hangeth over you; and the time soon cometh that he avengeth the blood of the saints upon you, for he will not suffer their cries any longer (Mormon 8:35-37, 41).

For a further discussion of the concept of pride, see "Pride" in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 5, The "Natural Self" and "Spiritual Self."

It is said that priestcraft seeks to hide its spiritual poverty behind worldly wealth. See the definition and discussion of priestcraft in the commentary for 2 Nephi 10:5. Those involved in priestcraft would rather build costly buildings and wear lavish vestments than feed the poor.

14 They wear stiff necks and high heads; yea, and because of pride, and wickedness, and abominations, and whoredoms, they have all gone astray save it be a few, who are the humble followers of Christ; nevertheless, they are led, that in many instances they do err because they are taught by the precepts of men.

verse 14 "They wear stiff necks and high heads" The false teachers, those practitioners of priestcraft in the latter days, will be stubborn and spiritually unteachable (have "stiff necks") and smug and proud, even disdainful of those of lesser position ("have high heads").

"a few who are the humble followers of Christ" Let us hope that Nephi saw, in this instance, members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We must also acknowledge others of this latter-day dispensation who are outside of the Church, yet who strive earnestly and successfully to emulate the Savior.

“nevertheless they are led” Here the pronoun “they” seems to have reference to those “few who are humble followers of Christ.” These might, on occasion, have ecclesiastical leaders who lead them in such a way as to cause them to err. “Behold, I the Lord have looked upon you, and have seen abominations in the church that profess my name. . . Wherefore, let every man beware lest he do that which is not in truth and righteousness before me” (D&C 50:4, 9).

15 O the wise, and the learned, and the rich, that are puffed up in the pride of their hearts, and all those who preach false doctrines, and all those who commit whoredoms, and pervert the right way of the Lord, wo, wo, wo be unto them, saith the Lord God Almighty, for they shall be thrust down to hell!

verse 15 “Whoredoms” are sexual sins, especially adultery.

A warning reiterated. Nephi’s concept of “hell” seems to correspond to what we would call the spirit prison today.

16 Wo unto them that turn aside the just for a thing of naught and revile against that which is good, and say that it is of no worth! For the day shall come that the Lord God will speedily visit the inhabitants of the earth; and in that day that they are fully ripe in iniquity they shall perish.

verse 16 It seems to be man’s nature that those who reject truth particularly if they have previously accepted that truth, do so with some considerable ambivalence. It is this ambivalence that compels many sinners to “revile against that which is good” and to actively reject the righteous and pronounce them to be of little value—“turn aside the just for a thing of naught.” The restored Church’s bitterest opponents may be often found among those who were erstwhile members of the Church but later became disaffected often due to an inability to live up to the church’s standards. People of this group behave as though they carry a continual burden of guilt that can only be relieved by actively persecuting the Church.

“for the day shall come that . . . they shall perish” Apparently, we can expect the gap between the righteous and the wicked to widen as the Savior’s advent nears. The righteous will stand apart from those obviously “ripe in iniquity.” The latter group will “perish”—they will suffer spiritual death. They will be permanently separated from God.

17 But behold, if the inhabitants of the earth shall repent of their wickedness and abominations they shall not be destroyed, saith the Lord of Hosts.

18 But behold, that great and abominable church, the whore of all the earth, must tumble to the earth, and great must be the fall thereof.

verse 18 “that great and abominable church” This phrase has reference to that entity described in 1 Nephi 14. Bruce R. McConkie has described it as: “It is the world; it is all the carnality and evil to which fallen man is heir, it is every unholy and wicked practice; it is every false religion, every supposed system of salvation which does not actually save and exalt man in the highest heaven of the celestial world. It is every church except the true church, whether parading under a Christian or a pagan banner” (A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, 340). It is especially anyone who makes war against the saints.

verses 19-21 There are several ways in which a man may be led away captive by Satan. Satan customizes his approach to each individual. Some may be provoked to anger or violence. Some might be more effectively led away by gentle appeasement or pacification. Others may be encouraged toward indolence or indifference. Still others may be satiated with abundant worldly possessions or influence and become driven to protect them and even to accumulate more.

19 For the kingdom of the devil must shake, and they which belong to it must needs be stirred up unto repentance, or the devil will grasp them with his everlasting chains, and they be stirred up to anger, and perish;

verse 19 The “kingdom of the devil” is the spirit prison. The word “shake” implies rouse themselves to action, in this case repentance. If the inhabitants of the spirit prison are not “stirred up unto repentance,” they will spend eternity with Satan as sons of Perdition.

20 For behold, at that day shall he rage in the hearts of the children of men, and stir them up to anger against that which is good.

verse 20 “at that day shall he rage in the hearts of the children of men” It is sobering to contemplate Satan’s desperate rage—anger and resentment—which impels him to try to stir up the same anger and resentment in the hearts of men, and encourage men to direct it against that which is good.

21 And others will he pacify, and lull them away into carnal security, that they will say: All is well in Zion; yea, Zion prospereth, all is well—and thus the devil cheateth their souls, and leadeth them away carefully down to hell.

verse 21 “carnal security” As long as the war between things of the world and things of the Spirit is being actively fought in a man’s heart and mind, that man glimpses, from time to time, his eternal identity and does not lose touch with his eternal spiritual self. He will persist in remaining, at least to some extent, uncomfortable with his worldly concessions. If, however, he falls far enough along the worldly path, he may lose this discomfort. He will become comfortable with his worldly self. He will achieve a state of “carnal security.” The word carnal in this expression means worldly—a false worldly security.

“All is well in Zion” At least some of the devil's various tactics here are intended for members of the Church (see also verse 24). Importantly, he urges the members toward complacency. One manifestation of this complacency is for members to come to believe that, “We have received, and we need no more!” (2 Nephi 28:27). This claim may be made in the setting that we have studied and learned enough. And our knowledge and assumptions are fully adequate. We don't need any more. We don't need to adjust our assumptions. Such an arrogant declaration may project the false belief that one already knows, and hence the prophets and apostles are no longer needed to speak and guide the church or the world today. Those who are not responsive to timely commandments conveyed through the prophet may, on receiving more commandments, feel “angry because of the truth of God” (2 Nephi 28:28). They resent commandments and feel they do not need them. They may come to put their “trust in man” or the philosophies of men, or make “flesh [their] arm” (2 Nephi 28:30).

The sobering implication here is that often all is not well in Zion.

The word “carefully” in this verse is chilling. It implies that Satan's efforts at seduction of men are made thoroughly, painstakingly, and conscientiously.

22 And behold, others he flattereth away, and telleth them there is no hell; and he saith unto them: I am no devil, for there is none—and thus he whispereth in their ears, until he grasps them with his awful chains, from whence there is no deliverance.

verse 22 “there is no hell” C.S. Lewis wrote, “There are two equal and opposite errors into which our race can fall about the devils. One is to disbelieve in their existence. The other is to believe and to feel an excessive and unhealthy interest in them. . . [The devils] themselves are equally pleased by both errors and hail a materialist or a magician with the same delight” (The Screwtape Letters, 13).

“others he flattereth away” To flatter is to coax; to attempt to win by praise or enticements. It also has the meaning of false praise for the purpose of gaining favor and influence. Flattery is one of Satan's most effective tools. He will say to the sinner, “You're fine. You're doing well. You have no need to worry. All your thoughts and actions are natural and fully justified.” President Joseph F. Smith identified flattery as one of the three great temptations facing the Latter-day Saints (Gospel Doctrine, 312-13). In the Book of Mormon, the different forms of flattery are used almost always in a negative sense (the exception is Alma 17:31 where the word flattereth is used to mean persuaded or encouraged).

23 Yea, they are grasped with death, and hell; and death, and hell, and the devil, and all that have been seized therewith must stand before the throne of God, and be judged according to their works, from whence they must go into the place prepared for them, even a lake of fire and brimstone, which is endless torment.

verse 23 Joseph Smith taught that man's three arch enemies in mortality are death (physical death), hell, and the devil, and that salvation consists in overcoming these three (HC, 5:387-88, 403; Times and Seasons, August 15, 1844). Do we believe in universal salvation? No. All are saved but the sons of perdition (JD, 2:238; D&C 76:39, 41-44).

“lake of fire and brimstone” This expression, of course, does not describe the literal fate of anyone. Rather, it is a figurative or symbolic expression that is discussed more fully in the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:16.

24 Therefore, wo be unto him that is at ease in Zion!

25 Wo be unto him that crieth: All is well!

verses 24-25 We are reminded simply that there is no place for passivity in living the gospel. We must remain uncomfortable and proactive in our strivings to be obedient. The phrase “all is well in Zion” obviously indicates an attitude of spiritual complacency. For those with this attitude, Satan has a fertile opportunity to lead them “carefully down to hell” (2 Nephi 28:21).

26 Yea, wo be unto him that hearkeneth unto the precepts of men, and denieth the power of God, and the gift of the Holy Ghost!

27 Yea, wo be unto him that saith: We have received, and we need no more!

28 And in fine, wo unto all those who tremble, and are angry because of the truth of God! For behold, he that is built upon the rock receiveth it with gladness; and he that is built upon a sandy foundation trembleth lest he shall fall.

verses 28 “And in fine” In summary.

“wo unto all those who . . . are angry because of the truth of God” In another place Nephi said, “No man will be angry at the words which I have written save he shall be of the spirit of the devil” (2 Nephi 33:5). Put simply, some people react to the truth with anger and resentment. This is clearly due to the absence of the Spirit of God and the presence of the spirit of Satan acting on a susceptible individual.

The analogy of building on a rock or sand is used by the Savior himself in 3 Nephi 14:24-27 (see also D&C 6:34; 11:24; 50:44; and 90:5). The “rock” would seem to represent the Savior himself or the principles of his gospel. The sand simply represents the absence of these.

29 Wo be unto him that shall say: We have received the word of God, and we need no more of the word of God, for we have enough!

verses 27-29 These verses are usually thought to be intended for people outside the Church who believe that the Bible is sufficient scripture, and that no further revelation is needed or even appropriate. Could these verses also apply to people within the Church? An example of how this prophecy might apply to the saints was experienced in June of 1978 when the Revelation on Priesthood was announced to the Church. Most everyone in the Church received the news with grateful hearts and with thanksgiving. A small number did not accept it, and some apostate groups have broken off from the Church as a result of that revelation. This subject is so important that it will dominate the entire next chapter—2 Nephi 29.

30 For behold, thus saith the Lord God: I will give unto the children of men line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little; and blessed are those who hearken unto my precepts, and lend an ear unto my counsel, for they shall learn wisdom; for unto him that receiveth I will give more; and from them that shall say, We have enough, from them shall be taken away even that which they have.

verse 30 “thus saith the Lord God” Here begins a sermon by Jesus Christ quoted by the prophet Nephi. It will extend through the entire next chapter.

“line upon line, precept upon precept” The important concept described in this verse outlines the conditions upon which the Lord reveals knowledge to man. It includes more than the idea of revealing knowledge a little at a time. Also implicit in this concept is the idea that in order to receive additional knowledge, one must prove oneself a faithful steward over the knowledge already received. If not, then even that which has been already received will be taken away.

31 Cursed is he that putteth his trust in man, or maketh flesh his arm, or shall hearken unto the precepts of men, save their precepts shall be given by the power of the Holy Ghost.

verse 31 Here we are reminded of that essential theme whose importance pervades all of mortality. It is the struggle between influences of the Spirit and those of the world. In this context, the meaning of the colorful phrase “maketh flesh his arm” is clear. It means to regard things of the world and men as the source of one’s power.

32 Wo be unto the Gentiles, saith the Lord God of Hosts! For notwithstanding I shall lengthen out mine arm unto them from day to day, they will deny me; nevertheless, I will be merciful unto them, saith the Lord God, if they will repent and come unto me; for mine arm is lengthened out all the day long, saith the Lord God of Hosts.

verse 32 In this verse and the verse which follows, the Lord makes it clear that the benefits of the restored gospel in the latter days will be extended to the Gentiles (“I shall lengthen out mine arm to them”) as well as to the house of Israel.

“for mine arm is lengthened out all the day long” During this mortal trial the Savior remains ever willing and anxious to receive any of his children into his fold.

2 Nephi Chapter 29

Scripture Mastery

2 Nephi 29:6-8 Thou fool that shall say, a Bible, we have got a Bible, and we need no more Bible.

2 Nephi 29:13 The Jews, Nephites, and lost tribes shall have each other's words.

This chapter describes Satan's latter-day attack on the Book of Mormon.

By the time we arrive at this point in the scripture, Nephi has already prophesied that the whole world in the last days will be engulfed in apostasy. There are, abounding in the world, wickedness, priestcraft, pride, false teachings, and worldly wisdom in place of revelation. These apostate characteristics have infiltrated the world's churches and every institution of human endeavor. In this setting, the Book of Mormon comes forth by miraculous means and through an unsophisticated prophet to provide guidance to those who have faith. It is especially valuable because it has been hidden in the earth for centuries, and it still contains its original purity and plainness.

1 But behold, there shall be many—at that day when I shall proceed to do a marvelous work among them, that I may remember my covenants which I have made unto the children of men, that I may set my hand again the second time to recover my people, which are of the house of Israel;

verse 1 The construction of this verse is unusual in that most of it consists of a very long parenthetical expression which begins following “there shall be many,” and extends through verse 2 into verse 3. It ends following “my words shall hiss forth” in verse 3. Without this long parenthetical expression, the first sentence of this chapter would read something like, “But behold, there shall be many Gentiles [who] shall say: A Bible! A Bible! We have got a Bible, and there cannot be any more Bible.”

“marvelous work” This expression originated with the prophet Isaiah and is found in Isaiah 29:13-14. It has reference to the restored gospel in the latter days.

“my covenants which I have made unto the children of men” This phrase refers to the Abrahamic covenant the details of which can be reviewed in the commentary for 1 Nephi 14:8.

“that I may set my hand again the second time to recover my people” This same expression is used a few times in the book of Second Nephi. See also 2 Nephi 6:14, 2 Nephi 21:11, and 2 Nephi 25:17. If the Lord is going to set his hand a “second” time to gather Israel, then when was the first time the Lord “set his hand to recover his people”? It might be argued that this latter-day gathering is the third or fourth gathering. At the time of Moses, the Lord set his hand the first time to lead his people out of captivity in Egypt to their land of inheritance in Palestine. Another significant gathering took place following the Babylonian captivity. Some have suggested that the time of Christ's mortal ministry constituted a "gathering." After all, the keys of gathering were given by Moses to Peter, James, and John on the Mount of Transfiguration at that time (Matthew 17:1-9). Certainly, this was an attempted gathering when the Lord "set his hand" to gather Israel. It turned out to be, however, a gathering that did not fully succeed. In any case this great "second" or final gathering is now in progress as Israel gathers to the gospel and to the stakes of Zion.

Perhaps the Lord refers here to his mortal ministry as the "first time" he set his hand to recover his people.

2 And also, that I may remember the promises which I have made unto thee, Nephi, and also unto thy father, that I would remember your seed; and that the words of your seed should proceed forth out of my mouth unto your seed; and my words shall hiss forth unto the ends of the earth, for a standard unto my people, which are of the house of Israel;

verse 2 "the promises which I have made unto thee, Nephi, and also unto thy father" The Lord extends the Abrahamic covenant to the posterity of the Book of Mormon people. See the commentary for 1 Nephi 14:1-2, 8. The Lord also promises that the seed of Lehi and Nephi will be preserved even to the last days and have an opportunity to hear the words of the Book of Mormon (3 Nephi 3:23).

"the words of your seed" This is the Book of Mormon which will, in the terminology of Isaiah, "hiss forth unto the ends of the earth, for a standard unto my people, which are of the house of Israel." One of the definitions of hiss in Webster's 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language is, "To whiz, as an arrow or other thing in rapid flight." That is, the Book of Mormon will serve as a signal, a standard, a flag, or a rallying point for those elect of the house of Israel who will gather in that day.

3 And because my words shall hiss forth—many of the Gentiles shall say: A Bible! A Bible! We have got a Bible, and there cannot be any more Bible.

verse 3 Here the term "Gentile" is likely best interpreted as any non-Jew who is a candidate to be gathered back to the fold or church of God. This would include the citizens of the great Gentile nation of the latter days, the United States of America, though many of those citizens are blood descendants of the house of Israel.

The meaning of this verse is clear. Certainly, every modern-day missionary has encountered this objection to our Church's non-biblical standard works. Heber C. Kimball, after returning from a missionary excursion, wrote, "We delivered our testimony to many [ministers] who with one consent said 'we have enough and need no more revelation;' thus fulfilling a prediction of the Book of Mormon" (Times and Seasons [16 August 1841] 2:507-11).

Another more subtle but similar danger lurks for those of us in the Church who feel that our knowledge of our standard works is adequate or sufficient. We can never risk the scriptural apathy that invariably follows if a church member stops studying the scriptures. His rationalization might sound something like: “A Book of Mormon! A Book of Mormon! I’ve already read the Book of Mormon, and I don’t need to any learn more about it.”

Not only do we have the Bible and the Book of Mormon and the other standard works of the Church, but we as a people look forward to additional sacred scripture which will eventually be restored to the earth (D&C 93:18; D&C 107:57, Ether 4:7).

4 But thus saith the Lord God: O fools, they shall have a Bible; and it shall proceed forth from the Jews, mine ancient covenant people. And what thank they the Jews for the Bible which they receive from them? Yea, what do the Gentiles mean? Do they remember the travails, and the labors, and the pains of the Jews, and their diligence unto me, in bringing forth salvation unto the Gentiles?

verse 4 Here is the Lord’s warning to the “Gentiles” of the last days—the “day of the Gentile.” See the commentary for the previous verse for reflections on the identity of the “Gentiles.”

“O fools, they shall have a Bible” The Lord refers to the people of the latter day.

“And what thank they the Jews for the Bible which they receive from them?” Just how grateful are the Gentiles for the Bible they received from the Jews?

“Yea, what do the Gentiles mean?” What are the perceptions of the Gentiles relative to the Bible and its origins? Do they acknowledge the diligence of those righteous Jews, the Jewish prophets, through whose efforts and sacrifice we have a Bible today?

5 O ye Gentiles, have ye remembered the Jews, mine ancient covenant people? Nay; but ye have cursed them, and have hated them, and have not sought to recover them. But behold, I will return all these things upon your own heads; for I the Lord have not forgotten my people.

verse 5 Here is a sobering reminder of the persecutions the Jews have received at the hands of the “Gentiles” since the final scattering of the Jews by the Romans in AD 70. Also contained in this verse are instructions as to how we ought to regard the Jews today. While we may have come to regard them, as a culture, to be refractory to the gospel message until the Lord’s second coming, we must love them and never cease our efforts to win them over to the fulness of the gospel—to “recover them.”

It is touching to reflect on the Lord’s persistent dedication and patience which he evidences for his wayward children—especially his “chosen,” those who were especially valiant in the premortal world.

6 Thou fool, that shall say: A Bible, we have got a Bible, and we need no more Bible. Have ye obtained a Bible save it were by the Jews?

verse 6 The Lord is still condemning those latter-day “Gentiles” who claim to accept the Bible yet maintain prejudices against the Jews, the very people that gave us the Bible. He is also condemning those who feel that the Bible alone is sufficient scripture to settle all questions of religion. Revelation has not ceased. The Bible is not the final word of God. Miracles, spiritual gifts, and revelation are always available to the true followers of Christ.

7 Know ye not that there are more nations than one? Know ye not that I, the Lord your God, have created all men, and that I remember those who are upon the isles of the sea; and that I rule in the heavens above and in the earth beneath; and I bring forth my word unto the children of men, yea, even upon all the nations of the earth?

verse 7 Do you not know that all people of the earth are my children and are entitled to hear my words? The implication seems to be that the record of the Jews, the Bible, contains revelation intended primarily for the people of the Old World. Is it not logical to expect a corresponding record to be provided for people of the New World?

“isles of the sea” Again, this term refers simply to scattered Israel, wherever they may be found upon the earth.

8 Wherefore murmur ye, because that ye shall receive more of my word? Know ye not that the testimony of two nations is a witness unto you that I am God, that I remember one nation like unto another? Wherefore, I speak the same words unto one nation like unto another. And when the two nations shall run together the testimony of the two nations shall run together also.

verse 8 “murmur ye, because that ye shall receive more of my word?” Are you really resisting the concept that revelations in addition to the Bible should come forth?

“the testimony of two nations is a witness unto you” In the justice of God, no person is expected to accept a truth unless it has been properly established. One condition for this proper establishment is that the truth satisfies the law of witnesses. This law simply stated is: “In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established” (1 Corinthians 13:1; see also Matthew 18:16; D&C 6:28, 30; 128:3). Examples today of the application of this law might include the testimony of Christ in the Bible and the Book of Mormon; the three and eight witnesses of the Book of Mormon plates; the witness, in the meridian of time, of both Jesus Christ and John the Baptist—both sealed by their blood; the martyrdom of both Hyrum and Joseph Smith; the invariable presence of another individual with Joseph Smith when priesthood keys were restored; and the sending out of missionaries two by two.

It is obvious that the central thrust of this verse is that the Bible and the Book of Mormon function together to satisfy the law of witnesses. One is reminded here of Ezekiel 37:15-17: “The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying, Moreover, thou son of man, take thee one stick, and write upon it, For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions: then take another stick, and write upon it, For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions: And join them one to another into one stick; and they shall become one in thine hand.” Latter-day Saints have traditionally interpreted the two sticks (in Hebrew literally “tree” or “wood”) as being the Bible and the Book of Mormon. Looking further at the context of Ezekiel 37, one finds that these sticks are symbolic of the tribes of Israel’s being consequentially separated, reunited, and then restored. “And I will make them [the sticks of vv. 16–17, 19] one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all” (Ezekiel 37:22).”

An example of this separation of Judah and Joseph is that after the days of Solomon, Israel divided into two kingdoms—the Kingdom of Judah in the south, and the Kingdom of Israel in the north, where the lands of Ephraim and Manasseh (sons of Joseph) were found. Lehi was from the tribe of Manasseh. Prophets such as Ezekiel, who was taken from Jerusalem to Babylon shortly after the time when Lehi departed into Arabia, looked forward to a time when all the broken parts of the two kingdoms of Israel would be reunited, physically and spiritually. The word “sticks” spoken of here, then, refers to both the records of the tribes and the tribes themselves.

In addition to symbolizing the records and tribes, the sticks that Ezekiel prophetically uses may also symbolize the ability of the Lord to shepherd and make binding covenants with these kingdoms. Thus, readers should be careful to distinguish the symbols of the sticks (the tribes), the record of the sticks (the written scriptures), and the covenants between Jehovah and his ancient people. This distinction between the sticks and the record of the sticks is made in Restoration scripture: “Behold . . . the hour cometh that I will drink of the fruit of the vine with you on the earth, and with Moroni, whom I have sent unto you to reveal the Book of Mormon, containing the fulness of my everlasting gospel, to whom I have committed the keys of the record of the stick of Ephraim” (Doctrine and Covenants 27:5, emphasis added).

The testimony of the two nations spoken of in 2 Nephi 29 undoubtedly includes a testimony of God’s redemptive plan for Israel in the last days. This includes a unification of the records of the two nations, and hence Nephi is explaining that when the two nations are gathered, their records will also come together. The Book of Mormon can therefore be seen as part of the fulfillment of prophecies like Ezekiel 37 because it is part of the gathering and reunification process.

“when the two nations shall run together” What are the “two nations”? And when will they “run together”? It is likely that the two nations are the Old World (Judah) and the New World (Joseph or Ephraim). In the last days, not only will their respective scriptural records function together, but they will come together as a people, and they will enter into covenants with the Lord together.

9 And I do this that I may prove unto many that I am the same yesterday, today, and forever; and that I speak forth my words according to mine own pleasure. And because that I have spoken one word ye need not suppose that I cannot speak another; for my work is not yet finished; neither shall it be until the end of man, neither from that time henceforth and forever.

verse 9 “that I may prove unto many” It should be obvious that even when a truth is established according to the law of witnesses and is thus “proven,” it may well not be proven in a tangible worldly or scientific sense. The only individual to whom the Lord is able to “prove” anything is he who is responsive to the Spirit.

“end of man” This verse is a statement on the constancy and eternal nature of God. The meaning of the phrase “end of man” is unclear. It could refer to the time when each and every one of the spirit children of God—those who belong to our round of creation—has been dispatched to this mortal earth to one of the other worlds in this round of the Father’s creation. Whatever the meaning of this phrase, the meaning of the verse is clear: God is eternal (Moses 1:38), and he will never cease to provide us with his word.

10 Wherefore, because that ye have a Bible ye need not suppose that it contains all my words; neither need ye suppose that I have not caused more to be written.

verse 10 A firmly held heresy in the sectarian religious world is that the Bible contains all of God’s word and that there is no true scripture outside of the Bible. This is the doctrine of sola scriptura. Furthermore they would pronounce a malediction upon anyone who would contend otherwise, often quoting Revelation 22:18: “For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book” (even most orthodox Christians today admit the apostle John had in mind only his own book when he wrote this verse—see also Deuteronomy 4:2). Here in verse 10 this incorrect doctrine is decried by the Lord himself. For a more complete discussion of the heresy of sola scriptura, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 4, chapters 7, 8, and 9: Scriptural Canon—Should It Be Open or Closed?, Continuing Revelation and Modern Scripture, and The Question of Scriptural Inerrancy.

As long as we are “Bible bashing” with the sectarian world, why not bring up a verse written by the very same author who wrote the verse in Revelation 22: “And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written” (John 21:25). It is clear that the Bible does not contain all of God’s word, and there is much more which he has “caused . . . to be written.”

11 For I command all men, both in the east and in the west, and in the north, and in the south, and in the islands of the sea, that they shall write the words which I speak unto them; for out of the books which shall be written I will judge the world, every man according to their works, according to that which is written.

verse 11 “For I command all men . . . that they shall write the words which I speak unto them” If one people to whom the Lord has spoken has been commanded to record at least some of which the Lord has said, isn’t it logical to suppose that others to whom the Lord has spoken will also be asked to write it down? In the final verses in this chapter, we will identify three major scriptural records that have come forth or will eventually come forth. This particular verse leaves open the possibility that several other records may have been written and may yet come forth.

Again, the phrase “all men, both in the east and in the west, and in the north, and in the south” and the phrase “islands of the sea” refer to scattered Israel wherever they may be found.

“for out of the books which shall be written I will judge the world” It may be true that a man who has not heard the law or had a chance to understand it will be judged lightly until he had that chance (D&C 82:3; Luke 12:48). However, this phrase makes clear that the old saw, “Ignorance of the law is no excuse,” is ultimately applicable. Certain books will be used both as a standard and as a witness in the final judgment. Each man has an obligation to search the scriptures to learn the law.

In speaking of some of the books out of which the world will be judged, President Spencer W. Kimball offered the following insight: “The Book of Life (see Revelation 20:12) will show the earthly activities of all of us, and the book of the angels will give the entire story of every man and what he did in the light and in the shadows, in the open and in the corners, all that is said in the secret places and from the housetops, all that was thought and expressed, whether good or bad. There will be no escape. The honest judge will give full value to all for their good works and will not overlook the other” (The Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball. Edited by Edward L. Kimball, [Salt Lake City: Bookcraft], 1982, 46).

12 For behold, I shall speak unto the Jews and they shall write it; and I shall also speak unto the Nephites and they shall write it; and I shall also speak unto the other tribes of the house of Israel, which I have led away, and they shall write it; and I shall also speak unto all nations of the earth and they shall write it.

verse 12 There are to be at least three major scriptural testimonies of Christ that will eventually come forth. These are the written records of “the Jews” (the Bible), “the Nephites” (the Book of Mormon), and “the other tribes of the house of Israel, which I have led away”—obviously the ten lost tribes. The verse then tantalizes us by suggesting the eventual coming forth of yet a fourth record, that of “all nations of the earth.” Isn’t it exciting to consider and speculate regarding these other records?

The possibility of a separate record of scripture coming forth from the “lost” ten tribes of Israel is problematic. We have discussed previously that many of these Israelites, those descended from the ten tribes, have been thoroughly scattered throughout other nations of the world and do not exist in a discrete and separate body. Do they? Is there a separate body of the scattered ten tribes that live together somewhere?

As one reads the scriptural descriptions of the dramatic return of the ten tribes in the latter days, one cannot help but wonder if these passages of scripture are describing a discrete and sizable group of Israelites who will return en masse rather than a piece-meal gathering in of widely scattered Israelites from among the peoples of the earth. The Bible suggests, for example, that their return will be so spectacular that it will make the crossing of the Red Sea pale by comparison. Jeremiah says the Lord will lead the seed of Israel “out of the north country” and then comments: “It shall no more be said, the Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but the Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north and from all the lands whither he had driven them” (Jeremiah 16:14-15).

In latter-day scripture we read: “And they who are in the north countries shall come in remembrance before the Lord; and their prophets shall hear his voice, and shall no longer stay themselves” (D&C 133:26).

Here we learn that wherever the ten tribes are, they have prophets among them who will lead them in their gathering. The record then continues: “And an highway shall be cast up in the midst of the great deep” (D&C 133:27). Isaiah suggests that this miraculous highway may be the result of the drying up of the great deep similar to the way the Lord parted the waters for Moses and allowed the Israelites to walk over on dry land. He says: “Art thou not it which hath dried the sea, the waters of the great deep; that hath made the depths of the sea a way for the ransomed to pass over?” (Isaiah 51:10).

Apparently, the returning Israelites will fill up the Western Hemisphere. Joseph Smith said one of the principal reasons the wicked will be cleansed from the earth is to make room “from the lost tribes of Israel from the north country” (TPJS, 1973 edition, 17). Modern revelation indicates that the massive immigration pouring across the Lord’s mighty highway will saturate all of the arable land and require the settling of both deserts and barren regions. To solve this problem the Lord says: “And in the barren deserts there shall come forth pools of living water; and the parched ground shall no longer be a thirsty land” (D&C 133:28).

The Lord says these returning multitudes will bring with them vast treasures of precious things which will be turned over to the priesthood in the New Jerusalem, no doubt for the embellishment of the temple and beautifying of the great new capital city: “And they shall bring forth their rich treasures unto the children of Ephraim, my servants” (D&C 133:30).

In Deuteronomy 31:4 Moses addresses scattered Israel and implies that a part of scattered Israel may even be located somewhere outside of this earth: “If any of thine be driven out unto the outmost parts of heaven, from thence will the Lord thy God gather thee, and from thence will he fetch thee” (italics added). A possible extra-terrestrial location of this group is also suggested by Jesus’s proclamation: “He shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other” (Matthew 24:31, italics added). Perhaps Jesus’s phrase “from one end of heaven to the other” corresponds to Moses’s “out unto the outmost parts of heaven.”

Prophets have suggested that the ten tribes will be gathered in from “the north countries.” One verse of scripture suggests that “north countries” refers to a place beyond the four corners of the earth: “. . . being gathered in from the four corners of the earth, and from the north countries” (Ether 13:11, italics added). Brigham Young said: “The ten tribes of Israel are on a portion of the earth—a portion separate from the main land” (Brigham Young, quoted by Matthais F. Cowley in his book, Wilford Woodruff, 448). All who read the scriptures are familiar of the concept of God’s technique of removing large bodies of people from the earth to some place especially prepared for them. The classic example is the City of Enoch: “And Enoch . . . built a city that was called the City of Holiness, even Zion . . . and lo, Zion in process of time was taken up into heaven” (Moses 7:19-21). The City of Enoch was taken up and perhaps even that portion of earth on which the city was located.

Brother Cleon Skousen has also drawn upon the apocryphal Old Testament book of Esdras for some other suggestions regarding the lost ten tribes. Before listing those suggestions, perhaps it would be appropriate to mention a few things about “the apocrypha.”

In Joseph Smith’s King James Bible, which he was using to create his inspired revision, there were fourteen books between the Old Testament and the New Testament known as the Old Testament Apocrypha. Most latter-day saints are not familiar with the apocryphal Old Testament books because they were eliminated from the King James Bible and all protestant Bibles in the early 1800s. They are still present in some Catholic Bibles, though there is some skepticism over their authenticity among the leadership of the Catholic Church. Today, if one is interested, these books are available and may be easily found and purchased.

When Joseph finished his inspired revision of the Old Testament, he inquired of the Lord on March 9, 1833, as to whether or not he should translate or revise these apocryphal books. The Lord in D&C 91 gave him, in essence, the following answer which is the position of the Church on the Apocrypha: (1) These books contain many things which are true, and they are mostly translated correctly. (2) There are also many things contained therein that are not true but are the false traditions of men. (3) There is no need to revise the Apocrypha. (4) Any member of the Church may read the Apocrypha, but he should make certain he has the Spirit with him to help him discern what is true from what is not.

We have come to apply this counsel more widely than to just the Apocrypha. For example, is it all right for a church member to read the Dead Sea Scrolls and accept as true those things which are witnessed as such by the Spirit? Yes, indeed! There are literally hundreds of pieces of ancient literature which have been discovered that are as old as the Old Testament books in our Bible. We do not accept them as canonized scripture, but certainly acknowledge that they may contain some significant truths.

Now, back to Brother Cleon Skousen and The book of Esdras. This book indicates that the ten tribes, after they had been taken captive into Assyria, eventually decided to migrate north to a land which had never before been inhabited:

Those are the ten tribes, which were carried away prisoners out of their own land at the time of Osea, the king, whom Salmanasar, the king of Assyria, led away captive, and he carried them over the waters [Euphrates and Tigris Rivers] and so came they into another land. But they took this counsel among themselves that they would leave the multitudes of the heathen, and go forth into a further country, where never mankind dwelt.

Anglo-Saxon tradition suggests that this people originally lived in large numbers around the Black Sea until the first century BC. Then they migrated en masse to the north about 65 BC. As a result of this migration they eventually settled in Germany, Denmark, Sweden, Iceland, Holland, England, and France.

According to Esdras at some point in time the ten tribes divided into two groups. It would appear that the more spiritual elements were quickened sufficiently to be transferred to a location, perhaps the “outmost parts of heaven” referred to by Moses who promised they would also be gathered back in the due time of the Lord. The fragments of the ten tribes who were not taken became dispersed among the nations of the earth. These also must be eventually gathered out from among the nations (A Glimpse into the Future, Chapter 1, The Great Last Gathering).

13 And it shall come to pass that the Jews shall have the words of the Nephites, and the Nephites shall have the words of the Jews; and the Nephites and the Jews shall have the words of the lost tribes of Israel; and the lost tribes of Israel shall have the words of the Nephites and the Jews.

verse 13 These three records are to be shared with the other groups. These three records are, by the way, another example of the law of witnesses (see the commentary for verse 8).

“the lost tribes of Israel shall have the words of the Nephites and the Jews”

The expression “lost tribes” is found in only two verses of scripture, here and in 3 Nephi 17:4. We learn in 1 Nephi 22 that the term “lost” reflects the perspective of the Israelites in the Holy land. Thus, the lost tribes are those who are “lost from the knowledge of those who are at Jerusalem” (1 Nephi 22:4). The lost tribes are Israelites whose identity is not known to the world and in some cases not even to themselves. Some scriptures describe their scattered exile as being in “the north,” using metaphorical language from the perspective of the rest of Israel, who last saw them being taken away in that direction (Jeremiah 16:15; Zechariah 2:6; D&C 110:11; 133:26).

The “words of the lost tribes of Israel” will apparently be brought forth when the body of the ten lost tribes return en masse to join the rest of gathering Israel. The records of the Nephites and of the Jews obviously do not consist of only one book each. Rather each is a collection of many books. Perhaps the record of the lost tribes will be the same.

An alternate suggestion has been made regarding the identity of the record of the lost tribes of Israel. Since Ephraim was the predominant tribe among the ten lost tribes, and since the latter-day Church has frequently been referred to as consisting of the “children of Ephraim,” perhaps the Doctrine and Covenants should be regarded as a witness for Jesus Christ among latter-day Ephraim which may some day be combined with the other records of the lost tribes when they come forth.

14 And it shall come to pass that my people, which are of the house of Israel, shall be gathered home unto the lands of their possessions; and my word also shall be gathered in one. And I will show unto them that fight against my word and against my people, who are of the house of Israel, that I am God, and that I covenanted with Abraham that I would remember his seed forever.

verse 14 It is obvious that the latter-day gathering and restoration of Israel will also include a gathering, into one, of the three major scriptural testimonies of Christ. This combined scriptural record will “show unto them that fight against my word . . . that I am God, and that I covenanted with Abraham that I would remember his seed forever.”

2 Nephi Chapter 30

This chapter deals mainly with prophecies of the latter-day restoration or gathering of Israel both in the New World and in the Old World. This will occur in preparation for the onset of the Millennium which is also described here.

1 And now behold, my beloved brethren, I would speak unto you; for I, Nephi, would not suffer that ye should suppose that ye are more righteous than the Gentiles shall be. For behold, except ye shall keep the commandments of God ye shall all likewise perish; and because of the words which have been spoken ye need not suppose that the Gentiles are utterly destroyed.

verse 1 “And now behold, my beloved brethren, I would speak unto you” Nephi now addresses himself to the descendants of the Book of Mormon peoples, to those blood descendants of Lehi, Ishmael, and Zoram.

Here Nephi uses the term “Gentile” to refer again to all non-Jews including those outside the house of Israel and those citizens of the great Gentile nation of the latter days many of whom are of the blood lineage of the house of Israel. In the next verse, Nephi’s own descendants are included in the category of “Jews” because they came out from the land of Judah, even though we know that they are of the blood lineage of the tribe of Joseph through both Ephraim (Ishmael) and Manasseh (Lehi).

2 For behold, I say unto you that as many of the Gentiles as will repent are the covenant people of the Lord; and as many of the Jews as will not repent shall be cast off; for the Lord covenanteth with none save it be with them that repent and believe in his Son, who is the Holy One of Israel.

verse 2 Are the Gentiles, those actually without the house of Israel, going to be included in the gathering of Israel to occur in this final dispensation? They are indeed. As many of these Gentiles as repent and accept the gospel of Jesus Christ will gather with Abraham’s descendants and indeed will be inducted “by adoption” into the House of Israel. As stated below (verse 8), the work of gathering will take place “among all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, to bring about the restoration of his people upon the earth.” John the Baptist understood this principle of “adoption” and taught it to the Jews of his day. He said to them, “God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham” (JST Matthew 3:36). The “stones” were obviously the Gentiles (see also the commentary for 1 Nephi 14:1-2).

“as many of the Jews as will not repent shall be cast off” Nephi probably intends “the Jews” here to mean the descendants of his own people. This statement also applies to all Israelites by blood lineage. Those who do not measure up to their spiritual privileges will not receive the blessings that might have been theirs as sons and daughters of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

3 And now, I would prophesy somewhat more concerning the Jews and the Gentiles. For after the book of which I have spoken shall come forth, and be written unto the Gentiles, and sealed up again unto the Lord, there shall be many which shall believe the words which are written; and they shall carry them forth unto the remnant of our seed.

verse 3 In this verse Nephi seems to continue to use the definitions of “Jews” and “Gentiles” that are most frequently applicable in the Book of Mormon, that is the “Jews” are all those who came out of the land of Judah including the Book of Mormon people. The Gentiles are everyone else, especially those citizens of the great Gentile nation of the latter days.

“after the book of which I have spoken shall come forth” After the Book of Mormon plates shall be delivered to Joseph Smith.

“and be written unto the Gentiles” And be translated for the use of the “Gentiles” in the great Gentile nation.

“and sealed up again unto the Lord” And be delivered back to the Lord.

Among these “Gentiles” which, as we have discussed previously, are actually mostly descendants of the tribe of Joseph and his son Ephraim, there will be many who believe the message of the Book of Mormon. Some of these will become missionaries and carry forth the Book of Mormon to the descendants of the Book of Mormon people.

4 And then shall the remnant of our seed know concerning us, how that we came out from Jerusalem, and that they are descendants of the Jews.

verse 4 “they are descendants of the Jews” The remnant or seed of the Book of Mormon peoples, wherever they may be today, will gain a knowledge of their spiritual heritage through the Book of Mormon. The Nephite and Lamanite peoples were all descended from the tribe of Joseph. In what sense then are they “descendants of the Jews”? Throughout the Book of Mormon, it is taught that Jewish nationals—those who originated in the kingdom of Judah—are Jews. In this sense, Nephites and Lamanites are Jews, though they are genealogically descended from the tribe of Joseph. In addition, the actual tribal representation among Book of Mormon peoples will be expanded in future pages of the Book of Mormon when Mosiah leads a contingent of Nephite peoples north to the land of Zarahemla. There his people encounter and unite with the people of Zarahemla, a people partly descended from the tribe of Judah and perhaps other Israelite tribes (Omni 1:13-19).

It is obviously incorrect to declare that all American Indians or modern-day “Lamanites” are descendants of Joseph through Laman, Lemuel, and the sons of Ishmael (see the supplemental article Book of Mormon Myths). Those native American Indians who have descended from Book of Mormon peoples, which likely represents only a small part of the Indian peoples, most probably have the blood of many of the tribes of Israel. Reference to them as a “remnant of Jacob” is a satisfactory label though not perfectly accurate.

It is interesting to note that in early church history, perhaps largely due to 2 Nephi 30, it was anticipated that a mass conversion of the American Indians to the gospel of Jesus Christ was imminent. W.W. Phelps wrote to Oliver Cowdery: “The Indians are the people of the Lord, and the hour is nigh when they will come flocking into the kingdom of God, like doves to their windows; yea, as the book of Mormon foretells—they will soon become a white and delightsome people. And how much is the joy of our hearts enlarged, when it is known the ‘poor Indians’ are to be raised from their low estate, and miserable condition by the everlasting gospel; even the fulness of the gospel contained in the Book of Mormon, and other books of God?” (Messenger and Advocate [October 1835] 2:193-95).

The early saints also anticipated a physical gathering for the American Indians just as they did for the Jews. This was to occur in Zion which, from revelations given to Joseph Smith, was to be in western Missouri. The United States government policy of relocating the Indians just west of Missouri was considered an act of God. It was anticipated that the Indian’s would have a significant role in establishing and building Zion. How disappointing has been the spiritual progress of the American Indians!

5 And the gospel of Jesus Christ shall be declared among them; wherefore, they shall be restored unto the knowledge of their fathers, and also to the knowledge of Jesus Christ, which was had among their fathers.

6 And then shall they rejoice; for they shall know that it is a blessing unto them from the hand of God; and their scales of darkness shall begin to fall from their eyes; and many generations shall not pass away among them, save they shall be a pure and a delightsome people.

verse 6 “their scales of darkness shall begin to fall from their eyes” This phrase suggests that the freeing up of the apostate descendants of the Book of Mormon peoples from their false beliefs and ignorance will be a process over a period of time and not a single event.

“they shall be a pure and a delightsome people” The earliest editions of the Book of Mormon contained the word “white” rather than “pure.” The word “pure” first appeared in the 1840 edition, an emendation made by Joseph Smith. But then the word “white” reappeared in 2 Nephi 30:6 and remained there until the 1981 edition of the Book of Mormon where it was again replaced by “pure.” The word “pure” was retained in the 2013 edition of the Book of Mormon.

See the discussion of the “curse” and the “mark of the curse” in the commentary for 2 Nephi 5:21-23. In that commentary, the simple point is made that the Lamanites were cursed for their sins by being separated from God, and, in addition, they were given the mark of a dark skin in order to discourage marriage between the Nephites and the Lamanites.

The word “white” initially in this verse has raised concerns for many readers. How could the Book of Mormon be inspired if it supposedly has what many assume to be “racist” teachings—in this case that having white skin is somehow a sign of divine favor?

The solution to this problem is a rather simple one. It is that the word white in the Book of Mormon usually does not refer to skin color. When “white” is used in the Book of Mormon text, it almost always means pure. The evidence is compelling:

It is true that skin color is meant in a few Book of Mormon passages, but this is infrequent. Nephi wrote that the Lamanites received a darker skin to make them repulsive to the Nephites so they would not mingle with the Lamanites and partake of their iniquity. “Wherefore, as they were white, and exceedingly fair and delightsome, that they might not be enticing unto my people the Lord God did cause a skin of blackness to come upon them” (2 Nephi 5:21). Later, we read that because of their repentance, “their curse was taken from them, and their skin became white like unto the Nephites” (3 Nephi 2:15). Two other passages may be using the term “white” to denote skin color. One is Nephi’s description of the gentiles who would come to the New world, who “were white, and exceedingly fair and beautiful, like unto my people before they were slain” (1 Nephi 13:15). The other is Nephi’s description of Christ’s mother as “exceedingly fair and white” (1 Nephi 11:13), a description that matches that of the fruit of the tree of life that Nephi and his father saw in vision, which was “white, to exceed all the whiteness that I had ever seen” (1 Nephi 8:11).

In the great majority of passages containing “white” the word does not refer to skin color. Rather, it means pure as Joseph Smith reflected in his 1840 change. Thus, speaking of the Jews, Nephi wrote that “as many as shall believe in Christ shall also become a delightsome people” (2 Nephi 30:7). The preceding verse contains the expression “white and delightsome”—hence the word “also” in verse 7. Since Jews already have white skin, it is hard to believe that this passage refers to skin color. Note also Words of Mormon 1:8, “And my prayer to God is concerning my brethren, that they may once again come to the knowledge of God, yea, the redemption of Christ; that they may once again be a delightsome people.”

Note the word “white” in Alma 32:42, where Alma admonishes, “And because of your diligence and your faith and your patience with the word in nourishing it, that it may take root in you, behold, by and by ye shall pluck the fruit thereof, which is most precious, which is sweet above all that is sweet, and which is white above all that is white, yea, and pure above all that is pure; and ye shall feast upon this fruit even until ye are filled, that ye hunger not, neither shall ye thirst.”

We also have evidence that the term “white” can denote purity in the Hebrew scriptures. For example, Lamentations 4:7 reads, “Her Nazarites were purser than snow, they were whiter than milk, they were more ruddy in body than rubies, their polishing was of sapphire.” The fact that white skin color was not intended is made clear by the fact that the Nazarites are also described as being “ruddy [reddish] in body.” Through the prophet Isaiah, the Lord said, “though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool” (Isaiah 1:18), suggesting that whiteness denotes a cleansing from sins.

The Old Testament book of Daniel, who was a contemporary of Nephi, also equates whiteness with purity. He prophesied that “some of them of understanding shall fall, to try them, and to purge, and to make them white, even to the time of the end: because it is yet for a time appointed” (Daniel 11:35). Daniel further noted that “Many shall be purified, and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly: and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand” (Daniel 12:10). Citing Daniel 12:9-10, Hippolytus, a third-century AD Christian theologian, wrote, “And who are they who are chosen, but those who believe the word of truth, so as to be made white thereby, and to cast off the filth of sin, and put on the heavenly, pure, and glorious Holy Spirit, in order that, when the Bridegroom comes, they may go in straightway with Him?”

Purification comes through following the principles of the gospel, beginning with faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and repentance, followed by baptism by water and the Holy Ghost’s baptism of fire. Moroni wrote, “O then ye unbelieving, turn ye unto the Lord; cry mightily unto the Father in the name of Jesus, that perhaps ye may be found spotless, pure, fair, and white, having been cleansed by the blood of the Lamb, at that great and last day” (Mormon 9:6). Psalm 51:7 has the petitioner asking the Lord, “Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean: wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.”

Washing garments in wine or blood should make them red, not white. Consequently, it is undoubtedly in the context of baptism and spiritual cleansing that we should read Book of Mormon passages about making one’s garments white in the blood of the Lamb. The first such mention came when the angel showed Nephi in vision the twelve Nephite disciples of Christ and declared, “behold, they are righteous forever; for because of their faith in the Lamb of God their garments are made white in his blood. And the angel said unto me: Look! And I looked, and beheld three generations pass away in righteousness; and their garments were white even like unto the Lamb of God. And the angel said unto me: These are made white in the blood of the Lamb, because of their faith in him” (1 Nephi 12:10-11).

In a discourse delivered in the city of Zarahemla, Alma used similar terminology: “There can no man be saved except his garments are washed white; yea, his garments must be purified until they are cleansed from all stain, through the blood of him of whom it has been spoken by our fathers, who should come to redeem his people from their sins” (Alma 5:21). “Behold, my brethren, do ye suppose that such an one can have a place to sit down in the kingdom of God, with Abraham, with Isaac, and with Jacob, and also all the holy prophets, whose garments are cleansed and are spotless, pure and white?” (Alma 5:24). “Could ye say, if ye were called to die at this time, within yourselves, that ye have been sufficiently humble? That your garments have been cleansed and made white through the blood of Christ, who will come to redeem his people from their sins?” (Alma 5:27). When speaking in the city of Gideon, Alma said, “And may the Lord bless you, and keep your garments spotless, that ye may at last be brought to sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and the holy prophets who have been ever since the world began, having your garments spotless even as their garments are spotless, in the kingdom of heaven to go no more out” (Alma 7:25).

During a subsequent visit to the city of Ammonihah, Alma again took up this theme: “Therefore they were called after this holy order, and were sanctified, and their garments were washed white through the blood of the Lamb. Now they, after being sanctified by the Holy Ghost, having their garments made white, being pure and spotless before God, could not look upon sin save it were with abhorrence; and there were many, exceedingly great many, who were made pure and entered into the rest of the Lord their God” (Alma 13:11-12). Alma’s friend Amulek borrowed the idea and told the Zoramites that God “has also said that the righteous shall sit down in his kingdom, to go no more out; but their garments should be made white through the blood of the Lamb” (Alma 34:36). The same concept is found in Ether 13:10.

Note that Alma equated purity with whiteness in his description of the garments of the righteous. Garments such as these are described in the Bible in connection with angels. The apostle John wrote of seven angels coming out of the heavenly temple “clothed in pure and white linen” (Revelation 15:6). Matthew said of the angel who appeared at Christ’s tomb, “His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow” (Matthew 28:3). D&C 20:6 describes Moroni as “an holy angel, whose countenance was as lightning, and whose garments were pure and white above all other whiteness.” Many passages from the Bible and from pseudepigraphic texts note the whiteness of the garments of the righteous (including the Lord and his angels), denoting their ritual purity.

So why did the prophet Joseph make the change in this verse in 1840—changing “white” to “pure”? Joseph may very well have recognized the possible racial undertones in this passage if interpreted that way and ultimately wished to avoid them. He also knew that the word “white” in the Book of Mormon text usually meant pure.

verses 7-17 In these verses Nephi refers to the gathering of Israel, in particular the gathering of the tribe of Judah. We know that the gathering of the Jews will not take place in earnest until the Lord’s second coming. Thus, much of what is said in these verses refers to the millennial gathering of the scattered tribes of Israel. While the latter-day gathering of Israel began with the restoration of the gospel through the prophet Joseph Smith, this gathering will continue to the time of the second coming of Christ and reach its zenith during his millennial reign.

7 And it shall come to pass that the Jews which are scattered also shall begin to believe in Christ; and they shall begin to gather in upon the face of the land; and as many as shall believe in Christ shall also become a delightsome people.

verse 7 “the Jews which are scattered also shall begin to believe in Christ”

It is probably fair to say that few of the world’s cultures have so thoroughly fettered themselves with false doctrines and false traditions than the Jews. In the last days, some relatively few Jews will begin to accept Christ. This movement, the so-called “Messianic Jews,” or “Jews for Jesus,” is seen today in the United States and in Israel and in other countries. It seems clear from modern prophecy, however, that no major conversion of the Jews will occur until the Savior’s second coming when he will set his foot on the Mount of Olives, and the mount will split in two. At that time the Jews will look upon the Lord and ask, “What are these wounds in thine hands and in thy feet? Then shall they know that I am the Lord; for I will say unto them: These wounds are the wounds with which I was wounded in the house of my friends. I am he who was lifted up. I am Jesus that was crucified. I am the Son of God. And then shall they weep because of their iniquities; then shall they lament because they persecuted their king” (D&C 45:51-53).

This verse indicates that in the eyes of the Lord the converted Jews will be more “delightsome” than they are at present.

“they shall begin to gather in upon the face of the land” Certainly we have no trouble today in seeing the beginning of the fulfillment of this part of the prophecy. Under the influence of the Zionist movement the Jews are rapidly gathering to Israel. As one might expect, in the early days of the Church, the interest in the Zionist movement was high since members looked forward to Christ’s second coming and the onset of the Millennium—perhaps even in their own lifetime.

While verse 7 might lead one to believe that the mass conversion of the Jews will precede their physical gathering, historical events have shown that the opposite is true. Again, the real gathering of the Jews to Jesus Christ and his Church will not occur until the millennium.

verses 8-18 Nephi closes his prophecy by quoting from the prophet Isaiah concerning the Millennium. In the scheme of things, Nephi does omit one final phase of this earth’s existence—that great final battle during which the devil and his legions shall be loosed following the Millennium, and Michael will lead the righteous (D&C 88:111-115).

8 And it shall come to pass that the Lord God shall commence his work among all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, to bring about the restoration of his people upon the earth.

verse 8 “the Lord God shall commence his work” “His work” is the missionary effort of the latter-day Church of Jesus Christ—the gathering of Israel. Do we have a problem with the timetable suggested here for the events in verses 7 and 8? Taken in sequence, these verses suggest that there will be a major conversion of the Jews prior to or coincident with the establishment of the latter-day missionary program. At the time of the writing of this commentary, not many of the Jews have been “gathered” or converted to the gospel, yet the missionary effort had its beginnings more than a century ago. Certainly, the Lord’s missionary work has commenced prior to any major conversion of the Jews, and their mass conversion still lies ahead as suggested in the commentary for the previous verse. Apparently, the work of gathering will be continued during the Millennium when the work will be greatly expedited in speed and efficiency compared to that which is done prior to the Savior’s second coming. So much so that all that is done prior to the Millennium will seem like only a beginning.

verses 9-10 These verses describe the great destruction and cleansing of the earth just prior to the Millennium.

9 And with righteousness shall the Lord God judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth. And he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth; and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked.

verse 9 Here Nephi quotes from Isaiah—see Isaiah 11:4 and 2 Nephi 21:4.

The Lord shall judge fairly the poor and the lowly. An alternate translation of “righteousness” here is “equity.”

“and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth” With fairness he will arbitrate for the lowly of the earth. These “meek” individuals will obviously be favored of the Lord. He obviously shows no favoritism to those of worldly wealth or position (D&C 35:15; 88:17-18). The wicked, on the other hand, who in this context are those who place things of the world ahead of things of the Spirit, will obviously draw the Lord’s wrath.

10 For the time speedily cometh that the Lord God shall cause a great division among the people, and the wicked will he destroy; and he will spare his people, yea, even if it so be that he must destroy the wicked by fire.

verse 10 “the Lord God shall cause a great division among the people” This great division will occur in the last days in preparation for the earth’s being changed from a celestial to a terrestrial environment. The celestial-bound individuals will be destroyed while the others will be allowed to remain to see the beginning of the Millennium.

verses 11-15 These verses are quotations from Isaiah—see Isaiah 11:5-9 and 2 Nephi 21:5-9. They describe the conditions that will exist during the Millennium.

11 And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins.

verse 11 Here the clear reference is “the Lord God” in the previous verse. Righteousness and faithfulness shall be characteristic of him—as a girdle or band about his “loins” and “reins.” “Loins” anciently referred to the genital parts which were regarded as the seat of strength or procreative power. “His reins” might be rendered “sinews” and also refers to his strength and power.

verses 12-15 These are the classic and oft quoted verses that describe the millennial period of peace between wild and domestic animals and between people and potentially dangerous animals. Satan will be bound, righteousness will prevail, and knowledge of the gospel will fill the earth. For commentary on these verses, see the commentary for 3 Nephi 21:6-9.

12 And then shall the wolf dwell with the lamb; and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf, and the young lion, and the fatling, together; and a little child shall lead them.

13 And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together; and the lion shall eat straw like the ox.

14 And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice’s den.

15 They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea.

verses 16-18 These verses also continue to describe conditions that will exist during the Millennium.

16 Wherefore, the things of all nations shall be made known; yea, all things shall be made known unto the children of men.

17 There is nothing which is secret save it shall be revealed; there is no work of darkness save it shall be made manifest in the light; and there is nothing which is sealed upon the earth save it shall be loosed.

verses 16-17 The Lord will later reveal to Joseph Smith the following: “The rebellious shall be pierced with much sorrow; for their iniquities shall be spoken upon the housetops, and their secret acts shall be revealed” (D&C 1:3).

“there is nothing which is sealed upon the earth save it shall be loosed”
The Millennium will be a period of complete disclosure, exposure, and unveiling. All secrets, both wholesome and sordid, will be revealed. Dissembling will not be allowed.

18 Wherefore, all things which have been revealed unto the children of men shall at that day be revealed; and Satan shall have power over the hearts of the children of men no more, for a long time. And now, my beloved brethren, I make an end of my sayings.

verse 18 “all things which have been revealed unto the children of men shall at that day be revealed” There is a fundamental principle of learning that pertains here. The only individuals who will fully appreciate the day when all scripture will be made available to them are those who have been diligent with the scripture we have available to us today!

2 Nephi Chapter 31

Chapters 31 and 32 of 2 Nephi are particularly known for their discussion of the concept of the “doctrine of Christ” (Jacob 7:2, 6; 2 Nephi 31:2, 21; 32:6). But, what exactly is the doctrine of Christ? It would seem that the doctrine of Christ is simply another name for the gospel of Christ or the gospel of Jesus Christ. Other expressions for the doctrine of Christ in this chapter include “the way” or “the word.”

We are taught repeatedly in latter-day scripture that the Book of Mormon contains the “fulness of the gospel of Christ” (D&C 20:9; 27:5; 42:12). Yet we have observed there are some specific teachings missing from the Book of Mormon such as information regarding the details of the spirit world, the three degrees of glory, celestial marriage, and the temple endowment. Does the Book of Mormon, then, really contain the doctrine of Christ or the gospel of Christ in its fulness? Let us explore this question.

To begin our discussion, let us consider the question: What does gospel mean? What is the gospel?” The term gospel comes from the Old English godspell which is derived from god (meaning “God” or “good”) and spel (meaning “story”). Gospel, then, literally means “God story,” “good story,” “good news,” or “glad tidings.” The LDS Bible Dictionary defines the gospel: “The good news [gospel] is that Jesus Christ has made a perfect atonement for mankind that will redeem all mankind from the grave and reward each individual according to his / her works” (682). The gospel of Jesus Christ, then, is the atonement of Christ, the “good news” that our sins may be forgiven by virtue of the Lord’s atonement, and that we may return to our celestial home. Without his atonement, we are lost. In one sense, then, the Book of Mormon does contain the fulness of the gospel. The doctrine of Christ contained in the Book of Mormon is sufficient to bring us home to him. The Book of Mormon is a rich source of divine teaching regarding the Lord’s atonement.

But are the Book of Mormon’s teachings of the atonement alone really sufficient? We actually want more than to come home to him. We want to be exalted in his presence. We want to inherit the blessings of the highest kingdom in the celestial heaven. If we are to earn our exaltation, wouldn’t it be helpful if we knew more details (more than we can read in the Book of Mormon) about the spirit world, the three degrees of glory, the ordinances of the temple, including celestial marriage? Elder Bruce R. McConkie expanded the definition of the gospel to include more about the principles and specific applications of the Savior’s atonement. He defined the gospel as: “the atonement. But the gospel is also all of the laws, principles, doctrines, rites, ordinances, acts, powers authorities, and keys needed to save and exalt fallen man in the highest heaven hereafter” (A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, 134). By another definition, then, the doctrine or gospel of Christ in its fulness includes all that is necessary for our exaltation and some of this is not contained in the Book of Mormon.

It would seem, then, that the ideal combination of teachings would include the Book of Mormon's teachings on the doctrine of Christ (the simpler version of requirements for celestial salvation) plus the materials specific in other modern-day scriptures that lay out the requirements for exaltation.

In our discussion of chapters 31 and 32, we will concentrate on the basics of the doctrine of Christ—those principles that allow us to understand and take advantage of the Savior's atonement in our lives (see also 3 Nephi 11-15 and 3 Nephi 27:13-21). By these teachings, we may come to Christ and become one of his sons and daughters. This doctrine is the "only way . . . under heaven whereby man can be saved in the kingdom of God" (2 Nephi 31:21). It is the only doctrine with the power to save.

Though any attempt to itemize the tenets of the doctrine of Christ must necessarily include elements of individual subjectivity and bias, it would probably be reasonable and helpful to do so. The most conventional formulation of the doctrine of Christ consists of six elements: (1) Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; (2) Repentance; (3) Baptism of water; (4) Gift of the Holy Ghost; (5) Enduring to the end; and (6) Eternal life.

An interesting side note is that the loss of the 116 pages of Book of Mormon manuscript by Martin Harris resulted in our having access today to 2 Nephi 31 and its wonderful account of the doctrine of Christ. We're all familiar with the negative aspects of the loss of the 116 pages, but D&C 10, in explaining why the small plates of Nephi should be used to replace the lost portion of the manuscript, actually points out a major advantage of including the small plates of Nephi. The Lord teaches that the Lord's prophets and disciples in the Book of Mormon had prayed that the doctrine of Christ should be made available to our dispensation, and the inclusion of the small plates of Nephi (particularly 2 Nephi 31) was going to make that possible (see D&C 10:45-46). The reader may wish to note that the six basic elements of the doctrine of Christ listed above are mentioned in D&C 10 (faith and eternal life in verse 50; repentance, baptism, and gift of the Holy Ghost in verse 67; and enduring to the end in verse 69).

It is fascinating to note Nephi's technique in expounding on these six basic parts of the gospel of Jesus Christ. At no point in 2 Nephi 31 does he simply list the six gospel elements that he is discussing—as a modern writer would do. It is only by accumulating the repeated elements in the chapter that we can see clearly how Nephi understands the gospel. These six elements are mentioned a total of 64 times in this chapter with the following frequencies: faith (8), repentance (14), baptism (19), Holy Ghost (9), enduring (8), and eternal life (16)—all within 2 Nephi 31. The striking fact is that exactly this same method is used by the Savior in his two presentations of the gospel as reported by Mormon in 3 Nephi 11 and 3 Nephi 27. This raises the possibility that the same method may have been used when the Father and the Son presented their gospel to Nephi in that original vision given at the first camp in the wilderness (1 Nephi 11-15).

I will provide you, the reader, a seven-step formula. This formulation differs somewhat from the standard six-element formulation above. This change is deliberate, and it is made to teach more detail concerning the basic tenets of the doctrine of Christ. This is certainly not a formula in the sense of a check list meant to be mechanically followed one time through in sequence. It is a formula whose steps must be all kept simultaneously in mind and worked on continuously. An enriched understanding of these features of the doctrine of Christ can result from a study of the background materials I will mention as we go along:

1. Faith—including faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. For a more thorough discussion of this principle see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 9, Revealed Faith; chapter 10, Deliberate Faith and Revealed Faith; and chapter 11, Other Notes on Faith. We all possess the initial subtle motivation to obey the commandment to be baptized and to obey all other commandments because of those things we have felt, heard, or read—sometimes through the testimonies of others. As we begin to obey, there is always a necessary element of deliberate effort. When we do succeed in obeying, this deliberate element is deliberate faith. We must obey simply because it's the right thing to do. We must obey even when we are often and compellingly resisted by our natural selves. With successful obedience, we are blessed with an incremental acquisition of sequential gifts of the Spirit. These are increments of the attributes of Christ. The accumulated total of these gifts of the Spirit we have acquired through our obedience are the sum of our revealed faith. Among the other blessings of revealed faith is the ability to obey more easily. The Lord is able to bless us with gifts of the Spirit—with revealed faith—only because of his atoning sacrifice and death. This is so because his blessings—his spiritual gifts to us—are inevitably grander than the efforts or “works” we expend to qualify for those gifts. According strictly to the principle of justice, it is not fair that he awards us so generously for our relatively paltry efforts. Hence, it is only through his atoning sacrifice and death that he is allowed to so bless us.

Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ is a specific and vital kind of faith. As we earnestly and deliberately strive to obey and emulate him (exercise our deliberate faith), we are blessed with a personal knowledge of him and a personal relationship with him. We are also blessed with a love for him and profound gratitude for his atoning sacrifice on our behalf. We are affirmed by the revealed knowledge that he loves us, and we are inclined to openly avow our love for him and our desire to follow his example—to obey him and strive to be like him.

Faith is listed here first in the list of tenets of the Lord's gospel. We should not, however, see faith as just a first step. Rather, faith is required of us and sustains us in each step of this mortal journey as we endure faithfully to the end.

2. Repentance. For a more thorough discussion of this principle, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 4, Repentance. Repentance is the vital stepwise process of changing from someone who fails to obey the Lord's commands to one who is obedient. When an individual begins to obey after a history of failure to do so, we refer to his obedience as repentance.

We might summarize the essential steps in repentance as humbling oneself before the Father and covenanting to forever thereafter obey his commandments. But there is also a third step. Repentance also includes the reparation or recompense we must make for the injury we might have inflicted on others due to our previously sinful behaviors (thoughts, feelings, words, actions).

3. The ordinance of baptism. The principle of baptism is a far richer concept than the reader may initially suppose. For a more thorough discussion of this principle, please see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 18, Baptism, the Ordinance that Brings Spiritual Growth. See also volume 2, chapter 5, The Holy Ghost.

Baptism of water. In the ordinance of baptism of water, we affirm our intention and willingness to identify ourselves with the Lord's people and enter into a covenant to take upon ourselves his holy name (2 Nephi 31:13) and obey him. We evidence our sincere desire to return to God's presence, desiring it above all else, "with full purpose of heart . . . with real intent" (2 Nephi 31:13). We also communicate our desire to actively and enthusiastically seek out the mind of God in order that we might conform to his will. We agree to join with his people here on earth and serve and succor them in their striving to keep the commandments and progress spiritually.

The actual manifesting or exercising our covenant of obedience imposed by the ordinance of baptism does not occur at the moment of baptism. Rather, it occurs at the moment we repent of sins and commit to forego those sins in the future.

Baptism of the Spirit. This is the receiving of the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands by someone with proper authority (2 Nephi 31:12). This essential gift bestows the power of personal revelation, or at least enhances one's ability to receive personal revelation, without which there can be no spiritual progress. It also enables and authorizes an individual to participate in the third part of the ordinance of baptism, the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost. Thus, the individual is more apt to grow spiritually at a greater rate because of the baptism of the Spirit.

Baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost. This third component of the ordinance of baptism embodies the principle of reconciliation and the sanctifying influence of the Holy Ghost. Again, we are motivated to repent of sins and obey the Lord's commands by our faith in the Lord Jesus, especially at first by our deliberate faith. The "baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost" is the very process or "ordinance" by which man progresses spiritually here on earth. It is the process by which the blessings of the Lord's atonement are extended to any individual.

Here is how it works: As a man strives to obey the Lord's commands, the Holy Ghost, the Holy Spirit of Promise, observes his efforts. When his efforts and motivations in obeying are judged adequate and appropriate, the Spirit grants the blessings of the Lord's atonement and forgives him of his sins (he is justified). Justification is the removal of the penalty for sin imposed by the law of justice. The Holy Ghost then changes his very heart by (1) purging from his soul—burning out of his soul as if by fire—increments of the specific imperfections (increments of his natural self that made it difficult for him to obey) of which he is repenting and (2) granting him an increment of the divine attribute he is striving to obey. These latter two processes together comprise the phenomenon of sanctification. For a more thorough discussion of the principles of justification and sanctification, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 17, Justification and Sanctification. This is an ongoing process that continues over a lifetime, and it must be repeated hundreds and thousands of times. Over time, through the influence of the Spirit of God, the iniquity, carnality, sensuality, and every other evil thing may be “burned out” of the repentant soul as if it were by fire. The person who has been thus cleansed becomes a “new creature” of the Holy Ghost. When the Holy Ghost blesses someone in this manner, it is said that he is “applying the atoning blood of Christ” or that he has “cleansed their garments by the atoning blood of Christ.”

It is important to acknowledge that the very essence of baptism is not what is done to the individual, but rather what the individual enters into a covenant to do.

Can a mortal really ever be perfect? An individual who is born of the Spirit or totally converted is indeed referred to in the scriptures as being “perfect” (JST Genesis 17:1; Matthew 5:48; 19:21; Colossians 4:12; 1 Peter 5:10). He may not be just like Christ—perfect in an absolute sense—and is certainly not immune from committing sin. Yet, his spiritual progress has earned him the right to be considered “justified before God” and “perfect in Christ” (Moroni 10:32-33). Such an individual eventually comes to abhor sin and cleave unto righteousness (see Alma 13:12).

The process of “baptism” centers on the ordinance of the sacrament. When we partake of the sacrament, we recommit ourselves to the Lord's commandments—we renew our covenant of baptism.

Rather than doing so in general terms, it seems more effective to commit ourselves to a specific goal for the coming week. We should prayerfully search our soul and ferret out a specific and small area where we need to improve. Then we should commit to do better in that specific area. If we live up to our commitment, the Spirit will honor us. We will be blessed to receive justification (forgiveness) and sanctification (purging of a part of our natural self and a granting of an increment of a gift of the Spirit). We thus take a small step toward becoming like Christ. Once we have taken a small step, then we are ready for another, and another, and another. This process continues throughout our lives. Being involved in the process is vital. It implies the attitude of humility and willingness to strive and improve to become more like the Savior.

4. Enduring to the end (2 Nephi 31:20). See Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 7, Spiritual Growth—Gifts of the Spirit, and chapter 8, The Blessings of Spiritual Growth. It is interesting that the Church has recognized enduring to the end as the fifth basic gospel principle only in the past decade. Neither the authorized ordinances nor the reception of the gift of the Holy Ghost will guarantee eternal life. Only those who endure to the end can be saved. It seems clear that spiritual progress must be an ongoing process. It is an active process and not a passive one. There seems to be no such thing as a plateau in an individual's spiritual maturity. When progress slows to a stop, then backsliding will inevitably begin to occur.

The key to continued progression, and thus to “enduring to the end” is to maintain one's relationship with and receptivity to the Spirit of God, the Holy Ghost. Without such a relationship, it seems impossible to maintain that vital eternal perspective and attitude. When the spiritual or eternal perspective is lost, then only the world and worldliness remains, and all spiritual progress ceases. We must never cease to deliberately strive to progress and improve ourselves. Only in this way does our responsiveness to the promptings of the Spirit remain fresh and alive. The principle of “no pain, no gain” certainly applies in the area of spiritual progress as much as any other. An element of personal grit and will power (character) is essential.

Some may think of enduring to the end in terms of “hanging on by one's fingernails” or “putting up with” or “sticking it out.” Such terms miss the spirit of real enduring. Elder Neal A. Maxwell taught: “Patient endurance is to be distinguished from merely being ‘acted upon.’ Endurance is more than pacing up and down within the cell of our circumstance; it is not only acceptance of the things allotted to us (Alma 29:3, 6). . . . True enduring represents not merely the passage of time, but the passage of the soul” (CR, April 1990, 43). Endurance means an ongoing proactive effort that results in continuous growth.

As one's continuous obedience continues, then his spiritual progress is assured. Scripturally, an individual who is ever-striving is said to stand “steadfastly” and “always rejoice, and be filled with the love of God, and always retain a remission of [his] sins; and [he] shall grow in the knowledge of the glory of him that created [him], or in the knowledge of that which is just and true” (Mosiah 4:11-12).

There are several scriptural references to the principle of enduring to the end. An individual who is successfully enduring to the end is willing to “stand as witnesses of God at all times and in all things, and in all places that ye may be in, even until death, that ye may be redeemed of God, and be numbered with those of the first resurrection, that ye may have eternal life” (Mosiah 18:9). To endure to the end is to be “steadfast and immovable”—the scriptural phrase for spiritual maturity (Mosiah 5:15).

5. Receiving the promise of eternal life. See Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 16, Calling and Election Made Sure. Joseph Smith wrote: “When the Lord has thoroughly proved [a man], and finds that the man is determined to serve him at all hazards, then the man will find his calling and his election made sure” (TPJS, section three, 1838–39, 150). He may be sealed up to eternal life. The doctrine or gospel of Jesus Christ articulates the only way by which a person may access eternal life.

6. Resurrection. See “Resurrection” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 7, Salvation. Both the doctrine of resurrection and the doctrine of the final judgment (see the following item) were regarded by the prophet Joseph Smith as being among the first principles of the gospel (TPJS, 149, 365).

7. Final judgment. See Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 9, The Judgments. An ancillary principle, closely related to resurrection and judgment is eternal life which is life forever in the presence of God. And intimately related to eternal life is eternal spiritual growth or progression in the direction of becoming like God.

Another major Book of Mormon passage that contains a summary of the gospel or doctrine of Christ is 3 Nephi 27:13-21.

Throughout the Book of Mormon, the many statements regarding the gospel (the doctrine of Christ) contain variations in terminology and are often elliptical (characterized by economy of expression), leaving out one or more of the seven points in any one articulation. However, for an audience familiar with the basic pattern, the allusion to that pattern is perfectly clear. These elliptical references often take the form of merismus, a classical rhetorical device in which the division of an important topic or statement into component parts allows for its full invocation by explicit listing of selected parts only. In the Hebrew Bible, merismus occurs as concise or condensed expressions that, by mentioning the first and last or more prominent elements of a series, invoke the entire list (A. M. Honeyman, “Merismus in Biblical Hebrew,” Journal of Biblical Hebrew 71 [1952]:14).

In other words, once a pattern is established in the form of A, B, C, D, E, F, G (such as the elements of the gospel or doctrine of Christ), the mere mention of two or more of these items, such as A and F, is used to represent the entire series. Understood as a formula composed of a list of ordered items, the gospel lends itself well to this rhetorical device. For example, a typical Book of Mormon merismus states that believing in Jesus and enduring to the end is life eternal (see 2 Nephi 33:4). While repentance, baptism, and the gift of the Holy Ghost are not explicitly mentioned, they are implied by the use of merismus. A conservative count of gospel-related merisms in the Book of Mormon gives at least 130 meristic statements of the gospel or doctrine of Christ (Noel B. Reynolds, “The Gospel of Jesus Christ as Taught by the Nephite Prophets,” BYU Studies 31/3 [1991]:31-50). The technique of merismus is also found in the Bible. For example, Mark 16:16 quotes Jesus’s statement of his gospel to his disciples as follows: “He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.” This and other similar passages are often used to argue that all that is required for salvation is faith in Christ, or faith and baptism (see also Ephesians 2:8; Matthew 3:11; 24:13-14, Acts 2:38; 19:4-6, and Romans 1:16). We therefore learn that scriptural statements that explicitly state a lesser number of requirements for salvation, implicitly invoke the entire list of five (faith, repentance, baptism, gift of the Holy Ghost, and enduring to the end). This same technique was used by the Savior in his later presentations of the gospel to the Nephites as reported in 3 Nephi 11 and 3 Nephi 27.

2 Nephi 31 Nephi's discourse on the doctrine of Christ

2 Nephi 31:3 My soul delighteth in plainness.

2 Nephi 31:4-7 If the Lamb of God, he being holy, should have need to be baptized by water, to fulfil all righteousness, how much more need have we, being unholy, to be baptized, yea, even by water!

2 Nephi 31:13 Follow the Son, with full purpose of heart, acting no hypocrisy and no deception before God, but with real intent.

2 Nephi 31:17-21 After ye have gotten into this strait and narrow path, I would ask if all is done? Behold I say unto you nay, for ye have not come this far save it were by the word of Christ with unshaken faith in him, relying wholly upon the merits of him who is mighty to save. Wherefore, ye must press forward with a steadfastness in Christ, having a perfect brightness of hope, and a love of God and of all men. Wherefore, if ye shall press forward, feasting upon the word of Christ, and endure to the end, behold, thus saith the Father: Ye shall have eternal life. And now, behold, my beloved brethren, this is the way; and there is none other way nor name given under heaven whereby man can be saved in the kingdom of God. And now, behold, this is the doctrine of Christ, and the only and true doctrine of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, which is one God, without end.

1 And now I, Nephi, make an end of my prophesying unto you, my beloved brethren. And I cannot write but a few things, which I know must surely come to pass; neither can I write but a few of the words of my brother Jacob.

verse 1 "I, Nephi, make an end of my prophesying unto you" Beginning with 2 Nephi 25:7 Nephi has been delivering his final prophecy based on what he learned during his great vision while camped in the Valley of Lemuel some forty years prior to his writing this sermon. The first section of this final sermon or "prophesying" extends from 2 Nephi 25:7 to this verse (2 Nephi 31:1). An interesting observation is that this sermon is clearly identified by a technique called "inclusio." In this technique, the writer marks off a section of his text by repeating at the end of the section a phrase or statement made at the beginning of the section. In 2 Nephi 25:7, Nephi wrote: "I proceed with mine own prophecy." Here in this verse he ends the section of prophecy with "I, Nephi, make an end of my prophesying." Note that this sermon is marked off doubly. Note that in 2 Nephi 25:4 Nephi says "my soul delighteth in plainness." This statement is repeated verbatim in 2 Nephi 31:3 where he says again "my soul delighteth in plainness."

The second section of Nephi's teaching those things he learned in his great vision in 1 Nephi 11-15 is contained here in 2 Nephi 31. Using, again, the technique of "inclusio," he refers in 2 Nephi 31:2 to "the doctrine of Christ." This segment will end in verse 21 where he again says, "the doctrine of Christ."

A third brief section of Nephi's sermon involves the first five verses in 2 Nephi 32. This small segment ends with Nephi again saying in 2 Nephi 32:6, "this is the doctrine of Christ." The entire sermon on those things he learned in his great vision in the place of the family's first encampment, then, extends from 2 Nephi 25:4 to 2 Nephi 32:6.

"my beloved brethren" Nephi has been addressing his fellow Nephites in the land of Nephi.

2 Wherefore, the things which I have written sufficeth me, save it be a few words which I must speak concerning the doctrine of Christ; wherefore, I shall speak unto you plainly, according to the plainness of my prophesying.

verses 1-2 As Nephi begins to wind up his writing, he leaves us with the impression that he can only write a few more things. Thus, we can assume that he will give us only those things which he considered to be of vital importance. Obviously, the concepts of the "doctrine of Christ" as discussed in this chapter are among those vital concepts. There is one true "doctrine of Christ" or gospel, to which all who desire a fulness of salvation must ultimately subscribe.

"a few of the words of my brother Jacob" Nephi has quoted "but a few words" of Jacob's teachings in 2 Nephi 6-10—Jacob's two-day lecture to his fellow Nephites.

3 For my soul delighteth in plainness; for after this manner doth the Lord God work among the children of men. For the Lord God giveth light unto the understanding; for he speaketh unto men according to their language, unto their understanding.

verse 3 "For my soul delighteth in plainness" See the commentary for 1 Nephi 13:29.

"For the Lord God giveth light unto the understanding; for he speaketh unto men according to their language, unto their understanding." This is an important principle of revelation. When the Lord speaks to a man, he wants that man to understand plainly. Hence, he must condescend to the man's intellect and speak to him on a level that will allow the man to understand. Obviously, the Lord's prophets are not always sophisticated by the world's intellectual standards, and revelation must be given to each "in their weakness, after the manner of their language, that they might come to understanding" (D&C 1:24; cf. 1 Corinthians 1:27).

As the Church grew rapidly in 1830–1831, it did not take long for the early brethren to recognize a need to print the many revelations Joseph Smith was receiving. At a conference held on November 1, 1831, the decision was made to print the Book of Commandments, a precursor to the Doctrine and Covenants (See Richard E. Turley Jr. and William W. Slaughter, How We Got the Doctrine and Covenants, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 2012, 15; Steven C. Harper, Making Sense of the Doctrine and Covenants: A Guided Tour through Modern Revelation, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 2008, 1, 18).

At the same conference, some felt the language used in the revelations was not worthy of the voice of God (Harper, Making Sense, 233. Doctrine and Covenants 67 was revealed as a direct challenge to those questioning the language of the revelations.). In the revealed preface to the book, now Doctrine and Covenants 1 (“Behold, this is mine authority, and the authority of my servants, and my preface unto the book of my commandments, which I have given them to publish unto you, O inhabitants of the earth,” Doctrine and Covenants 1:6, emphasis added. A committee was originally appointed to write a preface to the book, but it was not to the satisfaction of all the brethren, and they petitioned Joseph Smith to ask the Lord. See Harper, Making Sense, 2, 18; Matthew C. Godfrey, “William McLellin’s Five Questions,” Revelation in Context, January 3, 2013, online at history.lds.org, identifies the committee as William McLellin, Oliver Cowdery, and Sidney Rigdon.), the Lord responded, “these commandments are of me, and were given unto my servants in their weakness, after the manner of their language, that they might come to understanding” (D&C 1:24).

The prophet Nephi, here in this verse, writing in the 6th century BC, similarly taught that God “speaketh unto men according to their language, unto their understanding,” LDS anthropologist Mark Alan Wright pointed out, “Language is not limited to the words we use” but also “entails signs, symbols, and bodily gestures that are imbued with meaning by the cultures that produced them” (Mark Alan Wright, “According to Their Language, unto Their Understanding’: The Cultural Context of Hierophanies and Theophanies in Latter-day Saint Canon,” Studies in the Bible and Antiquity 3, 2011: 52).

The Book of Mormon itself provides examples that illustrate how God adapts the way He communicates to the understanding of His servants. Many scholars have commented on how “Lehi’s prophetic calling fits within the historical context of pre-exilic Israel” (Wright, “According to Their Language,” 59). Key elements to this pattern include seeing God upon His throne, seeing the heavenly hosts, receiving a heavenly book, and being called to deliver the message of the book to the people (see 1 Nephi 1:8–14) (See Blake Thomas Ostler, “The Throne-Theophany and Prophetic Commission in 1 Nephi: A Form-Critical Analysis,” BYU Studies 26, no. 4, 1986: 67–95; John W. Welch, “The Calling of a Prophet,” in First Nephi, The Doctrinal Foundation, ed. Monte S. Nyman and Charles D. Tate Jr., Book of Mormon Symposium Series, Volume 2, Provo, UT: Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, 1988, 35–54; Stephen D. Ricks, “Heavenly Visions and Prophetic Calls in Isaiah 6 [2 Nephi 16], the Book of Mormon, and the Revelation of John,” in Isaiah in the Book of Mormon, ed. Donald W. Parry and John W. Welch, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1998, 171–190; John W. Welch, “The Calling of Lehi as a Prophet in the World of Jerusalem,” in Glimpses of Lehi’s Jerusalem, ed. John W. Welch, David Rolph Seely, and Jo Ann H. Seely, Provo: FARMS, 2004, 421–448; David E. Bokovoy, “On Christ and Covenants: An LDS Reading of Isaiah’s Prophetic Call,” Studies in the Bible and Antiquity 3, 2011).

While many ancient Near Eastern elements of revelation persisted among Nephite prophets (See Stephen O. Smoot, “The Divine Council in the Hebrew Bible and the Book of Mormon,” Studia Antiqua: A Student Journal for the Study of the Ancient World 12, no. 2, 2013: 1–18), Wright noticed that “later prophets in the Book of Mormon—those grounded firmly in the New World,” received prophetic callings in “a pattern that can be detected in ancient Mesoamerica” (Wright, “According to Their Language,” 59).

Mesoamerican holy men “commonly receive their calling through near-death experiences,” during which they would be visited by a divine being in a dream, and religious leaders would pray and perform ritual actions to aid in the healing process (Mark Alan Wright, “Nephite Daykeepers: Ritual Specialists in Mesoamerica and the Book of Mormon,” in Ancient Temple Worship: Proceedings of the Expound Symposium, 14 May 2011, ed. Matthew B. Brown, Jeffrey M. Bradshaw, Stephen D. Ricks, John S. Thompson, Salt Lake City and Orem, UT: Eborn Books and Interpreter Foundation, 2014, 248. See also Wright, “According to Their Language,” 59–60). Upon recovering, “the newly called shamans possess a power and authority that is recognized by . . . their community” (Wright, “According to Their Language,” 60; Wright, “Nephite Daykeepers,” 249).

Several individuals in the Book of Mormon go through a similar experience. Alma the Younger (Mosiah 27:19–24; Alma 36) is the most prominent, but elements in this pattern are also seen in the stories of Zeezrom, Lamoni, and Ammon (Wright, “According to Their Language,” 60–64; Wright, “Nephite Daykeepers,” 247–252). Although the “process may seem foreign to modern readers,” noted Wright, “to the Nephites, living in an ancient Mesoamerican setting, falling to the earth as if dead is pregnant with meaning” (Wright, “According to Their Language,” 59).

As the Lord has spoken to prophets in many different times and places, and in many different languages, He has understood the need to adapt how He communicates to suit their needs. This applies not only to their verbal language, education level, or mode of expression, but also historical circumstances and cultural background. “Each prophet was a product of his own culture, and the manner in which the divine was manifested to the prophets was largely defined by . . . their culture” (Wright, “According to Their Language,” 51).

To ancient Israelite prophets, revelation came in ways consistent with “a shared cultural language among neighboring ancient Near Eastern cultures” (Wright, “According to Their Language,” 59). Early Book of Mormon prophets shared in this cultural language, and received similar visions. As Book of Mormon peoples adapted to their New World environment, the Lord adapted His manner of communication to their new cultural understanding.

When the Lord called a prophet again in the 19th century, He once again spoke to him “in [his] weakness, after the manner of [his] language, that [he] might come to understanding” (Doctrine and Covenants 1:24). This does not just apply to the sometimes rough and ungrammatical language in the early revelations came in. It shaped everything about how God communicated with Joseph Smith, from the kind of visions he had, to his use of a seer stone, to the theological vocabulary in his revelations (For discussion of some of Joseph Smith’s experiences in a 19th century context, see Richard L. Bushman, “The Visionary World of Joseph Smith,” BYU Studies 37, no. 1, 1997–98: 183–204; Mark Ashurst-McGee, “Moroni as Angel and as Treasure Guardian,” FARMS Review 18, no. 1, 2006: 34–100; Brant A. Gardner, The Gift and Power: Translating the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2011).

Prophets today no longer use seer stones, but that doesn’t mean they don’t continue to receive revelation. While still an Apostle, Elder Spencer W. Kimball taught members in Germany, “Always expecting the spectacular, many will miss entirely the constant flow of revealed communication” (Spencer W. Kimball, Munich Germany Area Conference, 1973, 77; as cited in Daniel C. Peterson, “The Small Voice,” Interpreter: A Journal of Mormon Scripture 22, 2016: x). Wright explained: “Modern Latter-day Saints believe in continuing revelation, collectively and individually, and cultural context continues to influence the manner in which divine manifestations are received by individuals entrenched within the various cultures that comprise the worldwide church” (Wright, “According to Their Language,” 65).

With the Lord’s adapting revelation to specific cultural contexts, it is important to study the context of revelation, whether it be early Church history, ancient Israel, or pre-Columbian America. By doing so, “modern readers can obtain a greater understanding of the revelatory process” (Wright, “According to Their Language,” 64 similarly concluded: “By examining the cultural context in which such manifestations occur, modern readers can obtain a greater understanding of the revelatory process recounted in these texts.”).

As is the case with all communications, we hear better when we listen carefully and astutely. While the medium is not the message, we understand better when we recognize how and why revelation is given to us and people of the past. Knowing this, we can better hear and hearken unto the concerns and meanings that stand behind the words of the Lord. Because His purposes remain relatively constant in all dispensations, we should not be derailed by the various manners or media through which He packages and conveys His messages in order to facilitate our understanding.

4 Wherefore, I would that ye should remember that I have spoken unto you concerning that prophet which the Lord showed unto me, that should baptize the Lamb of God, which should take away the sins of the world.

verse 4 Here Nephi reminds his readers of his great vision of the tree of life during which he saw Jesus's baptism by John the Baptist (see 1 Nephi 11:27). He then uses this vision of Jesus's baptism as the keynote that introduces his vital discussion of the doctrine of Christ to follow in the remainder of 2 Nephi 31. In this discussion, he is relating what he learned about the doctrine of Christ during his great vision in 1 Nephi 11-15. This account, to follow here in 2 Nephi 31 is the most authoritative and unfiltered account we have of the basic doctrine of Christ. You will note in the discussion below that he was actually team-taught by the voices of both the Father and the Son. Each of them will be quoted three times. The only known passage in ancient or modern scripture where the Father and the Son personally teach a prophet their gospel is found in 2 Nephi 31. Nephi is relating in his own words what he learned there in the Valley of Lemuel under this most unusual divine tutelage. Nephi did not include an account of this unparalleled experience in his initial account of the larger vision (1 Nephi 11 through 15) of which it was a part, but held it back for emphasis in these, his final writings.

John the Baptist's ministry was obviously of such importance that other prophets were accorded visions of it (see Isaiah 40:3-4; and Malachi 3:1). Perhaps Isaiah and Malachi also were also taught the essential elements of the doctrine of Christ following their visions of the baptism of Jesus.

5 And now, if the Lamb of God, he being holy, should have need to be baptized by water, to fulfil all righteousness, O then, how much more need have we, being unholy, to be baptized, yea, even by water!
