4 And among the Lamanites who were slain were almost all the seed of Amulon and his brethren, who were the priests of Noah, and they were slain by the hands of the Nephites;

5 And the remainder, having fled into the east wilderness, and having usurped the power and authority over the Lamanites, caused that many of the Lamanites should perish by fire because of their belief– verse 5 “And the remainder” These were the descendants of Amulon and his brethren who escaped death at the hands of the Nephites. They “caused that many of the Lamanites [who had been part of the attacking party] should perish by fire because of their belief.” After their defeat by the Nephite army, many of the invading Lamanites, because of their own afflictions, were “stirred up in remembrance” of the preachings of Ammon and Aaron and their brethren. They became convinced that the power of God was with the Nephites, and they were persuaded to believe that the sons of Mosiah had been teaching the truth after all (see the following verse). The Amulonites, however, remained steadfast in their wickedness. They held positions of leadership over the Lamanites and exercised their authority in a tyrannical manner, even executing many of the Lamanites because of their beliefs in Christ.

6 For many of them, after having suffered much loss and so many afflictions, began to be stirred up in remembrance of the words which Aaron and his brethren had preached to them in their land; therefore they began to disbelieve the traditions of their fathers, and to believe in the Lord, and that he gave great power unto the Nephites; and thus there were many of them converted in the wilderness.

7 And it came to pass that those rulers who were the remnant of the children of Amulon caused that they should be put to death, yea, all those that believed in these things.

verses 5-7 The prophet Abinadi, as he was being burned to death, had cried out a prophecy that some among the seed of Amulon would, in the future, cause many people to suffer death by fire because of the people’s belief in Jesus Christ: “Behold, even as ye have done unto me, so shall it come to pass that thy seed shall cause that many shall suffer the pains that I do suffer, even the pains of death by fire; and this because they [those who suffer death] believe in the salvation of the Lord their God” (Mosiah 17:15).

8 Now this martyrdom caused that many of their brethren should be stirred up to anger; and there began to be contention in the wilderness; and the Lamanites began to hunt the seed of Amulon and his brethren and began to slay them; and they fled into the east wilderness.

9 And behold they are hunted at this day by the Lamanites. Thus the words of Abinadi were brought to pass, which he said concerning the seed of the priests who caused that he should suffer death by fire.

verse 9 “they are hunted at this day by the Lamanites” The prophet Mormon is the author or first person here. “This day” refers to his day. This verse thus makes the remarkable suggestion that even in Mormon’s day the remnants of the Amulonites were regarded as legendary enemies among the Lamanites and were hunted by them.

“Thus the words of Abinadi were brought to pass” Abinadi had prophesied of the descendants of Amulon and his brethren: “Ye shall be afflicted with all manner of diseases because of your iniquities. Yea, and ye shall be smitten on every hand, and shall be driven and scattered to and fro, even as a wild flock is driven by wild and ferocious beasts. And in that day ye shall be hunted, and ye shall be taken by the hand of your enemies, and then ye shall suffer, as I suffer, the pains of death by fire” (Mosiah 17:16-18).

10 For he said unto them: What ye shall do unto me shall be a type of things to come.

verse 10 Mormon quotes the prophet Abinadi. This quote is found in Mosiah 13:10. The following verse suggests that this statement of Abinadi refers to the righteous Lamanites who were martyred for their beliefs, rather than to the descendants of Amulon. The previous verse (verse 9) refers to the descendants of Amulon.

11 And now Abinadi was the first that suffered death by fire because of his belief in God; now this is what he meant, that many should suffer death by fire, according as he had suffered.

12 And he said unto the priests of Noah that their seed should cause many to be put to death, in the like manner as he was, and that they should be scattered abroad and slain, even as a sheep having no shepherd is driven and slain by wild beasts; and now behold, these words were verified, for they were driven by the Lamanites, and they were hunted, and they were smitten.

13 And it came to pass that when the Lamanites saw that they could not overpower the Nephites they returned again to their own land; and many of them came over to dwell in the land of Ishmael and the land of Nephi, and did join themselves to the people of God, who were the people of Anti-Nephi-Lehi.

verse 13 “many of them . . . did join themselves to the people of God, who were the people of Anti-Nephi-Lehi” Hugh Nibley has pointed out: “For many years it was only because Nephite dissenters stirred them up that the Lamanites came to war against the Nephites. It was hardened Lamanite troopers who had sworn vengeance upon the Nephites [verse 1] who, upon returning from a campaign, of their own free will went over in large numbers [and joined with the Anti-Nephi-Lehies]” (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, Volume 7, 344-45).

14 And they did also bury their weapons of war, according as their brethren had, and they began to be a righteous people; and they did walk in the ways of the Lord, and did observe to keep his commandments and his statutes.

verse 14 “they did walk in the ways of the Lord, and did observe to keep his commandments and his statutes” Though these Lamanites had been defeated by the Nephites and forced to surrender, it is apparent that their conversion was far more than a conversion of convenience and coercion.

15 Yea, and they did keep the law of Moses; for it was expedient that they should keep the law of Moses as yet, for it was not all fulfilled. But notwithstanding the law of Moses, they did look forward to the coming of Christ, considering that the law of Moses was a type of his coming, and believing that they must keep those outward performances until the time that he should be revealed unto them.

16 Now they did not suppose that salvation came by the law of Moses; but the law of Moses did serve to strengthen their faith in Christ; and thus they did retain a hope through faith, unto eternal salvation, relying upon the spirit of prophecy, which spake of those things to come.

verses 15-16 These two verses contain what is probably the clearest statement in all the scriptures on the law of Moses as a “type” or symbol of the mission of Jesus Christ. The faithful among the Book of Mormon people observed the law of Moses while looking forward to the coming of Christ. They knew that salvation did not come through the law of Moses, rather through Christ. Yet the law strengthened their faith in Christ and taught them of him. The reader may review the many ways in which the law of Moses pointed to or contained types of Christ in the commentary for 2 Nephi 11:4. See also Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 16, The Law of Moses.

verse 16 “they did retain a hope through faith, unto eternal salvation, relying upon the spirit of prophecy, which spake of those things to come” For a review of the relationship of faith and hope, see “The Fruits of Faith” in volume 1, chapter 11, Other Notes on Faith in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine. Consider the advantages we have today over these early valiant and faithful brethren. They had no access to eye-witness accounts of the mortal ministry and miracles of Jesus as we do today. The mortal Christ would not be born for several decades. They had only their incomparable faith and consummate hope that the Christ would indeed be born some day.

17 And now behold, Ammon, and Aaron, and Omner, and Himni, and their brethren did rejoice exceedingly, for the success which they had had among the Lamanites, seeing that the Lord had granted unto them according to their prayers, and that he had also verified his word unto them in every particular.

verse 17 “seeing that the Lord had granted unto them according to their prayers” See Alma 17:9-11. The sons of Mosiah had prayed unto the Lord that they might become instruments in the hands of the Lord to bring many of their Lamanite brethren to a knowledge of the truth.

Scripture Mastery

Alma 26:9-12 Ammon is rebuked by his brother Aaron for boasting. Ammon retorts: I do not boast in my own strength, nor in my own wisdom.

Alma 26:22 Ammon teaches that a man cannot understand the principle of the Lord's mercy or any other of the mysteries lest he repent and bring forth good works.

Alma 26:29-30 Ammon teaches that he and his brothers suffered all manner of afflictions, that perhaps they might be the means of saving some soul.

This chapter contains Ammon's report of his fourteen-year mission among the Lamanites with his two brothers and others. Most readers may not be aware of the amount of material in this monologue that is borrowed from earlier sources. Here in Alma 26, Ammon uses phrases from the scriptures, including words from earlier Nephite prophets and leaders. His glorying and praising are reminiscent of the biblical psalms, in which King David and others cry out to the Lord for deliverance and praise his name for his mercy and great blessings. He quoted from or paraphrased the words of Jacob, King Benjamin, and his friend, Alma the Younger. A few of these will be pointed out as we study Alma 26.

The presence of all of these scriptural quotations, paraphrases and allusions in Ammon's words raises the question: why would Ammon borrow so much from past traditions as he expressed his own genuine feelings? There are many possible reasons. Here are few to think about.

It's obvious that Ammon knew the scriptures well. This familiarity with the scriptures and Nephite records was attested in Alma 18:36–38, where he rehearsed and expounded on them for King Lamoni. The record states that: "He began at the creation of the world, and also the creation of Adam, and told him all the things concerning the fall of man, and rehearsed and laid before him the records and the holy scriptures of the people, which had been spoken by the prophets, even down to the time that their father, Lehi, left Jerusalem. . . And he also rehearsed unto them concerning the rebellions of Laman and Lemuel, and the sons of Ishmael, yea, all their rebellions did he relate unto them; and he expounded unto them all the records and scriptures from the time that Lehi left Jerusalem down to the present time."

Ammon was an heir to the Nephite throne in Zarahemla and would have been king if he had not refused to take the kingdom (Mosiah 29:3). As a prince, Ammon would have been well taught in his family's royal traditions, including the teachings of his grandfather, King Benjamin, as well as those of his Nephite ancestors, such as Jacob. Ammon would have been instructed in the words of the holy scriptures, which were kept and maintained by his family, as well as the words of all of the Nephite prophets and kings. As was common in ancient times, Ammon would likely have had these holy records largely memorized, which explains how he was able to rehearse them so readily to King Lamoni and others. His royal background would also explain how he seemingly knew how to comport himself in a royal setting, in the court of King Lamoni.

The fact that Ammon was a royal figure may also explain why he used so much of the language of the Psalms, with their rejoicing and praising of Jehovah. The Psalms were traditionally understood to have been written by royalty, by King David and other important figures in ancient Israel's monarchy. It was the royal figure, the representative of the people, that would have had the responsibility to lead in praise and thanksgiving for the people. This is the role that Ammon assumes here in Alma 26.

Another possible reason for Ammon's use of scriptural and Nephite tradition was his need to convince the Lamanites of the incorrectness of their traditions. He was interested in replacing their incorrect traditions with those that he knew to be true. Ammon, in his words and interactions with Lamanite royalty, was modeling the contrast between the incorrect traditions of the Lamanites and the righteous traditions of the Nephites.

Ammon is an example of a righteous man who stood firmly in the traditions of the faithful Nephites and was a missionary who had prepared himself well to be an instrument in God's hands. His actions and words are a testament to a man who had studied and internalized the words of God and the righteous deeds of the past. He is an example to the people he taught and to all who read about him today.

1 And now, these are the words of Ammon to his brethren, which say thus: My brothers and my brethren, behold I say unto you, how great reason have we to rejoice; for could we have supposed when we started from the land of Zarahemla that God would have granted unto us such great blessings?

verse 1 "My brothers and my brethren" Ammon differentiates among those in the missionary group. His "brothers" were Aaron, Omner, and Himni, and his "brethren" were Muloki, Ammah, and perhaps others.

2 And now, I ask, what great blessings has he bestowed upon us? Can ye tell?

3 Behold, I answer for you; for our brethren, the Lamanites, were in darkness, yea, even in the darkest abyss, but behold, how many of them are brought to behold the marvelous light of God! And this is the blessing which hath been bestowed upon us, that we have been made instruments in the hands of God to bring about this great work.

verse 3 Here in this verse, Ammon paraphrases his friend Alma's conversion story, of which Ammon himself was a participant. Alma had recounted: "I was in the darkest abyss; but now I behold the marvelous light of God" (Mosiah 27:29). Here Ammon applies these words almost verbatim when speaking of the conversion of the Lamanites. He stated: “For our brethren, the Lamanites, were in darkness, yea, even in the darkest abyss, but behold, how many of them are brought to behold the marvelous light of God!” (Alma 26:3).

“darkest abyss” See the commentary for Mosiah 27:29.

4 Behold, thousands of them do rejoice, and have been brought into the fold of God.

5 Behold, the field was ripe, and blessed are ye, for ye did thrust in the sickle, and did reap with your might, yea, all the day long did ye labor; and behold the number of your sheaves! And they shall be gathered into the garners, that they are not wasted.

verse 5 “And they shall be gathered into the garners” A garner is a granary or a place where grains are stored.

verses 6-8 These verses refer to those Lamanite converts who joined the church during the missionary excursions of the sons of Mosiah.

Here Ammon discusses how the Lamanite converts have been “gathered together in their place” so “that the storm cannot penetrate them.” The Lord would protect them from the “fierce winds” of the enemy, and Ammon sings praises and gives “thanks to his holy name.” Much of this language likely borrows from scriptural sources such as Psalms 106–107.

For example, Psalm 107:23–31 talks about those that are lost at sea, caught in the “stormy wind.” The psalm goes on to describe their deliverance: “They reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man, and are at their wits’ end. Then they cry unto the Lord in their trouble, and he bringeth them out of their distresses. He maketh the storm a calm, so that the waves thereof are still. Then are they glad because they be quiet; so he bringeth them unto their desired haven. Oh, that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men! (Psalm 107:27–31). In a similar strain, Psalm 106:47 petitions, “Save us, O Lord our God, and gather us from among the heathen, to give thanks unto thy holy name, and to triumph in thy praise.” Ammon went on to praise his brethren for their hard work. “Behold, the field was ripe,” he declared, “and blessed are ye, for ye did thrust in the sickle.” This sounds very much like Joel 3:13, “Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe.”

6 Yea, they shall not be beaten down by the storm at the last day; yea, neither shall they be harrowed up by the whirlwinds; but when the storm cometh they shall be gathered together in their place, that the storm cannot penetrate to them; yea, neither shall they be driven with fierce winds whithersoever the enemy listeth to carry them.

verse 6 “neither shall they be harrowed up by the whirlwinds” To be “harrowed up” is to be vexed, tormented, distressed, afflicted, or tortured.

7 But behold, they are in the hands of the Lord of the harvest, and they are his; and he will raise them up at the last day.

verse 7 Again, “they” are those Lamanites converted during the mission of the four sons of Mosiah.

“he will raise them up at the last day” He will raise them up on the morning of the first resurrection—they will be resurrected with a celestial body.

8 Blessed be the name of our God; let us sing to his praise, yea, let us give thanks to his holy name, for he doth work righteousness forever.

verse 8 This verse is, itself, a brief psalm or hymn of praise.

9 For if we had not come up out of the land of Zarahemla, these our dearly beloved brethren, who have so dearly beloved us, would still have been racked with hatred against us, yea, and they would also have been strangers to God.

10 And it came to pass that when Ammon had said these words, his brother Aaron rebuked him, saying: Ammon, I fear that thy joy doth carry thee away unto boasting.

verse 10 Perhaps Ammon was somewhat at fault here, yet it may be difficult to draw a line between expressing joy and boasting.

11 But Ammon said unto him: I do not boast in my own strength, nor in my own wisdom; but behold, my joy is full, yea, my heart is brim with joy, and I will rejoice in my God.

verse 11 “my heart is brim with joy” This is the only use in all the scriptures of this rather novel and charming expression.

12 Yea, I know that I am nothing; as to my strength I am weak; therefore I will not boast of myself, but I will boast of my God, for in his strength I can do all things; yea, behold, many mighty miracles we have wrought in this land, for which we will praise his name forever.

verse 12 “Yea, I know that I am nothing” We might intuitively object to this self-indictment of Ammon’s. It would be difficult to argue that this valiant and noble missionary was “nothing.” After being favored with a grand vision of the eternities and the power and majesty of God, Moses said: “I know that man is nothing, which thing I never had supposed.” Is this true? Is man nothing? It might be argued that the natural man—mortal man without the influence of the Spirit of God is “nothing,” particularly when compared to what he might become with the heavenly endowments that are available to him. Or, we might also argue that a man, when thoroughly converted to Christ tends to selflessly forget self and focus all his attentions on others. Hence, he is relatively “nothing” compared to his concern for others.

13 Behold, how many thousands of our brethren has he loosed from the pains of hell; and they are brought to sing redeeming love, and this because of the power of his word which is in us, therefore have we not great reason to rejoice?

verse 13 “how many . . . has he loosed from the pains of hell” Being “loosed from the pains of hell” has a dual meaning. Through Jesus’s atonement a man may escape the pains of hell here in mortality. That is, he may be absolved or forgiven of all the guilt and misery which sin may bring. Also, after this mortal phase, he may avoid going to the spirit prison where the unrepentant sinners inevitably will find themselves. In the spirit prison “there shall be weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth, and this because of their own iniquity, being led captive by the will of the devil” (Alma 40:13).

“they are brought to sing redeeming love” This phrase means simply that they are thoroughly converted—their hearts are fundamentally changed. As we have discussed previously (commentary for Alma 5:9), this expression is unique in all the scriptures to the Book of Mormon, indeed unique to the prophet Alma. He describes the thoroughly converted individual as one who is apt to “sing the song of redeeming love” or more simply as in this verse “sing redeeming love” (see also Alma 5:9, 26).

“the power of his word which is in us” Here is an important theme found in the account of the mission of the sons of Mosiah (see Alma 17:3-4) and will continue, in a negative way, through the account of the antichrist Korihor in chapter 30. We will then learn more of this concept in the account of the mission of Alma to the Zoramites. Alma will teach that preaching the word of God has a “more powerful effect upon the minds of the people than the sword, or anything else” (Alma 31:5). Alma will eloquently pray that he might have a greater ability to preach to gospel (Alma 29:1). He will then teach the Zoramites of the importance of nourishing the word of God in our hearts (Alma 32:28).

14 Yea, we have reason to praise him forever, for he is the Most High God, and has loosed our brethren from the chains of hell.

verse 14 Here Alma refers to Jesus Christ as “the Most High God.”

15 Yea, they were encircled about with everlasting darkness and destruction; but behold, he has brought them into his everlasting light, yea, into everlasting salvation; and they are encircled about with the matchless bounty of his love; yea, and we have been instruments in his hands of doing this great and marvelous work.

verse 15 “Everlasting salvation” means, of course, exaltation. A “bounty” is a generous gift.

16 Therefore, let us glory, yea, we will glory in the Lord; yea, we will rejoice, for our joy is full; yea, we will praise our God forever. Behold, who can glory too much in the Lord? Yea, who can say too much of his great power, and of his mercy, and of his long-suffering towards the children of men? Behold, I say unto you, I cannot say the smallest part which I feel.

verse 16 Obviously, Ammon feels he has “bragging rights,” but he is not boasting of his own accomplishments. Rather, he is rejoicing in his Lord.

verses 17-19 Now Ammon recalls the time before his conversion and before the conversion of his brothers and Alma.

17 Who could have supposed that our God would have been so merciful as to have snatched us from our awful, sinful, and polluted state?

18 Behold, we went forth even in wrath, with mighty threatenings to destroy his church.

19 Oh then, why did he not consign us to an awful destruction, yea, why did he not let the sword of his justice fall upon us, and doom us to eternal despair?

verse 19 Ammon is obviously still spiritually cringing and awe-struck over how he and his rebellious brothers and friends escaped “the sword of his justice.” He is still a bit incredulous as to how they received instead the Lord’s mercy.

To consign is to deliver up. Despair is a state of hopelessness.

20 Oh, my soul, almost as it were, fleeth at the thought. Behold, he did not exercise his justice upon us, but in his great mercy hath brought us over that everlasting gulf of death and misery, even to the salvation of our souls.

verse 20 “almost as it were” This peculiar phrase includes the subjunctive mood. It is placed between two phrases and implies the use of metaphor. The phrase that follows “almost as it were” is figurative and not intended to be taken literally (see also Alma 2:27; Mormon 1:7). Ammon’s soul does not literally flee, but we have no trouble understanding his meaning.

The atonement of the merciful Lord overcame death (“that everlasting gulf of death”) and sin (“[the] misery [of sin]”), and gave us the opportunity to be exalted (“even to the salvation of our souls”).

21 And now behold, my brethren, what natural man is there that knoweth these things? I say unto you, there is none that knoweth these things, save it be the penitent.

verse 21 The “natural man” is man without the influence of the Spirit of God. Such a man cannot possibly understand eternal things—things of the Spirit. Paul wrote:

“The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned” (1 Corinthians 2:14). Here, Ammon seems to be borrowing this theme from King Benjamin in his great speech (Mosiah 3:19).

The penitent are, of course, the repentant. Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines penitent as, “Suffering pain or sorrow of heart on account of sins, crimes or offenses; contrite; sincerely affected by a sense of guilt.”

22 Yea, he that repenteth and exerciseth faith, and bringeth forth good works, and prayeth continually without ceasing—unto such it is given to know the mysteries of God; yea, unto such it shall be given to reveal things which never have been revealed; yea, and it shall be given unto such to bring thousands of souls to repentance, even as it has been given unto us to bring these our brethren to repentance.

verse 22 “mysteries of God” For a discussion of the two definitions of the concept of the “mysteries of God” see the commentary for Alma 12:9. Perhaps the pertinent definition here is spiritual truths that may be understood only through divine revelation—by the help and influence of the Spirit of God.

“unto such it shall be given to reveal things which never have been revealed” The faithful will not only have an opportunity to learn the “mysteries of God,” but they will also be empowered to teach them to others so effectively that some will want to repent and accept the gospel.

23 Now do ye remember, my brethren, that we said unto our brethren in the land of Zarahemla, we go up to the land of Nephi, to preach unto our brethren, the Lamanites, and they laughed us to scorn?

verse 23 “and they laughed us to scorn” Hugh Nibley observed: “One might expect Ammon, the super-swordsman of the Book of Mormon to whom no man or platoon of men can stand up, to wade in and teach the Lamanites a lesson; so when he proposes to go with a few companions among the Lamanites as a missionary, everybody ‘laughed us to scorn,’ as he reports it” (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 486-87).

24 For they said unto us: Do ye suppose that ye can bring the Lamanites to the knowledge of the truth? Do ye suppose that ye can convince the Lamanites of the incorrectness of the traditions of their fathers, as stiffnecked a people as they are; whose hearts delight in the shedding of blood; whose days have been spent in the grossest iniquity; whose ways have been the ways of a transgressor from the beginning? Now my brethren, ye remember that this was their language.

“ye remember that this was their language” Ammon says, in effect, “I know that you remember that these are the things they were saying.”

25 And moreover they did say: Let us take up arms against them, that we destroy them and their iniquity out of the land, lest they overrun us and destroy us.

verse 25 Ammon is still speaking of those who scoffed at him prior to his mission to the Lamanites. These scoffers said, in effect, “Never mind preaching to them. Instead let us arm ourselves and destroy them.”

26 But behold, my beloved brethren, we came into the wilderness not with the intent to destroy our brethren, but with the intent that perhaps we might save some few of their souls.

27 Now when our hearts were depressed, and we were about to turn back, behold, the Lord comforted us, and said: Go amongst thy brethren, the Lamanites, and bear with patience thine afflictions, and I will give unto you success.

verse 27 “When our hearts were depressed, and we were about to turn back” See Alma 17:9-11 and the commentary for Alma 17:9.

President Ezra Taft Benson taught: “There are times when you simply have to righteously hang on and out last the devil until his depressive spirit leaves you. . . . To press on in noble endeavors, even while surrounded by a cloud of depression, will eventually bring you out on top into the sunshine” (“Do Not Despair” Ensign [Nov 1974] 4:65-67).

28 And now behold, we have come, and been forth amongst them; and we have been patient in our sufferings, and we have suffered every privation; yea, we have traveled from house to house, relying upon the mercies of the world—not upon the mercies of the world alone but upon the mercies of God.

verse 28 “we have . . . been forth amongst them” Be certain you notice this delightful expression. We often speak of “going forth.” But seldom do we speak of “being forth.”

29 And we have entered into their houses and taught them, and we have taught them in their streets; yea, and we have taught them upon their hills; and we have also entered into their temples and their synagogues and taught them; and we have been cast out, and mocked, and spit upon, and smote upon our cheeks; and we have been stoned, and taken and bound with strong cords, and cast into prison; and through the power and wisdom of God we have been delivered again.

verse 29 “we have also entered into their temples and their synagogues” The word synagogue here likely simply means place of worship.

30 And we have suffered all manner of afflictions, and all this, that perhaps we might be the means of saving some soul; and we supposed that our joy would be full if perhaps we could be the means of saving some.

verse 30 Saving “some soul” implies saving a single individual, while “saving some” implies more than one. It makes little difference, of course, what specific hopes the missionaries had. We are taught that we will enjoy great eternal joy if we are instrumental in the exaltation of even one soul (D&C 18:15-16).

31 Now behold, we can look forth and see the fruits of our labors; and are they few? I say unto you, Nay, they are many; yea, and we can witness of their sincerity, because of their love towards their brethren and also towards us.

verse 31 “we can witness of their sincerity because of their love” “Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them” (Matthew 7:20). And what are their fruits? “By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another” (John 13:34-35).

32 For behold, they had rather sacrifice their lives than even to take the life of their enemy; and they have buried their weapons of war deep in the earth, because of their love towards their brethren.

33 And now behold I say unto you, has there been so great love in all the land? Behold, I say unto you, Nay, there has not, even among the Nephites.

34 For behold, they would take up arms against their brethren; they would not suffer themselves to be slain. But behold how many of these have laid down their lives; and we know that they have gone to their God, because of their love and of their hatred to sin.

“hatred to sin” Today we would probably rather say “hatred toward sin” or “hatred of sin.”

35 Now have we not reason to rejoice? Yea, I say unto you, there never were men that had so great reason to rejoice as we, since the world began; yea, and my joy is carried away, even unto boasting in my God; for he has all power, all wisdom, and all understanding; he comprehendeth all things, and he is a merciful Being, even unto salvation, to those who will repent and believe on his name.

verse 35 In this verse Ammon recites a list of qualities of Deity from Benjamin’s speech in Mosiah 4:9, including the notions that God “has all power, all wisdom,” and that “he comprehendeth all things.”

“he has all power” God can do any righteous thing that can be done.

“all wisdom” Wisdom may be defined as the application of knowledge based upon the eternal best interest of those involved.

“he is a merciful being . . . to those who repent and believe on his name” Is the Lord merciful to the unrepentant sinner? Certainly, he loves the sinner and weeps over him, but the specific gift of mercy is extended only to the righteous and penitent. The gift of mercy is the applying to an individual the full benefits of Christ’s atonement which results in that individual’s eventual exaltation. This gift is merciful because it is never fully deserved or earned even by the most righteous. In this latter context, we might refer to the gift of mercy as an example of the grace of God. The term grace also implies something given that is not fully deserved. But grace, specifically, is the love God has for his subjects. But it particularly refers to that aspect of his love that he readily expresses and applies, though it is not fully merited.

36 Now if this is boasting, even so will I boast; for this is my life and my light, my joy and my salvation, and my redemption from everlasting wo. Yea, blessed is the name of my God, who has been mindful of this people, who are a branch of the tree of Israel, and has been lost from its body in a strange land; yea, I say, blessed be the name of my God, who has been mindful of us, wanderers in a strange land.

verse 36 Here, Ammon blesses the name of God for being mindful of his people, “who are a branch of the tree of Israel, and has been lost from its body in a strange land” and are “wanderers in a strange land.” These words recall the teachings of Jacob, the brother of Nephi, who shared Zenos’s allegory of Israel as an olive tree and how the family of Lehi were a branch that was “cast out from Jerusalem,” becoming “a lonesome and a solemn people, wanderers” (Jacob 7:26; cf. Jacob 2:25; 5:25, 40–45).

The phrase “this is my life” might also have been worded “he is my life” referring, of course, to God—in this case probably Jesus Christ.

“this people, who are a branch of the tree of Israel, and has been lost from its body” Ammon seems to refer here to all Book of Mormon peoples, both Nephites and Lamanites, who are separated from the main body of Israel wandering in a distant “strange” land. An alternate definition of “this people” may be the Lamanites who have been “lost” from the main body of Israel by sin and disobedience.

37 Now my brethren, we see that God is mindful of every people, whatsoever land they may be in; yea, he numbereth his people, and his bowels of mercy are over all the earth. Now this is my joy, and my great thanksgiving; yea, and I will give thanks unto my God forever. Amen.

1 Now it came to pass that when those Lamanites who had gone to war against the Nephites had found, after their many struggles to destroy them, that it was in vain to seek their destruction, they returned again to the land of Nephi.

verse 1 “after their many struggles to destroy them” It is interesting that the original text of the Book of Mormon rendered this phrase “after their many struggles for to destroy them” (italics mine). This latter form is actually better Hebrew (see Matthew 23:5).

“it was in vain to seek their destruction” The Nephites as a nation still enjoyed the protection of the Lord. They were a covenant people living in a promised land. As such they could not be destroyed as long as they were obedient to the Lord.

2 And it came to pass that the Amalekites, because of their loss, were exceedingly angry. And when they saw that they could not seek revenge from the Nephites, they began to stir up the people in anger against their brethren, the people of Anti-Nephi-Lehi; therefore they began again to destroy them.

verse 2 As verse 1 mentions, the war-party of Lamanites is now back home—in the land of Nephi. As we might expect, there was no softening in the hearts of the apostate Nephites, the Amalekites. Their very obsession and purpose becomes to war against the things of God. They began to make military raids on the Anti-Nephi-Lehies.

3 Now this people again refused to take their arms, and they suffered themselves to be slain according to the desires of their enemies.

4 Now when Ammon and his brethren saw this work of destruction among those whom they so dearly beloved, and among those who had so dearly beloved them—for they were treated as though they were angels sent from God to save them from everlasting destruction—therefore, when Ammon and his brethren saw this great work of destruction, they were moved with compassion, and they said unto the king:

Verse 4 You will recall that the Lamanite king is Anti-Nephi-Lehi, the brother of Lamoni.

5 Let us gather together this people of the Lord, and let us go down to the land of Zarahemla to our brethren the Nephites, and flee out of the hands of our enemies, that we be not destroyed.

6 But the king said unto them: Behold, the Nephites will destroy us, because of the many murders and sins we have committed against them.

7 And Ammon said: I will go and inquire of the Lord, and if he say unto us, go down unto our brethren, will ye go?

8 And the king said unto him: Yea, if the Lord saith unto us go, we will go down unto our brethren, and we will be their slaves until we repair unto them the many murders and sins which we have committed against them.

9 But Ammon said unto him: It is against the law of our brethren, which was established by my father, that there should be any slaves among them; therefore let us go down and rely upon the mercies of our brethren.

verse 9 “It is against the law . . . established by my father, that there should be any slaves” Ammon’s father Mosiah had said: “I desire that this land should be a land of liberty, and every man may enjoy his rights and privileges alike” (Mosiah 29:32).

10 But the king said unto him: Inquire of the Lord, and if he saith unto us go, we will go; otherwise we will perish in the land.

11 And it came to pass that Ammon went and inquired of the Lord, and the Lord said unto him:

12 Get this people out of this land, that they perish not; for Satan has great hold on the hearts of the Amalekites, who do stir up the Lamanites to anger against their brethren to slay them; therefore get thee out of this land; and blessed are this people in this generation, for I will preserve them.

13 And now it came to pass that Ammon went and told the king all the words which the Lord had said unto him.

14 And they gathered together all their people, yea, all the people of the Lord, and did gather together all their flocks and herds, and departed out of the land, and came into the wilderness which divided the land of Nephi from the land of Zarahemla, and came over near the borders of the land.

verse 14 And they (the anti-Nephi-Lehies) gathered together all their people . . . and departed out of the land (of Nephi).

“the wilderness which divided the land of Nephi from the land of Zarahemla” See the Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands.

15 And it came to pass that Ammon said unto them: Behold, I and my brethren will go forth into the land of Zarahemla, and ye shall remain here until we return; and we will try the hearts of our brethren, whether they will that ye shall come into their land.

verse 15 “we will try the hearts of our brethren” This charming phrase means, “We will inquire as to the willingness of our people to allow you to enter and live among them.”

16 And it came to pass that as Ammon was going forth into the land, that he and his brethren met Alma, over in the place of which has been spoken; and behold, this was a joyful meeting.

verse 16 “over in the place of which has been spoken” See the account of this reunion between Alma and the sons of Mosiah in Alma 17:1-4 17 Now the joy of Ammon was so great even that he was full; yea, he was swallowed up in the joy of his God, even to the exhausting of his strength; and he fell again to the earth.

verse 17 “Now the joy of Ammon was so great” The joy spoken of here is a specific spiritual experience that can only be provided to man through the agency of the Spirit of God—it is a gift of the Spirit. It is not an experience of the world. It is distinct from happiness, pleasure, enjoyment, fun, or gratification. It can be experienced in its fulness only by exalted beings (D&C 93:33). Yet as is obvious in this verse and in the two verses that follow, there are remarkable degrees of joy a man may experience in this life. As we might suppose, it may only come in conditions of righteousness, during active striving to be obedient.

“even to the exhausting of his strength; and he fell again to the earth” Apparently, the process of being in tune with the Spirit can be physically enervating (see also 1 Nephi 1:7; 19:20; Daniel 10:8; Moses 1:9-10; JS-H 1:20).

18 Now was not this exceeding joy? Behold, this is joy which none receiveth save it be the truly penitent and humble seeker of happiness.

19 Now the joy of Alma in meeting his brethren was truly great, and also the joy of Aaron, of Omner, and Himni; but behold their joy was not that to exceed their strength.

20 And now it came to pass that Alma conducted his brethren back to the land of Zarahemla; even to his own house. And they went and told the chief judge all the things that had happened unto them in the land of Nephi, among their brethren, the Lamanites.

21 And it came to pass that the chief judge sent a proclamation throughout all the land, desiring the voice of the people concerning the admitting their brethren, who were the people of Anti-Nephi-Lehi.

22 And it came to pass that the voice of the people came, saying: Behold, we will give up the land of Jershon, which is on the east by the sea, which joins the land Bountiful, which is on the south of the land Bountiful; and this land Jershon is the land which we will give unto our brethren for an inheritance.

verse 22 Plays on words, especially with names, are very common in the Hebrew Bible. That such plays on words found their way into the Book of Mormon, seems evident from the name Jershon in this verse. Jershon appears to be derived from the Hebrew root meaning to “inherit,” the root being yro. Thus, Jershon could mean “inheritance.” If this line of reasoning is correct, then a wonderful play on words in this verse is developed: “This land Jershon [namely, inheritance] is the land which we will give unto our brethren for an inheritance.” There are other references to Jershon as a land of inheritance in the Book of Mormon—see also Alma 35:9 and Alma 35:14.

The -on ending of Jershon is typical of other place-names belonging to the ancient Near East. Wilhelm Boree, in his outstanding study, The Ancient Place-names of Palestine, cites fully eighty-four ancient Canaanite place-names with the ending -on in biblical and extrabiblical sources. The Book of Mormon place-name Jershon, then, is right at home with a number of other biblical and extrabiblical place-names.

This pun on the name Jershon (“place of inheritance”), with the detail that it was “inherited” by the Anti-Nephi-Lehies, reinforces the literary sophistication of the Book of Mormon. The Nephite chroniclers were adept at employing the subtleties of biblical Hebrew literary conventions, including the use of puns and plays on words, and did so in effectively communicating important narrative themes and doctrinal points.

As he dictated the Book of Mormon text to Oliver Cowdery, using neither books nor any reference materials, could Joseph Smith have known anything about these literary subtleties?

23 And behold, we will set our armies between the land Jershon and the land Nephi, that we may protect our brethren in the land Jershon; and this we do for our brethren, on account of their fear to take up arms against their brethren lest they should commit sin; and this their great fear came because of their sore repentance which they had, on account of their many murders and their awful wickedness.

24 And now behold, this will we do unto our brethren, that they may inherit the land Jershon; and we will guard them from their enemies with our armies, on condition that they will give us a portion of their substance to assist us that we may maintain our armies.

verse 24 The Anti-Nephi-Lehies would be taxed, undoubtedly a reasonable and fair amount, to assist in defraying the extra cost of protecting them.

The granting, by the Nephite government, of an exemption from military duty to the Anti-Nephi-Lehies is consistent with ancient Israelite law (John W. Welch, in Echoes and Evidences of the Book of Mormon, 357-61).

Normally, ancient peoples were absolutely obligated to take up arms in defense of their tribe or nation. Saul called upon “all Israel” to take up arms against the Ammonites and the Amalekites (see 1 Samuel 11:1-11; 15:4). Threats and curses were pronounced upon anyone who would not join in the battle. Saul once sent messengers to marshal the troops after he symbolically cut a yoke of oxen into pieces in view of the people and proclaimed. “Whosoever cometh not forth after Saul and after Samuel, so shall it be done unto his oxen” (1 Samuel 11:7).

The same basic duty to serve in the army existed in Nephite law and society. Indeed, Moroni had power to punish any person in the land of Zarahemla who would not “defend [his] country” (Alma 51:15; see 46:35). Like Saul, he symbolically portrayed the brutal fate of those who would not fight (see Alma 46:21-22). Under extreme and desperate circumstances, this duty fell even upon old men, women, and children (see Mosiah 10:9; Alma 54:12).

How, then, could the able-bodied people of Ammon be granted exemption? There may be several reasons. Their reasons for not fighting were obviously righteous and bona fide. But beyond that, the justification of their military exemption may have been based on four specific provisions in the law of Moses:

1. The absolute duty to go to war applied only in fighting against an enemy. Deuteronomy 20:1-2, which instructs the Israelite leader to speak to his troops in a holy tongue when they go up to battle against an enemy, was interpreted in the Talmud as not applying in a conflict against other Israelites, for as the scripture says, “Against your enemies but not against your brethren, not Judah against Simeon nor Simeon against Benjamin” (Babylonian Talmud, Sotah VIII, 1, 42a). Of course, the Talmud was written long after Lehi’s departure from Jerusalem, yet it often reflected older oral material.

2. The laws of Deuteronomy also afforded humanitarian exemptions for those who had recently married, built a new house, planted a new vineyard, or were “fearful and fainthearted” (see Deuteronomy 20:5-9; 24:5; compare Judges 7:3). Since everyone going into battle was likely “fearful and fainthearted,” the exemption undoubtedly had a narrower meaning in actual practice. Otherwise, nearly everyone would have been exempt. Indeed, as the Talmud explains, this expression in Deuteronomy “alludes to one who is afraid because of the transgressions he had committed” (Ibid., 3, 4a, italics added). If a soldier would cower in the face of enemy battle because of his previous sins (fearing that his sins prevented God from defending him or that he might die a sinner), he was deemed unfit for battle. Certainly, the Nephites would have recognized that the profound fears of the people of Ammon who were afraid to break their oath rendered them unsuitable for military duty under such a rule.

3. The Talmudic rabbis further limited the exemption for the fearful and fainthearted to voluntary exploits of the king. In a compulsory war of national defense, however, even the fainthearted were obligated to go into battle. A similar distinction may have contributed to the people of Ammon’s feeling, several years later, that they could no longer claim their exemption in the face of the extreme compulsory war then threatening the Nephites’ entire existence. Moved by compassion and no longer afraid, they were willing to take up arms (see Alma 53:13). Only Helaman’s fear that they might lose their souls if they were to violate their oath stopped them. So, they sent their sons into battle instead. See the account of the military excursions of the sons of the Anti-Nephi-Lehies—the sons of Helaman—in Alma 53, 56-58.

4. The men who remained at home, however, continued to support the war behind the lines. Their exemption was granted only “on condition that they will give us [the Nephites] a portion of their substance to assist us that we may maintain our armies” (Alma 27:24). This arrangement is especially noteworthy because the Talmud likewise holds that those who are exempted from military service under the law of Moses are “only released from actual fighting, but not from serving in the rear: They must furnish water and food and repair the roads” (Ibid., 2, 43a).

The rare exemption granted to the Ammonites was logical, religiously motivated, and consistent with ancient Israelite law.

25 Now, it came to pass that when Ammon had heard this, he returned to the people of Anti-Nephi-Lehi, and also Alma with him, into the wilderness, where they had pitched their tents, and made known unto them all these things. And Alma also related unto them his conversion, with Ammon and Aaron, and his brethren.

verse 25 Can you imagine how many times Alma must have told the story of his conversion in his years of service as high priest of the people. Perhaps one day we will be honored to hear the story from his own lips!

26 And it came to pass that it did cause great joy among them. And they went down into the land of Jershon, and took possession of the land of Jershon; and they were called by the Nephites the people of Ammon; therefore they were distinguished by that name ever after.

verse 26 By giving the Anti-Nephi-Lehies the land of Jershon, the Nephites were also helping to fulfill the Lord’s promises in Alma 3 that repentant Lamanites could once more be numbered among Nephi’s seed. “Behold, the Lamanites have I cursed,” the Lord declared, “and I will set a mark on them that they and their seed may be separated from thee and thy seed, from this time henceforth and forever, except they repent of their wickedness and turn to me that I may have mercy upon them” (Alma 3:14). The Anti-Nephi-Lehies accepted the Lord’s invitation to repentance and “the curse of God did no more follow them” (Alma 23:18). As a result of their repentance, they were thereafter counted as Nephites (Alma 27:26).

27 And they were among the people of Nephi, and also numbered among the people who were of the church of God. And they were also distinguished for their zeal towards God, and also towards men; for they were perfectly honest and upright in all things; and they were firm in the faith of Christ, even unto the end.

28 And they did look upon shedding the blood of their brethren with the greatest abhorrence; and they never could be prevailed upon to take up arms against their brethren; and they never did look upon death with any degree of terror, for their hope and views of Christ and the resurrection; therefore, death was swallowed up to them by the victory of Christ over it.

verse 28 “death was swallowed up to them by the victory of Christ over it”

This terminology seems to have originated with the prophet Isaiah (Isaiah 25:8) and was repeated in the writings of Paul (1 Corinthians 15:54). Usually the idea implicit in this phrase as used by Isaiah and by Paul is held to be that Christ claimed victory over death, as his atonement guarantees resurrection for all men. Thus, death can claim no victory over men. This verse suggests an additional meaning. An abiding faith and hope in Jesus Christ helps to comfort the fear of the individual who faces the proximate inevitability of his own death.

Neal A. Maxwell taught: “When we have appropriate hope of receiving eternal life (Alma 13:29), and we retain that hope through faith (Alma 25:16), then we will—even though we love life, family, and friends have ‘no terror of death’ ‘because of [our] hope and views of Christ and the resurrection’ (Alma 27:28). Indeed, true hope springs directly from our ‘views of Christ’” (Notwithstanding My Weakness, 44).

29 Therefore, they would suffer death in the most aggravating and distressing manner which could be inflicted by their brethren, before they would take the sword or cimeter to smite them.

verse 29 What is a “cimeter”? It is probably a curved sword which is today referred to as a scimitar or scimeter. This form of the word “cimeter” is unique in the scripture to the Book of Mormon. See the commentary for Enos 1:20 for information on the cimeter.

30 And thus they were a zealous and beloved people, a highly favored people of the Lord.

1 And now it came to pass that after the people of Ammon were established in the land of Jershon, and a church also established in the land of Jershon, and the armies of the Nephites were set round about the land of Jershon, yea, in all the borders round about the land of Zarahemla; behold the armies of the Lamanites had followed their brethren into the wilderness.

verse 1 Apparently members of the Nephite armies were deployed in two separate ways in order to protect the people of Ammon against pursuing Lamanites. First, they were placed “round about the land of Jershon.” The land of Jershon was a limited land within the larger land of Zarahemla—like a “state” within a country. Second, they were assigned to guard the “borders round about the land of Zarahemla” where invading Lamanites would be likely to cross. It would not have been necessary to patrol the entire length of the border, since it is likely that there were but a limited number of practical routes by which men could enter Zarahemla. It would have been necessary to secure only these few.

2 And thus there was a tremendous battle; yea, even such an one as never had been known among all the people in the land from the time Lehi left Jerusalem; yea, and tens of thousands of the Lamanites were slain and scattered abroad.

verse 2 “Abroad” here may be interpreted “far and wide.”

3 Yea, and also there was a tremendous slaughter among the people of Nephi; nevertheless, the Lamanites were driven and scattered, and the people of Nephi returned again to their land.

4 And now this was a time that there was a great mourning and lamentation heard throughout all the land, among all the people of Nephi—

5 Yea, the cry of widows mourning for their husbands, and also of fathers mourning for their sons, and the daughter for the brother, yea, the brother for the father; and thus the cry of mourning was heard among all of them, mourning for their kindred who had been slain.

6 And now surely this was a sorrowful day; yea, a time of solemnity, and a time of much fasting and prayer.

verse 6 “a sorrowful day . . . a time of much fasting and prayer” It would seem that the ancient Hebrews and the Nephites practiced fasting in a context somewhat different from the way we practice it today. It was, for example, practiced at times of grieving and sorrowing, and it seems to have been part of their funeral custom (Joseph Fielding McConkie and Robert L. Millet, Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 4 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Bookcraft, 1987–1992, 3:192. See also Ricks, “Fasting in the Book of Mormon and the Bible,” 129-130; John W. Welch, Legal Cases in the Book of Mormon, Provo: BYU Press, 2008, 327).

On close inspection, this subtle point is abundantly clear in scattered instances in the Hebrew Bible that span centuries of Israel’s history. In the Old Testament as well as in the Book of Mormon, we read of fasting associated with mourning on behalf of the dead (see 1 Samuel 31:13; 2 Samuel 1:12; Alma 30:2). On one occasion David evidenced his grief at Abner’s death by fasting (2 Samuel 3:35). After recovering the body of King Saul from the Philistines, for example, the Israelites, including David, fasted and mourned over his death (1 Samuel 31:8–13; 2 Samuel 1:11–12).

Those who mourn and seek the spirit of the Lord through fasting can find themselves particularly blessed with hope, reassurance, and spiritual knowledge in their moment of anguish.

7 And thus endeth the fifteenth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi;

8 And this is the account of Ammon and his brethren, their journeyings in the land of Nephi, their sufferings in the land, their sorrows, and their afflictions, and their incomprehensible joy, and the reception and safety of the brethren in the land of Jershon. And now may the Lord, the Redeemer of all men, bless their souls forever.

verse 8 “sufferings . . . sorrows . . . incomprehensible joy” Is it not true that these three summarize the experience of those involved in diligent service of the Lord in this mortal world? Perhaps missionary work is especially likely to be associated with these emotions.

9 And this is the account of the wars and contentions among the Nephites, and also the wars between the Nephites and the Lamanites; and the fifteenth year of the reign of the judges is ended.

10 And from the first year to the fifteenth has brought to pass the destruction of many thousand lives; yea, it has brought to pass an awful scene of bloodshed.

11 And the bodies of many thousands are laid low in the earth, while the bodies of many thousands are moldering in heaps upon the face of the earth; yea, and many thousands are mourning for the loss of their kindred, because they have reason to fear, according to the promises of the Lord, that they are consigned to a state of endless wo.

verse 11 To “molder” is to decay, to waste away, to crumble into dust.

“because they have reason to fear, according to the promises of the Lord, that they are consigned to a state of endless wo” These phrases refer to those who know about the Lord’s promises of eternal joy or eternal condemnation promised to the righteous and the unrighteous, and they have not lived up to the Lord’s commandments.

The term “endless wo” does not mean that suffering continues forever. Rather “endless” refers to God’s suffering. God is endless, and that suffering which occurs at his hand is referred to as God’s suffering or endless suffering, referring not to the duration of the suffering but rather to its initiator (see D&C 19:10-12).

12 While many thousands of others truly mourn for the loss of their kindred, yet they rejoice and exult in the hope, and even know, according to the promises of the Lord, that they are raised to dwell at the right hand of God, in a state of never-ending happiness.

verses 11-12 To our dispensation the Lord has given what has been called the “law of mourning”: “Thou shalt live together in love, insomuch that thou shalt weep for the loss of them that die, and more especially for those that have not hope of a glorious resurrection. And it shall come to pass that those that die in me shall not taste of death, for it shall be sweet unto them; and they that die not in me, wo unto them, for their death is bitter” (D&C 42:45-47).

13 And thus we see how great the inequality of man is because of sin and transgression, and the power of the devil, which comes by the cunning plans which he hath devised to ensnare the hearts of men.

verse 13 “how great the inequality of man is because of sin and transgression” Because of tremendous differences in the diligence of men in keeping the laws of God, there is a broad disparity in the level of righteousness among men.

Another meaning is important here. A righteous community characteristically shares among its members a feeling of equality and mutual respect. As sin and transgression make themselves more evident among a people, there is a shift from an egalitarian to a ranked and stratified society (Alma 4:11-12; 5:54; 3 Nephi 6:11-14). This concept of a class system is based on the righteousness or unrighteousness of individuals within the system according to the laws of God. In this type of “class system,” those in the “upper class” yearn and labor for the welfare of those in the “lower class.” Among the upper class, charity is the manner of dealing with others in the system.

In the world, however, class systems are commonly based on worldly criteria which include wealth versus poverty, education versus ignorance, refined culture and manners versus baseness. These systems are based on pride and not charity. The widening gulf between these classes, as for example between the elite class and the commoner, has been, in the world’s history, a major factor leading to the eventual collapse of societies.

14 And thus we see the great call of diligence of men to labor in the vineyards of the Lord; and thus we see the great reason of sorrow, and also of rejoicing—sorrow because of death and destruction among men, and joy because of the light of Christ unto life.

verse 14 “the great call of diligence of men to labor in the vineyards of the Lord” That is, in the Lord’s “class system,” there exists a noble and magnificent calling for all men to serve diligently in the Lord’s vineyard in order to lift those in the “class” below them.

“and joy because of the light of Christ unto life” The concept of joy has been referred to many times in the Book of Mormon text. True joy is a very specific, and not at all a generic, concept. Joy is, in the ultimate sense, a gift given to man by the Spirit of God. It can only be earned through persistent righteous living. It is the same joy that the Father and the Son experience. There are, of course as there are for all gifts of the Spirit, worldly imitations such as “happiness” or “pleasure.” These worldly facsimiles are not inherently evil or wicked. They may even be wholesome and uplifting. They do, however, lack that abiding and soul-affirming quality found in true joy. True joy can only come from the Lord. It is divine compensation for satisfactory spiritual progress. Joy is figuratively the “ice cream cone” the Lord gives us for obeying him.

Another spiritual gift related to joy which is also given by the Spirit of God to those who have paid the price is peace—the peace of God. This is the quiet assurance that one’s course in life is pleasing in the sight of God (D&C 19:23; 59:23). Those who experience this peace also experience the spiritual gift of hope. They enjoy the state we may refer to as the “rest of the Lord” (see the discussion of the gift of hope in “Two Little-Appreciated Gifts of the Spirit” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 10, Deliberate Faith and Revealed Faith and in “The Fruits of Faith” in volume 1, chapter 11, Other Notes on Faith. Still further discussion of this topic is found in “The Rest of the Lord—the Gift of Hope” in volume 1, chapter 17, Justification and Sanctification).

Note the parallelism in this verse:

- a. And thus we see the great reason of sorrow,
- b. and also of rejoicing—
- a. sorrow because of death and destruction among men,
- b. and joy because of the light of Christ unto life.

Alma Chapter 29

Scripture Mastery

Alma 29:1-3 O that I were an angel and could have the wish of mine heart.

Alma 29:4 Alma teaches that the Lord granteth unto men according to their desires.

Alma 29:9-10 I know that which the Lord hath commanded me, and I glory in it.

Now Mormon abruptly shifts gears and inserts a remarkable soliloquy of the prophet Alma. Alma 29 is often referred to as “Alma’s Psalm.”

1 O that I were an angel, and could have the wish of mine heart, that I might go forth and speak with the trump of God, with a voice to shake the earth, and cry repentance unto every people!

verse 1 Here Alma laments that he cannot do more to make people accept the only plan that will result in their exaltation. Yet, he knows that God grants salvation or damnation to people only according to their own desires (verse 4). And he repents of aspiring to be more than he really is (verses 6-7).

What is an angel? It is a messenger sent by God or Satan to minister or teach. Those sent by God teach by the power of the Holy Ghost. The different types of angels include:

1. Resurrected beings having celestial bodies of flesh and bone. They have obviously come forth in the “first resurrection,” since that is the only resurrection that has already commenced. They therefore have earned and received their celestial glory, their celestial bodies, and they can appear in glory. Perhaps they are also permitted to withhold their glory as they appear.

2. The “spirits of just men made perfect” (D&C 76:69; 129:3). These are righteous individuals who have died and have been assigned to a state of paradise but have not yet been resurrected. They are assured that they will inherit the celestial glory. Because of their righteousness, they are allowed to appear in the glory they will possess when they are resurrected.

3. Translated beings. These are individuals who have lived their mortal sojourn, had their calling and election made sure, and have been called to take upon themselves a terrestrial-like body and continue to serve the Lord among mortals. As they minister on the earth they are likely not distinguishable from other mortals. For a more complete discussion of translated beings, see the commentary for 3 Nephi 28:6-10 and Doctrine of Translation in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 17.

4. Pre-existent spirits.

5. Satan or one of his spirit colleagues. Obviously the title “angels” is a misleading euphemism here. These may actually appear “in glory” as angels of light since they know how to fake the light or glory of God.

“that I might go forth and speak with the trump of God” The Jubilee year is the year at the end of seven cycles of shmita (Sabbatical years). Shmita are periods of seven years each. Hence, the Jubilee year occurs every 49 years. There is some debate whether it was the 49th year (the last year of seven sabbatical cycles, referred to as the Sabbath's Sabbath), or whether it was the following (50th) year.

According to Biblical regulations the Jubilee year had a special impact on the ownership and management of land in the Land of Israel. Jubilee deals largely with land, property, and property rights. According to Leviticus, slaves and prisoners would be freed, debts would be forgiven, and the mercies of God would be particularly manifest. Leviticus 25:8-13 states: “And thou shalt number seven Sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years; and the space of the seven Sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years. Then shalt thou cause the trumpet of the jubilee to sound on the tenth day of the seventh month, in the Day of Atonement shall ye make the trumpet sound throughout all your land. And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof: it shall be a jubilee unto you; and ye shall return every man unto his possession, and ye shall return every man unto his family. A jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you: ye shall not sow, neither reap that which growth of itself in it, nor gather the grapes in it of thy vine undressed. For it is the jubilee; it shall be holy unto you: ye shall eat the increase thereof out of the field. In the year of this jubilee ye shall return every man unto his possession.”

Alma’s use of trumpet imagery here in this verse is interesting in light of the timing in which he wrote this thoughtful and moving piece of prophetic poetry—the 16th year of the reign of the judges (Alma 28 closes out the 15th year—verses 7–10)—and 16th year is already in progress in Alma 30:2–4, chronologically placing Alma 29 in the 16th year.). This was the 49th year since King Benjamin’s powerful oration at the coronation of his son Mosiah (Mosiah reigned for 33 years —Mosiah 29:46). 33 plus the 16 years of the reign of the judges, makes 49 years since King Benjamin’s address.), an event some scholars believe was a jubilee celebration (Terrence L. Szink and John W. Welch, “King Benjamin’s Speech in the Context of Ancient Israelite Festivals,” in King Benjamin’s Speech: “That Ye May Learn Wisdom,” ed. John W. Welch and Stephen D. Ricks, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1998, 193–199).

In the 49th (or 50th) year, on the Day of Atonement, the “trumpet of the jubilee” would have again been sounded, “throughout all [the] land” (Leviticus 25:9), heralding in the next jubilee year. The Hebrew word yobel (carried into English as jubilee) literally means trumpet (Roland de Vaux, Ancient Israel, New York, NY: McGraw-Hill, 1965, 175–177).

In the land of Israel, the trumpets would probably have been rams horns (Wright, “Jubilee, Year of,” 1025 explained, “yôbēl or qeren hayyôbēl, ‘the horn of the ram’ or šôperôt hayyôbelîm, ‘trumpets of rams’ are expressions used for trumpets, e.g., Exodus 19:13; Josh 6:4–8, 13.”), but other kinds of horns could have been used (These might have included conch shells, horns of antelope, ibex, oryx, and other goat species have also been used. The Apocrypha, even describes the use of “trumpets of hammered metal” (NRSV), illustrating that trumpets need not be made from the horns of an animal. They were also sometimes made of wood, clay, or gourd.), and some scholars have argued that loud shouting could also suffice (According to David J. Larsen, “Angels Among Us: The Use of Old Testament Passages as Inspiration for Temple Themes in the Dead Sea Scrolls,” Studies in the Bible and Antiquity 5 (2013): 101, “In the biblical texts, the teru’ah is a shout or a trumpet blast, usually given in the context of a temple ritual on a festival day, such as the Feast of Trumpets or the Day of Atonement.”). Alma’s expressed desire to “speak with the trump of God” and “with a voice of thunder” (Alma 29:1–2) thus seems “especially appropriate in this second identifiable jubilee season in Nephite history” (Szink and Welch, “King Benjamin’s Speech,” 198–199).

Among its many ideal attributes and desired results, the jubilee was particularly characterized by sabbatical rest and joy. It was to be, above all, a time of great joy and jubilation, and indeed, joy saturates the text of Alma 29, where it appears exactly seven times (See Alma 29:9, 10, 13, 14 (2x), 16.), the archetypal sabbatical number (See Corbin Volluz, “A Study in Seven: Numerology in the Book of Mormon,” BYU Studies Quarterly 53 no. 2, 2014: 57–83).

The joy of a great jubilee year would have filled Alma, as the high priest, and his people with enormous happiness. Other themes of the jubilee also found in Alma 29 include the counting of blessings, remembering the past, repenting, rejoicing in freedom and deliverance, letting the world rest, and peace (For themes of the jubilee year, see John W. Welch and J. Gregory Welch, “Benjamin’s Themes Related to Sabbatical and Jubilee Years,” in Charting the Book of Mormon: Visual Aids for Personal Study and Teaching, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1999, chart 91).

Right after the conclusion of Alma’s meditation in Alma 29, the record indicates that in the 16th year there began to be “continual peace throughout all the land” (Alma 30:2), and then in the next year there was “continual peace” (verse 5) throughout most of the 17th year of the reign of judges (being the 50th year from King Benjamin’s speech). What a jubilee season it must have been, with the Ammonites now settled in the land of Jershon, and the sons of Mosiah safely and unexpectedly home after their fourteen years of missionary work in the land of Nephi.

The approach of the jubilee year marked an appropriate occasion for Alma’s pensive reflections in Alma 29. At the very point when the Nephites had recently, or would soon, sound the “trumpet of the jubilee” (Leviticus 25:8), Alma longed to “speak with the trump of God” (Alma 29:1).

As a missionary, Alma wished to shout aloud the glories, goodness, justice and mercy of God. He longed to be able to shake the earth, as the angel’s voice had done when he stopped Alma and the four sons of Mosiah as they had gone about arguing against the church of God. Now Alma rejoiced in the deliverance of God and in the establishment of his covenant people. He wanted to invite all to repent and to join in the jubilee throng of the Lord.

Although Alma’s desires were righteous ones, he nonetheless feared, “I am a man, and do sin in my wish.” As the high priest, Alma, it seems, would have been especially sensitive to the possibility that he sinned in his wishful thinking, because he knew of the particular importance that he, as high priest, not be tainted with even the slightest sin going into a Day of Atonement, especially at the commencement of the jubilee.

Coveting—or desiring or wishing for things that are not properly ours—denies two fundamental principles underscored by the jubilee: first the recognition that all the earth and everything in it belongs to God, and second that God gives and takes as he knows how things ought to be. Alma appears to have recognized these underlying principles when he remarked, “I ought not to harrow up in my desires the firm decree of a just God, for I know that he granteth unto men according to their desire” (Alma 29:4).

Textually, it is remarkable, to say the least, that the Book of Mormon manifests literary motifs associated with the jubilee in two places exactly 49 years apart. The rapid dictation of the Book of Mormon (For the timeline of translation, see John W. Welch, “The Miraculous Translation of the Book of Mormon,” in Opening the Heavens: Accounts of Divine Manifestations, 1820–1844, ed. John W. Welch, Provo, UT: BYU Studies, 2005, 77–117) would hardly have allowed time for Joseph to count off the years and to mark these jubilees with such subtle sophistication, let alone to set the gorgeous language in Alma 29 so richly in this contextual background.

All of this gives evidence of Alma’s considerable awareness, experiential familiarity, and spiritual sensitivity. Outside of a Jewish-thinking community, few readers are particularly familiar with jubilee celebrations and the themes associated with them. For many profoundly motivated reasons, Alma’s soul-stirring words confer priestly blessings and express joyous love in ways that are fully appropriate to the jubilee occasion. Although most readers today won’t be participating in a jubilee celebration, all can find daily reasons to rejoice in God’s creation and recognize his hand in all things.

2 Yea, I would declare unto every soul, as with the voice of thunder, repentance and the plan of redemption, that they should repent and come unto our God, that there might not be more sorrow upon all the face of the earth.

verse 2 The “plan of redemption” would undoubtedly include the concepts of the fall of man, the atonement of the Savior, and obedience to the laws of God.

Alma admits to a temptation to superimpose his will upon the agency of man—that is, he feels so strongly that men would be happy here on earth and beyond if they would only accept Jesus Christ and his gospel, that sometimes he finds himself wishing he could speak so powerfully (“as with the voice of thunder”) that men’s agency would be momentarily suspended and they would all be persuaded to accept the gospel and join with God’s earthly kingdom.

Contemplate for a moment what the world would be like if all of its inhabitants would live the principles of the gospel and look forward joyously to their exaltation.

3 But behold, I am a man, and do sin in my wish; for I ought to be content with the things which the Lord hath allotted unto me.

verse 3 Here, Alma apologizes to the Lord for desiring more ability than the Lord has given him. Just exactly why was Alma sinful in his desires expressed in verses 1 and 2?

His wish usurped an angelic role that was not his. He extravagantly wished to speak even more thunderously than the angel of the Lord, by wanting to “cry repentance unto every people” and “unto every soul,” to remove all sorrow from “upon all the face of the earth” (Alma 29:1–2), effectively appropriating to himself the role and power of God.

He erred in thinking that somehow this could actually remove sorrow from all the earth. Not only would that be impossible, but it would deny the decree of God that good and evil should be placed before all men that they might choose according to their desires and thereby experience joy or remorse, as Alma himself later acknowledges (Alma 29:5).

His wish reflected discontent with the things that the Lord had allotted unto him (Alma 29:3–4). Elder Neal A. Maxwell wrote: “The truth about foreordination also helps us to taste of the other deep wisdom of Alma. He said we ought to be ‘content with the things which the Lord hath allotted unto’ each of us (Alma 29:3). If, indeed, the things allotted to each of us have been divinely customized, then why should I desire more than to perform the work to which I have been called?” (But for a Small Moment, 101).

Alma’s wish would have tried to re-plow the ground of God’s firm decrees. Alma conceded, “I ought not to harrow up in my desires the firm decree of a just God” (Alma 29:4). Harrowing involves breaking up the ground for planting crops. So Alma realizes that he is seeking to “break up” the firm decree of God, a desire which is sinful. Alma’s wish would have put him into a position of trying to counsel the Lord, and in effect to deny that “the Lord doth counsel in his wisdom, according to that which is just and true” (verse 8). On reflection, Alma recognized that his holy spiritual calling was simply to bring “some soul” to repentance.

In his wish, Alma recognized that he sinned in his heart or mind because of such desires. This truth is evident here in Alma’s honest reflection. To his credit, Alma recognized that it is God’s role to grant to men “according to their desires” and “according to their wills” and that “good and evil hath come before all men” whether for “life or death, joy or remorse of conscience” (Alma 29:4–5).

Thus, reaffirming to himself what he truly knew, Alma asked, “Why should I desire that I was an angel, that I could speak unto all the ends of the earth?” (Alma 29:7). To this question he immediately answered that he should not so desire, for it is in God’s wisdom that all nations shall receive, in their own tongue, as the Lord sees fit (verse 8), and because the Lord has commanded him not to “glory in [him]self,” but to “glory in that which the Lord hath commanded” (verse 9).

Indeed, his wish, if fulfilled, might have led him to disregard many things that one must spiritually remember in righteousness. It would have set Alma up ahead of his four brethren, the Sons of Mosiah, whose great success among the Lamannites deserved to be celebrated with the greatest of jubilation. His wish could have led Alma to glory in himself, and not to glory in what the Lord had commanded him, and could have distracted him from his responsibility to rejoice unselfishly in the successes of all other people.

In Alma’s mind, missing the mark in any of these respects, let alone in all of them, would have constituted nothing less than a sin of thunderous, soul-shaking proportions. Fortunately, Alma ultimately was spiritually sensitive enough to diminish and dissolve these impulses. Alma’s glorious text ends with him thinking not of himself, but of the great success of the four sons of Mosiah who had been up to the land of Nephi, who had labored exceedingly, and had brought forth much fruit (Alma 29:17). “A sure sign of a disciple of Christ is that he or she has learned how to rejoice in the progress of others” (Ed J. Pinegar and Richard J. Allen, Commentaries and Insights on the Book of Mormon: 1 Nephi to Alma 29, American Fork, UT: Covenant Communications, 2007, 620).

4 I ought not to harrow up in my desires, the firm decree of a just God, for I know that he granteth unto men according to their desire, whether it be unto death or unto life; yea, I know that he allotteth unto men, yea, decreeth unto them decrees which are unalterable, according to their wills, whether they be unto salvation or unto destruction.

verse 4 “I ought not to harrow up in my desires, the firm decree of a just God” We have encountered the verb “harrow up” or “harrowed up” previously in our study of the Book of Mormon (2 Nephi 9:47; Alma 14:6; 15:3). In all instances in the Book of Mormon, thus far, to “harrow up” is to vex or cause mental distress. The meaning in this verse is different. According to Webster, one archaic meaning of the verb “to harrow” is to despoil or to take away the value of a thing. This meaning seems applicable here. Alma says in effect, “I ought not, by my own vain or selfish desirings, try to alter the firm decree of a just God.”

“the firm decree of a just God” And just what is this “firm decree of a just God”? It is that every man possesses his unfettered agency, and that he will reap eternal happiness or sorrow according to his exercise of that agency.

“I know that he granteth unto men according to their desire” Here is a sobering thought. A man’s “desire” has little to do with his momentary wishes or statements of preference. Rather his “desire” is what he truly is in his heart. Ultimately a man is judged by his desire—what really lies deep within his heart. A man’s thinking, feelings, words, and actions (his behaviors) are inevitably determined by what is in his heart. No amount of pretense, excuse, deceit, ostentation, or rationalization can hide what is really there. A man may try to deceive others by acting this way or that way, but ultimately what truly lies in his heart will manifest itself through his behaviors. The Lord’s judgment of a man will thus always be based on that man’s real desires, and that judgment or decree is “unalterable.”

An individual who has yielded his heart to God, overcome his natural self, and willed himself to obey will eventually be born of the Spirit. He will be changed from his carnal and fallen state. He will experience a change of heart. That man will desire eternal life for all of the right reasons. His heart and his motivations will be pure. There will be nothing of selfishness or self aggrandizement. He will not simply prefer to live with God; he will long to be there. He will have a consuming desire for the things of God. He will have lost all desire to sin. He it is who is granted “according to his desire”—knowing that he will not ask amiss. The Lord will see to it that “it is done even as he asketh” (D&C 46:30). The Lord has said of him: “Whatsoever things [he] shall ask the Father in my name shall be given unto [him]” (3 Nephi 27:28).

Is it possible that a man might ask amiss? That is, might a man request an eternal benefit which is incompatible with those desires that are truly found in his heart? The prophet Samuel wrote, “The LORD seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the LORD looketh on the heart” (1 Samuel 16:7). Ultimately, the Lord’s judgments will be based, not upon what a man says, or upon what a man may think he wants, but rather upon what a man is.

5 Yea, and I know that good and evil have come before all men; he that knoweth not good from evil is blameless; but he that knoweth good and evil, to him it is given according to his desires, whether he desireth good or evil, life or death, joy or remorse of conscience.

verse 5 “I know that good and evil have come before all men” Mortality offers to all people, once they are beyond the age of accountability, ample opportunities to knowingly decide between good and evil.

“he that knoweth not good from evil is blameless” Those below the age of accountability, and those whose mental capacities render them unable to judge between good and evil, are not responsible.

“but he that knoweth good and evil, to him it is given according to his desires” President Ezra Taft Benson taught: “We are free to choose, but we are not free to alter the consequences of those choices” (Come Unto Christ, 40). The primary determinant of a man’s choices and behavior is his desires—who and what he really is. Ultimately a man’s desires will be made overtly manifest in his outward behavior. In the unusual case of a man whose desires, whether they be good or evil, are not manifest due to circumstances beyond his control, a just God will reward or punish that individual as if he had actually manifest those desires (D&C 137:5-9). Elder Dallin H. Oaks wrote: “The laws of God can reward a righteous desire or attitude because an omniscient God can determine it. If a person does not perform a particular commandment because he is genuinely unable to do so, but truly would if he could, our Heavenly Father will know this and will reward that person accordingly. Upon the same principle, evil thoughts or desires are sinful under the laws of God even though not translated into the actions that would make them punishable under the laws of man. Similarly, if a person performs a seemingly righteous act but does so for the wrong reasons, such as to achieve a selfish purpose, his hands may be clean but his heart is not pure. His act will not be counted for righteousness” (Pure in Heart, 12-13).

6 Now, seeing that I know these things, why should I desire more than to perform the work to which I have been called?

7 Why should I desire that I were an angel, that I could speak unto all the ends of the earth?

8 For behold, the Lord doth grant unto all nations, of their own nation and tongue, to teach his word, yea, in wisdom, all that he seeth fit that they should have; therefore we see that the Lord doth counsel in wisdom, according to that which is just and true.

verse 8 Alma teaches that God grants gospel knowledge including spiritual insights unto his children according to his divine wisdom. This likely applies to nations as a whole and to each individual. We will receive that portion of his word we are prepared to receive. We have already learned that “he that will not harden his heart, to him is given the greater portion of the word, until it is given unto him to know the mysteries of God until he know them in full.” Also “they that will harden their hearts, to them is given the lesser portion of the word until they know nothing concerning his mysteries; and then they are taken captive by the devil, and led by his will down to destruction” (Alma 12:9-11).

“the Lord doth grant unto all nations, of their own nation and tongue, to teach his word” From other scriptures we have learned that the gospel will be preached unto every nation, kindred, tongue, and people (Revelation 14:6-7) and that it will go to all nations in their own language (D&C 90:11). Here we learn that the people of each nation will hear the gospel declared by their own people—“of their own nation and tongue.”

9 I know that which the Lord hath commanded me, and I glory in it. I do not glory of myself, but I glory in that which the Lord hath commanded me; yea, and this is my glory, that perhaps I may be an instrument in the hands of God to bring some soul to repentance; and this is my joy.

verse 9 Here, Alma reaffirms the idea that he has no desire to seek for callings from the Lord that may bring him notoriety or some other selfish benefit. He is content with and indeed glories in “that which the Lord hath commanded” him.

10 And behold, when I see many of my brethren truly penitent, and coming to the Lord their God, then is my soul filled with joy; then do I remember what the Lord has done for me, yea, even that he hath heard my prayer; yea, then do I remember his merciful arm which he extended towards me.

verse 10 “I remember his merciful arm which he extended towards me” It is unlikely that Alma, even to the end of his mortal life, ever ceased shaking with panic over how close he had come to eternal damnation in those months and years prior to his miraculous conversion.

11 Yea, and I also remember the captivity of my fathers; for I surely do know that the Lord did deliver them out of bondage, and by this did establish his church; yea, the Lord God, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, did deliver them out of bondage.

12 Yea, I have always remembered the captivity of my fathers; and that same God who delivered them out of the hands of the Egyptians did deliver them out of bondage.

verses 11-12 By recalling here the captivity of his ancestors in the land of Helam and the land of Nephi, Alma is actually following a commandment of the Lord delivered to him by the angel who participated in his dramatic conversion. That angel told him: “Now I say unto thee: Go, and remember the captivity of thy fathers in the land of Helam, and in the land of Nephi; and remember how great things he has done for them; for they were in bondage, and he has delivered them” (Mosiah 27:16).

13 Yea, and that same God did establish his church among them; yea, and that same God hath called me by a holy calling, to preach the word unto this people, and hath given me much success, in the which my joy is full.

14 But I do not joy in my own success alone, but my joy is more full because of the success of my brethren, who have been up to the land of Nephi.

verse 14 Here, Alma refers, of course, to his brethren the sons of Mosiah.

15 Behold, they have labored exceedingly, and have brought forth much fruit; and how great shall be their reward!

16 Now, when I think of the success of these my brethren my soul is carried away, even to the separation of it from the body, as it were, so great is my joy.

17 And now may God grant unto these, my brethren, that they may sit down in the kingdom of God; yea, and also all those who are the fruit of their labors that they may go no more out, but that they may praise him forever. And may God grant that it may be done according to my words, even as I have spoken. Amen.

verse 17 “that they may sit down in the kingdom of God” Alma yearns aloud for the sealing up to eternal glory of his friends, the sons of Mosiah.

“that they may go no more out” This particular “they” refers to the Anti-Nephi-Lehies—those Lamanites converted during the ministrations of the sons of Mosiah. This phrase means: May the converted Lamanites always remain faithful and never again wander off the strait and narrow path.

Scripture Mastery

Alma 30 The Antichrist Korihor leads many from the truth. He is eventually brought before Alma, the chief judge in Zarahemla, who is the governor over all the land. Korihor brazenly refuses to be persuaded by Alma's testimony and asks for a sign as the reality of God. Accordingly, he is struck deaf and dumb. Realizing his predicament, Korihor then claims, conversing of course by writing, that he has been deceived by the Devil who appeared before him in the form of an angel, and he pled with Alma to lift the curse from him. Alma perceived that he would resume his evil proselyting if the curse be lifted, and he refused and had him cast out. Korihor was then reduced to begging and he is eventually trampled and killed while in the land of the Zoramites.

Alma 30:60 The devil will not support his children at the last day, but doth speedily drag them down to hell.

Alma 30 concerns itself with the antichrist Korihor and even provides us with an account of his teachings. One might well wonder why Mormon thought these materials sufficiently important that an entire chapter ought to be dedicated to an evil man and his teachings. Obviously Mormon did feel justified, and we will explore the possible reasons as we go along.

Brother Gerald N. Lund in his article "An Anti-Christ in the Book of Mormon" (The Book of Mormon: Alma, the Testimony of the Word, 107-28) has suggested that one possible purpose of chapter 30 is to serve as a scriptural "foil". A "foil," according to Webster, is something used "to enhance by contrast." Brother Lund mentions the example of a jeweler who displays his diamonds on black velvet in order to provide an enhancing background or foil for the gems. He points out that this account of the "evil missionary," Korihor is sandwiched between the account of the mission of the sons of Mosiah to the Lamanites and Alma's great mission to the Zoramites.

If we examine Korihor's "doctrines," we learn that the same false philosophies he espoused are rampant in the world today. Perhaps this is another valid reason why Mormon was inspired to include this rather detailed account of the beliefs of a wicked man in the Book of Mormon. President Ezra Taft Benson wrote: "The Book of Mormon . . . fortifies the humble followers of Christ against the evil designs, strategies, and doctrines of the devil in our day. The type of apostates in the Book of Mormon are similar to the type we have today. God, with his infinite foreknowledge, so molded the Book of Mormon that we might see the error and know how to combat false educational, political, religious, and philosophical concepts of our time" (The Teachings of Ezra Taft Benson, 56).

The essence of Korihor's beliefs are found in Alma 30:13-24. Korihor was, first of all, an atheist.

How might we explain atheism? It would seem there are at least two major factors involved:

1. First, with each giving in to your natural self (each sin), there occurs an incremental insensitivity to the influence of the Spirit of God. With repeated sins, one may become completely taken up by things of the world. Things an individual can experience with his five physical senses become all important. In fact, they are the only things that matter. With repeated sin, there also occurs a progressive insensitivity to things of the Spirit. Spiritual things eventually become unimportant, and even the object of skepticism and scorn. One becomes completely unable to feel spiritual impressions and promptings. "The only things that are real are things of the world, things I can see, hear, smell, touch, and taste. Everything else is imagination."

This leads to the religious philosophies of rationalism, empiricism, and cynicism. Rationalism is the philosophical doctrine that reason alone is the source of knowledge. Empiricism is the philosophic doctrine that all knowledge comes only through the physical senses, through physical evidences, through observations. Cynicism is simple a tendency to doubt the existence and therefore reject the very existence of the spiritual and supernatural realms. According to the cynic, every account of a "spiritual" experience or impression is subterfuge. It is self delusion. A captivation by worldliness also leads to a belief in naturalism. Naturalism is the belief that all phenomena are explained by laws of science and that all theological, spiritual, or supernatural explanations are therefore without value.

What constitutes reality? To the incorrigible sinner, the here and now of this life is the only reality. There is nothing beyond this life. There is no life after death. When a man dies, that is the end of him. Here in this life, people will succeed or fail solely based upon their own strengths and ingenuity. This leads to a belief in the "law of the jungle"—the survival and success of the fittest, and only the fittest.

There is no God and hence no revelation, there exists no set of divine laws. There is no absolute right or wrong, no good or evil. None of us is in jeopardy of eternal punishment. Therefore, we may behave as we please without fear of eternal consequences. We may ignore those rules or "commandments" ecclesiastical leaders use to brow beat us. Moral standards and values come only from human experience. The ethical standards so derived are often called "situational ethics." This is the philosophy of relativism. Relativism is a theory of knowledge, truth, or morality in which there is no absolute. The standard of judgment, then, varies with each individual and his or her situation and environment.

2. The promptings of the Spirit of Christ, though blunted, never disappear completely. Therefore, when an individual becomes caught up in sin and therefore rejects all things spiritual, there remains an inevitable element of subconscious fear for one's eternal future. This fear often leads to an urgent, defensive need to self justify. "How naive and unsophisticated to actually believe in such things as God or an afterlife." "Are you an adult? Do you require someone to tell you what you can and cannot do? If I want to sleep with my girlfriend, and it does no harm to anyone, then I will. What can be wrong with that? There is no God. There are no valid commandments."

The fear of the eternal future and the need to justify self is particularly strong if the individual is an apostate who once accepted, but now rejects, the truth.

This may lead to the adoption of the philosophy of humanism. Humanism may be defined as a system of thought or action in which human interests, values, comforts, needs, and dignity predominate. In fact, they are the only criteria by which judgments can be made. Human beings are the supreme reality in a natural world.

Humanism usually rejects the importance of a belief in God. The humanist may have become purely atheistic, or he even may remain undecided, and uncaring or unbothered by the question of whether or not there is a God. He may be in the category we refer to as agnostic. "If, by chance, there is a heaven and a God who chooses who enters his heaven and who does not, then he will judge me for my value as a human being, and not for my belief in him." A fear of death and the eternal future lie at the origin of this philosophy. Humanism is merely a cover-up and attempt at self-justification.

Korihor preaches that man ought to be free rather than be bound down and limited by any type of authority placed over him (verses 23-24). This argument here is intended to appeal to the natural man within all of us. We all have a natural tendency to resent any type of restraint or authority placed over us. We want to be "free." The individual hiding his underlying fear likes to point out to others just how they are enslaved by religious law. Korihor says in effect, "Look at yourselves. You are slaves to your ancestors. You are a victim of the so-called commandments." Since misery loves company and a fellowship of like believers (actually unbelievers) can be of great comfort to the sinner, Korihor hopes that people will respond with an indignant attitude: "Like heck I am. Let me show just how 'enslaved' I am." He may provoke others to demonstrate their unfettered "freedom." We might term this philosophy liberationism, a theology which stresses freedom from any restraints. You may notice that we have postulated several names for the philosophy or philosophies of the individuals who have wholly gone over to worldliness. They are all related and all share in the same "etiology and pathogenesis" (these are medical terms that mean "cause" and "sequence of development").

Finally, Korihor generalizes from his own experience (verse 24). He assumes that what is true for him is true for everyone else. If he doesn't know, then he assumes no one else can know either.

As you read the arguments proffered by Korihor in chapter 30 against the truth, notice their familiar ring. You have heard them before. He raises most all the points apostates usually raise. His arguments have been referred to as the “arguments of apostasy.”

For additional insight, see also the following commentary on Korihor. See also the accounts of three other well-known Book of Mormon apostates in the commentary on Alma 1:2. Brother S. Michael Wilcox has proposed six “articles of no faith” which he defines as follows:

1. A man cannot know of things to come (verse 13).
2. A man cannot know things he cannot see (verse 15).
3. Every man prospers according to the law of the jungle—the survival of the fittest. Only those things are beneficial that bring comfort, pleasure, notoriety, etc. (verse 17).
4. Whatever a man does is okay—there is no absolute truth or law; all things are relative (verse 17).
5. When a man is dead, that is the end (verse 18).
6. Either there is no God, or God is unknown to man, and who cares anyway (verse 28)?

1 Behold, now it came to pass that after the people of Ammon were established in the land of Jershon, yea, and also after the Lamanites were driven out of the land, and their dead were buried by the people of the land—

2 Now their dead were not numbered because of the greatness of their numbers; neither were the dead of the Nephites numbered—but it came to pass after they had buried their dead, and also after the days of fasting, and mourning, and prayer, (and it was in the sixteenth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi) there began to be continual peace throughout all the land.

verse 2 “also after the days of fasting, and mourning, and prayer” See the commentary for Alma 28:6 for a discussion of the custom of fasting in this situation.

3 Yea, and the people did observe to keep the commandments of the Lord; and they were strict in observing the ordinances of God, according to the law of Moses; for they were taught to keep the law of Moses until it should be fulfilled.

verse 3 “the people did observe to keep the commandments of the Lord; and they were strict in observing the ordinances of God, according to the law of Moses” There is general agreement that the Nephites understood and lived the ethical portion of the law of Moses, the ten commandments. Apparently, they also participated in the ordinances of blood sacrifices and burnt offerings (see Alma 34:10; 4 Nephi 1:12). It is also clear that the Nephites were given to understand the law of Moses as a type and a shadow of the great and last blood sacrifice, the atoning sacrifice of Jesus Christ (3 Nephi 9:19).

The rhetorical question may be asked, “Were the Nephites Jews or Christians?” They were obviously both. They were as Jewish as Jesus himself. Jesus continued to observe the law of Moses until it was fulfilled upon his death and resurrection. In the first chapter of the gospel of Mark, Jesus not only healed the leper but purified him and sent him to the temple to make sacrifices according to the law of Moses. There is evidence that Jesus went up to Jerusalem regularly to observe the Feast of Tabernacles and the Feast of Passover. Jesus also, obviously, understood the deadness of the law of Moses without his own vital atoning sacrifice and death.

We will also learn it is likely the Nephites also understood and observed the Lord’s commandments to gather periodically at the temple to celebrate the Jewish festivals. If you have an interest in this topic, please read the supplemental article, The Jewish Pilgrimage Festivals and Their Relationship to King Benjamin’s Speech.

4 And thus the people did have no disturbance in all the sixteenth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi.

5 And it came to pass that in the commencement of the seventeenth year of the reign of the judges, there was continual peace.

6 But it came to pass in the latter end of the seventeenth year, there came a man into the land of Zarahemla, and he was Anti-Christ, for he began to preach unto the people against the prophecies which had been spoken by the prophets, concerning the coming of Christ.

verse 6 Here we are introduced to Korihor. The sentence structure of this verse suggests that the word “Anti-Christ” is being used as an adjective. However, the upper case “A” provides evidence that it is intended here as a name or title rather than an adjective. For a discussion of some of the characteristics and beliefs of Korihor, see the introductory discussion for this chapter.

It is interesting to note that the name Korihor probably has Jaredite origins. See also the supplemental article, Names in the Book of Mormon.

verses 5-6 “in the commencement of the seventeenth year” “in the latter end of the seventeenth year” Randall P. Spackman has defended the idea that the Nephite year could be divided in half. The first half is referred to in the Book of Mormon as “the commencement,” while the latter half is the “latter end” (“Introduction to Book of Mormon Chronology: The Principal Prophecies, Calendars, and Dates,” a FARMS reprint, 4).

7 Now there was no law against a man’s belief; for it was strictly contrary to the commands of God that there should be a law which should bring men on to unequal grounds.

verse 7 A law that favors one set of religious beliefs over another would, naturally, favor one group of people over another. Then it would “bring men on to unequal grounds.”

It is interesting that the people of Zarahemla enjoyed the right of free speech much as we do today. Their “Bill of Rights” was apparently received under the inspiration of God, just as we believe ours was today. Our rights today, of course, are guaranteed by the First Amendment to the Constitution.

8 For thus saith the scripture: Choose ye this day, whom ye will serve.

verse 8 Here Mormon makes an editorial comment. He is quoting Joshua 24:15 which was apparently well-known in his day as it is today.

9 Now if a man desired to serve God, it was his privilege; or rather, if he believed in God it was his privilege to serve him; but if he did not believe in him there was no law to punish him.

10 But if he murdered he was punished unto death; and if he robbed he was also punished; and if he stole he was also punished; and if he committed adultery he was also punished; yea, for all this wickedness they were punished.

verse 10 We have already learned that capital punishment was practiced among the Nephites as it had been among their Hebrew ancestors. Note also, once again, the differentiation between “robbery” and “stealing” (see the commentary for Mosiah 13:22 and the commentary for Helaman 3:12).

The major tenets of the law of Moses were obviously the law of the land.

11 For there was a law that men should be judged according to their crimes. Nevertheless, there was no law against a man’s belief; therefore, a man was punished only for the crimes which he had done; therefore all men were on equal grounds.

12 And this Anti-Christ, whose name was Korihor, (and the law could have no hold upon him) began to preach unto the people that there should be no Christ. And after this manner did he preach, saying:

verses 13-15 Korihor here expounds a type of rationalistic or empiricistic philosophy. These philosophies include the idea that knowledge cannot be gained by any other means than through the natural senses. Also, the universe is regarded as an inanimate, self-acting, and self-perpetuating system, and there is no real underlying purpose in the existence of the universe.

13 O ye that are bound down under a foolish and a vain hope, why do ye yoke yourselves with such foolish things? Why do ye look for a Christ? For no man can know of anything which is to come.

verse 13 Note here Korihor's use of Brother Wilcox's "first-temptation" strategy (see the commentary for Alma 1:2). Korihor uses such rhetoric as "ye that are bound down" and "why do ye yoke yourselves"?

14 Behold, these things which ye call prophecies, which ye say are handed down by holy prophets, behold, they are foolish traditions of your fathers.

15 How do ye know of their surety? Behold, ye cannot know of things which ye do not see; therefore ye cannot know that there shall be a Christ.

16 Ye look forward and say that ye see a remission of your sins. But behold, it is the effect of a frenzied mind; and this derangement of your minds comes because of the traditions of your fathers, which lead you away into a belief of things which are not so.

verse 16 Korihor believes that "a frenzied mind" and "this derangement of your minds" are simply terms for unnecessary guilt. See also the commentary for verse 22 below.

17 And many more such things did he say unto them, telling them that there could be no atonement made for the sins of men, but every man fared in this life according to the management of the creature; therefore every man prospered according to his genius, and that every man conquered according to his strength; and whatsoever a man did was no crime.

verse 17 "every man fared in this life according to the management of the creature" In a naturalistic universe such as that advocated by Korihor, there would be no laws of God to break. There would be no accountability to a higher power. There would be no need for an atonement. People would not be motivated in their actions by the fear or love of God. Instead people's actions would be motivated by the law of the jungle—the survival of the fittest. Hedonistic philosophies would be appropriate: live for today, for tomorrow we die, and there is nothing after death. The phrase "management of the creature" refers to what directly benefits a man in temporal or worldly ways; i.e. what gives him pleasure, comfort, notoriety, and status.

Obviously Korihor's teachings would be readily received by a worldly society. The concept of "nihilism" refers to a denial of any life after this mortal one. If there were no life after this one, one might make a persuasive argument for immoral behavior. Why not be immoral? Why not just rejoice in pleasure and wickedness? What is there to restrain us? When a man dies, that is the end.

18 And thus he did preach unto them, leading away the hearts of many, causing them to lift up their heads in their wickedness, yea, leading away many women, and also men, to commit whoredoms—telling them that when a man was dead, that was the end thereof.

verse 18 “causing them to lift up their heads in their wickedness” Once a man identifies an intellectual rationale for his behavior he tends to become proud of his special intellectual insights. What a great victory for Satan! Not only are these intellectual rationalizers wicked, but they are proud of their wickedness—they “lift up their heads in their wickedness.” And why not? Man is the supreme being.

“leading away many women, and also men, to commit whoredoms” This phrase may refer to the ritual prostitutes of both sexes such as those that were part of some apostate religious cults in the ancient Middle East. These took part in the fornication that was part of the religious ritual of those cults.

19 Now this man went over to the land of Jershon also, to preach these things among the people of Ammon, who were once the people of the Lamanites.

20 But behold they were more wise than many of the Nephites; for they took him, and bound him, and carried him before Ammon, who was a high priest over that people.

verse 20 Why was Korihor bound and carried before Ammon? We have already referred to the Nephites’ Bill of Rights which allowed a man to believe and to preach anything he wanted so long as he did not urge the people to unlawful acts. We can only assume that he was guilty of the latter. Or, the people of Jershon simply saw the danger in Korihor’s teachings and wanted no association with him. They desired that Ammon or even Alma should deal with him.

21 And it came to pass that he caused that he should be carried out of the land. And he came over into the land of Gideon, and began to preach unto them also; and here he did not have much success, for he was taken and bound and carried before the high priest, and also the chief judge over the land.

verse 21 The high priest Ammon ordered Korihor out of the land of Jershon.

The reader should bear in mind that Alma was the high priest over the entire Nephite land, the greater land of Zarahemla. Keep in mind the two separate meanings of the name “land of Zarahemla.” Most often it refers to the entire Nephite-occupied land north of the land of Nephi and south of the land Desolation. Also, it may refer to the limited land surrounding the city of Zarahemla and controlled by that city—a small land within the greater land of Zarahemla. Other lands within the greater land of Zarahemla include Gideon, Jershon, Manti, and others. In each of these small lands is found a city of the same name. Each individual smaller land within the greater land of Zarahemla apparently had its own high priest and chief judge.

The land of Gideon is that land near the city and land of Zarahemla to the south and on the east side of the River Sidon. People passed through Gideon as they traveled southward from the city of Zarahemla to reach the land of Manti or as they “went up” to the land of Nephi. We will learn that the high priest of the land of Gideon is named Giddonah.

22 And it came to pass that the high priest said unto him: Why do ye go about perverting the ways of the Lord? Why do ye teach this people that there shall be no Christ, to interrupt their rejoicings? Why do ye speak against all the prophecies of the holy prophets?

verse 22 The high priest (Giddonah) asks Korihor why he is trying to destroy the faith of the believing Nephites, especially since they are obviously receiving so much joy from their belief in Christ. In the following verses, Korihor will ignore the issue of his personal motives, but he will provide two reasons why he believes the people have come to believe in these “false” ideas. First, he contends they have been indoctrinated or propagandized by their parents (the “foolish traditions” of their fathers). Secondly, they have been brainwashed by false religious leaders who are motivated by the hope of personal gain or power. Korihor contends that this type of indoctrination is most harmful as it leads to guilt and shame. As mentioned in the commentary for verse 16, he refers to these unnecessary psychological hang-ups—guilt and shame—as “derangement” or a “frenzied mind.”

23 Now the high priest’s name was Giddonah. And Korihor said unto him: Because I do not teach the foolish traditions of your fathers, and because I do not teach this people to bind themselves down under the foolish ordinances and performances which are laid down by ancient priests, to usurp power and authority over them, to keep them in ignorance, that they may not lift up their heads, but be brought down according to thy words.

verse 23 “I do not teach this people to bind themselves down under the foolish ordinances and performances which are laid down by ancient priests, to usurp power and authority over them” Here Korihor again employs the “first-temptation” strategy to appeal to that natural-man tendency within all of us to resist any type of confinement or enslavement. He also cleverly uses the debunking approach (see the commentary for Alma 1:2) and attempts to undermine the credibility of the Nephites’ priesthood leaders by referring to those good men as “ancient,” referring to their well-crafted laws as “foolish,” and questioning their motives.

We need only ask ourselves, “Who is truly free?” Is it the individual who accepts Christ and his gospel—which gospel enables him to achieve the ultimate fulfillment of becoming like God? Or is it that man who resists the “enslavement” of the gospel plan, and unwittingly falls into Satan’s trap?

24 Ye say that this people is a free people. Behold, I say they are in bondage. Ye say that those ancient prophecies are true. Behold, I say that ye do not know that they are true.

verse 24 “I say that ye do not know that they are true” Here Korihor follows the familiar pattern of doubters. He generalizes from his own experience. He assumes that what is true of him is true of everyone else. Because he doesn’t know, he assumes that no one else can. It is a defense born of his ambivalence. Perhaps he dares not admit that anyone else can believe because deep down he fears they might be correct in their beliefs.

25 Ye say that this people is a guilty and a fallen people, because of the transgression of a parent. Behold, I say that a child is not guilty because of its parents.

verse 25 Note the subtlety of Korihor’s approach. The “parent” to which Korihor alludes is Adam. It is entirely true that an individual is not guilty because of the transgressions of a parent. Hence, Korihor equates the doctrine of the fall with being punished for the sins of a parent. We know, and Korihor knew as well, that those “penalties” which man suffers as the result of Adam’s sin (separation from God and physical death) are erased through Christ’s atonement. Man will only be punished for his own sins and not for Adam’s transgression (Article of Faith, 2).

26 And ye also say that Christ shall come. But behold, I say that ye do not know that there shall be a Christ. And ye say also that he shall be slain for the sins of the world—

27 And thus ye lead away this people after the foolish traditions of your fathers, and according to your own desires; and ye keep them down, even as it were in bondage, that ye may glut yourselves with the labors of their hands, that they durst not look up with boldness, and that they durst not enjoy their rights and privileges.

verse 27 For a reminder as to the particulars of “the foolish traditions of your fathers” see the commentary for Enos 1:14 and Mosiah 10:12-17.

“your fathers” (italics added) Korihor was likely a descendant of the Mulekites, or perhaps the Jaredites, rather than of father Lehi. See the commentary for Alma 1:2. See also verse 31 which contains the phrase “silly traditions of their fathers” (italics added).

“ye keep them down, even as it were in bondage, that ye may glut yourselves with the labors of their hands” Korihor calls into question the motives of the Nephite priesthood leaders. He accuses them of seeking for riches—practicing priestcraft. People with evil motives have difficulty acknowledging pure motives in others. Actually, we will learn from Alma that Korihor knew that this accusation was not true (see verse 35).

28 Yea, they durst not make use of that which is their own lest they should offend their priests, who do yoke them according to their desires, and have brought them to believe, by their traditions and their dreams and their whims and their visions and their pretended mysteries, that they should, if they did not do according to their words, offend some unknown being, who they say is God—a being who never has been seen or known, who never was nor ever will be.

verse 28 “they durst not make use of that which is their own lest they should offend their priests” Korihor accuses the Nephite priesthood leaders of practicing unrighteous dominion—making the Nephites feel that all they produced by their own labors was rightly owed to the church and not intended for their own use.

29 Now when the high priest and the chief judge saw the hardness of his heart, yea, when they saw that he would revile even against God, they would not make any reply to his words; but they caused that he should be bound; and they delivered him up into the hands of the officers, and sent him to the land of Zarahemla, that he might be brought before Alma, and the chief judge who was governor over all the land.

verse 29 “when the high priest and the chief judge saw the hardness of his heart” See the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

“he would revile even against God” To revile is to blame or to address with contemptuous language.

We will learn in the next verse that Korihor was guilty of blasphemy. Blasphemy is of two types: (1) speaking or acting offensively to or about the divine, and (2) claiming the attributes or prerogatives of Deity. Korihor was guilty of the first type because of his reviling against God.

30 And it came to pass that when he was brought before Alma and the chief judge, he did go on in the same manner as he did in the land of Gideon; yea, he went on to blaspheme.

31 And he did rise up in great swelling words before Alma, and did revile against the priests and teachers, accusing them of leading away the people after the silly traditions of their fathers, for the sake of glutting on the labors of the people.

32 Now Alma said unto him: Thou knowest that we do not glut ourselves upon the labors of this people; for behold I have labored even from the commencement of the reign of the judges until now, with mine own hands for my support, notwithstanding my many travels round about the land to declare the word of God unto my people.

verse 32 “Thou knowest that we do not glut ourselves upon the labors of this people” Alma discerns that Korihor is deliberately lying and twisting the truth. Though we do not know the specific origins of Korihor, Alma here implies that he lived close enough to the city and land of Zarahemla to have been well acquainted with things happening there.

33 And notwithstanding the many labors which I have performed in the church, I have never received so much as even one senine for my labor; neither has any of my brethren, save it were in the judgment-seat; and then we have received only according to law for our time.

34 And now, if we do not receive anything for our labors in the church, what doth it profit us to labor in the church save it were to declare the truth, that we may have rejoicings in the joy of our brethren?

35 Then why sayest thou that we preach unto this people to get gain, when thou, of thyself, knowest that we receive no gain? And now, believest thou that we deceive this people, that causes such joy in their hearts?

verses 37-40 As mentioned, Alma has perceived that Korihor is lying. Now, in his questioning, he will now catch Korihor in the act of telling even more lies.

37 And then Alma said unto him: Believest thou that there is a God?

38 And he answered, Nay.

39 Now Alma said unto him: Will ye deny again that there is a God, and also deny the Christ? For behold, I say unto you, I know there is a God, and also that Christ shall come.

verse 39 Alma has certainly encountered many unbelievers in his travels and is certainly not intimidated by Korihor. It is likely that Alma’s main concern was that Korihor might lead astray the innocent and unwary.

40 And now what evidence have ye that there is no God, or that Christ cometh not? I say unto you that ye have none, save it be your word only.

verse 40 This question by Alma is brilliant and catches Korihor in a major inconsistency. Korihor has taught that people should believe only that which they can experience with their senses or otherwise prove to be true. Then Korihor unequivocally states that he believes there is no God. If Korihor were consistent in his beliefs, then he could not believe there is no God, because he cannot prove there is no God.

Just how might any person go about proving there is no God? Brother Gerald N. Lund illustrates the difficulty of such an endeavor:

Since the scriptures claim that God dwells in the heavens, the first task the person would have is to examine every cubic inch of the heavens (the universe), to see if there was a God. But even that impossible task creates a new set of problems. First of all, it would have to be an examination in the fullest sense of the word. Human beings see only visible light, which is a tiny portion of the electromagnetic spectrum. If by see we mean only what the eye can register, God would be totally missed if he exists at another frequency of the light spectrum. In other words, suppose God were at the ultraviolet or infrared frequencies. This person looking for God would miss him completely. But examining every inch of the universe across the fulness of the electromagnetic spectrum still wouldn't provide irrefutable proof. Suppose the person marked out the universe in a grid and began to search it systematically, square by square, from A to Z, and doesn't find God in any of the squares. Could that person then say there was no God? No! What if God was in square L when the searcher started in square A, but by the time that person reached square L, God had moved back to square B or C? Let's put it simply. Korihor says he will only believe what can be seen or proven. Yet he says he believes there is no God. To prove there is no God, a person would have to perceive (in the fullest sense of the word) every cubic inch of the entire universe simultaneously! In other words, one would have to be a god in order to prove there is no God. And yet Korihor blithely denies any belief in God's existence. In other words, Korihor is acting as much on faith (not righteous faith, but belief based on evidence that cannot be seen) as are those who believe there is a God. No wonder Alma accuses Korihor of having a 'lying spirit' (Alma 30:42)" ("An Anti-Christ in the Book of Mormon," The Book of Mormon: Alma, the Testimony of the Word, 107-28, 123-24).

Indeed, it is wholly impossible to argue effectively the position that there is no God.

41 But, behold, I have all things as a testimony that these things are true; and ye also have all things as a testimony unto you that they are true; and will ye deny them? Believest thou that these things are true?

verse 41 "I have all things as a testimony" Those who are responsive to the Spirit are prompted to see evidence of God's existence in almost every object and situation in their lives.

42 Behold, I know that thou believest, but thou art possessed with a lying spirit, and ye have put off the Spirit of God that it may have no place in you; but the devil has power over you, and he doth carry you about, working devices that he may destroy the children of God.

verse 42 "Behold, I know that thou believest" Alma is not merely using a technique of formal debate here. Rather, he knows by prophetic insight and discernment that Korihor does suspect that there is a God. In verse 52, Korihor will confirm that Alma had perceived the truth.

How does one come to believe in God when they have “put off the Spirit of God”? After all, is not the Spirit of God the only influence capable of revealing eternal truths to man? It is likely that Korihor’s belief in God was largely an intellectual ambivalence about the question of whether or not there is a God, a nagging suspicion that there was in fact a higher being, a grudging acquiescence and acknowledgment that even worldly logic suggests that the existence of God is highly plausible. There may even have been a prior witness given to Korihor by the Spirit which he now denies but still remembers.

43 And now Korihor said unto Alma: If thou wilt show me a sign, that I may be convinced that there is a God, yea, show unto me that he hath power, and then will I be convinced of the truth of thy words.

verse 43 In making this statement, Korihor is lying yet again. If, at this point, Korihor had been shown undeniable evidence of God’s existence, he would not have accepted it. He was unresponsive to the promptings of the Spirit and hardened against the truth. Though he asks for proof, he does not want proof, nor would he believe it if it were shown him.

Jesus was unequivocal in his condemnation of sign seekers. He said “A wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign” (Matthew 16:4). Joseph Smith affirmed this principle, saying it “is eternal, undeviating, and firm as the pillars of heaven; for whenever you see a man seeking after a sign, you may set it down that he is an adulterous man” (TPJS, 157). Joseph here suggests that those with an inclination to seek after carnal pleasures are also likely to be those who seek for signs in religious matters. Why is this so? Those who follow a pattern of repeatedly satiating their physical desires become invariably insensitive to subtle promptings of the Spirit—they develop spiritual blindness. They respond only to physical sensations. They communicate only on a physical level. They prefer the here and now rather than things of eternity. They strive to meet the needs of me rather than you.

Almost all heavenly signs are given as a reward for great faith to further strengthen those who manifest that faith (D&C 63:11). In asking for a sign, Korihor likely knew this principle and assumed there would be no sign. Then he would feel that he had more evidence for his own position. The doubting sign seeker is only rarely afforded the opportunity to witness a miracle. In these unusual instances the sign usually takes the form of a divine judgment upon the doubter (Alma 30:48-56).

44 But Alma said unto him: Thou hast had signs enough; will ye tempt your God? Will ye say, Show unto me a sign, when ye have the testimony of all these thy brethren, and also all the holy prophets? The scriptures are laid before thee, yea, and all things denote there is a God; yea, even the earth, and all things that are upon the face of it, yea, and its motion, yea, and also all the planets which move in their regular form do witness that there is a Supreme Creator.

verse 44 Here Alma summarizes the means given by God to man here in mortality, through which God intends that man learn of him: (1) the testimony of others, particularly the prophets; (2) the scriptures; (3) the grand design of nature itself.

Alma concludes his thoughts here with that memorable statement, “All things denote there is a God; yea, even the earth, and all things that are upon the face of it” (see also Moses 6:63).

“all things denote there is a God; yea, even the earth . . . and its motion, yea, and also all the planets which move in their regular form” Alma’s statement makes it clear that he knew something about astronomy. It is interesting that the 16th-century Spanish historians who lived in Mesoamerica (Ixtlilxochitl and Sahagun) recorded that an ancient culture in Mesoamerica, the Tultecas, were men of science who understood things pertaining to astronomy. Some believe that the Tultecas were the Nephites (Joseph L. Allen, Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon, 169). Somewhat later, the classic Mayans (AD 200 to AD 900) went to great lengths to erect observatories in order to study astronomy.

45 And yet do ye go about, leading away the hearts of this people, testifying unto them there is no God? And yet will ye deny against all these witnesses? And he said: Yea, I will deny, except ye shall show me a sign.

46 And now it came to pass that Alma said unto him: Behold, I am grieved because of the hardness of your heart, yea, that ye will still resist the spirit of the truth, that thy soul may be destroyed.

47 But behold, it is better that thy soul should be lost than that thou shouldst be the means of bringing many souls down to destruction, by thy lying and by thy flattering words; therefore if thou shalt deny again, behold God shall smite thee, that thou shalt become dumb, that thou shalt never open thy mouth any more, that thou shalt not deceive this people any more.

verse 47 “behold, it is better that thy soul should be lost than that thou shouldst be the means of bringing many souls down to destruction” Note that Alma uses the same justification here in warning Korihor that Nephi used in 1 Nephi 4:13 for the killing of Laban (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 4:13).

“by thy lying and by thy flattering words” For a discussion of the various forms of the word flatter, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 28:22.

48 Now Korihor said unto him: I do not deny the existence of a God, but I do not believe that there is a God; and I say also, that ye do not know that there is a God; and except ye show me a sign, I will not believe.

verse 48 Notice that when the heat is on, Korihor changes his previous frankly atheistic philosophy for more of an agnostic one. In effect he says, “I’m not saying God could not exist; I’m just saying I don’t believe he does.”

49 Now Alma said unto him: This will I give unto thee for a sign, that thou shalt be struck dumb, according to my words; and I say, that in the name of God, ye shall be struck dumb, that ye shall no more have utterance.

50 Now when Alma had said these words, Korihor was struck dumb, that he could not have utterance, according to the words of Alma.

verse 50 “Korihor was struck dumb” The following verse indicates that Korihor was not only stuck “dumb” but also deaf and dumb.

John W. Welch has discovered an ancient practice, in the Mediterranean world, of cursing a person with speechlessness. These curses have usually been found associated with legal proceedings, that is, one litigant (opponent in a lawsuit) would write a curse against the other litigant in hopes that one deity or another would receive and act upon it. They would ask the gods to bind the tongue of the legal opponent so the opponent would lose the lawsuit. The litigant writing the curse would thus hope to receive an advantage in the legal proceeding.

The earliest of these written curses date to the fifth century BC, not far from the time of Lehi. The speechlessness of Korihor, and the stunning of Sherem (Jacob 7) were precisely the kinds of signs or restraints that people in the ancient Mediterranean world expected a god to manifest in a judicial setting when false accusations or unfair ploys placed an innocent party at a distinct disadvantage. The stricken litigant, exposed by a god through illness or accident, would sometimes then confess his guilt. In hopes of appeasing the offended god, a punished litigant would inscribe in stone a clear profession of his newly admitted faith and would warn others not to disdain (treat with contempt) the gods.

Similarly, God was seen as an active participant in the courts of Hebrew law in biblical times, and the trials of Sherem and Korihor show the same use of confession. Sherem recanted his public teachings, confessed the truth of God who had intervened against him, admitted his error, and expressed concern that he would never be able to appease God (see Jacob 7:17-19). We will read of Korihor’s penitence in the ensuing verses (FARMS Update in Insights [October 1998], 2).

When Mosiah became king, his reforms determined that “there was no law against a man’s belief; for it was strictly contrary to the commands of God that there should be a law which should bring men on to unequal grounds” (see Alma 30:7). However, the situation with Korihor was unique. Much like the case involving Nehor (Alma 1), the problems involving Korihor’s case raised important questions in Nephite jurisprudence.

Did equality mean that a person could not only believe whatever he wanted but also say whatever he wanted? If a person did not believe that Jehovah was God, could he be punished for profaning the name of Jehovah or speaking insolently against him? In other words, did freedom of belief (or disbelief) mean that the disbelieving individual had full freedom to articulate that disbelief? This important question had been neither contemplated nor addressed in the law originally established by King Mosiah a generation earlier (John W. Welch, The Legal Cases in the Book of Mormon, Provo, UT: Brigham Young University Press and the Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2008, 274. Welch, Legal Cases, 277).

At this time, it was not firmly established just who had jurisdiction over cases of false preaching and blasphemy—the chief judge or the high priest? Was unruly or erroneous speech ever to be punishable under the new law, or could a person only be punished for his overt actions? Without prior experience to direct the judgment of the court, these questions became an issue of great importance, and Korihor was brought before the highest court in the land. He was brought to stand trial before Alma and the Nephite chief judge (Alma 30:29). In the course of their verbal sparring, Korihor, who denied the existence of God, demanded of Alma, “If thou wilt show me a sign, that I may be convinced that there is a God, yea, show unto me that he hath power, and then will I be convinced of the truth of thy words” (verse 43).

Alma’s response to this challenge was decisive: “Thou hast had signs enough; will ye tempt your God? . . . This will I give unto thee for a sign, that thou shalt be struck dumb, according to my words; and I say, that in the name of God, ye shall be struck dumb, that ye shall no more have utterance” (Alma 30:44, 49). Immediately after this, “Korihor was struck dumb, that he could not have utterance, according to the words of Alma” (verse 50).

This unmistakable display of divine power compelled Korihor into confessing his errors and humbling himself to some extent before God (Alma 30:51–54). His confession, however, was incomplete, and his promise of good future behavior was evasive. Despite begging for the curse to be lifted, Korihor was dismissed and “cast out,” or shunned in Zarahemla. Thus, reduced to begging, he soon went to Antionum and there, among the Zoramites, he was somehow trampled to death (verses 56, 58–59)

With all this contextual information in mind, readers can appreciate Mormon’s concluding thoughts on the pitiful outcome of Korihor’s case. With his penchant for moralizing on important incidents in Nephite history, Mormon effectively summarized, “And thus we see the end of him who perverteth the ways of the Lord; and thus we see that the devil will not support his children at the last day, but doth speedily drag them down to hell” (Alma 30:60).

51 And now when the chief judge saw this, he put forth his hand and wrote unto Korihor, saying: Art thou convinced of the power of God? In whom did ye desire that Alma should show forth his sign? Would ye that he should afflict others, to show unto thee a sign? Behold, he has showed unto you a sign; and now will ye dispute more?

verse 51 “In whom did ye desire that Alma should show forth his sign?”

Probably sensing Korihor’s distress at finding himself deaf and dumb, the chief judge says, in effect, “Why are you so upset? What did you expect? When you so foolishly ask for a sign, what did you expect Alma to do? Was he supposed to afflict someone else to prove to you that God lives?”

52 And Korihor put forth his hand and wrote, saying: I know that I am dumb, for I cannot speak; and I know that nothing save it were the power of God could bring this upon me; yea, and I always knew that there was a God.

verse 52 “I always knew that there was a God.” What a remarkable and moving confession!

53 But behold, the devil hath deceived me; for he appeared unto me in the form of an angel, and said unto me: Go and reclaim this people, for they have all gone astray after an unknown God. And he said unto me: There is no God; yea, and he taught me that which I should say. And I have taught his words; and I taught them because they were pleasing unto the carnal mind; and I taught them, even until I had much success, insomuch that I verily believed that they were true; and for this cause I withstood the truth, even until I have brought this great curse upon me.

verse 53 “the devil hath deceived me” Lest we assume that Korihor was an innocent victim of Satan’s deception, let us keep in mind an important principle taught by Elder Bruce R. McConkie: “Lucifer does not come personally to every false prophet, as he did to Korihor, any more than the Lord comes personally to every true prophet, as he did to Joseph Smith. Such an appearance—either of God on the one hand or of Satan on the other—is, however, the end result of full devotion to the respective causes involved. In each instance an earthly representative, by obedience to the laws that are ordained, may see the face of the master he serves” (Millennial Messiah, 72).

“I taught them because they were pleasing unto the carnal mind” Korihor’s teachings appealed to the carnal minds of those whom he taught. You can be sure they were pleasing unto Korihor’s carnal mind as well.

54 Now when he had said this, he besought that Alma should pray unto God, that the curse might be taken from him.

55 But Alma said unto him: If this curse should be taken from thee thou wouldst again lead away the hearts of this people; therefore, it shall be unto thee even as the Lord will.

56 And it came to pass that the curse was not taken off of Korihor; but he was cast out, and went about from house to house begging for his food.

57 Now the knowledge of what had happened unto Korihor was immediately published throughout all the land; yea, the proclamation was sent forth by the chief judge to all the people in the land, declaring unto those who had believed in the words of Korihor that they must speedily repent, lest the same judgments would come unto them.

58 And it came to pass that they were all convinced of the wickedness of Korihor; therefore they were all converted again unto the Lord; and this put an end to the iniquity after the manner of Korihor. And Korihor did go about from house to house, begging food for his support.

59 And it came to pass that as he went forth among the people, yea, among a people who had separated themselves from the Nephites and called themselves Zoramites, being led by a man whose name was Zoram—and as he went forth amongst them, behold, he was run upon and trodden down, even until he was dead.

verse 59 The Zoramites were a group of Nephite separatists who followed an apostate named Zoram. This verse was probably written by Mormon, in part, as a segue between Alma 30 and Alma 31. In chapters 31 through 35, we will study the account of Alma's mission among the Zoramites.

60 And thus we see the end of him who perverteth the ways of the Lord; and thus we see that the devil will not support his children at the last day, but doth speedily drag them down to hell.

verse 60 “And thus we see” The prophet Mormon concludes with a powerful lesson. Those who give their soul to Satan will ultimately be abandoned by him. He has no ability to love and no ability to create a familial or fraternal support system.

Alma 31-35 Alma leads a mission to the apostate Zoramites.

Alma 31:5 Alma thought it was expedient that they should try the virtue of the word of God.

In this chapter, we will encounter the Nephite apostate Zoram. In the book of Mormon text, he is the fourth of the charismatic, learned, and eloquent former Nephites who were successful in leading many Nephites from the truth. All four have some things in common. For example, they all denied that Christ would come. It may be a useful review to consider each of these briefly in turn.

Sherem lived in the days of the prophet Jacob and the account of his ministry is found in Jacob 7. He taught that salvation came through the law of Moses (Jacob 7:7). He denied the possibility of prophecy but then proceeded to prophesy himself: “I know that there is no Christ, neither has been, nor ever will be” (Jacob 7:9). After asking for a sign and being struck down by the Lord, he recanted his apostate teachings, confessed Christ, and died.

Nehor lived at the time of the younger Alma, and we read of him in Alma 1. He taught the doctrine of universal salvation for all men: “For the Lord had created all men, and had also redeemed all men; and, in the end, all men should have eternal life” (Alma 1:4). He advocated a paid ministry and introduced priestcraft among the Nephites. After slaying the elderly Gideon, he was executed, but not before he acknowledged the falsity of his teachings.

Korihor was the only person specifically referred to as “Anti-Christ” in the Book of Mormon. He also lived at the time of Alma the younger, and we read of him in Alma 30. He denied the existence of anything that could not be experienced with the physical senses. He advocated the law of the jungle (“every man conquered according to his strength; and whatsoever a man did was no crime”—Alma 30:17). He asked for a sign and was struck deaf and dumb. He blamed his apostasy on a deceptive vision in which Satan appeared to him in the form of an angel. Korihor appealed for removal of the sign but was denied. He was later trampled to death while begging for food in the land of the Zoramites.

We are never given Zoram’s lineage, though it is possible he descended from Laban’s servant of the same name. He, with his followers, had apostatized from Alma’s church of Christ.

1 Now it came to pass that after the end of Korihor, Alma having received tidings that the Zoramites were perverting the ways of the Lord, and that Zoram, who was their leader, was leading the hearts of the people to bow down to dumb idols, his heart again began to sicken because of the iniquity of the people.

verse 1 “leading the hearts of the people to bow down to dumb idols” What were the specific gods or idols the Zoramites worshiped? The answer is found in verse 24: gold, silver, and all manner of fine goods. Idol worship has been common in all ages of the world and is common today. Each idol worshiper creates his own idols from things of the world. The Lord said of people in our dispensation: “They seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness, but every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own god, whose image is in the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol” (D&C 1:16).

2 For it was the cause of great sorrow to Alma to know of iniquity among his people; therefore his heart was exceedingly sorrowful because of the separation of the Zoramites from the Nephites.

3 Now the Zoramites had gathered themselves together in a land which they called Antionum, which was east of the land of Zarahemla, which lay nearly bordering upon the seashore, which was south of the land of Jershon, which also bordered upon the wilderness south, which wilderness was full of the Lamanites.

verse 3 Each of the “which’s” in this verse refer to the land Antionum, except for the final “which.” It refers to the wilderness. It may seem difficult to visualize the relative location of this land. See the Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands.

4 Now the Nephites greatly feared that the Zoramites would enter into a correspondence with the Lamanites, and that it would be the means of great loss on the part of the Nephites.

verse 4 The “correspondence” spoken of here likely refers to a military treaty. While Alma sorrowed greatly because of the iniquity of the Zoramites, the possibility of their combining forces with the Lamanites against the Nephites was also an issue of national security. The Nephites’ fears were well-founded as we will later learn (see Alma 35:10; 43:4).

5 And now, as the preaching of the word had a great tendency to lead the people to do that which was just—yea, it had had more powerful effect upon the minds of the people than the sword, or anything else, which had happened unto them—therefore Alma thought it was expedient that they should try the virtue of the word of God.

verse 5 One of the grand themes of the entire book of Alma is that the preaching of the word of God is mightier than politics or the sword or intellectual logic and reasoning in establishing peace and goodness among a people. Indeed, the word of God is a most powerful influence in bringing people to the gospel and church of Jesus Christ. The reason is simple: The Spirit is committed to bear witness to those potentially responsive souls who hear the word of God preached to them and who seek to know the truth.

“it was expedient that they should try the virtue of the word of God” How might we define the word of God? It is simply all of the communication that passes from God to all the intelligences in his universe. This communication is initiated by God intentionally and for his good purposes. We are reminded again and again in scripture that God’s primary yearning for his creatures is that they return home to live with him forever in the celestial heaven following this mortal phase. And indeed, we gain the sense from the scriptures that it is a powerful yearning (Moses 1:39). There is nothing arbitrary about the information he makes available to us. His “word” is made available to us for a purpose. It is intended to bring us home to him if we will seek for it, come to truly understand it, and respond to it. Some other attributes of the word of God described in scripture include: It is the foundation for faith (Alma 5:11-13; Romans 10:17). It may lead one to Christ (Helaman 3:29-30). It heals the wounded soul (Jacob 2:8). It spiritually nourishes the soul (Moroni 6:4).

What type of information is included in the word of God? Into what categories might we divide this information, this communication? In simple fashion, and somewhat arbitrarily, we may separate his word to us into: (1) his commandments, his ongoing instructions and ministrations, and (2) his doctrines. His word is communicated to us through his prophets, and he intends that we have constant touch with his prophets while we are here on earth. This word may be passed along to us orally from living prophets or in written scripture, from prophets past. We must also include those communications that occur from God to us as individuals. These arrive via the influence of the Holy Ghost and are referred to as inspiration or revelation.

It is possible that a man may live out his mortal experience literally awash in the word of God, and yet not perceive even a particle of it and therefore not benefit from it. A man can take full advantage of the word of God only through the merciful intervention of the Spirit of God. It is only through the Spirit’s instrumentality that man may come to understand and realize the significance of God’s word. The primary purpose of the Holy Spirit is to render God’s word understandable and therefore influential to us here on earth. The Spirit’s ministrations are not available to us without cost. What must we pay? We must acknowledge the existence of the Spirit’s influence, seek for that influence, and live worthy of it through our striving to live the commandments of God. Then we must also labor diligently to acquire God’s word through scripture, through his prophets, and through other prayerful strivings and ponderings. Also, we must labor diligently to attune our life to his teachings.

And what is the virtue of the word of God? Virtue, in this context, is the beneficial effect, the enabling power—that which makes things happen. In short it is that quality of the word of God that brings us home to him. Considering the separate categories of the word of God, it is obvious how his commandments and his ongoing instructions and ministrations work in bringing us back to him. We must strive to obey him, and we must remain close to him so that we may receive his succor. This obedience brings to us vital spiritual growth during which he blesses us with incremental divine attributes—blessings given beyond that which we merit. We cannot successfully negotiate this mortal phase without his ongoing help. For further discussion of spiritual growth see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume one, chapters 7, Spiritual Growth—Gifts of the Spirit—and 8, The Blessings of Spiritual Gifts.

But what about his doctrines? Do they have power in our lives? Do they help bring us home to him? Do they have virtue? We may simply define God's doctrine as the way things are and the way things work in God's universe. In a broader sense, we may define God's doctrine as all of his teachings. In this sense doctrine is virtually identical to the word of God. In a more limited sense, doctrine is the truth about God. It is the concepts, the principles, the characteristics of God and all things surrounding him. Doctrine includes all of the characteristics of his plan of salvation. Doctrine includes the truths about all of the dynamics of God's universe—how things work, how they fit together, how they interact.

An oft-neglected characteristic of doctrine is its force and influence in our spiritual lives. A study of the doctrine, enriched and enabled by the Spirit of God, eventually brings one to marvel over the consistency, the logic, and the majesty of the doctrine. A persistent study of the doctrine leads, almost inevitably to a testimony of the truth of it all. Elder Boyd K. Packer taught: "True doctrine, understood, changes attitudes and behavior. The study of the doctrines of the gospel will improve behavior quicker than a study of behavior will improve behavior" (CR, October 1986, 20). In short, a study of true doctrine leads to conversion to the Lord Jesus Christ and his Church.

As Alma consider the approach he ought to utilize with the rebellious Zoram and his followers (and who would doubt that he discussed this approach with his missionary companion Amulek), the decision was made that they would try to bring the Zoramites to Christ through teaching them the doctrine. Alma hoped that hearing the doctrines might lead to the Zoramites' being nudged by the Spirit of the Holy Ghost and to their desiring to know more. For this purpose, Alma selected an elite team of missionaries to accompany him.

6 Therefore he took Ammon, and Aaron, and Omner; and Himni he did leave in the church in Zarahemla; but the former three he took with him, and also Amulek and Zeezrom, who were at Melek; and he also took two of his sons.

verse 6 It is interesting to note that this mission of Alma and company to the Zoramites took place about one year prior to Alma's supposed death.

7 Now the eldest of his sons he took not with him, and his name was Helaman; but the names of those whom he took with him were Shiblón and Corianton; and these are the names of those who went with him among the Zoramites, to preach unto them the word.

verse 7 “Corianton” It is of interest to learn that names that begin with “Co” or “Ko” are common in the Mayan language. There are other names in the Book of Mormon that begin with the same prefix: Cohor, Korihor, and Coriantumr.

8 Now the Zoramites were dissenters from the Nephites; therefore they had had the word of God preached unto them.

9 But they had fallen into great errors, for they would not observe to keep the commandments of God, and his statutes, according to the law of Moses.

verse 9 We already know that the Nephites offered sacrifices and kept the law of Moses. We often equate the offering of sacrifices with the law of Moses, but did not Adam and Abraham offer sacrifices? Could it be that the offering of sacrifices is a part of the fulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ? A statement of Elder Bruce R. McConkie is interesting in this regard: “We cannot always tell . . . whether specific sacrificial rites performed in Israel were part of the Mosaic system or whether they were the same ordinances performed by Adam and Abraham as part of the gospel law itself.” Speaking of the Nephites, Elder McConkie continued: “Since they held the Melchizedek priesthood and there were no Levites among them, we suppose their sacrifices were those that antedated the ministry of Moses and that, since they had the fulness of the gospel itself, they kept the law of Moses [only] in the sense that they conformed to its myriad moral principles and its endless ethical restrictions” (Promised Messiah, 427). If sacrifices are a part of the fulness of the gospel, why do we not offer them today? We do indeed live the law of sacrifice, as anyone who has made sacred covenants in the temple can attest.

10 Neither would they observe the performances of the church, to continue in prayer and supplication to God daily, that they might not enter into temptation.

verse 10 “the performances of the church” We may interpret the word “performances” as the commanded behaviors or rituals.

11 Yea, in fine, they did pervert the ways of the Lord in very many instances; therefore, for this cause, Alma and his brethren went into the land to preach the word unto them.

verse 11 To “pervert” is to distort, corrupt or lead astray.

verses 12-23 The Zoramite ritual described in these verses is uncharacteristic of people with a Hebrew origin. Perhaps this is further evidence of influence from other indigenous cultures among whom the Zoramites may have intermarried (see also the commentary for Jarom 1:6).

Rodney Turner has described the religion of the Zoramites as, “false, superficial, undemanding, impotent, and Christless.” He has also observed: “The religion of the ancient Zoramites in the Book of Mormon is paralleled by much of the religion practiced in our modern world. . . . Consequently, the message of God’s prophets to that misguided people is as relevant now as it was over two thousand years ago. . . . While religious illusions [such as those held by the Zoramites and their modern-day counterparts] may serve us in time, they will fail us in eternity” (Studies in Scripture, Volume eight, Alma 30 to Moroni, 16).

12 Now, when they had come into the land, behold, to their astonishment they found that the Zoramites had built synagogues, and that they did gather themselves together on one day of the week, which day they did call the day of the Lord; and they did worship after a manner which Alma and his brethren had never beheld;

verse 12 “they found that the Zoramites had built synagogues, and that they did gather themselves together” Synagogues in the Book of Mormon are simply places of worship. The English word synagogue consists of a prefix and a root. The prefix syn means together. The root ago is a verb which means to gather or to bring together. It is interesting to note that in this verse the phrase “gather themselves together” appears in close association with the term “synagogue.”

The Zoramites seem to have been a relatively sophisticated and enterprising group who had moved into this land and probably had taken over from other less sophisticated inhabitants (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 542-44).

13 For they had a place built up in the center of their synagogue, a place for standing, which was high above the head, and the top thereof would only admit one person.

14 Therefore, whosoever desired to worship must go forth and stand upon the top thereof, and stretch forth his hands towards heaven, and cry with a loud voice, saying:

15 Holy, holy God; we believe that thou art God, and we believe that thou art holy, and that thou wast a spirit, and that thou art a spirit, and that thou wilt be a spirit forever.

verse 15 “thou wilt be a spirit forever” Here is evidence of their antichrist and false beliefs. They did not believe the teachings of the prophets—that God would condescend to come to earth and minister among men.

16 Holy God, we believe that thou hast separated us from our brethren; and we do not believe in the tradition of our brethren, which was handed down to them by the childishness of their fathers; but we believe that thou hast elected us to be thy holy children; and also thou hast made it known unto us that there shall be no Christ.

17 But thou art the same yesterday, today, and forever; and thou hast elected us that we shall be saved, whilst all around us are elected to be cast by thy wrath down to hell; for the which holiness, O God, we thank thee; and we also thank thee that thou hast elected us, that we may not be led away after the foolish traditions of our brethren, which doth bind them down to a belief of Christ, which doth lead their hearts to wander far from thee, our God.

verse 17 “thou hast elected us that we shall be saved” For a discussion of the true doctrine of election, see the commentary for Helaman 10:4-7 and also Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 16, Calling and Election Made Sure.

This doctrine sounds a note that is all too familiar in the religious world today. The teachings of historical Christianity, such as that accepted by the Protestants (Evangelicals), is just that. They maintain that once an individual has confessed Christ, he is saved in heaven forever (see the three chapters in the section titled Salvation in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 4).

18 And again we thank thee, O God, that we are a chosen and a holy people. Amen.

verses 16-18 The Zoramites believed that God had singled them out for special blessings and spiritual insights. They were more blessed than their former Nephite brethren. Does this sound familiar? Do the Zoramites have any modern-day counterparts? How about some of the fundamentalist apostate groups who have separated themselves from the LDS Church. Some of them feel that they are privileged to know a “higher law” or “higher doctrine” than those who are committed to the Church.

For further discussion of what it really means to be a chosen people, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:19-20.

19 Now it came to pass that after Alma and his brethren and his sons had heard these prayers, they were astonished beyond all measure.

20 For behold, every man did go forth and offer up these same prayers.

21 Now the place was called by them Rameumptom, which, being interpreted, is the holy stand.

verse 21 The Rameumptom apparently was a type of praying stand at the top of a stairway. This design is suggestive of the standard motif of the ancient Central American ceremonial centers, the tall towers or pyramids with their steep stairways (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 542-44).

22 Now, from this stand they did offer up, every man, the selfsame prayer unto God, thanking their God that they were chosen of him, and that he did not lead them away after the tradition of their brethren, and that their hearts were not stolen away to believe in things to come, which they knew nothing about.

verse 22 Selfsame means the very same; identical.

“things to come, which they knew nothing about” The Zoramites denied the reality of prophecy.

23 Now, after the people had all offered up thanks after this manner, they returned to their homes, never speaking of their God again until they had assembled themselves together again to the holy stand, to offer up thanks after their manner.

verse 23 Rodney Turner wrote of the Zoramites' almost comical form of worship:

Their choral exercise in vanity sufficed to appease their God and permitted them to freely indulge themselves. Having been predestined to holiness and salvation, they had no need for daily prayer or obedience to restrictive commandments. The issue of life after death had been fully and happily settled; they could get on with the things of this world. Such is the underlying assumption of every 'Sunday religion.' It renders God a practical irrelevance. He exists, but he need not be taken too seriously. [These] false doctrines . . . were both predictive and representative of those apostate religious beliefs—Christian and non-Christian—that shroud the world in spiritual darkness in these latter days (Studies in Scripture, Volume Eight, Alma 30 to Moroni 18-19).

24 Now when Alma saw this his heart was grieved; for he saw that they were a wicked and a perverse people; yea, he saw that their hearts were set upon gold, and upon silver, and upon all manner of fine goods.

25 Yea, and he also saw that their hearts were lifted up unto great boasting, in their pride.

verses 26, 30-35 Alma knew this all-star group of missionaries would need the strength of the Lord to aid them in their mission. So all nine missionaries gathered together, and Alma, no doubt acting in his role as high priest, prayed to the Lord, invoked the Lord's name ten times (Alma 31:26, 30–35) (This observation is made and commented on in John W. Welch, “Counting to Ten,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 12, no. 2, 2003): 53–55. O Lord occurs in Alma 31:26, 30 [2x], 31 [2x], 32 [2x], 34, 35 [2]).

According to Rachel Eilior, professor of Jewish philosophy, the Jewish oral traditions in the Mishneh describe “the Day of Atonement service in detail, counting ten occasions on which the Ineffable Name was pronounced” by the high priest (Rachel Eilior, “Early Forms of Jewish Mysticism,” in The Cambridge History of Judaism, Volume Four: The Roman-Rabbinic Period, ed. Steven T. Katz, New York, NY: Cambridge University Press, 2006, 778, cf. p. 781). Significantly, “The Ineffable Name was enunciated during the confession in the formula ‘O the Name,’ and when High Priest prayed for atonement, the Name was said in the formula of an oath or invocation: ‘O by the Name . . . atone, I pray you . . .’” (Elior, “Early Forms of Jewish Mysticism,” 778. Elior quoted the High Priest’s prayer from Yoma 6.2 more fully on the same page: “And thus he used to say: O the Name . . . Thy people, the House of Israel, have committed iniquity, transgressed and sinned before Thee. O by the Name, atone, I pray you, for the iniquities and transgressions and sins.”).

This is reminiscent of Alma’s formulaic repetition of “O Lord,” followed variously by declarations of the people’s sins and wickedness and petitions for strength in Christ, through whom atonement comes. For instance, Alma prayed, “O Lord God, how long wilt thou suffer that such wickedness and infidelity shall be among this people? O Lord, wilt thou give me strength, that I may bear with mine infirmities. For I am infirm, and such wickedness among this people doth pain my soul” (Alma 31:30, emphasis added).

Alma shifted in terminology from O Lord to O God in verses 27-28 while describing the Zoramite worship practices, attesting to the intentionality of Alma’s tenfold repetition of O Lord in his high priestly prayer. John W. Welch reasoned that Alma consciously shifted terminology to avoid profaning the sacred name while describing apostate practices (John W. Welch, “Counting to Ten,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 12, no. 2, 2003: 54). Moreover, “that shift is marked by the second occurrence of O Lord, which is the only instance of the expanded O Lord God in this text, indicating that the Lord Jehovah is indeed the true God” (Ibid.).

When he was finished, Alma “clapped his hands upon all them who were with him . . . [and] they were filled with the Holy Spirit” (Alma 31:36). BYU religion professor Alonzo Gaskill explained, “The laying on of hands is the standard symbol in antiquity for the transference of power, authority, or blessings,” and hence, “Alma’s act here . . . [was] an act that equipped his eight brethren for their work” (Alonzo Gaskill, Miracles of the Book of Mormon: A Guide to the Symbolic Messages, Springville, UT: Cedar Fort, 2015, 254).

Alma and his companions were in a desperate situation: they needed to restore cohesion to the Nephite polity (form or system of government) through gospel conversion, or risk war. Under these circumstances, his repetition of the Lord’s name ten times likely reflects his urgency to bring down the power of God upon him and his companions. For ancient Israelites, the number ten symbolized perfection or completion (Welch, “Counting to Ten,” 44–45). By calling on the Lord’s name ten times, Alma called upon His perfect power to aid them in their mission.

Alma’s prayer also sought to calm and comfort his fellow missionaries at that desperate time. “O Lord, wilt thou comfort my soul, and . . . also my fellow laborers who are with me . . . yea, even all these wilt thou comfort, O Lord. Yea, wilt thou comfort their souls in Christ” (Alma 31:32). By invoking the name of the Lord ten times, Alma probably hoped to remind them of the Day of Atonement, and the recently passed jubilee year and the associated joy and peace that followed (see the commentary for Alma 29:1). On the Day of Atonement, Alma and his companions, along with the rest of the Nephites, would have renewed covenants and remembered the Atonement of Christ. Not only would this calmly reassure them of God’s promises, it would make them eager to bring those same blessings and covenants to the Zoramites (see Alma 31:34). With everyone being one with God, all can then be united or reunited, with each other. Most importantly, the atoning reconciliation with God would remind all of them that the souls of the Zoramites were precious to God, and thus should be equally precious to them (verse 35).

26 And he lifted up his voice to heaven, and cried, saying: O, how long, O Lord, wilt thou suffer that thy servants shall dwell here below in the flesh, to behold such gross wickedness among the children of men?

27 Behold, O God, they cry unto thee, and yet their hearts are swallowed up in their pride. Behold, O God, they cry unto thee with their mouths, while they are puffed up, even to greatness, with the vain things of the world.

28 Behold, O my God, their costly apparel, and their ringlets, and their bracelets, and their ornaments of gold, and all their precious things which they are ornamented with; and behold, their hearts are set upon them, and yet they cry unto thee and say—We thank thee, O God, for we are a chosen people unto thee, while others shall perish.

verses 24-28 See the discussion on idolatry in the commentary for Omni 1:20.

29 Yea, and they say that thou hast made it known unto them that there shall be no Christ.

30 O Lord God, how long wilt thou suffer that such wickedness and infidelity shall be among this people? O Lord, wilt thou give me strength, that I may bear with mine infirmities. For I am infirm, and such wickedness among this people doth pain my soul.

verse 30 Alma is certainly disgusted and spiritually tormented by the wickedness of the Zoramites. Might there be a suggestion here also that his physical health is not good?

31 O Lord, my heart is exceedingly sorrowful; wilt thou comfort my soul in Christ. O Lord, wilt thou grant unto me that I may have strength, that I may suffer with patience these afflictions which shall come upon me, because of the iniquity of this people.

verse 31 “comfort my soul in Christ” There is considerable comfort available to us who are struggling here in mortality. It comes from Christ and may be experienced by those who know and love him through the mediation of the Holy Ghost.

32 O Lord, wilt thou comfort my soul, and give unto me success, and also my fellow laborers who are with me—yea, Ammon, and Aaron, and Omner, and also Amulek and Zeezrom and also my two sons—yea, even all these wilt thou comfort, O Lord. Yea, wilt thou comfort their souls in Christ.

33 Wilt thou grant unto them that they may have strength, that they may bear their afflictions which shall come upon them because of the iniquities of this people.

verses 31-33 Alma apparently anticipates ridicule, scorn, rejection, and even persecution as the group proselytes among the Zoramites. We sense that Alma is not certain he personally can tolerate it, perhaps because of his physical condition.

34 O Lord, wilt thou grant unto us that we may have success in bringing them again unto thee in Christ.

35 Behold, O Lord, their souls are precious, and many of them are our brethren; therefore, give unto us, O Lord, power and wisdom that we may bring these, our brethren, again unto thee.

verse 35 “their souls are precious” Just exactly why is the worth of souls so great? Not only does each soul have infinite potential, but each has been bought with an infinite price (1 Corinthians 6:19-20), even “the precious blood of Christ” (1 Peter 1:19). Having offered these explanations, we must remind ourselves that human logic seems to fall short in trying to explain the love the Father and the Son have for each of us.

“many of them are our brethren” (emphasis mine) We know that the Zoramites are dissenters from the Nephites (see verse 8). Apparently the “brethren” Alma is referring to are those former Nephites who are of Nephite, Lamanite, or Mulekite ancestry. People in these three categories are typically referred to in the text of the Book of Mormon as “brethren” (Mosiah 1:5; 7:2,13; Alma 24:7-8). We may well wonder about those living among the Zoramites who are not considered their “brethren.” Again, it is likely that when the Zoramites first settled this land, they took over from former indigenous inhabitants.

36 Now it came to pass that when Alma had said these words, that he clapped his hands upon all them who were with him. And behold, as he clapped his hands upon them, they were filled with the Holy Spirit.

verse 36 “he clapped his hands upon all them who were with him” This phrase implies some type of physical ordinance, perhaps involving the striking of his hands together, by which Alma set his brethren apart to their callings and bestowed upon them the Holy Spirit. An alternate explanation is that clapped is an alternative form of thrust or placed his hands upon the heads of his co-workers and set them apart for their missionary labor.

37 And after that they did separate themselves one from another, taking no thought for themselves what they should eat, or what they should drink, or what they should put on.

38 And the Lord provided for them that they should hunger not, neither should they thirst; yea, and he also gave them strength, that they should suffer no manner of afflictions, save it were swallowed up in the joy of Christ. Now this was according to the prayer of Alma; and this because he prayed in faith.

verse 38 “he also gave them strength, that they should suffer no manner of afflictions, save it were swallowed up in the joy of Christ” We will all suffer afflictions in mortality, but we hope, as Elder Neil A. Maxwell phrased it, that, “the sour notes are lost amid a symphony of salvational sounds” (Not Thy Will, but Thine, 119).

Scripture Mastery

Alma 32 Alma's Lecture to the Zoramites on Faith

Alma 32:21 Alma's lecture on faith: Faith is not to have a perfect knowledge of things.

Alma 32:27-29 Awake and arouse your faculties, even to an experiment upon my words.

This chapter contains a discourse delivered to the Zoramites by the prophet Alma on the principle of faith. The scriptures that contain this oft-discussed principle can sometimes be confusing. This is perhaps because more than one concept in scripture is referred to as faith. Two of these concepts are fundamental and vital. There is even a third concept. Though this third concept is important, it is less commonly referenced than the other two. For a review of these separate concepts of faith, the reader is urged to read and study the following three chapters in volume 1 of Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine before commencing your study of Alma 32: (1) chapter 9, Revealed Faith, (2) chapter 10, Deliberate Faith and Revealed Faith, and (3) chapter 11, Other Notes on Faith. The background afforded by these three chapters is essential if one is to fully understand and learn from Alma 32.

There exist a few "givens" necessary to our acquisition of faith. These include: (1) Understand that God wants you to believe on his word and act on his word (verse 22). (2) The candidate must be humble (verse 6), that is, he must suspend judgment and be teachable. (3) God will provide each of us access to spiritual truth regardless of our station in life (verse 23). (4) One cannot know with certainty at first (verse 26).

1 And it came to pass that they did go forth, and began to preach the word of God unto the people, entering into their synagogues, and into their houses; yea, and even they did preach the word in their streets.

verse 1 "began to preach the word of God unto the people" Basic to the process of acquiring and exercising faith is hearing the word of God (the commandments), being impacted by it to some degree, and acting on it (obeying).

2 And it came to pass that after much labor among them, they began to have success among the poor class of people; for behold, they were cast out of the synagogues because of the coarseness of their apparel—verse 2 "they were cast out of the synagogues because of the coarseness of their apparel" The poor among the Zoramites were not welcomed in churches of the more affluent Zoramites. Dr. Hugh Nibley, with an evident twinkle in his eye, wrote of the Zoramites:

Now these Zoramites had their virtues as well as their vices, as every society does if it is to survive for a month or more. They were strong-minded, independent people who went off to found their own nation and in so doing showed themselves exceedingly enterprising and industrious. A disciplined people, they turned out the ablest military officers that Moroni ever had to contend with (Alma 43:6, 44; 48:5). Enjoying great prosperity, they were strict in their religious observances, giving fulsome [excessive or insincere] thanks to God for his goodness in fervid [enthusiastic or glowing] personal testimonies every week, and preserving an atmosphere of high respectability with unswerving adherence to proper dress standards (Alma 32:2) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 344-45, italics mine).

3 Therefore they were not permitted to enter into their synagogues to worship God, being esteemed as filthiness; therefore they were poor; yea, they were esteemed by their brethren as dross; therefore they were poor as to things of the world; and also they were poor in heart.

verse 3 “They” refers to the poor Zoramites. “Dross” (Dr-aw-s) is waste matter; refuse; any worthless matter separated from the better part.

4 Now, as Alma was teaching and speaking unto the people upon the hill Onidah, there came a great multitude unto him, who were those of whom we have been speaking, of whom were poor in heart, because of their poverty as to the things of the world.

verses 3-4 “poor in heart” The phrase “poor in spirit” found in Matthew 5:3 appears to mean humble and spiritually full. Nevertheless, the phrase “poor in heart,” in this context, means depressed and spiritually impoverished.

5 And they came unto Alma; and the one who was the foremost among them said unto him: Behold, what shall these my brethren do, for they are despised of all men because of their poverty, yea, and more especially by our priests; for they have cast us out of our synagogues which we have labored abundantly to build with our own hands; and they have cast us out because of our exceeding poverty; and we have no place to worship our God; and behold, what shall we do?

6 And now when Alma heard this, he turned him about, his face immediately towards him, and he beheld with great joy; for he beheld that their afflictions had truly humbled them and that they were in a preparation to hear the word.

verse 6 “he turned him about” It is difficult to know clearly the referents of these two pronouns. We do know that Alma was speaking with the “one who was the foremost [poor Zoramite] among” the others. It seems likely that as Alma was addressing “the people upon the hill Onidah, the multitude of poor Zoramites approached from a direction different than Alma was facing. Thus, as this spokesman spoke to Alma, they apparently were initially not standing face to face. The “he” seems most likely to refer to Alma. Alma turned himself about to face the spokesman. Alma was able to discern that this spokesman, whose demeanor was representative of that of the poor multitude that had just approached, was truly humble because of the afflictions he had undergone.

Humility is a vital pre-requisite to acquiring faith and, indeed, a pre-requisite to making any spiritual progress. What exactly is humility? As with other eternal principles, humility has a temporal definition as well as an eternal one. In a worldly sense, humility means teachable, coachable, willing to consider alternate ideas, and willing to change. The eternal attribute of humility is all of this and more. It may be acquired only by personal revelation. It is a gift of the Spirit. It is the ability to perceive oneself in an eternal perspective—as a child of God who desires above all else to return to his rightful eternal home. It includes a realization of the critical dangers and pitfalls along the way—a realization that you are utterly lost without a Redeemer and a profound gratitude for the Savior’s unspeakable suffering and love. The individual with this richer form of humility is willing to alter his behavior, indeed to repent, in any way necessary to accomplish his goal.

At this early stage, perhaps these poor Zoramites had mostly achieved the worldly variant of humility. How does one progress from humility as the world defines it to its eternal counterpart? By putting the word of God to the test or “experimenting upon the word.” No gift of the Spirit comes without diligent striving—without deliberate and diligent obedience. This includes assiduously seeking to learn of Christ and his atoning death through study and through prayer and then a deliberate and unswerving obedience to his commandments.

The opposite of humility is pride. We may define pride as the absence of responsiveness to the Spirit of God and a virtually total captivity by influences of the world. The proud are “natural men” unaffected by the Spirit. They are inevitably caught up in the world’s definition of themselves. The worldly influences upon them are all-consuming. Indeed, there appear to be no other pertinent or effective influences, other than worldly ones, active in their lives. They see themselves purely as the world defines them. They also see themselves in competition with all others in pursuit of the world’s “limited” prizes. The scarcity mentality dominates their thinking. They desire the things of the world, and they do not want to wait. They want them now. They are willing to compete with their fellow human beings for them. Eternal considerations are not only unimportant but silly, naïve, and a waste of time. “The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned” (1 Corinthians 2:14).

7 Therefore he did say no more to the other multitude; but he stretched forth his hand, and cried unto those whom he beheld, who were truly penitent, and said unto them:

verse 7 Alma then turned away from the crowd of more wealthy Zoramites. He perceived them as being beyond spiritual repair. He turned his attentions to the poor and penitent Zoramites.

8 I behold that ye are lowly in heart; and if so, blessed are ye.

9 Behold thy brother hath said, What shall we do?—for we are cast out of our synagogues, that we cannot worship our God.

verse 9 “thy brother” This phrase refers to the spokesman of the multitude of poor Zoramites mentioned in verse 5. He was humble enough to plead for spiritual counsel on behalf of the group.

10 Behold I say unto you, do ye suppose that ye cannot worship God save it be in your synagogues only?

verse 10 Alma implies that true worship and seeking after truth is an inward quest and has less to do with outward ritual. Even in the Church today there is some danger of coming to measure our success largely by the accomplishment of goals; by the completion of our assignments and obligations; or by those behaviors that manifest our obedience. The true measure of a man’s success in spiritual matters is the feelings, insights, and longings of his heart.

11 Moreover, I would ask, do ye suppose that ye must not worship God only once in a week?

verse 11 “ye must not worship God only once in a week” Alma is saying, “Do you believe you should only worship God once a week?”

verses 12-16 There is a tendency for success in worldly matters to lead to a damning self-satisfaction. The man with abundant worldly possessions is often content with his worldly success and disinclined to seek for life’s higher meaning. He is happy to rest comfortably in his own self-sufficiency. We may say he has become proud (see the definitions of humility and pride in the commentary for verse 6). The apostle Paul wrote: “Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty” (1 Corinthians 1:26-27).

Is the poor man who has few material possessions and acquisitions more inclined to seek for eternal meaning in life? Perhaps some are more inclined, almost as if by default—they have failed to find satisfaction in other areas of their lives. Certainly, there are many among the poor, however, who come to hunger even more for worldly satisfactions because of their deprivation and poverty. Their humility may be squelched by their resentment of those with more abundant means.

There is an unmistakable implication in these verses that the man who is inclined to seek for eternal meaning regardless of his worldly circumstances is particularly blessed. These choice individuals may be found among the world's poor or among the wealthy or anywhere in between (see verse 25).

12 I say unto you, it is well that ye are cast out of your synagogues, that ye may be humble, and that ye may learn wisdom; for it is necessary that ye should learn wisdom; for it is because that ye are cast out, that ye are despised of your brethren because of your exceeding poverty, that ye are brought to a lowliness of heart; for ye are necessarily brought to be humble.

verse 12 Just what is the “wisdom” these poor Zoramites had learned through being cast out of their synagogues? Wisdom may be defined as a true eternal perspective and priorities that accord with that perspective. To repeat, it is the ability to prioritize, from a true eternal perspective. It is the ability to clearly separate what is important from those things of lesser importance. Obviously, this form of wisdom is not the same as the secular form of wisdom. This spiritual wisdom must be earned as incremental gifts of the Spirit by obedience to gospel laws.

These poor Zoramites had likely learned that they are vulnerable and not completely self-sufficient. They, and indeed we all, are utterly dependent, in some ways, upon someone else. After being taught the gospel, they will learn that it is Jesus Christ upon whom they are ultimately dependent for their eventual salvation.

Certainly there exists an apostate form of wisdom. What is it? It is most certainly intellectualism. Intellectualism is the vigorous seeking after secular knowledge while disavowing the existence of spiritual knowledge.

13 And now, because ye are compelled to be humble blessed are ye; for a man sometimes, if he is compelled to be humble, seeketh repentance; and now surely, whosoever repenteth shall find mercy; and he that findeth mercy and endureth to the end the same shall be saved.

verse 13 “sometimes” Alma will teach in this and the following verse that only some of those who are compelled to be humble will seek repentance. Most blessed is he who recognizes—independent of his circumstances—the necessity of repentance after being taught the gospel.

“whosoever repenteth shall find mercy” Here is a reminder that the mercy of God is not extended unconditionally to the unrepentant.

14 And now, as I said unto you, that because ye were compelled to be humble ye were blessed, do ye not suppose that they are more blessed who truly humble themselves because of the word?

15 Yea, he that truly humbleth himself, and repenteth of his sins, and endureth to the end, the same shall be blessed—yea, much more blessed than they who are compelled to be humble because of their exceeding poverty.

verses 14-15 To reiterate: there is potential virtue in poverty, as it sometimes leads to spiritual responsiveness. A higher form of responsiveness or humility is independent of one's socioeconomic status. It is to hear the word of God and be so moved by the word itself that one is humbled to the point of obedience.

16 Therefore, blessed are they who humble themselves without being compelled to be humble; or rather, in other words, blessed is he that believeth in the word of God, and is baptized without stubbornness of heart, yea, without being brought to know the word, or even compelled to know, before they will believe.

verse 16 “blessed are they who humble themselves without being compelled to be humble” Can a person really be forced or compelled to be humble or to submit to God's will? God would never, nor could he ever, force a person against his will. This phrase, by implication, cautions the individual who will only submit to God's will after repeated reminders of his need for help in obtaining relief of afflictions, adversities, and deprivations. It is more desirable to act rather than be acted upon—to be proactive—in one's obedience to gospel law than to be compelled by circumstances.

How would you define “stubbornness of heart”? It is an inability or an unwillingness to respond to the promptings of the Spirit. Some level of responsiveness to the Spirit's promptings is universally available—potentially at least—to all in the form of the spirit or light of Christ (Moroni 7:16, D&C 93:2). For a more thorough discussion of this concept, see “The Spirit or Light of Christ” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 5, The Holy Ghost.

There are certainly gradations or degrees of “stubbornness.” Consider, in this context, the resurrected Savior's counsel to the Nephites gathered at the temple in Bountiful: “Blessed are ye if ye shall believe in me and be baptized, after that ye have seen me and know that I am. And again, more blessed are they who shall believe in your words because that ye shall testify that ye have seen me, and that ye know that I am” (3 Nephi 12:1-2). It would seem that some individuals have the gift to believe, while others need evidence, clues, and inducements to believe because they are by nature stubborn in their skepticism. Evidence, logic, and some spiritual intuition all have a role in the testimonies of each and every one of us.

17 Yea, there are many who do say: If thou wilt show unto us a sign from heaven, then we shall know of a surety; then we shall believe.

verse 17 Rodney Turner wrote: “The sign-seekers, the God-tempters presume to put the Almighty on trial by challenging him to prove his own existence. . . In their pride, the Korihors of this world set up the preconditions under which they may condescend to believe. But it is all a sham; their insistence on signs is not meant to foster faith but to justify doubt” (Studies in Scripture, Volume Eight, Alma 30 to Moroni, 21).

Sign seekers are the prototypical “natural men.” A good example of sign seekers is found in the New Testament Jews and Greeks. Paul wrote: “For the Jews require a sign, and Greeks seek after wisdom; but we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling block, and unto the Greeks foolishness” (1 Corinthians 1:22-23). Adam Clarke explained:

There never was a people in the universe more difficult to be persuaded of the truth than the Jews: and had not their religion been incontestably proved by the most striking and indubitable miracles, they never would have received it. This slowness of heart to believe, added to their fear of being deceived, induced them to require miracles to attest to every thing that professed to come from God. They were a wicked and adulterous generation, continually seeking signs, and never saying, “It is enough.” They looked for a Messiah who came in the person of a conquering military hero, and they did not respond to the lowly Jesus of Nazareth. The Greeks also, “could not believe that proclaiming supreme happiness through a man that was crucified at Judea as a malefactor could ever comport with reason and common sense; for both the matter and manner of the preaching were opposite to every notion they had formed of what was dignified and philosophic. . . Thus Christ crucified was to the Jews a stumbling block, and to the Greeks foolishness (Clarke’s New Testament Commentary, 2:195).

18 Now I ask, is this faith? Behold, I say unto you, Nay; for if a man knoweth a thing he hath no cause to believe, for he knoweth it.

verse 18 “he hath no cause to believe” The type of belief here is that type of belief that is not available to physical confirmation.

Alma teaches that experiencing a phenomenon with one’s physical senses causes the individual to “know” or have a secular or physical knowledge of that phenomenon. This type of knowledge eliminates the need for unsubstantiated belief. If one acts according to a phenomenon that has been confirmed by physical senses, then there is no faith involved. If a man sees a rake in his driveway, he will step over it to avoid tripping and falling. His stepping over the rake involves no faith—he does not exercise his faith.

19 And now, how much more cursed is he that knoweth the will of God and doeth it not, than he that only believeth, or only hath cause to believe, and falleth into transgression?

verse 19 Now Alma shifts gears and speaks of knowing and believing spiritual truths. He distinguishes between “knowing” and “believing” spiritual truths. Belief, as mentioned here, fits into the category of so called “whispered testimonies.” These are those subtle inclinations to believe resulting from the spirit of Christ. They are testimonies—spoken or written—by the Lord’s servants, or the non-verbal testimonies resulting from observing God’s handiwork. These are universally available prompters for all to obey.

Alma implies here that it is possible to “know”—not just believe—spiritual truths such as the will of God. And indeed, it is. If one acts on this type of belief—that is, if one repeatedly obeys a principle of which he is no physical proof but only a spiritual whispering, then that principle will begin to be revealed to him, and he will then—incrementally over time—begin to “know” the spiritual truth. The initial obedient action based on this type of belief is, by definition, manifesting one’s faith. We may call this type of faith “deliberate faith.” The spiritual “knowledge” that results is yet another type of faith we may refer to as “revealed faith.”

Here, Alma is making the point that he who knows God’s will (he has had the principle revealed to him by virtue of his having exercised his deliberate faith) is under greater condemnation if he fails to obey than he who only in the stage of unsubstantiated “belief” See “Belief or Hope” in volume 1, chapter 10, Deliberate Faith and Revealed Faith in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine. To reiterate, the individual who “knows” a spiritual truth has had that truth revealed to his soul as a consequence of his deliberate obedience to the word of God.

20 Now of this thing ye must judge. Behold, I say unto you, that it is on the one hand even as it is on the other; and it shall be unto every man according to his work.

verse 20 “it is on the one hand even as it is on the other” We might interpret this phrase as follows: With the Lord, all things are done in perfect fairness. Each man is judged based on what level of spiritual knowledge he possesses. The man’s behaviors or “works” will inevitably be determined by what he truly knows in his heart. He will be judged according to who he truly is—by the “desires of his heart” (Alma 29:4).

21 And now as I said concerning faith—faith is not to have a perfect knowledge of things; therefore if ye have faith ye hope for things which are not seen, which are true.

verse 21 We must keep in mind that faith is an action word. It is the deliberate doing—the deliberate obeying—when all we have is a spiritual inkling, an unsubstantiated belief and hope that we’re doing the right thing. This verse outlines the basic conditions in which a person may manifest faith. They have an imperfect knowledge (an unsubstantiated belief) in that they believe in and hope for things that they have not seen. But that imperfect knowledge and hope is not by itself faith. It is the precursor to faith. It creates the setting in which deliberate faith will begin to produce revealed faith.

The reader will note that this verse is incomplete, in that it does not mention the actual manifestation of faith, the deliberate obeying of the pertinent spiritual truth or principle. This is the basic form of faith, the “deliberate faith.” Again, see the three chapters referenced above that discuss the concept of faith. This type of faith is deliberately obeying when the individual is motivated only by an imperfect and subtle knowledge and subtle hope he is doing the right thing. This deliberate obedience is the very power that enables the process of spiritual growth to occur. The individual who is able to manifest this faith, that is, deliberately obey the commandments, may or may not possess much of a belief, expectation, or hope that his actions will lead to a spiritual conviction. He may have only a faint desire to believe, a faint hope that the word of God he has heard is true. The essence of this fundamental form of faith is his deliberate obedience. It is his action. Hence, this type of faith is, indeed, an action word.

The individual’s subtle inclination and expectations are referred to here as his “belief” or his “hope.” This should not be confused with the spiritual gift of hope. This latter “hope” is a gift received by those who have already exercised their deliberate faith and have begun to receive revealed faith in the form of the spiritual gift of reassurance that they are on the path toward their celestial salvation.

The expectation—the “belief” or “hope”—spoken of in this verse might even contain an element of honest doubt since it is not a sure knowledge. This doubt does not negate the beneficial and motivating force of this hope. Truman Madsen once reported a statement by Hugh B. Brown: “No one has ever had an authentic assurance unless he has served an apprenticeship in doubt” (Interview with Jerry Johnston, Deseret News, November 1989).

Elder Boyd K. Packer wrote: “Faith, to be faith, must go beyond that for which there is confirming evidence. Faith, to be faith, must go into the unknown. Faith, to be faith, must walk to the edge of the light, and then a few steps into the darkness” (Faith, 40-44). The actual faith is the deliberate walking into the darkness.

This verse is also a reminder that exercising deliberate faith is only an exercise of true faith if it based on “belief” or “hope” in things “which are true.” Acting according to a belief in false concepts is hardly true faith.

Now we are ready to truly understand this verse.

“faith is not to have a perfect knowledge of things” The setting in which deliberate faith (deliberate obedience) may be productively manifest is when you have an inkling or subtle belief in a true principle but not a perfect knowledge of that principle. This subtle and imperfect knowledge of things is not, by itself faith. Rather, it is the setting in which deliberate obedience—deliberate faith—may be productively manifest.

“if ye have faith ye hope for things which are not seen, which are true” If you are manifesting deliberate faith (deliberate obedience), then you have a subtle belief or hope in true principles you do not know for certain. Again, the deliberate faith is not the subtle hope for things which are not seen. The deliberate faith is the action of deliberate obedience.

22 And now, behold, I say unto you, and I would that ye should remember, that God is merciful unto all who believe on his name; therefore he desireth, in the first place, that ye should believe, yea, even on his word.

verse 22 “God is merciful unto all who believe on his name” The Lord wants you home. The only way you can return home is to act on your whispered testimonies—your subtle beliefs and hopes—and exercise deliberate faith by deliberately obeying the Lord’s commands. Then he will deal mercifully with you and reveal to you gifts of the Spirit over and above those you actually deserve. These gifts of the Spirit become your revealed faith and produce fundamental changes in your heart, your priorities, and your inclination to obey in the future.

23 And now, he imparteth his word by angels unto men, yea, not only men but women also. Now this is not all; little children do have words given unto them many times which confound the wise and the learned.

verse 23 The word of God—the “rules and regulations” for spiritual growth and returning to your celestial home—are available to all of God’s children young and old, male and female.

24 And now, my beloved brethren, as ye have desired to know of me what ye shall do because ye are afflicted and cast out—now I do not desire that ye should suppose that I mean to judge you only according to that which is true—verse 24 “I do not desire that ye should suppose that I mean to judge you only according to that which is true” Alma seems to say, “Please understand that I am not passing judgment on you because of your obvious situations of poverty (their living in poverty is “that which is true”). I am not impugning the value of your inclinations toward repentance because you are poor.”

25 For I do not mean that ye all of you have been compelled to humble yourselves; for I verily believe that there are some among you who would humble themselves, let them be in whatsoever circumstances they might.

verse 25 Alma says, “I know some of you would be humble and teachable regardless of your economic circumstances—even if you were people of means.”

26 Now, as I said concerning faith—that it was not a perfect knowledge—even so it is with my words. Ye cannot know of their surety at first, unto perfection, any more than faith is a perfect knowledge.

verse 26 “[faith] was not a perfect knowledge” The Lord reminds us that our initial inclinations to obey are subtle—not perfect knowledge. This statement may refer to more than just our initial inclinations or beliefs that result in our obedience. It may also refer to the very earliest stages of developing revealed faith. At that stage, our revealed faith is not “perfect knowledge.” And while we are here on earth, our revealed faith may well result in a strong testimony or powerfully-felt knowledge, but the nature of mortality is that it won’t become “perfect knowledge.” That will not come until we kneel at the feet of Christ and see him in his full majesty.

“even so it is with my words” Initially our impressions of the words of God—written or spoken—are subtle and do not immediately create a compelling need to obey.

“Ye cannot know of their surety at first” The Lord urges us to have patience. Initially, we act on subtle impressions. It is often painful and difficult to muster the discipline to do so—to obey. Incrementally and eventually, the gifts of the Spirit consequent to our deliberate obedience begin to have a cumulative and positive effect. The sum total of these accumulated gifts of the spirit comprise our “revealed faith.” Our revealed faith produces in us a greater facility and inclination to obey. We become more strongly inclined to obey. It becomes less difficult. We become “new creatures.” There is no shortcut to acquiring this revealed faith. We must be patient and settle for gradual, “line upon line,” incremental growth.

We will learn in the next verse that the process deliberately obeying when you are motivated by a subtle and imperfect spiritual knowledge is referred to as “experimenting upon the words of Christ.”

verses 27-34 Alma will now introduce the metaphor of planting and nourishing a seed. In this metaphor, the seed is initially the word of God—the subtle inkling or belief that it is true. In particular, the seed is the testimony of Christ recorded by every prophet of God since the world began. An individual must first decide whether or not he desires to believe in the word of God. If he decides in the affirmative, then according to Alma’s metaphor, he has planted the word in his heart and the scene is set for the manifestation of deliberate faith. As he experiments upon the word or puts the word to the test—exercises his deliberate faith by deliberately obeying the Savior’s commands—he is said to be nourishing the seed. The seed then blossoms or flourishes and becomes revealed faith—a sequential and incremental accumulation of gifts of the Spirit.

27 But behold, if ye will awake and arouse your faculties, even to an experiment upon my words, and exercise a particle of faith, yea, even if ye can no more than desire to believe, let this desire work in you, even until ye believe in a manner that ye can give place for a portion of my words.

verse 27 “experiment upon my words” Here is the grand key for the acquisition of revealed faith—indeed, for all spiritual progress. It is a fail-safe technique. It is to deliberately obey—to exercise deliberate faith—in the Lord’s words.

If one should “try-out” or “test” a principle that is not true, there will be no spiritual confirmation. The Spirit will provide no witness or conviction. No revealed faith will be granted as a gift of the Spirit. Progress will occur and spiritual gifts will be given only when we “experiment upon”—act upon or obey—principles of truth.

The Savior declared, “If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself” (John 7:17). This means that when you deliberately obey, one of the gifts of the Spirit that results from your obedience is a testimony that the principle you’re obeying is true and is of God.

“no more than a desire to believe” This is the very beginning of faith, the very first step. As one studies the words of Christ, a perfectly neutral attitude or a negative one will not likely lead to the exercise of faith. One must have a positive desire to believe based on a subtle inkling or subtle belief that it is true. While an element of doubt may always exist since one cannot see with one’s senses, it is vital to make a conscious effort to suspend disbelief.

28 Now, we will compare the word unto a seed. Now, if ye give place, that a seed may be planted in your heart, behold, if it be a true seed, or a good seed, if ye do not cast it out by your unbelief, that ye will resist the Spirit of the Lord, behold, it will begin to swell within your breasts; and when you feel these swelling motions, ye will begin to say within yourselves—It must needs be that this is a good seed, or that the word is good, for it beginneth to enlarge my soul; yea, it beginneth to enlighten my understanding, yea, it beginneth to be delicious to me.

verse 28 As an individual experiments upon the word by deliberately obeying (manifesting his deliberate faith) and finds spiritual satisfaction and fulfillment in his experimentation, according to the metaphor of the seed, the seed begins “to swell” within that individual’s breast; it “enlarges” that individual’s soul. He is fulfilled by the revelation to his soul of gifts of the Spirit. His obedience therefore “enlightens” his spiritual understanding. It is thus “delicious” to him. His faith or confidence in the word is thus enhanced.

Joseph Smith certainly found principles of eternal truth to be sweet and delicious. He once said: “This is good doctrine. It tastes good. I can taste the principles of eternal life, and so can you. They are given to me by the revelations of Jesus Christ; and I know that when I tell you these words of eternal life as they are given to me, you taste them, and I know that you believe them. You say honey is sweet, and so do I. I can also taste the spirit of eternal life. I know it is good; and when I tell you of these things which were given me by inspiration of the Holy Spirit, you are bound to receive them as sweet, and rejoice more and more” (TPJS, 355).

29 Now behold, would not this increase your faith? I say unto you, Yea; nevertheless it hath not grown up to a perfect knowledge.

verse 29 Keep in mind that obeying the words of the Lord will result in gifts of the Spirit—spiritual growth. The sum total of this spiritual growth is a man’s revealed faith. In this verse, the Lord speaks of this revealed faith. Here he teaches that it is unlikely the spiritual understandings of any mortal will “grow up” to perfect knowledge here on earth. The Lord reminds us of the necessity of continuing to strive without a perfect knowledge until we complete this “second estate.”

30 But behold, as the seed swelleth, and sprouteth, and beginneth to grow, then you must needs say that the seed is good; for behold it swelleth, and sprouteth, and beginneth to grow. And now behold, will not this strengthen your faith? Yea, it will strengthen your faith: for ye will say I know that this is a good seed; for behold it sprouteth and beginneth to grow.

verse 30 “will not this strengthen your faith? Yea, it will strengthen your faith: for ye will say I know that this is a good seed; for behold it sprouteth and beginneth to grow” One note of some interest is these words were omitted from this verse in all of the early editions of the Book of Mormon, beginning with the 1830 edition, and were not restored until the 1981 edition. They are, however, found in the original manuscript and in the printer’s manuscript. At some point in the copying process, most likely the type setter set the words “And now behold,” and when he looked down, his eye went to the next occurrence of “And now, behold” in the following verse. Thus, these words were omitted. See also the interesting discussion of the misplacement of Alma 13:16 which probably occurred while Alma 13 was being abridged by the prophet Mormon.

As we deliberately strive to obey, the fruits of this deliberate faith—the profound blessings and changes it produces in us—will become evident. The faith that will be strengthened here is revealed faith.

31 And now, behold, are ye sure that this is a good seed? I say unto you, Yea; for every seed bringeth forth unto its own likeness.

verse 31 “every seed bringeth forth unto its own likeness” The true word of God is a “good seed.” Obedience to that word results in a man’s becoming more like the God who uttered the word.

32 Therefore, if a seed groweth it is good, but if it groweth not, behold it is not good, therefore it is cast away.

verse 32 If one “experiments upon” principles that are not true, then no spiritual confirmation will come. No gift of faith—revealed faith—will result. No spiritual growth will occur.

33 And now, behold, because ye have tried the experiment, and planted the seed, and it swelleth and sprouteth, and beginneth to grow, ye must needs know that the seed is good.

verse 33 “it swelleth and sprouteth” Alma’s point here, which is made more fully in the next verse, is that once the seed sprouts, one can see it with “one’s eyes.” Speaking more literally, when spiritual growth occurs you will sense it powerfully with, as it were, your physical senses. Though we may speak of this as “perfect knowledge,” it is not a “black or white” process. It is an ongoing and continuing process to approach the point of “perfect faith.” As we approach perfect faith, however, it is clear that the word of God will be regarded, more and more, as a settled truth. There will be less and less trouble accommodating it in our behavior. It is exciting to contemplate that our progress along the road to perfect faith is marked by incremental acquisitions of nearly perfect knowledge.

34 And now, behold, is your knowledge perfect? Yea, your knowledge is perfect in that thing, and your faith is dormant; and this because ye know, for ye know that the word hath swelled your souls, and ye also know that it hath sprouted up, that your understanding doth begin to be enlightened, and your mind doth begin to expand.

verse 34 Our faith in the Savior can eventually grow until it is “perfect” knowledge at which time it ceases to be faith. Might this occur even while we are yet in mortality? Might our need for deliberate obedience—for deliberate faith become dormant? It is unlikely that our faith in spiritual things will ever become “perfect” and thus “dormant” while we are yet in mortality.

35 O then, is not this real? I say unto you, Yea, because it is light; and whatsoever is light, is good, because it is discernible, therefore ye must know that it is good; and now behold, after ye have tasted this light is your knowledge perfect?

verse 35 “is not this real” As we progress in our faith, our spiritual progress—the light we radiate to the universe—will become very “real” and discernible to each of us. For a discussion of this spiritual light, see The Concept of Light in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 15.

36 Behold I say unto you, Nay; neither must ye lay aside your faith, for ye have only exercised your faith to plant the seed that ye might try the experiment to know if the seed was good.

verse 36 “neither must ye lay aside your faith” Here Alma seems to say, “Please know that you should never stop exercising your deliberate faith. You must maintain a continued commitment to ‘experimenting upon the words’ of Christ.”

37 And behold, as the tree beginneth to grow, ye will say: Let us nourish it with great care, that it may get root, that it may grow up, and bring forth fruit unto us. And now behold, if ye nourish it with much care it will get root, and grow up, and bring forth fruit.

verse 37 The seed that was planted eventually sprouts to become a tree. Some eternal principles will eventually become so real to us that our knowledge may be said to be perfect in those principles. Then we will no longer have to exercise “deliberate faith” in those principles. Indeed, it is not possible for us to exercise faith in them since our knowledge is perfect. However, the acquisition of “revealed faith” is an ongoing and continual process. We must never stop striving to gain more of this type of faith. Revealed faith is simply the sum total of the gifts of the spirit, the attributes of Christ, that we have earned through our obedience. We must continually nourish the tree with much care, that is, continue to diligently obey the commandments. Then the tree “will get root, and grow up, and bring forth fruit.” That fruit is a powerful faith—revealed faith—in the Lord Jesus Christ, even faith unto salvation.

38 But if ye neglect the tree, and take no thought for its nourishment, behold it will not get any root; and when the heat of the sun cometh and scorcheth it, because it hath no root it withers away, and ye pluck it up and cast it out.

verse 38 A modicum of “revealed faith,” even when obtained based upon the exercise of sound principles, may be lost if it is not continually nourished. Please remember there are no plateaus in spiritual growth. If you are not progressing, then you are digressing.

39 Now, this is not because the seed was not good, neither is it because the fruit thereof would not be desirable; but it is because your ground is barren, and ye will not nourish the tree, therefore ye cannot have the fruit thereof.

verse 39 “your ground is barren” Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines barren as, “Not producing plants; unfruitful; sterile; not fertile; or producing little; unproductive.” Here, the phrase “your ground is barren” means that you have stopped striving to obey, you have failed to continue “experimenting upon the words of Christ.” You have stopped nurturing your revealed faith. What you have left of revealed faith—accumulated gifts of the Spirit—will surely melt quickly away.

40 And thus, if ye will not nourish the word, looking forward with an eye of faith to the fruit thereof, ye can never pluck of the fruit of the tree of life.

verse 40 “An eye of faith” is a proper attitude, it is the eye of the heart. Surely one day we will all be blessed to see with our eyes what we now only see with our hearts.

“ye can never pluck of the fruit of the tree of life” This statement means you will never inherit celestial glory.

41 But if ye will nourish the word, yea, nourish the tree as it beginneth to grow, by your faith with great diligence, and with patience, looking forward to the fruit thereof, it shall take root; and behold it shall be a tree springing up unto everlasting life.

verse 41 “it [the tree] shall be a tree springing up unto everlasting life” It is interesting to note the use of the verb “spring” to describe the action of the tree of life after faith has taken root. David E. Bokovoy explained that the Hebrew verb used in Genesis 2:5; 3:18 “translated in the KJV [as] ‘to bring forth’ literally means ‘to spring up.’ This Genesis passage seems to be echoed in Alma’s invitation to his audience to nourish the seed so that it may become a tree ‘springing up unto everlasting life (Alma 32:41)” (“The Word and the Seed: The Theological Use of Biblical Creation in Alma 32,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 23, 2014: 16-17).

42 And because of your diligence and your faith and your patience with the word in nourishing it, that it may take root in you, behold, by and by ye shall pluck the fruit thereof, which is most precious, which is sweet above all that is sweet, and which is white above all that is white, yea, and pure above all that is pure; and ye shall feast upon this fruit even until ye are filled, that ye hunger not, neither shall ye thirst.

verse 42 “because of your diligence and your faith and your patience” The process of obtaining faith unto exaltation will not be an easy one. We will all be tested in our decision to obey the Lord’s commands. Moroni has warned us that we will “receive no witness until after the trial of your faith” (Ether 12:6, italics mine).

The fruit that is “sweet above all that is sweet” and “white above all that is white” and pure above all that is pure” is the promise of exaltation in the presence of our Savior.

“by and by” Today we would interpret this phrase as meaning “before long” or “eventually.” It is interesting that Webster’s 1828 Dictionary of the English Language defines the phrase as “in a short time,” “presently,” or “soon.”

43 Then, my brethren, ye shall reap the rewards of your faith, and your diligence, and patience, and long-suffering, waiting for the tree to bring forth fruit unto you.

1 Now after Alma had spoken these words, they sent forth unto him desiring to know whether they should believe in one God, that they might obtain this fruit of which he had spoken, or how they should plant the seed, or the word of which he had spoken, which he said must be planted in their hearts; or in what manner they should begin to exercise their faith.

verse 1 “whether they should believe in one God” The Father designated Jesus Christ to be our God. The Savior possesses all of the characteristics of the Father by the principle of divine investiture of authority.

2 And Alma said unto them: Behold, ye have said that ye could not worship your God because ye are cast out of your synagogues. But behold, I say unto you, if ye suppose that ye cannot worship God, ye do greatly err, and ye ought to search the scriptures; if ye suppose that they have taught you this, ye do not understand them.

3 Do ye remember to have read what Zenos, the prophet of old, has said concerning prayer or worship?

verse 3 The ancient Israelite prophets Zenos and Zenock are mentioned in this verse and in verse 15. We know very little of these prophets. We do know that they lived “since the days of Abraham” (Helaman 8:19). An interesting verse in 3 Nephi (3 Nephi 10:16) suggests that the Nephites actually descended from the prophets Zenos and Zenock. It is likely that Zenos and Zenock were descendants of ancient Joseph the son of Abraham. The prophet Zenock was apparently martyred for his beliefs (Alma 33:15-17), as was Zenos (Helaman 8:19). For further commentary on the prophet Zenos, see the introductory commentary for Jacob 5.

verses 4-11 Zenos teaches that the real issue is not where or when one prays but how and to whom. These verses are referred to as the thanksgiving psalm of Zenos. Perhaps Alma knew this ancient poem well enough to recite it from memory.

Brother John W. Welch has called our attention to a most interesting fact of uncertain significance (Echoes and Evidences of the Book of Mormon, 331-32). This poem of Zenos contains, ten times, the word hear in various tenses. This is made especially interesting by the fact that a few of the important prayer sermons in the Book of Mormon which call upon God, especially when seeking atonement, also contain the pattern of a significant word’s being repeated ten times. For example, the word Lord, in expanded form occurs ten times in King Benjamin’s speech (seven times as “Lord God,” and three times as “Lord Omnipotent”). The word Lord also appears exactly ten times in the psalm of Nephi, which also deals with the atoning embrace of God (see 2 Nephi

4:16-35), and the words Lord and Son are each mentioned precisely ten times in Alma's speech on the plan of redemption and atonement in Alma 12-13. The phrase O Lord is found exactly ten times in Alma's prayer in Antionum, when he called upon God for strength in bringing souls to Christ (Alma 31:26-35). Brother Welch wonders if all this might have something to do with the ten commandments, which date to preexilic Israel. Certainly, we cannot be sure that Zenos, Nephi, Benjamin, or Alma were aware of this numerological character of their texts, and we cannot conclude with certainty that all preexilic Israelites placed religious importance on counting to ten, especially in connection with prayer and atonement. It seems unlikely that Joseph Smith was aware of this phenomenon.

4 For he said: Thou art merciful, O God, for thou hast heard my prayer, even when I was in the wilderness; yea, thou wast merciful when I prayed concerning those who were mine enemies, and thou didst turn them to me.

verse 4 "thou didst turn them to me" Zenos was reconciled to his enemies by the principle of charity.

5 Yea, O God, and thou wast merciful unto me when I did cry unto thee in my field; when I did cry unto thee in my prayer, and thou didst hear me.

6 And again, O God, when I did turn to my house thou didst hear me in my prayer.

7 And when I did turn unto my closet, O Lord, and prayed unto thee, thou didst hear me.

8 Yea, thou art merciful unto thy children when they cry unto thee, to be heard of thee and not of men, and thou wilt hear them.

9 Yea, O God, thou hast been merciful unto me, and heard my cries in the midst of thy congregations.

10 Yea, and thou hast also heard me when I have been cast out and have been despised by mine enemies; yea, thou didst hear my cries, and wast angry with mine enemies, and thou didst visit them in thine anger with speedy destruction.

verse 10 "thou didst visit them in thine anger with speedy destruction" Obviously, in the name of justice, God will not always deal with a righteous man's enemies as he did in verse 4, that is, by reconciling a man with his enemies.

11 And thou didst hear me because of mine afflictions and my sincerity; and it is because of thy Son that thou hast been thus merciful unto me, therefore I will cry unto thee in all mine afflictions, for in thee is my joy; for thou hast turned thy judgments away from me, because of thy Son.

verse 11 It is comforting to learn that even to a righteous prophet, afflictions can lead to a greater fervency or sincerity as he prays to the Father.

This verse is one of many in the Book of Mormon indicating clearly that the Book of Mormon prophets understood clearly the nature of the godhead and the separate identities of the Father and the Son.

“thou hast turned thy judgments away from me, because of thy Son” “Thy judgments” are the demands of the law of justice. After all we can do, we still cannot earn our own salvation according to the law of justice. We depend utterly and completely upon the mercy of our Savior.

12 And now Alma said unto them: Do ye believe those scriptures which have been written by them of old?

verse 12 When Alma refers to “those scriptures,” which specific scripture does he have in mind? The brass plates of course.

13 Behold, if ye do, ye must believe what Zenos said; for, behold he said: Thou hast turned away thy judgments because of thy Son.

14 Now behold, my brethren, I would ask if ye have read the scriptures? If ye have, how can ye disbelieve on the Son of God?

15 For it is not written that Zenos alone spake of these things, but Zenock also spake of these things—verse 16 “because they will not understand thy mercies which thou has bestowed upon them because of thy Son” Among its many blessings, the atonement brings peace of mind. It not only cleanses us, but it consoles us. Occasionally the leaders of the Church today encounter members who, by all accounts, have repented and should feel peace in their souls. The members confess, however, that they still live with troubled consciences. While believing in Christ and his atonement, some people have innocently, but incorrectly, placed limits on his regenerative powers. They have somehow converted an infinite atonement (see the commentaries for 2 Nephi 9:7 and Alma 34:8-10) into a finite one. They have taken the atonement and circumscribed it with an artificial boundary that somehow falls short of their particular sin. Stephen Robinson observed: “I have learned there are many who believe Jesus is the Son of God and that he is the Savior of the world, but they do not believe that he can save them. They believe in his identity, but not in his power to cleanse and to purify and to save. To have faith in his identity is only half the principle. To have faith in his ability and in his power to cleanse and to save, that is the other half” (Believing Christ, 26).

16 For behold, he said: Thou art angry, O Lord, with this people, because they will not understand thy mercies which thou hast bestowed upon them because of thy Son.

In a sense, these saints have adopted their own parameters of justice and mercy. C. S. Lewis observed: “I think that if God forgives us we must forgive ourselves. Otherwise it is almost like setting up ourselves as a higher tribunal than him” (Quotable Lewis, 221). The Savior's loving offer, "My peace I give unto you" (John 14:27), transforms itself from some abstract hope to a profound personal reality. At such a time we receive not only of the cleansing power, but also the consoling power of the atonement. Paul spoke of this blessing: "Our Lord Jesus Christ . . . hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace" (2 Thessalonians 2:16). The invitation was extended by the Savior during his mortal ministry: "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me . . . and ye shall find rest unto your souls" (Matthew 11:28-29). Nephi spoke of those glorious days when "the Son of righteousness shall appear unto them [the righteous]; and he shall heal them, and they shall have peace" (2 Nephi 26:9).

17 And now, my brethren, ye see that a second prophet of old has testified of the Son of God, and because the people would not understand his words they stoned him to death.

verse 17 We know from other scripture that the prophet Zenos was killed for his beliefs (Helaman 8:19). This verse suggests that Zenock also was martyred. For more information on the non-Biblical prophets mentioned in the Book of Mormon, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 5:16, 1 Nephi 19:10, and the introductory commentary for Jacob 5.

18 But behold, this is not all; these are not the only ones who have spoken concerning the Son of God.

19 Behold, he was spoken of by Moses; yea, and behold a type was raised up in the wilderness, that whosoever would look upon it might live. And many did look and live.

verse 19 Moses, of course, knew of the coming Christ and prophesied of him though we find no such specific prophecy in the Bible.

"a type was raised up in the wilderness, that whosoever would look upon it might live" Here is yet another reference to the incident described in Numbers 21:4-9 when the Lord sent poisonous serpents among the Israelites (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 17:41 and 2 Nephi 25:20). Moses set a serpent of brass upon a pole, and each Israelite bitten by a serpent was saved if he looked upon the pole. The pole, of course, was a type of Christ.

20 But few understood the meaning of those things, and this because of the hardness of their hearts. But there were many who were so hardened that they would not look, therefore they perished. Now the reason they would not look is because they did not believe that it would heal them.

verse 20 "and this because of the hardness of their hearts" See the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

21 O my brethren, if ye could be healed by merely casting about your eyes that ye might be healed, would ye not behold quickly, or would ye rather harden your hearts in unbelief, and be slothful, that ye would not cast about your eyes, that ye might perish?

22 If so, wo shall come upon you; but if not so, then cast about your eyes and begin to believe in the Son of God, that he will come to redeem his people, and that he shall suffer and die to atone for their sins; and that he shall rise again from the dead, which shall bring to pass the resurrection, that all men shall stand before him, to be judged at the last and judgment day, according to their works.

verse 22 We, the readers, have learned that Alma's discourse on faith in Alma 32 has continued in Alma 33. Here in verse 22 that lecture culminates with a declaration of faith that has come to known as the "Nephite Creed" or the "Nephite Articles of Faith." This seven-part statement of belief in Christ focuses on the atoning mission of Jesus as God's divine son and builds on the foundation laid by Alma about the nature of faith and testimony in Alma 32.

Alma has prefaced this concise declaration of his basic articles of faith by recalling the story of the Israelites' wandering in the wilderness (Alma 33:19–20). As recorded in Numbers 21, the children of Israel began to complain against Moses, resulting in God's sending "fiery" or poisonous serpents to humble them. To cure those who had been bitten by these serpents, Moses erected a bronze serpent on a pole so that "that every one that is bitten, when he looketh upon it, shall live" (Numbers 21:4–9).

In retelling this account Alma emphasized that the bronze serpent was a type of Christ (Alma 33:19) and likened its miraculous healing powers to the importance of having faith in the salvific powers of Christ. "O my brethren, if ye could be healed by merely casting about your eyes that ye might be healed, would ye not behold quickly, or would ye rather harden your hearts in unbelief, and be slothful, that ye would not cast about your eyes, that ye might perish?" (Alma 33:21). Let us be reminded, and it's worth being reminded over and over again, that we can only manifest our faith in Jesus Christ by obeying his commandments. Obedience is the essence of faith (If the reader desires a rather comprehensive review of the concept of faith, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapters 9, 10, and 11, "Revealed Faith," "Deliberate Faith and Revealed Faith," and "Other Notes on Faith").

The Nephite Creed or Articles of Faith may be summarized as in verse 22:

1. We "believe in the Son of God,
2. that he will come to redeem his people,
3. and that he will suffer and die
4. to atone for their sins;
5. and that he shall rise again from the dead.
6. which shall bring to pass the resurrection,

7. and that all men shall stand before him, to be judged.”

As summarized by John W. Welch and J. Gregory Welch, “One may well imagine that Alma and his followers could have personally recited this declaration in explaining their faith, in much the same way as members of the church today use the Articles of Faith in stating the fundamental elements of their faith” (See John W. Welch and J. Gregory Welch, Charting the Book of Mormon: Visual Aids for Personal Study and Teaching, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1999, chart 42). These articles of faith, what one might well call the core of the Nephite Creed, constitute, according to Alma, specifically the “word” spoken of in Alma 32 that followers of Christ should plant in their hearts. “And now, my brethren, I desire that ye shall plant this word in your hearts, and as it beginneth to swell even so nourish it by your faith” (verse 23). Again, we see the vital role of obedience to the Lord’s commandments. This obedience is fundamental to nourishing the seed of faith.

This key point makes it clear why Alma 32–33 should be read together as one complete whole. Originally, these two chapters were not divided. The chapter division between these chapters might mislead some readers into thinking these two chapters are unrelated.

23 And now, my brethren, I desire that ye shall plant this word in your hearts, and as it beginneth to swell even so nourish it by your faith. And behold, it will become a tree, springing up in you unto everlasting life. And then may God grant unto you that your burdens may be light, through the joy of his Son. And even all this can ye do if ye will. Amen.

verse 23 “it will become a tree, springing up in you unto everlasting light”

We might well compare this tree to the “tree of life whose fruit is more precious and most desirable above all other fruits” (1 Nephi 15:36). We have learned that the tree of life symbolizes Jesus Christ himself and carries with it the promise of exaltation in the celestial kingdom.

Alma’s metaphor, carefully considered, suggests that the individual who plants the seed of the word of God in his heart and who then nourishes the seed by his deliberate obedience to gospel law, becomes himself the tree. That is, he becomes endowed with an abundance of “revealed faith”—the attributes of Christ—and he is exalted.

“may God grant unto you that your burdens may be light” The most onerous burden is the burden of sin. Through Christ this may be lifted from us. Other vicissitudes of this mortal experience may also become burdensome. From these also we may find relief in Christ.

“And even all this can ye do if ye will” Each man has his agency.

Alma 34 Amulek discourses on the infinite atonement of Christ.

Alma 34:8-10 It is expedient that there should be a great and last sacrifice, an infinite and eternal sacrifice.

Alma 34:11-12 Now there is not any man that can sacrifice his own blood which will atone for the sins of another.

Alma 34:14-17 Amulek's teachings on mercy "which overpowereth justice." Mercy can satisfy the demands of justice, and encircles them in the arms of safety.

Alma 34:18-27 Yea, cry unto him for mercy; for he is mighty to save. Yea, humble yourselves, and continue in prayer unto him. Cry unto him when ye are in your fields, yea, over all your flocks . . . in your houses . . . over all your household, both morning, mid-day, and evening. Yea, cry unto him against the power of your enemies . . . against the devil . . . over the crops of your fields . . . over the flocks of your fields . . . pour out your souls in your closets, and your secret places, and in your wilderness. Yea, and when you do not cry unto the Lord, let your hearts be full, drawn out in prayer unto him continually for your welfare, and also for the welfare of those who are around you.

Alma 34:32-34 Amulek to the Zoramites: This life is the time for men to prepare to meet God. I beseech of you that you do not procrastinate the day of your repentance until the end.

The major doctrinal theme of Amulek's discourse to the Zoramites in chapter 34 is the infinite atonement of Christ. We have previously discussed the dual nature of the fall. The two essential root causes of the fall include:

1. Adam and Eve's transgression (the fall of Adam and Eve). This resulted in two major consequences:

a. man's being subject to physical death. This physical death is only a temporary penalty since all mortals will be automatically resurrected as a consequence of the Savior's atonement.

b. man's being cast out of God's presence—spiritual death. This spiritual death is called the "first death" and is also temporary since all mortals will return to the presence of God (at least long enough to be judged) because of the Savior's atonement.

Hence, we learn that the Lord's atonement automatically and without any effort or virtue on the part of man completely eliminated the consequences of Adam's transgression.

2. The sins of each individual (the fall of you). These sins result in the individual's being unworthy to re-enter God's presence. This spiritual death is called the “second death,” as it is permanent unless something is done about the individual’s sins—unless they are forgiven. In addition to automatically removing the consequences of Adam’s transgression, the atonement also made it possible for each individual to be absolved of his own sins and therefore become worthy of the celestial kingdom based on his repentance and obedience.

What if there had been no atonement made? It is clear that mankind would have remained in a lost and fallen state (2 Nephi 9:6-9; Alma 12:22). Once we had suffered physical death, we would have remained spirits and would not have been resurrected. Also, we would all have become vulnerable eternally to Satan’s influences. In that state—being a spirit without hope of resurrection and having no opportunity to grow spiritually—we would eventually fit into the label of “sons of perdition.” Each of us is desperately dependent upon Christ’s atonement.

One might wonder about the justice of our suffering, even temporarily here on earth, for Adam’s transgression. We do have to live out of the presence of God during our mortal span of years, and then each of us suffers the pains of a mortal death. Is it fair that one man should suffer for another’s indiscretion? We know that God is perfectly just, and one man is never held accountable for another’s actions. Adam’s fall was likely foreordained and it is possible that we who came to earth willingly covenanted to accept the fall’s temporary negative consequences (physical and first spiritual death) as a condition of having the opportunity of having this vital mortal experience and earning the ultimate reward—that of eternal life.

1 And now it came to pass that after Alma had spoken these words unto them he sat down upon the ground, and Amulek arose and began to teach them, saying:

2 My brethren, I think that it is impossible that ye should be ignorant of the things which have been spoken concerning the coming of Christ, who is taught by us to be the Son of God; yea, I know that these things were taught unto you bountifully before your dissension from among us.

verse 2 At the very root of the Zoramites’ apostasy lay the loss of their testimony of Christ. According to their faulty doctrine, God had already elected them to be saved while others around them were elected to be cast down to hell (Alma 31:16-17). Thus, as they reasoned, no Redeemer was necessary. They viewed God as an absolutely omnipotent being operating by his arbitrary whim alone and unrestricted by any laws. We know that God does not operate as an absolute Monarch. He works in harmony with laws to which even he is beholden (D&C 88:36-38). Thus, he cannot lie (Ether 3:12). He cannot “look upon sin with the least degree of allowance” (Alma 45:16). He cannot forgive sins without repentance (Alma 11:37; 42:24). If he were to do any of these things—that is, violate his own eternal law—he would cease to be God (Alma 42:13, 22, 25).

3 And as ye have desired of my beloved brother that he should make known unto you what ye should do, because of your afflictions; and he hath spoken somewhat unto you to prepare your minds; yea, and he hath exhorted you unto faith and to patience—

verse 3 “he hath exhorted you unto faith and to patience” Alma’s exhortation to faith is found in Alma 32. In man’s quest for faith, it is inevitably necessary for each to learn patience. We must each learn to wait upon the Lord and trust in him. He knows the end from the beginning, and he also knows each of us. If we are faithful and patient, he will ultimately do with us as he wills. What greater blessing could there be than this?

4 Yea, even that ye would have so much faith as even to plant the word in your hearts, that ye may try the experiment of its goodness.

verse 4 “plant the word in your hearts, that ye may try the experiment of its goodness” These Zoramites desperately needed to answer for themselves the critical question asked in verse 5: Does the truth abide with the Son of God or not? The only way possible to answer this question is to “experiment” upon the words of Christ. This includes the following specific steps:

1. Develop a sincere desire to know the truth (plant the seed in your heart).
2. Study the word of God including the scriptures and the writings of the prophets (nourish the seed).
3. Accept his word or his gospel exercising a modicum of belief or faith, and then live it (another way of nourishing the seed).
4. Watch for an enlargement of faith (“revealed faith”—receiving, by personal revelation, attributes of Christ) through the Spirit.

5 And we have beheld that the great question which is in your minds is whether the word be in the Son of God, or whether there shall be no Christ.

verse 5 How might you re-word Amulek’s “great question” for clarity of understanding? How about: Will this Jesus Christ of whom we have spoken actually come to earth? And when he does, will he actually be the anointed one, the Savior of all mankind?

6 And ye also beheld that my brother has proved unto you, in many instances, that the word is in Christ unto salvation.

verse 6 Amulek’s “brother,” of course, is Alma. It would not have been possible for Alma to have “proved,” in any scientific sense, that Christ is indeed the author of salvation. The words “proved” and “prove” here and in the following verse might be interpreted as testified or testify.

7 My brother has called upon the words of Zenos, that redemption cometh through the Son of God, and also upon the words of Zenock; and also he has appealed unto Moses, to prove that these things are true.

verse 7 For a review of the prophets Zenos and Zenock, see Alma 33:3 including its commentary.

8 And now, behold, I will testify unto you of myself that these things are true. Behold, I say unto you, that I do know that Christ shall come among the children of men, to take upon him the transgressions of his people, and that he shall atone for the sins of the world; for the Lord God hath spoken it.

verse 8 Amulek knew because he had received personal revelation through the medium of the Spirit of God.

9 For it is expedient that an atonement should be made; for according to the great plan of the Eternal God there must be an atonement made, or else all mankind must unavoidably perish; yea, all are hardened; yea, all are fallen and are lost, and must perish except it be through the atonement which it is expedient should be made.

verse 9 “it is expedient that an atonement should be made” We usually associate with the word “expedient” such meanings as useful, appropriate, advantageous, convenient, a means to an end. The atonement is all of these things and more. We know, of course, that it was absolutely necessary to prevent all men from being lost among the sons of perdition.

“all are hardened; yea, all are fallen and are lost” The Book of Mormon does not teach the doctrine of human depravity, but it does teach that man has a “fallen” (natural self) nature and is prone to disobedience and ingratitude. Man by nature is “carnal, sensual, and devilish” (Mosiah 16:3; Alma 42:10). This natural self is rendered even more poignant and dangerous by our having, here on earth, a mortal body. Hence, we may refer to this “natural” tendency here on earth as the “natural man.” Because of this fallen nature, every man will sin, and thus he absolutely cannot return to God’s presence unless an atonement is made. See the commentary for Mosiah 15:19.

The doctrine that man is the literal offspring of divine parents is not found in the Book of Mormon but was revealed to the prophet Joseph Smith after the book’s publication. While each individual has some tendencies of the “natural man,” we know that if each man will fully repent he will be endowed with the very nature of God—both the spirit and the flesh. This is eternal life.

10 For it is expedient that there should be a great and last sacrifice; yea, not a sacrifice of man, neither of beast, neither of any manner of fowl; for it shall not be a human sacrifice; but it must be an infinite and eternal sacrifice.

verse 10 “great and last sacrifice” Certainly the Savior’s sacrifice is the greatest of all sacrifices. But is it to be the final sacrifice, chronologically speaking? It is not, as it turns out. The scriptures speak of at least one, and perhaps two, offerings or sacrifices to be made at a time apparently yet in the future. For example, D&C 13 refers to the fact that the Aaronic priesthood “shall never be taken again from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness.” Also, D&C 84:31 refers to “an acceptable offering and sacrifice” to be offered by the sons of Moses and Aaron “in the house of the Lord,” referring to the temple to be built in Jackson County. The nature of these sacrifices is not entirely clear. It seems clear that the “sons of Levi” and the “sons of Moses and Aaron” are the latter-day bearers of the priesthood. After the return of Israel from the Babylonian captivity, the priestly Levites became lax in their religious obligations and because of their bad example, the rest of the nation became remiss in their duties. Malachi pointed out that the sacrifices they offered to the Lord were the worst of the flocks or even stolen animals rather than the best. Thus, because the priests were unrighteous, their sacrifices were unacceptable, and the Lord promised that when he comes again, he will purge the Levites that they may yet offer an offering in righteousness (Malachi 3:1-3). The nature of this “offering and sacrifice” is also not entirely clear. It may not be an actual animal sacrifice. Perhaps it will simply be works of righteousness.

The sacrifice of the Savior certainly may be said to be the “great and last” sacrifice in terms of its ultimate and eternal significance.

“not a sacrifice of man, neither of beast, neither of any manner of fowl; for it shall not be a human sacrifice” This phrase refers to an important misconception about animal sacrifice. The Zoramites had apparently come to believe that the sacrificing of animals removed their sins. This is the erroneous principle of “vicarious sacrifice.”

Both the Israelites and Nephites lived among cultures that performed vicarious sacrifices for the sins of individuals and communities. Jewish Studies lecturer, Dr. Elaine Goodfriend, explained, “Vicarious punishment—when the penalty for a wrong is suffered by someone other than the perpetrator—is found in” some Mesopotamian laws (Elaine Adler Goodfriend, “Ethical Theory and Practice in the Hebrew Bible,” in The Oxford Handbook of Jewish Ethics and Morality, ed. Elliot N. Dorff and Jonathan K. Crane, New York, NY: Oxford University Press, 2013, 48 n.9. Goodfriend specifically cited “the Laws of Hammurabi 230 and 210, and Middle Assyrian Law A55.”) Ze’ev Falk noted, “in Babylonian and perhaps also in Hittite law, the principle of talion was applied not only to the criminal himself but also to his dependents” (Ze’ev W. Falk, Hebrew Law in Biblical Times, 2nd ed., Winona Lake, IN and Provo, UT: Eisenbrauns and BYU Press, 2001, 68). Talion is the concept of “eye for an eye,” or in the case of murder, a life for a life.

In contrast to some practices of their neighbors, Israelite law did not allow for vicarious punishment, but insisted “every man shall be put to death for his own sin” (Deuteronomy 24:16; cf. Ezekiel 18:20) (Falk, Hebrew Law, 68 noted, “Hebrew courts did not inflict punishment on ascendants or descendants,” and Goodfriend, “Ethical Theory,” 48 n.9, in relation to vicarious punishment, noted “Exod 21:31 and Deut 24:16 prohibit this practice.”). Similarly, Amulek asked the Zoramites, “Now, if a man murdereth, behold will our law, which is just, take the life of his brother?” The answer was straightforward: “there is not any man that can sacrifice his own blood which will atone for the sins of another” (Alma 34:11).

In their divergent state of apostasy, the Zoramites apparently had adopted some kind of religious system which practiced vicarious blood sacrifices. Ancient Mesoamerica provides a potential cultural backdrop. There, “Maya kings voluntarily shed their blood as an offering on behalf of their people” (Wright and Gardner, “The Cultural Context of Nephite Apostasy,” 51). This came in the form of bloodletting, a practice where the king “used thorns, stingray spines, and obsidian blades to draw blood from” sensitive parts of the body. Michael D. Coe and Stephen Houston in The Maya, 9th edition (New York, NY: Thames and Hudson, 2009), 89, noted bloodletting is depicted at San Bartolo, dating to ca. first or second century BC. They also mention the attestation of bloodletters from Olmec times. Robert J. Sharer with Loa P. Traxler, The Ancient Maya, 6th edition (Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press, 2006), 197 described “a lavish ritual involving feasting, bloodletting, and burning incense” from “the end of the Middle Pre-Classic,” ca. 800–500 BC. So, bloodletting seems clearly attested in Book of Mormon times. While this is a different conceptual background than that of the Babylonian laws in the Old World, it was still a system wherein a man would “sacrifice his own blood” vicariously for his people.

There were also other forms of sacrifice practiced in Mesoamerica. Brant A. Gardner explained, “Mesoamerican culture also offered parallel examples of animal sacrifices as part of their worship and even human sacrifice” (Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 4:477). Mark Alan Wright reasoned, “The peoples of the Book of Mormon would have been familiar with the types of sacrifices being offered by their surrounding Mesoamerican neighbors, which often comprised burnt offerings of animals, such as deer or birds” (Mark Alan Wright, “Axes Mundi: Ritual Complexes in Mesoamerica and the Book of Mormon,” Interpreter: A Journal of Mormon Scripture 12, 2014: 89. Also see Miller and Taube, An Illustrated Dictionary of the Gods and Symbols of Ancient Mexico and the Maya, 96–97, 144–146). Amulek explained, “For it is expedient that there should be a great and last sacrifice; yea, not a sacrifice of man, neither of beast, neither of any manner of fowl; for it shall not be a human sacrifice; but it must be an infinite and eternal sacrifice” (Alma 34:10). Wright noted, “It is significant that the three things that Amulek is expressly telling the apostate Zoramites not to sacrifice are the three most common things that were offered by Mesoamerican worshipers: human, beast, and fowl” (Wright, “Axes Mundi,” 89). Amulek is reminding his Zoramite audience of the true purpose of animal sacrifice under the Mosaic law.

As pious Israelites, the Nephites would have practiced various forms of animal sacrifice as part of the law of Moses. They did so, however, with an awareness that such sacrifices were only a type and a shadow, “every whit pointing to that great and last sacrifice ... [of] the Son of God, yea, infinite and eternal” (Alma 34:14). In the Nephite view, “The law of Moses was as one grand prophecy of Christ inasmuch as it testified of the salvation to be obtained in and through his atoning blood” (Robert L. Millet and Joseph Fielding McConkie, Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 4 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 1897–1992, 3:250).

In their apostasy, the Zoramites rejected the infinite and eternal atonement of Jesus Christ. Influenced by the surrounding culture, it seems they instead treated animal sacrifice as a full substitute for the Atonement, perhaps going so far as to have adopted other local sacrificial customs, such as bloodletting and human sacrifice.

Amulek, therefore, made it a point to explain that “there is not any man that can sacrifice his own blood” on behalf of others (Alma 34:11), as would be the case with even a king while bloodletting. Nor could any kind of blood sacrifice—beast, fowl, or human—cleanse the Zoramites, nor anyone else, of their sins (verses 11–14). Not only does logic work against the Zoramite view, but so did the symbolism of the law of Moses which prohibited the taking of one mortal life in punishment for the wrongdoing of another.

Just as certain particular cultural factors apparently had enticed the Zoramites to pervert the ways of the Lord, so also may social trends today entice some to twist, distort, wrest, or otherwise skew true gospel principles to fit fashionable ideologies. Avoiding these temptations requires both individuals and communities to do as Alma taught, and Amulek reiterated: “plant the word in your hearts, that ye may try the experiment of its goodness” (Alma 34:4). Only by letting the eternal word of Christ take root can the everlasting Gospel then become the guiding light which enables all to see past the temporary fashions of the day.

“infinite and eternal sacrifice” What is an “infinite and eternal sacrifice”? What is an “infinite atonement”? Actually, the Savior’s atonement is infinite in a number of ways. For a comprehensive review of the ways in which his atonement is infinite, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:7. For a more complete discussion, see “The Infinite Nature of Christ’s Atonement” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 2, Consequences of the Savior’s Atonement.

11 Now there is not any man that can sacrifice his own blood which will atone for the sins of another. Now, if a man murdereth, behold will our law, which is just, take the life of his brother? I say unto you, Nay.

verse 11 The blood of one man can never atone for the sins of another. It is not “just,” that is, it does not satisfy the law of justice for one man to pay for any crime or sin of another. Indeed, in a strict sense the Savior did not really pay the debt to the law of justice incurred by our sins. This false notion arises from the practically universal use of the “financial” or “money” metaphor of the atonement. It would be impossible for Jesus to satisfy anyone’s sense of justice by “paying” for someone’s sins himself. That he actually paid for our sins is a common misunderstanding that exists both in and out of the Church. The idea that he did pay for them is referred to as the “balancing the books” or the doctrine of “quid pro quo”—this much suffering for that much sin. This is a sectarian notion which falls short of explaining exactly the Savior’s ability to extend his mercy to us.

Instead of paying for our sins, he paid an unfathomable price in Gethsemane and on the cross. In this way, he perfected his empathy for each of us. He thereby qualified himself to be able to intervene on our behalf in spite of our unworthiness if we are able to abide by his law and repent of our sins. He became the perfect judge who is able to weigh, with perfect equity and fairness, the worthiness of each of us. He can do this because he knows us intimately. He knows the trials, vicissitudes, and mitigating circumstances of each of us because he experienced what each of us has experienced (Hebrews 2:18; 2 Nephi 9:21; Alma 7:11-12).

12 But the law requireth the life of him who hath murdered; therefore there can be nothing which is short of an infinite atonement which will suffice for the sins of the world.

verse 12 “the law requireth the life of him who hath murdered” It is clear that capital punishment was practiced among the Book of Mormon peoples (see also Alma 46:35; 62:9). Although it appears that capital punishment was practiced among the Nephites largely with punitive intent, a statement by Alma indicates that there was a prophylactic or preventive purpose as well: “Now, if there was no law given—if a man murdered he should die—would he be afraid he would die if he should murder?” (Alma 42:19). There were also specific legal guidelines for carrying out capital punishment. Mormon explained, “Now behold, this was contrary to the laws of the land, that any man should be put to death except they had power from the governor of the land” (3 Nephi 6:24). Jaredite and Nephite records contain examples of people who practiced capital punishment unrighteously (e.g., Ether 10:6; 3 Nephi 1:9; 6:23; Moroni 1:2).

Is the practice of capital punishment doctrinal? Certainly, it was in Old Testament times when the law of Moses was the gospel standard (Exodus 31:14-17; Leviticus 24:17). But what about today? Did capital punishment end with the coming of Christ and the fulfillment of the law of Moses? Charles W. Penrose wrote: “This divine law for shedding the blood of a murderer has never been repealed. It is a law given by the Almighty and not abrogated in the Christian faith. It stands on record for all time—that a murderer shall have his blood shed. He that commits murder must be slain. Whoso sheddeth man’s blood, by man shall his blood be shed” (“Blood Atonement: As Taught by Leading Elders of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.” [Salt Lake City: Deseret News], 1916, 23). The Lord instructed the prophet Joseph Smith that capital punishment is an appropriate judgment for those guilty of murder: “And again, I say, thou shalt not kill; but he that killeth shall die” (D&C 42:19). But he made the application of capital punishment subject to the laws of civil government: “And it shall come to pass, that if any persons among you shall kill they shall be delivered up and dealt with according to the laws of the land” (D&C 42:79).

“infinite atonement” Again, for a summary of why the Savior’s atonement was an “infinite atonement,” see the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:7. See also “The Infinite Nature of Christ’s Atonement” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 2, Consequences of the Savior’s Atonement.

verses 13-16 Please do not take these verses for granted. They are vital and contain some of the clearest teachings on the doctrine of the atonement found in all of the scripture. There is no clear explanation of this vital doctrine found in the Old Testament, and a study of the New Testament has led to much confusion (see also 2 Nephi 2:6-13; 2 Nephi 9:6-16; Alma 42:13-26; and Mormon 9:13-14).

13 Therefore, it is expedient that there should be a great and last sacrifice; and then shall there be, or it is expedient there should be, a stop to the shedding of blood; then shall the law of Moses be fulfilled; yea, it shall be all fulfilled, every jot and tittle, and none shall have passed away.

verse 13 “then shall there be, or it is expedient there should be, a stop to the shedding of blood” The Savior’s atonement meant the end of animal sacrifice. He has asked instead that we offer to him “a broken heart and a contrite spirit” (3 Nephi 9:19-20). See a discussion of this important gift of the Spirit in “The Infinite Nature of Christ’s Atonement” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 2, Consequences of the Savior’s Atonement.

14 And behold, this is the whole meaning of the law, every whit pointing to that great and last sacrifice; and that great and last sacrifice will be the Son of God, yea, infinite and eternal.

verse 14 “this is the whole meaning of the law” The very purpose of the law of Moses was to point to Christ (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 11:4). Without Christ the law of Moses was a shadow without substance. “The law of Moses availeth nothing except it were through the atonement of his blood” (Mosiah 3:15).

“every whit pointing to that great and last sacrifice” A whit is the smallest part or particle imaginable. Each and every part of the law of Moses pointed to the Savior and his atonement.

Also, the Savior’s atonement is so vital, so central, so pivotal, that all things, even the smallest particle in the universe looks to the atonement for salvation.

“and that great and last sacrifice will be the Son of God, yea, infinite and eternal” From the time of Adam’s expulsion from the Garden of Eden, prophets taught that the Lamb of God, God’s Only Begotten Son, will one day be sacrificed to answer the demands of a higher law (Moses 5:5-9; 2 Nephi 2:5-7). That sacrifice will make God’s plan of redemption operative in bringing about the salvation of all people. The sacrificial offerings characteristic of the law of Moses foreshadowed the atoning sacrifice of Jesus Christ and will end when it is accomplished. Thus, the Savior’s atoning sacrifice will fulfill the law of Moses and will be the “great and last sacrifice.”

15 And thus he shall bring salvation to all those who shall believe on his name; this being the intent of this last sacrifice, to bring about the bowels of mercy, which overpowereth justice, and bringeth about means unto men that they may have faith unto repentance.

verse 15 “this being the intent of this last sacrifice, to bring about the bowels of mercy, which overpowereth justice” For the definition of the law of mercy, see the commentary for verse 16. The word bowels here utilizes an archaic meaning of the word implying that the Savior’s mercy is one of his most central and characteristic qualities. Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines bowels as, “The seat of pity or kindness; hence, tenderness, compassion.”

“bringeth about means unto men that they may have faith unto repentance” To exercise faith unto repentance is to deliberately change one’s pattern of behavior from that of disobedience to obedience to the laws of God. The atonement has made repentance possible—that is, the atonement has made it possible that our repentance and obedience will result in forgiveness of our sins. The atonement has enabled the Savior to extend his mercy to those of us who change their pattern of behavior from disobedience to obedience—exercise “faith unto repentance”—thus making possible our exaltation in the kingdom of God.

16 And thus mercy can satisfy the demands of justice, and encircles them in the arms of safety, while he that exercises no faith unto repentance is exposed to the whole law of the demands of justice; therefore only unto him that has faith unto repentance is brought about the great and eternal plan of redemption.

verse 16 “mercy can satisfy the demands of justice” This phrase refers to the law of mercy which may be summarized as follows: Whenever a law of the gospel is transgressed, the transgressor is rendered ineligible to enter the celestial presence of God or, indeed, any kingdom of glory after this life. However, if the individual who transgressed the law will sincerely repent and strive to live the gospel of Christ, then the Savior will intervene on his behalf. The end result will be exaltation for the repentant sinner.

This mercy does indeed “encircle them in the arms of safety.” “Them” refers to “all those who shall believe on his name” (verse 15).

“the arms of safety” This is the only place in all scripture where this metaphor is used for salvation in Christ. The outstretched arms are, of course, those of Jesus himself (Mormon 5:11; 6:17), who stands always ready to cleanse and embrace the repentant. The arms of Christ are also referred to metaphorically as “the arms of mercy” (Mosiah 16:12; Alma 5:33) and “the arms of [Christ’s] love” (2 Nephi 1:15; D&C 6:20).

“he that exercises no faith unto repentance is exposed to the whole law of the demands of justice” What becomes of those who, here in mortality, have no faith in the Savior and who do not repent? What does it mean to be “exposed to the whole law of the demands of justice”? These will not benefit from the Savior’s atoning sacrifice. They must face directly and without any divine help the consequences of the law of justice. They must endure the requisite suffering themselves. They must pay, or at least begin to pay, for their own sins. Regarding these tragic souls, Bruce C. Hafen has written:

I once wondered if those who refuse to repent but who then satisfy the law of justice by paying for their own sins are then worthy to enter the celestial kingdom. The answer is no. The entrance requirements for celestial life are simply higher than merely satisfying the law of justice. For that reason, paying for our own sins will not bear the same fruit as repenting of our sins. Justice is a law of balance and order and it must be satisfied, either through our payment or his. But if we decline the Savior’s invitation to let him carry our sins, and then satisfy justice by ourselves, we will not yet have experienced the complete rehabilitation that can occur through a combination of divine assistance and genuine repentance. Working together, those forces have the power permanently to change our hearts and our lives, preparing us for celestial life (The Broken Heart, 7-8).

17 Therefore may God grant unto you, my brethren, that ye may begin to exercise your faith unto repentance, that ye begin to call upon his holy name, that he would have mercy upon you;

verses 18-27 In these verses, Amulek seems to be referring to the prophet Zenos's "thanksgiving psalm." Alma had previously referred to the same psalm in Alma 33:4-11. Zenos taught that the real issue is not where or when one prays but how and to whom. It is not the form of one's prayer that matters most but the real substance. It is not one's outward decorum but rather what lies deep within one's heart. The human or "natural man" element within each of us would have us be self-sufficient and independent beings who need no one else. Ultimately, however, each of us is completely dependent upon our Savior. It is right and proper that we call upon the Father in his name regarding every aspect and in every circumstance of our lives, both temporal and spiritual. Perhaps it may seem ironic to some, but this dependence is not weakness. It is true spiritual strength. In our daily walk, we should find ourselves yearning continually for the things of God.

18 Yea, cry unto him for mercy; for he is mighty to save.

19 Yea, humble yourselves, and continue in prayer unto him.

20 Cry unto him when ye are in your fields, yea, over all your flocks.

21 Cry unto him in your houses, yea, over all your household, both morning, mid-day, and evening.

verse 21 Just How often ought we to pray? One must first differentiate between formal prayers and informal prayers. Formal prayers consist of specific styles and conventions. Such prayers include giving thanks for one's meals, family, and individual prayers, the invocation and benediction at church meetings, and the baptism and sacrament prayers. Informal prayers are characterized by a spiritual attitude and a constant sense of the presence of divinity. These are not offered at set times, and, indeed, may and should be offered constantly. Jesus counseled the twelve disciples and the multitude to "pray always" (3 Nephi 18:15, 18). The multitude was told that "they should not cease to pray in their hearts" (3 Nephi 20:1).

The question may be asked, then, how often is an individual obligated to offer formal prayers to Heavenly Father? The prophet Joseph Smith provided counsel in this area, and he happens to agree with Amulek. He taught that we should pray three times a day: "You must make yourselves acquainted with those men who like Daniel pray three times a day toward the House of the Lord" (TPJS, 161). Evidently, Joseph Smith was making reference to Daniel 6:10: "Now when Daniel knew that the writing was signed, he went into his house; and his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed and gave thanks before his God." There is evidence that Joseph Smith and his family practiced this teaching. Eliza R. Snow recorded that "three times a day he had family worship; and these precious seasons of sacred household service truly seemed a foretaste of celestial happiness" (Jayann Morgan Payne, "Eliza R. Snow, First Lady of the Pioneers." Ensign [September 1973] 3:62-67). According to Eliza Ann Carter, "When I was living at Hyrum Smith's, I thought that he was the best man I ever saw. He was so kind to his family, and he prayed in his family three times a day" (Lucinda Snow. "A Biographical Sketch." Women's Exponent, 15 April 1897, 25:134-135).

22 Yea, cry unto him against the power of your enemies.

23 Yea, cry unto him against the devil, who is an enemy to all righteousness.

24 Cry unto him over the crops of your fields, that ye may prosper in them.

25 Cry over the flocks of your fields, that they may increase.

26 But this is not all; ye must pour out your souls in your closets, and your secret places, and in your wilderness.

verse 26 The word "wilderness" here likely implies privacy or seclusion.

27 Yea, and when you do not cry unto the Lord, let your hearts be full, drawn out in prayer unto him continually for your welfare, and also for the welfare of those who are around you.

verse 27 Here is a verse that defines the difference between formal prayer and informal prayer. In the latter type of prayer, we must cry unto him "continually"—in other words, we must pray constantly.

28 And now behold, my beloved brethren, I say unto you, do not suppose that this is all; for after ye have done all these things, if ye turn away the needy, and the naked, and visit not the sick and afflicted, and impart of your substance, if ye have, to those who stand in need—I say unto you, if ye do not any of these things, behold, your prayer is vain, and availeth you nothing, and ye are as hypocrites who do deny the faith.

verse 28 Here is a sobering reminder. An individual can make great strides in living the commandments of the gospel to the point where the Spirit grants him an abiding testimony of Jesus (faith). He can also be granted by the Spirit that calm assurance that he will indeed be exalted (hope). Yet, until he comes to possess that yearning that others share in these same blessings that he enjoys (charity), he may not realize the fulfillment of his potential blessings. It is not enough to simply yearn or pray for the welfare of others. We must also take action and bless them ourselves.

"ye are as hypocrites who do deny the faith" For a discussion of the concept of hypocrisy, see the commentary for 3 Nephi 13:5.

29 Therefore, if ye do not remember to be charitable, ye are as dross, which the refiners do cast out, (it being of no worth) and is trodden under foot of men.

verse 29 "Dross" as it is used here is the scum which forms on the surface of molten metal. It is discarded as waste.

30 And now, my brethren, I would that, after ye have received so many witnesses, seeing that the holy scriptures testify of these things, ye come forth and bring fruit unto repentance.

verse 30 To “bring fruit unto repentance” is to evidence by your behavior that you have repented.

31 Yea, I would that ye would come forth and harden not your hearts any longer; for behold, now is the time and the day of your salvation; and therefore, if ye will repent and harden not your hearts, immediately shall the great plan of redemption be brought about unto you.

verse 31 “now is the time and the day of your salvation” Amulek likely refers here to the period of mortality.

“if ye will repent and harden not your hearts, immediately shall the great plan of redemption be brought about unto you” With each instance of true repentance, the Savior’s mercy is extended. To those spiritually responsive souls, this may also be accompanied by a spiritual confirmation or witness of that mercy—that Christ lives and that his mercy truly comes from him.

32 For behold, this life is the time for men to prepare to meet God; yea, behold the day of this life is the day for men to perform their labors.

verse 32 Some have been critical of this verse suggesting it is too restrictive. These maintain the following: If “this life” refers to only the mortal life, then this verse teaches a doctrine that is too restrictive and too severe. It seems to eliminate the opportunity for post mortal repentance. After all, is it not true that those who fall short of paradisiacal glory by their misdeeds on earth will be assigned, at death, to the spirit prison where they will have an opportunity to repent and earn their way into one of the degrees of glory—even perhaps the celestial degree? Thus, these critics maintain, the probationary period (“this life”) should be extended to include not only our mortal sojourn but also the time spent in the spirit world. Is this verse too restrictive when interpreted literally? Are these critics of this verse correct in their criticism? Probably they are not.

Let us review the essential elements of the transition between this mortal life and the world of spirits as we understand them today. At death, each person is subjected to a “partial judgment” (Joseph F. Smith, Gospel Doctrine, 448). If he has accepted Christ and his gospel and has diligently tried to live and persist in keeping the commandments—or if in Christ’s infallible judgment the man is, in his heart, truly a celestial being (D&C 137:5-9)—he will be assigned to paradise. If he has placed things of an eternal nature second to things of the world, and, in Christ’s judgment, he would not be comfortable in the celestial heaven, then he will be assigned to spirit prison. Those who did not hear and have an opportunity to accept the gospel—who would have accepted it had they heard it—will either be assigned to paradise or to a favored position in the spirit prison where they will not suffer “hell” and will quickly hear and accept the gospel and then be assigned to paradise (D&C 137:5-9). Those who have never heard the gospel who would not have accepted it had they heard it will be so judged and assigned to the spirit prison (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:25-26).

For those who are privileged to be placed in a state of paradise, their probationary state is over—they have completed their mortal trial. They will not fall to a lower state but will inherit a celestial body at the resurrection. Those who are assigned to spirit prison will suffer personal torment as they begin to pay for their sins themselves and are refined to the point where they repent and accept Jesus and his gospel. Ultimately these will repent and confess Christ and be rescued by his mercy. They will then be resurrected with either a terrestrial or a telestial body and abide forever in those respective glories. It is unlikely that these individuals will be able to progress while in the spirit prison to the point of being able to eventually inherit celestial glory. A few others will never repent. They will remain “filthy still” and be cast into outer darkness to live forever with the devil as sons of perdition.

There are other pertinent considerations as we attempt to interpret this verse. We have previously noted that the Book of Mormon teaches a simplified version of the post mortal experience. As we consider Amulek’s teachings, we must also keep in mind that the nature of the spirit world in his day, before the resurrection of Jesus, was different than it is today. At the time of Alma and Amulek there existed “a great gulf” (Luke 16:26) between those in “paradise” and those in “prison” (sometimes referred to as “outer darkness”—see Alma 40:13). Following the Savior’s resurrection, he bridged this gulf and made it possible for some of the spirits in paradise to preach the gospel to those in prison (D&C 138).

Also, we must keep in mind that a man’s death does not alter his basic nature. A man carries into the spirit world the same basic attitudes, personality, and character he has developed both in the premortal life and on earth. When we came into this earth life, we brought with us inclinations and disinclinations, abilities, weaknesses, and attitudes which we developed in the premortal world. Similarly, we pass into the spirit world with the same basic qualities we acquired while on earth. If we lived upon this earth with a hunger for righteousness and a desire for things of the spirit, we will have those same proclivities restored to us in the world of spirits. Contrariwise, if the objects of our primary affections on this earth were materialism and things of the flesh, we cannot expect to be differently oriented when we arrive in the spirit world. Thus, Amulek, in verse 32 stresses the need for repentance in this life.

Now, let us analyze Alma 34:32. If we interpret “this life” as referring only to this mortal existence, then is this verse of scripture literally true? For those who are assigned to paradise, the verse is literally true. At the end of this mortal life, their probation is over. They have succeeded in preparing themselves to meet God, and they will inevitably receive this privilege. For virtually all of those assigned to the spirit prison, this verse is also literally true. At the end of this mortal life for most of them, the dye is cast. They will live in prison and while there earn a degree of glory, but it will not be the one in which God resides. Alma 34:32 might need qualification only for those hypothetical few who are assigned to spirit prison but who are able to persist through the agonizing “hell” of the refining process and succeed to the point of receiving a celestial body though it is unlikely that such individuals even exist. Consistently, the Book of Mormon prophets taught that physical death seals the fate of the wicked. Whether or not they knew the details of the transition between this earth life and the world of spirits (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:25-26) is not made clear in the text.

33 And now, as I said unto you before, as ye have had so many witnesses, therefore, I beseech of you that ye do not procrastinate the day of your repentance until the end; for after this day of life, which is given us to prepare for eternity, behold, if we do not improve our time while in this life, then cometh the night of darkness wherein there can be no labor performed.

verse 33 I acknowledge without explanation the unusual construction of the phrase “if we do not improve our time while in this life” (italics added). The difficulty centers on the phrase “improve our time.” Perhaps an alternative for “time” here might be spiritual condition, spiritual character, or spiritual self.

“then cometh the night of darkness wherein there can be no labor performed” Just when is this “night of darkness wherein there can be no [more] labor performed”? The “night of darkness” begins either at the moment of resurrection to a lesser kingdom (Alma 41:5) or at the moment of being cast into outer darkness with Satan.

34 Ye cannot say, when ye are brought to that awful crisis, that I will repent, that I will return to my God. Nay, ye cannot say this; for that same spirit which doth possess your bodies at the time that ye go out of this life, that same spirit will have power to possess your body in that eternal world.

verse 34 “That awful crisis” is the moment of the Lord’s judgment.

This verse may be interpreted in two distinct ways. Some might interpret it as meaning that a man’s death produces no fundamental change in his inclinations toward good or evil. This is indeed a true principle and is a statement of the “law of restoration” which Alma teaches in Alma 41:3-6. A careful analysis of this verse in conjunction with the verse that follows, however, suggests that this is not Alma’s intended meaning here. Rather his main point seems to be that people must seek the Spirit of God in this life or else the spirit of the devil will have power over them, and they may be overwhelmed by him.

35 For behold, if ye have procrastinated the day of your repentance even until death, behold, ye have become subjected to the spirit of the devil, and he doth seal you his; therefore, the Spirit of the Lord hath withdrawn from you, and hath no place in you, and the devil hath all power over you; and this is the final state of the wicked.

verse 35 It might be argued that “the spirit of the devil” is automatically present when a man possesses nothing of the Spirit of God. In actuality, this “spirit of the devil” is the unchecked “natural self” impulses of man. Repeated and prolonged periods of exposure to this absence of the Spirit of God inevitably lead to subjection to the “spirit of the devil.” Joseph Smith taught: “The devil has no power over us only as we permit him. The moment we revolt at anything which comes from God, the devil takes power” (TPJS, 181). This void of the spirit may become habitual—a pattern difficult to alter. “They that will harden their hearts, to them is given the lesser portion of the word until they know nothing concerning his mysteries; and then they are taken captive by the devil, and led by his will down to destruction. Now this is what is meant by the chains of hell” (Alma 12:11). The phrase “spirit of the devil” seems a bit misleading here and appears more metaphorical than literal. The “spirit of the devil” has little to do with the man Satan. Rather, as stated above, it is the unbridled and unopposed natural self of man that has taken control of the individual because of the individual’s consistent refusal to repent and obey.

36 And this I know, because the Lord hath said he dwelleth not in unholy temples, but in the hearts of the righteous doth he dwell; yea, and he has also said that the righteous shall sit down in his kingdom, to go no more out; but their garments should be made white through the blood of the Lamb.

verse 36 “the Lord hath said he dwelleth not in unholy temples, but in the hearts of the righteous doth he dwell” Does God really dwell in the hearts of righteous people? In April 1843, the prophet Joseph Smith preached in Ramus, Illinois and addressed a miscellany of differing subjects. He seemed to be answering a variety of questions. We don’t have access to the questions, but we do have the answers. Apparently in response to a question something like: Can the Father and the Son really get into our hearts and dwell there? His answer: “The idea that the Father and the Son dwell in a man’s heart is an old sectarian notion, and is false” (D&C 130:3). Obviously, we are dealing here with figurative language. The influence of the Father and the Son, through the mediation of the Spirit of God, can indeed dwell in our hearts—that is, it can influence profoundly our very feelings.

“the righteous shall sit down in his kingdom, to go no more out” This phrase may well apply to those spirits in paradise—the so-called “just men made perfect” (D&C 76:69)—as well as to those who are admitted into the celestial kingdom.

Those who qualify for celestial glory will indeed “sit down” or reside in his kingdom permanently—“to go no more out.”

verses 37-38 Now Amulek will provided an excellent “sum and substance” type summary of his teachings.

37 And now, my beloved brethren, I desire that ye should remember these things, and that ye should work out your salvation with fear before God, and that ye should no more deny the coming of Christ;

38 That ye contend no more against the Holy Ghost, but that ye receive it, and take upon you the name of Christ; that ye humble yourselves even to the dust, and worship God, in whatsoever place ye may be in, in spirit and in truth; and that ye live in thanksgiving daily, for the many mercies and blessings which he doth bestow upon you.

verse 38 “contend no more against the Holy Ghost” The apostle Paul used colorful terminology in giving this same counsel. He said, “Quench not the Spirit” (1 Thessalonians 5:19).

39 Yea, and I also exhort you, my brethren, that ye be watchful unto prayer continually, that ye may not be led away by the temptations of the devil, that he may not overpower you, that ye may not become his subjects at the last day; for behold, he rewardeth you no good thing.

verse 39 “he rewardeth you no good thing” Here Amulek utilizes a peculiar form of speech called antenantiosis which is discussed in the commentary for Jacob 4:8. He could have said, “he rewardeth you bad things.” Instead he used the negated opposite, “no good thing.” His intent is to emphasize the inevitability of horrible and evil consequences—torment, captivity, and damnation.

40 And now my beloved brethren, I would exhort you to have patience, and that ye bear with all manner of afflictions; that ye do not revile against those who do cast you out because of your exceeding poverty, lest ye become sinners like unto them;

41 But that ye have patience, and bear with those afflictions, with a firm hope that ye shall one day rest from all your afflictions.

verse 41 “rest from all your afflictions” There is more to this phrase than is initially apparent. For a discussion of the concept of the “rest of the Lord,” see the commentary for 2 Nephi 21:10.

1 Now it came to pass that after Amulek had made an end of these words, they withdrew themselves from the multitude and came over into the land of Jershon.

verse 1 Beyond this verse we will read nothing further about the activities of Amulek. He will be quoted by Helaman (Helaman 5:10) and Aminadab (Helaman 5:41), and he will be referred to by Moroni as an example of faith (Ether 12:13). We are left to wonder how, where, and with whom he spent his later years.

2 Yea, and the rest of the brethren, after they had preached the word unto the Zoramites, also came over into the land of Jershon.

verse 2 You will recall that the land of Jerson was the dwelling place of the people of Ammon, the Anti-Nephi-Lehies.

3 And it came to pass that after the more popular part of the Zoramites had consulted together concerning the words which had been preached unto them, they were angry because of the word, for it did destroy their craft; therefore they would not hearken unto the words.

verse 3 The “more popular part of the Zoramites” are the Zoramite majority or the mainstream Zoramites who are here contrasted with the poor Zoramites who accepted the gospel.

“they were angry because of the word, for it did destroy their craft” This same phrase is found in the New Testament when Paul’s missionary efforts threatened the idol makers in Ephesus who were angry because their “craft is in danger to be set at nought” (Acts 19:27). What is the Zoramites “craft”? Their “craft” refers to the nature of the Zoramites’ religious, economic, and social life. Brant Gardner has aptly explained: “Religion provided the formal underpinnings and outward presentation of the political structure. In the Zoramite case, the whole purpose and end of the religio-political structure was to maintain a social hierarchy. Egalitarian gospel principles, if adopted, would have destroyed the Zoramite social and political structure (not to mention their religion) (Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical & Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 4:488–489). Egalitarianism is the idea of the equality of all people, particularly in political, economic, or social life.

Ultimately, the Zoramite defection was a major catalyst for seven years of armed conflicts between the Nephites and the Lamanites often referred to as the war chapters in the book of Alma (The Zoramites played a significant role in three major military conflicts: the battle with Zerahemnah and the two Amalickiahite wars. For details concerning these conflicts, see John W. Welch and J. Gregory Welch, Charting the Book of Mormon, Provo, UT: FARMS, 2007, chart 137, wars 6–8). Those wars were led by Amalickiah and his brother Ammoron and their chief captains, all of whom were Zoramites (Alma 48:5; 54:23).

Geographic clues within the Book of Mormon can help readers understand why this turn of events was so disastrous. The “Zoramites had gathered themselves together in a land which they called Antionum, which was east of the land of Zarahemla, which lay nearly bordering upon the seashore” (Alma 31:3). With a Lamanite presence already in the south and west (Alma 22:28), this development led to the Nephites being precariously situated between two major Lamanite forces (Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical & Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols. (Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007), 4:566-68). One statement, in particular, helps readers recognize a major goal of the Nephites’ military strategy: “And it came to pass that the Nephites had inhabited the land Bountiful, even from the east unto the west sea, and thus the Nephites in their wisdom, with their guards and their armies, had hemmed in the Lamanites on the south, that thereby they should have no more possession on the north, that they might not overrun the land northward” (Alma 22:33). The Zoramite defection, therefore, posed a serious threat to the Nephites because the land of Antionum (where the Zoramites resided) bordered the land of Jershon (see Alma 31:3; 43:15; 43:22), and Jershon seemed to be a strategic military route into the northern land of Bountiful (Alma 27:22). For an example of how the Lamanites intentionally took advantage of multiple military fronts, see Alma 52:10–14.

Understanding the high stakes that were involved in this situation—meaning both the worth of souls among the Zoramites as well as the need to maintain them as military allies—can help readers better empathize with Alma’s great sorrow after the Zoramites rejected his message: “Now Alma, being grieved for the iniquity of his people, yea for the wars, and the bloodsheds, and the contentions which were among them; and having been to declare the word, or sent to declare the word, among all the people in every city; and seeing that the hearts of the people began to wax hard, and that they began to be offended because of the strictness of the word, his heart was exceedingly sorrowful” (Alma 35:15).

This episode also demonstrates the relationship between a society’s political well-being and the degree of heed it gives to the words of the prophets. As the military conflicts unfold in the Book of Mormon, it becomes increasingly clear that the greatest threat to the Nephite civilization was internal wickedness and dissension, rather than external enemies. In an editorial comment, Mormon later emphasized that it was Captain Moroni’s “first care to put an end to such contentions and dissensions among the people; for behold, this had been hitherto a cause of all their destruction” (Alma 51:16).

Such a pointed statement should serve as a strong word of caution to modern societies fraught with their own competing social interests and political intrigues. Social justice can only be achieved when all people respect one another's rights of religious liberty and mutual dignity, and Zion can only be achieved when faithful people unitedly heed the words of God's true messengers. Although missionary efforts are not always successful, modern readers are, like Alma, still obligated to "try the virtue of the word of God" because "it [has] more powerful effect upon the minds of the people than the sword, or anything else" (Alma 31:5).

4 And they sent and gathered together throughout all the land all the people, and consulted with them concerning the words which had been spoken.

5 Now their rulers and their priests and their teachers did not let the people know concerning their desires; therefore they found out privily the minds of all the people.

verse 5 "Desires" may be better rendered motives. "Privily" means in secret or secretly. The Zoramite leaders were trying to ascertain which, among their people, had supported and accepted the teachings of the missionaries. So, they surveyed the people in a way that did not betray the leaders' motives to the people being surveyed.

6 And it came to pass that after they had found out the minds of all the people, those who were in favor of the words which had been spoken by Alma and his brethren were cast out of the land; and they were many; and they came over also into the land of Jershon.

verses 5-6 Hugh Nibley has pointed out: "The Zoramites, as we have seen, had a thought-police, 'therefore they found out privily the minds of all the people,' and forthwith deported 'those who were in favor of the words . . . spoken by Alma'" (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, Volume 7, 350-51).

7 And it came to pass that Alma and his brethren did minister unto them.

8 Now the people of the Zoramites were angry with the people of Ammon who were in Jershon, and the chief ruler of the Zoramites, being a very wicked man, sent over unto the people of Ammon desiring them that they should cast out of their land all those who came over from them into their land.

9 And he breathed out many threatenings against them. And now the people of Ammon did not fear their words; therefore they did not cast them out, but they did receive all the poor of the Zoramites that came over unto them; and they did nourish them, and did clothe them, and did give unto them lands for their inheritance; and they did administer unto them according to their wants.

verse 9 Note again the association of the city of Jershon with the concept of land of inheritance (see the commentary for Alma 27:22).

10 Now this did stir up the Zoramites to anger against the people of Ammon, and they began to mix with the Lamanites and to stir them up also to anger against them.

11 And thus the Zoramites and the Lamanites began to make preparations for war against the people of Ammon, and also against the Nephites.

verse 11 One of the reasons Alma and his missionary group had traveled to Antionum to preach to the Zoramites was to prevent the Zoramites from entering into a “correspondence” or military treaty or alliance with the Lamanites. Obviously this aspect of Alma’s plan had not succeeded (see the commentary for verse 3).

Alma and his elite group of missionaries had also traveled to Antionum, the land of the Zoramites, after he received news that “the Zoramites were perverting the ways of the Lord” (Alma 31:1). He wanted to “preach unto them the word” of God (Alma 31:7). Yet despite efforts to reclaim these apostates, the Zoramites “cast out of the land” any who believed in the words of Alma and Amulek (Alma 35:6). As already noted, the Zoramite problem immediately escalated into a series of all-out wars in the land of Zarahemla.

13 And the people of Ammon departed out of the land of Jershon, and came over into the land of Melek, and gave place in the land of Jershon for the armies of the Nephites, that they might contend with the armies of the Lamanites and the armies of the Zoramites; and thus commenced a war betwixt the Lamanites and the Nephites, in the eighteenth year of the reign of the judges; and an account shall be given of their wars hereafter.

verse 13 The city of Melek may well have been selected for the physical security it offered the people of Ammon. The Nephite army had committed themselves to the protection of the conscientious-objector people of Ammon. See the suggested location for the city of Melek on the map Book of Mormon Lands, a Proposed Setting. See also the Hypothetical Map of the Book of Mormon. To the southwest Melek is secured by a range of impassable mountains, and to the northeast, the city of Zarahemla, the Nephite stronghold provided protection.

Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines betwixt as, “Between; in the space that separates two persons or things.”

14 And Alma, and Ammon, and their brethren, and also the two sons of Alma returned to the land of Zarahemla, after having been instruments in the hands of God of bringing many of the Zoramites to repentance; and as many as were brought to repentance were driven out of their land; but they have lands for their inheritance in the land of Jershon, and they have taken up arms to defend themselves, and their wives, and children, and their lands.

verse 14 “but they have lands for their inheritance in the land of Jershon”

Again, the association of the concept of a land of inheritance is seen in association with the land of Jershon (see the commentary for Alma 27:22).

15 Now Alma, being grieved for the iniquity of his people, yea for the wars, and the bloodsheds, and the contentions which were among them; and having been to declare the word, or sent to declare the word, among all the people in every city; and seeing that the hearts of the people began to wax hard, and that they began to be offended because of the strictness of the word, his heart was exceedingly sorrowful.

16 Therefore, he caused that his sons should be gathered together, that he might give unto them every one his charge, separately, concerning the things pertaining unto righteousness. And we have an account of his commandments, which he gave unto them according to his own record.

verse 16 “And we have an account of his commandments, which he gave unto them according to his own record” This statement by the author Mormon may be referred to as a “colophon.” A colophon is a statement of authorship and an indication or explanation of what is to come. This statement serves as the header for Alma chapters 36 through 42. Please review the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:1-3 in which Dr. Hugh Nibley explains the meaning of the colophon and teaches that they are characteristic of ancient Egyptian documents.

In the past several years, there have been discovered several pieces of evidence connecting the Book of Mormon text with the Jewish pilgrimage festivals. See the supplementary article, The Jewish Pilgrimage Festivals and Their Relationship to King Benjamin’s Speech. One article (“The Sons of the Passover,” in Reexploring the Book of Mormon, 196-98) suggests a relationship between the traditional Israelite observance of Passover and Alma 36-42. “Passover, of course, commemorates the deliverance of the Israelites from Egypt by the power of God. As part of this celebration, fathers would gather their sons in accordance with Exodus 10:2, which told the Jews ‘to tell in the ears of thy son, and of thy son’s son, what things I have wrought in Egypt.’ . . . After gathering his family, the father then instructed his sons and answered their questions. . . Each of Alma’s admonitions to his sons, Helaman (Alma 36-37), Shiblon (Alma 38), and Corianton (Alma 39-42), does this precisely, each in his own way. Alma’s admonitions to his three sons which follow in chapters 36-42 may well have been spoken in conjunction with a Nephite observance of the feast of the Passover.”

Alma 36:3 Alma to his son Helaman: I do know that whosoever shall put their trust in God shall be supported in their trials, and their troubles, and their afflictions, and shall be lifted up at the last day.

Alma 36:17-21 Alma recalls for his son Helaman the account of his conversion. There could be nothing so exquisite and so bitter as were my pains and nothing so exquisite and sweet as was my joy.

The Jewish Festival of Passover. Chapters 36 through 42 consist of Alma's counsel to his sons Helaman, Shiblon, and Corianton following his return from preaching to the Zoramites. Chapters 36 and 37 are directed to his eldest son Helaman. Chapter 38 was given to Alma's son Shiblon, and chapters 39-42 to his previously wayward son Corianton.

Some scholars have suggested a direct relationship between this session of counseling Alma's counseling his sons and the Jewish festival of Passover. Gordon C. Thomasson and John W. Welch related: "According to traditions at least as early as the time of Christ and probably earlier, after gathering his family the father then instructed his sons and answered their questions. His words were not fixed but were "to fit the knowledge and understanding of the child" and were supposed "to spell out the sequence of sin, suffering, repentance, and redemption" (Gordon C. Thomasson and John W. Welch, "The Sons of the Passover," in Reexploring the Book of Mormon: A Decade of New Research, ed. John W. Welch, Salt Lake City and Provo UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1992, 196).

What makes the link between Alma's words to his three sons and this Passover tradition particularly striking is that, according to some Jewish customs, the sons often asked questions and played out different roles and characters (Martin Sicker, A Passover Seder Companion and Analytic Introduction to the Haggadah, New York: iUniverse, 2004, 55-64).

The first was a wise son, who quoted from Deuteronomy, asking: "What mean the testimonies, and the statutes, and the judgments, which the Lord our God hath commanded you?" (Deuteronomy 6:7). Alma's eldest son, Helaman, clearly stands out as Alma's wise son,⁴ and it is notable that in addressing him, Alma mentions 'wisdom' at least eight times in Alma 37. Whatever Alma himself thought of Helaman's worthiness or righteousness, he told Helaman “that God has entrusted you with these sacred things” (Alma 37:14). In other words, this wasn’t just about a father choosing his favorite son, but rather is an example of the Lord’s choosing who will succeed the presiding prophet. Interestingly, although Helaman was chosen as the new spiritual leader of the church, Alma did not explicitly praise him for his righteousness, as he did for Shiblon. In fact, his words to Helaman were strictly filled with exhortations and warnings. See the following examples: “give ear to my words” (Alma 36:1), “ye should do as I have done” (verse 2), “I beseech of thee that thou wilt hear my words” (verse 3), “ye ought to know as I do know” (verse 30), “I command you that ye take the records” (Alma 37:1), “I also command thee to keep a record of this people” (verse 2), “keep all these things sacred” (verse 2), “ye may suppose that this is foolishness in me; but . . . (verse 6), “O, remember, remember, my son Helaman, how strict are the commandments of God” (verse 13), “now remember, my son, that God has entrusted you with these things” (verse 14), “if ye transgress the commandments of God, behold, these things which are sacred shall be taken away from you” (verse 15), “But if ye keep the commandments . . . no power of earth or hell can take them from you” (verse 16), “Therefore I command you . . . that ye be diligent in fulfilling all my words” (verse 20), “I command you that you retain all their oaths” (verse 27), “Therefore ye shall keep these secret plans of their oaths and their covenants from this people” (verse 29), “And now, my son, remember the words which I have spoken unto you” (verse 32), “Preach unto them repentance, and faith” (verse 33), “Teach them to never be weary of good works” (verse 34), “O, remember, my son and learn wisdom in thy youth; yea learn in thy youth to keep the commandments of God” (verse 35), “cry unto God for all thy support” (verse 36), “counsel with the Lord in all thy doings” (verse 37), “I would that you should understand” (verse 43), “O my son, do not let us be slothful” (verse 46), “see that ye take care of these sacred things” (verse 47).

The second was a wicked son, who quoted from Exodus, asking: “What mean ye by this service?” (Exodus 12:26).

This son is depicted in the Jewish literature as one guilty of social crimes, who had excluded himself from the community, and believed in false doctrines. According to Jewish practice, he is to be told, in a manner that will “set his teeth on edge,” that he will be punished for his own sins (Thomasson and Welch, “Sons of Passover,” 197). Obviously, this description applies fittingly to Corianton, who struggled with moral transgressions and found several false doctrines attractive.

Finally, a third son would ask, “What is this?” (Exodus 13:14). “Israelite tradition said that the uninformed son who asked this question needed to be taught the law and given preventative instruction to keep him well away from any risk of breaking the law” (Thomasson and Welch, “Sons of Passover,” 197). Along these lines, Alma informatively warned Shiblon⁹ concerning the problems of pride, overbearance, unbridled passions, idleness, and the apostate practices of the Zoramites.

See Alma 38:11–14. These warnings to Shiblon can be contrasted with Helaman, who despite having been strictly commissioned and commanded to fulfill his charge (see footnote 5), was not quite as explicitly or directly warned against sin.

Interestingly, the modern Church today has its own parallels to ancient Israel's miraculous deliverance. Such observances in our day can help readers of the scriptures to appreciate and relate to the solemn impact of the words of Alma centuries ago. Elder Russel M. Nelson taught, "Both groups shared many miracles that are memorialized annually. The celebration of Passover relates to the travels of the ancient Israelites. And each July we repeat legendary stories of our pioneers" (Russel M. Nelson, "The Exodus Repeated," Ensign, July 1999, at lds.org). Like Alma's sons, modern members of the house of Israel of all kinds have a duty to "always retain in remembrance" the hand of the Lord in their own divine deliverance (Alma 36:29).

Chiastic parallelism. Chiastic parallelism or chiasmus is a form of Hebrew poetry. For a review of this and other types of Hebrew poetry see the supplemental article The Hebrew Language and the Book of Mormon. Basically, it consists of arranging a series of words or ideas in one order, and then repeating them in reverse order. The central idea of the passage is placed at the turning point where the first half ends and the second half begins.

John W. Welch has pointed out that verses 1 through 30 of this chapter contain a "masterfully crafted chiasm . . . which centers on the turning point of Alma's life, which was when he called upon Jesus Christ for forgiveness." He also commented, "Alma 36 was one of the first chiasms I discovered within the Book of Mormon in 1967. Many years later, it still remains one of my favorites. It is a masterpiece of composition, as good as any other use of chiasmus in world literature, and it deserves wide recognition and appreciation. I cannot imagine that its complex and purposeful structure happened unintentionally. Its sophistication as a piece of literature definitely shows Alma's skill as a writer." Commenting further on Alma's writing skill, Brother Welch opined, "If an author uses chiasmus mechanically, it can produce rigid, stilted writing. . . Alma, however, does not simply stick a list of ideas together in one order and then awkwardly and slavishly retrace his steps through that list in the opposite order. His work has the markings of a skillful, painstaking writer, one completely comfortable with using this difficult mode of expression well." Undoubtedly Alma learned the use of chiasmus as part of a long literary tradition which began with Old Testament prophets.

If the reader wishes to read a charming summary of Brother Welch's first discovering the chiastic poetry form in the Book of Mormon while he was serving a mission in Regensburg, Germany in 1967, please see "The Book of Mormon" in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 20, Joseph Smith.

This writing style was first discovered in the 1820s by two British scholars (John Jebb in 1820 and Thomas Boys in 1824 and 1825). They both published books about their new recognition of this form of parallelism in the Bible. There is little reason to believe that the young and unlettered Joseph Smith was aware of these books or, even if he were, that he would have been sufficiently equipped to create elaborate and meaningful passages utilizing a form rather foreign to his own culture's way of thinking and writing.

I will make no effort to report here Doctor Welch's complete analysis of the chiasmic structure of Alma 36. However, I thought it might be of interest to the reader to illustrate the general structure of this fascinating chapter. There are seventeen key elements, each repeated twice. The verse numbers are indicated in parentheses:

- a My son give ear to my words (1)
- b Keep the commandments and ye shall prosper in the land (1)
- c Do as I have done (2)
- d Remember the captivity of our fathers (2)
- e They were in bondage (2)
- f He surely did deliver them (2)
- g Trust in God (3)
- h Supported in trials, troubles, and afflictions (3)
- i Lifted up at the last day (3)
- j I know this not of myself but of God (4)
- k Born of God (5)
- l I sought to destroy the church (6-9)

- n Fear of being in the presence of God (14-15)
- o Pains of a damned soul (16)
- p Harrowed up by the memory of sins (17)
- q I remembered Jesus Christ, a son of God (17)
- q' I cried, Jesus, a son of God (18)
- p' Harrowed up by the memory of sins no more (19)
- o' Joy as exceeding as was the pain (20)
- n' Long to be in the presence of God (22)
- m' My limbs received strength again (23)
- l' I labored to bring souls to repentance (24)

- f' He will deliver me (27)
- e' As God brought our fathers out of bondage and captivity (28-29)
- d' Retain in remembrance their captivity (28-29)
- c' Know as I do know (30)
- b' Keep the commandments and ye shall prosper in the land (30)
- a' This according to his word (30)

The reader should particularly note the repetition of Jesus Christ as the Son of God at the precise center of the chapter. Note also that elements h and h' are both marked by the same triplet “supported under trials, troubles, and afflictions.” Most dramatically, n and n' contrast the agony of Alma's suffering (verse 12) with his joy following his conversion (verse 20). Indeed, he makes the contrast very explicit: “Yea, my soul was filled with joy as exceeding as was my pain” (verse 20, italics added). This overt comparison strongly supports the idea that Alma consciously created the chiasmic structure of this chapter in order to strengthen these linkages.

Chiasmus can occur in any literature, but it only becomes meaningful when its degree of chiasticity, to coin a phrase, is high. When the chiasmic format is truly complex and concise, we are most justified in supposing that the author intentionally followed the pattern. At least fifteen criteria, including objectivity, purposefulness, climax, centrality, boundaries, length, density, and balance as described here, demonstrate that the chiasmus in Alma 36 can best be explained only if Alma learned it as part of a long literary tradition extending back to Old Testament prophets.

Grant Hardy noted, Alma's “account moves from public to personal to private and then back again” (Understanding the Book of Mormon: A Reader's Guide (New York, NY: Oxford University Press, 2010), 140). Throughout the whole account, Hardy noticed the remarkable detail that “God is present in every phase.” Hardy thus thought “the order and purposeful design of Alma 36 suggests a world in which God . . . is in control, where the lives of individuals fit into some overarching . . . plan” (Hardy, Understanding the Book of Mormon, 140–141).

Central to that plan is Jesus Christ and his atoning power. While Alma on some occasions placed emphasis on the angelic encounter, it was not the appearance of the angel that caused Alma's change of heart. Indeed, the chiasmic structure in Alma 36 eloquently and effectively guides the reader most centrally and emphatically toward Alma's direct, personal encounter with Jesus Christ. Welch noted: “The structure of the chapter powerfully communicates Alma's personal experience, for the central turning point of his conversion came precisely when he called upon the name of Jesus Christ and asked for mercy. Nothing was more important than this in Alma's conversion—neither the appearance of the angel, nor the prayers of his father and the priests. Just as this was the turning point of Alma's life, he makes it the center of this magnificent composition” (John W. Welch, “A Masterpiece: Alma 36,” in Rediscovering the Book of Mormon: Insights You May Have Missed Before, ed. John L. Sorenson and Melvin J. Thorne, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1991, 118; John W. Welch, “Chiasmus in the Book of Mormon,” in Book of Mormon Authorship: New Light on Ancient Origins, ed. Noel B. Reynolds, Provo, UT: Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, 1982; reprint, FARMS, 1996, 51).

The point of this remarkable literary structure underscores the dramatic turnaround in Alma’s life, answering most assuredly the question, why was Alma converted? That conversion occurred when he remembered his father speaking of “the coming of one Jesus Christ, a Son of God, to atone for the sins of the world,” which caused him to call out, “O Jesus, thou Son of God, have mercy on me, who am in the gall of bitterness, and am encircled about the by everlasting chains of death” (Alma 36:17–18).

From that turning point, the chiasmic pattern takes on what Noel B. Reynolds termed a “reverse polarity between the parallel units of text” (Reynolds, “Rethinking Alma 36,” 6, and unpublished paper). While once “harrowed up by the memory of [his] many sins” (Alma 36:17), he was “harrowed up by the memory of [his] sins no more” (verse 19). Where once there was “the pains of a damned soul” (verse 16), there now a “soul . . . filled with joy as exceeding as was [the] pain!” (verse 20).

The reversal here proceeds out from the central point until Alma’s effort “to destroy the church of God” (Alma 36:6) is juxtaposed with his new, unceasing effort to “bring souls unto repentance” (verse 24). From this reversal, Welch reasoned, “The message is clear: Christ’s atonement and man’s responding sacrifice of a broken heart and willing mind are central to receiving forgiveness from God” (Welch, “A Masterpiece,” 127).

It is hard to imagine any literary form being used more effectively than this extended chiasm to articulate the transformative effect of the Atonement in the lives of individuals all around the world. Many have felt as Alma felt. As a result, Alma 36 naturally and powerfully resonates with readers everywhere. After reading Alma 36 with Welch, prominent biblical scholar David Noel Freedman remarked, “Mormons are very lucky. Their book is very beautiful” (As quoted in John W. Welch, “What Does Chiasmus in the Book of Mormon Prove?” in Book of Mormon Authorship Revisited: The Evidence for Ancient Origins, ed. Noel B. Reynolds, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1997, 206). After extensive study of Alma 36, Welch concluded: “This text ranks as one of the best uses of chiasmus one can imagine. It merits high acclaim and recognition. Despite its complexity, the meaning of the chapter is both simple and profound. Alma’s words are both inspired and inspiring, religious and literary, historical and timeless, clear yet complex—a text that deserves to be pondered for years to come” (Welch, “A Masterpiece,” 131).

For a more complete analysis of this chiasmic composition, see Brother Welch’s article “A Masterpiece: Alma 36” in Rediscovering the Book of Mormon, 114-31.

1 My son, give ear to my words; for I swear unto you, that inasmuch as ye shall keep the commandments of God ye shall prosper in the land.

verse 1 “inasmuch as ye shall keep the commandments of God ye shall prosper in the land” Alma apparently intends that this prospering “in the land” is both a temporal and a spiritual prospering. Evidence for this is seen in verse 30 where he uses antithetical parallelism to emphasize this concept. There he says, “inasmuch as ye will not keep the commandments of God ye shall be cut off from his presence.”

2 I would that ye should do as I have done, in remembering the captivity of our fathers; for they were in bondage, and none could deliver them except it was the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob; and he surely did deliver them in their afflictions.

verse 2 Shouldn't this verse say, “he surely did deliver them from their afflictions” rather than “in their afflictions. The chiasmic structure of this verse suggests that “in their afflictions” refers to the Israelites’ captivity or bondage. They were in bondage and none could rescue them save God himself. Similarly, they were afflicted and none other than God could save them.

The captivity referred to here in this verse includes that of the senior Alma and his flock of captive Nephi’s in the land of Helam in Mosiah 24:17-21, the captivity of King Limhi and his flock of Nephites in the Land of Nephi (Mosiah 22), and the captivity of the Israelites in Egypt. See also Mosiah 27:16

3 And now, O my son Helaman, behold, thou art in thy youth, and therefore, I beseech of thee that thou wilt hear my words and learn of me; for I do know that whosoever shall put their trust in God shall be supported in their trials, and their troubles, and their afflictions, and shall be lifted up at the last day.

verse 3 To be “lifted up at the last day” is to be exalted in the celestial kingdom.

verses 4-26 These verses contain the Book of Mormon’s second of three accounts of the story of the conversion of Alma. The first was found in Mosiah 27:8-37 and the third will be found in Alma 38:6-8. For a comparison of these three accounts, see the commentary for Mosiah 27:8-37.

4 And I would not that ye think that I know of myself—not of the temporal but of the spiritual, not of the carnal mind but of God.

verse 4 Alma emphasizes that his faith in God and his knowledge of the truth of the gospel is not knowledge acquired by temporal means. It is rather personal revelation through the medium of the Spirit of God.

5 Now, behold, I say unto you, if I had not been born of God I should not have known these things; but God has, by the mouth of his holy angel, made these things known unto me, not of any worthiness of myself.

verse 5 “not of any worthiness of myself” Alma acknowledges that his own miraculous conversion, and that of the sons of Mosiah, was not the result of their own worthiness. Rather it was brought about by an all-knowing God for reasons perhaps known fully only to God himself. Certainly, at least in part, it was to further his work among the Nephite and Lamanite peoples.

6 For I went about with the sons of Mosiah, seeking to destroy the church of God; but behold, God sent his holy angel to stop us by the way.

7 And behold, he spake unto us, as it were the voice of thunder, and the whole earth did tremble beneath our feet; and we all fell to the earth, for the fear of the Lord came upon us.

verses 6-7 Each of us is familiar with Joseph Smith’s First Vision through the canonical account found in the Pearl of Great Price (Joseph Smith—History 1:15–20), but this was not the only time Joseph told people about his First Vision. Joseph told the story on many occasions. Today, four different firsthand accounts and a handful of secondhand account survive. The Church and Brigham Young University, in numerous books and journals, have published, for many years, extensive resources on the various accounts of the First Vision. Beginning in 1969, Dean C. Jessee published “The Early Accounts of Joseph Smith’s First Vision,” in BYU Studies, 9 no. 3, 1969: 275-94, followed soon by James B. These various accounts make Joseph Smith’s vision “the best-documented theophany—vision of God—in history” (Harper, Joseph Smith’s First Vision, 1), and when studied together can enhance a person’s understanding of that foundational event.

Because events like this are likely defining moments in the lives of the prophets who experience them, it is common for them to give multiple accounts of their visionary experiences. For instance, three accounts of Paul’s vision of the risen Christ are found in the New Testament (See Acts 9:3–30; 22:6–21; 26:12–21; see in addition 2 Corinthians 11:32–33 and Galatians 1:15–24). These different accounts were told or written years apart from each other and to completely different audiences, and thus each offers a different perspective (John A. Tvedtnes, “The Voice of an Angel,” in Book of Mormon Authorship Revisited, ed. Noel B. Reynolds, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1997, 312. For comparison of Paul’s various accounts, see John A. Tvedtnes, “Variants in the Stories of the First Vision of Joseph Smith and Apostle Paul,” Interpreter: A Journal of Mormon Scripture 2, 2012: 73–86).

Alma the Younger’s experience with the angel is also recorded multiple times (Mosiah 27:8–37, Alma 36:4–26 and 38:6–8). Alma’s multiple tellings of his conversion story offer several points of comparison with Joseph Smith’s multiple tellings of his First Vision (On comparing Alma’s accounts, see John W. Welch, “Three Accounts of Alma’s Conversion,” in Reexploring the Book of Mormon: A Decade of New Research, ed. John W. Welch, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1992, 150. On comparing Joseph Smith’s accounts, see James B. Allen and John W. Welch, “The Appearance of the Father and the Son to Joseph Smith in 1820,” in Opening the Heavens: Accounts of Divine Manifestations 1820-1844, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book and BYU Press, 2005; 2nd edition, 2017, 35-75).

John W. Welch has concluded that the accounts of Alma’s vision differ from each other, in light of their individual settings and audiences, but distinctive details in these three accounts show that they all came from the same person. Evidence for this is found in the repetition of distinctive phrases between the accounts. For example, Mosiah 27:11 states that the angel spoke with “a voice of thunder, which caused the earth to shake upon which they stood,” and Alma 36:7 states: “He spake unto us, as it were the voice of thunder and the whole earth did tremble beneath our feet.” Alma 38:7 does the same thing: “I have seen an angel face to face, and he spake with me, and his voice was as thunder, and it shook the whole earth” (Welch, “Three Accounts of Alma’s Conversion,” 151).

Several other phrases in Mosiah 27:28–29, like born of God, the gall of bitterness, marvelous light, racked with eternal torment, and pained no more (Mosiah 27:28–29) are used again in Alma 36 (“God did rack my soul” [Alma 36:14] “with eternal torment” [Alma 36:12]. “I cried . . . have mercy on me, who am in the gall of bitterness” [verse 18]. “I could remember my pains no more” [verse 19]. “What marvelous light” [Alma 36:20]. “I had been born of God” [verse 23]). Repetitions like this are good evidence that one person experienced and wrote all that the three accounts report. Welch reasoned, “Alma had told his story many times and had grown accustomed to using these characteristic words and phrases” (Welch, “Three Accounts of Alma’s Conversion,” 151).

The details in the accounts are impressively consistent. In Mosiah 27 and Alma 36, Alma was told to “arise” (Mosiah 27:12–13; Alma 36:7–8) and “remember the captivity of thy fathers” (Mosiah 27:16; Alma 36:2, 28–29), exactly the same words in both accounts (Welch, “Three Accounts of Alma’s Conversion,” 151). There are also differences between the accounts (See John W. Welch and J. Gregory Welch, Charting the Book of Mormon: Visual Aids for Personal Study and Teaching, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1999, chart 106). For example, the sons of Mosiah are mentioned more often in Mosiah 27:18 and 32 than in Alma 36, likely because King Mosiah reported the events in Mosiah 27, whereas Alma composed Alma 36 and 38 (Welch, “Three Accounts of Alma’s Conversion,” 151).

Another example is Mosiah 27:24–31, a statement which seems unrehearsed. As Welch stated, “They are full of emotion and rejoicing; they are direct, first-person declarations.” In contrast, Welch has noted that Alma’s comments in Alma 36 and 38 “show signs of thoughtful reflection, of years of thinking about his momentous conversion” (Welch, “Three Accounts of Alma’s Conversion,” 151).

For instance, in the later accounts Alma has placed his words into the context of his religious tradition (Welch, “Three Accounts of Alma’s Conversion,” 152). Instead of referring only to his father’s deliverance from Helam (as the angel mentioned in Mosiah 27:16), Alma also referred to older parallels: the deliverance of Lehi from Jerusalem and the Israelites from Egypt (see Alma 36:28–29) (Welch, “Three Accounts of Alma’s Conversion,” 152).

Other differences are present because Alma “has also applied his spiritual experience to his readers’ daily religious practice, drawing lessons about trusting in the Lord throughout one’s trials, troubles, and afflictions (see Alma 36:3, 27; 38:5), and about living a moral, righteous life (see Alma 38:9–15)” (Welch, “Three Accounts of Alma’s Conversion,” 152).

Alma even changed the structure from one telling to the next. Mosiah 27:29–30 contains an ancient Israelite poetic style called antithetical parallelism (“I was X, but now I am Y,”) which he repeated four times. In Alma 36, he rearranged these into one “masterfully crafted chiasmic composition” (See the introductory commentary for this chapter.). The focus of the chiasm is the turning point of Alma’s life, the point when he called upon Christ for forgiveness. He placed the negative attributes from Mosiah 27:29–30 into the first half of the chiasm and their positive opposites into the second half (Welch, “Three Accounts of Alma’s Conversion,” 152. Welch also noted that “Alma 38 is equally interesting. It presents essentially the first half of the chiasm found in Alma 36, up to the climactic turning point, before shifting into hortatory speech admonishing his second son. Having given the doubled version to his eldest son, Helaman, in Alma 36, Alma evidently felt no need to give the fully repeated structure to Shiblon in Alma 38).

Prophets, including Alma and Joseph Smith, spoke and wrote about their experiences on multiple occasions in different ways. In the cases of both Alma and Joseph Smith, this was because they were writing about the experience to different audiences at different points in their lives. As Welch noted, referring to Alma, “The three accounts . . . consistently reflect different vantage points in Alma’s life. In Mosiah 27, Alma is a young man, spontaneously overwhelmed by the power of the angel and terrified by the prospect of the day of judgment (see Mosiah 27:31). Later in Alma’s life, it is clear that the older man has faithfully and successfully served his Lord and his people all the rest of his days (see Alma 36:24–26) so that he now emphasizes his longing to be present with God (see Alma 36:22) (Welch, “Three Accounts of Alma’s Conversion,” 153).

This is not to say that either Joseph or Alma made things up as they went along. Rather, their variation in details seems to have been prompted by their varying audiences and inspired by what they had been going through in their individual lives (See Allen and Welch, “Appearance of the Father and Son,” 37). In the 1832 account, for example, Joseph focused on the essence of the Savior and only alluded to the presence of the Father because he was focusing more on the atoning power of Christ (Allen and Welch, “Appearance of the Father and Son,” 63). Yet in both the case of Alma and Joseph, the retellings have all the hallmarks of a genuine memory being told and retold over a lifetime. When seen together, the different accounts create a coherent picture that it what one would expect from a real story being told at different times to different audiences.

Both Joseph Smith and Alma seem to have gone back to their memories of these visions repeatedly throughout their lives, turning to them as a source of strength and using them to teach others (Compare Alma 5:7–14 to Alma 36. See S. Kent Brown, “Alma’s Conversion: Reminiscences in His Sermons,” in The Book of Mormon: Alma, The Testimony of the Word, ed. Monte S. Nyman and Charles D. Tate, Jr., Provo, UT: Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, 1993, 144). It may well have been hard, if not impossible, for Joseph and Alma to even explain such overwhelmingly glorious events to the people around them, yet they did their best, knowing how much their experiences could help others. As Welch noted, referring to Alma, “these three accounts still profoundly bear the unmistakable imprints of a single distinctive person, who throughout his adult lifetime had lived with, thought about, matured through, and insightfully taught by means of his powerful and beautiful conversion story” (Welch, “Three Accounts of Alma’s Conversion,” 153). And of Joseph Smith, one can similarly conclude: “There is, in fact, striking consistency throughout the narratives [of the First Vision]; they combine impressively to give a consistent and coherent picture . . . showing a high degree of interdependent, cumulative corroboration among these accounts” (Allen and Welch, “Appearance of the Father and the Son,” 70).

Alma and Joseph Smith drew strength from their spiritual experiences and used them to teach others. In the same way, modern readers of the Book of Mormon can return repeatedly to the spiritual experiences in their lives as a source of strength. They can also, like Alma and Joseph, repeatedly ponder the significance of these events and apply their spiritual experiences to their daily religious practice, drawing lesson after lesson from the same experience at different points in their lives, depending on their circumstances.

8 But behold, the voice said unto me: Arise. And I arose and stood up, and beheld the angel.

9 And he said unto me: If thou wilt of thyself be destroyed, seek no more to destroy the church of God.

verse 9 Here is a most solemn warning given by the angel. The exact meaning of his warning, however, is not entirely clear from this verse. Verse 11 suggests that Alma took from the angel’s warning the meaning that if he did not desist in his efforts to destroy the church he would be destroyed—either temporally or spiritually. If the verse is read carefully, however, this is not quite its meaning. An alternative meaning is: Cease immediately in your efforts to destroy the church of God, even if it means being destroyed yourself. This latter meaning is corroborated by Mosiah 27:16 which contains another account of the angel’s issuing this warning: “I say unto thee, Alma, go thy way, and seek to destroy the church no more, that their prayers may be answered, and this even if thou wilt of thyself be cast off.”

10 And it came to pass that I fell to the earth; and it was for the space of three days and three nights that I could not open my mouth, neither had I the use of my limbs.

11 And the angel spake more things unto me, which were heard by my brethren, but I did not hear them; for when I heard the words—If thou wilt be destroyed of thyself, seek no more to destroy the church of God—I was struck with such great fear and amazement lest perhaps I should be destroyed, that I fell to the earth and I did hear no more.

verse 11 “seek no more to destroy the church of God” This is the third mention of this command given to Alma by the angel of God (see also verses 6 and 9). This three-fold repetition creates a powerful emphasis.

12 But I was racked with eternal torment, for my soul was harrowed up to the greatest degree and racked with all my sins.

verse 12 “Eternal torment” is not torment that goes on forever. Rather Eternal is a name for God. Eternal torment is God’s torment.

To be “racked” is to be severely afflicted. To be “harrowed up” means to be vexed, tormented, distressed, afflicted, or tortured.

13 Yea, I did remember all my sins and iniquities, for which I was tormented with the pains of hell; yea, I saw that I had rebelled against my God, and that I had not kept his holy commandments.

verse 13 “I did remember all my sins and iniquities” We have learned that in the day of judgment, we “shall have a perfect knowledge of all our guilt” (2 Nephi 9:14).

14 Yea, and I had murdered many of his children, or rather led them away unto destruction; yea, and in fine so great had been my iniquities, that the very thought of coming into the presence of my God did rack my soul with inexpressible horror.

verse 14 “In fine” means in summary or in conclusion.

“the very thought of coming into the presence of my God did rack my soul with inexpressible horror” To rack is to torment; to torture; to affect with extreme pain or anguish. This was Alma’s expression before completion of the conversion process. After his conversion, his feelings were quite the opposite: “I saw . . . God sitting upon his throne, surrounded with numberless concourses of angels . . . and my soul did long to be there” (verse 22).

15 Oh, thought I, that I could be banished and become extinct both soul and body, that I might not be brought to stand in the presence of my God, to be judged of my deeds.

verse 15 “Soul and body” means spirit and body. Alma was so chagrined over his previously sinful ways, that he wished he might be annihilated and thus avoid having to stand before God to be judged for his misdeeds.

16 And now, for three days and for three nights was I racked, even with the pains of a damned soul.

verse 16 Guilt is that emotional and spiritual anguish experienced by mankind because of having “set at defiance the commandments of God” (Alma 5:18). Guilt is to the spirit what physical pain is to the body. For another scriptural description of guilt, see Mosiah 2:38. The divine form of guilt is termed “godly sorrow” and is a gift of the Spirit which God intends as a motivator toward repentance and obedience. For a discussion of godly sorrow, see the commentary for Mosiah 26:29. See also Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 3, Godly Sorrow.

17 And it came to pass that as I was thus racked with torment, while I was harrowed up by the memory of my many sins, behold, I remembered also to have heard my father prophesy unto the people concerning the coming of one Jesus Christ, a Son of God, to atone for the sins of the world.

verse 17 For the meaning of “harrowed up” see the commentary for verse 12.

“Jesus Christ, a Son of God” Alma was tormented by his sins. Only when he remembered that his father had spoken of the atonement of Christ and then called upon Jesus Christ did his agony begin to change.

In the introduction to this chapter the fascinating work of John Welch on the poetic structure of Alma 36 was mentioned. Brother Welch commented upon this verse and verse 18 as follows: “I am especially impressed with the repetition of the name “Jesus Christ, Son of God” at the very center of the chapter. This unquestionably had deep significance for Alma. It is one of the best examples of any ancient author succeeding in placing the most important concept at the central or turning point of his passage. By this, the structure of the chapter powerfully communicates Alma’s personal experience, for the central turning point of his conversion came precisely when he called upon the name of Jesus Christ and asked for mercy. Nothing was more important than this in Alma’s conversion—neither the appearance of the angel, nor the prayers of his father and the priests. Just as this was the turning point of Alma’s life, he makes it the center of his magnificent composition” (Rediscovering the Book of Mormon, 118).

18 Now, as my mind caught hold upon this thought, I cried within my heart: O Jesus, thou Son of God, have mercy on me, who am in the gall of bitterness, and am encircled about by the everlasting chains of death.

verse 18 “in the gall of bitterness” Gall is a bitter and poisonous herb. “Its juice is commonly thought to be the “hemlock” poison which Socrates drank” (Interpreter’s Dictionary of the Bible). When the word is used in the Bible, it is usually interpreted to mean poison. In the Old Testament, gall is often mentioned in association with wormwood which a plant with a bitter taste. It is interesting that the specific phrase “gall of bitterness” is found in only one scriptural verse outside the Book of Mormon—Acts 8:23. Perhaps both Alma and Paul were quoting the phrase from an unknown Old Testament period source.

verses 17-18 Brother John W. Welch comments further: “At the absolute center [of this chapter] stand the words ‘atone,’ ‘mind,’ and ‘heart,’ bordered by the name of Jesus Christ. The message is clear: Christ’s atonement and man’s responding sacrifice of a broken heart and willing mind are central to receiving forgiveness from God” (Ibid., 127).

19 And now, behold, when I thought this, I could remember my pains no more; yea, I was harrowed up by the memory of my sins no more.

20 And oh, what joy, and what marvelous light I did behold; yea, my soul was filled with joy as exceeding as was my pain!

21 Yea, I say unto you, my son, that there could be nothing so exquisite and so bitter as were my pains. Yea, and again I say unto you, my son, that on the other hand, there can be nothing so exquisite and sweet as was my joy.

22 Yea, methought I saw, even as our father Lehi saw, God sitting upon his throne, surrounded with numberless concourses of angels, in the attitude of singing and praising their God; yea, and my soul did long to be there.

verse 22 “saw God sitting upon his throne, surrounded with numberless concourses of angels, in the attitude of singing and praising their God” John W. Welch has pointed out that this phrase and others in the Book of Mormon text provide a remarkable example of internal textual consistency in the Book of Mormon (Reexploring the Book of Mormon, 21-23). In this verse, Alma is quoting father Lehi. Some twenty-one words are quoted verbatim from 1 Nephi 1:8. This is not surprising since Alma had charge of the small plates of Nephi and thus had ready access to Lehi’s words (see Alma 37:2). In describing his joy, Alma thought of Lehi’s experience in 1 Nephi 1:8 and quoted verbatim these twenty-one words. It is interesting, in this context, to recall the method of translation used by Joseph Smith as he brought forth the book of Mormon. He dictated his translation to a scribe pausing only to allow the scribe to complete the recording. Once recorded, he did not go back and review or revise the text. At the beginning of each translation session, he simply began exactly where he had left off in the previous session without going back to review.

How then might we explain the twenty-one-word phrase that is shared by these two verses, particularly since they are separated by hundreds of pages of text, and they were dictated weeks apart? The answer is that it was Alma who looked back in the record and found the quote of father Lehi. It was not Joseph Smith. Joseph was merely the translator and not the writer or editor. There are other examples of this same phenomenon in the Book of Mormon. For example, compare Helaman 14:12 with Mosiah 3:8. Also compare 3 Nephi 8:6-23 with 1 Nephi 19:11-12. Perhaps this observation has not struck you as very interesting. If it has not, then just try quoting any twenty-one words of Lehi without looking!

In a similar manner, King Benjamin established a law containing five proscriptions: murder, plunder, theft, adultery, and any manner of wickedness. This list which first appears in Mosiah 2:13 reappears in seven other verses in the Book of Mormon: Mosiah 29:36; Alma 23:3; 30:10; Helaman 3:13; 6:23; 7:21; and Ether 8:16.

23 But behold, my limbs did receive their strength again, and I stood upon my feet, and did manifest unto the people that I had been born of God.

verse 23 “Born of God” means thoroughly converted.

24 Yea, and from that time even until now, I have labored without ceasing, that I might bring souls unto repentance; that I might bring them to taste of the exceeding joy of which I did taste; that they might also be born of God, and be filled with the Holy Ghost.

25 Yea, and now behold, O my son, the Lord doth give me exceedingly great joy in the fruit of my labors;

26 For because of the word which he has imparted unto me, behold, many have been born of God, and have tasted as I have tasted, and have seen eye to eye as I have seen; therefore they do know of these things of which I have spoken, as I do know; and the knowledge which I have is of God.

verse 26 Verse 4 above indicates that Alma’s testimony is not of man, but rather is of the Spirit. This verse refers to Alma’s converts: “Many have been born of God, and have tasted as I have tasted, and have seen eye to eye as I have seen; therefore they do know of these things of which I have spoken, as I do know.” Alma’s converts also have a testimony born of the Spirit of God.

27 And I have been supported under trials and troubles of every kind, yea, and in all manner of afflictions; yea, God has delivered me from prison, and from bonds, and from death; yea, and I do put my trust in him, and he will still deliver me.

28 And I know that he will raise me up at the last day, to dwell with him in glory; yea, and I will praise him forever, for he has brought our fathers out of Egypt, and he has swallowed up the Egyptians in the Red Sea; and he led them by his power into the promised land; yea, and he has delivered them out of bondage and captivity from time to time.

verse 28 “I know that he will raise me up at the last day” Alma has a “perfect brightness of hope” (2 Nephi 31:20) which is a gift of the Spirit given to those who are worthy. It is likely that he has had his “calling and election made sure.” For a discussion of the concept of having one’s calling and election made sure, see the commentary for Helaman 10:4-7, and see also Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 16, Calling and Election Made Sure.

29 Yea, and he has also brought our fathers out of the land of Jerusalem; and he has also, by his everlasting power, delivered them out of bondage and captivity, from time to time even down to the present day; and I have always retained in remembrance their captivity; yea, and ye also ought to retain in remembrance, as I have done, their captivity.

verses 28-29 The angel who orchestrated the miraculous conversion of Alma told him never to forget the captivity of his fathers and the Lord’s goodness in delivering them: “for they were in bondage and he has delivered them” (Mosiah 27:16).

30 But behold, my son, this is not all; for ye ought to know as I do know, that inasmuch as ye shall keep the commandments of God ye shall prosper in the land; and ye ought to know also, that inasmuch as ye will not keep the commandments of God ye shall be cut off from his presence. Now this is according to his word.

verse 30 “inasmuch as ye shall keep the commandments of God ye shall prosper in the land” This statement had practical and temporal implications for the Nephites. Their continued survival in the land depended on their strict adherence to the laws of God.

The structure of this verse additionally suggests that if a man prospers “in the land,” he prospers both temporally and spiritually.

Alma 37:6-7 By small and simple things are great things brought to pass, and small means, in many instances, doth confound the wise.

Alma 37:35-37 Alma to his son Helaman, Remember, my son, and learn wisdom in thy youth; yea, learn in thy youth to keep the commandments of God. Counsel with the Lord in all thy doings, and he will direct thee for good.

Chapter 37 consists of the continued counsel of Alma to his son Helaman. Alma will challenge each of his three sons to obey the commandments, to be an example to others, and to proclaim the gospel. To Helaman, however, he will give additional responsibilities.

1 And now, my son Helaman, I command you that ye take the records which have been entrusted with me;

verse 1 “the records which have been entrusted with me” These include the Nephite records (the small plates of Nephi and the collection of plates referred to as the large plates of Nephi), the plates of brass, and the twenty-four plates containing a record of the Jaredites. The other sacred artifacts entrusted to Helaman were the interpreters or Urim and Thummim, and the Liahona.

Apparently, Alma had first offered the sacred records to Nephihah, his successor as chief judge. When Nephihah refused to take possession of them, they were given to Helaman (see Alma 50:38).

2 And I also command you that ye keep a record of this people, according as I have done, upon the plates of Nephi, and keep all these things sacred which I have kept, even as I have kept them; for it is for a wise purpose that they are kept.

verse 2 Alma commands Helaman to write and continue the record. Helaman's record will begin with Alma 45 and extend through Alma 62. The final chapter in the book of Alma, Alma 63, was written by Helaman's brother Shiblon with heavy editing by the prophet Mormon.

“it is for a wise purpose that they are kept” There are two major purposes for the Nephites' records. We will read of these purposes in verses 8-10, 14, 18-19.

3 And these plates of brass, which contain these engravings, which have the records of the holy scriptures upon them, which have the genealogy of our forefathers, even from the beginning—verse 3 The plates of brass, of course played a major role in the spiritual lives of the Book of Mormon peoples. These plates were their scripture, and undoubtedly many copies of the brass plates were made and distributed among the people. We might easily review the contents of the brass plates by reviewing 1 Nephi 4-5 and the commentary for the verses in those two chapters. The contents of the plates of brass may be summarized as follows:

1. the five books of Moses

2. the prophecies of many Israelite prophets down to the prophet Jeremiah. We know that many prophecies of the prophet Jeremiah were contained on the brass plates (1 Nephi 5:13), but it is likely that the entire book of Jeremiah was not contained on the brass plates, as he was a contemporary of the prophet Lehi. Lehi and his family might well have left Jerusalem prior to Jeremiah's completion of his writings.

3. a genealogy of Lehi's ancestors. We have previously enumerated several features of the brass plates that are not found in the Old Testament. Thus, the plates of brass constituted a more comprehensive scriptural record than the Bible as we know it today (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 5:11-14 and 1 Nephi 13:23 and its commentary). We also know that the plates of brass were written in the language of the Egyptians (see Mosiah 1:4 and its commentary).

4 Behold, it has been prophesied by our fathers, that they should be kept and handed down from one generation to another, and be kept and preserved by the hand of the Lord until they should go forth unto every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, that they shall know of the mysteries contained thereon.

verse 4 This is an intriguing verse. It suggests that the content of the brass plates will be preserved and handed down until it is finally delivered to "every nation, kindred, tongue, and people." What do you suppose this means exactly? Certainly, one of the ways by which the people of our day have and will be exposed to the messages on the brass plates is through the Book of Mormon, since the Book of Mormon prophets had the brass plates and often depended on them for their sermons and writings. Perhaps one day, in addition, the brass plates themselves will be restored to the earth and the knowledge thereon will be available to all who would avail themselves of the opportunity to learn from them (McConkie, Mormon Doctrine, 103; and Millennial Messiah, 113). The prophet Lehi once uttered a prophecy similar to the one in this verse (1 Nephi 5:18).

5 And now behold, if they are kept they must retain their brightness; yea, and they will retain their brightness; yea, and also shall all the plates which do contain that which is holy writ.

verse 5 "if they are kept they must retain their brightness" It seems likely that Alma intended a double meaning here. To be "kept" is to be properly cared for. If the plates are properly preserved, they will not tarnish and will maintain their luster. Also, if they are properly valued and cherished, they will always retain their spiritual brightness and remain a source of continuing spiritual satisfaction.

“yea, and also shall all the plates which do contain that which is holy writ”

Alma then prophesies that the plates of brass will, indeed, retain their spiritual brightness, as will other plates of divine provenance (including the Book of Mormon).

6 Now ye may suppose that this is foolishness in me; but behold I say unto you, that by small and simple things are great things brought to pass; and small means in many instances doth confound the wise.

verse 6 “by small and simple things are great things brought to pass” Here is an important principle. In a man’s personal spiritual progress, for example, the small inch by inch and “line upon line” steps he takes eventually accrue incrementally and result in “great” end results. It is by being faithful and diligent in the small and menial tasks that we eventually receive magnificent spiritual gifts. President Joseph F. Smith wrote: “To do well those things which God ordained to be the common lot of all mankind, is the truest greatness” (Gospel Doctrine, 285-86).

7 And the Lord God doth work by means to bring about his great and eternal purposes; and by very small means the Lord doth confound the wise and bringeth about the salvation of many souls.

verses 8-10 The Nephite records had two important purposes. First, they had been and would yet be used to teach the Lamanites and the Nephites. The second major purpose will be given in verses 14 and 18: to show forth God’s “power unto future generations” (see also verse 19).

8 And now, it has hitherto been wisdom in God that these things should be preserved; for behold, they have enlarged the memory of this people, yea, and convinced many of the error of their ways, and brought them to the knowledge of their God unto the salvation of their souls.

verse 8 “they have enlarged the memory of this people” It is interesting to note that all of the plates in the possession of Alma have been used by the Nephite peoples as their scriptures. This includes likely more than just the plates of brass. It will one day be interesting to learn exactly by what mechanism the large and small plates and the plates of Ether might have been made available to the people.

The scriptures “enlarge” our memory by reminding us of our covenants and obligations in the kingdom of God here on earth. King Benjamin suggested the inevitable results when a people has no opportunity to have their memories enlarged by scripture: “Even our fathers would have dwindled in unbelief, and we should have been like unto our brethren, the Lamanites, who know nothing concerning these things, or even do not believe them when they are taught them, because of the traditions of their fathers, which are not correct” (Mosiah 1:5).

9 Yea, I say unto you, were it not for these things that these records do contain, which are on these plates, Ammon and his brethren could not have convinced so many thousands of the Lamanites of the incorrect tradition of their fathers; yea, these records and their words brought them unto repentance; that is, they brought them to the knowledge of the Lord their God, and to rejoice in Jesus Christ their Redeemer.

verse 9 Obviously Ammon and his brethren carried with them on their mission personal copies of at least some of the materials contained on the brass plates of Laban. Further, the “incorrect traditions” of the Lamanite fathers would have been more easily corrected by the Lamanites’ having access to the small and large plates of Nephi.

10 And who knoweth but what they will be the means of bringing many thousands of them, yea, and also many thousands of our stiffnecked brethren, the Nephites, who are now hardening their hearts in sin and iniquities, to the knowledge of their Redeemer?

verse 10 “they will be the means of bringing many thousands of them” “They” refers to the scriptural records on the plates. “Them” refers to Lamanites who might be converted to the gospel of Christ in the future.

11 Now these mysteries are not yet fully made known unto me; therefore I shall forbear.

verse 11 “these mysteries are not yet fully made know unto me” The full impact of the brass plates and other plates on future generations had not yet been made known to Alma, therefore he will “forbear,” or say nothing further on the matter.

12 And it may suffice if I only say they are preserved for a wise purpose, which purpose is known unto God; for he doth counsel in wisdom over all his works, and his paths are straight, and his course is one eternal round.

verse 12 “he doth counsel in wisdom over all his works” God’s perspective is an omniscient and eternal one. He invariably knows what is ultimately best for each of us. Thus, “he doth counsel in wisdom.”

“his paths are straight, and his course is one eternal round” These phrases refer to a rich and vital concept. We are all governed by God’s law. That law is absolute, completely reliable, unvarying, and its consequences are inescapable. For every action, there is an identical consequence. These results follow without respect to person. It has always been thus, in Adam's day just as in ours and in the eternities to come. Thus, "his paths are straight, and his course is one eternal round."

A "straight" path seems to be the Book of Mormon metaphor for the righteous use of time. The word straight means "direct, right (correct), or not bent or curved." The use of the word straight in this verse is appropriate and related to the word straight in Isaiah 40:3. See the supplemental article, Strait and Straight in the Book of Mormon.

13 O remember, remember, my son Helaman, how strict are the commandments of God. And he said: If ye will keep my commandments ye shall prosper in the land—but if ye keep not his commandments ye shall be cut off from his presence.

verse 13 "If ye will keep my commandments ye shall prosper in the land—but if ye keep not his commandments ye shall be cut off from his presence" Here again is the now familiar "promise/curse" of the Book of Mormon. The earliest reference to this promise from the Lord is in 1 Nephi 2:20: "And inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments, ye shall prosper, and shall be led to a land of promise."

14 And now remember, my son, that God has entrusted you with these things, which are sacred, which he has kept sacred, and also which he will keep and preserve for a wise purpose in him, that he may show forth his power unto future generations.

15 And now behold, I tell you by the spirit of prophecy, that if ye transgress the commandments of God, behold, these things which are sacred shall be taken away from you by the power of God, and ye shall be delivered up unto Satan, that he may sift you as chaff before the wind.

verse 15 "ye shall be delivered up unto Satan" What is the essence of being "delivered up unto Satan"? It is simply to lose access to the Spirit of God. Such a man is helpless and defenseless. It is inevitable that he will eventually find himself fully captive to the devil.

Alma's analogy of being sifted "as chaff before the wind" is apt. This process is also called winnowing or threshing. In this particular case the righteous are the wheat, and those without the Spirit of God are the worthless waste materials—the husks, the chaff. The latter cannot resist the "wind." They will be separated from the righteous and taken captive by Satan.

16 But if ye keep the commandments of God, and do with these things which are sacred according to that which the Lord doth command you, (for you must appeal unto the Lord for all things whatsoever ye must do with them) behold, no power of earth or hell can take them from you, for God is powerful to the fulfilling of all his words.

verse 16 Alma urges his son Helaman to seek the Lord's help in just how he might best superintend the sacred plates.

17 For he will fulfil all his promises which he shall make unto you, for he has fulfilled his promises which he has made unto our fathers.

18 For he promised unto them that he would preserve these things for a wise purpose in him, that he might show forth his power unto future generations.

verse 18 Keep in mind that "these things" include the Nephite records (the small plates of Nephi and the collection of plates referred to as the large plates of Nephi), the plates of brass, the twenty-four plates containing a record of the Jaredites, the interpreters or Urim and Thummim, and the Liahona.

19 And now behold, one purpose hath he fulfilled, even to the restoration of many thousands of the Lamanites to the knowledge of the truth; and he hath shown forth his power in them, and he will also still show forth his power in them unto future generations; therefore they shall be preserved.

verse 19 "One purpose hath he fulfilled" Alma refers again to the mission of Ammon and his brethren to the Lamanites (verse 9).

"he will also still show forth his power in them unto future generations; therefore they shall be preserved" Alma knew from his study of the small plates of Nephi the account of Nephi's vision, and he knew the prophecies contained therein pertaining to the future of the Nephites and Lamanites (1 Nephi 12; see also 1 Nephi 15:5). The Nephites will eventually be destroyed, and the Lamanites will be preserved.

20 Therefore I command you, my son Helaman, that ye be diligent in fulfilling all my words, and that ye be diligent in keeping the commandments of God as they are written.

21 And now, I will speak unto you concerning those twenty-four plates, that ye keep them, that the mysteries and the works of darkness, and their secret works, or the secret works of those people who have been destroyed, may be made manifest unto this people; yea, all their murders, and robbings, and their plunderings, and all their wickedness and abominations, may be made manifest unto this people; yea, and that ye preserve these interpreters.

verse 21 "those twenty-four plates" These of course are the plates found by the expedition sent out by King Limhi from the land of Lehi-Nephi (see Mosiah 21:25-28). The expedition had set out to locate the land of Zarahemla, but instead they bypassed Zarahemla, passed through the narrow pass (through the narrow neck of land), and came upon the land Desolation, the site of the great final wars of the Jaredites. Here they discovered the twenty-four plates which had been prepared and buried by Ether. Doubtless they had been hidden in such a way that they would be discovered. These plates were later translated by king Mosiah, the son of king Benjamin, and they will yet be abridged by Moroni and become part of the plates of Mormon, the book of Ether. Perhaps a review of the article, Those Confusing Book of Mormon Plates, would be helpful at this point.

“that the mysteries and the works of darkness, and their secret works . . . may be made manifest unto this people” There were certain things in the Jaredite record that Alma wanted taught to the Nephites as useful negative lessons. We will learn that there were also some things in the Jaredite record that Alma did not want revealed to the Nephite peoples (see verses 27, 29, 32).

“and that ye preserve these interpreters” We have previously discussed the interpreters in the commentary for Mosiah 8:13. For review and for the convenience of the reader, we will repeat that discussion here. We understand the “interpreters” to be the “Urim and Thummim,” two special stones prepared by God and used by prophets for receiving revelations and for translating scriptural records written in a language unknown to the prophet. God’s prophets who are allowed to use the Urim and Thummim have been referred to as “seers.” The term “interpreters” is unique to the Book of Mormon. The name “Urim and Thummim” is the transliteration of two Hebrew words which mean “lights” and “perfections.” The -im ending on both words apparently represents the Hebrew masculine plural suffix. The term “Urim and Thummim” is not found in the Book of Mormon text. For a detailed physical description of the interpreters, see The Process of Translating the Book of Mormon in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, appendix A.

Is there more than one set of interpreters in ancient scripture? There are at least two and possibly three or more. The brother of Jared was the first to receive a set (Ether 3:22-28). Joseph Smith, of course, possessed the interpreters, and we are told that his were the same that had been in the possession of the brother of Jared (D&C 17:1). Where did king Mosiah get his? There is no mention of Lehi and his party’s bringing these stones with them. Some have suggested that Mosiah obtained his from his father and grandfather, Benjamin and Mosiah. This idea originates with the account of the elder Mosiah’s translating the Mulekite’s large stone “by the gift and power of God” (Omni 1:20-21). Were king Mosiah’s interpreters the same as those given to the brother of Jared? It is possible, but it seems unlikely they were, unless the early Mulekites found them among the artifacts previously belonging to the Jaredites and handed them down to eventually be delivered by the people of Zarahemla to Mosiah. Abraham received a set of interpreters (Abraham 3:1). Either Abraham’s set was passed along or Moses received another (Exodus 28:30). The fate of this set or these sets is unknown. There are several other mentions of this type of device in the Old Testament (Leviticus 8:8; Numbers 27:21; Deuteronomy 33:8; 1 Samuel 28:6; Ezra 2:63; Nehemiah 7:65).

22 For behold, the Lord saw that his people began to work in darkness, yea, work secret murders and abominations; therefore the Lord said, if they did not repent they should be destroyed from off the face of the earth.

verse 22 “the Lord saw that his people began to work in darkness” Alma is here referring to the Jaredites. The Lord had warned them through their prophets that if they did not repent, they would be destroyed.

23 And the Lord said: I will prepare unto my servant Gazelem, a stone, which shall shine forth in darkness unto light, that I may discover unto my people who serve me, that I may discover unto them the works of their brethren, yea, their secret works, their works of darkness, and their wickedness and abominations.

verse 23 “I will prepare unto my servant Gazelem, a stone” This is the only reference to Gazelem in the Book of Mormon, and it is difficult to know exactly who or what this passage is talking about. Joseph Fielding McConkie and Robert L. Millet have asked, “Is Gazelem the seer stone or the servant? It is difficult to tell from the passage and depends very much on the placement of a comma in the sentence. The punctuation of this phrase does suggest that “Gazelem” is more likely the servant, and the “stone” is the Urim and Thummim and/or Joseph’s seer stone. If a comma were placed following the word servant, then the phrase might suggest that the title Gazelem referred instead to the stone. Perhaps it refers to both.

Though this name or title of Gazelem may be used in regard to any seer who utilizes seer stones, it seems in this instance to be a direct reference to Joseph Smith the Prophet” (Joseph Fielding McConkie and Robert L. Millet, Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 4 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Bookcraft, 1987–1992, 3:278; compare Matthew Roper, “Teraphim and the Urim and Thummim,” Insights: A Window on the Ancient World 20, no. 9, September 2000: 2; Ray Lynn Huntington, “Gazelem,” in Book of Mormon Reference Companion, ed. Dennis L. Largey, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book 2003, 284; Brant Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 4:512–513).

While it makes sense that Gazelem is most likely the name of the individual using the stone prepared by God, actually the issue is not completely settled. Royal Skousen has traced Mormon interpretations of this passage to the lifetime of Joseph Smith himself, where both the Prophet Joseph Smith and the stone were variously identified as Gazelem (Royal Skousen, Analysis of Textual Variants of the Book of Mormon: Part Four, Alma 21–55, Provo, UT: FARMS, 2007, 2361–2363).

Joseph Smith would easily fit the identity of Gazelem. As several historians and scholars have discussed, Joseph used both the Nephite Interpreters (later called the “Urim and Thummim”) that were discovered with the plates and also his individual seer stone in the translation of the Book of Mormon (Richard Lloyd Anderson, “By the Gift and Power of God’,” Ensign, September 1977, 78–85; Richard Van Wagoner and Steve Walker, “Joseph Smith: ‘The Gift of Seeing’,” Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought 15, no. 2, Summer 1982: 49–68; Stephen D. Even some General Authorities have written on this topic (B. H. Roberts, “Book of Mormon Translation,” Improvement Era, July 1906, 706–713; Russell M. Nelson, “A Treasured Testament,” Ensign, July 1993, 61–63; Neal A. Maxwell, “‘By the Gift and Power of God’,” Ensign, January 1997, 36–41; Steven E. Snow, “Joseph Smith in Harmony,” Ensign, September 2015, 51–57), and future work that is sure to illuminate this subject is forthcoming (Michael Hubbard MacKay and Nicholas J. Frederick, Joseph Smith’s Seer Stones, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and the Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, 2016, forthcoming).

Unfortunately, the historical sources on Joseph’s use of these instruments during the translation are sometimes contradictory or ambiguous. For example, even eyewitness participants in the translation of the Book of Mormon sometimes confused the terminology in their descriptions of the event. “These two instruments—the interpreters and the seer stone—were apparently interchangeable and worked in much the same way such that, in the course of time, Joseph Smith and his associates often used the term ‘Urim and Thummim’ to refer to the single stone as well as the interpreters” (“Book of Mormon Translation,” online at lds.org).

Despite these ambiguities, it is clear that Joseph utilized sacred instruments—in this case seer stones that he found or the interpreters, which Moroni gave him—that had been prepared by the Lord for the purpose of translating the Book of Mormon. Questions remain as to how Joseph used these instruments, such as when precisely he used which devices during the translation process. That the Prophet did in fact utilize divinely-prepared instruments as media for inspiration in the translation of the Book of Mormon and some early revelations (e.g. Doctrine and Covenants 3, 6, 7, 11, 14, 17), however, is beyond dispute.

Many people today have come to outright dismiss the existence of miracles or supernatural forces. Claims that cannot be explained scientifically or rationally are often treated as mere superstition, especially in the secular West. It’s therefore understandable why many have a hard time accepting that the Lord would prepare seemingly “magical” or wondrous stones for Joseph Smith to use in translating the Book of Mormon.

Joseph Smith’s use of such stones needs to be situated in its historical and theological context. The practice of using stones or glass as media to receive divine revelation is a documented practice in many modern and ancient cultures, including among the ancient Israelites and the ancient (as well as modern) Maya (Cornelis Van Dam, The Urim and Thummim: A Means of Revelation in Ancient Israel, Winona Lake, IN: Eisenbrauns, 1997; Marc G. Blainey, “Techniques of Luminosity: Iron-Ore Mirrors and Entheogenic Shamanism among the Ancient Maya,” in Manufactured Light: Mirrors in the Mesoamerican Realm, ed. Emiliano Gallaga M. and Marc G. Blainey, Boulder, CO: University Press of Colorado, 2016, 179–206; John J. McGraw, “Stones of Light: The Use of Crystals in Maya Divination,” in Manufactured Light, 207–227; Olivia Kindl, “The Ritual Uses of Mirrors by Wixaritari, Huichol Indians,” in Manufactured Light, 255–283; Karl Taube, “Through a Glass, Brightly: Recent Investigations Concerning Mirrors and Scrying in Ancient and Contemporary Mesoamerica,” in Manufactured Light, 285–314; John A. Tvedtnes, “Glowing Stones in Ancient and Medieval Lore,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 6, no. 2, 1997: 99–123; Gardner, Second Witness, 4:511; Mark Alan Wright, “Nephite Daykeepers: Ritual Specialists in Mesoamerica and the Book of Mormon,” Ancient Temple Worship: Proceedings of the Expound Symposium, 14 May 2011, Orem and Salt Lake City, UT: The Interpreter Foundation and Eborn Books, 2014, 244–246). In Joseph Smith’s own day so-called “folk magic” was practiced in rural parts of the United States. This included the use of stones, rods, and other instruments to communicate with spirits, find hidden treasures protected by supernatural guardians, look for lost objects, or even discover sources of water (Dowsing, or using a rod to locate water, oil, graves, ores, or stones, is still practiced in some cultures today.). The Smith family participated in this culture, and Joseph himself had a reputation as a village seer even before he retrieved and translated the plates (Mark Ashurst–McGee, “A Pathway to Prophethood: Joseph Smith Junior as Rodsman, Village Seer, and Juedo-Christian Prophet”, Master’s Thesis, Utah State University, 2000; Gardner, The Gift and Power, 3–134).

It is crucial to keep in mind, however, that there still exists much debate among anthropologists and historians how to properly define “magic” (as opposed to the more conventional “religion”) as practiced by both ancient and modern people. The men and women who participated in these supernatural practices typically did not find them to be in conflict with their own Christian faith. After all, prophets in both the Old and New Testament, including Moses and Elijah, Peter and Paul, and of course Jesus Himself, possessed powers or instruments that were used to perform great wonders (See for instance Exodus 7:9–12; 25:10–22; 29:4–7; Numbers 21:4–9; 2 Kings 5:1–19; 6:1–7; John 9:1–7; Acts 19:11–12. For a discussion, see Helen R. Jacobus et al., ed., Studies on Magic and Divination in the Biblical World, Piscataway, NJ: Gorgias, 2013; Richard A. Horsley, Jesus and Magic: Freeing the Gospel Stories from Modern Misconceptions, Eugene, OR: Cascade, 2014). Well-known is the biblical practice of casting lots, which had a clear supernatural dimension (cf. 1 Nephi 3:11) (See Leviticus. 16:8; Numbers 26:55; 33:54; 34:13; Joshua. 13:6; 14:1–2; Judges. 20:9; 1 Samuel 10:20–21; 14:40–42; 1 Chronicles. 24:5, 31; 25:8; 26:13–14; Acts 1:26).

Claims of “a magic world view” having heavily influenced Joseph Smith should therefore be approached very cautiously (The leading historians to advance this thesis are D. Michael Quinn, Early Mormonism and the Magic World View, 2nd edition, Salt Lake City, UT: Signature Books, 1998; John L. Brooke, The Refiner’s Fire: The Making of Mormon Cosmology, 1644–1844, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1994. For extensive reviews of Quinn and Brooke, see John Gee, “‘An Obstacle to Deeper Understanding’,” FARMS Review of Books 12, no. 2, 2000: 185–224; William J. Hamblin, “That Old Black Magic,” FARMS Review of Books 12, no. 2, 2000: 225–393; William J. Hamblin, Daniel C. Peterson, and George L. Mitton, “Mormon in the Fiery Furnace: Or, Loftes Tryk Goes to Cambridge,” Review of Books on the Book of Mormon 6, no. 2, 1994: 3–58). Legitimate questions still remain as to just how involved Joseph actually was in this type of folk culture and how much it actually impacted him (Kerry Muhlestein, “Seeking Divine Interaction: Joseph Smith’s Varying Searches for the Supernatural,” in No Weapon Shall Prosper: New Light on Sensitive Issues, ed. Robert L. Millet, Provo, UT and Salt Lake City, UT: Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, 2011, 77–91; Samuel M. Brown, “The Reluctant Metaphysicians,” Mormon Studies Review 1, 2014: 115–131; Richard Lyman Bushman, “Joseph Smith and Money Digging,” in A Reason for Faith: Navigating LDS Doctrine and Church History, ed. Laura Harris Hales, Provo, UT and Salt Lake City, UT: Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, and Deseret Book, 2016, 1–6; Eric A. Eliason, “Seer Stones, Salamanders, and Early Mormon ‘Folk Magic’ in the Light of Folklore Studies and Bible Scholarship,” BYU Studies Quarterly 55, no. 1, 2016: 73–93). Nevertheless, Mormon theology allows for the Lord to communicate to His children through culturally embedded methods (2 Nephi 31:3; D&C 1:14) (See the commentary for Mosiah 27:11). Furthermore, the Book of Mormon itself speaks specifically about the Lord preparing “means” (physical instruments) through which He would channel His power, including sacred stones that would aid seers in translating ancient records by the gift and power of God (Mosiah 8) (See the commentary for Mosiah 8:18).

We may ultimately never fully understand the nature or process of the Book of Mormon’s translation, including why the Lord prepared sacred stones for Joseph the Seer to utilize. Nevertheless, the fact remains that Joseph consistently and repeatedly testified, and many witnesses close to the process confirmed, that he translated the plates by the gift and power of God, not through any kind of trickery or hocus-pocus conjuring. A sound understanding of the history behind the translation of the Book of Mormon can answer some questions or otherwise be faith-promoting in some regards. For example, multiple eyewitnesses spoke of Joseph translating by placing the seer stone into the bottom of a hat and then burying his face in the hat to block out the light around him. From there he would see words appear in the stone and then dictate those words to his scribe. If this was in fact how Joseph translated a substantial amount of the Book of Mormon, as the historical evidence suggests, then it would have been impossible for him to have cribbed from a nearby Bible or pilfered manuscript as he dictated. For thoughts along these lines, see Daniel C. Peterson, “Editor’s Introduction: Not So Easily Dismissed: Some Facts for Which Counter explanations of the Book of Mormon Will Need to Account,” FARMS Review 17, no. 2, 2005: xi–xxiv. A spiritual testimony of Joseph Smith’s calling as a seer, including a burning testimony of the divine nature of the Book of Mormon, however, comes only from God, through the power of the Holy Ghost.

It is interesting to recall that Jesus gave to Simon Peter the title “stone”: “And when Jesus beheld him, he said, Thou art Simon the son of Jona: thou shalt be called Cephas, which is by interpretation, a stone” (John 1:42). In the Doctrine and Covenants (pre-1981 editions only), Joseph Smith is called “Gazelam” (note the different spelling), which is perhaps a variant spelling of Gazelem.

For a discussion of the use of the Urim and Thummim or “spectacles” and Joseph’s seer stone in the process of translation of the Book of Mormon, see “The Process of Translating the Book of Mormon” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, Volume two, Appendix A.

“that I may discover unto my people . . . the works of their brethren” The word “discover” here means reveal.

24 And now, my son, these interpreters were prepared that the word of God might be fulfilled, which he spake, saying:

25 I will bring forth out of darkness unto light all their secret works and their abominations; and except they repent I will destroy them from off the face of the earth; and I will bring to light all their secrets and abominations, unto every nation that shall hereafter possess the land.

verse 25 Here Alma seems to be quoting some scriptural source which is not available to us today.

26 And now, my son, we see that they did not repent; therefore they have been destroyed, and thus far the word of God has been fulfilled; yea, their secret abominations have been brought out of darkness and made known unto us.

verse 26 Alma is still referring to the Jaredites.

27 And now, my son, I command you that ye retain all their oaths, and their covenants, and their agreements in their secret abominations; yea, and all their signs and their wonders ye shall keep from this people, that they know them not, lest peradventure they should fall into darkness also and be destroyed.

verse 27 Alma commanded his son Helaman to “retain” or keep secret the specific mechanisms of the secret combinations of the Jaredites—the oaths, covenants, and agreements. This, of course, was to guard against their potentially seductive effects on any who might receive them.

These forbidden secret writings were undoubtedly found on the twenty-four plates along with the more useful materials. So, what was Helaman to do in order to comply with this wise commandment from his father? Obviously, he would allow the plates to be seen and handled only by those who understood and agreed to comply with Alma’s edict. Was Helaman true to his charge? We know that secret combinations will eventually arise among the Nephites organized by Gadianton and others. Did the oaths and covenants of these secret Nephite combinations originate with these twenty-four Jaredite plates? We will learn that they did not. Helaman was diligent in guarding the plates (see Helaman 6:25-26).

Peradventure means by chance or perhaps.

28 For behold, there is a curse upon all this land, that destruction shall come upon all those workers of darkness, according to the power of God, when they are fully ripe; therefore I desire that this people might not be destroyed.

verse 28 The destruction of the wicked Jaredites had left a curse upon all of the land of the Book of Mormon. The Lord had given a clear warning to the brother of Jared that the wicked should be “swept off” the land (Ether 2:8-9).

For a discussion of the concept of being “fully ripe” in iniquity, see comments on “ripe for destruction” under the subtitle “Pride Operates at Various Levels” under the title

“Pride” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 5, The “Natural Self” and “Spiritual Self.”

“therefore I desire that this people might not be destroyed” The Lord expresses his desire that the Nephites not fall under the same fate as had the Jaredites.

29 Therefore ye shall keep these secret plans of their oaths and their covenants from this people, and only their wickedness and their murders and their abominations shall ye make known unto them; and ye shall teach them to abhor such wickedness and abominations and murders; and ye shall also teach them that these people were destroyed on account of their wickedness and abominations and their murders.

30 For behold, they murdered all the prophets of the Lord who came among them to declare unto them concerning their iniquities; and the blood of those whom they murdered did cry unto the Lord their God for vengeance upon those who were their murderers; and thus the judgments of God did come upon these workers of darkness and secret combinations.

31 Yea, and cursed be the land forever and ever unto those workers of darkness and secret combinations, even unto destruction, except they repent before they are fully ripe.

verse 31 “before they are fully ripe” To be fully ripe is for a wicked man to progress far enough in wickedness that his judgment is sealed against him.

32 And now, my son, remember the words which I have spoken unto you; trust not those secret plans unto this people, but teach them an everlasting hatred against sin and iniquity.

verse 32 “teach them an everlasting hatred against sin and iniquity” This is not just so much rhetoric. Those who have progressed spiritually to a certain point are spoken of as being sanctified, and they have actually lost their disposition to commit sin (Mosiah 5:2).

33 Preach unto them repentance, and faith on the Lord Jesus Christ; teach them to humble themselves and to be meek and lowly in heart; teach them to withstand every temptation of the devil, with their faith on the Lord Jesus Christ.

34 Teach them to never be weary of good works, but to be meek and lowly in heart; for such shall find rest to their souls.

verse 34 “Teach them to never be weary of good works” Is it possible to become weary of doing good works? It is if we undertake good works for incorrect reasons—if our motivations for doing good are largely arbitrary or self-serving ones. We are in danger of wearying of good works if we do good works just because we have decided to, or because we have set a goal and we are sticking doggedly to that goal, or because we are involved in this or that achievement or excellence program. On the other hand, we never tire of good works if they are properly motivated. We are properly motivated when the Spirit of God abides in us and moves toward acts of charity toward others.

“such shall find rest to their souls” For a discussion of the concept of the rest of the Lord, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 21:10.

35 O, remember, my son, and learn wisdom in thy youth; yea, learn in thy youth to keep the commandments of God.

verse 35 The verb to remember in Hebrew texts means far more than the mere mental recall of information. This verb occurs in the Old Testament over two hundred times and means “to be attentive, to consider, to keep divine commandments, or to act. . . . Indeed, to remember involves turning to God, or repenting, or acting in accordance with divine injunctions. . . . Conversely, the antonym of the verb to remember in Hebrew—to forget—does not merely describe the passing of a thought from the mind, but involves a failure to act, or a failure to do or keep something. Hence, failing to remember God and his commandments is the equivalent of apostasy” (Louis C. Midgley, “O Man, Remember, and Perish Not,” a FARMS reprint, March 1990). For examples of other uses of the verb to remember in the Book of Mormon see Mosiah 4:30; 13:29-30; Alma 37:35; Moroni 4:3).

36 Yea, and cry unto God for all thy support; yea, let all thy doings be unto the Lord, and whithersoever thou goest let it be in the Lord; yea, let all thy thoughts be directed unto the Lord; yea, let the affections of thy heart be placed upon the Lord forever.

verse 36 Praying always entails constantly being conscious of God and his plan of salvation. It consists of having a continual attitude which directs us during every waking moment of mortality, of maintaining a spiritual posture of thankfulness and reliance on the Lord, of desiring the companionship of the Holy Ghost. Brigham Young noted that to pray always is to live as we pray: “I do not know any other way for the Latter-day Saints than for every breath to be virtually a prayer for God to guide and direct his people. . . . Every breath should virtually be a prayer that God will preserve us from sin and from the effects of sin” (Discourses of Brigham Young. Ed. John A. Widtsoe. Salt Lake City: Deseret Book, 1977, 43-44). The scriptures enumerate the blessings of praying always: “Pray always, lest ye be tempted by the devil, and ye be led away captive by him” (3 Nephi 18:15); “I will pour out my Spirit upon you” (D&C 19:38); “I [will] unfold [truth] to [your] understanding” (D&C 32:4); and pray always “that you may be ready at the coming of the Bridegroom” (D&C 33:17).

37 Counsel with the Lord in all thy doings, and he will direct thee for good; yea, when thou liest down at night lie down unto the Lord, that he may watch over you in your sleep; and when thou risest in the morning let thy heart be full of thanks unto God; and if ye do these things, ye shall be lifted up at the last day.

verse 37 In an interesting article by Angela Crowell (“Hebrew Poetry in the Book of Mormon, Part 1,” Zarahemla Record, Nos. 32-33 [1986]:2-9) a Hebrew poetic form known as merismus is described. With this form, Hebrew poets could express a broad concept by a pair of narrower adjectives. For example, “young and aged” equals everybody (Job 29:8) and “sea and dry land” equals the universe (Psalm 95:5). In this verse the same form is seen. The use of “night” and “morning” conveys the concept of “all the time.”

verses 38-47 Alma gives counsel to his son Helaman regarding the Liahona, the device provided to Lehi and his party as they traveled in the wilderness. Some interesting insight on how the expanded family of Lehi used the Liahona is obtained from these verses. We have previously discussed this concept in the commentary for 1 Nephi 16:10. For the reader’s convenience, we will reproduce much of that commentary: The Liahona was a gift of God, made by his very hand (2 Nephi 5:12), that worked solely by the power of God. It functioned only in response to the faith and diligence of those who followed it. Alma teaches that the Liahona seemed a “temporal” thing of “small means,” and accordingly there was a constant tendency for Lehi’s people to take it for granted, in fact, ignore it. Apparently, this device did not seem entirely new and unfamiliar to Lehi’s party, rather it seemed unremarkable and ordinary. Dr. Hugh Nibley has pointed out why this might have been so. He reported evidence that the tradition in Hebrew culture of divining with arrows is well established. Hebrews believed that for many types of decisions, including finding their way through uncharted territory, the Lord’s influence would intervene if they used arrows in a type of divining ritual (“The Liahona’s Cousin,” a FARMS reprint). Evidently, then, to Lehi’s group the Liahona seemed just another device with which they could seek the Lord’s will through the use of arrows—just another “pair of dice,” as it were. Apparently, they often did not take it seriously and were careless in giving heed to its advice. Alma will teach his son Helaman that this carelessness and disobedience of those in Lehi’s party contributed to their having to wander eight years in the wilderness: “They were slothful, and forgot to exercise their faith and diligence and then those marvelous works ceased, and they did not progress in their journey; therefore, they tarried in the wilderness, or did not travel a direct course, and were afflicted with hunger and thirst, because of their transgressions” (verse 41). Alma will also teach that the Liahona was a type or symbol of Christ (Alma 37:44-45) in that Lehi’s party had but to follow its words and directions to be led to the promised land. Similarly, if we follow the words of Christ we will be led to a much better promised land.

It is natural to try to picture the specific appearance of this device. That is not possible, of course, because we only have this cursory description. Apparently, the round ball of brass did not have a complete spherical shell and was at least in part hollow since the pointer spindles were “within the ball.” There was obviously some type of gap or window in the shell that allowed visualization of the spindles or pointers. A spindle is a slender rod or pin, a headless arrow. On these pointers, a special writing would appear from time to time, clarifying and amplifying the message of the pointers. See the speculative illustration, Liahona.

38 And now, my son, I have somewhat to say concerning the thing which our fathers call a ball, or director—or our fathers called it Liahona, which is, being interpreted, a compass; and the Lord prepared it.

verse 38 This unusual device is not given a name in the Book of Mormon until this verse when it is referred to as the Liahona. In previous verses it has been referred to as “the compass,” “the ball,” the director,” or the “round ball of curious workmanship.” Though many meanings have been suggested for the term “Liahona,” Dr. Nibley’s favorite is “God is our guide” (“The Liahona’s Cousin,” a FARMS reprint).

39 And behold, there cannot any man work after the manner of so curious a workmanship. And behold, it was prepared to show unto our fathers the course which they should travel in the wilderness.

40 And it did work for them according to their faith in God; therefore, if they had faith to believe that God could cause that those spindles should point the way they should go, behold, it was done; therefore they had this miracle, and also many other miracles wrought by the power of God, day by day.

verse 40 “it did work for them according to their faith in God” Here is a reminder that miracles occur as a result of faith, and they are not given to instill faith. See Miracles in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 20.

“if they had faith to believe that God could cause that those spindles should point the way they should go, behold, it was done” For a discussion of why the Liahona had two spindles instead of just one, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 16:10. Also see the illustration, Spindles of Liahona.

41 Nevertheless, because those miracles were worked by small means it did show unto them marvelous works. They were slothful, and forgot to exercise their faith and diligence and then those marvelous works ceased, and they did not progress in their journey;

verse 41 Dr. Hugh Nibley favors a re-punctuation of this verse to make its meaning more clear. He would render it, “Nevertheless, because those miracles were worked by small means (albeit it did show unto them marvelous works), they were slothful and forgot to exercise their faith and diligence.” The meaning seems clear: Though Lehi’s people enjoyed daily demonstrations of God’s power, the device by which that power operated seemed quite ordinary. Thus, in spite of the “marvelous works” it showed them, they tended to neglect it (Hugh Nibley, “The Liahona’s Cousins,” a FARMS reprint).

Alma’s purpose seems clear here. He is drawing an analogy between Lehi’s journey in the wilderness and fallen man’s journey through life. In life man is expected to recognize his fallen and unfulfilled state and develop a hunger and thirst for a higher, eternal purpose to life. This higher purpose can only be perceived through diligence, obedience, and faith.

42 Therefore, they tarried in the wilderness, or did not travel a direct course, and were afflicted with hunger and thirst, because of their transgressions.

verse 42 Here we learn the interesting fact that the reasons for the prolonged wanderings of Lehi and his family in the wilderness included their lack of faith and lack of obedience.

43 And now, my son, I would that ye should understand that these things are not without a shadow; for as our fathers were slothful to give heed to this compass (now these things were temporal) they did not prosper; even so it is with things which are spiritual.

verse 43 “these things are not without a shadow” This rather awkward phrase may be restated: “These events and happenings have symbolic meaning.”

44 For behold, it is as easy to give heed to the word of Christ, which will point to you a straight course to eternal bliss, as it was for our fathers to give heed to this compass, which would point unto them a straight course to the promised land.

verse 44 “this compass” The Liahona was a temporal “type” or “shadow” of the Savior just as was Moses’s fiery serpent previously referred to (1 Nephi 17:41; Numbers 21:4-9). The Liahona and the brass serpent offered the believers temporal sustenance, while the Savior offers to the penitent spiritual respite.

“it is as easy to give heed to the word of Christ . . . as it was for our fathers to give heed to this compass” This is an interesting verse which might bear some discussion. Is it really “easy” to live the gospel of Jesus Christ? One might argue that the principles and commandments are very straight forward and uncomplicated and can be understood and lived by anyone. If it is so simple, then, why do many falter in their attempts? Clearly it is the influences of the world that appeal to the “natural man” tendency within each of us that pulls us in the wrong direction. When the influence of the Spirit of God is abiding firmly within our hearts, then living the gospel and avoiding sin is “easy.” But here is another pitfall. Maintaining the influence of the Spirit is hardly a passive process. It is in fact a most demanding and rigorous process that requires a pro-active and constant striving and reaching and deliberate obeying.

Here the word straight must be understood in the sense of “direct,” much like the English sentence “She went straight to the boss.” These two uses of the word straight (as opposed to strait) in this verse are appropriate as discussed in the supplemental article, Strait and Straight in the Book of Mormon.

45 And now I say, is there not a type in this thing? For just as surely as this director did bring our fathers, by following its course, to the promised land, shall the words of Christ, if we follow their course, carry us beyond this vale of sorrow into a far better land of promise.

verse 45 “is there not a type in this thing?” Alma asks Helaman whether or not Helaman sees a metaphor or analogy in the story of the Liahona applicable universally to all of us.

“beyond this vale of sorrow into a far better land of promise” A vale is a tract of low ground between hills; a valley. This “vale of sorrow” is this earth life. The “far better land of promise” is eternal life in God’s presence. The expression “land of promise” actually has a dual meaning. First, it is a physical place to live where God blesses his children temporally. Second, it has spiritual significance in the fact that God blesses his children with experiences which lead them back to eternal life. The concept of the promised land on earth is therefore symbolic for a “far better land of promise”—heaven.

46 O my son, do not let us be slothful because of the easiness of the way; for so was it with our fathers; for so was it prepared for them, that if they would look they might live; even so it is with us. The way is prepared, and if we will look we may live forever.

47 And now, my son, see that ye take care of these sacred things, yea, see that ye look to God and live. Go unto this people and declare the word, and be sober. My son, farewell.

verse 47 “look to God and live” Joseph Fielding McConkie and Robert L. Millet aptly wrote: “Just as Peter needed to keep his eyes on the Son of God in order to walk on the surface of the water of the Sea of Galilee (Matthew 14:22- 32); just as Peter summoned the lame man at the Gate Beautiful with the words, ‘Look on us’ (Acts 3:4); even so does our Master invite us to look to him, to fix our gaze and fasten our hearts and souls upon him. Dedicated discipleship entails looking straight ahead to our Lord and Savior, giving little or no heed to the divergent and demanding voices of the world. Jesus pleads: ‘Look unto me in every thought; doubt not, fear not’ (D&C 6:36). As we look to him and to him only we come to enjoy that abundant life which he brought (see John 10:10)" (Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, volume 3, 283).

Alma Chapter 38

The commandments of Alma to his son Shiblon.

Alma 38 Alma counsels his son Shiblon

Alma 38:12 Alma to his son Shiblon: Use boldness, but not overbearance.

Alma 38:14 Alma to Shiblon: Do not say, O God, I thank thee that we are better than our brethren; but rather say: O Lord, forgive my unworthiness.

1 My son, give ear to my words, for I say unto you, even as I said unto Helaman, that inasmuch as ye shall keep the commandments of God ye shall prosper in the land; and inasmuch as ye will not keep the commandments of God ye shall be cut off from his presence.

2 And now, my son, I trust that I shall have great joy in you, because of your steadiness and your faithfulness unto God; for as you have commenced in your youth to look to the Lord your God, even so I hope that you will continue in keeping his commandments; for blessed is he that endureth to the end.

3 I say unto you, my son, that I have had great joy in thee already, because of thy faithfulness and thy diligence, and thy patience and thy long-suffering among the people of the Zoramites.

4 For I know that thou wast in bonds; yea, and I also know that thou wast stoned for the word's sake; and thou didst bear all these things with patience because the Lord was with thee; and now thou knowest that the Lord did deliver thee.

5 And now my son, Shiblon, I would that ye should remember, that as much as ye shall put your trust in God even so much ye shall be delivered out of your trials, and your troubles, and your afflictions, and ye shall be lifted up at the last day.

verse 5 “as much as ye shall put your trust in God even so much ye shall be delivered out of your trials, and your troubles, and your afflictions” Does this promise apply to this mortal life or to the life to come? Undoubtedly it applies to both. We read in Matthew: “Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls” (Matthew 11:28- 30). John the Revelator wrote: “Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid” (John 14:27). Speaking of righteous men, Isaiah wrote: “Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee: because he trusteth in thee. Trust ye in the Lord for ever: for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength.” All of this is not to say that if a man is sufficiently righteous, he may expect to be blessed to avoid life’s vicissitudes. Every man, regardless of his righteous living, may expect mortality to be a vigorous experience strewn with ample numbers of difficulties. But if he truly believes in and loves his Savior and regularly feels and expresses gratitude for his atoning death, and if he strives to follow his example, he will become well acquainted with the Savior's peace, comfort, and love. He will be able to brook his hardships with the calm assurance of someone who has come to know that this life is not the real life—that the real life is the one which follows. When it is confirmed to a man that he will live with his Father again, when hardships arise, he will be resilient by virtue of his relationship with the Lord and with the Lord's Spirit.

To be "lifted up at the last day" is to be exalted in the celestial kingdom.

6 Now, my son, I would not that ye should think that I know these things of myself, but it is the Spirit of God which is in me which maketh these things known unto me; for if I had not been born of God I should not have known these things.

7 But behold, the Lord in his great mercy sent his angel to declare unto me that I must stop the work of destruction among his people; yea, and I have seen an angel face to face, and he spake with me, and his voice was as thunder, and it shook the whole earth.

8 And it came to pass that I was three days and three nights in the most bitter pain and anguish of soul; and never, until I did cry out unto the Lord Jesus Christ for mercy, did I receive a remission of my sins. But behold, I did cry unto him and I did find peace to my soul.

verse 6-8 These verses contain the third of three accounts of the story of the conversion of Alma found in the Book of Mormon. The first two are found in Mosiah 27:8-37 and Alma 36:4-26. This particular account, intended for his son Shiblon, is the briefest of the three. For a discussion of the comparison of these three accounts see the commentary for Mosiah 27:8-37.

9 And now, my son, I have told you this that ye may learn wisdom, that ye may learn of me that there is no other way or means whereby man can be saved, only in and through Christ. Behold, he is the life and the light of the world. Behold, he is the word of truth and righteousness.

verse 9 "he is the life and the light of the world" If you have spent some time pondering over D&C 88—the revelation referred to as the Olive Leaf—then I hope you have concluded with me that the subject of the relationship between the Savior and the natural laws and physical energies of the universe including the physical energy of light is a most complex one that I'm not sure we are given to fully understand. God is the law of our universe. He is the source of all power in the universe. By virtue of him we have a universe. Everything in our universe operates by power which emanates from him.

Even the natural laws of the universe operate by his power. By virtue of his power, the sun, the moon, the stars, rocks, tulips, light, electricity, water, etc., all exist. Their molecules and atoms exist and function because of his power. Their electrons spin around their protons and neutrons by virtue of his law or power. Indeed, all energy in the universe originates with God. Thus, he is in all things. For our purposes, Jesus Christ is given to be God of our world and innumerable other worlds. He has all that his Father has. He is our God. Thus, Christ is “in all and through all things.” In other words, his influence, this universal energy of which we have spoken, which emanates from him is intimately involved in all things, both animate and inanimate, indeed they exist and function because of Christ and his power. Indeed, he is, in both a spiritual and physical way “the light and the life of the world.” See The Concept of Light in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 15.

The attributes attributed to the Savior in this verse might also be used as titles for him. These include “the life,” “the light of the world,” “the word of truth,” and “righteousness.”

10 And now, as ye have begun to teach the word even so I would that ye should continue to teach; and I would that ye would be diligent and temperate in all things.

verse 10 He who is “temperate in all things” uses restraint and moderation in speech and behavior.

11 See that ye are not lifted up unto pride; yea, see that ye do not boast in your own wisdom, nor of your much strength.

12 Use boldness, but not overbearance; and also see that ye bridle all your passions, that ye may be filled with love; see that ye refrain from idleness.

verse 12 “see that ye bridle all your passions” Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines bridle as, “To restrain, guide or govern; to check, curb, or control.”

13 Do not pray as the Zoramites do, for ye have seen that they pray to be heard of men, and to be praised for their wisdom.

14 Do not say: O God, I thank thee that we are better than our brethren; but rather say: O Lord, forgive my unworthiness, and remember my brethren in mercy—yea, acknowledge your unworthiness before God at all times.

15 And may the Lord bless your soul, and receive you at the last day into his kingdom, to sit down in peace. Now go, my son, and teach the word unto this people. Be sober. My son, farewell.

The commandments of Alma to his son Corianton. Comprising chapters 39 to 42 inclusive.

Alma 39 Alma counsels his son Corianton on sexual sin.

An interesting aspect of chapters 39-42 is that Alma uses the word “plan” precisely ten times. It is used in the phrases, “plan of redemption,” “plan of mercy,” “plan of restoration,” “plan of salvation,” and “plan of happiness.” In the original 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon, Alma 39–42 comprised a single, cohesive chapter (See Thomas W. Mackay, “Mormon as Editor: A Study in Colophons, Headers, and Source Indicators,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 2, no. 2, 1993: 107). In many ancient cultures, including the Israelites, numbers were commonly used with certain, specific meanings. The number ten had a sacred meaning and implied completeness, wholeness, or perfection. It seems likely that this sacred use of numbers was preserved in the plates of brass and perpetuated by Nephite prophets as part of their literary tradition (See 1 Nephi 3:19, Enos 1:1, and Mosiah 1:4.). The number ten was suffused into Solomon’s temple. The height and width of the cherubim in that temple were both ten cubits . . . [the] diameter of the brazen sea was ten cubits . . . the brass altar was ten cubits high; ten candlesticks were made of gold; and ten tables were placed, five on each side (John W. Welch, “Counting to Ten,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 12, no. 2, 2003: 57). Since the Nephite temples were built after the manner of Solomon’s Temple (2 Nephi 5:16), Alma, as the high priest of the people, certainly knew the significance of the number ten. He likely used it to symbolize and emphasize the Lord’s perfect plan of salvation.

Alma’s approach to his errant son Corianton is instructive. He certainly shows him love and concern, but he also teaches him the doctrines of the kingdom. Is it realistic to expect a “preaching” approach to be helpful here (Alma 31:5)? Evidently so. Elder Boyd K. Packer taught: “True doctrine, understood, changes attitudes and behavior. The study of the doctrines of the gospel will improve behavior quicker than a study of behavior will improve behavior” (CR, October 1986, 20).

1 And now, my son, I have somewhat more to say unto thee than what I said unto thy brother; for behold, have ye not observed the steadiness of thy brother, his faithfulness, and his diligence in keeping the commandments of God? Behold, has he not set a good example for thee?

verse 1 “the steadiness of thy brother” Alma is referring here to Shiblön.

2 For thou didst not give so much heed unto my words as did thy brother, among the people of the Zoramites. Now this is what I have against thee; thou didst go on unto boasting in thy strength and thy wisdom.

verse 2 “thou didst go on unto boasting in thy strength and thy wisdom”

We have all previously observed the sequence of events culminating in serious sin. Inevitably the Spirit of the Lord teaches to those responsive to his ministrations humility and meekness. A loss of this responsiveness to the promptings of the Spirit starts the tragic descent of the individual destined to commit serious sin. This unresponsiveness to or “loss” of the Spirit leads invariably to an inclination to rely less on the arm of the Lord and more on the arm of flesh. Then occur feelings of self-sufficiency, haughtiness, and even boasting in one’s supposed strengths. From here it is only a short distance—all downhill—to succumbing to all manner of worldly temptations.

3 And this is not all, my son. Thou didst do that which was grievous unto me; for thou didst forsake the ministry, and did go over into the land of Siron, among the borders of the Lamanites, after the harlot Isabel.

verse 3 “Isabel” Isabel appears to have been an outcast from polite Nephite society. She was probably a Nephite woman who lived among other “wicked harlots” (see verse 11) in a notorious district of the land. Brother Hugh Nibley pointed out that “Isabel was the name of the Patroness of Harlots in the religion of the Phoenicians” (Prophetic Book of Mormon, 542). For additional commentary on the derivation of her name, see the supplemental article, Names in the Book of Mormon.

4 Yea, she did steal away the hearts of many; but this was no excuse for thee, my son. Thou shouldst have tended to the ministry wherewith thou wast entrusted.

5 Know ye not, my son, that these things are an abomination in the sight of the Lord; yea, most abominable above all sins save it be the shedding of innocent blood or denying the Holy Ghost?

verse 5 In this verse Alma identifies the three most abominable sins in the sight of God. They are (in order of gravity) denying the Holy Ghost, shedding innocent blood—murder, and committing sexual sin.

The unpardonable sin. Denying the Holy Ghost is the ultimate blasphemy, even the unpardonable sin. It consists of willful rebellion by a man who has reached a lofty state of spiritual development. The man has had the heavens opened to him and has come to “know God” and possess “perfect light” (TPJS, 357-58). Yet, he comes out in open rebellion against the Lord and his kingdom. Such a person is incapable of repenting. He is a traitor to God and is sealed up to Satan as surely as the sons of God are sealed up to Christ. He has “denied the Only Begotten Son of the Father, having crucified him unto [himself] and put him to an open shame” (D&C 76:35). Unpardonable means that it cannot be paid for, either by the atoning blood of Jesus Christ or by the personal suffering of the sinner. The only sin that is unpardonable is the sin against the Holy Ghost. The individual guilty of this sin shall not be forgiven and will become forever a son of perdition. Indeed, it would have been “better for [him] never to have been born” (D&C 76:32).

Which people here in mortality are capable of committing such a sin, and what behavior can result in this awful penalty? Joseph Smith taught that before an individual could commit this sin, he must “have the heavens opened unto him, and know God, and then sin against him. . . He has got to say that the sun does not shine while he sees it; he has got to deny Jesus Christ when the heavens have been opened unto him, and to deny the plan of salvation with his eyes open to the truth of it” (TPJS, 358). Such a person must have received knowledge and power beyond what the vast majority of us have received. Spencer W. Kimball taught: “The sin against the Holy Ghost requires such knowledge that it is manifestly impossible for the rank and file to commit such a sin” (The Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball, 23). It seems likely that the individual who qualifies is he who has entered into the highest priesthood covenants which can be entered into here in mortality. Then he must be found guilty of more than mere passive dissent. He must come out in open rebellion against the Church and kingdom and even against the Savior himself. He rebels against the Savior to the point that he seeks after the blood of Christ and if possible he would shed his blood anew. This sequence must be executed in mortality. An individual cannot become a son of Perdition in the post-mortal spirit world. Joseph Smith taught, “A man cannot commit the unpardonable sin after the dissolution of the body” (TPJS, 357).

Only those who commit this sin will know the nature of this torment and its duration. “The end thereof, neither the place thereof, nor their torment, no man knows; neither was it revealed, neither is, neither will be unto man, except to them who are made partakers thereof . . . wherefore, the end, the width, the height, the depth, and the misery thereof, they understand not, neither any man except those who are ordained unto this condemnation” (D&C 76:45-46, 48). Once an individual is condemned to become a son of Perdition, the penalty is final. The Prophet Joseph taught that it is incorrect to teach that the sons of perdition will be redeemed at some future day (TPJS, 24).

The unforgivable sin. The sin of murder or the “shedding of innocent blood” will be discussed in the commentary for the next verse.

Sexual sin. For a discussion of sexual sin, see verse 7.

6 For behold, if ye deny the Holy Ghost when it once has had place in you, and ye know that ye deny it, behold, this is a sin which is unpardonable; yea, and whosoever murdereth against the light and knowledge of God, it is not easy for him to obtain forgiveness; yea, I say unto you, my son, that it is not easy for him to obtain a forgiveness.

verse 6 “whosoever murdereth against the light and knowledge of God, it is not easy for him to obtain forgiveness” Murder is the deliberate, cold-blooded killing of another without justification. This is not an unpardonable sin as discussed in the commentary for verse 5, yet it is referred to as being an “unforgivable” sin. It is unforgivable in that the redemptive blood of Christ is not at first available to those who, aware of God’s law, have maliciously shed the blood of innocents. We are taught that deliverance comes only after the murderer personally atones with much personal suffering—in some unknown way and for some unknown length of time. Then and only then will the Lord’s mercy be extended to him, and he will be delivered from hell. He will receive a kingdom of glory. He will not, however be exalted. He will not obtain eternal life in the kingdom of God. Rather he will be saved in a lesser kingdom, usually the telestial kingdom. Thus, his spiritual death or his separation from God, is permanent. It is clear then why murder is referred to as a “sin unto death,” referring to spiritual death. The Lord said: “He that kills shall not have forgiveness in this world, nor in the world to come” (D&C 42:18). The murderer will never find complete forgiveness. He will never live in the presence of God. He will never be exalted.

Murderers, although they cannot be forgiven, may be pardoned. When, like King David (see Psalm 16:10; Acts 2:27-31), they have suffered for their sin and have paid the full demands of justice to “the uttermost farthing” (Matthew 5:26), they may then confess Christ, turn to him, and through his atonement be pardoned. That is, they will not become innocent, but their suffering will end. As David was promised that his soul would not be left forever in hell, so other murderers who turn to Christ after suffering for their sins will not be left forever to suffer in hell. They will eventually be redeemed from the power of Satan and receive some degree of glory—likely the telestial. We might say that they are “guilty but set free.”

We have discussed the deliberate, cold-blooded, and unjustified killing of one human being by another. There are obviously various degrees of murder and hence various degrees of guilt. The Lord will judge. Spencer W. Kimball wrote: “Even among willful murderers there are grades and categories. . . There are those who kill in drunkenness, in rage, in anger, in jealousy. There are those who kill for gain, for power, for fear. There are those who kill for lust. They certainly will suffer different degrees of punishment hereafter” (Miracle of Forgiveness, 129-30.)

Is it possible to shed innocent blood and end up being cast into outer darkness with Satan and his angels? Of course. If a murderer or an individual guilty of other less abominable sins remains unrepentant throughout his sojourn in the spirit world—remains “filthy still”—and steadfastly refuses to acknowledge the Savior and his atoning sacrifice, then he will become a son of perdition.

The apostle John taught: “There is a sin unto death . . . and there is a sin not unto death” (1 John 5:16-17). Elder Bruce R. McConkie explained: “There are sins for which there is no forgiveness [denying the Holy Ghost and murder], neither in this world nor in the world to come. There are sins which utterly and completely preclude the sinner from gaining eternal life. Hence there are sins for which repentance does not operate, sins for which the sinner must suffer and pay the full penalty personally” (A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, 231).

Denying the Holy Ghost is a sin that is both unpardonable and unforgivable. The shedding of innocent blood is unforgivable and pardonable. Both are sins unto death (spiritual death or permanent separation from God). There are still other sins that are pardonable and forgivable. The Savior spoke of these when he said, “I the Lord, forgive sins unto those who confess their sins before me and ask forgiveness, who have not sinned unto death” (D&C 64:7). Sexual sin, though most abominable in the sight of God, fits into this latter category.

“it is not easy for him to obtain forgiveness . . . it is not easy for him to obtain a forgiveness” This phrase implies that while it may not be easy for the murderer to obtain forgiveness, it is possible. We have already learned in the discussion above that forgiveness to the point of inheriting a lesser degree of glory may eventually occur, but complete forgiveness to the point of exaltation cannot occur.

7 And now, my son, I would to God that ye had not been guilty of so great a crime. I would not dwell upon your crimes, to harrow up your soul, if it were not for your good.

verse 7 “I would to God that ye had not been guilty of so great a crime”
Sexual sin. It seems clear that we are not given a full understanding of just why it is that sexual sin is so serious. It may be forgivable and pardonable, but it is indeed the third most serious sin behind only the sin of murder and the sin against the Holy Ghost. The answer as to why it is so serious seems to lie in the fact that one who commits sexual sin is tampering with the procreative powers. Note, in the following scripture, the vast importance of the gift of eternal procreation. Speaking of those who enter into the “new and everlasting covenant,” particularly those who have this covenant “sealed unto them by the Holy Spirit of promise,” the Lord said: “They shall pass by the angels, and the gods, which are set there, to their exaltation and glory in all things, as hath been sealed upon their heads, which glory shall be a fulness and a continuation of the seeds forever and ever. Then shall they be gods, because they have no end; therefore shall they be from everlasting to everlasting, because they continue; then shall they be above all, because all things are subject unto them. Then shall they be gods, because they have all power, and the angels are subject unto them” (D&C 132:19-22).

If an individual fails to qualify for this marvelous exaltation, then that will be the “end of his kingdom; he cannot have an increase” (D&C 131:4). The key phrases

“continuation of the seeds,” “they shall have no end,” and “increase” all suggest the concept of continuing power of procreation. This procreative power is the power that separates God from the angels. He has allowed and offered the temporary use of this power to men and women here in mortality. The manner in which we make use of this privilege and the attitudes we develop and hold regarding this power determine whether we will have the opportunity to possess it during the eternities. The misuse of this power is consequently a most critical and dangerous offense.

Speaking of those who enter into the new and everlasting covenant of marriage, President Joseph F. Smith wrote: “The man and the woman who engage in this ordinance of matrimony are engaging in something that is of such far-reaching character, and is of such vast importance, that thereby hangs life and death, and eternal increase. Thereupon depends eternal happiness, or eternal misery. For this reason, God has guarded this sacred institution by the most severe penalties, and has declared that whosoever is untrue to the marriage relationship, whosoever is guilty of adultery, shall be put to death. This is scriptural law, though it is not practiced today, because modern civilization does not recognize the laws of God in relation to moral status of mankind. The Lord commanded, ‘Whosoever sheddeth innocent blood, by man shall his blood be shed.’ Thereby God has given the law. Life is an important thing. No one has any right to take life, unless God commanded it. The law of God as to violation of the marriage covenant is just as strict, and is on a parallel with law against murder notwithstanding the former is not carried out” (Gospel Doctrine, 273).

We understand “adultery” to mean a sexual sin committed by a couple when at least one of the two has entered a covenant of marriage either in or out of the temple. When neither of the two is married, we often refer to their sin as “fornication.” Is fornication just as grave a sin as adultery? The First Presidency in 1942 stated: “The Lord has drawn no essential distinctions between fornication, adultery, and harlotry or prostitution. Each has fallen under his solemn and awful condemnation” (Grant, Heber J., J. Reuben Clark, Jr., and David O. McKay. “The Message of the First Presidency.” Improvement Era [Nov 1942] 45:758). President Harold B. Lee taught that “the Master used interchangeably the words adultery and fornication in defining sexual impurity, and it has been severely condemned in every dispensation by authorized church leaders” (Stand Ye In Holy Places, 332).

Joseph Smith wrote: “If a man commit adultery, he cannot receive the celestial kingdom of God. Even if he is saved in any kingdom, it cannot be the celestial kingdom” (HC, 6:81). Although this statement was later modified by President Spencer W. Kimball who added the words “and remains unrepentant” (Miracle of Forgiveness, 350), there can be no mistaking the gravity of sexual sin.

While repentance is possible for sexual sins, the process is most rigorous and demanding. It is vital that one who is attempting to repent experience true “godly sorrow” (see the discussion of godly sorrow in the commentary for Mosiah 26:29; see also the following paragraph). Repentance requires confessing the sin to one's bishop and a permanent forsaking of the sin. Even then the process is not complete. President Kimball wrote concerning this process: "There must be a washing, a purging, a changing of attitudes, a correcting of appraisals, a strengthening toward self-mastery. And these cleansing processes cannot be accomplished as easily as taking a bath or shampooing the hair, or sending a suit of clothes to the cleaner. There must be many prayers, and volumes of tears" (Miracle of Forgiveness, 155). The fully repentant sinner will "have no more disposition to do evil, but to do good continually" (Mosiah 5:2). Making restitution for sexual sins is most difficult because it is not possible to restore virtue in a physical sense. However, virtue can be restored spiritually through complete repentance and through the power of Christ's atonement. Restitution may also be made through diligent service to others in the kingdom of God.

The sexual relationship has been compared to a horse. They both are beautiful, magnificent, and meant to serve man, but you must maintain control. Give either their head and they will run with you. It is profoundly true that giving in to sexual urges outside of marriage almost always destroys love, whereas, bridling passion increases love.

One sound bit of counsel is: "Don't go to Caiaphas's palace." We often think we are wise enough and strong enough to control our urges, and we find ourselves in places and situations where we are overwhelmed. The apostle Peter refused to believe that he would ever betray the Lord (Luke 22:31-34). But then he went to Caiaphas's palace, and rest is history.

As pointed out by Michael R. Ash and B. W. Jorgensen, it appears Corianton's sin was more than just sexual immorality (B. W. Jorgensen, "Scriptural Chastity Lessons: Joseph and Potiphar's Wife; Corianton and the Harlot Isabel," Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought 32, no. 1, 1999: 7-34; Michael R. Ash, "The Sin 'Next to Murder': An Alternative Interpretation," Sunstone, November 2006, 34-43). They argue that Corianton's sin was a composite of several elements, specifically sexual immorality by a priesthood leader that caused him to abandon his ministry and therefore neglect the spiritual needs of his flock, thereby leading them into apostasy. In effect, Corianton metaphorically "murdered" the testimonies of those he was commissioned to bring unto Christ when he was lured away by Isabel (cf. Alma 36:14).

This understanding of Corianton's particular situation is strengthened by the fact that in Alma 39:5, Alma spoke of "these things" (plural) being "an abomination in the sight of the Lord." Apparently "these things" included not only Corianton committing sexual sin, but purposefully neglecting "the ministry wherewith [he] wast entrusted" (verse 4). Perhaps, then, "the more serious infraction was the resulting spiritual damage inflicted upon others who had witnessed Corianton's sinful actions" (Michael R. Ash, "The Sin 'Next to Murder': An Alternative Interpretation," Sunstone, November 2006, 35).

“I would not dwell upon your crimes, to harrow up your soul, if it were not for your good” To “harrow up” is to vex or cause mental distress. The soul must be harrowed up in order to truly repent of serious sin. Only the truly distressed soul can experience the type of sorrow that is essential for true repentance. This sorrow may be referred to as “godly sorrow.” It is a heart-felt realization that one has tampered with and placed in serious jeopardy one’s eternal welfare. It is the genuine conviction that one’s behavior has tragically betrayed one’s eternal potential and has been a devastating disappointment to one’s Father in heaven. It is the agonizing realization that one’s eternal life hangs precariously in the balance. In order to achieve this state, it is necessary to sink into the depths of humility and recognize deep within one’s soul that without God and Christ one is lost. One must also recognize that without Christ it is impossible to repent. One must “turn to the Lord with all [one’s] mind, might, and strength” (see verse 13). “Godly sorrow” is ultimately a gift of the Spirit, granted to the worthy sufferer through the process of personal revelation by the Holy Ghost. It is the very same feeling that beset Alma during the process of his miraculous conversion. He summarized the experience: “I was struck with such great fear and amazement lest perhaps I should be destroyed. . . I was racked with eternal torment, for my soul was harrowed up to the greatest degree and racked with all my sins. . . I was tormented with the pains of hell; yea, I saw that I had rebelled against my God, and that I had not kept his holy commandments” (Alma 36:11-13).

8 But behold, ye cannot hide your crimes from God; and except ye repent they will stand as a testimony against you at the last day.

9 Now my son, I would that ye should repent and forsake your sins, and go no more after the lusts of your eyes, but cross yourself in all these things; for except ye do this ye can in nowise inherit the kingdom of God. Oh, remember, and take it upon you, and cross yourself in these things.

verse 9 “cross yourself in all these things” One early meaning of the verb “to cross” is to contradict or be inconsistent with. Our natural appetites may cross our moral principles or standards. None of us in mortality is ever completely free of the “natural man” tendencies within each of us. It is man’s “natural” tendency to be drawn toward worldly pleasures and travel down worldly paths. To do the unnatural things is to “cross” oneself. We “cross” ourselves when we turn away from, or contradict, our worldly lusts and seek instead for righteousness. In scripture to “cross” oneself is the same as to “take up one’s cross.” To his disciples in Jerusalem, Christ said: “If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me” (Matthew 16:24). On another occasion, he counseled: “It is better that ye should deny yourselves of these things, wherein ye will take up your cross, than that ye should be cast in hell” (3 Nephi 12:30).

10 And I command you to take it upon you to counsel with your elder brothers in your undertakings; for behold, thou art in thy youth, and ye stand in need to be nourished by your brothers. And give heed to their counsel.

11 Suffer not yourself to be led away by any vain or foolish thing; suffer not the devil to lead away your heart again after those wicked harlots. Behold, O my son, how great iniquity ye brought upon the Zoramites; for when they saw your conduct they would not believe in my words.

verse 11 President Joseph Fielding Smith wrote: “The Lord says if we labor all our days and save but one soul, how great will be our joy with him; on the other hand how great will be our sorrow and our condemnation if through our acts we have led one soul away from this truth” (Doctrines of Salvation, 1:314).

12 And now the Spirit of the Lord doth say unto me: Command thy children to do good, lest they lead away the hearts of many people to destruction; therefore I command you, my son, in the fear of God, that ye refrain from your iniquities;

verse 12 “Command thy children to do good” Some of us who have experienced times of rebellion in our children might be inclined to smile over this injunction. Those of us who bear battle scars in our struggles to rear righteous children might doubt the effectiveness of this “authoritarian” approach. However, we have learned that Alma was not guilty of using merely a “cook book” or general approach with his sons. We have seen how Alma, in counseling his sons, approached each one differently as he urged them to keep the commandments, as he taught them the doctrines of the kingdom, and as he bore testimony to them. He was sensitive to the individual needs of each of them.

13 That ye turn to the Lord with all your mind, might, and strength; that ye lead away the hearts of no more to do wickedly; but rather return unto them, and acknowledge your faults and that wrong which ye have done.

verse 13 “return unto them, and acknowledge your faults and that wrong which ye have done” Here is an important part of the repentance process—to make restitution to any who might have been offended. Regarding this concept, President Joseph F. Smith wrote: “Does repentance consist of sorrow for wrong doing? Yes, but is that all? By no means. True repentance only is acceptable to God; nothing short of it will answer the purpose. Then what is true repentance? True repentance is not only sorrow for sins, and humble penitence and contrition before God, but it involves the necessity of turning away from them, a discontinuance of all evil practices and deeds, a thorough reformation of life, a vital change from evil to good, from vice to virtue, from darkness to light. Not only so, but to make restitution, so far as it is possible, for all the wrongs we have done, to pay our debts, and restore to God and man their rights—that which is due to them from us. This is true repentance, and the exercise of the will and all the powers of body and mind is demanded, to complete this glorious work of repentance; then God will accept it" (Gospel Doctrine, 100-101).

14 Seek not after riches nor the vain things of this world; for behold, you cannot carry them with you.

verse 14 What can we take with us? Divine attributes—characteristics we have “earned” by our obedience to God’s law, relationships, and our memories seem to comprise a reasonably complete list. What can we not take with us? Material possessions, fame, social status.

15 And now, my son, I would say somewhat unto you concerning the coming of Christ. Behold, I say unto you, that it is he that surely shall come to take away the sins of the world; yea, he cometh to declare glad tidings of salvation unto his people.

16 And now, my son, this was the ministry unto which ye were called, to declare these glad tidings unto this people to prepare their minds; or rather that salvation might come unto them, that they may prepare the minds of their children to hear the word at the time of his coming.

17 And now I will ease your mind somewhat on this subject. Behold, you marvel why these things should be known so long beforehand. Behold, I say unto you, is not a soul at this time as precious unto God as a soul will be at the time of his coming?

verse 17 This verse implies that Corianton had expressed doubts about Messianic prophecies. He had probably given voice to his doubts in much the same words that doubters would use today: “How is it possible for you to know so much about this Jesus Christ when you say he won’t even be born until many years from now?”

18 Is it not as necessary that the plan of redemption should be made known unto this people as well as unto their children?

19 Is it not as easy at this time for the Lord to send his angel to declare these glad tidings unto us as unto our children, or as after the time of his coming?

verses 17-19 A simple yet profoundly important perspective the Book of Mormon has afforded us is that Christian prophets have taught Christian doctrine and administered Christian ordinances since the days of Adam (Jacob 4:4). Biblical prophecies and text have been sufficiently altered that the world does not hold this concept (see, however, Luke 24:25-27). It is generally believed that Christianity with its concepts and ordinances began at the time of Jesus Christ and his apostles.

Here, Alma explains to his son Corianton that it should not be impossible to believe in Christ just because he has not yet appeared on earth in his mortal ministry. It is just as easy for the Lord to send prophets to the earth with the “good news” before Christ’s mortal advent as it is for him to send prophets following his mortal ministry.

Alma Chapter 40

Alma 40 Alma counsels his son Corianton on the spirit world and resurrection.

Alma 40:11-14 Now, concerning the state of the soul between death and the resurrection. Behold, it has been made known unto me by an angel, that the spirits of all men, as soon as they are departed from this mortal body, yea, the spirits of all men, whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life.

1 Now my son, here is somewhat more I would say unto thee; for I perceive that thy mind is worried concerning the resurrection of the dead.

verse 1 “I perceive that thy mind is worried concerning the resurrection of the dead” Corianton’s concern over the doctrine of resurrection is somewhat startling, particularly considering that his father, Alma, was a prophet and the high priest over the land (Alma 5:3). Why would the son of a prophet struggle to understand one of the most fundamental doctrines of the gospel?

One likely possibility is that Corianton was exposed to religious philosophies that either dismissed or corrupted the true doctrine of the resurrection. Early in the Book of Mormon, Lehi and his son Jacob taught the reality of the resurrection explicitly (2 Nephi 2:8; 9:6) (For a deeper analysis of the early doctrine of resurrection in the Book of Mormon, see A. Keith Thompson, “The Doctrine of Resurrection in the Book of Mormon,” Interpreter: A Journal of Mormon Scripture 12, 2016: 114–115). It seems, though, that sometime between the death of Jacob and the reign of King Mosiah (son of Benjamin) a portion of the people rejected this teaching.

For instance, the way Abinadi emphasized the resurrection when he confronted King Noah and his priests suggests that this doctrine was not being correctly or sufficiently taught among the people in the city of Nephi (See John Hilton III and Jana Johnson, “Who Uses the Word Resurrection in the Book of Mormon and How Is It Used?” Journal of the Book of Mormon and Other Restoration Scripture 21, no. 2, 2012: 32–33). It is also notable that after the newly converted senior Alma later privately taught “concerning the resurrection of the dead, and the redemption of the people,” we learn that “many did believe on his words” (Mosiah 18:2–3). This statement makes best sense if the resurrection was previously unknown or unaccepted among the Zenifite / Nephite people in the land of Lehi-Nephi. Likewise, when the Senior Alma strove to perpetuate Abinadi’s teachings, many of the rising generation “did not believe what had been said concerning the resurrection of the dead” (Mosiah 26:2). Abinadi taught among the people of Noah who resided in the land of Lehi-Nephi, whereas Alma continued these teachings in the land of Zarahemla. It is significant that the societies in both locations struggled to accept the doctrine of the resurrection.

As a rebellious youth, Alma the Younger himself likely rejected the reality of the resurrection and was “numbered among the unbelievers” before his miraculous conversion (Mosiah 27:8). These types of textual clues indicate that some outside teaching or philosophy may have been competing against the true doctrine of the resurrection.

What is more certain is the way that Nehor negatively influenced attitudes toward this doctrine. Unlike Korihor, who completely denied the existence of God (Alma 30:2), Nehor introduced the concept that the “Lord had created all men, and had also redeemed all men; and, in the end, all men should have eternal life” (Alma 1:4). Nehor’s divergent theology obviously had influenced the young Corianton’s views of resurrection and judgment, and yet it conflicted with the eternal laws of justice and judgment embedded in the true doctrine of the resurrection (see Alma 42:22).

Despite his trial and execution, Nehor’s enticing doctrines became popular among the people—so much so that his philosophy was formally designated as “the order of Nehor” (Alma 14:16; 24:29). Unfortunately, Nehor’s heresy was promulgated by the Amlicites, who, by the time of Corianton’s ministry, had gained prominent influence (See Douglas J. Merrell, “The False Priests of the Book of Mormon,” in Selections from the Religious Education Student Symposium 2005, Provo, UT: Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, 2005: 87–94. See also J. Christopher Conkling, “Alma’s Enemies: The Case of the Lamanites, Amlicites, and Mysterious Amalekites,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 14, no. 1, 2005: 113–115).

2 Behold, I say unto you, that there is no resurrection—or, I would say, in other words, that this mortal does not put on immortality, this corruption does not put on incorruption—until after the coming of Christ.

verse 2 Christ was the first to be resurrected (1 Corinthians 15:20). In this verse the mortal body is referred to as “this mortal” or “this corruption.” The mortal body is “corruption” in that it is subject to disease and aging and decay and death. The eternal body is referred to as “immortality” or “incorruption.”

3 Behold, he bringeth to pass the resurrection of the dead. But behold, my son, the resurrection is not yet. Now, I unfold unto you a mystery; nevertheless, there are many mysteries which are kept, that no one knoweth them save God himself. But I show unto you one thing which I have inquired diligently of God that I might know—that is concerning the resurrection.

verse 3 “Now, I unfold unto you a mystery” Alma’s intent here seems to be to discuss—beginning in verse 6—what he has learned from God regarding the world of spirits—the state of the soul between death and resurrection. It is this information about “which [he has] inquired diligently of God that [he] might know.”

4 Behold, there is a time appointed that all shall come forth from the dead. Now when this time cometh no one knows; but God knoweth the time which is appointed.

verse 4 “Now when this time cometh no one knows” Alma does not intend to give any details about the sequence or timing of the resurrection. Indeed, we will learn that his understanding of this sequence was imperfect. His intention, rather is to discuss mainly the spirit world (see verse 9).

5 Now, whether there shall be one time, or a second time, or a third time, that men shall come forth from the dead, it mattereth not; for God knoweth all these things; and it sufficeth me to know that this is the case—that there is a time appointed that all shall rise from the dead.

verse 5 Though it is not Alma’s intention to discuss the sequence of the resurrection, that sequence is reviewed in the introductory commentary for verses 16-20 of this chapter.

verses 6-7 Alma understands that in the resurrection the body and spirit are reunited. He then asks, in these next two verses, a logical question: What becomes of the spirit of man between the time of his death and his resurrection?

6 Now there must needs be a space betwixt the time of death and the time of the resurrection.

verse 6 Between the time of a man’s death in mortality and his resurrection he lives in the world of spirits, the so-called spirit world. For a discussion of this phase of our eternal life The Spirit World in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 13.

7 And now I would inquire what becometh of the souls of men from this time of death to the time appointed for the resurrection?

verse 7 “Souls of men” here refers to the spirits of men. This same meaning for “soul” and “souls” also pertains in verses 11, 14, 18, 21, and 23 of this chapter. This usage is different from the more specific definition of the soul of man given to us by revelation in this final dispensation. This latter, more correct, definition of the soul is the combination of the man’s spirit and his body (D&C 88:15-16).

8 Now whether there is more than one time appointed for men to rise it mattereth not; for all do not die at once, and this mattereth not; all is as one day with God, and time only is measured unto men.

verse 8 Again, for a discussion of the sequence of the resurrection see the introductory comments for verses 16-20 of this chapter.

“time only is measured unto men” The scriptures teach us that in the worlds to come “there shall be time no longer” (D&C 84:100; 88:110). This is a tantalizing piece of information, but conceptually it is difficult to digest and understand at this stage of our development.

Elder Neal A. Maxwell enriched our understanding of time: “And when the gossamer veil called time is too much with us, let us recall that ere long time will be no more. Time is measured only to man anyway (see Revelation 10:6; Alma 40:8; D&C 84:100). Meanwhile, let us make allowance for the rapidity with which time seems to pass especially when we are happy. Jacob found it so; ‘And Jacob served seven years for Rachel; and they seemed unto him but a few days, for the love he had to her’ (Genesis 29:20). On such a scale, each of us has but ‘a few days’ left in mortality” (We Will Prove Them Herewith, 10).

9 Therefore, there is a time appointed unto men that they shall rise from the dead; and there is a space between the time of death and the resurrection. And now, concerning this space of time, what becometh of the souls of men is the thing which I have inquired diligently of the Lord to know; and this is the thing of which I do know.

verse 9 “And now, concerning this space of time, what becometh of the souls of men is the thing which I have inquired diligently of the Lord to know; and this is the thing of which I do know” Recognizing the historical controversy that surrounded the doctrine of the resurrection (see the commentary for verse 1) can help readers better understand the root cause of Corianton’s confusion. His concern over this doctrine was not likely due to casual curiosity or mere inquisitiveness. It seems, rather, that he was surrounded by philosophical and theological ideologies that directly contradicted a foundational tenet of his father’s religion. Corianton’s immoral behavior can also be meaningfully correlated to his concerns and doubts that threatened his faith in Jesus Christ, the reality of His death, the resurrection, and the final judgment.

These topics had been of great concern to many people, not only to Corianton but also even to Alma. Charting the development of the doctrine of resurrection in the Book of Mormon can also help us appreciate the new contributions of Alma’s teachings to his son. As noted earlier, Alma himself had once been an unbeliever. In order to satisfy his own questions or concerns about this issue, we learn in this verse that he had “inquired diligently of the Lord.” In response, the Lord sent an angel to enlighten him. From this experience, Alma was able to add the following insights to what was already written about the resurrection in the Book of Mormon:

- No one is resurrected until after the coming of Christ (Alma 40:2).
- There is a specific time appointed when every person will be resurrected, but only God knows that time (Alma 40:4, 9).

- There will likely be multiple times of resurrection since there will be righteous people who live and die after Christ dies and is resurrected (Alma 40:5, 8). For a discussion of the timing of the resurrections, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 13, The Spirit World. See particularly the section titled “When Are We Resurrected?”

- Alma believed that the righteous till the time of Christ would be resurrected with Him (Alma 40:20) (Thompson, “Doctrine of the Resurrection,” 124).

It is uncertain what Corianton’s specific beliefs were prior to his father’s exhortation, but, thematically speaking, Alma’s treasured instructions to Corianton helped him understand the systematic nature and crucial functions of the resurrection. It is also important to consider that Alma 40 is just the beginning of Alma’s discourse on the resurrection. This chapter mainly establishes that, after death, the spirits of the righteous will be “received into a state of happiness,” while the spirits of the wicked will be “be cast out into outer darkness” (Alma 40:12–13). Alma 41–42 aim to justify the doctrine of resurrection and judgment that are clearly delineated in Alma 40.

Similar to Corianton’s environment, modern society faces a host of misguided philosophies and false teachings which can threaten faith in true doctrines. Alma’s brilliant exposition powerfully demonstrates that true knowledge of sacred things cannot be inherited and is only obtained through diligent seeking and sincere prayer. In all of this, modern readers can learn much from Alma’s example of helping a loved one find meaningful answers to difficult and productive questions.

10 And when the time cometh when all shall rise, then shall they know that God knoweth all the times which are appointed unto man.

11 Now, concerning the state of the soul between death and the resurrection—Behold, it has been made known unto me by an angel, that the spirits of all men, as soon as they are departed from this mortal body, yea, the spirits of all men, whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life.

12 And then shall it come to pass, that the spirits of those who are righteous are received into a state of happiness, which is called paradise, a state of rest, a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles and from all care, and sorrow.

verses 11-12 These verses and also 2 Nephi 9:38 suggest that “all men,” both good and evil, at the moment of their death, are taken home to God—doubtless our Lord Jesus Christ—perhaps to have a private audience with him to be assigned to either the state of peace or “paradise” or to the state of misery, the “spirit prison.” Alma’s wording here is similar to that found in the book of Ecclesiastes: “Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it” (Ecclesiastes 12:7). Is this really the correct order of events after death? Do we really enter into the presence of God as soon as we die? This verse has led some to believe that the post-mortal spirit world is identical to the premortal spirit world where we lived in the presence of God. For a discussion of this question and for a summary of what is known about the spirit world, see The Spirit World, a chapter in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine referenced above.

verse 12 “a state of rest, a state of peace” It is obvious that the righteous departed spirits in paradise are free of worldly troubles, the vicissitudes of life, and the shackles of a corrupt and infirm body. It is likely that these spirits will enjoy the vigor and enthusiasm which was characteristic of them in their prime of life. Their mortal trial is over. They are sealed up to inherit eternal life in the celestial kingdom. Rather than simply resting, however, they will be involved in the work of the Lord, particularly missionary work. All who do not qualify for the state of paradise will be assigned spirit prison where they will begin their labors to work out their own eternal future.

Let us all be reminded, however, that at the time of Alma’s teaching Coriantum there existed, in the post mortal spirit world, an impassible gap between paradise and prison. Hence no missionary work will begin in spirit prison until the Savior’s resurrection. Then, this gap will be erased, and the paradisiacal spirits will begin their work.

13 And then shall it come to pass, that the spirits of the wicked, yea, who are evil—for behold, they have no part nor portion of the Spirit of the Lord; for behold, they chose evil works rather than good; therefore the spirit of the devil did enter into them, and take possession of their house—and these shall be cast out into outer darkness; there shall be weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth, and this because of their own iniquity, being led captive by the will of the devil.

verse 13 “the spirit of the devil did enter into them, and take possession of their house” “Their house” might be interpreted as “their spirit.” While it is true that some of the spirits in the spirit prison are so wicked that the devil virtually has taken possession of them and has his way with them, this phrase likely has reference to all of those spirits that enter into the spirit prison. Does Satan really take possession of all those spirits who enter the spirit prison? To some extent all who enter the spirit prison have succumbed to the “natural man” tendencies within all of us and to the temptations of Satan and to the pulls of the mortal world. Keep in mind the relationship between Satan and the natural self of each man. Satan did not create it, but he encourages caving in to its pulls.

“cast into outer darkness” Again, assuming that this verse applies to all who enter the spirit prison and not just the most wicked among them, this “outer darkness” is not the same place as the “outer darkness” where Satan and the sons of Perdition will live eternally. Rather, in this verse, this phrase refers simply to the spirit prison. Here, there will be “weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth” as the unrepentant sinners, who failed to take full advantage of the Savior's atonement here in mortality, undergo the buffetings of Satan and become cleansed of their sins in preparation for their receiving a degree of glory. They will, eventually, automatically receive the privilege of resurrection. Thus, a part of Christ's atonement does automatically apply to them—the overcoming of physical death. However, the part of the Savior's atonement that overcomes spiritual death only applies to those who repent of their sins and live the commandments. Thus, the unrepentant sinners must be turned over to the buffetings of Satan and begin to pay the price for their own sins. In this manner, they become partially cleansed of their sins and begin to become prepared to receive a degree of glory. It is during this painful process that misery is experienced which results in "weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth." Of the exquisite pain and remorseful realization that is experienced here, Joseph Smith taught: "The great misery of departed spirits in the world of spirits (where they go after death) is [the knowledge] that they [have] come short of the glory that others enjoy and that they might have enjoyed themselves, and they are their own accusers" (TPJS, 310-11).

In addition to remorse, experienced in the spirit prison, there are other reasons the spirit prison is referred to as "hell." For every individual in spirit prison, there is only one way to avoid being cast into eternal outer darkness with Satan and his angels forever. It is to repent and accept Christ. It would not be surprising to learn that these individuals are advised, not only of the necessity of their repentance and accepting Christ, but also of a temporal deadline for that repentance and coming to Christ. Many of them have a long way to progress as they repair their lives. They therefore must suffer much pain of self denial. And it will be "hell" indeed! Please keep in mind that there is no arbitrary or purely punitive suffering in God's universe. The "hell" or pain they experience is completely productive and necessary.

14 Now this is the state of the souls of the wicked, yea, in darkness, and a state of awful, fearful looking for the fiery indignation of the wrath of God upon them; thus they remain in this state, as well as the righteous in paradise, until the time of their resurrection.

verse 14 This verse describes the frame of mind of some of those in the spirit prison. There seems to be little hope and much of despair among (some of) them. These are likely those spoken of in the previous verse whose "house" (spirit) has been lost to the devil. They are "in darkness, and a state of awful, fearful looking for the fiery indignation of the wrath of God upon them." This is a particularly poignant and pitiable state and is probably analogous to that of the one third of the hosts of heaven in the pre-existence who were cast out with Satan. They know well their final destiny, and they desperately fear its coming. There is scriptural evidence that those in the clutches of the devil know and fear their destiny. In the country of the Gergesenes, the Savior encountered two who were possessed by devils. Upon recognizing the Lord, the evil pair cried out: “What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God? Art thou come hither to torment us before the time?” (Matthew 8:29). It seems clear that these two also were in “a state of awful, fearful looking for the fiery indignation of the wrath of God upon them.”

One meaning of this verse is self-explanatory but worth emphasizing. All spirits will remain in the spirit realm until their resurrection.

15 Now, there are some that have understood that this state of happiness and this state of misery of the soul, before the resurrection, was a first resurrection. Yea, I admit it may be termed a resurrection, the raising of the spirit or the soul and their consignation to happiness or misery, according to the words which have been spoken.

verse 15 It is apparent that Alma understands the true meaning of the term resurrection—the reuniting of the spirit with its eternal body (see verse 18). Here he suggests that the process of death and the passage of the spirit to either paradise or prison might be termed a “first resurrection” of sorts. We know that it is not actually a resurrection.

verses 16-20 Before attempting a discussion of these verses, let us review what is known through modern-day revelation about the sequence of the first and second resurrections: Not everyone is resurrected at the same moment. There is a pre-defined order in which man is resurrected. The apostle Paul said, “For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order” (1 Corinthians 15:22-23, italics added).

Actually, there are two separate resurrections, the first and the second. The first resurrection is also called the “resurrection of life” or the “resurrection of the just.” The second resurrection is also referred to as the “resurrection of damnation” (3 Nephi 26:5) or the “resurrection of the unjust” (D&C 76:17).

The first resurrection is divided into two parts: the “morning of the first resurrection” and the “afternoon of the first resurrection.” Those who merit a celestial body come forth in the “morning” of the first resurrection. These are they who once resided in paradise, those who bore the title “just men made perfect,” those referred to as “the just” (D&C 76:17), meaning that they are justified, ratified, sealed, and approved of God. These are they who have had their calling and election made sure—they who have received the promise by revelation that they shall be equal with him in power, might, and dominion (see D&C 76:95). For a discussion of the concept of having one’s calling and election made sure, see the commentary for Helaman 10:4-7 and also Calling and Election Made Sure in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 16. Those who come forth in this resurrection will live with God and enjoy “eternal life” which is God’s life.

The morning of the first resurrection began at the time of the resurrection of Jesus, and it is likely continuing at the present time. The final phase of the “morning” of the first resurrection is the major resurrection that will occur at the time of Christ’s second coming just prior to the Millennium. Of course, those who live during the Millennium and merit celestial glory will receive their celestial bodies during the millennial period (see D&C 132:19).

Those who will inherit a terrestrial body arise in the “afternoon” of the first resurrection. The afternoon of the first resurrection begins some time after the onset of the Millennium and ends before the end of the one thousand years. As mentioned, it is during this phase that those bound for the terrestrial glory will receive their bodies. These are referred to as “Christ’s at his coming” (D&C 88:99). These are they “who have received their part in that prison which is prepared for them, that they might receive the gospel, and be judged according to men in the flesh” (D&C 88:99). These have accepted Christ but not to the degree that would exalt them.

The second resurrection begins at the end of the Millennium. The first to come forth in the second resurrection are those who have accepted Christ and have been cleansed of their sins and have thus earned the celestial glory. Then, finally, those who have earned no glory and who are destined to spend the rest of eternity with Satan in outer darkness come forth with their bodies. Even “hell” or the spirit prison cannot purge these of their filth. They were given a sure witness and knowledge of heaven’s secrets, but they denied it all and came out in open rebellion striving to destroy the Lord and his church. Thus, they “crucify Christ afresh.”

16 And behold, again it hath been spoken, that there is a first resurrection, a resurrection of all those who have been, or who are, or who shall be, down to the resurrection of Christ from the dead.

verse 16 Alma here seems to suggest that the “first resurrection” includes “all” men, both the righteous and the wicked, who died between the time of Adam and the time of Christ. Through modern revelation we have learned a more correct understanding of the first resurrection as discussed above.

17 Now, we do not suppose that this first resurrection, which is spoken of in this manner, can be the resurrection of the souls and their consignation to happiness or misery. Ye cannot suppose that this is what it meaneth.

verse 17 Here Alma simply makes the point that the “partial judgment” or the assignment to paradise or prison which occurs immediately after death is not to be referred to as a resurrection. In verse 15, Alma referred to the partial judgment as a “resurrection” of sorts. But here, he acknowledges that the partial judgment is not the real resurrection.

Brigham Young gave us an interesting additional insight into the resurrection. He taught that no man on the earth holds the keys of the resurrection. “We have not, neither can we, receive here the ordinance and the keys of the resurrection. They will be given to those who have passed off this stage of action and have received their bodies again. . . They will be ordained by those who hold the keys of the resurrection, to go forth and resurrect the saints, just as we receive the ordinance of baptism, then the keys to baptize others for the remission of sins. This is one of the ordinances we cannot receive here, and there are many more” (JD, 15:137). It is fascinating to learn that those who have been resurrected will assist with the “ordinance” of the resurrection.

18 Behold, I say unto you, Nay; but it meaneth the reuniting of the soul with the body, of those from the days of Adam down to the resurrection of Christ.

verse 18 The term “resurrection” is very specific and refers to reuniting of the “soul” (actually the spirit) with the eternal body.

19 Now, whether the souls and the bodies of those of whom has been spoken shall all be reunited at once, the wicked as well as the righteous, I do not say; let it suffice; that I say that they all come forth; or in other words, their resurrection cometh to pass before the resurrection of those who die after the resurrection of Christ.

verse 19 Alma here acknowledges that he is not sure when the various groups will be resurrected. He then speculates, incorrectly as it turns out, as to the sequence of resurrection. He teaches that all who lived up to the time of Christ, both righteous and wicked, will be resurrected “before the resurrection of those who die after the resurrection of “Christ.” We must keep in mind that each prophet can only teach according to his own light and understanding, and one prophet’s understanding of any given doctrine may be greater or less than that of another prophet living at another time. Joseph Fielding Smith wrote: “It is evident that Alma’s understanding of the extent of the resurrection at the time the Savior came forth from the dead was limited, therefore he stated only his opinion” (The Improvement Era [July 1954] 57:495).

We now know from modern revelation that the only individuals who were resurrected with Christ were the saints—those in a state of paradise, destined to inherit the celestial kingdom (see Mosiah 15:22; D&C 138:12).

20 Now, my son, I do not say that their resurrection cometh at the resurrection of Christ; but behold, I give it as my opinion, that the souls and the bodies are reunited, of the righteous, at the resurrection of Christ, and his ascension into heaven.

verse 20 Alma’s “opinion” or spiritual intuition on this specific point is accurate. The first resurrection, the resurrection of the righteous who died between the days of Alma and the time of Christ does indeed begin shortly after the resurrection of the Savior (Matthew 27:52-53).

21 But whether it be at his resurrection or after, I do not say; but this much I say, that there is a space between death and the resurrection of the body, and a state of the soul in happiness or in misery until the time which is appointed of God that the dead shall come forth, and be reunited, both soul and body, and be brought to stand before God, and be judged according to their works.

22 Yea, this bringeth about the restoration of those things of which has been spoken by the mouths of the prophets.

verse 22 Here, the law of restoration is introduced. We will learn more of this concept in chapter 41.

23 The soul shall be restored to the body, and the body to the soul; yea, and every limb and joint shall be restored to its body; yea, even a hair of the head shall not be lost; but all things shall be restored to their proper and perfect frame.

verse 23 This verse conjures up the image of the resurrection as a retrieval and piecing together of the various parts of our mortal bodies when we were in our physical prime. However, we know that man will be resurrected with an eternal body that is celestial, terrestrial, telestial, or one which is suited only to live in outer darkness. Hence, each man will receive his “proper and perfect” body depending on his worthiness. These eternal bodies may be presumed to be fundamentally different than those in which we abide during mortality. For a more complete discussion of the specifics of resurrection, under the section titles “The Great Final Judgment,” see the subtitle “What is the role of the resurrection in the final judgment of us all—two views of resurrection?” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 9, The Judgments.

“all things shall be restored to their proper and perfect frame” Elder Neal A. Maxwell expanded our understanding of the “all things” which shall be restored:

At the judgment we will not only have the Book of Mormon’s prophesied “bright recollection” and “perfect remembrance” of our misdeeds (see Alma 5:18; 11:43); the joyous things will be preserved too. . . Among the “all things [that] shall be restored” (Alma 40:23) will be memory, including eventually the memory of premortal events and conditions. What a flood of feeling and fact will come to us when, at a time a loving God deems wise, this faculty is restored! Surely it will increase our gratefulness for God’s long-suffering and for Jesus’ atonement! Hence one of the great blessings of immortality and eternal life will be the joy of our being connected again with the memories of both the first and the second estates (Men and Women of Christ, 132).

24 And now, my son, this is the restoration of which has been spoken by the mouths of the prophets—verse 24 We will learn that the “law of restoration” includes both a temporal and a spiritual restoration. The resurrection is the temporal restoration, while the spiritual restoration consists of those blessings, powers, and gifts which a man may eventually receive depending upon his performance during this probationary period. We will consider further the law of restoration in chapter 41.

25 And then shall the righteous shine forth in the kingdom of God.

verse 25 In what sense will the righteous “shine forth in the kingdom of God”? Joseph Smith wrote of the eventual fate of the righteous. “Here, then, is eternal life—to know the only wise and true God; and you have got to learn how to be Gods yourselves, and to be kings and priests to God, the same as all Gods have done before you, namely, by going from one small degree to another, and from a small capacity to a great one; from grace to grace, from exaltation to exaltation, until you attain to the resurrection of the dead, and are able to dwell in everlasting burnings, and to sit in glory, as do those who sit enthroned in everlasting power (TPJS, 346-47).

We know that the resurrection will endow all men (except the sons of perdition) with a measure of glory proportionate to their individual spiritual capacities. Even the glory of the telestial—the least of the Father’s kingdoms—“surpasses all understanding” (D&C 76:89). All immortals must be enveloped in glory if they are to enjoy any degree of his presence in eternity. To receive a fulness of the Father’s “consuming fire” is to be bathed in celestial powers. It is, said the Prophet Joseph, to “come to dwell in unity, and in all the glory and everlasting burnings of the Gods” (TPJS, 172-73). To do this, we must be able to comprehend the Lord’s fulness (D&C 88:67). Hence, the degree to which we can endure the presence of God determines the degree to which we can become one with him. It also determines our capacity for happiness or joy (D&C 93:33; 76:96-98; Helaman 5:44; cf. 1 Peter 1:8).

26 But behold, an awful death cometh upon the wicked; for they die as to things pertaining to things of righteousness; for they are unclean, and no unclean thing can inherit the kingdom of God; but they are cast out, and consigned to partake of the fruits of their labors or their works, which have been evil; and they drink the dregs of a bitter cup.

verse 26 This verse seems to describe those who will go with Satan to outer darkness.

“and they drink the dregs of a bitter cup” A wicked man “drink[s] the dregs of a bitter cup” when he receives the justice and judgment of God.

There are a number of instances in the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon where Dr. Royal Skousen feels that Oliver made a mistake in transcribing Joseph Smith’s dictation. If a word or a phrase was unknown to him, he substituted a more common word or phrase (but with varying degrees of success). In each of these cases, the substitution is found in the original manuscript and was later copied into the printer's manuscript. It was then either corrected by the typesetter or appeared in the 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon. This phrase offers such an example. In the original and printer's manuscripts, this phrase read "and they drink the drugs of a bitter cup." The word drugs was corrected by the typesetter, and it therefore was changed to dregs in the 1830 edition. Dr. Skousen feels that the reading in the present edition is the correct one.

Scripture Mastery

Alma 41 Alma counsels his son Corianton on the law of restoration.

Alma 41:10 The law of restoration: Wickedness never was happiness.

What must a man do in order to one day stand justified before God? The answer to this question defines our doctrine of justification.

Before continuing, let us review the law of justice which is essential background for our understanding the concept of justification (for a more complete discussion, see The Law of Justice in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 12). This law sets a standard for all of God's actions relative to the eternal fate of each of his creatures. It holds that in their quest for their eternal reward, none of his creatures—none of his intelligences—will ever be unfairly accorded an advantage over another. And, no one of his creations will ever be penalized without that penalty's being fully deserved and wholly appropriate. The law of justice is the law of perfect fairness. This law is best known for one of its tenets in particular. This tenet holds that for every violation of God's law a penalty must be paid. This law is very exact. If even one sin is committed, and complete payment is not made, the individual guilty of the sin cannot qualify for entry back into God's presence. A man is said to be "justified" or "reconciled to God" when all penalties are paid. He is then brought into perfect harmony with God to the point where he can be exalted. No man can be exalted in the celestial kingdom without being justified. In fact, if payment is not made for even one sin, the individual cannot enter any kingdom of glory (including the terrestrial and telestial kingdoms).

Since all have sinned, appropriate payment must be made for each of us. How is this payment made? There are only three theoretical ways to meet the demands of the law of justice and become justified and hence exalted. First, a man may try to keep the law perfectly and never get into debt to the law. This is referred to as trying to become "justified by the law." Obviously, no man except Jesus Christ has ever lived without sin, therefore we know that it is impossible to become justified by the law.

Secondly, a man may pay the debts produced by his sins by suffering himself. While a man may be required to begin to pay for his own sins through his own suffering, man is incapable of paying his own debt to the point of complete justification or exaltation. In spite of man's best efforts, some debt will remain (Mosiah 13:28).

Thus, there is only one practically valid way for a man to meet the demands of the law of justice. It is to allow another qualified individual to intercede on his behalf and to plead his case for him. This is made possible by a law which is closely related to the law of justice. This is the law of mercy. The essence of the law of mercy may be summarized as follows: Whenever a law of the gospel is transgressed, a debt is incurred and payment must be made (this is a restatement of the law of justice). The individual who transgressed the law does not need to make the payment himself if he will sincerely repent and if another person is willing and able intercede on his behalf. The intercessor must qualify himself to the satisfaction of those who enforce the demands of justice. He must be perfectly qualified to judge those for whom exceptions to the law of justice must be made. He must be the perfect judge, and his judgments must be fair and based upon intimate knowledge of each individual situation. Obviously that qualified individual is the Savior, and he completed his qualifications during the awful hours of his atonement. During that ordeal, he came to have perfect empathy for all of mankind and therefore qualified himself to judge each individual child of God. The law of mercy does not detract from the law of justice, rather it is an essential addition to it (see Alma 42:24-25).

Just one further note about the law of justice. When an unrepentant sinner dies, he finds himself outside the atoning power of Jesus Christ. He must then reside in the spirit prison. There he will suffer the “hell” of beginning to pay the debt himself. Even though it is impossible for him to make complete payment or restitution himself, his efforts and motivation for doing so will then be judged. Most such people will eventually repent and acknowledge Jesus Christ as their Savior. Then Christ’s atoning influence will produce a state of partial justification which will enable them to inherit a degree of glory—either the terrestrial or telestial kingdom. Those few who remain unrepentant and in a state of rebellion will go with Satan to become sons of Perdition forever (2 Nephi 9:8-9). The prophet Mormon describes these as remaining “filthy still” (Mormon 9:14).

Alma’s son Corianton is heavy with sin, and Alma perceives that he has considerable doubts about the doctrines that set out the requirements for exaltation. In the following verses, Alma teaches his son the doctrine of justification. He does this by teaching the principle or law which he calls the “law of restoration.” The apostle Paul referred to this same principle or law as the “law of the harvest” (“whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap”—Galatians 6:7).

What is the law of restoration? When Latter-day Saints hear the term restoration, they typically think of the latter-day return of the Church and gospel of Jesus Christ to the earth. Book of Mormon prophets, however, use this term in a different sense. They teach that each individual will receive both a temporal restoration and a spiritual restoration, and they will receive the restoration they deserve and have earned. Simply stated, this law holds that in the resurrection all men will be raised to that level of glory commensurate with the lives they lived in mortality. Each man will be judged by his works and the intentions of his heart. If a man’s works and the desires of his heart in this life are good, then in the judgment the man will be restored to that which is good. If his works and desires are evil, then in that last day, evil will be restored to him. That which a man sends out shall be returned to him in kind. The terms “good” and “evil” are not arbitrary ones. Thoughts and actions that are “good” conform to the laws of God—the gospel of Jesus Christ. Those that are “evil” fail to conform. The gospel of Jesus Christ is the universal standard by which all mankind will be judged.

Is this fair? Have all men had the opportunity to learn this standard, to learn the gospel of Jesus Christ? Isn't it true that some mortals have lived and died and never even heard of Christ and his gospel? The essence of Christ and his gospel is available and ever has been available to all men who live on the earth or who have ever lived on the earth through the Spirit of God. The Holy Ghost teaches all men who are receptive to his whisperings the eternal standard by which they shall be judged, indeed the gospel of Jesus Christ. Thus, we may ask the question: What are the essential characteristics of a man that will determine the outcome in his judgment? Certainly, they are his behaviors or “works” and the true desires or intentions of his heart. Now we must add yet a third characteristic—it is his receptivity to the promptings of the Spirit of God. The man who is receptive to the teachings of the Spirit is changed in his heart. The true desires of his heart center on conforming to the gospel of Christ. These desires will be manifest in his actions or works. The net result will be a gradual and steady spiritual progression. He will become more like God. The amount of spiritual progress a man makes, in absolute terms, here on earth may well form the basis of the judgment of all-knowing God. For any individual, however, the amount of progress he makes will be affected by the progress he made in the pre-existence and by the circumstances he encountered here on earth. The Savior, in his omniscience, will judge and judge fairly (John 5:22).

Another aspect of the principle of restoration is that a man's death does not alter his basic nature. A man carries into the spirit world the same basic attitudes, personality, and character he has developed on earth. When we came into this earth life, we brought with us inclinations, abilities, weaknesses, and attitudes we developed in the premortal world. Similarly, we pass into the spirit world with the same basic qualities which we acquired while on earth. If we lived upon this earth with a hunger for righteousness and a desire for things of the spirit, we will have those same proclivities “restored” to us in the world of spirits. Contrariwise, if the objects of our primary affections on this earth were materialism and things of the flesh, we cannot expect to be differently oriented when we arrive in the spirit world.

verses 1-4 These verses contain Alma's explanation of the law of restoration which he refers to also as the “plan of restoration.” In these verses, Alma explains that the resurrection is considered a part of the “law of restoration.” It is the temporal part of the law of restoration. There is also a spiritual aspect of the law of restoration. We will receive good for good and evil for evil. Our condition and rewards hereafter shall be directly related to the manner in which we lived during this mortal life.

An ancient legal principle known as talionic justice embodies the principle of the law of restoration. John W. Welch explained, “Talionic justice achieved a sense of poetic justice, rectification of imbalance, relatedness between the nature of the wrong and the fashioning of the remedy, and appropriateness in determining the measure or degree of punishment” (John W. Welch, The Legal Cases in the Book of Mormon, Provo, UT: BYU Press and Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2008, 338–339). Essentially, this was the famous law of an “eye for an eye” and a “tooth for a tooth” which was divinely revealed in the Old Testament and applied broadly throughout the ancient Near East (Exodus 21:24) (Welch, Legal Cases, 339).

Most of us tend to view the legal statutes of the Old Testament as irrelevant or obsolete, but Alma’s exhortation demonstrates that their fundamental principles are eternally relevant. Clearly, a divine implementation of talionic justice will be the guiding principle of restoration as it relates to final judgment and the resurrection. For example, people will receive forgiveness as they have forgiven (Matthew. 6:12); and people will be judged by the way they have judged others (Matthew. 7:1). Awareness of this principle can deepen appreciation for how, even though the application of truth may vary, “God is the same yesterday, today, and forever” (Mormon 9:9).

1 And now, my son, I have somewhat to say concerning the restoration of which has been spoken; for behold, some have wrested the scriptures, and have gone far astray because of this thing. And I perceive that thy mind has been worried also concerning this thing. But behold, I will explain it unto thee.

verse 1 Apparently Corianton had expressed to his father Alma his disgruntlement at the idea that a loving God would punish his sinful children.

“some have wrested the scriptures” To “wrest” the scriptures is to distort or change their meaning—to derive meaning from them that was not intended by the Lord.

As described previously, here is another instance where Dr. Royal Skousen feels that Oliver made a mistake in transcribing Joseph Smith’s dictation. If a word or a phrase was unknown to him, he substituted a more common word or phrase. In each of these cases, the substitution is found in the original manuscript and was later copied into the printer’s manuscript. It was then either corrected by the typesetter or appeared in the 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon. This phrase offers such an example. In the original and printer’s manuscripts, this phrase read “some have arrested the scriptures.” The word arrest was allowed to stand by the typesetter, and it therefore appeared in the 1830 edition. By the 1837 edition, it was changed to wrest, as is found in our present edition. Dr. Skousen feels that the reading in the present edition is the correct one.

2 I say unto thee, my son, that the plan of restoration is requisite with the justice of God; for it is requisite that all things should be restored to their proper order. Behold, it is requisite and just, according to the power and resurrection of Christ, that the soul of man should be restored to its body, and that every part of the body should be restored to itself.

verse 2 As previously mentioned, the resurrection is a part of the law of restoration, indeed it is the temporal restoration. Each individual will be resurrected with that body he deserves—i.e. a celestial body, a terrestrial body, a telestial body, or a body suited only for perdition or outer darkness.

3 And it is requisite with the justice of God that men should be judged according to their works; and if their works were good in this life, and the desires of their hearts were good, that they should also, at the last day, be restored unto that which is good.

verse 3 There is also a spiritual restoration. Those blessings and rewards people merit “according to their works” and the “desires of their hearts” will be restored to them in the life to come.

“the desires of their hearts” Hugh Nibley commented on this verse: “The test for this life is not for knowledge; it is not for intelligence, or for courage, or for anything like that. That would be a huge joke. None of us knows very much, none of us is very brave, none of us is very strong, none of us is very smart. We would flunk those tests terribly. As Alma said, we are only to be tested on one thing—the desires of our heart (Alma 41:3); that is what we are really after. And in that way, we betray ourselves completely. Anyone who knows the signs, who knows what to look for—not just our Heavenly Father, but even a good psychiatrist . . . can spot it just like that. You yourself can see your own life; you can test yourself.” Brother Nibley continued on to describe the only two things we need to be good at. These are also the only two things we will be tested on. They are whether or not “we can forgive” and whether or not “we can repent. These are the two things the angels envy us for” (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 9, 300). The concept of “the desires of [our] hearts” does not refer to our prejudices, our preferences, our whims, or our inclinations. Rather it refers to what we really are at our core. We will not be judged by what we want. Rather, we will be judged by just exactly who and what we are—by the “desires of our hearts” (see D&C 137:9).

4 And if their works are evil they shall be restored unto them for evil. Therefore, all things shall be restored to their proper order, every thing to its natural frame—mortality raised to immortality—corruption to incorruption—raised to endless happiness to inherit the kingdom of God, or to endless misery to inherit the kingdom of the devil, the one on one hand, the other on the other—verse 4 “corruption to incorruption” “Mortal bodies are corruptible bodies; that is, they are subject to physical change and decay, corruption means mortality; incorruption means immortality. Speaking of the resurrection, Abinadi said, ‘This mortal shall put on immortality, and this corruption shall put on incorruption' (Mosiah 16:10)" (Bruce R. McConkie, Mormon Doctrine, 163).

“all things shall be restored to their proper order” Things are restored to their proper order when a man receives eternal rewards perfectly commensurate with what he really is in his heart of hearts. The practical importance of the law of restoration, or the restoring all things to “their proper order” will be emphasized by the prophet Moroni in Mormon 9:3-4: “Do ye suppose that ye shall dwell with [God] under a consciousness of your guilt? Do ye suppose that ye could be happy to dwell with that holy being, when your souls are racked with a consciousness of guilt that ye have ever abused his laws? Behold, I say unto you that ye would be more miserable to dwell with a holy and just God, under a consciousness of your filthiness before him, than ye would to dwell with the damned souls in hell.” Also we read in D&C 88:21-24: “And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom, even that of a terrestrial kingdom, or that of a telestial kingdom. For he who is not able to abide the law of a celestial kingdom cannot abide a celestial glory. And he who cannot abide the law of a terrestrial kingdom cannot abide a terrestrial glory. And he who cannot abide the law of a telestial kingdom cannot abide a telestial glory; therefore he is not meet for a kingdom of glory. Therefore, he must abide a kingdom which is not a kingdom of glory.”

When the “dust” of the judgment has settled and each man is assigned to his eternal place, will all be happy? Will there be any in the terrestrial and telestial kingdoms who might have succeeded in the celestial degree of glory? Will there be any whose assignment to a lesser glory is a self-perceived eternal tragedy? We know that God will reward each individual according to the “desires of his heart” (Alma 29:4; D&C 137:9) which means that each will receive according to what he really is at his very center. But will there be some who might have changed their hearts, by repenting of their sins, but failed to do so? Perhaps so. “. . . of all sad words of tongue and pen, the saddest [the most painful] are these: ‘It might have been’” (John Greenleaf Whittier).

It does, however, seem apparent that all will be resurrected and assigned to that kingdom wherein they will ultimately be content and fulfilled. No one will live eternally where he or she does not belong. There he or she would be most unhappy and uncomfortable among people of like minds, but unlike theirs.

5 The one raised to happiness according to his desires of happiness, or good according to his desires of good; and the other to evil according to his desires of evil; for as he has desired to do evil all the day long even so shall he have his reward of evil when the night cometh.

verse 5 “when the night cometh” The “night” referred to here is the same as the “night of darkness wherein there can be no labor performed” referred to in Alma 34:33. It is not death, but rather it is eternity following the resurrection.

6 And so it is on the other hand. If he hath repented of his sins, and desired righteousness until the end of his days, even so he shall be rewarded unto righteousness.

7 These are they that are redeemed of the Lord; yea, these are they that are taken out, that are delivered from that endless night of darkness; and thus they stand or fall; for behold, they are their own judges, whether to do good or do evil.

verse 7 “they are their own judges” We read in the scriptures about those who will pass formal judgment upon us. These include the Savior (2 Nephi 9:41) and Christ’s original apostles (D&C 29:12; Matthew 19:28). We also read of being brought to stand before the judgment bar of God following our resurrection (2 Nephi 33:15). These are formal judgments, almost ritual judgments intended to declare and make eternal record of our eternal destinies. In the ultimate sense, however, man is his own judge. The sum total of his deeply-held beliefs, his heart’s desires, and his works become written into his soul so that he actually dictates his own eternal destiny. We will stand before our Savior and the Twelve and before the judgment bar of the Father already judged by what we have become.

8 Now, the decrees of God are unalterable; therefore, the way is prepared that whosoever will may walk therein and be saved.

9 And now behold, my son, do not risk one more offense against your God upon those points of doctrine, which ye have hitherto risked to commit sin.

10 Do not suppose, because it has been spoken concerning restoration, that ye shall be restored from sin to happiness. Behold, I say unto you, wickedness never was happiness.

verse 10 “wickedness never was happiness” This is a profound truth that is true in absolute terms. President Ezra Taft Benson taught: “We have the responsibility of living this gospel. It is impossible for one who has received a testimony of this work and holds membership in the Church to be truly happy and not live the gospel. I have seen people who have drifted away from the Church, who have become inactive, and I have seen them brought back into activity, and the testimony of all of them is to the effect that during periods of inactivity there is something lacking—they are not happy inside, they are not satisfied. Men are that they might have joy (see 2 Nephi 25), but [true] joy and happiness come only through living the principles of the gospel. There is no happiness in wickedness, no happiness in sin, no happiness in inactivity. And there is no safety in inactivity. If we want to be happy, if we want to be secure in our testimonies and in our faith and in our membership in the Church, we must live the gospel, we must try to build up the kingdom, we must shoulder our part of the responsibility in helping to carry this message to the nations of the earth” (Teachings of Ezra Taft Benson, 339-340). Elder Neal A. Maxwell wrote: “Without realizing the inherent inconsistency, some want happiness along with worldliness—which cannot be. We “are free to choose,” and choose we will, either subtly or dramatically. But the alternatives and consequences will not change” (Men and Women of Christ, 100).

Lest we get to thinking that our eternal fate is already cast in stone, let us be reminded that man is able to change his basic nature. Through obedience to God’s law, a man may change at his very core. As he obeys the commandments of the gospel of Jesus Christ, his “natural self” is gradually purged out of him, and he indeed becomes a “new creature”—“born again.” He becomes more like God. Hence, by the law of restoration, he upgrades his eternal reward.

We have claimed here that “wickedness never was happiness.” Yet, we have claimed that each and every individual will eventually be assigned to an eternal reward where he will fit and be happy for all eternity. As Alma addresses his son here, he is speaking of this mortal existence and the effects of sin on those negotiating this mortal state. In an eternal heaven of glory (celestial, terrestrial, or telestial), it is apparent that each individual will come to equilibrium and come to conclude that he is in the right place and will be content and fulfilled for all eternity.

It seems likely that Alma’s teachings here in Alma 41 to Corianton on the principle of restoration were at least in part a response to the heretical teachings of Nehor—to those who were “after the order and faith of Nehor” (Alma 14:16). Before his execution, Nehor “testified unto the people that all mankind should be saved at the last day, and that they need not fear nor tremble, but that they might lift up their heads and rejoice; for the Lord had created all men, and had also redeemed all men; and, in the end, all men should have eternal life” (Alma 1:4). The way that Alma’s discourse directly addressed these assumptions about universal salvation suggests that Corianton subscribed to Nehor’s heretical teachings. For example, here in verse 10, Alma cautioned his son to “not suppose, because it has been spoken concerning restoration, that ye shall be restored from sin to happiness.”

11 And now, my son, all men that are in a state of nature, or I would say, in a carnal state, are in the gall of bitterness and in the bonds of iniquity; they are without God in the world, and they have gone contrary to the nature of God; therefore, they are in a state contrary to the nature of happiness.

verse 11 “in the gall of bitterness” For a discussion of this colorful phrase, see the commentary for Mosiah 27:29.

“in a state of nature . . . in a carnal state . . . in the gall of bitterness . . . in the bonds of iniquity” These phrases all denote the same thing. They all refer to a natural man who fails to respond to the influence of the Spirit of the Holy Ghost. It would seem that one cannot suffer a greater loss in mortality than to lose the Spirit of the Lord. To be without the Spirit is to be in a wholly carnal state. As this verse suggests, it is to be “without God in the world” and, therefore “in a state contrary to the nature of happiness.”

“they are in a state contrary to the nature of happiness” Elder Neal A. Maxwell commented on this phrase: “In a world in which more and more people ignore the first commandment and live ‘without God in the world,’ we see in those lives a fatal separation from reality. First of all, to live ‘without God in the world’ is, said Alma, a condition ‘contrary to the nature of happiness’ (Alma 41:11). Having gone wrong as to the first commandment, everything else is then askew, including relationships with others. As for such souls, their mortal lives are ‘no more than a night in a second-class hotel’ (Saint Teresa of Avila)” (Notwithstanding My Weakness, 27-28). Elder Maxwell’s reference to the “first commandment” here refers to the Lord’s commandment that we love God with all our heart, all our mind, all our soul, and all our strength.

12 And now behold, is the meaning of the word restoration to take a thing of a natural state and place it in an unnatural state, or to place it in a state opposite to its nature?

verses 13-14 It has been observed that these following two verses are strongly chiasmic in their style. For a review of this and other types of Hebrew poetry see the supplemental article The Hebrew Language and the Book of Mormon. See also the introductory comments for Alma 36.

In these two verses, the chiasmic twist is creatively elegant: After listing four pairs of terms, Alma then pairs two lists of four terms and reverses their order at the same time (Welch, John W. “Chiasmus in the Book of Mormon.” BYU Studies 10:1 [1969], 69-84).

a good for that which is good;

b righteous for that which is righteous;

c Just for that which is just;

d merciful for that which is merciful.

Therefore, my son, see that you are

d' merciful unto your brethren;

c' deal justly,

b' judge righteously,

a' and do good continually;

and if ye do all these things then shall ye receive your reward; yea, d'2 ye shall have mercy restored to you again;

c'2 ye shall have justice restored unto you again;

b'2 ye shall have a righteous judgment restored . . . and a'2 ye shall have good rewarded unto you again.

Notably, this chiasm focuses mostly on the positive aspects of restoration. It is true that evil, carnal, and devilish behavior will in some way return to afflict the sinner, but in this instance Alma chose instead to emphasize the blessings of goodness, righteousness, justice, and mercy that will be restored to the righteous. Although he was very explicit and emphatic in his denunciation of sin, Alma ultimately wanted Corianton to “let the justice of God, and his mercy, and his long-suffering have full sway in [his] heart” (Alma 42:30).

13 O, my son, this is not the case; but the meaning of the word restoration is to bring back again evil for evil, or carnal for carnal, or devilish for devilish—good for that which is good; righteous for that which is righteous; just for that which is just; merciful for that which is merciful.

14 Therefore, my son, see that you are merciful unto your brethren; deal justly, judge righteously, and do good continually; and if ye do all these things then shall ye receive your reward; yea, ye shall have mercy restored unto you again; ye shall have justice restored unto you again; ye shall have a righteous judgment restored unto you again; and ye shall have good rewarded unto you again.

verse 14 “ye shall have mercy restored unto you again; ye shall have justice restored unto you again” According to the law of restoration, the merciful shall receive mercy, and those who deal justly shall receive justice. The “agains” in this phrase refer to second application of these virtues. The first application is when an individual manifests the virtue. The second application is when that virtue is returned to him as a blessing from the Lord.

We usually refer to God’s justice as something that comes to the wicked. Justice is also meted out to the righteous wherein they receive positive blessings.

“ye shall have a righteous judgment restored unto you again” For further discussion of the concept of “righteous judgment” see “Just What Did Happen in Gethsemane and at Calvary?” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine volume 1, chapter 19, The Essence of the Lord’s Atonement.

15 For that which ye do send out shall return unto you again, and be restored; therefore, the word restoration more fully condemneth the sinner, and justifieth him not at all.

verse 15 This verse contains a succinct statement of the “law of the harvest” or the “law of restoration.”

Alma Chapter 42

Scripture Mastery

Alma 42 Alma counsels his son Corianton on the atonement, justice, and mercy.

Alma 42:22 Alma teaches his son Corianton the principle of justice. If there is no repentance, justice claimeth the creature and executeth the law.

In this chapter, Alma addresses the topic of the delicate balance between justice and mercy.

1 And now, my son, I perceive there is somewhat more which doth worry your mind, which ye cannot understand—which is concerning the justice of God in the punishment of the sinner; for ye do try to suppose that it is injustice that the sinner should be consigned to a state of misery.

verse 1 “I perceive there is somewhat more which doth worry your mind”

Alma is gentle and diplomatic as he addresses his doubting son. Apparently Corianton is having trouble accepting a fact that should have been intuitively obvious to him: A just God must impartially mete out rewards or punishments to his children based on their obedience or disobedience to eternal gospel principles. One can just imagine Corianton’s verbalized concerns. His figurative pendulum has swung too far to the side of mercy and away from justice. We can almost hear him say, “If God is loving and merciful, how can he, at the same time, be demanding and coldly cruel. How can he mete out punishment to man? He knows we are weak. He is kind and merciful, and would not punish his beloved creations.”

There’s nothing out of date in this type of logic. One need only consider the doctrine of Evangelical or conservative Protestants today. For them, in order to be saved one need only confess Christ. Then it matters little what you do next. Protestants today clearly evidence an apostate imbalance in the issue of justice and mercy.

Corianton is like many of us sinners. He prefers to concentrate only on God’s mercy and compassion and ignore the fact that the Father is also a God of justice. Corianton was guilty of a grave sin, and justice demanded serious consequences. I suppose it is not surprising that Corianton was not inclined to plead for the Lord’s mercy. Rather, he is questioning the fairness of his justice.

2 Now behold, my son, I will explain this thing unto thee. For behold, after the Lord God sent our first parents forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground, from whence they were taken—yea, he drew out the man, and he placed at the east end of the garden of Eden, cherubim, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the tree of life—verse 2 “to till the ground, from whence they were taken” This phrase refers to that fact that the bodies of Adam and Eve were formed of the “dust of the earth.” Thus they were driven out of the garden to till that “dust” or “ground.”

“he drew out the man” This expression is clarified in Genesis 3:24: “So he drove out the man” (emphasis mine). This phrase suggests that Adam and Eve were reluctant to leave the security of the garden and therefore had to be driven out. Oliver Cowdery apparently misread the original manuscript when he was making the printer’s manuscript. He read, in the original manuscript, “he drove out the man” and copied it as “he drew out the man.”

“he placed at the east end of the garden of Eden, cherubim, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the tree of life” What are “cherubim”? We have previously discussed this question. We will repeat that discussion for the convenience of the reader: Many animals and plants live in God’s presence, and it is likely that we have never heard of or seen many of them. John the Revelator saw and heard such animals in God’s presence (Revelation 5:8-14), and Joseph Smith recorded how these animals praised and glorified God (TPJS, 291-92). In D&C 109:79, Joseph Smith describes Seraphim in God’s presence. Joseph refers to them as “bright, shining seraphs” (emphasis added). Joseph also taught that God dwells in “everlasting burnings” and that righteous beings (human and animal) dwell with him in a state of continual burning or glory (TPJS, 372-73, 347, 361). Another type of winged heavenly creature is the cherub (singular) or cherubim (plural). Ezekiel teaches that cherubim also have hands and faces (Ezekiel 10:7, 14). Mesopotamian tradition and art represent them as winged bulls with human faces, but this need not necessarily correspond with the truth. An alternate explanation of seraphim and cherubim is that they are angels in the celestial presence of God who belong to the human family and are assigned to guard holy places, and that the descriptions of their non-human parts (“wings”) is only figurative and symbolic. Perhaps their “wings” are figurative representations of their power to move and to act.

3 Now, we see that the man had become as God, knowing good and evil; and lest he should put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat and live forever, the Lord God placed cherubim and the flaming sword, that he should not partake of the fruit—verse 3 “the man had become as God” Adam and Eve had “partaken of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil.” We might ask, “Is this tree literally a plant, or is ‘the tree’ symbolic of something else?” Elder Bruce R. McConkie wrote: “The account is speaking figuratively. What is meant by partaking of the fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil is that our first parents complied with whatever laws were involved [or perhaps broke whatever laws were involved] so that their bodies would change from their state of paradisiacal immortality to a state of natural mortality.” (“Christ and the Creation,” Ensign, June 1982, 15). Adam had become “as God” only in the specific sense of being able to understand the difference between good and evil. There remained considerable distance between him and the fulness of the Father.

“lest he should put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat and live forever” We are taught that if Adam and Eve had partaken of the fruit of the tree of life in their fallen state, they would have lived forever in their sinful mortal state eternally alienated from God. Are we also to regard the tree of life in the Garden of Eden as a literal tree, or is it a symbol contained within an allegorical account of the Garden of Eden? Certainly here, just as in the visions of Lehi and Nephi, the tree of life is not just a plant. It is symbolic of the Savior and the message of the eternal gospel which emanates from him. Perhaps the cherubim were dispatched to prevent Adam and Eve from having access to the ordinances and teachings of this gospel which might have somehow led to an untimely and inappropriate eternal extension of their mortal state.

4 And thus we see, that there was a time granted unto man to repent, yea, a probationary time, a time to repent and serve God.

verse 4 “a probationary time, a time to repent and serve God” The “probationary time” through which each of us must pass includes not only our mortal lives on earth but also the period of time that some will spend in the “spirit prison.” Those blessed to be assigned to “paradise” need no further probationary state since they have already completed their probation. The fact that it is possible to repent after this mortal life (in the spirit prison) is not emphasized in the Book of Mormon.

5 For behold, if Adam had put forth his hand immediately, and partaken of the tree of life, he would have lived forever, according to the word of God, having no space for repentance; yea, and also the word of God would have been void, and the great plan of salvation would have been frustrated.

verse 5 This verse proposes a hypothetical situation which could never have come to pass because the word of God has stated otherwise. If Adam and Eve had partaken of the fruit of the tree of life, they would have lived forever in sort of suspended state of eternal agony where they were guilty of sin but unable to repent. They would have a type of immortal body. Though they had transgressed in the garden and knew right from wrong, there would be no mortal period of probation available to them. There would be no opportunity to be tried and to repent. They would be unable to earn their exaltation. The rest of us would also suffer. We would be stuck in our pre-existent, unembodied state. Thus, “the great plan of salvation would have been frustrated.”

6 But behold, it was appointed unto man to die—therefore, as they were cut off from the tree of life they should be cut off from the face of the earth—and man became lost forever, yea, they became fallen man.

verse 6 “it was appointed unto man to die” It is essential that all men die physically and spiritually. All men must die a physical death in order to gain victory over mortality. Without death there can be no resurrection and eternal glory. Also, men must die a spiritual death. They must be cut off from the presence of God. This provides an opportunity for men to be tried and tested outside of God’s presence. And although many will be lost in the process, it does give to some the opportunity of returning to the presence of God. Because of Adam’s transgression, both types of death came upon mankind.

Keep in mind, then, the dual nature of the fall. The phenomenon of the fall may be summarized:

1. the fall of Adam and Eve. This fall resulted in physical death and spiritual death (the “first death”). Both of these are temporary as the Lord’s atonement automatically absolves each man of both of these consequences. Each man will be resurrected and all will return to the presence of God following this life at least long enough to be judged.

2. the fall of each individual, also termed “the fall of man” or “the fall of you and me.” The consequences of the fall or sin of each individual—spiritual death (the “second death”)—is “permanent.” That is, it is not automatically removed because of the Savior’s atoning sacrifice. It requires persistent repentance and obedience, indeed “a broken heart and a contrite spirit” (2 Nephi 2:7).

“therefore, as they were cut off from the tree of life they should be cut off from the face of the earth” This phrase speaks of man’s being “cut off from the tree of life” and “cut off from the face of the earth.” What do these phrases mean? Actually, — both phrases speak of man’s being cast out of the Garden of Eden. And they had to be cast out in two general ways—physically (temporally) and spiritually. As has been previously stated, it essential that all men die. “Therefore,” as they were cast out of the Garden of Eden, they “were cut off from the tree of life.” They were cast physically out of the garden. It is also essential that all men be tested in a mortal environment—outside of the presence of God. So, all men must “be cut off from the face of the earth.” The “face of the earth” is the presence of God in Garden of Eden. When Adam and Eve were driven out of the garden, they were spiritually driven out of the presence of God.

“man became lost forever, yea, they became fallen man” This phrase would be literally true only if there had been no atonement. The word “forever” here means they were truly fallen and would remain permanently so lest they be rescued or redeemed.

7 And now, ye see by this that our first parents were cut off both temporally and spiritually from the presence of the Lord; and thus we see they became subjects to follow after their own will.

verse 7 “our first parents were cut off both temporally and spiritually from the presence of the Lord” See the commentary for the previous verse.

“they became subjects to follow after their own will” The man of the world seeks to do his own will; to satisfy his own lusts; and to seek that which is immediately satisfying. The spiritual man seeks to do the will of the Father; to defer his own desires to the promptings of the Spirit; and to patiently await the Lord’s pleasure in all things.

8 Now behold, it was not expedient that man should be reclaimed from this temporal death, for that would destroy the great plan of happiness.

verse 8 “it was not expedient that man should be reclaimed from this temporal death” It was not expedient that Adam be allowed to partake of the fruit of the tree of life and thus avoid the fall which would frustrate the “great plan of happiness”—another name for the plan of salvation (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:6).

9 Therefore, as the soul could never die, and the fall had brought upon all mankind a spiritual death as well as a temporal, that is, they were cut off from the presence of the Lord, it was expedient that mankind should be reclaimed from this spiritual death.

verse 9 “as the soul could never die” Here again the “soul” refers to a man’s spirit which is absolutely and eternally indestructible—it cannot be annihilated. Since the spirit of man will last forever and since by virtue of the fall it is left without a body and cut off from the presence of God, it is imperative that man’s spirit be rescued or redeemed.

10 Therefore, as they had become carnal, sensual, and devilish, by nature, this probationary state became a state for them to prepare; it became a preparatory state.

verse 10 The Book of Mormon does not teach the doctrine of human depravity, but it does teach that man has a “fallen” nature and is prone to disobedience and ingratitude. This is man’s “natural self” in which all of us share.

Robert L. Millet wrote: “No, of course we do not believe, with Calvin, in the moral depravity of men and women. No, we do not believe, with Luther, that man, because of his carnality and depravity, does not even have the power to choose good over evil. And we do not believe that children are born in sin, that they inherit the so-called sin of Adam either through sexual union or by birth. Rather, children are conceived in sin: meaning first, that they are conceived into a world of sin, and second, that conception is the vehicle by which the effects of the fall are transmitted to Adam's posterity" (Life in Christ, 24-25).

Adam and Eve's transgression in the garden affected all of us. It resulted on our being cast into mortality where we will suffer physical death. It also meant that all of us will suffer a temporary spiritual death—here in mortality we will live outside of God's presence. No man or women will be punished Adam and Eve's transgression. That is, because of the Savior's atonement, all will be resurrected and all will be returned to God's presence—at least long enough to be judged by him. But, of course, we all will be punished eternally for our own sins lest we repent.

It is important to acknowledge here the natural self of every man. It inclines every man to seek after the things of the world and commit sin. This natural self did not magically come into being at the moment of the fall of Adam and Eve. Indeed, this natural self has always existed. Our possessing a natural self has nothing to do with Adam and Eve's transgression. However, the fall of Adam and Eve did place us all in a setting where this natural self is a potential danger. Please see The "Natural Self" and "Spiritual Self" in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 5.

11 And now remember, my son, if it were not for the plan of redemption, (laying it aside) as soon as they were dead their souls were miserable, being cut off from the presence of the Lord.

verse 11 "laying it aside" That is, assuming that the Redeemer would never atone for our sins. We know that the unavoidable and inevitable fate of all men, in this instance, would be to become sons of perdition forever (see 2 Nephi 9:8-9).

12 And now, there was no means to reclaim men from this fallen state, which man had brought upon himself because of his own disobedience;

verse 12 Adam and Eve brought upon themselves their fallen state through their "own disobedience." According to the law of justice, they had to be punished. In addition, all other men, including all of Adam and Eve's posterity, are or will be guilty of sin. Hence each man falls of his own accord. Thus, each man experiences a spiritual death because of his own disobedience (Romans 3:23). Since man is not capable of paying the entire price demanded by the law of justice himself, a Redeemer is essential.

"And now, there was no means to reclaim men from this fallen state" Alma is still postulating the hypothetical state of there being no Savior or Redeemer—"laying it aside."

It is important to understand that Adam and Eve were noble and proven leaders who, in the premortal state, fought valiantly on the side of righteousness. Adam, or Michael the Archangel, in the first estate was captain of the heavenly hosts who cast Satan and his fallen angels out of heaven (JST Revelation 12:7). Adam and Eve were hand-picked to lead the human family. They were the best qualified among all of the children of God. They did not, indeed they would not, do anything to destroy the plan of God. They were foreordained to fall, and their disobedience or transgression in the garden was deliberate and necessary. Adam and Eve were placed in the garden as immortal beings. Christ inherited an immortal nature from his Father. Adam, Eve, and Christ were the only beings who possessed immortality by their very natures. They alone had the option to live on indefinitely or to die. They each realized the necessity of choosing to die. “Adam fell that men might be” (2 Nephi 2:25). Adam’s choosing to become mortal enabled us, his offspring, to be born into mortality. Jesus explained, “I lay down my life, that I take it up again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it up again” (John 10:17-18).

13 Therefore, according to justice, the plan of redemption could not be brought about, only on conditions of repentance of men in this probationary state, yea, this preparatory state; for except it were for these conditions, mercy could not take effect except it should destroy the work of justice. Now the work of justice could not be destroyed; if so, God would cease to be God.

verse 13 The phrase “the plan of redemption could not be brought about, only on conditions of repentance” actually means that the plan of redemption could only be brought about by conditions of repentance.

“except it were for these conditions, mercy could not take effect except it should destroy the work of justice” The phrase “these conditions” refers to the state of fallen man’s being able to repent. The blessings of the Lord’s mercy cannot be extended to mankind without his having to repent.

“except it should destroy the work of justice” If men were exalted without having to repent, then mercy would destroy justice. The law of justice would be no longer valid and binding—a situation that cannot be.

“Now the work of justice could not be destroyed; if so, God would cease to be God.” Is it possible that God could ever cease to be God? If God were to become arbitrary and impulsive rather than just and consistent, would he continue to be God? He would not. Joseph Smith explained: “It is . . . necessary, in order for the exercise of faith in God unto life and salvation, that men should have the idea of the existence of the attribute justice in him; for without the idea of the existence of the attribute justice in the Deity, men could not have confidence sufficient to place themselves under his guidance and direction; for they would be filled with fear and doubt lest the judge of all the earth would not do right, and thus fear or doubt, existing in the mind, would preclude the possibility of the exercise of faith in him for life and salvation. But when the idea of the existence of the attribute justice in the Deity is fairly planted in the mind, it leaves no room for doubt to get into the heart, and the mind is enabled to cast itself upon the Almighty without fear and without doubt, and with the most unshaken confidence, believing that the Judge of all the earth will do right” (Lectures on Faith, 4:13).

God’s power actually derives from those whom he governs (D&C 63:59). If God were to fail to be just, then his creations would disavow him. He would then lose his power and cease to be God (See The Power of God in volume 1, chapter 14 of Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine). God is God because he possesses all the attributes of godliness. He is unfailingly just. His law is absolute. This idea is communicated by the scriptural phrase, “his course is one eternal round.” God will always and inevitably be a God of justice. Hence, in actuality, he can never cease to be God, though it is theoretically possible for him to do so. Exalted beings do not apostatize. They do not backslide.

We thus understand clearly why men cannot be saved, as many contemporary Christian denominations proclaim they can—solely by the grace or mercy of God, without repentance and obedience (“works”). Mercy cannot be allowed to rob justice.

14 And thus we see that all mankind were fallen, and they were in the grasp of justice; yea, the justice of God, which consigned them forever to be cut off from his presence.

verse 14 “they were in the grasp of justice” Fallen man is indeed in the grasp of the law of justice. Without proper repentance and without a redeemer, they are “consigned . . . forever to be cut off from his presence.” Again, we are also reminded that without the application of the law of mercy, when man is subject only to the law of justice, he is forever lost (2 Nephi 9:8-9).

15 And now, the plan of mercy could not be brought about except an atonement should be made; therefore God himself atoneth for the sins of the world, to bring about the plan of mercy, to appease the demands of justice, that God might be a perfect, just God, and a merciful God also.

verse 15 “the plan of mercy” This is the law of mercy and is defined in the commentary for verse 1 of this chapter. Without the atonement, the law of mercy could never be applicable to man. Why? Because the law of mercy, in order to become active in the lives of humankind, demands that it (the law of mercy) be administered by a perfect judge. And if the Lord Jesus Christ had not atoned, there would not have existed a perfect judge (Alma 7:11-12; Hebrews 2:18; John 5:22). See The Essence of the Lord’s Atonement in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 19.

“demands of justice” Just who or what is it that enforces the law of justice? See a discussion of this topic in The Law of Justice in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 12.

16 Now, repentance could not come unto men except there were a punishment, which also was eternal as the life of the soul should be, affixed opposite to the plan of happiness, which was as eternal also as the life of the soul.

verse 16 “repentance could not come unto men except there were a punishment” This phrase teaches the important truth that an individual cannot completely repent of sin without experiencing punishment. President Spencer W. Kimball quoted this scripture in a priesthood meeting of general conference and then taught the brethren: “Ponder on that for a moment. Have you realized that? There can be no forgiveness without real and total repentance, and there can be no repentance without punishment. This [law] is as eternal as is the soul. . . Please remember these things when somebody comes before you who has broken the laws of God. It is so easy to let our sympathies carry us out of proportion; and when a man has committed sin, he must suffer. It is an absolute requirement—not by the bishop—but it is a requirement by nature and by the very part of a man” (CR, April 1975, 115).

There is nothing of arbitrariness in the plan of our Father in heaven. He does nothing for purely punitive purposes. He does not mete out suffering without productive purpose. We might classify the suffering of sin into two categories. First, the sinner who makes no effort to repent—he who merely languishes in sin inevitably suffers some remorse. There is no happiness in sin (Alma 41:10). Indeed, there is inevitably unhappiness in sin. The second type of suffering occurs when man attempts to change—to repent. A man cannot repent without subduing and overcoming his natural self. And this overcoming is always painful. It requires real effort, and it hurts. It is an important form of suffering.

“affixed opposite to the plan of happiness” Just as there is a plan for man’s ultimate happiness (exaltation), there also exists “unhappiness.” For him who violates the laws of justice and fails to repent in an optimal and timely manner, there are also eternal consequences or provisions—an eternal plan. These will receive a lesser eternal reward. While this lesser reward may not actually result in a man’s eternal unhappiness, it fails to provide its recipients with the full measure of happiness experienced by the fully obedient. We may thus refer to these aspects of the Lord’s plan of salvation as the plan which is “opposite to the plan of happiness.” There is also a plan of (mechanism for) unhappiness.

17 Now, how could a man repent except he should sin? How could he sin if there was no law? How could there be a law save there was a punishment?

verse 17 This verse implies that the concepts of law, sin, and punishment are intimately interdependent upon one another. Intuitively it is easy to understand that if law didn’t exist, there would be no sin. Hence, “How could he sin if there was no law?” Also, if no punishment existed for disobedience of the law, then the law would be a useless sham. Hence, “How could there be a law save there was a punishment?” A law cannot actually exist without consequences for obedience and disobedience to the law.

What is the relationship between God and the law? Is God the author of law? It may well be true that there is an eternal or natural law that governs the universe to which even God is subject. It is logical to suppose that God was not the author of this law. Though God may not have invented the law, for us the Father and the Son are the law. They are the very prototype, the supreme exemplars, the epitome of the law. They have drawn upon eternal resources to make the law applicable to us. It is for this reason that we refer to the law as God's law. And we refer to those laws also as the gospel of Jesus Christ.

There is one type of law we might call "regulatory" law. There may at first seem to be a certain element of arbitrariness in these laws. These are laws given so the Church may function as an organization or perhaps so that we might learn obedience and humility and thus grow toward godhood. Examples of the latter include many of the highly specific laws given to ancient Israel in Moses's day and to us today. We must be baptized by one having authority. We must join with others in his Church and then support and become subject to the organization of the Church. These so called regulatory laws are a vital part of the gospel of Jesus Christ. We presume God has authored these laws for our benefit to lead us to happiness.

18 Now, there was a punishment affixed, and a just law given, which brought remorse of conscience unto man.

verse 18 "remorse of conscience" Just what is conscience? It seems to be the direct consequence of possessing the light of Christ or the spirit of Christ, that small inclination given to all men to yearn and seek for a higher meaning here in mortality. It would not be surprising to learn that this spirit of Christ is provided to all men by the Holy Ghost himself. In fact, the spirit of Christ may well be a modicum of responsiveness to the influence of the Spirit of God which is received by each and every individual at their birth. It inclines each man to yearn subtly for truth and righteousness. When our behavior is inconsistent with this spirit of Christ, we then suffer the "remorse of conscience." ". . . of all sad words of tongue and pen, the saddest [the most painful] are these: 'It might have been'" (John Greenleaf Whittier).

Is it possible for a man to bury or nullify the light of Christ through his own disobedience, so that its influence is no longer felt? Most certainly it is.

19 Now, if there was no law given—if a man murdered he should die—would he be afraid he would die if he should murder?

verse 19 Alma supposes another hypothetical situation: If the law decreeing that a murderer must die had never been given, then would a man be afraid to commit murder? He would not.

20 And also, if there was no law given against sin men would not be afraid to sin.

verse 20 One of the purposes of the law is to provide man with the motivation and incentive to obey. Part of our motivation to obey is our fear of punishment should we disobey. President Harold B. Lee taught: “Think about that for a moment. If there were no opposition to good, would there be any chance to exercise your agency or right to choose? To deny you that privilege would be to deny you the opportunity to grow in knowledge, experience, and power. God has given laws with penalties affixed so that man might be made afraid of sin and be guided into paths of truth and duty (see Alma 42:20)” (Stand Ye In Holy Places, 219-20).

21 And if there was no law given, if men sinned what could justice do, or mercy either, for they would have no claim upon the creature?

verses 22-26 To understand these next five verses, it is vital that you understand the “law of justice” and the “law of mercy.” See the discussion of these laws in the introductory commentary for chapter 41.

22 But there is a law given, and a punishment affixed, and a repentance granted; which repentance mercy claimeth; otherwise, justice claimeth the creature and executeth the law, and the law inflicteth the punishment; if not so, the works of justice would be destroyed, and God would cease to be God.

verse 22 “But there is a law given, and a punishment affixed” The previous verse postulates the hypothetical situation: “And if there was no law given.” If this were the case, then there would be no such thing as justice or mercy simply because the law did not exist. There can be no law of justice or law of mercy if there is no law. This verse sets the situation right. There is a law, and the law of justice does exist—there is “a punishment affixed.”

“which repentance mercy claimeth; otherwise, justice claimeth the creature and executeth the law” Since man, if left alone with the law of justice, cannot fully repent to the point of his exaltation, the law of mercy must exist as an addendum to the principle of repentance, hence—“which repentance mercy claimeth”—the law of mercy claims the principle of repentance as an integral part of itself. If there were no law of mercy, man would indeed be left alone with the law of justice—“justice claimeth the creature and executeth the law, and the law inflicteth the punishment.” Man left alone with the law of justice is lost, since it is not possible for man to completely pay the debts he incurs to the law of justice.

“if not so, the works of justice would be destroyed, and God would cease to be God” If there were no justice and mercy, God would cease to be God. To review the line of logic whereby God would cease to be God, review the commentary for verse 13.

23 But God ceaseth not to be God, and mercy claimeth the penitent, and mercy cometh because of the atonement; and the atonement bringeth to pass the resurrection of the dead; and the resurrection of the dead bringeth back men into the presence of God; and thus they are restored into his presence, to be judged according to their works, according to the law and justice.

verse 23 “But God ceaseth not to be God” The law of justice and the plan of mercy are alive and well. God will never cease to be God.

“mercy claimeth the penitent” The Lord’s mercy is extended to the sincerely repentant. We become beneficiaries of God’s mercy only if we submit to his gospel and repent of our sins.

“mercy cometh because of the atonement” By some mysterious and awful process in the garden of Gethsemane and on the cross, the Savior qualified himself to be able to mercifully absolve us of our sins even when, according to the law of justice, we do not completely deserve or merit that absolution.

“and the atonement bringeth to pass the resurrection of the dead” Through Christ’s atoning sacrifice, all men will be resurrected as a free gift.

“and the resurrection of the dead bringeth back men into the presence of God; and thus they are restored into his presence, to be judged” Again, this verse, if taken literally, might be confusing. It is true that following their resurrection, all men will stand before God to be judged. But it is also true that this event is probably more of a formal or ritual judgment which will stand as an eternal witness for or against each man. The literal judgment takes place at the moment of resurrection since each man comes forth in the resurrection with that type of body which clearly indicates the place of his eternal abode.

“to be judged according to their works, according to the law and justice” While it is true that we will be judged according to our works and according to the law of justice, it is also true that the Lord’s mercy will be extended and considered in our judgment.

24 For behold, justice exerciseth all his demands, and also mercy claimeth all which is her own; and thus, none but the truly penitent are saved.

verse 24 An interesting note, in passing, is that justice is rendered here as being masculine, and mercy, feminine. Might this somehow imply something about the nature of man and woman?

25 What, do ye suppose that mercy can rob justice? I say unto you, Nay; not one whit. If so, God would cease to be God.

verse 25 As stated by verse 24, the Savior paid for the sins of men in a way that will not rob justice. His atonement requires that men repent in order to qualify for the payment he has made in their behalf. If men do not repent then the law of justice alone claims them. The Savior's administering of the law of mercy is perfectly fair, perfectly equitable, and perfectly acceptable for all of God's creatures. Those who enforce the demands of justice are fully content with the Savior's judgments. When Jesus appeals for an exception to the law of justice for any individual, that exception is granted without reservation. Among the enforcers of justice there is no sense of the law of justice's being robbed or violated.

President John Taylor explained how justice and mercy relate to one another in the atonement of Christ: "Is justice dishonored? No; it is satisfied, the debt is paid. Is righteousness departed from? No; this is a righteous act. All requirements are met. Is judgment violated? No; its demands are fulfilled. Is mercy triumphant? No; she simply claims her own. Justice, judgment, mercy and truth all harmonize as the attributes of Deity . . . in this great, grand, momentous, just, equitable, merciful and meritorious act" (The Mediation and Atonement. Salt Lake City: Stevens & Wallis, 1950, 167).

For a discussion of the phrase "God would cease to be God," see the commentary for verse 13 of this chapter.

26 And thus God bringeth about his great and eternal purposes, which were prepared from the foundation of the world. And thus cometh about the salvation and the redemption of men, and also their destruction and misery.

verse 26 "prepared from the foundation of the world" In this commentary, we have always interpreted the expression "from the foundation of the world" as referring to our premortal existence when plans were made for the creation and existence of this world and the other worlds of our Father. In this case, the Father's great plan of happiness was not specifically prepared for this round of creation but has certainly predated our round of our Father's creative adventure. It has always existed and has always applied to every God and his rounds of creation.

God's "great and eternal" plan which was "prepared from the foundation of the world" consists of both the plan of happiness and that necessary part of the plan which we may call the plan of unhappiness.

27 Therefore, O my son, whosoever will come may come and partake of the waters of life freely; and whosoever will not come the same is not compelled to come; but in the last day it shall be restored unto him according to his deeds.

verse 27 "whosoever will come may come and partake of the waters of life freely; and whosoever will not come the same is not compelled to come" The Savior is the tree of life and the waters of life. We partake of the fruit of the tree of life, we eat the bread of life, and we drink the waters of life when we come to him and commit ourselves to strive to obey him and become like him. The Lord himself will later, during his mortal ministry, refer to himself as the “living waters” (John 4:4-42).

Man has his unfettered agency, but the eternal laws of God will never bend or break. It is absolutely true that no unclean thing can enter into the kingdom of heaven.

“in the last day it shall be restored unto him according to his deeds” Here again is a verification of the law of restoration. See also the following verse. This law may be simply summarized: The quality of our eternal lifestyle is contingent upon what is in our heart (what we actually are) because our obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel reflects our hearts’ desires.

28 If he has desired to do evil, and has not repented in his days, behold, evil shall be done unto him, according to the restoration of God.

verse 28 “in his days” This phrase refers to a man’s probationary state—mortality and the spirit world.

29 And now, my son, I desire that ye should let these things trouble you no more, and only let your sins trouble you, with that trouble which shall bring you down unto repentance.

verse 29 Alma here advises Corianton to quit worrying so much about the doctrinal questions and start worrying more about his sins and his need for repentance.

30 O my son, I desire that ye should deny the justice of God no more. Do not endeavor to excuse yourself in the least point because of your sins, by denying the justice of God; but do you let the justice of God, and his mercy, and his long-suffering have full sway in your heart; and let it bring you down to the dust in humility.

verse 30 Sway here means influence; weight; or authority. It would seem that we must each have firmly implanted in our hearts and minds both the principles of justice and the mercy. How do we hold them in proper balance? We strive and struggle to keep the commandments, yet we must realize that it is not enough. We must humbly acknowledge that without the Lord’s mercy we are lost. This latter realization should truly bring us “down to the dust in humility.”

31 And now, O my son, ye are called of God to preach the word unto this people. And now, my son, go thy way, declare the word with truth and soberness, that thou mayest bring souls unto repentance, that the great plan of mercy may have claim upon them. And may God grant unto you even according to my words. Amen.

verse 31 There is good evidence that Corianton's repentance was complete. We have good reason to believe that he returned to the ministry and full fellowship in the church. We will read of Corianton's labors about one year hence: "Thus ended the nineteenth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi. Yea, and there was continual peace among them, and exceedingly great prosperity in the church because of their heed and diligence which they gave unto the word of God, which was declared unto them by Helaman, and Shiblon, and Corianton, and Ammon and his brethren, yea, and by all those who had been ordained by the holy order of God" (Alma 49:29-30). We will also read of him some twenty years later, and we will note that he is still doing the work of the Lord: "And it came to pass in the thirty and ninth year of the reign of the judges, Shiblon died also, and Corianton had gone forth to the land northward in a ship, to carry forth provisions unto the people who had gone forth into that land" (Alma 63:10).

Alma 43-62 A period of war—the account of the remarkable Nephite chief captain Moroni.

Alma 43-44 The Amalekite (Amlicite) Zerahemnah joins his army with the Zoramites and comes against the Nephite army initially in the land of Jershon and later near the land of Manti. Zerahemnah is scalped by a Nephite soldier after refusing Alma's offer to enter a covenant of peace. Zerahemnah's army is soundly defeated and finally they enter into the covenant of peace.

War Principles

Chapter 43 begins the section of the Book of Mormon often referred to as the war chapters (Alma 43-62). An oft-asked question is, "Why is so much of the Book of Mormon account dedicated to war? Why does the Lord feel it important that we learn so much about the wars fought among Book of Mormon peoples during the years 70-55 BC?" With tongue-in-cheek, some have suggested that it is simply Mormon's fascination with Captain Moroni. After all, he did name his son after him. It seems more likely that there are important gospel principles that have to do with conflict among peoples—principles only pertinent in times of war. We may refer to these as the War Principles, and it is obvious the Lord feels we need to learn them. One application of these principles is to set the righteous criteria for justifying a country's entering a war—for deciding whether or not there is justification for war in the eyes of God.

We will summarize the War Principles which seem most pertinent (acknowledgment is given to S. Michael Wilcox [personal communication] for much of this material):

1. The attitudes with which an individual or a nation enters a war are critical. If a person or a people goes to war because of anger and hatred, they lose their objectivity and become easy to control. A contemporary example is the radical Muslim suicide bombers. They are whipped up in their anger against the Jews and against the United States to the point where they will even sacrifice their lives for their cause. They are in bondage to their leaders. You will notice it is not the leaders of the extremist Muslim organizations that are committing suicide. Rather, it is those whom they have provoked to anger and hatred. Other examples are the masters of hate and anger, Osama Bin Laden and Adolph Hitler.

Those who enter a war must evidence a healthy reluctance to go to war. They must not be eager to take the lives of their enemies. It is rare that God justifies an offensive war.

2. Motives are critical. If a person or group is motivated by the lust for power—the need to put their enemies in bondage, or the desire to compel their enemies to change their religion—they are not justified. Religious wars are never justified.

In Alma 46 we will encounter a summary of Captain Moroni's motives for entering into a war. On a flag he calls the "title of liberty," Moroni will write, "In memory of our God, our religion, and freedom, and our peace, our wives, and our children" (Alma 46:12-13). If an individual or a nation must go to war to defend their lands, houses, children, wives, rights, liberties, and their freedom to worship then they are justified.

3. Avoid violation of the "law of the third offense." See the commentary for Alma 43:46. For the convenience of the reader, I will briefly summarize this law here. If a people is attacked by an aggressor nation, then the people under attack should not go out to battle without the Lord's approbation. That approval may only be obtained after the people under siege have extended an offer of peace, not once but three times. Thus, this law may also be termed the "law of fourth offense." Furthermore, if the enemy attacks then repents and begs forgiveness, then they should be forgiven—not only once but "seventy times seven." Finally, if an enemy trespasses and does not repent, they should be forgiven three times. If they do not repent on the fourth occasion, then this matter should be brought before the Lord who will exact compensation in his own way and bless those who have been trespassed against.

The Lord, however, has counseled that in this dangerous world, a pre-emptive strike may at times be justified in "times of exigency" (D&C 134:11).

4. You must respond to a threat according to the danger. In order to assess the danger you must know your enemy. A good example is Mohandus Ghandi during his effort to win independence for India from England. By knowing the relative honor of his enemy, he was able to successfully choose the correct response to their repressive hegemony.

5. A righteous people should make certain they are led by a man of God.

6. The most critical factor in a nation's remaining safe and secure is unity and righteousness and not armaments. God will protect us and fight our battles if we are obedient to him and worship him. The worldly must depend on armaments, but God does not. The critical factor determining whether or not a people is blessed with divine protection is their righteousness and not their military might (Alma 44:4)

7. When a wicked nation fights against another wicked nation, the Lord does not intervene, and they may well be left to destroy each other. This principle is applicable and pertinent to the United States of America; particularly since the nation who has sinned against the greater light will be held most responsible by the Lord (see Helaman 7:23-24).

8. A righteous minority may prove to be the salvation of their nation (Alma 62:40).

9. The occurrence of war is usually not the responsibility of any particular single man. Yet, each man must choose his own response to war. He can become hardened, mean, cruel, and vengeful, or he can humble and submissive to the Lord. Each man is responsible for his response to the war.

Captain Moroni and Covenant Making

The central character in chapters 43 through 62 of the book of Alma is the remarkable Nephite chief captain Moroni. One LDS scholar Thomas R. Valletta has suggested, in his article “The Captain and the Covenant” (The Book of Mormon: Alma the Testimony of the Word, 223-48) that it is impossible to understand and fully appreciate Moroni without understanding the phenomenon of covenant making and Moroni’s commitment to the covenants he had made. Without the perspective of the vital importance of covenants, one might well suppose Moroni to be just another charismatic demagogue who sought to persuade his people according to his own personal agenda. Moroni was no demagogue. Instead, he viewed his world from the perspective of covenant theology. He is the prototype covenant keeper. Moroni’s whole character and behavior typified his commitment to his covenants with the Lord.

For a discussion of the concept the covenants which the Lord enters into with his people, see Covenants and Covenant Making in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 3.

The Methods of Warfare in the Book of Mormon

Historians of war divide the human experience of war into two broad categories, pre-modern warfare and modern warfare, with the transition between the two having occurred in Europe in the sixteenth century. William J. Hamblin, a professor of history at Brigham Young University, has studied the Book of Mormon in the context of his knowledge regarding ancient warfare and has discovered that on general principles and specific details, the Book of Mormon accurately describes an ancient system of warfare, in fact pre-modern warfare “despite the fact that Joseph Smith lived in the age of modern, or technical, warfare” (“The Importance of Warfare in Book of Mormon Studies,” in Book of Mormon Authorship Revisited, ed. Reynolds, 523-43. See also Stephen D. Ricks and William J. Hamblin, eds., Warfare in the Book of Mormon [Salt Lake City: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1990]).

Those characteristics of pre-modern warfare evident in the Book of Mormon that distinguish the ancient form from more modern technical warfare include the following:

1. Ancient societies usually viewed warfare as inevitable, and thus they devoted most government resources to the military and maintained a martial mentality among the citizenry, who themselves constituted the bulk of the army.
2. Pre-modern warfare was always bound by certain environmental constraints, including the limitations of the human body, the terrain, the climate, and animal resources. Consistent with that fact, Book of Mormon accounts of war often explicitly speak of the constraints placed on the various armies by human, geographical, and seasonal circumstances. Significantly, Book of Mormon armies did not use animals during war, a situation that differed from much of the ancient world but reflects exactly what archaeologists have discovered about ancient Mesoamerican warfare.

Weaponry mentioned in the Book of Mormon is likewise consistent with weapons used elsewhere in antiquity. In this regard the Book of Mormon most closely parallels Mesoamerican use of war technology, which lacked many of the elements, such as coats of mail and cavalry, that distinguished warfare in the ancient Near East.

3. Ancient warfare, which generally involved the entire society in its economic and social implications, was usually organized communally under the command of an elite hereditary military aristocracy. This also appears to be the case in the Book of Mormon. Military operations in the Book of Mormon also accurately reflect what is currently known about warfare throughout antiquity. War usually included complex preparations, an emphasis on marching to ensure that both supplies and men arrived in timely fashion at the correct locations, some guerrilla warfare, spies, a council of war, and a necessity of group cohesion on the battlefield—all elements of Book of Mormon warfare. Additionally, the pattern of organizing Book of Mormon armies in a decimal system (hundreds, thousands, ten thousands) is also found in ancient Israel and elsewhere in the ancient world.

4. Emphasis in the Book of Mormon on personal oaths of loyalty and of surrender is also typical of the ancient world, a fact that represents “perhaps the greatest distinction between modern and ancient international affairs” (Ibid., 526).

5. Another major difference between modern and pre-modern warfare is that war in antiquity was characterized by its religious connections, while war in modernity has become a secularized affair. In the Book of Mormon, actions and beliefs associated with military culture (God’s frequent intervention in battles on behalf of the righteous, consultation with prophets over military matters, the code of purity typified by Helaman’s stripling warriors, to name a few examples), are representative of a ritualistic and sacral (pertaining to sacred rites) approach to warfare, paralleling patterns in the ancient Near East and Mesoamerica.

The Prophet Mormon and Accounts of War in the Book of Mormon

The Book of Mormon is a book saturated with warfare. The grim reality for ancient peoples was that religious, political, and cultural ideologies were frequently enforced through war. Even before bloodshed broke out between the Nephites and Lamanites in the New World, Lehi’s party was exposed to a violent rivalry between Nephi and his brothers, Laman and Lemuel.

As is true today, warfare in the ancient world took on ideological importance for both sides of a conflict. The ancient Egyptians, Hebrews, Greeks, and Romans all recorded or recounted tales of combat and war that took on nationalistic and mythic significance for them as a people (William J. Hamblin, Warfare in the Ancient Near East to 1600 BC: Holy Warriors at the Dawn of History, London and New York: Routledge, 2006, 11–13). Boyd Seevers observed, “The biblical authors normally write about warfare for some theological purpose, such as illustrating faith—or lack thereof—in God by some Israelite leader or the nation as a whole” (Warfare in the Old Testament: The Organization, Weapons, and Tactics of Ancient Near Eastern Armies, Grand Rapids, MI: Kregel Academic, 2013, 20).

The same is true of the ancient Maya. Archaeological investigations have determined conclusively that the Maya, Aztec, and other Mesoamerican cultures were often steeped in warfare that carried great cultural and practical significance (Ross Hassig, War and Society in Ancient Mesoamerica, Berkeley and Los Angeles, CA: University of California Press, 1992; M. Kathryn Brown and Travis W. Stanton, eds., Ancient Mesoamerican Warfare, Walnut Creek, CA: Alta Mira Press, 2003. See also Axel E. Nielsen and William H. Walker, eds., Warfare in Cultural Context: Practice, Agency, and the Archaeology of Violence, Tuscon, AZ: The University of Arizona Press, 2009). Warfare “occupied a prominent place in the mind and practice” of ancient Mesoamerican peoples. Just as it did for the Nephites, “warfare, whether real or imagined, played an important role in shaping values, meanings, and identities in the lives of the Maya, and such cultural notions, in turn, affected how war was fought or avoided” (Takeshi Inomata and Daniela Triadan, “Culture and Practice of War in Maya Society,” in Warfare in Cultural Context, 56).

This was precisely Mormon’s intention in capturing the history of Nephite warfare. Much more than simply reporting these wars like a modern journalist—unbiased, impartial, and striving to remain morally neutral—Mormon infused (sometimes stereotypical) moral and theological significance into his war narratives (Brant. A. Gardner, Traditions of the Fathers: The Book of Mormon as History, Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2015, 312–313). Thus Mormon’s lament at the end of his records that his people were slaughtered because of their having “departed from the ways of the Lord” (Mormon 6:17). Or his forceful denunciation of Amalickiah, the Nephites’ chief enemy some centuries before Mormon’s time, as a wicked usurper, conspirator, apostate, and traitor who “by his fraud, gained the hearts of the people” (Alma 47:30).

Mormon’s focus on Nephite troop tactics, weaponry, fortifications, and the like might also easily be explained by the simple fact that Mormon himself was a military leader as much as a historian or prophet. With a professional interest in military matters, it makes sense that Mormon would knowledgeably spend time to describe the finer details of Nephite military history. Especially when these details augmented his narrative, such as when Nephite innovations in armor and fortifications granted them victory over their Lamanite foes (e.g. Alma 44:8–9; 50:10–12).

When viewed in an ancient context, it begins to make sense why the Book of Mormon would focus so closely on war. As explained by John W. Welch, “Wars and the politics of war were an integral part of history in the Book of Mormon. . . . Most military events in the Book of Mormon have both religious and political importance. The Nephites did not dichotomize their world between church and state as we do. Ancient peoples generally viewed war as a contest between the gods of one people and the gods of another” (John W. Welch, “Why Study Warfare in the Book of Mormon?” in Warfare in the Book of Mormon, ed. Stephen D. Ricks and William J. Hamblin, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1990, 4).

In addition to providing a glimpse into Nephite and Lamanite political and religious culture, the war chapters in the Book of Mormon can also be seen as evidence for the book’s historicity. “One powerful dimension of historicity of the Book of Mormon is the sheer complexity of the record. The amazing achievement of the Book of Mormon is not the fact that it is a big book containing numerous chapters on warfare, but the stark reality that those chapters are complicated and consistent.” Not only the book’s complexity, but also its realism is evidence in favor of its historicity (See Hugh Nibley, “Warfare and the Book of Mormon,” in Warfare in the Book of Mormon, 127–145; Douglas J. Bell, Defenders of Faith: The Book of Mormon from a Soldiers Perspective, Springville, UT: Cedar Fort, 2012; John E. Kammeyer, The Nephite Art of War, Far West Publications, 2014; Morgan Deane, Bleached Bones and Wicked Serpents: Ancient Warfare in the Book of Mormon, self-published, 2014; David E. Spencer, Captain Moroni’s Command, Springville, UT: Cedar Fort, 2015). “The human and social events recorded in the Book of Mormon are realistic. They make sense in light of the way people and nations in fact behave” (Welch, “Why Study Warfare in the Book of Mormon?” 17–18).

These factors combine to make the war chapters in the Book of Mormon powerful for a number of reasons. They not only provide important information on the history of the Nephites and Lamanites, but also give modern readers to a window into Mormon’s thinking on how and why he presented the history of his people the way he did.

War tactics and atrocities, whether conventional or terrorist, continue to plague the world today. The causes of war and armed conflict, the sources of contention and violence, still preoccupy and perplex the minds and hearts of nations everywhere. While Mormon and his peoples proved unable to stave off the horrors of their own annihilation, their record was written as a witness and a warning to help people today all over the world learn wisdom. Its prophetic teachings—of faith in Christ, sincere repentance, obedience to righteous covenants, generous love for all mankind, and concern for children and future generations—offer messages of hope, peace, and eternal rest in the presence of God. Though ancient, the messages of the Book of Mormon could not be more relevant to the urgent needs of modern world today.

1 And now it came to pass that the sons of Alma did go forth among the people, to declare the word unto them. And Alma, also, himself, could not rest, and he also went forth.

verse 1 Recall that Alma has just completed his counseling of his sons Helaman, Shiblon, and Corianton. This counseling apparently took place while all of them were in the land of the Zoramites. This verse states that Alma and his missionary group continued, or perhaps completed, their labors among the Zoramites.

2 Now we shall say no more concerning their preaching, except that they preached the word, and the truth, according to the spirit of prophecy and revelation; and they preached after the holy order of God by which they were called.

verse 2 “after the holy order of God by which they were called” This phrase refers to the Melchizedek priesthood (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 6:2 and Alma 13:1).

3 And now I return to an account of the wars between the Nephites and the Lamanites, in the eighteenth year of the reign of the judges.

verse 3 Here Mormon announces that he is changing his emphasis. To this point in the book of Alma, Mormon has stressed the missionary labors of Alma and the four sons of Mosiah. Beginning at this point and extending through Alma chapter 62, Mormon will write mostly about the wars between the Nephites and Lamanites.

If we step back and look at the book of Alma, we note that Alma 1-42 describes the priestcrafts, pride, materialism, socioeconomic inequality, and other forms of apostasy and social disruption. Alma 43-62 then describes the wars and civil disruptions that lead to a corruption and collapse of the civil government. A similar sequence of apostasy, social problems, government corruption, and wars is prophesied for our time—the last days prior to the Savior’s second coming (D&C 45:16-46; Mormon 8:26-41).

The wars facing the saints in the latter days may be more spiritual and less physical. The prophet Nephi wrote of the latter days: “I beheld the church of the Lamb of God, and its numbers were few . . . [and] the great mother of abominations did gather together multitudes upon the face of all the earth, among all the nations of the Gentiles, to fight against the Lamb of God. . . And [the saints] were armed with righteousness and with the power of God in great glory” (1 Nephi 14:12-14). President Ezra Taft Benson spoke of this same latter-day war: “I testify that as the forces of evil increase under Lucifer’s leadership and as the forces of good increase under the leadership of Jesus Christ, there will be growing battles between the two until the final confrontation. As the issues become clearer and more obvious, all mankind will eventually be required to align themselves either for the kingdom of God or for the kingdom of the devil. As these conflicts rage, either secretly or openly, the righteous will be tested. God's wrath will soon shake the nations of the earth and will be poured out on the wicked without measure. . . But God will provide strength for the righteous and the means of escape; and eventually and finally, truth will triumph" ("I Testify," Ensign [November 1988]:87).

Mormon knew of the wars and other chaos that would beset those of the latter days, and he included in the book those things he believed would be of most help to the saints of our day.

If the Book of Mormon is a guide to help us in this latter-day conflict, what lessons do we learn from studying its pages? We do not learn much about the technical aspects of military tactics, but we do learn, in considerable detail:

1. accounts of the exercise of great faith;
2. the Lord's protection of his people;
3. inspired counsel from great warrior-prophets;
4. small groups of righteous contending successfully against much larger armies;
5. the folly of war; the destructive effects of evil leaders;
6. destruction of people brought on by their own iniquity;
7. the relationship of the degree of spiritual righteousness to vulnerability in war.

In short the book teaches us the fundamental nature of the battle, and it gives hope to the Lord's people.

"in the eighteenth year of the reign of the judges" The events that occurred between Alma 35:13 and this verse occurred in the "eighteenth year of the reign of the judges." In the 1981 edition of the Book of Mormon they are assigned the date, "about 73 BC." Based on Mosiah 29:44 and other dates based on the years "of the judges" the date for these chapters probably ought to be changed to "about 74 BC."

4 For behold, it came to pass that the Zoramites became Lamanites; therefore, in the commencement of the eighteenth year the people of the Nephites saw that the Lamanites were coming upon them; therefore they made preparations for war; yea, they gathered together their armies in the land of Jershon.

verse 4 "the Zoramites became Lamanites" When Alma initially set off on his missionary journey to the Zoramites, he had two important goals. They were spiritual and political. He certainly wanted to reclaim the spiritually straying Zoramites and bring them back into the fold of Christ. He desired also to politically re-align the Zoramites with Zarahemla and the Nephites. If they were to form a treaty with the Lamanites, then they would become a strategic threat to the national security of the Nephites. As we note here, Alma's fears were justified. Though the Nephite missionaries had made many converts among the Zoramites, particularly among their poor, they had failed to win the hearts of the Zoramite leaders. From a purely diplomatic perspective their mission had failed.

5 And it came to pass that the Lamanites came with their thousands; and they came into the land of Antionum, which is the land of the Zoramites; and a man by the name of Zerahemnah was their leader.

verse 5 The ancestry of Zerahemnah is unknown. Dr. Hugh Nibley suggests he may have been an Amalekite (Amlicite)—see also the commentary for the following verse. It will become apparent that Zerahemnah’s motivation for going to war is his hatred of the Nephites and his hunger for power. Dr. Nibley writes:

The Zoramites now severed all connection with the Nephites and considered themselves as being officially Lamanite. They invited the Lamanite hordes to move in and occupy their country as the first major move against the Nephites. At their head came the Lamanite commander-in-chief, the Amalekite (Amlicite) Zerahemnah. The Amalekites were Nephite dissenters of an earlier day, and like most dissenters were more bitter against the Nephites and “of a more wicked and murderous disposition than the Lamanites were” (Alma 43:6). Zerahemnah had seen to it that all the key commands in the army had gone to Amalekites like himself or to equally ferocious Zoramites (Alma 43:6).

So, we see the Nephites being punished for their own wickedness in more ways than one; in fact the Lamanites appear at times as no more than the simple-minded tools of Nephite or ex-Nephite wickedness. Certainly, Zerahemnah was using them as his cat’s paw, “for behold, his designs were to stir up the Lamanites to anger against the Nephites; this he did that he might usurp great power” (Alma 43:8). Another familiar story—the hate campaign as a means to personal power. Zerahemnah worked on the Lamanite resentment of the people of Ammon [the Anti-Nephi-Lehies], whom they regarded as traitors (Alma 43:11)—conveniently overlooking the fact that his own people were dissenters from the Nephites—and in time found himself in command of a huge coalition army against the Nephites, who understandably felt themselves desperately threatened (Alma 43:13) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 296-97).

6 And now, as the Amalekites were of a more wicked and murderous disposition than the Lamanites were, in and of themselves, therefore, Zerahemnah appointed chief captains over the Lamanites, and they were all Amalekites and Zoramites.

verse 6 “the Amalekites were of a more wicked and murderous disposition than the Lamanites were” One’s “disposition” refers to one’s nature, desires, inclinations, or feelings.

We have encountered two “Amaleki’s” thus far in our study of the Book of Mormon. One was the prophet-custodian of the plates at the time of King Benjamin (Omni 1:12, 23; Words of Mormon 1:3, 10). The other Amaleki was one of the men who traveled from Zarahemla with Ammon to rescue the people of king Limhi (Mosiah 7:6). It is unlikely that the Amalekites descended from either of these Nephites. It is likely that the Amkalekites are the same group as the Amlicites (see the commentary for Alma 21:2). The father of these “Amalekites” was probably, therefore, Amlici. We are told nothing concerning him. It is probable that he was a Nephite apostate and of the order of Nehor (Alma 21:4; 24:28-29). For a discussion of the order of the Nehors, see the commentary for Alma 8:8.

7 Now this he did that he might preserve their hatred towards the Nephites, that he might bring them into subjection to the accomplishment of his designs.

8 For behold, his designs were to stir up the Lamanites to anger against the Nephites; this he did that he might usurp great power over them, and also that he might gain power over the Nephites by bringing them into bondage.

verses 7-8 “this he did that he might usurp great power over them” Them in this phrase refers to the Lamanites, not the Nephites. Zerahemnah was not by birth a Lamanite. In this verse, we learn that he lusted for power not only over the Nephites, but also over the Lamanites. Zerahemnah knew that if the Lamanite warriors under his leadership were motivated by anger and hatred, then they would be easy to control—they would become pawns in his hand and readily do his bidding (see the comments on the “War Principles” in the introductory commentary for this chapter).

9 And now the design of the Nephites was to support their lands, and their houses, and their wives, and their children, that they might preserve them from the hands of their enemies; and also that they might preserve their rights and their privileges, yea, and also their liberty, that they might worship God according to their desires.

verse 9 Again, we are reminded of the Nephites’ belief that their continued security depended on their continued righteous adherence to their covenants: “Inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments [my covenants], ye shall prosper in the land. . . . And again it is said that: Inasmuch as ye will not keep my commandments ye shall be cut off from the presence of the Lord” (Alma 9:13).

10 For they knew that if they should fall into the hands of the Lamanites, that whosoever should worship God in spirit and in truth, the true and the living God, the Lamanites would destroy.

11 Yea, and they also knew the extreme hatred of the Lamanites towards their brethren, who were the Anti-Nephi-Lehis, who were called the people of Ammon—and they would not take up arms, yea, they had entered into a covenant and they would not break it—therefore, if they should fall into the hands of the Lamanites they would be destroyed.

12 And the Nephites would not suffer that they should be destroyed; therefore they gave them lands for their inheritance.

verse 12 You will recall that the people of Ammon had been moved from the land of Jershon to Melek for their own safety and to allow the Nephite army to use the land of Jershon as a staging area for battle (Alma 35:13).

13 And the people of Ammon did give unto the Nephites a large portion of their substance to support their armies; and thus the Nephites were compelled, alone, to withstand against the Lamanites, who were a compound of Laman and Lemuel, and the sons of Ishmael, and all those who had dissented from the Nephites, who were Amalekites and Zoramites, and the descendants of the priests of Noah.

14 Now those descendants were as numerous, nearly, as were the Nephites; and thus the Nephites were obliged to contend with their brethren, even unto bloodshed.

verse 14 “Now those descendants were as numerous, nearly, as were the Nephites” The antecedent of this phrase is the final phrase in the previous verse—“the descendants of the priests of Noah.” This verse intends to say that the descendants of the priests of Noah, in and of themselves, were almost as numerous as the Nephites. If all of the other groups mentioned in verse 13 are added, then the Nephites are far outnumbered by the Lamanites.

“the Nephites were obliged to contend with their brethren” We learn here that the Nephites were righteous in their motives for war (see the introductory commentary for this chapter). They were not eager to go to war. Rather, they manifested a healthy reluctance.

15 And it came to pass as the armies of the Lamanites had gathered together in the land of Antionum, behold, the armies of the Nephites were prepared to meet them in the land of Jershon.

16 Now, the leader of the Nephites, or the man who had been appointed to be the chief captain over the Nephites—now the chief captain took the command of all the armies of the Nephites—and his name was Moroni;

verse 16 Dr. Hugh Nibley wrote of Moroni:

At this moment, the twenty-five-year-old Moroni appears on the scene, a military genius if there ever was one. He introduced improvements in armor to make his people far more than a match, man for man, for the enemy (Alma 43:19-21); he arranged the Jershon defense zone (Alma 43:22), and being on the defensive and greatly outnumbered, was particularly diligent in keeping a sharp lookout on all enemy movements, at the same time inquiring of the holy prophet Alma (after what is now known to have been an ancient custom in Israel) regarding the enemy’s plan of battle, “whither the armies of the Nephites should go to defend themselves against the Lamanites” (Alma 43:23). On the other hand, the Lamanite campaign was directed by Amalekite [Amlicite] and Zoramite officers, whose knowledge of Nephite military secrets and methods would have given them an enormous advantage over any commander but Moroni. Right at the outset his foresight had robbed them of their first and logical objective—the buffer land of Jershon (Alma 43:22) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 297-298).

17 And Moroni took all the command, and the government of their wars. And he was only twenty and five years old when he was appointed chief captain over the armies of the Nephites.

verse 17 Moroni's age likely played a crucial role in the Nephites' military successes. The reasons why this may have been so include:

1. Innovative Military Technology

As a young military captain, he was particularly open to applying and adapting military technology present or emerging within wider society (John L. Sorenson, "When Lehi's Party Arrived in the Land, Did They Find Others There?" Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 1, no. 1, 1992: 1–34; Matthew Roper, "Nephi's Neighbors: Book of Mormon Peoples and Pre-Columbian Populations," FARMS Review 15, no. 2, 2003: 91–128; John Gee and Matthew Roper, "'I Did Liken All Scriptures Unto Us': Early Nephite Understandings of Isaiah and Implications for 'Others' in the Land," in The Fulness of the Gospel: Foundational Teachings from the Book of Mormon, ed. Camille Fronk, Brian M. Hauglid, Patty A. Smith, and Thomas A. Wayment (Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, 2003, 51–65). Similarly, younger leaders today may have an advantage in using innovative technologies to further the Lord's work. Elder David A. Bednar taught, "The youth can offer much to older individuals who are uncomfortable with or intimidated by technology" (David A. Bednar, "The Hearts of the Children Shall Turn," Ensign, November, 2011, 27; online at lds.org).

Moroni also built extensive fortifications, with ditches, earthen walls, and palisades (see Alma 49–50). One specific type of fortification was the "place of entrance" (See the illustration, Place of Entrance). Like armor, fortifications had been known among the Nephites at an earlier time, but they are only briefly mentioned and only in the Land of Nephi (See Jacob 7:25; Jarom 1:7). Walls are mentioned in Mosiah 7:10; 9:8; 21:19; and 22:6, also all in the Land of Nephi. Based on the "astonished" reaction of the Lamanites (Alma 49:5, cf. vv. 8–9, 14), it seems none of the cities in the Land of Zarahemla had previously been fortified. Mormon reported that Moroni's fortifications were "in a manner which never had been known among the children of Lehi" (Alma 49:8).

Moroni also rallied the people behind a righteous cause, and raised a battle standard upon a pole to represent that cause (Alma 46). Using a battle standard allowed for greater cohesion and unity on the battlefield (Hassig, War and Society in Ancient Mesoamerica, 64 and 97 understood a lack of evidence for battle standards as a lack of formal military units and formations.). Never before was the use of a battle standard mentioned among the Nephites.

Each of these innovations may have been borrowed from nearby cultures or earlier antecedents which had previously been forgotten. For example, a similar ensemble of armor was known in pre-Columbian Mesoamerica (See Hamblin, “Armor in the Book of Mormon,” 410–416; John L. Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex: An Ancient American Book, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and Neal A. Maxwell Institute, 2013, 418–419; John L. Sorenson, Images of Ancient America: Visualizing Book of Mormon Life, Provo UT: FARMS, 1998, 130–131). Comparable earthwork fortifications are known among the Israelites and various pre-Columbian American cultures (David E. Spencer, Captain Moroni’s Command: Dynamics of Warfare in the Book of Mormon, Springville, UT: Cedar Fort, 2015, 20-32), and in Mesoamerica, a proliferation of such fortifications can be confidently dated to the Late Preclassic period, coinciding with the time of Moroni (See Sorenson, “Fortifications in the Book of Mormon,” 429). Battle standards (banners) are also well attested in many cultures from both the Old and New Worlds, including the Israelites and Mesoamerican peoples (See Hugh Nibley, The Prophetic Book of Mormon, The Collected Works of Hugh Nibley: Volume 8, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1989, 92–95; William J. Hamblin, “The Importance of Warfare in Book of Mormon Studies,” in Warfare in the Book of Mormon, 491–492; Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex, 109–110, 421; Kammeyer, The Art of Nephite War, chapter 14; Kerry Hull, “War Banners: A Mesoamerican Context for the Title of Liberty,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 24, 2015: 84–118).

2. Seeking and Following the Prophet

In addition to the physical preparations, Moroni sought and followed the guidance of the Lord. Before going to rally the people with his battle standard, “he bowed himself to the earth, and he prayed mightily unto his God” (Alma 46:13). In the first battle under his command, he “sent certain men” to the prophet, Alma, “that he should inquire of the Lord whither the armies of the Nephites should go to defend themselves against the Lamanites” (Alma 43:23). As a result, the Lord revealed the activities of the Lamanite army, and Moroni was able put his troops in place to cut off the Lamanite soldiers.

Moroni was not the first to draw on the prophet for guidance in wartime (see Alma 16:5–6). In fact, he was part of a long-standing Israelite and ancient Near Eastern tradition (See Hugh Nibley, Since Cumorah, The Collected Works of Hugh Nibley: Volume 7, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1988, 242; Stephen D. Ricks, “‘Holy War’: The Sacral Ideology of War in the Book of Mormon and in the Ancient Near East,” in Warfare in the Book of Mormon, 103–110. Also see Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex, 387–389; Hamblin, Warfare in the Ancient Near East to 1600 BC, 107). While innovative in so many ways on the battlefield, he proved willing to continue on in righteous traditions like this one, much to his benefit and success.

18 And it came to pass that he met the Lamanites in the borders of Jershon, and his people were armed with swords, and with cimeters, and all manner of weapons of war.

verse 18 “Cimeter” is an early variant spelling for a word that is more commonly today spelled as “scimitar.” A cimeter or scimitar is a highly curved, single-edge saber, which is usually used for slicing or hacking. Some critics of the Book of Mormon have suggested that the presence of the scimitars in the Book of Mormon is anachronistic. They base their criticism on the mistaken notion that the scimitar originated with the Muslims in AD 1000 to 1200. There is, however, much evidence that the scimitar did, in fact, exist in the ancient Near East in the Bronze Age (Brent Merrill, an unpublished FARMS reprint). It is interesting to note that the cimeter is not mentioned after 51 BC, despite the fact that there are several references to swords and bows. Perhaps the cimeter fell out of use after that time.

19 And when the armies of the Lamanites saw that the people of Nephi, or that Moroni, had prepared his people with breastplates and with arm-shields, yea, and also shields to defend their heads, and also they were dressed with thick clothing—

20 Now the army of Zerahemnah was not prepared with any such thing; they had only their swords and their cimeters, their bows and their arrows, their stones and their slings; and they were naked, save it were a skin which was girded about their loins; yea, all were naked, save it were the Zoramites and the Amalekites;

21 But they were not armed with breastplates, nor shields—therefore, they were exceedingly afraid of the armies of the Nephites because of their armor, notwithstanding their number being so much greater than the Nephites.

22 Behold, now it came to pass that they durst not come against the Nephites in the borders of Jershon; therefore they departed out of the land of Antionum into the wilderness, and took their journey round about in the wilderness, away by the head of the river Sidon, that they might come into the land of Manti and take possession of the land; for they did not suppose that the armies of Moroni would know whither they had gone.

verse 22 Manti is a city up river from the city of Zarahemla. It is likely located not far from the head waters of the River Sidon. See the Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands.

23 But it came to pass, as soon as they had departed into the wilderness Moroni sent spies into the wilderness to watch their camp; and Moroni, also, knowing of the prophecies of Alma, sent certain men unto him, desiring him that he should inquire of the Lord whither the armies of the Nephites should go to defend themselves against the Lamanites.

verse 23 Old Testament scriptures include many examples of belief in the necessity of obtaining divine approval through the Lord's prophet before entering into battle (Judges 7:9-14; I Samuel 28:5-6; 30:8; II Samuel 5:19-26; I Kings 8:44; 22:5, 7-8). In modern scripture the Lord affirms this principle: "And again this is the law I gave unto mine ancients, that they should not go out unto battle against any nation, kindred, tongue, or people, save I, the Lord commanded them" (D&C 98:33).

24 And it came to pass that the word of the Lord came unto Alma, and Alma informed the messengers of Moroni, that the armies of the Lamanites were marching round about in the wilderness, that they might come over into the land of Manti, that they might commence an attack upon the weaker part of the people. And those messengers went and delivered the message unto Moroni.

verse 24 Manti was one of the cities in the south of the land of Zarahemla, reasonably near the west sea. Here we learn that Manti is the first of four Nephite cities to be attacked by the Lamanites. It will eventually be captured. We will also learn that it will be the last to be liberated. Apparently at the time of this invasion, the land of Manti was not yet captured but also was not well defended, and the Lamanites chose this place to "commence an attack upon the weaker part of the people."

25 Now Moroni, leaving a part of his army in the land of Jershon, lest by any means a part of the Lamanites should come into that land and take possession of the city, took the remaining part of his army and marched over into the land of Manti.

26 And he caused that all the people in that quarter of the land should gather themselves together to battle against the Lamanites, to defend their lands and their country, their rights and their liberties; therefore they were prepared against the time of the coming of the Lamanites.

verse 26 "to defend their lands and their country, their rights and their liberties" In this chapter we will encounter a few verses which are premonitory to Moroni's well-known "title of liberty" (e.g., verses 30, 45, 47, and 48).

27 And it came to pass that Moroni caused that his army should be secreted in the valley which was near the bank of the river Sidon, which was on the west of the river Sidon in the wilderness.

verse 27 To be secreted is to be concealed.

28 And Moroni placed spies round about, that he might know when the camp of the Lamanites should come.

29 And now, as Moroni knew the intention of the Lamanites, that it was their intention to destroy their brethren, or to subject them and bring them into bondage that they might establish a kingdom unto themselves over all the land;

30 And he also knowing that it was the only desire of the Nephites to preserve their lands, and their liberty, and their church, therefore he thought it no sin that he should defend them by stratagem; therefore, he found by his spies which course the Lamanites were to take.

verse 30 “he thought it no sin that he should defend them by stratagem”

Here Mormon inserts an almost half apology by Moroni for the use of espionage, which he realizes is intended to take advantage of the less sophisticated Lamanites. But since “it was the only desire of the Nephites to preserve their lands, and their liberty . . . therefore he thought it no sin that he should defend them by stratagem.” The ensuing episode shows what a stickler Moroni was for fair play.

31 Therefore, he divided his army and brought a part over into the valley, and concealed them on the east, and on the south of the hill Riplah;

32 And the remainder he concealed in the west valley, on the west of the river Sidon, and so down into the borders of the land Manti.

33 And thus having placed his army according to his desire, he was prepared to meet them.

verses 31-33 Without knowing the specific topography of the land surrounding the city of Manti, it is not possible to picture exactly how Moroni planned to trap the invading hordes of Lamanites. It is obvious, however that he cleverly deployed his troops on both sides of the river, hoping to trap them as they crossed the river. See the Illustration: Moroni's Military Strategy against Zerahemnah.

Dr. Hugh Nibley has summarized this military excursion and made it easier to understand by dividing it into phases:

1. Zerahemnah, marches toward Manti, which he thinks is undefended, passes the hill Riplah on the north and begins to ford the river Sidon.

2. Lehi, concealed “on the south of the hill Riplah” comes out of hiding and attacks Zerahemnah’s rear.

3. The main Lamanite force turns and engages Lehi on the east side of the river Sidon.

4. Thwarted by the superior armor of the Nephites, the Lamanites with heavy losses, seek security on the other side of the river Sidon.

5. Lehi accelerates their withdrawal and flight into and across the river by pressing them hotly in the rear. Once the Lamanites have crossed the river, Lehi’s army then prevents them from re-crossing by deploying on the east bank of the river.

6. On the west side of the river Moroni and his army have been awaiting the Lamanites in the west Valley.

7. The Lamanites try to break through to Manti but are met by Moroni's reserves.

8. Lamanite numbers begin to prevail until Moroni rallies his forces, and the Lamanites fall back toward the River Sidon again.

9. The entire Lamanite force is concentrated on the west bank of the Sidon, where Moroni is able to encircle them.

10. Moroni, perceiving the Lamanite perplexity, immediately stops the battle and approaches Zerahemnah for a conference.

(Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 299-301).

34 And it came to pass that the Lamanites came up on the north of the hill, where a part of the army of Moroni was concealed.

35 And as the Lamanites had passed the hill Riplah, and came into the valley, and began to cross the river Sidon, the army which was concealed on the south of the hill, which was led by a man whose name was Lehi, and he led his army forth and encircled the Lamanites about on the east in their rear.

36 And it came to pass that the Lamanites, when they saw the Nephites coming upon them in their rear, turned them about and began to contend with the army of Lehi.

37 And the work of death commenced on both sides, but it was more dreadful on the part of the Lamanites, for their nakedness was exposed to the heavy blows of the Nephites with their swords and their cimeters, which brought death almost at every stroke.

38 While on the other hand, there was now and then a man fell among the Nephites, by their swords and the loss of blood, they being shielded from the more vital parts of the body, or the more vital parts of the body being shielded from the strokes of the Lamanites, by their breastplates, and their arm-shields, and their head-plates; and thus the Nephites did carry on the work of death among the Lamanites.

verse 38 "they being shielded from the more vital parts of the body, or the more vital parts of the body being shielded from the strokes of the Lamanites" Here is another possible example of a "typo" by the prophet Mormon as he engraved onto the plates of Mormon. There was obviously no eraser or "white out" which he might use, and thus an error had to be corrected simply by re-engraving a visible correction.

39 And it came to pass that the Lamanites became frightened, because of the great destruction among them, even until they began to flee towards the river Sidon.

40 And they were pursued by Lehi and his men; and they were driven by Lehi into the waters of Sidon, and they crossed the waters of Sidon. And Lehi retained his armies upon the bank of the river Sidon that they should not cross.

verse 40 “they crossed the waters of Sidon” The Lamanites had encountered the armies of Lehi on the east of the river Sidon. The Lamanites were driven from that site of initial encounter toward the west into the river Sidon, which they crossed.

“that they should not cross” Lehi’s forces were then deployed on the east bank of the river Sidon to prevent the Lamanites from re-crossing once they encountered Moroni’s army on the west of the river. Thus, most were trapped on the west side of the river between Moroni’s forces and the river.

41 And it came to pass that Moroni and his army met the Lamanites in the valley, on the other side of the river Sidon, and began to fall upon them and to slay them.

42 And the Lamanites did flee again before them, towards the land of Manti; and they were met again by the armies of Moroni.

43 Now in this case the Lamanites did fight exceedingly; yea, never had the Lamanites been known to fight with such exceedingly great strength and courage, no, not even from the beginning.

44 And they were inspired by the Zoramites and the Amalekites, who were their chief captains and leaders, and by Zerahemnah, who was their chief captain, or their chief leader and commander; yea, they did fight like dragons, and many of the Nephites were slain by their hands, yea, for they did smite in two many of their head-plates, and they did pierce many of their breastplates, and they did smite off many of their arms; and thus the Lamanites did smite in their fierce anger.

45 Nevertheless, the Nephites were inspired by a better cause, for they were not fighting for monarchy nor power but they were fighting for their homes and their liberties, their wives and their children, and their all, yea, for their rites of worship and their church.

verse 45 “they were fighting for their homes and their liberties, their wives and their children” Elder Neal A. Maxwell used this phrase out of context and provided each of us with food for thought: “Though we all may have other causes, all that we hold dear is bound up in our homes and we, too, are in the midst of a fierce battle” (That My Family Should Partake, 29-30).

“rites of worship” Some have felt that this expression should more correctly have been rendered “right to worship,” though “rites [ordinances and rituals] of worship” does also have a plausible meaning.

46 And they were doing that which they felt was the duty which they owed to their God; for the Lord had said unto them, and also unto their fathers, that: Inasmuch as ye are not guilty of the first offense, neither the second, ye shall not suffer yourselves to be slain by the hands of your enemies.

verse 46 This verse has reference to the so-called “law of third offense” which was followed by ancient Jew and even Romans and was intended to prevent non-defensive warfare. To be guilty of the “first offense” is to retaliate when initially attacked by your enemy. Similarly, to be guilty of the “second offense” is to retaliate when attacked the second time by your enemy. The Lord has demanded exceeding patience of us when we are attacked. Moroni was aware of and adhered to the ancient law of war which has been reiterated in modern revelation (see D&C 98:32-37). This law may be summarized as follows: If a people is attacked by an aggressor nation, then the people under attack should not go out to battle without the Lord’s approbation. That approval may only be obtained after the people under siege have extended an offer of peace, not once but three times. Thus, this law may also be termed the “law of fourth offense.” Furthermore, if the enemy attacks then repents and begs forgiveness, then they should be forgiven—not only once but “seventy times seven.” Finally, if an enemy trespasses and does not repent, they should be forgiven three times. If they do not repent on the fourth occasion, then this matter should be brought before the Lord who will exact compensation in his own way and bless those who have been trespassed against.

Apparently the Nephites were aware of this law because it was written in their scriptures—“for the Lord had said unto them, and also unto their fathers.”

One message to the people of the latter days from the “war period” of the Book of Mormon is that if there must be war, then it must be entered into for the right reasons if the people desire the blessings of God.

47 And again, the Lord has said that: Ye shall defend your families even unto bloodshed. Therefore for this cause were the Nephites contending with the Lamanites, to defend themselves, and their families, and their lands, their country, and their rights, and their religion.

verse 47 Some have expressed surprise that Moroni, a faithful “man of Christ,” was so entangled in military matters—he was also a man of the sword. Mormon has made it clear that captain Moroni “did not delight in bloodshed” and believed that he should never “raise the sword except it were against an enemy, except it were to preserve their [the Nephites] lives” (Alma 48:11, 14).

48 And it came to pass that when the men of Moroni saw the fierceness and the anger of the Lamanites, they were about to shrink and flee from them. And Moroni, perceiving their intent, sent forth and inspired their hearts with these thoughts—yea, the thoughts of their lands, their liberty, yea, their freedom from bondage.

49 And it came to pass that they turned upon the Lamanites, and they cried with one voice unto the Lord their God, for their liberty and their freedom from bondage.

50 And they began to stand against the Lamanites with power; and in that selfsame hour that they cried unto the Lord for their freedom, the Lamanites began to flee before them; and they fled even to the waters of Sidon.

51 Now, the Lamanites were more numerous, yea, by more than double the number of the Nephites; nevertheless, they were driven insomuch that they were gathered together in one body in the valley, upon the bank by the river Sidon.

52 Therefore the armies of Moroni encircled them about, yea, even on both sides of the river, for behold, on the east were the men of Lehi.

53 Therefore when Zerahemnah saw the men of Lehi on the east of the river Sidon, and the armies of Moroni on the west of the river Sidon, that they were encircled about by the Nephites, they were struck with terror.

54 Now Moroni, when he saw their terror, commanded his men that they should stop shedding their blood.

1 And it came to pass that they did stop and withdrew a pace from them. And Moroni said unto Zerahemnah: Behold, Zerahemnah, that we do not desire to be men of blood. Ye know that ye are in our hands, yet we do not desire to slay you.

verse 1 Dr. Hugh Nibley provides us with a telling portrait of captain Moroni and his attitude about war:

How did Moroni go about making war? First of all, the people humbled themselves: “They were free from wars and contentions among themselves.” War was not a solution to internal unrest. They were reluctant “to contend with their brethren . . . sorry to take up arms against the Lamanites, because they did not delight in the shedding of blood . . . and . . . they were sorry to be the means of sending so many of their brethren out of this world . . . unprepared to meet their God” (Alma 48:20-23). When Moroni had immobilized a guard house with a gift of wine, he refused to follow up the ruse, because he said it would be an “injustice” to perform a shameful act of taking advantage of a drunken enemy (Alma 55:19). Moroni was especially keen to watch for even the slightest tendency of the enemy to give up; he was hypersensitive to that moment in the battle when the enemy falters, and the instant that came, when he sensed they were weakening, he would propose a stop to the fighting to talk things over (Alma 52:37-38). “We do not desire to be men of blood,” he tells them on the battlefield; “ye are in our hands, yet we do not desire to slay you. . . We have not come . . . that we might shed your blood for power.” “We would not shed the blood of the Lamanites, if they would stay in their own land. We would not shed the blood of our [Nephite] brethren if they would not rise up in rebellion and take the sword against us. We would subject ourselves to the yoke of bondage if it were requisite with the justice of God” (Alma 61:10-12). He detested the power game that some men play; “I seek not for power,” he says often, “but to pull it down. I seek not for the honor of the world” (Alma 60:36). He thinks more kindly of the Lamanite invaders than of the ambitious men on his own side. He says it is “the tradition of their fathers that has caused their hatred . . . while your iniquity is for the cause of your love of glory and the vain things of the world” (Alma 60:32).

He fought against people being “known by the appellation of king-men . . . and the pride of those people who professed the blood of nobility . . . they were brought down to humble themselves like unto their brethren” (Alma 51:21). Inequality—that was the enemy in Moroni’s eyes. When he raised the Title of Liberty, it was to teach his people to think of themselves as the poor and outcast of Israel (Alma 46:18, 23-24), not as a proud army with banners—reminding them that the rent garment could very well be their own condition (Alma 46:21) if they tried to match the enemy’s own machismo” (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 522-23).

Captain Moroni's attitudes about war adhere to the War Principles outlined in the introductory commentary for Alma 43. He did indeed maintain a healthy reluctance to fight against and kill even his enemies.

2 Behold, we have not come out to battle against you that we might shed your blood for power; neither do we desire to bring any one to the yoke of bondage. But this is the very cause for which ye have come against us; yea, and ye are angry with us because of our religion.

verse 2 “this is the very cause for which ye have come against us; yea, and ye are angry with us because of our religion” Moroni reveals that one underlying cause of this attack by Zerahemnah and his forces is religious persecution. Elder Neal A. Maxwell observed: “Those lacking religious commitment sometimes resent it in others” (Plain and Precious Things, 68).

3 But now, ye behold that the Lord is with us; and ye behold that he has delivered you into our hands. And now I would that ye should understand that this is done unto us because of our religion and our faith in Christ. And now ye see that ye cannot destroy this our faith.

4 Now ye see that this is the true faith of God; yea, ye see that God will support, and keep, and preserve us, so long as we are faithful unto him, and unto our faith, and our religion; and never will the Lord suffer that we shall be destroyed except we should fall into transgression and deny our faith.

verse 4 “God will support, and keep, and preserve us, so long as we are faithful unto him” This is a remarkable testimony of Moroni's faith given under very stressful circumstances. This statement of Moroni is consistent with the War Principle number 6 discussed in the introductory commentary for Alma 43. The righteousness, and not the military might, of a people is the critical issue determining whether or not the people will enjoy the blessing of divine protection.

5 And now, Zerahemnah, I command you, in the name of that all-powerful God, who has strengthened our arms that we have gained power over you, by our faith, by our religion, and by our rites of worship, and by our church, and by the sacred support which we owe to our wives and our children, by that liberty which binds us to our lands and our country; yea, and also by the maintenance of the sacred word of God, to which we owe all our happiness; and by all that is most dear unto us—verse 5 “rites of worship” As was mentioned in the commentary for Alma 43:45, this expression perhaps should probably have been rendered “right to worship.” “Rights” would seem to be more consistent with the context, which refers to the freedom to worship as they desired.

“maintenance of the sacred word of God” As mentioned in volume 2, chapter 3 of Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine—Covenants and Covenant Making, often “word” means “covenant.” Thus “maintenance of the sacred word of God” is synonymous with keeping one’s eternal covenants. The Book of Mormon teaches that those who keep the commandments of God—the “words” of God—actually enter into a covenant with him. Those who live according to the words of God and thus keep their covenants will have eternal life. One Bible scholar has noted that words such as covenant, law, word, and oath are used virtually synonymously in the Old Testament. He points out that the earliest designation for the Decalogue or Ten Commandments was the “Ten Words.” Also: “The theological usage of the ‘word’ of God may . . . be very closely bound up in its very origin with the covenant” (G.E. Mendenhall, “Covenant.” The Interpreter’s Dictionary of the Bible, Nashville: Abingdon, 1962, 1:716). Elder Boyd K. Packer taught: “A covenant is a sacred promise, as used in the scriptures, a solemn enduring promise between God and man. The fulness of the gospel itself is defined as the New and Everlasting Covenant” (“Covenant,” Ensign [May 1987] 17:22-25).

Another concept which adds to our understanding of the profound significance of the “words of God” was taught by Mormon when he commented on Alma’s mission to reclaim the Zoramites. Mormon said: “And now, as the preaching of the word had a great tendency to lead the people to do that which was just—yea, it had had more powerful effect upon the minds of the people than the sword, or anything else, which had happened unto them—therefore Alma thought it was expedient that they should try the virtue of the word of God” (Alma 31:5). Obviously, the word of God exerts a powerful effect upon the thoughts and behavior of the individual who obeys that word. The spiritual gifts given to the obedient are given according to the covenant which characterizes the commandments.

6 Yea, and this is not all; I command you by all the desires which ye have for life, that ye deliver up your weapons of war unto us, and we will seek not your blood, but we will spare your lives, if ye will go your way and come not again to war against us.

7 And now, if ye do not this, behold, ye are in our hands, and I will command my men that they shall fall upon you, and inflict the wounds of death in your bodies, that ye may become extinct; and then we will see who shall have power over this people; yea, we will see who shall be brought into bondage.

8 And now it came to pass that when Zerahemnah had heard these sayings he came forth and delivered up his sword and his cimeter, and his bow into the hands of Moroni, and said unto him: Behold, here are our weapons of war; we will deliver them up unto you, but we will not suffer ourselves to take an oath unto you, which we know that we shall break, and also our children; but take our weapons of war, and suffer that we may depart into the wilderness; otherwise we will retain our swords, and we will perish or conquer.

verse 8 “Zerahemnah . . . delivered up his sword and his cimeter, and his bow into the hands of Moroni” For a discussion of the “cimeter” see the commentary for Alma 43:18. It is interesting to learn that Zerahemnah was armed with a bow, a sword, and a cimeter. The cimeter is mentioned eleven times in the Book of Mormon. All references except the earliest one, Enos 1:20, mention it in conjunction with the sword.

“we will not suffer ourselves to take an oath unto you, which we know that we shall break” Zerahemnah came forward not because he believed that God had delivered him and his army into the hands of the Nephites. Rather he came forward because he had to. His surrender was mandated by his dire circumstances.

The taking of an oath in that day was solemnly regarded as binding even by the wicked Zerahemnah. Note that he refuses to enter an oath that he knows he cannot keep. Let us consider further the matter of oath taking, particularly Zerahemnah’s oath in this particular situation.

Once Moroni had taken complete control of Zerahemnah and his army, Moroni commanded Zerahemnah “in the name of that all-powerful God” (verse 5) to “deliver up [his] weapons of war unto” the victorious Nephites (verse 6). If Zerahemnah would do this, his life and the lives of his men would be spared (verse 6).

Zerahemnah’s response was terse and adamant: “Behold, here are our weapons of war; we will deliver them up unto you, but we will not suffer ourselves to take an oath unto you, which we know that we shall break, and also our children; but take our weapons of war, and suffer that we may depart into the wilderness; otherwise we will retain our swords, and we will perish or conquer” (Alma 44:8). Believing he had been defeated through Nephite ingenuity rather than divine intervention, Zerahemnah was willing to cede the immediate battle but refused perpetual surrender (verse 9).

After another round of negotiations (Alma 44:10–11), Zerahemnah suddenly attacked when Moroni briefly let his guard down. However, the Lamanite commander was halted when “one of Moroni’s soldiers . . . smote Zerahemnah that he took off his scalp and it fell to the earth” (verse 12) immediately thereafter.

The soldier who stood by, who smote off the scalp of Zerahemnah, took up the scalp from off the ground by the hair, and laid it upon the point of his sword, and stretched it forth unto them, saying unto them with a loud voice: Even as this scalp has fallen to the earth, which is the scalp of your chief, so shall ye fall to the earth except ye will deliver up your weapons of war and depart with a covenant of peace (Alma 44:13–14). Utterly defeated, and moments away from death, Zerahemnah finally covenanted with Moroni and withdrew what was left of his now unarmed and humiliated army, never to be heard of again (Alma 44:19–24).

Invoking the name of a deity to witness and ratify a covenant or oath was standard procedure in ancient Near Eastern oath-making ceremonies. The understanding anciently was that if a party failed to keep the covenant, then that party would face divine retribution. This might explain why Zerahemnah initially refused to make an oath he knew he couldn't (or wouldn't) keep. He may have feared God at least enough to anticipate divine wrath should he fail to keep the covenant, even if he disbelieved it was God who granted the Nephites victory (Alma 44:9).

Whatever the case on Zerahemnah's part, the subsequent action of Moroni's soldier who lifted up the Lamanite commander's scalp makes perfect sense from an ancient perspective. Scholars have identified a pattern of oath-making in the ancient Near East that involves what is commonly called a "simile curse" (See generally Delbert R. Hillers, Treaty-Curses and the Old Testament Prophets, Biblica et Orientalia 16, Rome: Pontifical Biblical Institute, 1964). As found in Hittite and Semitic cultures, simile curses involved one party in a covenant forewarning the precise penalties that should befall the other parties if they were ever to break the pact.

These penalties were framed in the form of a simile: "If so-and-so does not keep this covenant, then may he be destroyed just or even as this object shall be destroyed." Simile curses were sometimes accompanied by the party giving the terms dramatically destroying some kind of object, animal, or figure that symbolized the doomed party.

For example, an eighth century BC Aramaic treaty contains a clear example of a simile curse. "Just as this wax is burned by fire, so shall Mati[el be burned by fi]re. Just as (this) bow and these arrows are broken, so may Anahita and Hadad break [the bow of Mati[el] and the bow of his nobles. And just as a man of wax is blinded, so may Mati[el] be blinded" (Joseph A. Fitzmyer, "The Aramaic Inscriptions of Sefire I and II," Journal of the American Oriental Society 81, no. 3, August–September 1961: 185. Brackets indicate instances where the original text has been broken in the manuscript, and so the translation has been restored by the translator. Compare also the treaty between Ashurnirari V and Mati'ilu in James B. Pritchard, ed., The Ancient Near East: An Anthology of Texts and Pictures, rev. ed., Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 2011, 210–212).

The Hebrew Bible also contains an example of a simile curse. In 1 Kings 14 the prophet Ahijah was commanded by God to foretell divine retribution for the wicked king Jeroboam. "Therefore, behold, I will bring evil upon the house of Jeroboam," God promised, "and will take away the remnant of the house of Jeroboam, as a man taketh away dung, till it be all gone" (1 Kings 14:10; compare 2 Kings 21:13). A close reading of Alma 44 reveals that Moroni's interaction with Zerahemnah followed the same pattern.

Latter-day Saint scholars have noted that the pronouncement of the Nephite soldier who scalped Zerahemnah follows the simile curse formula almost perfectly: "Even as this scalp has fallen to the earth, which is the scalp of your chief, so shall ye fall to the earth except ye will deliver up your weapons of war and depart with a covenant of peace” (Alma 44:14) (See Terrence L. Szink, “Oath of Allegiance in the Book of Mormon,” in Warfare in the Book of Mormon, ed. Stephen D. Ricks and William J. Hamblin, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1990, 35–45; Mark J. Morrise, “Simile Curses in the Ancient Near East, Old Testament, and Book of Mormon,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 2, no. 1, 1993: 124–138; Donald W. Parry, “Hebraisms and Other Ancient Peculiarities in the Book of Mormon,” in Echoes and Evidences of the Book of Mormon, ed. Donald W. Parry, Daniel C. Peterson, and John W. Welch, Provo, UT: FARMS, 2002, 156–159.). From an ancient perspective, this simile curse would have greatly reinforced the life-and-death seriousness of the covenant Moroni had commanded Zerahemnah to enter, and would have given Zerahemnah even more reason not to agree with Moroni’s demand without absolute certainty of keeping it.

The elements of Alma 44 combine to show that both the Nephites and Lamanites, including even the wrathful Zerahemnah, respected the seriousness of oaths, especially oaths sworn in God’s name. This in turn demonstrates “the rich complexity of the Book of Mormon” as well as its ancient provenance (RoseAnn Benson and Stephen D. Ricks, “Treaties and Covenants: Ancient Near Eastern Legal Terminology in the Book of Mormon,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 14, no. 1, 2005: 48–61, 128–29).

9 Behold, we are not of your faith; we do not believe that it is God that has delivered us into your hands; but we believe that it is your cunning that has preserved you from our swords. Behold, it is your breastplates and your shields that have preserved you.

10 And now when Zerahemnah had made an end of speaking these words, Moroni returned the sword and the weapons of war, which he had received, unto Zerahemnah, saying: Behold, we will end the conflict.

11 Now I cannot recall the words which I have spoken, therefore as the Lord liveth, ye shall not depart except ye depart with an oath that ye will not return again against us to war. Now as ye are in our hands we will spill your blood upon the ground, or ye shall submit to the conditions which I have proposed.

verse 11 “I cannot recall the words which I have spoken” Moroni here assures that under no other circumstances than that of making a covenant of peace are Zerahemnah and his warriors going to get out of this alive! He will not “recall” or take back his ultimatum.

12 And now when Moroni had said these words, Zerahemnah retained his sword, and he was angry with Moroni, and he rushed forward that he might slay Moroni; but as he raised his sword, behold, one of Moroni’s soldiers smote it even to the earth, and it broke by the hilt; and he also smote Zerahemnah that he took off his scalp and it fell to the earth. And Zerahemnah withdrew from before them into the midst of his soldiers.

verse 12 The suggestion has been made in the past that the “scalping” tradition of the American Indian might have had its roots in this incident in the Book of Mormon. Apparently, this practice had its roots with the white man of the seventeenth century AD rather than with the native American Indians. When some of the early colonists offered money for the scalps of dead Indians, some unscrupulous white men killed Indians just for their scalps. Accordingly, the Indians began to kill and scalp white men in retaliation.

13 And it came to pass that the soldier who stood by, who smote off the scalp of Zerahemnah, took up the scalp from off the ground by the hair, and laid it upon the point of his sword, and stretched it forth unto them, saying unto them with a loud voice:

14 Even as this scalp has fallen to the earth, which is the scalp of your chief, so shall ye fall to the earth except ye will deliver up your weapons of war and depart with a covenant of peace.

15 Now there were many, when they heard these words and saw the scalp which was upon the sword, that were struck with fear; and many came forth and threw down their weapons of war at the feet of Moroni, and entered into a covenant of peace. And as many as entered into a covenant they suffered to depart into the wilderness.

16 Now it came to pass that Zerahemnah was exceedingly wroth, and he did stir up the remainder of his soldiers to anger, to contend more powerfully against the Nephites.

17 And now Moroni was angry, because of the stubbornness of the Lamanites; therefore he commanded his people that they should fall upon them and slay them. And it came to pass that they began to slay them; yea, and the Lamanites did contend with their swords and their might.

18 But behold, their naked skins and their bare heads were exposed to the sharp swords of the Nephites; yea, behold they were pierced and smitten, yea, and did fall exceedingly fast before the swords of the Nephites; and they began to be swept down, even as the soldier of Moroni had prophesied.

19 Now Zerahemnah, when he saw that they were all about to be destroyed, cried mightily unto Moroni, promising that he would covenant and also his people with them, if they would spare the remainder of their lives, that they never would come to war again against them.

verse 19 It is interesting to note that Zerahemnah, minus his scalp, is never heard from again in the Book of Mormon.

20 And it came to pass that Moroni caused that the work of death should cease again among the people. And he took the weapons of war from the Lamanites; and after they had entered into a covenant with him of peace they were suffered to depart into the wilderness.

21 Now the number of their dead was not numbered because of the greatness of the number; yea, the number of their dead was exceedingly great, both on the Nephites and on the Lamanites.

22 And it came to pass that they did cast their dead into the waters of Sidon, and they have gone forth and are buried in the depths of the sea.

23 And the armies of the Nephites, or of Moroni, returned and came to their houses and their lands.

24 And thus ended the eighteenth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi. And thus ended the record of Alma, which was written upon the plates of Nephi.

verse 24 This verse is an editorial comment or colophon (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:1-3) by Mormon and marks the end of the record of Alma. We will now begin the study of the record of Alma's eldest son, Helaman.

Alma Chapter 45

The account of the people of Nephi, and their wars and dissensions, in the days of Helaman, according to the record of Helaman, which he kept in his days. Comprising chapters 45 to 62 inclusive.

This chapter heading, or colophon, reveals that a shift in the source text has taken place and emphasizes that Helaman will unfortunately have to face wars and dissensions during his ministry.

Helaman is the author of Alma 45 through 62. The final chapter of Alma, chapter 63 will be written by Helaman's brother Shiblon with heavy editing by the prophet Mormon.

1 Behold, now it came to pass that the people of Nephi were exceedingly rejoiced, because the Lord had again delivered them out of the hands of their enemies; therefore they gave thanks unto the Lord their God; yea, and they did fast much and pray much, and they did worship God with exceedingly great joy.

verse 1 "They did fast much and pray much" Most of the world's armies celebrate victory by getting drunk. It is worthwhile to note that Moroni's army celebrated with fasting and prayer.

2 And it came to pass in the nineteenth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi, that Alma came unto his son Helaman and said unto him: Believest thou the words which I spake unto thee concerning those records which have been kept?

verse 2 After returning from his missionary journey to the Zoramites, Alma counseled with Helaman and gave him charge of the records. He had also counseled him on the vital and sacred nature of those records (Alma 36-37).

3 And Helaman said unto him: Yea, I believe.

4 And Alma said again: Believest thou in Jesus Christ, who shall come?

5 And he said: Yea, I believe all the words which thou hast spoken.

6 And Alma said unto him again: Will ye keep my commandments?

7 And he said: Yea, I will keep thy commandments with all my heart.

8 Then Alma said unto him: Blessed art thou; and the Lord shall prosper thee in this land.

9 But behold, I have somewhat to prophesy unto thee; but what I prophesy unto thee ye shall not make known; yea, what I prophesy unto thee shall not be made known, even until the prophecy is fulfilled; therefore write the words which I shall say.

10 And these are the words: Behold, I perceive that this very people, the Nephites, according to the spirit of revelation which is in me, in four hundred years from the time that Jesus Christ shall manifest himself unto them, shall dwindle in unbelief.

11 Yea, and then shall they see wars and pestilences, yea, famines and bloodshed, even until the people of Nephi shall become extinct—verses 10-11 The spiritual deterioration and eventual destruction of the Nephites actually will occur somewhat sooner than Alma foresees here. They will become a hopelessly wicked people by about AD 326 and they will be destroyed by a great and final destructive battle in AD 385. While the Book of Mormon peoples will never really become extinct, certainly they will suffer a destruction of their culture, and they will cease to exist as a Nephite people.

12 Yea, and this because they shall dwindle in unbelief and fall into the works of darkness, and lasciviousness, and all manner of iniquities; yea, I say unto you, that because they shall sin against so great light and knowledge, yea, I say unto you, that from that day, even the fourth generation shall not all pass away before this great iniquity shall come.

verse 12 “from that day, even the fourth generation shall not all pass away before this great iniquity shall come” Following Christ’s appearance in the western hemisphere there were many years of general righteousness among the people. This was the “golden age” of the Nephites which lasted until AD 200 (“three generations”). During this idyllic period men “did deal justly one with another” and “there were not rich and poor, bond and free” (4 Nephi 1:2-3). This period has been referred to as the Nephite “mini-millennium.” During the “fourth generation” the people will begin to wax strong in iniquity.

13 And when that great day cometh, behold, the time very soon cometh that those who are now, or the seed of those who are now numbered among the people of Nephi, shall no more be numbered among the people of Nephi.

14 But whosoever remaineth, and is not destroyed in that great and dreadful day, shall be numbered among the Lamanites, and shall become like unto them, all, save it be a few who shall be called the disciples of the Lord; and them shall the Lamanites pursue even until they shall become extinct. And now, because of iniquity, this prophecy shall be fulfilled.

verses 9-14 In light of this prophecy by Alma, one might be tempted to say, “Well, so much for the promised land.” Dr. Hugh Nibley provided informative insight into the phenomenon of a “promised land”:

The term “promised land” has a nice upbeat sound that we like very much, but the great promise is worded as a curse: “Thus saith the Lord God—Cursed shall be the land, yea, this land, unto every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, unto destruction, which do wickedly, when they are fully ripe . . . for this is the cursing and the blessing of God upon this land” (Alma 45:16). When Lehi’s party had barely left Jerusalem, Nephi had a vision in which he “looked and beheld the land of promise.” And what did he see? “A mist of darkness on the face of the land of promise,” and horrible destruction and desolation (1 Nephi 12:4). Obviously one is not home-free when he has set foot upon the land of promise. Quite the opposite; from then on, he must watch his step and control the impulse to do whatever he pleases and “have it all.” For “God has sworn in his wrath” that what went on in other lands should not go on here. There are nations that were old when Nephi left Jerusalem and whose cultures and languages, customs, manners, and traditions still survive. They have all paid a high price in human suffering as they go along from folly to folly and disaster to disaster, but they are still there. It is not so in the New World, where great civilizations vanish without even leaving us their names, and where no high civilization has survived. It is significant that with all the warning and promising, only one penalty is ever mentioned, and only one means of avoiding it. “Prophets, and the priests, and the teachers, did labor diligently; . . . and . . . by so doing they kept them from being destroyed upon the face of the land; for they did prick their hearts with the word, continually stirring them up to repentance” (Jarom 1:11-12). The penalty is destruction; the deliverance, repentance (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 505-6).

Dr. Nibley in another place gave further insight into the responsibilities inherent in being blessed with a “promised land”:

The Nephites and Lamanites each received a promise in the beginning, and each promise contained two parts, a promise of bliss and a promise of woe, “for this is the cursing and the blessing of God upon the land” (Alma 45:16). In the Dead Sea Scrolls every covenant which promises a blessing if kept, promises a corresponding curse if broken, for a contract in which either party should be bound to no conditions whatever would be meaningless (see 2 Nephi 2:5-10). For the Lamanites, the penalty of their backsliding is that they shall be scattered and smitten and driven by the Gentiles; the reward of their faith is that they are to survive all their afflictions and in time become the Lord’s own people again. For the Nephites the promised reward of faith is that nothing on earth can without their own will and action in any way ever mar their liberty, security, prosperity, and happiness: “And now there was nothing in all the land to hinder the people from prospering continually, except they should fall into transgression” (3 Nephi 6:5). This tremendous guarantee is matched by a promise of total extinction in case they should fail to comply with the conditions of the contract. Since they never became fully ripe in iniquity as did the Nephites, the Lamanites were allowed to remain in the land, paying for the privilege by taking a terrible beating: “Wherefore, if ye are cursed, behold, I leave my blessing upon you. . . . Because of my blessing the Lord God will not suffer that ye shall perish” (2 Nephi 4:6-7). It was an unconditional promise of survival (Jacob 3:5-9; Helaman 7:24; 15:14-17). No such promise was given the Nephites, and Enos was told that though the Nephites might perish, still the Lamanites would survive to receive his record (Enos 1:13, 16). (Ibid., volume 7, 389-90.)

15 And now it came to pass that after Alma had said these things to Helaman, he blessed him, and also his other sons; and he also blessed the earth for the righteous’ sake.

16 And he said: Thus saith the Lord God—Cursed shall be the land, yea, this land, unto every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, unto destruction, which do wickedly, when they are fully ripe; and as I have said so shall it be; for this is the cursing and the blessing of God upon the land, for the Lord cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance.

verse 16 “the Lord cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance” Isn’t this is a rather discouraging pronouncement? It actually should not be if one understands the law of justice and the principle of justification. Please take a moment and review the commentary for Mosiah 14:11. Since “the Lord cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance,” a mechanism is established to help us imperfect sinners. For further insight into this concept, see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapters 12 and 17—The Law of Justice and Justification and Sanctification.

17 And now, when Alma had said these words he blessed the church, yea, all those who should stand fast in the faith from that time henceforth.

18 And when Alma had done this he departed out of the land of Zarahemla, as if to go into the land of Melek. And it came to pass that he was never heard of more; as to his death or burial we know not of.

19 Behold, this we know, that he was a righteous man; and the saying went abroad in the church that he was taken up by the Spirit, or buried by the hand of the Lord, even as Moses. But behold, the scriptures saith the Lord took Moses unto himself; and we suppose that he has also received Alma in the spirit, unto himself; therefore, for this cause we know nothing concerning his death and burial.

verses 18-19 These verses have given rise to speculation, apparently both in the church of Alma’s day and in the church today, that Alma may have been translated by the Lord. Alma was “taken up by the Spirit, or buried by the hand of the Lord, even as Moses.” Was Moses translated? Joseph Fielding Smith wrote: “Moses, like Elijah, was taken up without tasting death, because he had a mission to perform. . . and it had to be performed before the crucifixion of the Son of God, and it could not have been done in the spirit" (Doctrines of Salvation, 2:107, 110). Here President Smith refers to the mission Moses performed on the mount of transfiguration when he appeared before the Savior, Peter, James, and John (Matthew 17:1-13). President Smith further commented: "It is a very reasonable thought to believe that both Moses and Alma, like Elijah and John, were translated to accomplish some work which the Lord had in store for them at some future day" (Answers to Gospel Questions, 5:38).

What does it mean to be translated? See a discussion of the doctrine of translation in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 17, Doctrine of Translation. In this chapter, you will read of several ancient non-biblical documents that also suggest that Moses was translated.

20 And now it came to pass in the commencement of the nineteenth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi, that Helaman went forth among the people to declare the word unto them.

21 For behold, because of their wars with the Lamanites and the many little dissensions and disturbances which had been among the people, it became expedient that the word of God should be declared among them, yea, and that a regulation should be made throughout the church.

22 Therefore, Helaman and his brethren went forth to establish the church again in all the land, yea, in every city throughout all the land which was possessed by the people of Nephi. And it came to pass that they did appoint priests and teachers throughout all the land, over all the churches.

23 And now it came to pass that after Helaman and his brethren had appointed priests and teachers over the churches that there arose a dissension among them, and they would not give heed to the words of Helaman and his brethren;

verse 23 "there arose a dissension among them" A significant political movement is beginning to arise here that will play a major role in the remainder of the Book of Mormon story. For a discussion of this movement, see the introductory comments for Alma 46. This movement will result in bitter contention and dissension in the Nephite culture. It will involve such evil minded characters as Amalickiah and Pachus.

Lynn D. Wardle wrote of dissension in the Book of Mormon: "Dissension is often caused by pride. Often dissension is encouraged by self-promoting, wicked demagogues like Amalickiah and Pachus. Frequently they are supported by other ambitious people who see dissent as the fast track to fame and glory or power (Alma 46:4-5; 51:5-8; 61:3-4, 8). Clearly, however, not all who are misled by such persons are of the same venal (corrupt) character (as the re-conversion of many dissenters shows). As a byproduct of pride, dissent simply seems as inevitable in the fallen world as the cycle of humility-obedience-prosperity-pride-destruction that is described repeatedly throughout the Book of Mormon” (“Dissent: Perspectives from the Book of Mormon” in Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, 69).

24 But they grew proud, being lifted up in their hearts, because of their exceedingly great riches; therefore they grew rich in their own eyes, and would not give heed to their words, to walk uprightly before God.

verse 24 “they grew rich in their own eyes” How easily men succumb to the temptations of materialism in every age! This phrase is a well-stated condemnation!

“give heed to their words” The final “their” in this verse refers, of course, to Helaman and his brethren and not to the materialistic Nephites.

Alma 46 Captain Moroni's Title of Liberty

Alma 46:12-13 Captain Moroni's title of liberty: In memory of our God, our religion, and freedom, and our peace, our wives, and our children.

Alma 46-51 Amalickiah, a large and strong man, conspires to be king. He is defeated by Captain Moroni and goes over to the land of the Lamanites. By deception and murder, he becomes the king of the Lamanites and marries the Lamanites queen. He swears an oath to drink the blood of Moroni and leads a large Lamanite army against him and his Nephite army. Amalickiah is eventually killed when Teancum steals into his camp and puts a javelin through his heart. Amalickiah is succeeded by his brother Ammoron.

Typically, following a major war, those who are victorious enjoy a period of post-war economic boom. This likely occurred among the Nephites following their victory over Zerahemnah and his Lamanite army. Many of the Nephites prospered and began to enjoy their prosperity. As might be predicted, along with their material wealth came a desire for more and more of the same. Many became proud and lifted up and began to lust after material things. They turned away from the church and away from considerations of the Spirit toward things of the world. Their tendency was to ignore the admonitions of Helaman, the new spiritual head of the nation, who became alarmed as many "grew proud, being lifted up in their hearts, because of their exceedingly great riches" (Alma 45:24). Helaman's unyielding position became a great annoyance to those people whose hearts were set on the things of the new prosperity, and they formed an opposition party. The Nephites thus came to be divided into two socioeconomic classes, an "elite" class, later to be called the "king-men" and a "common" class, which will later come to be known as the "freemen." Each class had its own disparate interests.

The "king-men" included those who were wealthy, those of high birth some of whom desired to become king themselves. They also included those who sought for more influence over the people. These power seekers included the "lower judges of the land." These were "in favor of kings . . . and were supported by those who sought power and authority over [other] people" (Alma 51:8). The label "king-men" will not actually be applied to this group until some six years hence (Alma 51). Initially this group had no semblance of organization. Rather these individuals or small groups of them created "many little dissensions and disturbances . . . among the people" (Alma 45:21). Then appeared Amalickiah (as had Amlici before him—see Alma 2), a dynamic leader who fused these selfish and greedy Nephite factions into a unified political entity.

Amalickiah was determined and ruthless and cared little for his followers. He, of course, desired to be king. He would stop at nothing and will even eventually enter into secret negotiations with the king of the Lamanites to overthrow the Nephite government. Initially he could count on the support of those among the Nephites who were of the “king-men” persuasion. Some of these had been made “exceedingly wroth” by “the words of Helaman and his brethren” to the point that they were even “determined to slay them” (Alma 46:1-2). Eventually his support among the Nephites will dwindle, and he will be forced to seek out the Lamanites to assist him in achieving his aspirations.

Those who opposed the king-men will eventually come to be called the “freemen” (Alma 51). These were the Nephites, often to be found outside the wealthy class, who supported their government and opposed any efforts to overthrow it. They supported Moroni in his opposition to the dangerous coalition led by Amalickiah. The specific title “freemen” also will not be used until six years later in Alma 51. The title “freemen” was not simply a political designation. These Nephites also were inclined to accept and honor their sacred eternal covenants.

Perhaps the very essence of the difference between the king-men and the freemen is their view of equality. Mosiah had warned the people: “Behold, it is not expedient that we should have a king, for thus saith the Lord: ye shall not esteem one flesh above another, nor one man think himself above another; therefore I say unto you that it is not expedient for you to have a king” (Mosiah 23:7). Mosiah also had said: “And I am not better than ye yourselves are; for I am also of the dust (Mosiah 2:26). It is clear that captain Moroni also had almost an obsession for equality, and believed that without it there could be no freedom. Brother Hugh Nibley also shares Moroni’s passion for the importance of equality. Speaking of this equality, Brother Nibley wrote:

Jacob gives us some rules: “Think of your brethren like unto yourselves, and be familiar with all and free with your substance, that they may be rich like unto you” (Jacob 2:17). It is not the wealth but the inequality that does the damage. Of unequal distribution Jacob says, “Do ye not suppose that such things are abominable unto him who created all flesh? And the one being is as precious in his sight as the other” (Jacob 2:21). Benjamin recognizes the same danger of acquisitiveness: “I . . . have not sought gold nor silver nor any manner of riches of you; neither have I suffered . . . that ye should make slaves of one another. . . And even I myself, have labored with mine own hands that I might serve you” (Mosiah 2:12-14). “For behold, are we not all beggars? Do we not all depend upon the same Being . . . for all riches which we have of every kind?” (Mosiah 4:19). And when Alma organized his church, “they were all equal, and they did all labor. . . And they did impart of their substance, every man according to that which he had” (Alma 1:26-27). The main theme is obvious: “For thus saith the Lord: Ye shall not esteem one flesh above another, or one man think himself above another” (Mosiah 23:7). “I desire that the inequality should be no more in this land . . . but I desire that this land be a land of liberty, and every man enjoy his rights and privileges alike” (Mosiah 29:32). For this reason, Mosiah laid down the kingship in favor of a system of judges, as a more egalitarian order (Mosiah 23:7). But the great obstacle to freedom was not government but money; to maintain their liberty, Alma’s people “were all equal, and they did all labor, every man according to his strength” (Alma 1:26). (How could they be equal in wealth, we ask today, if no two of them were equal in strength?) Under the law of Mosiah and the judges, “there was no law against a man’s belief; for it was strictly contrary to the commands of God that there should be a law which should bring men on to unequal grounds” (Alma 30:7). “Now if a man desired to serve God, it was his privilege . . . but if he did not believe in him there was no law to punish him” (Alma 30:9) or to put him at a disadvantage, for the idea was that “all men were on equal grounds.” So even Alma, the high priest and chief judge of the land, allowed people to go around preaching atheism. The righteous can preserve their liberty only by remembering the words of the patriarch Jacob in all humility, in all humility considering themselves despised and rejected in the manner of the youthful Joseph (Alma 46:24-27) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 515-17).

One typical model of the king-men described in the text of the Book of Mormon before the label “king-men” is applied is that of the Zoramites (see Alma 31).

1 And it came to pass that as many as would not hearken to the words of Helaman and his brethren were gathered together against their brethren.

verse 1 These were the king-men who resented Helaman’s interference with their materialistic lifestyle. Undoubtedly Helaman’s preaching pricked their consciences so that they were most uncomfortable in his presence.

2 And now behold, they were exceedingly wroth, insomuch that they were determined to slay them.

verse 2 Among the broader class of “king-men” were those who were inclined toward violence and terrorism. We will learn in the next verse that this militant subgroup was led by Amalickiah. The final “them” in this verse refers, obviously, to the followers of Helaman.

3 Now the leader of those who were wroth against their brethren was a large and a strong man; and his name was Amalickiah.

verse 3 Of all the characters yet to appear in the Book of Mormon, one of the most dangerous yet to appear is Amalickiah. Brother J. M. Sjodahl suggested that Amalickiah may well have been of Mulekite origin:

Mulek is one of the very interesting words in the Book of Mormon. It was the name, or the title, of the young son of Zedekiah, who, with his attendants, as stated in a previous chapter, escaped from the Babylonians, when Nebuchadnezzar had captured Jerusalem, about 599 BC. . . It was also the name of a city on “the east borders by the sea shore” (Alma 51:26). There was a land called Melek “on the west of the river Sidon” (Alma 8:3), which name is, clearly, but a variant of Mulek. From these words others are formed, such as Muloki (Alma 20:2), Amulek (Alma 8:21), and Amaleki and Amalickiah (Omni 30, Alma 46:3) (An Introduction to the Study of the Book of Mormon, 138).

Amalickiah’s object was obviously to become king, and as we have noted he started out as head of the most violent of the factions of the king-men, organized in anger and “gathered together against their brethren . . . exceedingly wroth . . . determined to slay them” (verses 1-2).

Hugh Nibley described Amalickiah:

This man was really quite a charmer, “a man of many flattering words,” who won a great personal following and “led away the hearts of many people” (Alma 46:10). “A large and a strong man” of imposing presence (Alma 46:3); to a powerful and persuasive rhetoric he added the fierce resolve of one who “had sworn to drink the blood of Moroni,” his chief opponent (Alma 51:9). Shrewd and calculating, “a man of cunning device” (Alma 46:10), he knew how to preserve himself: “He did not come down himself to battle” (Alma 49:11). Amalickiah was willing to pay any price in blood to gain his objective, for “he did care not for the blood of his people” (Alma 49:10). His plan was skillfully conceived and executed (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 331-32).

Amalickiah had solid support among “those who were in favor of kings . . . those of high birth, and they sought to be kings; and they were supported by those who sought power and authority over the people” (Alma 51:8). His diabolical career, marked by a thirst for glory and power, will follow the pattern one might expect of Satan were he granted the blessing of a mortal probation.

4 And Amalickiah was desirous to be a king; and those people who were wroth were also desirous that he should be their king; and they were the greater part of them the lower judges of the land, and they were seeking for power.

verse 4 “they were the greater part of them the lower judges of the land” By promising high office and power, Amalickiah added to his followers a host of ambitious local officials, “lower judges of the land . . . seeking for power.” These were the same lawmen who had plotted against Helaman’s father, Alma, when he had been the head of the state, and of whom Alma had said, “The foundation of the destruction of this people is beginning to be laid by the unrighteousness of your lawyers and your judges” (Alma 10:27).

5 And they had been led by the flatteries of Amalickiah, that if they would support him and establish him to be their king that he would make them rulers over the people.

6 Thus they were led away by Amalickiah to dissensions, notwithstanding the preaching of Helaman and his brethren, yea, notwithstanding their exceedingly great care over the church, for they were high priests over the church.

verse 6 “for they were high priests over the church” Helaman was the chief priest or chief high priest. He and his brethren were high priests after the order of Melchizedek.

7 And there were many in the church who believed in the flattering words of Amalickiah, therefore they dissented even from the church; and thus were the affairs of the people of Nephi exceedingly precarious and dangerous, notwithstanding their great victory which they had had over the Lamanites, and their great rejoicings which they had had because of their deliverance by the hand of the Lord.

verse 7 “there were many in the church who believed in the flattering words of Amalickiah” For a discussion of the various forms of the word flatter, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 28:22.

“thus were the affairs of the people of Nephi exceedingly precarious and dangerous, notwithstanding their great victory which they had had over the Lamanites” This movement led by Amalickiah posed a very dangerous threat to a government that had barely succeeded in making a precarious peace with a foreign enemy of vastly superior forces.

As mentioned, this coalition would later be called the “king-men.” They were those who “because of their exceedingly great riches” opposed government controls (Alma 45:24), those who considered themselves the aristocracy “who professed the blood of nobility” (Alma 51:21), “the lower judges of the land, . . . seeking for power” (Alma 46:4), and local judges, officials, and other upper crust bound together by family ties as “kindreds,” whose boast was that they had “acquired much riches by the hand of [their] industry” (Alma 10:4, 3 Nephi 6:27).

8 Thus we see how quick the children of men do forget the Lord their God, yea, how quick to do iniquity, and to be led away by the evil one.

9 Yea, and we also see the great wickedness one very wicked man can cause to take place among the children of men.

verse 9 We will learn that the Nephite people were reluctant and sorry to have to take up arms against the Lamanites “because they did not delight in the shedding of blood; . . . [and] they were sorry to be the means of sending so many of their brethren out of this world” (Alma 48:21-23). This was Moroni’s attitude as well. Like Alma he insisted on designating the enemy as his “brethren,” and he meant it. We will also learn that most of the Lamanites were equally reluctant to go to war against the Nephites (Alma 47:2). Brother Hugh Nibley has thus cautioned us against regarding the Nephite-

Lamanite wars as situations of “the good people against the bad people.” Instead they are often examples of “the great wickedness one very wicked man can cause” (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 306).

10 Yea, we see that Amalickiah, because he was a man of cunning device and a man of many flattering words, that he led away the hearts of many people to do wickedly; yea, and to seek to destroy the church of God, and to destroy the foundation of liberty which God had granted unto them, or which blessing God had sent upon the face of the land for the righteous’ sake.

verse 1 “he was a man of cunning device and a man of many flattering words” See verse 7.

“the foundation of liberty which God had granted unto them, or which blessing God had sent upon the face of the land for the righteous’ sake” This refers to the covenant between God and the Nephite peoples: “Inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments [my covenants], ye shall prosper in the land. . . . And again it is said that: Inasmuch as ye will not keep my commandments ye shall be cut off from the presence of the Lord” (Alma 9:13). Again, this is the “promise/curse” of the Book of Mormon. See the commentary for 2 Nephi 1:20 and Covenants and Covenant Making in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 3.

verses 11-22 These following twelve verses contain the memorable account of Moroni and his “title of liberty.” Please review the introductory commentary for Alma 43 which emphasizes Moroni’s covenant-theology orientation.

When the Nephites are threatened by the Nephite dissenter Amalickiah and his followers, Moroni feels the need to re-commit himself and his fellow Nephites to their most fundamental covenant which has its origins in God’s revelation to father Lehi: “Inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments [my covenants], ye shall prosper in the land. . . . And again it is said that: Inasmuch as ye will not keep my commandments ye shall be cut off from the presence of the Lord” (Alma 9:13). It is clear that captain Moroni interpreted this covenant promise literally and believed it implicitly. In ancient Israelite thought, the covenant was the very foundation for government.

In a pattern wholly consistent with ancient practice, Moroni ritualized this covenant by tearing his coat and writing upon it—“In memory or our God, our religion, and freedom, and our peace, our wives, and our children” (verse 12). Hugh Nibley has called our attention to similar covenant rituals among ancient peoples (“New Approaches to Book of Mormon Study.” The Prophetic Book of Mormon, ed. John W. Welch. Salt Lake City: Deseret Book, 1989. 92-95). For example, Moroni’s tearing of his coat and demanding of his soldiers an oath of loyalty was typical Near Eastern military practice (deVaux, Ancient Israel, 214- 28).

Moroni then fastened the title of liberty to the end of a pole, dressed in his armor, and prayed mightily to the Lord for renewal of this vital covenant. He said: “Surely God shall not suffer that we, who are despised because we take upon us the name of Christ [enter into this covenant], shall be trodden down and destroyed until we bring it upon us by our own transgressions” (verse 18). Moroni then went out among the Nephites, inviting them to come and renew their covenants. They also rent their garments and cast them at the feet of Moroni to symbolize the fact that if they did not live up to their covenants, “the Lord should rend them even as they had rent their garments” (verse 12). It is obvious that the Nephites did not dichotomize their world into church and state as we do today. For them war was an all-important religious affair. They felt that God’s will was often revealed through the ordeal of battle. God could scourge and punish his people by the ravages of war, or he could march at the head of their army and give them the victory.

On a lighter note, it has been suggested that each of us, in the various circumstances and situations of our lives, has to decide whether to “fly our title of liberty” or to “keep our pearls in our pocket.” These pearls are, of course, those pearls we do not wish to “cast before swine.” In some circumstances, we may come to feel that a principle of the gospel needs to be heard by all present. Even though you may not know whether you will be accepted or rejected, you may feel it necessary to “fly your title” and stick up for the gospel principle. Often times others will come to our support in that circumstance. There are people who will support, but they don’t dare be the first to raise their title of liberty. At other times, you may feel that it is best to not bring up a gospel principle that is being violated, and you may decide to “keep your pearls in your pocket.”

11 And now it came to pass that when Moroni, who was the chief commander of the armies of the Nephites, had heard of these dissensions, he was angry with Amalickiah.

verse 11 Apparently Moroni was caught off guard by Amalickiah’s evil designs. Perhaps Moroni’s own guileless nature was simply slow to accept that any one could be guilty of such a vicious and deceitful plan.

12 And it came to pass that he rent his coat; and he took a piece thereof, and wrote upon it—In memory of our God, our religion, and freedom, and our peace, our wives, and our children—and he fastened it upon the end of a pole.

verse 12 Brother Hugh Nibley added insight to the concept of the title of liberty:

We have in the Title of Liberty episode a clear and independent parallel to ancient Iranian tradition, for Moroni’s banner is just like the “Flag of Kawe” . . . the legendary founder of the Magi. . . To liberate the people there rose up in Isfahan a mighty man, a blacksmith named Kawe, who took the leather apron he wore at his work and placed it on the end of a pole; this became the symbol of liberation and remained for many centuries the national banner of the Persians as well as the sacred emblem of the Magi (Approach to the Book of Mormon, 214-17; see also Nibley, Since Cumorah, 2nd edition [Salt Lake City: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1988], 242; and Nibley, Prophetic Book of Mormon, 92-95).

13 And he fastened on his head-plate, and his breastplate, and his shields, and girded on his armor about his loins; and he took the pole, which had on the end thereof his rent coat, (and he called it the title of liberty) and he bowed himself to the earth, and he prayed mightily unto his God for the blessings of liberty to rest upon his brethren, so long as there should a band of Christians remain to possess the land—verse 13 “he prayed mightily unto his God for the blessings of liberty to rest upon his brethren” Conceptually, liberty is identical to freedom. Both must be clearly differentiated from the concept of agency (see Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 13, Agency and Freedom).

Kerry Hull has explained that Mesoamerican cultures also utilized war banners in highly ritualized ways that are closely comparable to Moroni’s title of liberty (Kerry Hull, “War Banners: A Mesoamerican Context for the Title of Liberty,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 24, 2015: 84–118). This unexpected convergence of linguistic and cultural data “is a striking endorsement for the validity of the text as an ancient document and provides evidence of a Mesoamerican cultural background for the Book of Mormon” (Hull, “War Banners,” 118).

14 For thus were all the true believers of Christ, who belonged to the church of God, called by those who did not belong to the church.

verse 14 The antecedent for this verse is the word “Christians” in the previous verse. As we have mentioned previously, the word Christ (and hence Christian) is of Greek origin—from the Greek Christos. There obviously was no Greek language or influence found on the Book of Mormon plates. Yet, when Joseph was given the translation of this verse and the previous verse, the words Christ and Christian were given him. It is interesting that the term “Christian,” or whatever term the Book of Mormon peoples used, was used as a label of derision in Moroni’s day by those who did not belong the church. And yet, Mormon acknowledges that it was also a label accepted gladly by those who were in fact true believers, those who had taken upon themselves the name of Christ (verse 15).

15 And those who did belong to the church were faithful; yea, all those who were true believers in Christ took upon them, gladly, the name of Christ, or Christians as they were called, because of their belief in Christ who should come.

verse 15 “those who were true believers in Christ took upon them, gladly, the name of Christ” In the Book of Mormon the making of covenants is usually connected with “taking the name of Christ” upon one’s self. This making of covenants includes the idea of “renaming” or being taken by adoption. In this case one takes upon one’s self the name of Christ and is adopted into his family, one becomes a son or daughter of Christ.

Anti-Mormons have pointed to this verse as a contradiction between the Book of Mormon and the New Testament. They point out that Acts 11:26 teaches that “the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch.” We know that the celestial faculty that translated the Book of Mormon plates into Early Modern English, which text was then given to Joseph Smith during the process of translation, used the term which was obviously familiar to them. Certainly, in those other dispensations who knew of and believed in Christ would have been called after his name. One scholar, actually an Evangelical, Craig L. Blomberg has pointed out an analogous situation in the book of Exodus (3:15) in which God seemingly reveals his name, “the LORD,” (“Yahweh” or “Jehovah”) for the first time to Moses, even though this term has frequently appeared already in Genesis. Blomberg argues that the earlier references are merely a “retrojection” of the title from Moses’s day into narratives of earlier times, since it was clearly the same God in each case.

16 And therefore, at this time, Moroni prayed that the cause of the Christians, and the freedom of the land might be favored.

17 And it came to pass that when he had poured out his soul to God, he named all the land which was south of the land Desolation, yea, and in fine, all the land, both on the north and on the south—A chosen land, and the land of liberty.

verse 17 The expression “in fine” means in conclusion or in summary.

“he named all the land, both on the north and on the south—A chosen land” In this verse it is difficult to know exactly which land is being named what. Hugh Nibley has suggested that Moroni’s intent here was, as was the custom in ancient Israel before a battle, to bless his own land and curse the land of his enemy. It seems that Dr. Nibley felt that by placing a comma between “land” and “Desolation” one might interpret this verse as meaning that Moroni called the enemy lands in the south “Desolation” and all the other lands “a chosen land” (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 243).

An alternate interpretation would be that he regarded all the land south of the ancient Jaredite land of Desolation, held either by the Nephites (in the north) or by the Lamanites (in the south), as a covenant and blessed land.

18 And he said: Surely God shall not suffer that we, who are despised because we take upon us the name of Christ, shall be trodden down and destroyed, until we bring it upon us by our own transgressions.

verse 18 “we, who are despised” Moroni here reminds his people to recognize their position as the meek and humble of the world—“we, who are despised.” Moroni regarded as the enemy the rich and well-born, the king-men whose “pride and nobility” Moroni boldly denounces (Alma 51:18).

19 And when Moroni had said these words, he went forth among the people, waving the rent part of his garment in the air, that all might see the writing which he had written upon the rent part, and crying with a loud voice, saying:

verse 19 “waving the rent part of his garment in the air” Brother John A. Tvedtnes provided interesting insight on this verse:

It should first of all be pointed out that the author will contend, on the basis of the evidence to be given, that the Book of Mormon, in its English form as provided by Joseph Smith, is in many respects a nearly literal translation. Thus, many of the expressions found therein do not properly belong to the English language, but rather to the language from which the book was translated. Indeed, in most cases thus far investigated, Book of Mormon expressions which are ungrammatical in English are perfect Hebrews grammar. (In view of the fact that Joseph Smith did not know Hebrew in those early years, this is good evidence for the authenticity of the translation.) For example, in the 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon, we read that “when Moroni had said these words, he went forth among the people, waving the rent [note that it did not say “rent part” as does our current edition] of his garment in the air.” When the word “rent” is used as a noun in English, it may refer to a hole caused by rending, but not, to my knowledge, to a portion of rent cloth; the unlikely usage of “rent” in English as a noun no doubt contributed to the fact that, in subsequent editions of the Book of Mormon, it was changed to read “rent part” (Alma 46:19). But the Hebrews would, in this instance, use but one word, qera’, “rent,” coming from qara’, for nouns, in Hebrew, are derived from roots—as are Hebrew verbs—by the addition of certain vowel patterns that distinguish them from other parts of speech (BYU Studies, volume 11, 50).

20 Behold, whosoever will maintain this title upon the land, let them come forth in the strength of the Lord, and enter into a covenant that they will maintain their rights, and their religion, that the Lord God may bless them.

verse 20 “whosoever will maintain this title upon the land” Alternately we may phrase this, “whosoever will enter into the covenant this flag symbolizes.”

21 And it came to pass that when Moroni had proclaimed these words, behold, the people came running together with their armor girded about their loins, rending their garments in token, or as a covenant, that they would not forsake the Lord their God; or, in other words, if they should transgress the commandments of God, or fall into transgression, and be ashamed to take upon them the name of Christ, the Lord should rend them even as they had rent their garments.

verse 21 “the Lord should rend them even as they had rent their garments”

If these people forsake this covenant and forsake the Lord, they will be subject to a curse. Note that the curse is given here in the so-called “simile curse” form (for a discussion of the simile curse, see the commentary for Mosiah 12:2-12). The curse is repeated in the same simile curse form in the following verse.

As we read these verses, we might tend to see this as merely a moment of great national feeling and patriotism among the Nephites. There is more here than mere patriotism. As Moroni rallies his forces, it is not to some partisan political cause but to the cause of their covenants with God. These Nephites were evidencing their feelings for the covenants they had made with the Lord. They felt deeply the necessity of keeping these covenants in order to be preserved in the land.

22 Now this was the covenant which they made, and they cast their garments at the feet of Moroni, saying: We covenant with our God, that we shall be destroyed, even as our brethren in the land northward, if we shall fall into transgression; yea, he may cast us at the feet of our enemies, even as we have cast our garments at thy feet to be trodden under foot, if we shall fall into transgression.

verse 22 “covenant with our God that we shall be destroyed, even as our brethren in the land northward, if we shall fall into transgression” Soldiers ran to Moroni and cast their rent garments at his feet as a sign that they had entered into the covenant—that if they should “fall into transgression,” God might “cast us at the feet of our enemies, even as we have cast our garments at thy feet to be trodden under foot.”

It is clear that these Nephites regarded this impending war with Amalickiah and the Lamanites as a “holy war.” They believed that wars occurred under divine direction; that wars were fought with the approval and help of God; and their wars often ended with offerings of thanks to God. The Nephites perspective of war accurately represented that of ancient Israel which centered its ideology of war on God himself. A perusal of the Old Testament makes this clear. Stephen D. Ricks wrote:

The Lord himself is described as a “warrior” and “the Lord strong and mighty . . . in battle” (Psalm 24:8). . . The wars that Israel fought were “the Lord’s battles” (1 Samuel 18:17); indeed, among the lost books of ancient Israel is “the Book of the Wars of the Lord” (Numbers 21:14). The enemies of Israel were the enemies of the Lord (see Judges 5:31; 1 Samuel 30:26), who assists Israel in battle (see Joshua 10:11; 24:12; 1 Samuel 17:45). The Lord was consulted (see Judges 20:18, 28; 1 Samuel 14:37) and sacrifice was offered (see 1 Samuel 7:9; 13:9, 12) before hostilities were initiated. When Israel went to war, its army was called “the people of the Lord” (Judges 5:11), “the people of God” (Judges 20:2), or “the armies of the living God” (1 Samuel 17:26).

Combatants in the Israelite armies were expected to be ritually clean at the time they went out to battle. . .

God insisted on strict observance of his commands when Israel was going to war. The consequences for violations could be devastating. They could suffer defeat in battle that could only be rectified by the punishment of the wrongdoer (see Joshua 7) (“Holy War: The Sacral Ideology of War in the Book of Mormon and in the Ancient Near East,” Warfare in the Book of Mormon, edited by Stephen D. Ricks and William J. Hamblin, 103-17).

The “brethren” referred to here are obviously the Jaredites. Why would these Nephites refer to the Jaredites as their “brethren”? Perhaps there were people living among them who were descendants of the Jaredites (see the commentary for Ether 15:32). It is interesting that Anthon W. Ivins, who later became a counselor in the First Presidency of the Church, speculated that Coriantumr, the final Jaredite king, survived among the people of Zarahemla long enough to sire descendants (“Are the Jaredites an Extinct People?” Improvement Era 6 [November 1902]: 43-44). Perhaps captain Moroni himself was one of those descendants. In Hebrew, the name Moroni means “one from Moron,” which was the Jaredite capital. Since it is simplistic to claim that Coriantumr was literally the last living person of the Jaredite nation, we might also add that others of Jaredite descent might have found their way among the Nephites.

“he may cast us at the feet of our enemies, even as we have cast our garments at thy feet to be trodden under foot, if we shall fall into transgression”
Hugh Nibley wrote: “treading on one’s garments while making a covenant” follows a “forgotten but peculiar old Jewish rite” (“Freemen and King-men in the Book of Mormon.” The Prophetic Book of Mormon. Editor John W. Welch [Salt Lake City: Deseret Book, 1989] 328-79).

verses 23-24 Captain Moroni desired to re-covenant his people to keep the commandments. As covenants are often made in association with ritual and symbolism, Moroni chose to tear his coat as a symbol of the covenant. He then invited his people to tear their coats in like manner. This tearing of his coat was intended to symbolize that if he and his people did not keep their covenants to obey the Lord’s commands, their coats would be torn by their brethren the Lamanites, and they would be trodden under foot and be imprisoned. Now, where did Moroni get the idea to tear his coat and to use it as the symbol of the covenant? Was it his own idea? Was there a scriptural precedent? Read on!

23 Moroni said unto them: Behold, we are a remnant of the seed of Jacob; yea, we are a remnant of the seed of Joseph, whose coat was rent by his brethren into many pieces; yea, and now behold, let us remember to keep the commandments of God, or our garments shall be rent by our brethren, and we be cast into prison, or be sold, or be slain.

verse 23 We are about to learn the essential reason why Moroni chose the symbolism of a torn coat as he attempted to re-covenant his people.

“Joseph, whose coat was rent by his brethren into many pieces” We learn that ancient Joseph’s coat of many colors was torn into many pieces by his resentful brothers. Is that true? Was Joseph’s coat torn by his brothers? If you check the biblical account of the story of Joseph and his “coat of many colors” (Genesis 37), there are a few things that were “rent” but Joseph’s coat was not one of them. The Genesis account says nothing about Joseph’s coat being torn into many pieces. Perhaps the account of this story on the plates of brass was different in its detail, for apparently Joseph’s coat was torn into pieces. Dr. John A. Tvedtnes wrote:

Aside from Alma 46:23, the only document I know of that clearly indicates that the brothers tore Joseph’s garment is the thirteenth-century collection of earlier Jewish stories known as the Book of Jasher: “And they hastened and took Joseph’s coat and tore it, and they killed a kid of the goats and dipped the coat into the blood of the kid, and then trampled it in the dust, and they sent the coat to their father Jacob” (Jasher 43:13) (Echoes and Evidences of the Book of Mormon, ed. Parry, Peterson, Welch, 236-37).

Could Joseph Smith have known that the coat of ancient Joseph had been torn into pieces by his brothers? He obviously could not have known from the Bible; and since the Book of Jasher could not have come to Joseph Smith’s attention until it was published in English in 1840, he could not have known from that source either. It is obvious, however, that this medieval Jewish document shares an ancient tradition also found in the Book of Mormon.

Moroni, here, uses Joseph’s torn coat as a powerful symbol. In addition to representing the possible destruction of each individual, were they to become disobedient, it represented also the separation and scattering of the house of Joseph. Moroni is attempting to save his people from the eternal effects of their sins by encouraging them to covenant to obey the commandments. The rending of his coat (Alma 46:12) and the making it the “Title of Liberty” was in similitude of Joseph’s brothers’ unknowingly rending Joseph’s coat. The coat became a symbol of the rending or scattering of the seed of Joseph.

The story of the ancient prophet Joseph was historical proof that jealousy and contention could lead to bondage, but that faithfulness to covenants with God leads to preservation and liberty. Anciently, Joseph was a symbol of freedom and liberty.

“let us remember to keep the commandments of God, or our garments shall be rent by our brethren, and we be cast into prison, or be sold, or be slain” It is clear that a curse is implied in this phrase. Those who failed to keep the commandments would be cast into prison, sold, or slain. This is an example of the “prophetic simile curse,” other examples of which are found in the Bible and elsewhere in the Book of Mormon (see Isaiah 20:2-4; Ezekiel 5:1-17; 3 Nephi 4:28-29; Alma 44:12-14).

There is also a certain spirit or attitude in which Moroni was asking the Nephites to commit themselves to the defense of their Nephite lands. They were asked to recognize their position as the meek and humble of the world in contrast to the rich and proud, the “king-men” whom Moroni denounces. They are invited to march under the tattered and torn garment of Moroni which represented the torn garment of ancient Joseph who was the outcast child who was stripped and beaten and sold into bondage in Egypt.

24 Yea, let us preserve our liberty as a remnant of Joseph; yea, let us remember the words of Jacob, before his death, for behold, he saw that a part of the remnant of the coat of Joseph was preserved and had not decayed. And he said—Even as this remnant of garment of my son hath been preserved, so shall a remnant of the seed of my son be preserved by the hand of God, and be taken unto himself, while the remainder of the seed of Joseph shall perish, even as the remnant of his garment.

verse 24 In this verse, Moroni continues the comparison with ancient Joseph by mentioning an interesting prophecy made by Jacob. Apparently, some time before his death, Jacob was shown a preserved remnant of the coat which he had previously given to his son Joseph. Jacob used that occasion to prophesy about the descendants of his son Joseph. Some would be preserved by the hand of God, and some would perish. Where might Joseph Smith have learned of this prophecy? Is it recorded in the Bible? It is not! All we have in the Bible is the account of Joseph’s brothers bringing Joseph’s coat soaked in goat’s blood to Jacob. Jacob concluded that his son had been killed by an “evil beast” (Genesis 37:31-35). It is, however, fascinating to learn that in ancient apocryphal literature, there are stories about preserved remnants of Joseph’s coat being shown to Jacob as proof that he was yet alive. Brother Hugh Nibley provides such an example:

The Nephite prophet Moroni tells a story, which he says was common property of his people, concerning the death of the patriarch Jacob (Alma 46:24-25). I have never come across this story except in Tha’labi—who in Joseph Smith’s America had access to Tha’labi? Tha’labi, a Persian in the tenth century AD, went about collecting old stories of the prophets from his Jewish neighbors. The story in barest outline is that when the garment of Joseph was brought to Jacob on his deathbed, he rejoiced because part of it was sound and whole, signifying that some of his descendants would always remain true; but he wept because another part of the garment was befouled and rotted away, signifying that part of his descendants that would fall away. The same story is told with the same interpretation in Tha'labi and in the book of Alma, in the latter significantly as a popular folk-tale. The presence of such a story among the Hebrews has been indicated in a recent study by a Jewish scholar, but could Joseph Smith wait until 1953 to read about it? (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 249).

John A. Tvedtnes has added another account which contributes to the tradition that Joseph's torn coat was preserved:

The preservation of Joseph's garment is noted in the Zenahu La-Yosef, an Ethiopic manuscript from the Dabra Bizon monastery, in which Benjamin, eating with the Egyptian official he did not yet know to be his brother Joseph, told him of his lost brother and of his father Jacob's mourning: "He looks at his [Joseph's] garment stained in his blood. He puts it in front of him, and soaks it every day with the tears of his eyes." According to a Muslim tradition reported by as-Kisa'i, Jacob, before sending his sons to Egypt for the second time, gave "Joseph's shirt to Benjamin to wear, the one that had been brought to him spattered with blood" (Echoes and Evidences of the Book of Mormon, ed. Parry, Peterson, and Welch, 237).

Here the preservation of the rent garment of ancient Joseph seems to have symbolized the covenants of God to preserve a posterity unto Jacob and Joseph. While those descendants of Joseph who reject the covenants through apostasy and dissension shall perish, God will preserve a remnant of the seed of Joseph. In verse 27 Moroni suggests that it might well be that the remnant of the seed of Joseph which shall perish are those who have dissented from the Nephites. We will learn, however, from the Book of Mormon, that by the time of the ultimate scattering of the Book of Mormon peoples in about AD 385, there will be no clear blood lineage distinction between Nephites and Lamanites.

Moroni's torn garment, then, just as the torn coat of Joseph, represented the covenants of God to preserve his people based on their obedience.

The word remnant is used often in the Bible and Book of Mormon. Remnant means a small part or fragment. The word in scripture is most often used to refer to a small part of the house of Israel. It seems feasible that its use in this context originated in the legend of Jacob's being shown, just prior to his death, a remnant of Joseph's coat that had been preserved.

25 Now behold, this giveth my soul sorrow; nevertheless, my soul hath joy in my son, because of that part of his seed which shall be taken unto God.

26 Now behold, this was the language of Jacob.

27 And now who knoweth but what the remnant of the seed of Joseph, which shall perish as his garment, are those who have dissented from us? Yea, and even it shall be ourselves if we do not stand fast in the faith of Christ.

verse 27 Mormon might well have inserted between the two sentences in this verse: “And, in case you’re inclined to be smug . . .” He might also have added the important lesson that righteousness does not consist in only being identified with this or that nation, group, or church. The people are not to be considered righteous simply by virtue of being Nephites and not Lamanites.

Moroni viewed dissidents as covenant-breakers whose lack of trust in God and lack of concern for the community of the saints put the whole people in jeopardy. It is obvious that the chronicler Mormon agreed with him. They both saw dissention as the root cause of Nephite problems (see Alma 51:16). This view is not difficult to understand since literally every enemy the Nephites engaged in the “war chapters” of Alma (chapters 43-62) were Nephite dissenters who had joined militarily with the Lamanites. It is obvious that Mormon wants us to learn the wickedness and dangers of dissention and dissenters, and of covenant-breaking and covenant-breakers.

28 And now it came to pass that when Moroni had said these words he went forth, and also sent forth in all the parts of the land where there were dissensions, and gathered together all the people who were desirous to maintain their liberty, to stand against Amalickiah and those who had dissented, who were called Amalickiahites.

29 And it came to pass that when Amalickiah saw that the people of Moroni were more numerous than the Amalickiahites—and he also saw that his people were doubtful concerning the justice of the cause in which they had undertaken—therefore, fearing that he should not gain the point, he took those of his people who would and departed into the land of Nephi.

verse 29 Seeing that he had insufficient support among the Nephites, Amalickiah shows his true colors and leads away his most devoted followers to the land of the Lamanites to seek additional man-power support there.

30 Now Moroni thought it was not expedient that the Lamanites should have any more strength; therefore he thought to cut off the people of Amalickiah, or to take them and bring them back, and put Amalickiah to death; yea, for he knew that he would stir up the Lamanites to anger against them, and cause them to come to battle against them; and this he knew that Amalickiah would do that he might obtain his purposes.

31 Therefore Moroni thought it was expedient that he should take his armies, who had gathered themselves together, and armed themselves, and entered into a covenant to keep the peace—and it came to pass that he took his army and marched out with his tents into the wilderness, to cut off the course of Amalickiah in the wilderness.

32 And it came to pass that he did according to his desires, and marched forth into the wilderness, and headed the armies of Amalickiah.

verse 32 “and headed the armies of Amalickiah” The verb “head” here means to head off or to intercept.

33 And it came to pass that Amalickiah fled with a small number of his men, and the remainder were delivered up into the hands of Moroni and were taken back into the land of Zarahemla.

34 Now, Moroni being a man who was appointed by the chief judges and the voice of the people, therefore he had power according to his will with the armies of the Nephites, to establish and to exercise authority over them.

35 And it came to pass that whomsoever of the Amalickiahites that would not enter into a covenant to support the cause of freedom, that they might maintain a free government, he caused to be put to death; and there were but few who denied the covenant of freedom.

verse 35 Please don't miss the subtle humor in this verse! Is there humor in the Book of Mormon? Brother Steven C. Walker has observed:

Perhaps the most unappreciated aspect of Book of Mormon concentration is its humor. That lack of appreciation probably testifies to the effectiveness of the humor, since its essence is understatement, a laconic refusal to push the punch line. I suspect that the tongue-in-cheek British laugh more than we Americans in reading the Book of Mormon. The high seriousness of its context can easily distract those used to more explicit humor from the smile on the face of the writer of such a statement as “Whomsoever of the Amalickiahites that would not enter into a covenant to support the cause of freedom . . . he caused to be put to death; and there were but few who denied the covenant of freedom” (Alma 46:35), or “Neither were there Lamanites, nor any manner of -ites” (4 Nephi 17), or “For if their wine would poison a Lamanite it would also poison a Nephite” (Alma 55:32) (BYU Studies, volume 20, Number 2, 202).

Some have been upset by Moroni's treatment of these dissenters. The Book of Mormon actually teaches a careful regard for the rights of dissenters to think and believe what they want to and a respect for their rights of conscience. Thus, “the law could have no power on any man for his belief” (Alma 1:17; 30:9). However, for their illegal actions dissenters could indeed be punished (Words of Mormon 1:15-16; Alma 1:16-18; 30:10-11). Moroni clearly endured a great deal of affliction without reacting coercively, and apparently without insisting on strict or speedy enforcement of the laws, precisely because he respected the rights of conscience of the dissenters. It has been said that Zion cannot be built by force. Many things (indeed, most important things) cannot be accomplished by compulsion. Moroni consistently used as little coercion as the circumstances required, asserting military force only as a last resort, and repeatedly allowing dissenters who had taken arms in rebellion to “escape” strict justice (Alma 46:35; 50:36; 51:20-21). Perhaps he believed that punishment and force could not convert their consciences. Repentance and conversion are matters of conscience. Because the conscience usually revolts when force is applied, force should be avoided whenever possible if the goal is to reclaim the dissenters, as it always should be (Lynn D. Wardle, “Dissent: Perspectives from the Book of Mormon” in Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, 65).

Brother Hugh Nibley has drawn an analogy between Moroni’s campaigns and those of Simon Bar Kochba. Bar Kochba was the leader of the Jews in Palestine during their insurrection against the Romans in AD 132-35. He raised a large army among the Jews and was initially successful in defeating the Romans. Eventually his army was defeated and he was killed in AD 135. Brother Nibley says:

Bar Kochba’s war, like Moroni’s, was a holy war, a “Messianic war.” In the struggle for liberation, Bar Kochba found his hands full dealing with all kinds of people and problems. For one thing, he found that “some of the wealthier citizens” of a city were “evaders of national duties.” Specifically, they were “disregarding the mobilization orders of Bar Kochba,” who became exceedingly angry and issued dire threats against them, including even the death penalty. Compare this with Moroni in a like situation: “And it came to pass that whomsoever of the Amalickiahites that would not enter into a covenant to support the cause of freedom, . . . he caused to be put to death; and there were but few who denied the covenant of freedom” (Alma 46:35). Bar Kochba had to deal with just such characters, and he did it in the same way. To the “brothers” (for so he calls them, as Moroni does all to whom he writes) in the city of En-Gedi, he personally wrote a letter in Hebrew that survives to this day: “To Masabala and to Yehonathan bar Be’ayan, peace. In comfort you sit, eat and drink from the prosperity of the House of Israel, and care nothing for your brothers.” Moroni wrote a letter from the field: “To Pahoran, in the city of Zarahemla . . . and also to all those who have been chosen by this people to govern and manage the affairs of this war” (Alma 60:1). “Can you think to sit upon your thrones [today he might have used a more slang term] in a state of thoughtless stupor, while your enemies are spreading the work of death around you? Yea, while they are murdering thousands of your brethren?” (Alma 60:7). To such people Moroni issues a dire threat: “And I will come unto you, and . . . behold I will stir up insurrections among you, even until those who have desires to usurp power and authority shall become extinct” (Alma 60:27). If this sounds shockingly severe, the provocation was as terrible: Moroni, like Bar Kochba, was holding on by the skin of his teeth. . . . But if the secret of Moroni’s success was his essential gentleness—he always called a halt to the fighting the instant the enemy, whom he called his “brethren,” showed the least inclination to parley—it has often been said that Bar Kochba’s undoing was the lack of such a redeeming quality. “His brutality, according to some sources, was manifested in the way he killed the revered Rabbi Eleazar of Modi’in, . . . whom Bar Kochba suspected of betraying the secrets of Bethar [a city under attack] to the Romans. This cruel act, according to the same sources, caused Bar Kochba's death, and the fall of Bethar" (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 282-84).

36 And it came to pass also, that he caused the title of liberty to be hoisted upon every tower which was in all the land, which was possessed by the Nephites; and thus Moroni planted the standard of liberty among the Nephites.

37 And they began to have peace again in the land; and thus they did maintain peace in the land until nearly the end of the nineteenth year of the reign of the judges.

38 And Helaman and the high priests did also maintain order in the church; yea, even for the space of four years did they have much peace and rejoicing in the church.

39 And it came to pass that there were many who died, firmly believing that their souls were redeemed by the Lord Jesus Christ; thus they went out of the world rejoicing.

40 And there were some who died with fevers, which at some seasons of the year were very frequent in the land—but not so much so with fevers, because of the excellent qualities of the many plants and roots which God had prepared to remove the cause of diseases, to which men were subject by the nature of the climate—verse 40 “because of the excellent qualities of the many plants and roots which God had prepared to remove the cause of diseases” One of the 16th-century Spanish historians who wrote in Mesoamerica, in describing the “Tultecas,” a culture which some feel are the Nephites, said of them, “They invented the art of medicine . . . They were the wise men who discovered, who knew of, medicine; who originated the medical art” (Joseph L. Allen, Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon, 149-50).

41 But there were many who died with old age; and those who died in the faith of Christ are happy in him, as we must needs suppose.

In this chapter, the prophet Mormon interrupts his narrative of the sixteen-year war between the Nephites and Lamanites (70 to 55 BC—Alma 43 to 62) to provide an account of Amalickiah’s dogged pursuit of autocratic power and control and his striving to become king among the Lamanites. Mormon provides a sharp contrast between Amalickiah and his lust for autocratic power and Captain Moroni who championed democratic ideals and liberty for his people (Alma 48:10-11). Both King Benjamin and his son King Mosiah had begun to establish democratic reforms among their people. While it may be tempting to imagine Nephite society as a mirror of the modern democratic republic, their institutional methods for preserving freedom and liberty were actually, in some important ways, quite different from modern secular democracies. Richard L. Bushman remarked, “Looking at the Book of Mormon as a whole, it seems clear that most of the principles traditionally associated with the American Constitution are slighted or disregarded altogether. All of the constitutional checks and balances are missing” (“The Book of Mormon and the American Revolution,” Book of Mormon Authorship: New light on Ancient Origins, ed. Noel B. Reynolds, Provo UT: FARMS, 1982, 201–202).

On the other hand, Ryan W. Davis, a political scholar, has concluded that Nephite society can still be seen as fundamentally democratic because of their freedom of conscience, the potential of “intra-agency checks” to balance their government, and the political voice given to their people (Ryan W. Davis, “For the Peace of the People: War and Democracy in the Book of Mormon,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 16, no. 1 (2007): 44–45). “It is in this limited but important sense that the regime established by Mosiah should be considered a democracy” (Davis, “Peace of the People,” 44), 1 Now we will return in our record to Amalickiah and those who had fled with him into the wilderness; for, behold, he had taken those who went with him, and went up in the land of Nephi among the Lamanites, and did stir up the Lamanites to anger against the people of Nephi, insomuch that the king of the Lamanites sent a proclamation throughout all his land, among all his people, that they should gather themselves together again to go to battle against the Nephites.

verse 1 “the king of the Lamanites sent a proclamation throughout all his land” John L. Sorenson made an interesting observation regarding the Lamanite culture: “Rulers in the Lamanite system appear to have had more difficulty than Nephite rulers in binding component social groups into a common polity (Alma 17:27-35; 20:4, 7, 9, 14-15; 47:1-3). They seem to have depended more on charisma or compulsion than on shared tradition, ideals, or an apparatus of officials (Encyclopedia of Mormonism, volume 1, “Book of Mormon Peoples”).

2 And it came to pass that when the proclamation had gone forth among them they were exceedingly afraid; yea, they feared to displease the king, and they also feared to go to battle against the Nephites lest they should lose their lives. And it came to pass that they would not, or the more part of them would not, obey the commandments of the king.

3 And now it came to pass that the king was wroth because of their disobedience; therefore he gave Amalickiah the command of that part of his army which was obedient unto his commands, and commanded him that he should go forth and compel them to arms.

4 Now behold, this was the desire of Amalickiah; for he being a very subtle man to do evil therefore he laid the plan in his heart to dethrone the king of the Lamanites.

verse 4 “for he being a very subtle man” Just a reminder. The reader might wonder if being “a very subtle man” is indeed a negative quality. It usually means having the ability to make fine distinctions. Another meaning of “subtle,” however, is crafty, sly, cunning, and devious.

5 And now he had got the command of those parts of the Lamanites who were in favor of the king; and he sought to gain favor of those who were not obedient; therefore he went forward to the place which was called Onidah, for thither had all the Lamanites fled; for they discovered the army coming, and, supposing that they were coming to destroy them, therefore they fled to Onidah, to the place of arms.

verse 5 “Onidah, to the place of arms” Apparently this city was the site of some natural resource which was useful in manufacturing weapons.

6 And they had appointed a man to be a king and a leader over them, being fixed in their minds with a determined resolution that they would not be subjected to go against the Nephites.

7 And it came to pass that they had gathered themselves together upon the top of the mount which was called Antipas, in preparation to battle.

8 Now it was not Amalickiah’s intention to give them battle according to the commandments of the king; but behold, it was his intention to gain favor with the armies of the Lamanites, that he might place himself at their head and dethrone the king and take possession of the kingdom.

9 And behold, it came to pass that he caused his army to pitch their tents in the valley which was near the mount Antipas.

10 And it came to pass that when it was night he sent a secret embassy into the mount Antipas, desiring that the leader of those who were upon the mount, whose name was Lehonti, that he should come down to the foot of the mount, for he desired to speak with him.

11 And it came to pass that when Lehonti received the message he durst not go down to the foot of the mount. And it came to pass that Amalickiah sent again the second time, desiring him to come down. And it came to pass that Lehonti would not; and he sent again the third time.

12 And it came to pass that when Amalickiah found that he could not get Lehonti to come down off from the mount, he went up into the mount, nearly to Lehonti's camp; and he sent again the fourth time his message unto Lehonti, desiring that he would come down, and that he would bring his guards with him.

13 And it came to pass that when Lehonti had come down with his guards to Amalickiah, that Amalickiah desired him to come down with his army in the night-time, and surround those men in their camps over whom the king had given him command, and that he would deliver them up into Lehonti's hands, if he would make him (Amalickiah) a second leader over the whole army.

14 And it came to pass that Lehonti came down with his men and surrounded the men of Amalickiah, so that before they awoke at the dawn of day they were surrounded by the armies of Lehonti.

15 And it came to pass that when they saw that they were surrounded, they plead with Amalickiah that he would suffer them to fall in with their brethren, that they might not be destroyed. Now this was the very thing which Amalickiah desired.

16 And it came to pass that he delivered his men, contrary to the commands of the king. Now this was the thing that Amalickiah desired, that he might accomplish his designs in dethroning the king.

verses 6-16 We will learn in these verses it would have been better for Lehonti and his men to have remained on the top of mount Antipas where they were safe. When they came down, they found themselves in serious trouble. In an analogous way, sometimes each of us in our lives is better off if we avoid exposing ourselves to evil influences. Satan's persuasive arguments are often subtle and enticing. Though we may become convinced that it is safe to "come down from the mount," we may, like Lehonti and his man, find ourselves in captivity. Thus, it is often better for us, figuratively speaking, to "remain on the top of mount Antipas."

For commentary on the Greek derivation of the name Antipas, see the supplemental article, Names in the Book of Mormon.

17 Now it was the custom among the Lamanites, if their chief leader was killed, to appoint the second leader to be their chief leader.

18 And it came to pass that Amalickiah caused that one of his servants should administer poison by degrees to Lehonti, that he died.

verse 18 Here is a technique that Satan may use to trap us. As happened to Lehonti, Satan may seek to “poison [us] by degrees.”

19 Now, when Lehonti was dead, the Lamanites appointed Amalickiah to be their leader and their chief commander.

20 And it came to pass that Amalickiah marched with his armies (for he had gained his desires) to the land of Nephi, to the city of Nephi, which was the chief city.

verse 20 “to the land of Nephi, to the city of Nephi” The Book of Mormon often refers to “lands” that both surround and bear the names of their chief cities. We may read, for example, of the lands and cities of Ammonihah, Bountiful, Desolation, Gideon, Helam, Jashon, Jerusalem, Lehi, Lehi-Nephi, Manti, Morianton, Moroni, Mulek, Nehor, Nephihah, Noah, Shem, Shilom. For a discussion, speculative though it may be, of the possible relationship of this city of Nephi to that city of Nephi originally established by the prophet Nephi, the son of Lehi, in 578 BC, see the commentary for Jacob 2:28.

21 And the king came out to meet him with his guards, for he supposed that Amalickiah had fulfilled his commands, and that Amalickiah had gathered together so great an army to go against the Nephites to battle.

22 But behold, as the king came out to meet him Amalickiah caused that his servants should go forth to meet the king. And they went and bowed themselves before the king, as if to reverence him because of his greatness.

23 And it came to pass that the king put forth his hand to raise them, as was the custom with the Lamanites, as a token of peace, which custom they had taken from the Nephites.

24 And it came to pass that when he had raised the first from the ground, behold he stabbed the king to the heart; and he fell to the earth.

25 Now the servants of the king fled; and the servants of Amalickiah raised a cry, saying:

26 Behold, the servants of the king have stabbed him to the heart, and he has fallen and they have fled; behold, come and see.

27 And it came to pass that Amalickiah commanded that his armies should march forth and see what had happened to the king; and when they had come to the spot, and found the king lying in his gore, Amalickiah pretended to be wroth, and said: Whosoever loved the king, let him go forth, and pursue his servants that they may be slain.

28 And it came to pass that all they who loved the king, when they heard these words, came forth and pursued after the servants of the king.

29 Now when the servants of the king saw an army pursuing after them, they were frightened again, and fled into the wilderness, and came over into the land of Zarahemla and joined the people of Ammon.

30 And the army which pursued after them returned, having pursued after them in vain; and thus Amalickiah, by his fraud, gained the hearts of the people.

31 And it came to pass on the morrow he entered the city Nephi with his armies, and took possession of the city.

32 And now it came to pass that the queen, when she had heard that the king was slain—for Amalickiah had sent an embassy to the queen informing her that the king had been slain by his servants, that he had pursued them with his army, but it was in vain, and they had made their escape—

33 Therefore, when the queen had received this message she sent unto Amalickiah, desiring him that he would spare the people of the city; and she also desired him that he should come in unto her; and she also desired him that he should bring witnesses with him to testify concerning the death of the king.

34 And it came to pass that Amalickiah took the same servant that slew the king, and all them who were with him, and went in unto the queen, unto the place where she sat; and they all testified unto her that the king was slain by his own servants; and they said also: They have fled; does not this testify against them? And thus they satisfied the queen concerning the death of the king.

35 And it came to pass that Amalickiah sought the favor of the queen, and took her unto him to wife; and thus by his fraud, and by the assistance of his cunning servants, he obtained the kingdom; yea, he was acknowledged king throughout all the land, among all the people of the Lamanites, who were composed of the Lamanites and the Lemuelites and the Ishmaelites, and all the dissenters of the Nephites, from the reign of Nephi down to the present time.

verses 32-35 It would appear that women had rights of succession to the Lamanite throne, and once the king was dead, the rule passed to the queen. Amalickiah thus had to marry the queen to gain the throne. In extreme crises women also took up arms in war alongside their men (Alma 54:12; 55:17; Ether 15:15).

36 Now these dissenters, having the same instruction and the same information of the Nephites, yea, having been instructed in the same knowledge of the Lord, nevertheless, it is strange to relate, not long after their dissensions they became more hardened and impenitent, and more wild, wicked and ferocious than the Lamanites—drinking in with the traditions of the Lamanites; giving way to indolence, and all manner of lasciviousness; yea, entirely forgetting the Lord their God.

verse 36 “Now these dissenters” This phrase references those Nephite dissenters who were living among the Lamanites in the larger land of Nephi (see the previous verse). These would include Zoramites, Amalekites (Amlicites), Amulonites (descendants of the servants of King Noah), and others.

“these dissenters, having the same instruction and the same information of the Nephites” It is obvious that shared experiences do not guarantee shared beliefs. Some may receive the same teachings, side by side with believers, and yet they themselves will emerge as non-believers.

“the traditions of the Lamanites See the commentary for Enos 1:14 and Mosiah 10:12-17.

“giving way to indolence” Indolence is a colorful word that may be defined as habitual idleness; indisposition to labor; a love of ease; inaction or want of exertion of body or mind; an aversion to toil.

Alma Chapter 48

Scripture Mastery

Alma 48:11-13, 17 Moroni was a strong and a mighty man. If all men had been. and were. and ever would be, like unto Moroni, behold, the very powers of hell would have been shaken forever.

1 And now it came to pass that, as soon as Amalickiah had obtained the kingdom he began to inspire the hearts of the Lamanites against the people of Nephi; yea, he did appoint men to speak unto the Lamanites from their towers, against the Nephites.

verse 1 Amalickiah was able to stir up the war-weary Lamanites to a pitch of war-fever in spite of the fact that fighting a new war was hardly in their own best interest. He overcame their strong disinclination to fight by the masterful use of propaganda. Apparently, towers were a conspicuous part of public architecture, used among other things for public presentations and announcements.

2 And thus he did inspire their hearts against the Nephites, insomuch that in the latter end of the nineteenth year of the reign of the judges, he having accomplished his designs thus far, yea, having been made king over the Lamanites, he sought also to reign over all the land, yea, and all the people who were in the land, the Nephites as well as the Lamanites.

3 Therefore he had accomplished his design, for he had hardened the hearts of the Lamanites and blinded their minds, and stirred them up to anger, insomuch that he had gathered together a numerous host to go to battle against the Nephites.

4 For he was determined, because of the greatness of the number of his people, to overpower the Nephites and to bring them into bondage.

5 And thus he did appoint chief captains of the Zoramites, they being the most acquainted with the strength of the Nephites, and their places of resort, and the weakest parts of their cities; therefore he appointed them to be chief captains over his armies.

verse 5 John L. Sorenson has suggested that the Zoramites may have earlier played a formal military role among the Nephites before their defection (Encyclopedia of Mormonism, volume 1, “Book of Mormon Peoples”).

6 And it came to pass that they took their camp, and moved forth toward the land of Zarahemla in the wilderness.

verse 6 We have previously estimated the distance between the cities of Nephi and Zarahemla (see the commentary for Mosiah 24:25). This distance was probably about 250 miles. The distance as the crow flies would probably be more like 180 miles.

7 Now it came to pass that while Amalickiah had thus been obtaining power by fraud and deceit, Moroni, on the other hand, had been preparing the minds of the people to be faithful unto the Lord their God.

8 Yea, he had been strengthening the armies of the Nephites, and erecting small forts, or places of resort; throwing up banks of earth round about to enclose his armies, and also building walls of stone to encircle them about, round about their cities and the borders of their lands; yea, all round about the land.

9 And in their weakest fortifications he did place the greater number of men; and thus he did fortify and strengthen the land which was possessed by the Nephites.

verses 7-9 We note that Moroni's preparations for battle are always defensive. A preemptive strike was out of the question. He felt that the ultimate preparation for war was spiritual preparation since he knew that the Lord would never suffer a righteous people to lose in battle.

10 And thus he was preparing to support their liberty, their lands, their wives, and their children, and their peace, and that they might live unto the Lord their God, and that they might maintain that which was called by their enemies the cause of Christians.

11 And Moroni was a strong and a mighty man; he was a man of a perfect understanding; yea, a man that did not delight in bloodshed; a man whose soul did joy in the liberty and the freedom of his country, and his brethren from bondage and slavery; verse 11 “he was a man of a perfect understanding” The expression “perfect understanding” refers to spiritual comprehension or knowledge of truth. The scriptural word wisdom seems closely related and implies that the individual with perfect understanding or wisdom is able to see things from an appropriate eternal perspective. His perspective is not confined to this world only, but includes also a solid understanding of eternal principles. Moroni's perfect understanding or wisdom is given to man as a gift of the Spirit in response to his “experimenting upon the words” of Christ—his diligence in keeping his covenants and in searching the scriptures (Alma 17:2; 32:28). We may thus summarize the divine prescription for acquiring “perfect understanding”: Learn diligently and strive mightily to keep the covenants of God.

Moroni's understanding is “perfect” in that he understands fully the consequences of obeying and of disobeying his covenants.

It is obvious that the abridger of the plates, the prophet Mormon, was very impressed with Captain Moroni and may even have named his son after him. Mormon himself was obviously a great military soldier and strategist, a factor which probably attracted him to Captain Moroni.

“a man whose soul did joy in the liberty and the freedom of his country, and his brethren from bondage and slavery” It seems that Mormon intentionally provided the lengthy digression into Amalickiah’s exploits in the prior chapter in order to directly contrast Amalickiah’s personality, methods, and political ideologies with those of Moroni.

Exploring the political backdrop of Nephite military campaigns can help us better understand their success over the Lamanites. After surveying numerous conflicts throughout Nephite military history, Ryan W. Davis concluded: “The trend that emerges from this analysis is that short conflicts . . . favor the Lamanite autocracy, but extended conflicts are ultimately won by the Nephite democracy. We recall that the theoretical reason democracies are expected to succeed in conflicts is that they can direct greater resources over an extended period of time. While democracies may lose in the short term, “in every prolonged conflict in modern history, such states have prevailed over their illiberal rivals” (Ryan W. Davis, “For the Peace of the People: War and Democracy in the Book of Mormon,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 16, no. 1, 2007:50-51).

This explains, in part, why Moroni fought so vigorously to preserve and protect their current method of governance (For an analysis of Mormon’s views concerning Moroni’s efforts to secure liberty, see Grant Hardy, Understanding the Book of Mormon: A Reader’s Guide, New York, NY: Oxford University Press, 2010, 109–110.).

This is not to say, however, that the people’s safety was ultimately dependent on the arm of flesh or upon the democratic system that they fought to preserve. “The most basic lesson in the Book of Mormon’s politics is simple: God makes all the difference” (Davis, “Peace of the People,” 54). Time and again, the promise to the people was that they would be divinely blessed and prospered according to their obedience to the commandments. Nephi was taught this truth early on (1 Nephi 4:14), and its consistent repetition throughout the Book of Mormon demonstrates its preeminent status in determining the success or failure of the Nephite civilization.

12 Yea, a man whose heart did swell with thanksgiving to his God, for the many privileges and blessings which he bestowed upon his people; a man who did labor exceedingly for the welfare and safety of his people.

13 Yea, and he was a man who was firm in the faith of Christ, and he had sworn with an oath to defend his people, his rights, and his country, and his religion, even to the loss of his blood.

14 Now the Nephites were taught to defend themselves against their enemies, even to the shedding of blood if it were necessary; yea, and they were also taught never to give an offense, yea, and never to raise the sword except it were against an enemy, except it were to preserve their lives.

verse 14 To “give an offense” is to attack preemptively. Implicit in this verse is the idea that the Lord expects a people to know their enemy and react to them according to the danger they pose (see the commentary on the War Principles in the introductory commentary for Alma 43).

verses 15-16 The following two verses outline what Moroni and the Nephite peoples expected of the Lord in return for their faithfully keeping their covenants.

15 And this was their faith, that by so doing God would prosper them in the land, or in other words, if they were faithful in keeping the commandments of God that he would prosper them in the land; yea, warn them to flee, or to prepare for war, according to their danger;

16 And also, that God would make it known unto them whither they should go to defend themselves against their enemies, and by so doing, the Lord would deliver them; and this was the faith of Moroni, and his heart did glory in it; not in the shedding of blood but in doing good, in preserving his people, yea, in keeping the commandments of God, yea, and resisting iniquity.

17 Yea, verily, verily I say unto you, if all men had been, and were, and ever would be, like unto Moroni, behold, the very powers of hell would have been shaken forever; yea, the devil would never have power over the hearts of the children of men.

verse 17 The prophet Mormon wrote the large part of the narrative contained in the book of Alma. He obviously had much to say about Moroni, the young chief captain over the Nephite armies. Mormon wrote nearly four centuries after the events of the so-called “war chapters” in the book of Alma (Alma 43-62). It seems that Mormon had many records from which to draw his history. However, he decided to make the figure of Chief-Captain Moroni one of his main focuses. The heroic acts of Captain Moroni are discussed in nearly twenty chapters of the book of Alma.

In Alma chapters 46–48, especially, readers can perceive that Mormon holds Moroni in very high regard and considers him an example that “all men” should emulate (Alma 48:17). Starting in Alma 46, Mormon clearly attempted to contrast Moroni and his archenemy Amalickiah, presenting each figure as the antithesis of the other.

Mormon wanted to show what great damage “one very wicked man” (Alma 46:9) could cause, but also, in contrast, how one very righteous man, like Moroni, if emulated by many, had the power to overcome all evil in the world (Alma 48:17).

In addition, it is obvious that Mormon apparently tried to imitate Moroni’s war strategies in his own time, including the fortification of cities (compare, e.g., Mormon 2:4; Alma 48:9) and trying to rally his people to “fight for their wives, and their children, and their houses, and their homes” (Mormon 2:23; Alma 46:12; 58:12).¹

Although not mentioned overtly, Mormon clearly had so much respect and admiration for Chief-Captain Moroni and what he had accomplished that he named his son after his hero.

Mormon, like Chief-Captain Moroni, was called to be a military leader at a young age (Mormon 1:15; 2:1–2), at a time in which his people were similarly engaged in near constant wars. His exposure to the records containing the history of Moroni showed Mormon a time when the Nephites still had faith in God, were strengthened by the Spirit, and were led to victory because of their righteous desires. At the time when Mormon was abridging this part of the Nephite records, he could see that Chief-Captain Moroni's example was desperately needed among the people of his day, and he longed to lead his people as Moroni did. Mormon longed for the time when his people, like the people of Nephi in Moroni's day, would recognize the error of their ways, turn their hearts back to the Lord, and be blessed. In Alma 50, Mormon briefly emphasized how good things were for the Nephites in the days when they still kept the commandments of God, likely contrasting that period with his own. He declared: "And they did prosper exceedingly, and they became exceedingly rich; yea, and they did multiply and wax strong in the land. And thus we see how merciful and just are all the dealings of the Lord, to the fulfilling of all his words unto the children of men; And those who were faithful in keeping the commandments of the Lord were delivered at all times, whilst thousands of their wicked brethren have been consigned to bondage, or to perish by the sword, or to dwindle in unbelief, and mingle with the Lamanites. But behold there never was a happier time among the people of Nephi, since the days of Nephi, than in the days of Moroni, yea, even at this time, in the twenty and first year of the reign of the judges" (Alma 50:18–19, 22–23).

Mormon likely had in mind Moroni's time when, in Mormon 2:8–13, he tells of how he had hope that his own people would turn from their wicked ways and qualify for the blessings of the Lord once more. Because of their losses and because of the curse that was upon the land, the Nephites of Mormon's time apparently "began to repent of their iniquity, and began to cry" unto the Lord. He will write: "And it came to pass that when I, Mormon, saw their lamentation and their mourning and their sorrow before the Lord, my heart did begin to rejoice within me, knowing the mercies and the long-suffering of the Lord, therefore supposing that he would be merciful unto them that they would again become a righteous people" (Mormon 2:12).

However, as a prophet of God, he understood the lamentable reality of his people's situation—that their response was not like the Nephites of yesteryear. Mormon exclaimed in disconsolation: "But behold this my joy was vain, for their sorrowing was not unto repentance, because of the goodness of God; but it was rather the sorrowing of the damned, because the Lord would not always suffer them to take happiness in sin" (Mormon 2:13).

For many reasons and in many ways, Chief-Captain Moroni was a great hero to Mormon. Moroni represented the golden days of the Nephite civilization, a time when the people still repented of their sins and qualified for the blessings of God and the strength that comes from having the Spirit present. Mormon did his best to emulate Chief-Captain Moroni and even named his own son after that great man.

Today, we can appreciate the numerous subtle signals that Mormon sent in his abridging of the war chapters of the book of Alma that are in the end purposefully echoed 150 pages later in Mormon's account of the painful conclusion of the Nephite demise. Mormon sincerely hoped that all of his future readers would understand what a powerful disciple of Christ Moroni was. Indeed, in this verse he declared that "if all men had been, and were, and ever would be, like unto Moroni, behold, the very powers of hell would have been shaken forever" and the world would be a better place, concordant with the will of God.

18 Behold, he was a man like unto Ammon, the son of Mosiah, yea, and even the other sons of Mosiah, yea, and also Alma and his sons, for they were all men of God.

19 Now behold, Helaman and his brethren were no less serviceable unto the people than was Moroni; for they did preach the word of God, and they did baptize unto repentance all men whosoever would hearken unto their words.

verse 19 Let us keep in mind that in addition to captain Moroni, there were others who were equally valuable to the Nephite people. The others included "Helaman and his brethren." It is obvious that Mormon is the writer and first person here, since we would not expect Helaman, the general author of Alma 45 through 62, to have mentioned himself in this context.

20 And thus they went forth, and the people did humble themselves because of their words, insomuch that they were highly favored of the Lord, and thus they were free from wars and contentions among themselves, yea, even for the space of four years.

verse 20 Again, we see evidence, among the Nephites, of a healthy reluctance to fight their enemies, a reluctance which manifests their obedience to the War Principles outlined in the introductory commentary for Alma 43.

21 But, as I have said, in the latter end of the nineteenth year, yea, notwithstanding their peace amongst themselves, they were compelled reluctantly to contend with their brethren, the Lamanites.

22 Yea, and in fine, their wars never did cease for the space of many years with the Lamanites, notwithstanding their much reluctance.

23 Now, they were sorry to take up arms against the Lamanites, because they did not delight in the shedding of blood; yea, and this was not all—they were sorry to be the means of sending so many of their brethren out of this world into an eternal world, unprepared to meet their God.

24 Nevertheless, they could not suffer to lay down their lives, that their wives and their children should be massacred by the barbarous cruelty of those who were once their brethren, yea, and had dissented from their church, and had left them and had gone to destroy them by joining the Lamanites.

25 Yea, they could not bear that their brethren should rejoice over the blood of the Nephites, so long as there were any who should keep the commandments of God, for the promise of the Lord was, if they should keep his commandments they should prosper in the land.

1 And now it came to pass in the eleventh month of the nineteenth year, on the tenth day of the month, the armies of the Lamanites were seen approaching towards the land of Ammonihah.

verse 1 We have discussed previously the consistent pattern of the timing of the wars fought in the Book of Mormon and the relationship of the Nephite calendar with our own calendar. Please review this material before continuing. It is found in the commentary for Alma 16:1.

You will recall that Ammonihah was the apostate Nephite city destroyed by a Lamanite army in about 81 BC, after its inhabitants had rejected the preaching of Alma and Amulek. The dead remained unburied for a time, and because of the resulting stench, the city came to be called the “desolation of Nehors.”

2 And behold, the city had been rebuilt, and Moroni had stationed an army by the borders of the city, and they had cast up dirt around about to shield them from the arrows and the stones of the Lamanites; for behold, they fought with stones and with arrows.

verse 2 “They had cast up dirt round about” For a discussion of the probable nature of these Nephite earthen fortifications, see the commentary on Alma 49:18, below.

3 Behold, I said that the city of Ammonihah had been rebuilt. I say unto you, yea, that it was in part rebuilt; and because the Lamanites had destroyed it once because of the iniquity of the people, they supposed that it would again become an easy prey for them.

verse 3 “they supposed that it would again become an easy prey for them” We will learn that the invading Lamanites were in for a nasty surprise.

4 But behold, how great was their disappointment; for behold, the Nephites had dug up a ridge of earth round about them, which was so high that the Lamanites could not cast their stones and their arrows at them that they might take effect, neither could they come upon them save it was by their place of entrance.

verse 4 “the Lamanites could not cast their stones and their arrows at them that they might take effect” The Lamanites were prevented from effectively using their stones and arrows as weapons.

We are not surprised by the Lamanites’ casting their stones, and this was likely done using a sling. The sling was spun in a circle over the warrior’s head before one side of the leather holder was released to allow the projectile to sail toward its mark.

But casting their arrows?? Surely Joseph Smith knew that Indians shot their arrows, but he could hardly have known anything about casting them. A primary war weapon among Mesoamerican peoples was the spear-thrower, or atlatl (the name of the device in Nahuatl, the language spoken by the Aztecs). If the reader has an interest, see illustrations and discussion in Sorenson, Images of Ancient America, 131-32. See also William J. Hamblin, “The Bow and Arrow in the Book of Mormon,” in Warfare in the Book of Mormon, ed. Ricks and Hamblin, 365-99, especially 388-89. This device consisted of an eighteen-inch long carved stick with a groove down one side and a notch at the end. A spear or arrow was laid in the notch with its blunt end against the notch. The warrior would then grasp the throwing stick or atlatl at the end away from the notch and cast the arrow using the stick as an extension of his arm for greater casting power. As the warrior launched the arrow, the arrow would separate from the groove and the last point of contact between the arrow and the atlatl was the notch. It is plausible to suppose that the Lamanites in the day of Moroni used atlatls to throw their arrows.

John Tvedtnes has pointed out that this expression could also stem from use of the Hebrew root YRH, which means “to throw.” When that word is applied to arrows in Bible usage, the English translation is “to shoot,” even though the Hebrew literally reads “to throw” (see, for example, 1 Samuel 20:20, 36-37).

“their place of entrance” An important part of the strategic defense system which Moroni had created was the concept of the “place of entrance.” This was the only access to the inside of the city, and it was well defended. For help in understanding this concept, see the commentary for Alma 49:18.

5 Now at this time the chief captains of the Lamanites were astonished exceedingly, because of the wisdom of the Nephites in preparing their places of security.

verse 5 “their places of security” What is the nature of this defensive fortification that results in “places of security”? This is the so-called trench and palisade structure discussed in the commentary for verse 18.

6 Now the leaders of the Lamanites had supposed, because of the greatness of their numbers, yea, they supposed that they should be privileged to come upon them as they had hitherto done; yea, and they had also prepared themselves with shields, and with breastplates; and they had also prepared themselves with garments of skins, yea, very thick garments to cover their nakedness.

verse 6 “they had also prepared themselves with shields, and with breastplates . . . and with garments of skins” Obviously the Lamanites had copied the armor they had seen the Nephites wearing. Previously the armor of non-Nephite peoples had been inferior to that of the Nephites (see Alma 3:5; 43:19-37). See the discussion of armor in the Book of Mormon in the commentary for Mosiah 21:7.

7 And being thus prepared they supposed that they should easily overpower and subject their brethren to the yoke of bondage, or slay and massacre them according to their pleasure.

8 But behold, to their uttermost astonishment, they were prepared for them, in a manner which never had been known among the children of Lehi. Now they were prepared for the Lamanites, to battle after the manner of the instructions of Moroni.

verse 8 “they were prepared for them” The Nephites were prepared to engage the attacking Lamanites. This preparation caused “uttermost astonishment” among the Lamanites who were expecting an easy victory.

The “children of Lehi” would include all the Book of Mormon peoples.

9 And it came to pass that the Lamanites, or the Amalickiahites, were exceedingly astonished at their manner of preparation for war.

10 Now, if king Amalickiah had come down out of the land of Nephi, at the head of his army, perhaps he would have caused the Lamanites to have attacked the Nephites at the city of Ammonihah; for behold, he did care not for the blood of his people.

verse 10 An attack against the well-fortified city of Ammonihah would have been futile and worse, even suicidal. The Lamanite chief captains quickly realized that. The Lamanites realized it was useless and unfair to send their ill-prepared soldiers against the city. Yet, if Ammonihah himself had been leading the Lamanite army, since he “did care not for the blood of his people,” he would have ordered an all-out attack.

11 But behold, Amalickiah did not come down himself to battle. And behold, his chief captains durst not attack the Nephites at the city of Ammonihah, for Moroni had altered the management of affairs among the Nephites, insomuch that the Lamanites were disappointed in their places of retreat and they could not come upon them.

verse 11 “the Lamanites were disappointed in their places of retreat and they could not come upon them” The Lamanites were frustrated and embarrassed over their utter failure to find a way to attack the effective fortress which the Nephites had built for themselves at Ammonihah. The phrase “their places of retreat” seem to refer to the fortifications of the Nephite city of Ammonihah. The phrase “they could not come upon them” refers to the fact that the Lamanites could not find a plausible way to attack the Nephites.

12 Therefore they retreated into the wilderness, and took their camp and marched towards the land of Noah, supposing that to be the next best place for them to come against the Nephites.

verse 12 The Lamanite chief captains, hoping to save face, hastily marched toward the town of Noah expecting it to be undefended. Then, before realizing that Noah also had been heavily fortified, the chief captains took an ill-advised oath that they would destroy the city.

13 For they knew not that Moroni had fortified, or had built forts of security, for every city in all the land round about; therefore, they marched forward to the land of Noah with a firm determination; yea, their chief captains came forward and took an oath that they would destroy the people of that city.

14 But behold, to their astonishment, the city of Noah, which had hitherto been a weak place, had now, by the means of Moroni, become strong, yea, even to exceed the strength of the city Ammonihah.

15 And now, behold, this was wisdom in Moroni; for he had supposed that they would be frightened at the city Ammonihah; and as the city of Noah had hitherto been the weakest part of the land, therefore they would march thither to battle; and thus it was according to his desires.

16 And behold, Moroni had appointed Lehi to be chief captain over the men of that city; and it was that same Lehi who fought with the Lamanites in the valley on the east of the river Sidon.

verse 16 Moroni had accurately predicted the scenario and had anticipated that the city of Noah would be attacked. Thus he had placed there one of his best captains, the battle-tested Lehi.

“Lehi who fought with the Lamanites in the valley on the east of the river Sidon” The reference here is to the battle of Moroni’s army with that of the Nephite dissenter Zerahemnah detailed in Alma 43-44.

17 And now behold it came to pass, that when the Lamanites had found that Lehi commanded the city they were again disappointed, for they feared Lehi exceedingly; nevertheless their chief captains had sworn with an oath to attack the city; therefore, they brought up their armies.

18 Now behold, the Lamanites could not get into their forts of security by any other way save by the entrance, because of the highness of the bank which had been thrown up, and the depth of the ditch which had been dug round about, save it were by the entrance.

verse 18 “highness of the bank . . . and the depth of the ditch” Dr. F. Richard Hauck has suggested a plausible structure for these fortifications based upon his archeological investigations in the highlands of central Guatemala (“Ancient Fortifications and the Land of Manti” This People, summer 1994, 46-55). If we were to cut a cross section of this defensive barrier or “ridge of earth,” an attacker would encounter, as he attacked the fortified city, an uphill slope leading to a trench. The trench was perhaps seven to ten feet deep and twelve feet wide with an outer sloping wall and an inner vertical wall. On the uphill side of this trench was a palisade of vertical timbers topped by “pickets” or sharp objects which made scaling the timber wall difficult. The vertical distance from the top of the inside embankment to the bottom of the ditch has been found by archaeologist David L. Webster to average 11 meters or about 35 feet, not counting any wooden palisade!

In another article, earthen embankment fortifications found in the area near Tikal in southern Mexico are described: “A trench is the most prominent feature of the earthworks. . . It had a continuous raised embankment along the south side . . . The earthworks extended a total of 9.5 kilometers. . . The four-meter width of the trench posed an obstacle few Maya could have crossed by jumping. . . Over almost its entire length, outsiders would have had to run uphill to approach the trench, and they would have had to jump upwards, as well as across the trench, to get into the embankment which abutted the south lip. . . That the trench was impassable is suggested by the fact that at four or five widely separated points along its length we found what appeared to be causeways, placed there in order to cross it. At each of these there was an equivalent gap in the embankment. . . The trench had been cut into limestone bedrock to a depth of three meters and that in its original state the walls of the trench had been nearly vertical. Clearly, anyone who might have fallen into it would have had some difficulty getting out” (“Defensive Earthworks at Tikal,” Dennis E. Puleston and Donald W. Callender, Jr., Expedition [Spring 1967], 40-48). Please see the illustration, Trench and Palisade.

Another part of the defensive layout of the city was the so-called “place of entrance” already mentioned. This likely consisted of a corridor flanked by the defensive ridges of earth and timber palisades. At the end of the corridor was the only entrance gate into the city. Those in the corridor, then, became easy prey for those manning the defensive ridges. Please view the illustration, Place of Entrance.

Hugh Nibley added: “In a good description of a typical Nephite fortification (Alma 49:17-20) we are told that elevation was an important element of defense, the enemy being forced to climb up to the fort [or city], which was surrounded by a high bank and a deep ditch; an important feature was the ‘place of entrance’ where assailants were let into a trap and there cut down by the swords and slings of the most expert fighters in the place (Alma 49:20)” (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 6, 418-19).

According to Ross Hassig, “During the Late Formative,” also called the Late Preclassic period, “the general sophistication of warfare in Mesoamerica increased” (Ross Hassig, War and Society in Ancient Mesoamerica, Berkeley and Los Angeles, CA: University of California Press, 1992, 44). This naturally “spurred the development of defensive architecture” during this time period (Hassig, War and Society, 32).

A pair of Mesoamerican archaeologists agreed, “Defensive features,” on archaeological sites, “appear to have been more prominent, though far from prevalent, during the Late Preclassic (300 BC to AD 250),” noting, “significant transformations in conducts of war appear to have taken place during the Preclassic period” (Takeshi Inomata and Daniela Triadan, “Culture and Practice of War in Maya Society,” in Warfare in Cultural Context: Practice, Agency, and the Archaeology of Violence, ed. Axel E. Nielson and William H. Walker, Tucson, AZ: University of Arizona Press, 2009, 66).

John L. Sorenson documented a minimum of 56 Late Preclassic fortifications, as opposed to only five from earlier time periods: “Fortifications in the Book of Mormon Account Compared with Mesoamerican Fortifications,” in Warfare in the Book of Mormon, ed. Stephen D. Ricks and William J. Hamblin, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1990, 429, table 2).

The few fortifications which predate the Late Preclassic period do not have all the features listed above in the commentary for this verse, while fortifications from later periods have a variety of additional features (“Fortifications in the Book of Mormon,” 430, table 3). Thus, in Mesoamerica, fortifications most consistent with those of Moroni in the mid-first century BC are those which date to that general time period.

Similar fortifications are also known in pre-Columbian North America, although currently none in that region are known to date to Book of Mormon times (David E. Jones, Native North American Armor, Shields, and Fortifications, Austin, TX: University of Texas Press, 2004, 50–57, 125–135).

19 And thus were the Nephites prepared to destroy all such as should attempt to climb up to enter the fort by any other way, by casting over stones and arrows at them.

verse 19 Whether these stones were thrown by hand or propelled by slings or by some other means is not clear. It is possible that the arrows were shot from a bow, though they could have been cast (see the commentary for verse 4).

20 Thus they were prepared, yea, a body of their strongest men, with their swords and their slings, to smite down all who should attempt to come into their place of security by the place of entrance; and thus were they prepared to defend themselves against the Lamanites.

21 And it came to pass that the captains of the Lamanites brought up their armies before the place of entrance, and began to contend with the Nephites, to get into their place of security; but behold, they were driven back from time to time, insomuch that they were slain with an immense slaughter.

verse 21 By now the Lamanite captains were becoming desperate. Remember, they had taken an oath to destroy the inhabitants of the city of Noah. It is obvious that their savage and repeated assaults on the Nephites impregnable gate had become suicidal, and eventually “their chief captains were all slain; yea, and more than a thousand of the Lamanites were slain” (verse 23).

22 Now when they found that they could not obtain power over the Nephites by the pass, they began to dig down their banks of earth that they might obtain a pass to their armies, that they might have an equal chance to fight; but behold, in these attempts they were swept off by the stones and arrows which were thrown at them; and instead of filling up their ditches by pulling down the banks of earth, they were filled up in a measure with their dead and wounded bodies.

verse 22 “they were swept off by the stones and arrows which were thrown at them” Again, see the commentary for Alma 49:4.

Apparently, the term “pass” here refers to the pathway down the “place of entrance.” It was this skillfully engineered defensive fortification that was the main object of the Lamanite army. It was here they concentrated their attack. They apparently used some type of device to try to excavate or dig into the banks of earth in order to gain entrance into the city. As they engaged themselves in this project they were easy targets for the Nephite soldiers within the city.

23 Thus the Nephites had all power over their enemies; and thus the Lamanites did attempt to destroy the Nephites until their chief captains were all slain; yea, and more than a thousand of the Lamanites were slain; while, on the other hand, there was not a single soul of the Nephites which was slain.

24 There were about fifty who were wounded, who had been exposed to the arrows of the Lamanites through the pass, but they were shielded by their shields, and their breastplates, and their head-plates, insomuch that their wounds were upon their legs, many of which were very severe.

verse 24 “their wounds were upon their legs” It is likely the Nephites avoided any armor that might restrict their mobility. The Nephite battles were battles of movement, and leg armor would restrict their movement. They had to move freely and quickly to survive. The Book of Mormon describes head-plates and breastplates and arm shields but no leg armor. Thus, the Nephite soldiers were wounded almost solely on their exposed legs.

25 And it came to pass, that when the Lamanites saw that their chief captains were all slain they fled into the wilderness. And it came to pass that they returned to the land of Nephi, to inform their king, Amalickiah, who was a Nephite by birth, concerning their great loss.

26 And it came to pass that he was exceedingly angry with his people, because he had not obtained his desire over the Nephites; he had not subjected them to the yoke of bondage.

27 Yea, he was exceedingly wroth, and he did curse God, and also Moroni, swearing with an oath that he would drink his blood; and this because Moroni had kept the commandments of God in preparing for the safety of his people.

verse 27 Amalickiah had been thwarted at every turn by this man Moroni. Foiled yet again, Amalickiah plunges into a monstrous rage and swears an awful and wicked oath—to drink the blood of Moroni.

28 And it came to pass, that on the other hand, the people of Nephi did thank the Lord their God, because of his matchless power in delivering them from the hands of their enemies.

29 And thus ended the nineteenth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi.

30 Yea, and there was continual peace among them, and exceedingly great prosperity in the church because of their heed and diligence which they gave unto the word of God, which was declared unto them by Helaman, and Shiblon, and Corianton, and Ammon and his brethren, yea, and by all those who had been ordained by the holy order of God, being baptized unto repentance, and sent forth to preach among the people.

verse 30 “all those who had been ordained by the holy order of God” Again, we have reference to the Melchizedek priesthood.

Alma Chapter 50

1 And now it came to pass that Moroni did not stop making preparations for war, or to defend his people against the Lamanites; for he caused that his armies should commence in the commencement of the twentieth year of the reign of the judges, that they should commence in digging up heaps of earth round about all the cities, throughout all the land which was possessed by the Nephites.

verse 1 Hugh Nibley comments:

Peace again brought prosperity (Alma 49:30), but Moroni was not idle. He launched out on an ambitious program of national fortifications, displaying his usual genius in the design and disposal of the strong places (Alma 50:1-6). First of all, it was necessary to remove a dangerous bulge or salient over on the east coast. [A military “salient” is a part of the battle line which bulges toward the enemy.] The area was cleared of Lamanites and settled by local people and colonists from Zarahemla (verses 7, 9). Thus, was Moroni able to shorten and straighten his defense line (verse 8) and having determined the best possible course for the line, he proceeded to fortify it along its entire length from the east [sea] . . . to the west sea (verses 9, 11), again employing not a single wall but a defense in depth, including even the founding of new fortified towns at strategically located places “by the borders” (verses 13-15). At the same time, he effected a gradual buildup of military power within the country (verse 10), though his principal concern was ever to keep the peace at home, knowing that it had “been their quarrelings, and their contentions . . . and their abominations, which were among themselves, which brought upon them their wars and their destructions” (verse 21) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 309-10).

2 And upon the top of these ridges of earth he caused that there should be timbers, yea, works of timbers built up to the height of a man, round about the cities.

3 And he caused that upon those works of timbers there should be a frame of pickets built upon the timbers round about; and they were strong and high.

verses 1-3 For a discussion of the nature of these Nephite defensive structures, see the commentary for Alma 49:18.

Pickets are sharpened or pointed stakes used for fortification.

4 And he caused towers to be erected that overlooked those works of pickets, and he caused places of security to be built upon those towers, that the stones and the arrows of the Lamanites could not hurt them.

verse 4 These strategically placed towers provided further protection as well as further offensive punch. See an illustration of these towers in the illustration, Place of Entrance.

5 And they were prepared that they could cast stones from the top thereof, according to their pleasure and their strength, and slay him who should attempt to approach near the walls of the city.

verse 5 To understand the fortification that made the casting of stones an especially effective defense strategy, see Alma 49:18 and its commentary.

6 Thus Moroni did prepare strongholds against the coming of their enemies, round about every city in all the land.

7 And it came to pass that Moroni caused that his armies should go forth into the east wilderness; yea, and they went forth and drove all the Lamanites who were in the east wilderness into their own lands, which were south of the land of Zarahemla.

8 And the land of Nephi did run in a straight course from the east sea to the west.

verse 8 That is, the northern border of the land of Nephi, the Lamanites' land, (and also the southern border of the greater land of Zarahemla) "did run a straight course from the east sea to the west."

Generally, it is accepted that straight is the correct modifier when straight modifies the word course and especially when it placed immediately contiguous to course (Reynolds and Skousen, "Strait and Narrow," 32). See the supplemental article, Strait and Straight in the Book of Mormon.

9 And it came to pass that when Moroni had driven all the Lamanites out of the east wilderness, which was north of the lands of their own possessions, he caused that the inhabitants who were in the land of Zarahemla and in the land round about should go forth into the east wilderness, even to the borders by the seashore, and possess the land.

verse 9 As we speak of the "land of Zarahemla," we might be speaking of the entire Nephite land from the southern border to the northern border with the land Desolation. Or we might be referring to the more limited land surrounding the city of Zarahemla. The former may be referred to as the "greater" land of Zarahemla. In this verse, the more limited land is intended.

Moroni organized colonizers from among those in and around the city of Zarahemla to settle and defend the Nephite cities in the east wilderness.

10 And he also placed armies on the south, in the borders of their possessions, and caused them to erect fortifications that they might secure their armies and their people from the hands of their enemies.

verse 10 The phrase “in the borders” means in the areas or territories near the borders. As the reader now well knows, the term borders might also refer to mountains (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 2:5).

11 And thus he cut off all the strongholds of the Lamanites in the east wilderness, yea, and also on the west, fortifying the line between the Nephites and the Lamanites, between the land of Zarahemla and the land of Nephi, from the west sea, running by the head of the river Sidon—the Nephites possessing all the land northward, yea, even all the land which was northward of the land Bountiful, according to their pleasure.

verse 11 “the line between the Nephites and the Lamanites, between the land of Zarahemla and the land of Nephi” This is the wilderness that ran east and west and divided the lands of Nephi on the south from the greater land of Zarahemla on the north. It ran from the sea east to the sea west. See the Hypothetical Map of the Book of Mormon Lands. See also Alma 22:27 and Alma 27:14.

“even all the land which was northward of the land Bountiful” Since the land Bountiful is located at the northernmost extremity of the Nephite land, this phrase might have more clearly stated “even all the land which was northward to the land Bountiful.”

12 Thus Moroni, with his armies, which did increase daily because of the assurance of protection which his works did bring forth unto them, did seek to cut off the strength and the power of the Lamanites from off the lands of their possessions, that they should have no power upon the lands of their possession.

verse 12 “his armies, which did increase daily because of the assurance of protection which his works did bring forth unto them” We will learn that the security and positive morale of Moroni’s soldiers was found, not so much in their ability to defeat their enemies, but in the faith that they would be “delivered at all times” if they kept “the commandments of the Lord” (verse 22). Moroni’s “works” were works of righteousness.

13 And it came to pass that the Nephites began the foundation of a city, and they called the name of the city Moroni; and it was by the east sea; and it was on the south by the line of the possessions of the Lamanites.

verse 13 Moroni seems to fit into the category of city which Hugh Nibley refers to as “sudden cities.” He points out that both Jaredite and Nephite cities did not necessarily have to evolve over a long time. Rather they were built all at one time: “A city would be planned and built all at one time, like a house. Cities were not the product of a slow gradual accretion from hamlet to village to town to city to metropolis . . . but, if we believe the Book of Mormon, they were built up all at once. Thus, we read that ‘the Nephites began the foundation of a city, and they called the name of the city Moroni . . . and they also began a foundation for a city between the city of Moroni and the city of Aaron . . . and they called the name of the city, or the land, Nephihah’ (Alma 50:13-14).” Brother Nibley also points to the fact that throughout much of the world’s history this is often the way cities have come into being (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, chapter 29, 411).

14 And they also began a foundation for a city between the city of Moroni and the city of Aaron, joining the borders of Aaron and Moroni; and they called the name of the city, or the land, Nephihah.

15 And they also began in that same year to build many cities on the north, one in a particular manner which they called Lehi, which was in the north by the borders of the seashore.

16 And thus ended the twentieth year.

17 And in these prosperous circumstances were the people of Nephi in the commencement of the twenty and first year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi.

18 And they did prosper exceedingly, and they became exceedingly rich; yea, and they did multiply and wax strong in the land.

verses 19-23 These following verses contain an editorial summary by Mormon in which he emphasizes the necessity of understanding the concept and process of making sacred covenants. It is abundantly clear that he wants us to maintain this vital perspective as we study these “captain Moroni chapters” or “war chapters” (Alma 43-62) in the Book of Mormon.

19 And thus we see how merciful and just are all the dealings of the Lord, to the fulfilling of all his words unto the children of men; yea, we can behold that his words are verified, even at this time, which he spake unto Lehi, saying:

verse 19 “And thus we see” This phrase seems to identify this verse’s editorial comment as having been written by Mormon. Grant R. Hardy and Robert E. Parsons commented on identifying the authorship of certain verses within the Book of Mormon. They observed:

Some passages can definitely be ascribed to Mormon: the abridgment of his contributions to the large plates (Mormon 1-7), his sermon and letters recorded by Moroni (Moroni 7-9), and the explanatory comments that he inserted into his narrative. In some of these interpolations he identifies himself (Words of Mormon; 3 Nephi 5:8-26; 26:6-12; 28:24; 4 Nephi 1:23), but it seems likely that the frequent ‘thus we see’ comments are also Mormon’s attempting to stress matters of particular spiritual importance to his readers (see also Alma 24:19, 27; 50:19-23; Helaman 3:27-30; 12:1-2) (Encyclopedia of Mormonism, volume 1, "Book of Mormon Plates and Records").

20 Blessed art thou and thy children; and they shall be blessed, inasmuch as they shall keep my commandments they shall prosper in the land. But remember, inasmuch as they will not keep my commandments they shall be cut off from the presence of the Lord.

verse 20 Here again is a restatement of the so-called "promise/curse" of the Book of Mormon.

21 And we see that these promises have been verified to the people of Nephi; for it has been their quarrelings and their contentions, yea, their murderings, and their plunderings, their idolatry, their whoredoms, and their abominations, which were among themselves, which brought upon them their wars and their destructions.

verse 21 Mormon lists the causes of wars and destructions among the Nephites. Actually, all are a form of pride or idolatry. See the discussion of idolatry in the commentary for Omni 1:20.

22 And those who were faithful in keeping the commandments of the Lord were delivered at all times, whilst thousands of their wicked brethren have been consigned to bondage, or to perish by the sword, or to dwindle in unbelief, and mingle with the Lamanites.

23 But behold there never was a happier time among the people of Nephi, since the days of Nephi, than in the days of Moroni, yea, even at this time, in the twenty and first year of the reign of the judges.

verses 22-23 Can a people maintain their righteousness and happiness even in an atmosphere of war and rumors of war? Apparently so!

24 And it came to pass that the twenty and second year of the reign of the judges also ended in peace; yea, and also the twenty and third year.

25 And it came to pass that in the commencement of the twenty and fourth year of the reign of the judges, there would also have been peace among the people of Nephi had it not been for a contention which took place among them concerning the land of Lehi, and the land of Morianton, which joined upon the borders of Lehi; both of which were on the borders by the seashore.

26 For behold, the people who possessed the land of Morianton did claim a part of the land of Lehi; therefore there began to be a warm contention between them, insomuch that the people of Morianton took up arms against their brethren, and they were determined by the sword to slay them.

27 But behold, the people who possessed the land of Lehi fled to the camp of Moroni, and appealed unto him for assistance; for behold they were not in the wrong.

28 And it came to pass that when the people of Morianton, who were led by a man whose name was Morianton, found that the people of Lehi had fled to the camp of Moroni, they were exceedingly fearful lest the army of Moroni should come upon them and destroy them.

29 Therefore, Morianton put it into their hearts that they should flee to the land which was northward, which was covered with large bodies of water, and take possession of the land which was northward.

verse 29 “they should flee to the land which was northward” Morianton sought to leave the Nephite land and settle north of the land Bountiful in the lands previously inhabited by the Jaredites.

30 And behold, they would have carried this plan into effect, (which would have been a cause to have been lamented) but behold, Morianton being a man of much passion, therefore he was angry with one of his maid servants, and he fell upon her and beat her much.

verse 30 “which would have been a cause to have been lamented” Why would the departure and resettling of the people of Morianton have been “a cause to have been lamented”? See the commentary for verse 32.

31 And it came to pass that she fled, and came over to the camp of Moroni, and told Moroni all things concerning the matter, and also concerning their intentions to flee into the land northward.

32 Now behold, the people who were in the land Bountiful, or rather Moroni, feared that they would hearken to the words of Morianton and unite with his people, and thus he would obtain possession of those parts of the land, which would lay a foundation for serious consequences among the people of Nephi, yea, which consequences would lead to the overthrow of their liberty.

verse 32 Both the people who were in the land Bountiful and Captain Moroni feared that the people in the lands north of Bountiful would enter into an agreement which would prove unfavorable to the Nephites. They felt this agreement might even “lay a foundation for serious consequences among the people of Nephi, yea, which consequences would lead to the overthrow of their liberty.” Why were Morianton and his people not allowed the freedom to leave Nephite lands? Why did there seem to be restrictive emigration laws which limited their travel? It seems likely that Moroni feared that Morianton would add to his supporters among the people north of Bountiful and thereby “lay a foundation for serious consequences.” Bountiful was a most important Nephite military base of that day. It was the northernmost and most important fortification of the northern border of Nephite territory during the days of Moroni. Its purpose was to restrict access to the land northward and to keep the Nephites from getting boxed in by the Lamanites or other enemies to the north (Alma 22:29, 33; 50:32-34; 51:28-32; 52:9; Helaman 1:23, 28; 4:6-7). Moroni feared that Morianton would enter into a political or military agreement with the people in the far north which would be potentially harmful to the Nephites.

33 Therefore Moroni sent an army, with their camp, to head the people of Morianton, to stop their flight into the land northward.

verse 33 To “head” is to intercept.

34 And it came to pass that they did not head them until they had come to the borders of the land Desolation; and there they did head them, by the narrow pass which led by the sea into the land northward, yea, by the sea, on the west and on the east.

verse 34 “narrow pass” Just exactly what is this “narrow pass” referred to here and elsewhere in the Book of Mormon (Alma 52:9, Mormon 2:29, and Mormon 3:5)? It is apparent from these verses of scripture, that the pass is not the same as the narrow neck of land itself. Rather the pass is some kind of specific feature of and within the neck itself. It is clear that parties passed near the city of Bountiful to gain access to this pass from the eastern seashore area. Here a Nephite army led by Teancum intercepted Morianton’s fleeing group just as both groups arrived at a very specific point: “the narrow pass which led by the sea into the land northward, yea, by the sea, on the west and on the east.” John L. Sorenson has provided a compelling solution to this puzzle. He suggests that the answer lies in a careful study of the specific geographic details of the isthmus of Tehuantepec (see the map, Book of Mormon Lands, a Proposed Setting and the supplemental article Book of Mormon Geography). Dr. Sorenson observes: “An irregular sandstone and gravel formation appears as a ridge averaging a couple of miles wide and rising 150 to 200 feet above the surrounding country running west from the lower Coatzacoalcos River.” This formation provides the only reliable year-round route from the east coast area of the land Bountiful “northward” into the land Desolation or to what is now Veracruz.

A great deal of land on either side of this ridge is flooded periodically, as much as twelve feet in the rainy season. At times during that season this ridge pass would indeed lead “by the sea, on the west and on the east” for the water in the flooded basins would be on both sides of the ridge and would have barred travel as effectively as the sea with which the flood waters were continuous. Even in the dry season, the lower terrain is choked with thorny brush, laced with lagoons, and rendered impractical as a customary route. This formation runs from near Minatitlan, the modern city on the verse 35 We will become quite well acquainted with this exceptionally brave Nephite captain, Teancum, in the ensuing chapters. It is perhaps no coincidence that his name is similar to a Quiche Mayan hero, captain Tecum, who fought against the Spanish intruders in AD 1524 (A. Brent Merrill, “Nephite Captains and Armies” in Warfare in the Book of Mormon, edited by Stephen D. Ricks and William J. Hamblin, 267). Tecum lived in Guatemala, probably near the site of the Book of Mormon City of Nephi.

35 And it came to pass that the army which was sent by Moroni, which was led by a man whose name was Teancum, did meet the people of Morianton; and so stubborn were the people of Morianton, (being inspired by his wickedness and his flattering words) that a battle commenced between them, in the which Teancum did slay Morianton and defeat his army, and took them prisoners, and returned to the camp of Moroni. And thus ended the twenty and fourth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi.

36 And thus were the people of Morianton brought back. And upon their covenanting to keep the peace they were restored to the land of Morianton, and a union took place between them and the people of Lehi; and they were also restored to their lands.

verse 36 Here, the phrase “people of Lehi” refers to the Nephites in the land of Nephi with whom they had previously contended.

37 And it came to pass that in the same year that the people of Nephi had peace restored unto them, that Nephihah, the second chief judge, died, having filled the judgment-seat with perfect uprightness before God.

38 Nevertheless, he had refused Alma to take possession of those records and those things which were esteemed by Alma and his fathers to be most sacred; therefore Alma had conferred them upon his son, Helaman.

verse 38 Alma previously had turned over the office of chief judge to Nephihah so Alma could concentrate on his priestly duties (Alma 4:11-18). In this verse, for the first time, we learn an interesting detail of Alma’s selection of Nephihah to be chief judge. We learn that Alma attempted to pass on the regalia of his office, including the sword of Laban, to Nephihah, possibly as a way of reinforcing Nephihah’s civil authority and uniting the people behind him. Nephihah had refused to accept these objects, and consequently Alma later gave them to his son, Helaman. With the sword of Laban in his possession, Helaman reestablished the church, served as high priest, and became the great military commander who led the two thousand stripling warriors (Alma 45:22; 46:6; 53:18-22; 56). Thereafter, the priestly regalia were passed on and kept continuously by the religious leaders. It is apparent that the man who had possession of the sword of Laban was looked upon by the people as having authority.

39 Behold, it came to pass that the son of Nephiah was appointed to fill the judgment-seat, in the stead of his father; yea, he was appointed chief judge and governor over the people, with an oath and sacred ordinance to judge righteously, and to keep the peace and the freedom of the people, and to grant unto them their sacred privileges to worship the Lord their God, yea, to support and maintain the cause of God all his days, and to bring the wicked to justice according to their crime.

verse 39 It has been pointed out that the Nephite government, while a fair and righteous government, was not a democracy or anything like unto it.

The chief judge much more resembled a king than an American president. Once elected, he never again submitted himself to the people. After being proclaimed chief judge by the voice of the people, Alma enjoyed life tenure. When he chose to resign because of internal difficulties he selected his own successor (see Alma 4:16). . . In the next succession, the judgeship passed to the chief judge's son and thence "by right" to the successive sons of the Judges (see Alma 50:39; Helaman 1:13).

Looking at the Book of Mormon as a whole, it seems clear that most of the principles traditionally associated with the American Constitution are slighted or disregarded altogether. All of the constitutional checks and balances are missing. When Judges were instituted, Mosiah provided that a greater judge could remove lesser judges. Also, a certain number of lesser judges were empowered to try venal [open to bribery or other corruption] higher judges, but the book records no instance of impeachment. It was apparently not a routine working principle. All other limitations on government are missing. There was no written constitution defining ruler's powers. The people could not remove the chief judge at the polls, for he stood for election only once. There were not three branches of government to check one another, for a single office encompassed all government powers. The chief judge was judge, executive, and legislator rolled into one, just as the earlier kings had been (see Mosiah 29:13). In war time he raised men, armed them, and collected provisions (see Alma 46:34; 60:1-9). He was called interchangeably chief judge and governor (see Alma 2:16; 50:39; 60:1; and 3 Nephi 3:1). He was also lawmaker. There is no ordinary legislature in the Book of Mormon. Alma gave Nephiah the "power to enact laws according to the laws which had been given" (Alma 4:16). Any major constitutional changes, such as a return to formal kingship, so far as the record speaks, was the prerogative of the chief judge (see Alma 2:2-7; 51:1-7) (Richard L. Bushman, BYU Studies, volume 17, number 1, 14, 16).

40 Now behold, his name was Pahoran. And Pahoran did fill the seat of his father, and did commence his reign in the end of the twenty and fourth year, over the people of Nephi.

verse 40 The time of transition from one leader to another is a logical time for the opposition to rise up and oppose the new leader—wanting instead a different leader or an alternate form of government. We will learn that in this case the opposition, the “king-men,” do indeed rise up in opposition.

An interesting side note—Pahoran’s name probably should be spelled Parhoron. In the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon, the first four occurrences of this name were spelled Parhoron (see also Alma 52:2-3). There is good evidence to suggest that as Joseph came to unfamiliar proper names in his translating of the Book of Mormon, he spelled them out for the scribe (see The Process of Translating the Book of Mormon in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, Appendix A).

Alma Chapter 51

In this chapter, we will encounter two groups, the “king-men” and the “freemen.” We have discussed these previously. Please review that discussion in the introductory commentary for Alma 46 before proceeding.

1 And now it came to pass in the commencement of the twenty and fifth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi, they having established peace between the people of Lehi and the people of Morianton concerning their lands, and having commenced the twenty and fifth year in peace;

2 Nevertheless, they did not long maintain an entire peace in the land, for there began to be a contention among the people concerning the chief judge Pahoran; for behold, there were a part of the people who desired that a few particular points of the law should be altered.

verse 2 “there began to be a contention among the people concerning the chief judge Pahoran” This contention, as we will learn, was created by those of the elite class, the “king-men,” who have decided it would be in their best interest to change the form of Nephite government, by law, to a monarchy (verses 4-5). They have resolved to make a concerted effort toward this end. The opposition to this dangerous movement was led by the chief judge Pahoran, who “would not alter nor suffer the law to be altered” (verses 2-3). Pahoran was supported in this by a party calling themselves the “freemen” (verse 6). An election will be held with the result that: “the voice of the people came in favor of the freemen” (Alma 51:7).

Hugh Nibley added:

But the royalists had not played all their cards; their agitation had been timed to coincide with a move from the direction of their banished leader Amalickiah, who “had again stirred up the . . . Lamanites . . . and [was] preparing for war with all diligence” (Alma 51:9). Counting on Amalickiah’s aid, the beaten party “were glad in their hearts” of his approach, and “refused to take up arms” to resist it, being “wroth with the chief judge, and also with the people of liberty” who had given them a setback (Alma 51:13) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 311).

3 But behold, Pahoran would not alter nor suffer the law to be altered; therefore, he did not hearken to those who had sent in their voices with their petitions concerning the altering of the law.

verse 3 “Pahoran would not alter nor suffer the law to be altered” When “Pahoran would not alter nor suffer the law to be altered,” we will learn that the king-men “were desirous that Pahoran should be dethroned from the judgment-seat” (verse 5). On the other hand, those who supported Pahoran “took upon them the name of freemen; and thus was the division among them, for the freemen had sworn or covenanted to maintain their rights and the privileges of their religion by a free government” (verse 6).

While modern societies typically view laws as provisional products of human creation, ancient civilizations often saw them as immutable decrees publically promulgated and sent forth by divinely appointed rulers (See John W. Welch, The Legal Cases in the Book of Mormon, Provo UT: BYU Press and Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2008, 12–13; Noel B. Reynolds, “Nephite Kingship Reconsidered,” in Mormons, Scripture, and the Ancient World: Studies in Honor of John L. Sorenson, ed. Davis Bitten, Provo UT: FARMS, 1998, 151–189; Jeffrey M. Bradshaw and Ronan James Head, “The Investiture Panel at Mari and Rituals of Divine Kingship in the Ancient Near East,” Studies in the Bible and Antiquity 4, 2012: 1–2, 25–28; Brant A. Gardner, Traditions of the Fathers: The Book of Mormon as History, Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2015, 267–268; Stephen Houston and David Stuart, “Of Gods, Glyphs and Kings: Divinity and Rulership among the Classic Maya,” Antiquity 70, no. 268, 1996: 289–312). Moses, for example, received the Ten Commandments upon “tables of stone, written with the finger of God” (Exodus 31:18), which in turn were covenantally accepted by the people (For other examples of writing delivered by the hand of the Lord, see Alma 10:2 and Daniel 5:5, 24–28).

That these divinely etched tablets were to be transported and memorialized in a sacred vessel, known as the ark of the covenant, only solidified their physical and symbolic permanence (see Exodus 25:10–16) (See John A. Tvedtnes, The Book of Mormon and Other Hidden Books: Out of Darkness Unto Light, Provo UT: FARMS, 2000, 33–35; H. Curtis Wright, “Ancient Burials of Metal Documents in Stone Boxes,” in By Study and Also by Faith: Essays in Honor of Hugh W. Nibley, vol. 2, ed. John M. Lundquist and Stephen D. Ricks, Salt Lake City and Provo UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1990, 273–334). Other ancient societies similarly wrote on non-perishable materials, such as stone or metal, in order to establish the durability of laws, treaties, or decrees (See William J. Hamblin, “Sacred Writing on Metal Plates in the Ancient Mediterranean,” FARMS Review 19, no. 1, 2007: 37–54; Tvedtnes, Book of Mormon and Other Hidden Books, 145–154).

John W. Welch explained, “Accordingly, in the ancient world, law was much more than a matter of pragmatic policy or economic regulation. Law was an expression of the divine will, the highest ideals of a civilization, the necessary order of life, and the fundamental substance of justice and reality” (Welch, Legal Cases, 13).

Understanding that ancient peoples typically held their laws “in the highest esteem possible” may help explain why Pahoran and his freemen were so opposed to the king-men’s effort to alter the law (Welch, Legal Cases, 13).

Furthermore, ancient law was typically perceived as a binding component of a covenantal relationship (Rose Ann Benson and Stephen D. Ricks, “Treaties and Covenants: Ancient Near Eastern Legal Terminology in the Book of Mormon,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 14, no. 1, 2005: 48–61, 128–29; Stephen D. Ricks, “Kingship, Coronation, and Covenant in Mosiah 1–6,” in King Benjamin’s Speech: “That Ye May Learn Wisdom,” ed. John W. Welch and Stephen D. Ricks, Provo UT: FARMS, 1998), 233–275). The stated reason for the freemen’s support for retaining their current law was that they had “sworn or covenanted to maintain their rights and the privileges of their religion” (Alma 51:6). This likely refers most directly to their covenant to uphold Moroni’s title of liberty (Alma 46:19–21), but it also may reflect an earlier commitment to support the laws and government Mosiah established (Mosiah 29:37–39).

Recognizing that legal statutes in the ancient world were often seen as permanent, divinely inspired, and covenant-related can help readers better contextualize the political factionalism found in Alma 51. This dispute was about far more than a suggested alteration of legal minutiae. Rather, the king-men’s radical proposal to reverse King Mosiah’s inspired system of judges would have encroached upon both political and religious fundamental norms and freedoms.

Unfortunately, the modern world faces similar threats to culturally crucial and religiously sacred freedoms. Elder D. Todd Christofferson concluded: “My friends and fellow citizens, we live in challenging times. Religious freedom is indeed under fire. And things may get worse before they get better. But these are our times. This is our moment to defend our fundamental freedoms. With courage, conviction, and civility . . . each one of us can make a profound difference” (D. Todd Christofferson, “Religious Freedom—A Cherished Heritage to Defend,” a Freedom Festival speech, June 26, 2016, online at lds.org).

We will learn that in their perilous circumstances, and in the context of ancient laws associated with religious covenants, Moroni was granted legal permission from the governor and the voice of the people “to compel those dissenters” to carry out their legal obligation “to defend their country,” (Alma 51:15). When those dissenters “did lift up their weapons of war to fight against the men of Moroni” (verse 18), many were killed but the rest were given a choice, either to simply yield “to the standard of liberty” (verse 20) or to be held in long-term prison under threat of death until eventually there would be time for their trials (verse 19).

Modern Latter-day Saints and patriots of other faiths see the established laws, rights, and duties of the United States Constitution, as well as many other similarly modeled constitutions or freedom-enabling governments, as being divinely inspired and consonant with God’s will (see D&C 101:76–80). While legal changes can and must occur in all societies, those modifications do not justifiably occur by civil disobedience and political opportunism. Therefore, like the freemen in Pahoran’s day, all people who are so benefited are similarly and naturally obligated to defend their fundamental rights and privileges by following the guidance of patriotic leaders in carrying out the righteous will of the “voice of the people” (Alma 51:7).

4 Therefore, those who were desirous that the law should be altered were angry with him, and desired that he should no longer be chief judge over the land; therefore there arose a warm dispute concerning the matter, but not unto bloodshed.

5 And it came to pass that those who were desirous that Pahoran should be dethroned from the judgment-seat were called king-men, for they were desirous that the law should be altered in a manner to overthrow the free government and to establish a king over the land.

verse 5 The “king-men” apparently regarded themselves as having been disinherited or disenfranchised when Mosiah abolished the kingship. The king-men are not necessarily of Nephite descent. They seem to constitute a distinct population with cultural features and a territory all their own. Perhaps they descended from Jaredite or Mulekite ancestry or from some other indigenous culture. John L. Sorenson wrote of them: “The king-men, inhabited a distinct region, for when Moroni ‘commanded that his army should go against those king-men,’ they were ‘hewn down’ and compelled to fly the ‘title of liberty’ standard ‘in their cities’ (Alma 51:17-20). This language confirms that they, like the Amlicites, had a base territory of their own and that it was a significant distance from the city of Zarahemla. Again, quite surely, it lay downriver” (“When Lehi’s Party Arrived in the Land, Did They Find Others There?” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, volume 1, number 1, 16-17).

It is interesting that the archaeological records of Mesoamerica state that in the first century BC, a group of elite in Mesoamerica began to rally for control. By AD 200 their influence was much stronger. Years later, during the classic Mayan period, which extended to the tenth century AD, the elite hierarchy ruled totally in Mesoamerica (Joseph L. Allen, Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon, 276).

6 And those who were desirous that Pahoran should remain chief judge over the land took upon them the name of freemen; and thus was the division among them, for the freemen had sworn or covenanted to maintain their rights and the privileges of their religion by a free government.

verse 6 As opposed to the “king-men” who were the moneyed elite, the “freemen” were the common people who supported the government of the Nephites. The label “freemen” did not designate a political party or organization, rather it simply denoted the body of common citizens supporting Pahoran. They obviously also had a religious conviction in common as they “had sworn or covenanted to maintain their rights and the privileges of their religion by a free government.”

7 And it came to pass that this matter of their contention was settled by the voice of the people. And it came to pass that the voice of the people came in favor of the freemen, and Pahoran retained the judgment-seat, which caused much rejoicing among the brethren of Pahoran and also many of the people of liberty, who also put the king-men to silence, that they durst not oppose but were obliged to maintain the cause of freedom.

verse 7 “Pahoran retained the judgment-seat, which caused much rejoicing among the brethren of Pahoran and also many of the people of liberty” An interesting error was made in the transcription of this phrase which caused a subtle change in its meaning. The original manuscript stated that Pahoran’s victory “caused much rejoicing among the brethren of Pahoran and also among the people of liberty.” When Oliver was copying this phrase from the original manuscript onto the printer’s manuscript, he made an error. Instead of writing the word among he wrote the word many. Thus the printer’s manuscript then read: “which caused much rejoicing among the brethren of Pahoran and also many the people of liberty.” When the printer tried to read this, he saw that it wasn’t good English; and so he wrote in pencil right above many the word of, so that when he set the type he put in: “which caused much rejoicing among the brethren of Pahoran and also many of the people of liberty.” Thus, the phrase as it now reads implies that not all of the people of liberty rejoiced at the retention of Pahoran. This was not the intent of the phrase in the original manuscript (Royal Skousen, “The Critical Text of the Book of Mormon,” a FARMS reprint).

8 Now those who were in favor of kings were those of high birth, and they sought to be kings; and they were supported by those who sought power and authority over the people.

9 But behold, this was a critical time for such contentions to be among the people of Nephi; for behold, Amalickiah had again stirred up the hearts of the people of the Lamanites against the people of the Nephites, and he was gathering together soldiers from all parts of his land, and arming them, and preparing for war with all diligence; for he had sworn to drink the blood of Moroni.

10 But behold, we shall see that his promise which he made was rash; nevertheless, he did prepare himself and his armies to come to battle against the Nephites.

verse 10 “that his promise” Critical evaluation of the original Book of Mormon text has revealed that this phrase is a case of accidentally dropping one of two adjacent t’s, which changed “that this promise” in the original manuscript to “that his promise” in the printer’s manuscript. All the printed editions have followed the error.

11 Now his armies were not so great as they had hitherto been, because of the many thousands who had been slain by the hand of the Nephites; but notwithstanding their great loss, Amalickiah had gathered together a wonderfully great army, insomuch that he feared not to come down to the land of Zarahemla.

verse 11 “Amalickiah had gathered together a wonderfully great army” As this phrase implies, the armies of the Lamanites were impressively large in numbers (see also Alma 2:24, 28; 49:6; Helaman 1:19). John L. Sorenson had observed: “Such a large population is even more difficult to account for by natural increase of the original Laman-Lemuel faction [to a greater degree] than in the case of Nephi’s group, for the eventual Lamanite absolute numbers are disproportionately high. None of this demographic picture makes sense unless ‘others’ had become part of the Lamanite economy and polity” (John L. Sorenson, “When Lehi’s Party Arrived in the Land, Did They Find Others There?” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, 28).

12 Yea, even Amalickiah did himself come down, at the head of the Lamanites. And it was in the twenty and fifth year of the reign of the judges; and it was at the same time that they had begun to settle the affairs of their contentions concerning the chief judge, Pahoran.

13 And it came to pass that when the men who were called king-men had heard that the Lamanites were coming down to battle against them, they were glad in their hearts; and they refused to take up arms, for they were so wroth with the chief judge, and also with the people of liberty, that they would not take up arms to defend their country.

14 And it came to pass that when Moroni saw this, and also saw that the Lamanites were coming into the borders of the land, he was exceedingly wroth because of the stubbornness of those people whom he had labored with so much diligence to preserve; yea, he was exceedingly wroth; his soul was filled with anger against them.

verse 14 Moroni is incensed by this elitist dissension in time of national crisis, and he will seek and obtain “power to compel those dissenters to defend their country or to put them to death. For it was his first care to put an end to such contentions and dissensions among the people; for behold, this had been hitherto a cause of all their destruction” (Alma 51:15-16).

We learn an interesting lesson from Moroni. It is obvious that he was long suffering and not easily provoked. He only resorted to slaying dissenters when the dissenters had undertaken to do something that immediately and seriously threatened the lives and liberties of the righteous innocent who would not agree with the dissenters. For example, he had not used military force against Amalickiah until Amalickiah had departed with his followers for the land of Nephi, where he intended to (and later did) strengthen the armies of the Lamanites and stir them up to attack the Nephites (Alma 46:30-31). Likewise, Moroni had not used force against Morianton until he attempted to lead his dissenting people to another land which, under the circumstances of the time, would have “serious consequences among the people of Nephi, yea which . . . would lead to the overthrow of their liberty” (Alma 50:32). Again, as stated in this verse, Moroni did not use military force against the king-men until “the Lamanites were coming into the borders of the land” (see Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, “Dissent: Perspectives from the Book of Mormon,” 63).

15 And it came to pass that he sent a petition, with the voice of the people, unto the governor of the land, desiring that he should read it, and give him (Moroni) power to compel those dissenters to defend their country or to put them to death.

verse 15 “desiring that he should read it” One point of some interest but little importance is that the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon rendered this phrase as, “desiring that he should heed it.”

16 For it was his first care to put an end to such contentions and dissensions among the people; for behold, this had been hitherto a cause of all their destruction. And it came to pass that it was granted according to the voice of the people.

verse 16 Indeed dissention “had been hitherto” and would yet be “a cause of all their destruction.” Lynn D. Wardle has commented upon the phenomenon of dissent in the Book of Mormon:

Every reference to dissent portrays it as a problem, an evil condition, and a harbinger of even greater problems and evils. For example, [the younger] Alma was “a great hinderment to the prosperity of the church of God” because he “[caused] much dissension among the people” (Mosiah 27:9); the dissenters who joined the Lamanites “cause[d] much sorrow unto those Nephites who did remain in the land” (3 Nephi 1:28); dissent and intrigue caused the loss of Nephite land and cities (Alma 53:8); iniquity and dissensions caused the Nephites to be “placed in the most dangerous of circumstances” (Alma 53:9; 46:7). Frequently, the Book of Mormon notes that dissension directly led to war. Often it was the dissenters from the Nephites who “stirred up to anger” the Lamanites against the Nephites and caused them to “[commence] a war with their brethren” (Helaman 4:4; 11:24; see also Alma 46-47). The Gadianton robbers existed because of, and their success depended upon, “dissenters that went forth unto them” (Helaman 11:25; 3 Nephi 2:18; 7:12). It is no wonder that Mormon declared that contention among the Nephites was “a cause of all their destruction” (“Dissent: Perspectives from the Book of Mormon” in Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, 55).

17 And it came to pass that Moroni commanded that his army should go against those king-men, to pull down their pride and their nobility and level them with the earth, or they should take up arms and support the cause of liberty.

18 And it came to pass that the armies did march forth against them; and they did pull down their pride and their nobility, insomuch that as they did lift their weapons of war to fight against the men of Moroni they were hewn down and leveled to the earth.

verse 18 These supporters of Amalickiah have been portrayed as pacifists, and it has been suggested by some that Moroni was a bit too harsh in dealing with them. Hugh Nibley has pointed out:

The fiction has been diligently cultivated that Moroni on this occasion put all the pacifists to death. Those put to death were not those who had refused to take up arms to defend their country, but those who had taken up arms to attack it and who were on their way to join the enemy across the border, glad in their hearts when they heard that the Lamanites were coming down to battle against their country; they were dissenters to the enemy. Pacifists? They were all members of Amalickiah's army, armed to their teeth on their way to join the enemy when Moroni caught them. Armed violence, not pacifism, had been their program from the beginning. We can sum up the issue by referring to Alma 51:17: "And it came to pass that Moroni commanded that his army should go against those king-men, to pull down their pride and their nobility and level them with the earth, or they should take up arms and support the cause of liberty." It was a coalition of the important people, the persons who lifted the sword to fight against Moroni; it was a pitched battle, not an execution. If you had arms in your hands and were fighting, then if you didn't lay them down, if you didn't surrender (as in any war), you had to suffer the consequences. "Insomuch that as they did lift their weapons of war to fight against the men of Moroni they were hewn down. . . And those of their leaders who were not slain in battle were taken and cast into prison" (Alma 51:18-19) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 9, 98).

19 And it came to pass that there were four thousand of those dissenters who were hewn down by the sword; and those of their leaders who were not slain in battle were taken and cast into prison, for there was no time for their trials at this period.

verse 19 It is certain that Moroni understood the limitations of using force against these king-men followers of Amalickiah. It is for this reason that he used force only as a last resort. He knew that coercion and force would never convert their consciences. By force he could stop the dissenters from doing irreparable damage to the Nephite people, but he knew the sword would never lead to repentance and conversion. These are matters of conscience. Because the conscience virtually always revolts when force is applied, force is ineffective in reclaiming dissenters.

"those of their leaders who were not slain in battle were taken and cast into prison, for there was no time for their trials at this period" Obviously, there were periods when martial law was imposed in the Nephite society.

20 And the remainder of those dissenters, rather than be smitten down to the earth by the sword, yielded to the standard of liberty, and were compelled to hoist the title of liberty upon their towers, and in their cities, and to take up arms in defense of their country.

verse 20 “upon their towers” See the commentary on “towers” in Omni 1:22.

21 And thus Moroni put an end to those king-men, that there were not any known by the appellation of king-men; and thus he put an end to the stubbornness and the pride of those people who professed the blood of nobility; but they were brought down to humble themselves like unto their brethren, and to fight valiantly for their freedom from bondage.

verse 21 We may note here that those followers of Amalickiah who surrendered rather than be killed, were dealt with mercifully by Moroni. They were not executed for treason. They were only required henceforth to “fight valiantly for their freedom from bondage.”

22 Behold, it came to pass that while Moroni was thus breaking down the wars and contentions among his own people, and subjecting them to peace and civilization, and making regulations to prepare for war against the Lamanites, behold, the Lamanites had come into the land of Moroni, which was in the borders by the seashore.

23 And it came to pass that the Nephites were not sufficiently strong in the city of Moroni; therefore Amalickiah did drive them, slaying many. And it came to pass that Amalickiah took possession of the city, yea, possession of all their fortifications.

24 And those who fled out of the city of Moroni came to the city of Nephihah; and also the people of the city of Lehi gathered themselves together, and made preparations and were ready to receive the Lamanites to battle.

25 But it came to pass that Amalickiah would not suffer the Lamanites to go against the city of Nephihah to battle, but kept them down by the seashore, leaving men in every city to maintain and defend it.

26 And thus he went on, taking possession of many cities, the city of Nephihah, and the city of Lehi, and the city of Morianton, and the city of Omner, and the city of Gid, and the city of Mulek, all of which were on the east borders by the seashore.

verse 26 “the city of Nephihah” It is likely that the mentioning of Nephihah in this verse as one of the conquered cities is an error. The previous verse suggests that Amalickiah flanked Nephihah because of its heavy fortifications. Also, we know that Nephihah was captured much later (see Alma 58:61). It would seem most likely that this error was made by the editor Mormon rather than by the primary author.

27 And thus had the Lamanites obtained, by the cunning of Amalickiah, so many cities, by their numberless hosts, all of which were strongly fortified after the manner of the fortifications of Moroni; all of which afforded strongholds for the Lamanites.

28 And it came to pass that they marched to the borders of the land Bountiful, driving the Nephites before them and slaying many.

verse 28 Hugh Nibley has contributed a colorful description of this “blitzkrieg” campaign of Amalickiah’s:

Amalickiah . . . was leading his greatest army yet into the weakest parts of the land and sweeping all before him. Bypassing the strongest places, he flanked the Nephites along the coast in a lightning move that knocked out the weaker fortified places one after another and sent the occupants fleeing like sheep from one collapsing fortification to the next as he “went on, taking possession of many cities” (Alma 51:26-28). It was a well-executed operation that spread panic and converted many of Moroni’s strong places into Lamanite bases (Alma 51:27). Then the inevitable happened. The Lamanites in their forward rush having overextended themselves met an unpleasant rebuff when their spearhead was blunted by a flanking blow of the wily Teancum, who after bringing their advance guard to a halt continued to harass the army with his highly trained and highly mobile troops (Alma 51:31). Then on a two-man night patrol such as able and enterprising generals sometimes fancy, Teancum himself slipped into Amalickiah’s tent and killed him in his sleep, after which he hurried back to his own headquarters and alerted his forces to an expected enemy attack at dawn (Alma 51:33-36) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 312-13).

29 But it came to pass that they were met by Teancum, who had slain Morianton and had headed his people in his flight.

verse 29 “who had slain Morianton and had headed his people in his flight” Again, the verb to “head” means to head-off or to intercept.

30 And it came to pass that he headed Amalickiah also, as he was marching forth with his numerous army that he might take possession of the land Bountiful, and also the land northward.

verse 30 Again we are reminded of the vital strategic importance of the city of Bountiful. It was the northernmost and most important fortification of the northern border of Nephite territory during the days of Moroni. Bountiful defended the “narrow pass” that led to the land northward (see the discussion of the “narrow pass” in the commentary for Alma 50:34). Bountiful’s military purpose was to restrict access to the land northward and to keep the Nephites from getting boxed in by the Lamanites or other enemies on the north (Alma 22:29, 33; 50:32-34; 51:28-32; 52:9; Helaman 1:23, 28; 4:6-7). At this time Moroni feared that Amalickiah would enter into a political or military agreement with the people in the far north which would be potentially harmful to the Nephites.

31 But behold he met with a disappointment by being repulsed by Teancum and his men, for they were great warriors; for every man of Teancum did exceed the Lamanites in their strength and in their skill of war, insomuch that they did gain advantage over the Lamanites.

32 And it came to pass that they did harass them, insomuch that they did slay them even until it was dark. And it came to pass that Teancum and his men did pitch their tents in the borders of the land Bountiful; and Amalickiah did pitch his tents in the borders on the beach by the seashore, and after this manner were they driven.

33 And it came to pass that when the night had come, Teancum and his servant stole forth and went out by night, and went into the camp of Amalickiah; and behold, sleep had overpowered them because of their much fatigue, which was caused by the labors and heat of the day.

34 And it came to pass that Teancum stole privily into the tent of the king, and put a javelin to his heart; and he did cause the death of the king immediately that he did not awake his servants.

verse 34 “Privily” means secretly or privately.

There is no indication in the text as to how the Lamanite camp was laid out. Possibly the commander’s tent was placed somewhere near the center of the camp, in a manner similar to those of ancient Israel. If this were the case, then Teancum’s killing of Amalickiah is even a more significant act than it first appears. Teancum was obviously a man of great courage, with a strong and independent spirit (A. Brent Merrill, “Nephite Captains and Armies” in Warfare in the Book of Mormon, edited by Stephen D. Ricks and William J. Hamblin, 274).

35 And he returned again privily to his own camp, and behold, his men were asleep, and he awoke them and told them all the things that he had done.

36 And he caused that his armies should stand in readiness, lest the Lamanites had awakened and should come upon them.

37 And thus endeth the twenty and fifth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi; and thus endeth the days of Amalickiah.

verse 37 Here, Mormon dramatically reports that this was the final night of the twenty-fifth year of the reign of the judges. The next morning, New Year’s day, the Lamanites awoke to find that “Amalickiah was dead in his own tent; and . . . Teancum was ready to give them battle on that day” (Alma 52:1). The Lamanites “were affrighted,” retreated into a stronghold they had conquered from the Nephites, and appointed Ammoron, Amalickiah’s brother, as king (verses 2–3).

The timing of this event was significant. In ancient Israel, where people were obligated to keep close track of the days of the months and years (see Leviticus 23), the New Year was traditionally celebrated as “a day of coronation of divine and earthly kings, a day of victory over chaos, a day of renewal of covenant and the reenactment of the king’s enthronement. . . . This was the day when the king should have ceremonially conquered death and been re-enthroned!” (Robert F. Smith and Stephen D. Ricks, “New Year’s Celebrations,” in Reexploring the Book of Mormon: A Decade of New Research, ed. John W. Welch, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1992, 209).

Taylor Halverson noted, “In the ancient Near Eastern culture, . . . New Year’s Day was the time when the king of the land would sally forth to demonstrate his vitality and liveliness to successfully rule as a king for another year” (Taylor Halverson, “In Cover of Darkness and the Turning of the New Year,” Deseret News, January 1, 2015, online at deseretnews.com). As one can imagine, awaking to find the king dead on such a day could not be a good sign. In fact, it was almost certainly interpreted by the Lamanites as a bad omen.

John L. Sorenson explained that, in Mesoamerica, “Omens were regularly sought and frequently were tied to the events of the last, or first, day [of the year].” As such, “It would be highly characteristic of Mesoamericans to act as the Lamanites did upon the death of Amalickiah. To awaken on the first day of a new year to find their leader dead would have been far more unnerving to their omen-conscious feelings than we moderns may appreciate” (John L. Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1985, 275. Also see A. Brent Merrill, “Nephite Captains and Armies,” in Warfare in the Book of Mormon, ed. Stephen D. Ricks and William J. Hamblin, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1990, 275; John L. Sorenson, “The Book of Mormon as a Mesoamerican Record,” in Book of Mormon Authorship Revisited: The Evidence for Ancient Origins, ed. Noel B. Reynolds, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1997, 410; John L. Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex: An Ancient American Book, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 2013, 194, 441).

Allen J. Christensen documented “that as part of their New Year’s rites, ancient Maya kings engaged in ritual combat with evil lords who resided in the north.” Christensen continued, “Their legitimacy and the continued survival of their kingdoms depended on the successful defeat of these powerful adversaries.” These rites can be “traced continuously in time to at least the Late Preclassic period,” placing it squarely within the time of Teancum and Amalickiah.

It is therefore no accident that the Lamanite king Amalickiah chose New Year's to engage the Nephites in battle (Alma 51:32–52:1). The Nephite general Teancum took advantage of the situation by slaying Amalickiah on New Year's Eve, precisely when the underworld lords would have been believed to be their strongest. When the Lamanites awoke the following morning, expecting a divinely sanctioned victory, they found instead their king and protector dead. It is no wonder, then, that they fled in terror (All quotes from Christenson come from Allen J. Christenson, "Maya Harvest Festivals and the Book of Mormon," Review of Books on the Book of Mormon 3, 1991: 30. Also see Allen J. Christenson, "The Dance of First Beginnings: Contemporary Maya Creation Rituals in a World Context," BYU Studies 39, no. 2, 2000: 150–172).

Halverson felt that this story illustrated the importance of minute details. "The seemingly small details in the text of the Book of Mormon matter" (Halverson, "In Cover of Darkness"). The exact date of the event is a seemingly minor point, but Mormon goes out of his way to include it. It must have been important. No better day could have been chosen by Teancum for his slaying to have the maximum amount of negative impact on Lamanite morale.

Given the ancient Old and New World backgrounds, it seems likely that Teancum deliberately chose New Year's Eve for his nocturnal assassination. Daniel C. Peterson reasoned, "Given the importance of ancient kings for guaranteeing prosperity, good harvests and the proper order of the cosmos, and given their central role in military conflicts . . . the sudden loss of a king at the beginning of the New Year could be psychologically traumatic and disorienting, if not lethal" (Daniel C. Peterson, "May Your New Year Begin Better Than Amalickiah's," Deseret News, December 29, 2011, online at deseretnews.com). Halverson agreed: "A dead king was the sure sign of a disastrous future."

Hence, no act could be more psychologically demoralizing to an opposing army than to find their king dead on New Year's Day. Teancum chose New Year's Eve to assassinate Amalickiah. He sought to win a massive psychological victory against the Lamanites by sending a message of disaster, despair and fear (Halverson, "In Cover of Darkness").

This is one of many examples that illustrate the importance for modern readers to not only pay attention to, but to investigate with heightened interest, the seemingly trivial and yet often unexpectedly significant information in the Book of Mormon text.

Teancum will now strengthen his own positions by digging in and awaiting reinforcements from Moroni (Alma 52:6-7). We will learn, however, that Moroni was pinned down on the west coast and could offer little assistance. Hugh Nibley added:

The Nephites with their inferior numbers were being forced to fight that kind of a war that all commanders dread—a war on two fronts. Ammoron, the brother and successor of Amalickiah, made the most of this advantage to himself and sent a strong diversionary force to occupy Moroni and if possible split the Nephite forces even more, while harassing them everywhere and keeping them off-balance by sallies and infiltrations from the numerous former Nephite strong places now held by the Lamanites (Alma 52:11-13) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 313).

It is of further interest to note that Teancum killed Amalickiah on the last day of the year (see also Alma 52:1). Note in verse 33 that the Lamanite soldiers were especially fatigued from their fighting and march in the “heat of the day.” Could this be a mistake? Would the days be hot near the last day of the year? Did the Nephite calendar correspond with ours today? Would this time of year correspond to the Nephite winter? Then why would the days have been hot? It is likely that the Book of Mormon story took place in tropical Mesoamerica, and thus these days might well have been hot. If Joseph Smith had simply made up the “golden Bible” on the basis of his own experience and the locality where he lived, as some critics believe, then the killing of Amalickiah by Teancum should have occurred during western New York’s windy, icy winter. And Joseph might have described this event as occurring in cold winter.

Scripture Mastery

Alma 52 Captain Moroni and Teancum win an important battle over a powerful Lamanite army led by a Zoramite Captain named Jacob—they decoy him out of his stronghold in the city of Mulek.

1 And now, it came to pass in the twenty and sixth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi, behold, when the Lamanites awoke on the first morning of the first month, behold, they found Amalickiah was dead in his own tent; and they also saw that Teancum was ready to give them battle on that day.

verse 1 Obviously the charismatic Amalickiah had held together this Lamanite army by the force of his personality. His death led to immediate demoralization and despair, and panic began to spread among his troops. Regarding the technique of leadership of the Lamanite rulers, it has been observed: “They seem to have depended more on charisma or compulsion than on shared tradition or ideals” (John L. Sorenson, “Book of Mormon Peoples.” Encyclopedia of Mormonism, volume 1).

2 And now, when the Lamanites saw this they were affrighted; and they abandoned their design in marching into the land northward, and retreated with all their army into the city of Mulek, and sought protection in their fortifications.

3 And it came to pass that the brother of Amalickiah was appointed king over the people; and his name was Ammoron; thus king Ammoron, the brother of king Amalickiah, was appointed to reign in his stead.

4 And it came to pass that he did command that his people should maintain those cities, which they had taken by the shedding of blood; for they had not taken any cities save they had lost much blood.

5 And now, Teancum saw that the Lamanites were determined to maintain those cities which they had taken, and those parts of the land which they had obtained possession of; and also seeing the enormity of their number, Teancum thought it was not expedient that he should attempt to attack them in their forts.

6 But he kept his men round about, as if making preparations for war; yea, and truly he was preparing to defend himself against them, by casting up walls round about and preparing places of resort.

verse 6 “places of resort” In this context, a place of resort is a defensive retreat, somewhere the people might go for safety and security.

7 And it came to pass that he kept thus preparing for war until Moroni had sent a large number of men to strengthen his army.

8 And Moroni also sent orders unto him that he should retain all the prisoners who fell into his hands; for as the Lamanites had taken many prisoners, that he should retain all the prisoners of the Lamanites as a ransom for those whom the Lamanites had taken.

verse 8 Part of the strength of the Lamanite army lay in the vast numbers of troops. On the other hand, the Nephite armies were smaller and more efficient. Thus, each individual soldier was more vital to the Nephite army than was each man to the Lamanite army.

9 And he also sent orders unto him that he should fortify the land Bountiful, and secure the narrow pass which led into the land northward, lest the Lamanites should obtain that point and should have power to harass them on every side.

verse 9 Keep in mind the previously emphasized vital nature of the city of Bountiful as a fortification of the northeastern border of Nephite territory. Its purpose was to restrict access to the land northward and to keep the Nephites from becoming boxed in by the Lamanites (Alma 22:29, 33; 50:32-34; 51:28-32; 52:9; Helaman 1:23, 28; 4:6-7).

For a discussion of the “narrow pass” see the commentary for Alma 50:34.

10 And Moroni also sent unto him, desiring him that he would be faithful in maintaining that quarter of the land, and that he would seek every opportunity to scourge the Lamanites in that quarter, as much as was in his power, that perhaps he might take again by stratagem or some other way those cities which had been taken out of their hands; and that he also would fortify and strengthen the cities round about, which had not fallen into the hands of the Lamanites.

verse 10 To “scourge” is to punish or inflict injury upon. Moroni commanded Teancum to look for opportunities to harass the Lamanites as much as possible and perhaps even a chance to damage them significantly.

“in that quarter” Apparently, during this period the greater land of Zarahemla was divided into quarters. Teancum would now be working in the Bountiful quarter or northeast quarter (see also Alma 52:13; 53:8; 58:35). We also have reference to a Manti quarter or southwest quarter (Alma 43:25-26; 56:1-2, 9; 58:30). Moroni was in another “part” of the land (Alma 59:5-6), and may well have been their way of referring to the southeast quarter. We have no particular reference to the northwestern quarter though we might speculate that it might have been referred to as the Ammonihah or Noah quarter.

11 And he also said unto him, I would come unto you, but behold, the Lamanites are upon us in the borders of the land by the west sea; and behold, I go against them, therefore I cannot come unto you.

12 Now, the king (Ammoron) had departed out of the land of Zarahemla, and had made known unto the queen concerning the death of his brother, and had gathered together a large number of men, and had marched forth against the Nephites on the borders by the west sea.

verse 12 Apparently, Ammoron had been present in the land Bountiful when his brother was killed. He then immediately left to return to the land of Nephi and inform the queen, Amalickiah's widow, of the king's death. Once there, Ammoron gathered a powerful Lamanite army and advanced upon the southwest quadrant of the land of Zarahemla. Obviously Ammoron's strategy was to undermine the Nephite effectiveness in battle by forcing them to fight on two fronts.

13 And thus he was endeavoring to harass the Nephites, and to draw away a part of their forces to that part of the land, while he had commanded those whom he had left to possess the cities which he had taken, that they should also harass the Nephites on the borders by the east sea, and should take possession of their lands as much as it was in their power, according to the power of their armies.

verse 13 "to draw away a part of their forces to that part of the land" Ammoron's strategy was to draw part of the Nephite army away from the eastern territories into the southwest quadrant.

"he had commanded those whom he had left to possess the cities which he had taken" Ammoron had left his forces in the area near the east sea in order to return to the land of Nephi. He desired these forces to harass those Nephite easterners and continue to take over and hold their lands as they were able.

14 And thus were the Nephites in those dangerous circumstances in the ending of the twenty and sixth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi.

verse 14 The "dangerous circumstances" were created by the Nephites' having to fight on two separate fronts.

15 But behold, it came to pass in the twenty and seventh year of the reign of the judges, that Teancum, by the command of Moroni—who had established armies to protect the south and the west borders of the land, and had begun his march towards the land Bountiful, that he might assist Teancum with his men in retaking the cities which they had lost—

16 And it came to pass that Teancum had received orders to make an attack upon the city of Mulek, and retake it if it were possible.

17 And it came to pass that Teancum made preparations to make an attack upon the city of Mulek, and march forth with his army against the Lamanites; but he saw that it was impossible that he could overpower them while they were in their fortifications; therefore he abandoned his designs and returned again to the city

Bountiful, to wait for the coming of Moroni, that he might receive strength to his army.

18 And it came to pass that Moroni did arrive with his army at the land of Bountiful, in the latter end of the twenty and seventh year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi.

19 And in the commencement of the twenty and eighth year, Moroni and Teancum and many of the chief captains held a council of war—what they should do to cause the Lamanites to come out against them to battle; or that they might by some means flatter them out of their strongholds, that they might gain advantage over them and take again the city of Mulek.

verse 19 William J. Hamblin provides insight on this verse: “Actual battlefield operations usually represented only a small portion of a campaign. Scouts and spies reconnoitered for food, trails, and the location of enemy troops. Battle plans were generally made shortly before the enemy was encountered and frequently took the form of a council, as Moroni held in Alma 52:19” (“Book of Mormon, History of Warfare” In, Encyclopedia of Mormonism, volume 1).

20 And it came to pass they sent embassies to the army of the Lamanites, which protected the city of Mulek, to their leader, whose name was Jacob, desiring him that he would come out with his armies to meet them upon the plains between the two cities. But behold, Jacob, who was a Zoramite, would not come out with his army to meet them upon the plains.

verse 20 Hugh Nibley provides helpful insight into this verse and those which follow:

But how was a major city, superbly fortified by Moroni’s own foresight, to be taken? The first step was a logical one. It was the ancient custom of warfare to invite the occupants of a city to come out on the open plain and engage in a fair contest, or, as the Nephites put it, “upon fair grounds”; the Nephite commanders in issuing such an invitation to the comfortably ensconced opposition hardly expected the Lamanites to comply with a request so disadvantageous to themselves, but they thought it was worth a try and at any rate it was the conventional thing to do. Their next move was to try a decoy trick. Teancum allowed the Lamanites to discover a task-force of his moving along the coast and to give it chase; Moroni then slipped into the city behind them and overpowered the defenders, characteristically sparing all who yielded up their arms (verses 22-25). Then he too took the coast route on the heels of the Lamanites who were chasing Teancum. As a secondary diversion, a small Nephite force under the [feared commander] Lehi had issued out of the main base at Bountiful and met the Lamanites head on (verse 27). Confused by this new development, the Lamanites sought counsel in safety by returning to Mulek, even as it occurred to them with a shock that in dashing forth they had left that city only lightly defended; and so their return to Mulek turned into a wild race with the Nephites to see who would get there first (verse 27-28). Bent only on reaching home-base in safety, the exhausted Lamanites with Lehi hot behind them ran smack into Moroni's army coming up behind them. That was the last straw (verses 28-32) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 314-15).

21 And it came to pass that Moroni, having no hopes of meeting them upon fair grounds, therefore, he resolved upon a plan that he might decoy the Lamanites out of their strongholds.

22 Therefore he caused that Teancum should take a small number of men and march down near the seashore; and Moroni and his army, by night, marched in the wilderness, on the west of the city Mulek; and thus, on the morrow, when the guards of the Lamanites had discovered Teancum, they ran and told it unto Jacob, their leader.

23 And it came to pass that the armies of the Lamanites did march forth against Teancum, supposing by their numbers to overpower Teancum because of the smallness of his numbers. And as Teancum saw the armies of the Lamanites coming out against him he began to retreat down by the seashore, northward.

24 And it came to pass that when the Lamanites saw that he began to flee, they took courage and pursued them with vigor. And while Teancum was thus leading away the Lamanites who were pursuing them in vain, behold, Moroni commanded that a part of his army who were with him should march forth into the city, and take possession of it.

25 And thus they did, and slew all those who had been left to protect the city, yea, all those who would not yield up their weapons of war.

26 And thus Moroni had obtained possession of the city Mulek with a part of his army, while he marched with the remainder to meet the Lamanites when they should return from the pursuit of Teancum.

27 And it came to pass that the Lamanites did pursue Teancum until they came near the city Bountiful, and then they were met by Lehi and a small army, which had been left to protect the city Bountiful.

28 And now behold, when the chief captains of the Lamanites had beheld Lehi with his army coming against them, they fled in much confusion, lest perhaps they should not obtain the city Mulek before Lehi should overtake them; for they were wearied because of their march, and the men of Lehi were fresh.

29 Now the Lamanites did not know that Moroni had been in their rear with his army; and all they feared was Lehi and his men.

30 Now Lehi was not desirous to overtake them till they should meet Moroni and his army.

31 And it came to pass that before the Lamanites had retreated far they were surrounded by the Nephites, by the men of Moroni on one hand, and the men of Lehi on the other, all of whom were fresh and full of strength; but the Lamanites were wearied because of their long march.

32 And Moroni commanded his men that they should fall upon them until they had given up their weapons of war.

verse 32 Here is further running commentary from Hugh Nibley on this verse and the few which follow:

With his usual forbearance, Moroni waived total victory and spared all the Lamanites who would stop fighting him. But their leader was Jacob, a Zoramite who hated the Nephites as only a dissenter could hate; with an elite guard he tried to fight his way out of the sack but died in the attempt (verses 34-35). Moroni immediately offered the usual easy terms to his followers: "Now Moroni seeing their confusion, he said unto them: If ye will bring forth your weapons of war and deliver them up, behold we will forbear shedding your blood" (verse 37). Even so, those who would not surrender were not killed but disarmed, bound, and marched off to the great central prison compound at Bountiful (verse 39). The prisoner of war problem was now becoming a very serious one for the Nephites. Their best solution was to put their prisoners to work, apparently because it was easy to guard them while at their labor, and because the Nephites were frightfully short of manpower (Alma 53:1). The work was mainly the conversion of Bountiful into a very strong "stalag" [a military camp established to manage prisoners of war], with ditch and breastwork, more of Moroni's ingenuity (Alma 53:3-5) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 315).

33 And it came to pass that Jacob, being their leader, being also a Zoramite, and having an unconquerable spirit, he led the Lamanites forth to battle with exceeding fury against Moroni.

34 Moroni being in their course of march, therefore Jacob was determined to slay them and cut his way through to the city of Mulek. But behold, Moroni and his men were more powerful; therefore they did not give way before the Lamanites.

verse 34 Obviously Jacob was almost desperate to get back to the safety and security of Mulek with his weary troops. Moroni and his army stood in the way.

35 And it came to pass that they fought on both hands with exceeding fury; and there were many slain on both sides; yea, and Moroni was wounded and Jacob was killed.

36 And Lehi pressed upon their rear with such fury with his strong men, that the Lamanites in the rear delivered up their weapons of war; and the remainder of them, being much confused, knew not whither to go or to strike.

verse 36 "knew not whither to go or to strike" These Lamanites, in their confusion, could not decide whether to retreat or to stay and fight.

37 Now Moroni seeing their confusion, he said unto them: If ye will bring forth your weapons of war and deliver them up, behold we will forbear shedding your blood.

38 And it came to pass that when the Lamanites had heard these words, their chief captains, all those who were not slain, came forth and threw down their weapons of war at the feet of Moroni, and also commanded their men that they should do the same.

39 But behold, there were many that would not; and those who would not deliver up their swords were taken and bound, and their weapons of war were taken from them, and they were compelled to march with their brethren forth into the land Bountiful.

verse 39 Those who would not surrender were not killed but disarmed, bound, and marched off to the Nephites' central prison camp at Bountiful.

40 And now the number of prisoners who were taken exceeded more than the number of those who had been slain, yea, more than those who had been slain on both sides.

Alma Chapter 53

Scripture Mastery

Alma 53, 56-58 Helaman and his two-thousand stripling warriors

1 And it came to pass that they did set guards over the prisoners of the Lamanites, and did compel them to go forth and bury their dead, yea, and also the dead of the Nephites who were slain; and Moroni placed men over them to guard them while they should perform their labors.

verse 1 Again, we learn that the prisoners of war were becoming sufficiently numerous that caring for them was becoming a serious problem for the Nephites, as it occupied too many men in the process. Every available man was needed for fighting. Apparently, the best solution was to put their prisoners to work because it was easier to guard them while they were at their labor. Their work was mainly the conversion of Bountiful into a fortified city with ditches and breastworks of timbers.

2 And Moroni went to the city of Mulek with Lehi, and took command of the city and gave it unto Lehi. Now behold, this Lehi was a man who had been with Moroni in the more part of all his battles; and he was a man like unto Moroni, and they rejoiced in each other's safety; yea, they were beloved by each other, and also beloved by all the people of Nephi.

3 And it came to pass that after the Lamanites had finished burying their dead and also the dead of the Nephites, they were marched back into the land Bountiful; and Teancum, by the orders of Moroni, caused that they should commence laboring in digging a ditch round about the land, or the city, Bountiful.

4 And he caused that they should build a breastwork of timbers upon the inner bank of the ditch; and they cast up dirt out of the ditch against the breastwork of timbers; and thus they did cause the Lamanites to labor until they had encircled the city of Bountiful round about with a strong wall of timbers and earth, to an exceeding height.

5 And this city became an exceeding stronghold ever after; and in this city they did guard the prisoners of the Lamanites; yea, even within a wall which they had caused them to build with their own hands. Now Moroni was compelled to cause the Lamanites to labor, because it was easy to guard them while at their labor; and he desired all his forces when he should make an attack upon the Lamanites.

verse 5 Within the city of Bountiful there was a major prisoner-of-war camp which the prisoners themselves—the captive Lamanites—had been forced to secure.

6 And it came to pass that Moroni had thus gained a victory over one of the greatest of the armies of the Lamanites, and had obtained possession of the city of Mulek, which was one of the strongest holds of the Lamanites in the land of Nephi; and thus he had also built a stronghold to retain his prisoners.

verse 6 “the city of Mulek, which was one of the strongest holds of the Lamanites in the land of Nephi” The Lamanites had taken control of the Nephite city of Mulek and had effectively fortified it to the point where it was a veritable fortress for the Lamanites. This verse should not be interpreted as suggesting that the city of Mulek was located in the land of Nephi (Lamanite territory). Rather, it was one of the best fortified Nephite cities.

The “stronghold to retain his prisoners” was located, as evidenced by verse 5, in the city of Bountiful.

7 And it came to pass that he did no more attempt a battle with the Lamanites in that year, but he did employ his men in preparing for war, yea, and in making fortifications to guard against the Lamanites, yea, and also delivering their women and their children from famine and affliction, and providing food for their armies.

verse 7 “delivering their women and their children from famine and affliction, and providing food for their armies” It seems most likely that the antecedent for the pronoun their in this phrase is “his men.” Though it is possible to read the verse so that the antecedent is “the Lamanites,” we know that Moroni did not retain any Lamanite women or children as prisoners—see Alma 54:3.

8 And now it came to pass that the armies of the Lamanites, on the west sea, south, while in the absence of Moroni on account of some intrigue amongst the Nephites, which caused dissensions amongst them, had gained some ground over the Nephites, yea, insomuch that they had obtained possession of a number of their cities in that part of the land.

verse 8 “on account of some intrigue amongst the Nephites, which caused dissensions amongst them” Intrigue is a plot or scheme to accomplish some nefarious purpose by secret means. The intrigue here likely refers to the king-men’s rising up in opposition to Pahoran and the Nephite government. It is obvious that Mormon views the conflict between the Nephites and Lamanites from a spiritual context. He makes no mention here of the superior military strength of the Lamanites in the “west sea, south” area. He attributes the Nephite set backs to the dissensions among the Nephites. Again, as we have mentioned previously, Mormon believed literally in the “promise/curse” of the Book of Mormon: The Lord was committed to defend his covenant people and protect them from being placed in bondage to any other people when they were righteous, but not under other circumstances (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 1:20 and the introductory commentary for Alma 43).

Hugh Nibley observed: “No matter how wicked the ferocious and depraved the Lamanites might be (and they were that!), no matter by how much they outnumbered the Nephites, . . . they were not the Nephite problem. They were merely kept there to remind the Nephites of their real problem which was [the obligation] to walk uprightly before the Lord” (Since Cumorah, 376).

9 And thus because of iniquity amongst themselves, yea, because of dissensions and intrigue among themselves they were placed in the most dangerous circumstances.

The great story of the stripling warriors or the sons of Helaman begins at this point. It is probably unnecessary to remind the reader of their origins, but in case a brief review would be helpful: In Alma 23 we were introduced to a group of Lamanites, actually direct descendants of Nephi’s eldest brother Laman, who were converted through the missionary efforts of Ammon and the other sons of Mosiah. These righteous converts took upon themselves an oath to never again take up arms (Alma 23:7), and they called themselves the Anti-Nephi-Lehies (see the commentary on the possible meanings of this name in the commentary for Alma 23:17). In order to best protect these converts, who were committed to nonviolence, they were given the land of Jershon, and a Nephite army was charged with protecting them. They later became known as the people of Ammon (some authors have even referred to them as the “Ammonites”), and eventually they were removed to the land of Melek, a strategically-located area where the Nephites were better able to protect them.

10 And now behold, I have somewhat to say concerning the people of Ammon, who, in the beginning, were Lamanites; but by Ammon and his brethren, or rather by the power and word of God, they had been converted unto the Lord; and they had been brought down into the land of Zarahemla, and had ever since been protected by the Nephites.

11 And because of their oath they had been kept from taking up arms against their brethren; for they had taken an oath that they never would shed blood more; and according to their oath they would have perished; yea, they would have suffered themselves to have fallen into the hands of their brethren, had it not been for the pity and the exceeding love which Ammon and his brethren had had for them.

verse 11 “they never would shed blood more” Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines more as, “a second or another time; again.”

12 And for this cause they were brought down into the land of Zarahemla; and they ever had been protected by the Nephites.

verse 12 “they ever had been protected” Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines ever as “at all times; always; continually.

13 But it came to pass that when they saw the danger, and the many afflictions and tribulations which the Nephites bore for them, they were moved with compassion and were desirous to take up arms in the defense of their country.

14 But behold, as they were about to take their weapons of war, they were overpowered by the persuasions of Helaman and his brethren, for they were about to break the oath which they had made.

15 And Helaman feared lest by so doing they should lose their souls; therefore all those who had entered into this covenant were compelled to behold their brethren wade through their afflictions, in their dangerous circumstances at this time.

verse 15 “all those who had entered into this covenant were compelled to behold their brethren wade through their afflictions” The pacifist people of Ammon could only sit and watch as their Nephite brethren struggled militarily to hold their own against Lamanite invaders.

Helaman will later give additional explanation for why he felt so strongly that the people of Ammon should not break their oath not to bear arms: “for I would not suffer them that they should break this covenant which they had made, supposing that God would strengthen us” (Alma 56:8). Helaman also obviously believed literally in the promise/curse (see the commentary for verse 8) which held that God would strengthen the Nephites if they remained faithful. He believed that God would strengthen the Nephite armies if the people of Ammon would remain true to their covenant.

We often have the tendency to assume that the people of Ammon were pacifists. One author has questioned this conclusion (see Duane Boyce’s article “Were the Ammonites Pacifists?” in Journal of the Book of Mormon and other Restoration Scripture, volume 18, number 1, 2009, 33-47). Brother Boyce defines pacifism as “the opposition to all war, including war of self-defense, on moral grounds” (Ibid., 33). By this definition participation in and support of all war is not permissible. Brother Boyce concludes that the people of Ammon were not really pacifists for the following reasons: (1) When they accepted the gospel and repented of their sins, they were not repenting of having fought wars in defense of their country. Rather, they repented of banditry, plunder, and murder of Nephites that had been motivated by hatred of those Nephites. (2) While the people of Ammon were living in the land of Jershon, they did not object to the Nephites’ waging war against attacking Lamanites. (3) They did reach a point where they were willing to take up arms again to assist the Nephites in defending their liberty. (4) They did not object to their sons’ entering the war against the Lamanites.

verses 16-19 We will learn that a total of 2,060 stripling warriors will fight against the Lamanites (see Alma 57:6). Incredibly, though all of them will be wounded, none will die (see Alma 57:25). We may wish to contrast this with the youth of the Church today. As they fight against the world and Satan, some seventy-five percent of them will die spiritually.

There are clues in these verses to the success of the sons of Helaman. For example, they were self motivated—fighting for the Nephite cause was their idea (verse 16); they entered into a covenant and they bound themselves to the cause (verse 17); and they picked a righteous leader and followed him with exactness (verse 19; see also Alma 57:21; 58:40). Others of their secrets may be found in later chapters. For example, they followed the advice of their mothers and stayed true to their heritage (Alma 56:47). These same keys to the success of the stripling warriors may well apply to the youth of the Church today.

16 But behold, it came to pass they had many sons, who had not entered into a covenant that they would not take their weapons of war to defend themselves against their enemies; therefore they did assemble themselves together at this time, as many as were able to take up arms, and they called themselves Nephites.

verse 16 “they called themselves Nephites” It is notable that even though this group of young men were the children of Lamanites, the “Anti-Nephi-Lehies,” they chose to call themselves “Nephites.”

17 And they entered into a covenant to fight for the liberty of the Nephites, yea, to protect the land unto the laying down of their lives; yea, even they covenanted that they never would give up their liberty, but they would fight in all cases to protect the Nephites and themselves from bondage.

18 Now behold, there were two thousand of those young men, who entered into this covenant and took their weapons of war to defend their country.

19 And now behold, as they never had hitherto been a disadvantage to the Nephites, they became now at this period of time also a great support; for they took their weapons of war, and they would that Helaman should be their leader.

verse 19 “they never had hitherto been a disadvantage to the Nephites” Not only had these 2,000 young men never been a problem to the Nephites, they now had an opportunity to be a great help to the Nephites. One might well ask: Of what real “support” could these 2,000 young untrained recruits be to the Nephite army since they had no experience in battle? It will become obvious in the two following verses that Mormon regarded their principle strength as being spiritual and not military. They were obviously mighty in spiritual strength.

20 And they were all young men, and they were exceedingly valiant for courage, and also for strength and activity; but behold, this was not all—they were men who were true at all times in whatsoever thing they were entrusted.

verse 20 “they were all young men” Some have wondered just how old these “young men” were. While their fathers were still under oath not to take up arms again, these sons were old enough to fight, but young enough to have not made that oath themselves.

While the exact timing of the covenant is difficult to deduce from the Book of Mormon narrative, it seems to be shortly before the Lamanites attacked Ammonihah in the 11th year of the reign of the judges (Alma 16:1–4). This attack was precipitated by the Lamanite frustration from having slaughtered their own brethren among the Anti-Nephi-Lehies (Alma 24–25:2). When the stripling warriors enlisted to aid the Nephite armies, it was the 26th year of the reign of the judges (Alma 56:9). So approximately 15 years had elapsed when the young men took up arms.

In ancient Israel, “twenty appears to have been the age at which Israelite males became obligated to serve in the military” (see, e.g., Numbers 1:3) (John W. Welch, “Law and War in the Book of Mormon,” in Warfare in the Book of Mormon, ed. Stephen D. Ricks and William J. Hamblin, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1990, 65). A handful of LDS scholars have thus proposed that the “young men” under Helaman’s command were around 20 years of age (Welch, “Law and War,” 66; Stephen D. Ricks, “‘Holy War’: The Sacral Ideology of War in the Book of Mormon and in the Ancient Near East,” in Warfare in the Book of Mormon, 108–109; John A. Tvedtnes, “What Were the Ages of Helaman’s Stripling Warriors?,” Ensign, September 1992, 28). This would make them about 5 years old at the time their fathers covenanted to never take up arms again, likely too young to have joined in on their covenant making ceremony (As the leader of the Church in Zarahemla, Helaman was the one who could assure the Ammonites that their sons were not bound by their father’s covenant. This may be why they chose him as their leader.).

While 20 years old may have been the appointed age for military service, John W. Welch hinted, “Some of these volunteers may have been under the legal age for military service and for that reason were not serving in the regular Nephite army” (Welch, “Law and War,” 66). Helaman told Moroni that they were “very young” (Alma 56:46), and called them his “little sons” (verses 30, 39), descriptions that suggest they were younger than the usual age of a soldier.

When Joseph Smith translated the Book of Mormon, the word stripling (Alma 53:22; 56:57) meant “a youth in the state of adolescence, or just passing from boyhood to manhood; a lad” (Noah Webster, An American Dictionary of the English Language, New York: S. Converse, 1828, s.v., “stripling.” Also, see John Bytheway, Righteous Warriors: Lessons from the War Chapters in the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 2004, 106). Given that it was typical for young men to be married and starting a family by 17, this could indicate that some of these warriors may have been very young, perhaps between 12–15 years old (See Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical & Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 4:686).

Visualizing an army of adolescents, ranging from early teens, or even preteens, to about 20, adds emphasis to key points in the narrative. It heightens Helaman’s fears “that my little sons should fall into [Lamanite] hands” and his reluctance to send them into battle (Alma 56:39). Hence, they must plead with him, “let us go,” arguing, “God is with us, and he will not suffer that we should fall” (verse 46).

Their notable youth also amplifies the greatness of their courage. In the face of an older, larger, more menacing army of blood-thirsty Lamanites, these striplings “did not fear death” (Alma 56:47). No wonder Helaman remarked, “Never had I seen so great courage, nay, not amongst all the Nephites” (verse 45).

It also magnifies the miracle. After the battle, Helaman understandably feared “lest there were many of them slain” (Alma 56:55). Upon learning that all of them had survived, he marveled, “They had fought as if with the strength of God; yea, never were men known to have fought with such miraculous strength; and with such mighty power” (verse 56). Realizing that it was an army of teenagers which fought with such incredible strength can give readers today a greater sense of God’s miraculous power.

For Mormon, this story must have been especially inspiring. Being only 15 when he was appointed as commander-in-chief of the whole Nephite army (Mormon 1:15; 2:2), he would have been intrigued to learn about a whole army of youths who had fought at an earlier time in Nephite history. Learning about how their firm faith and exacting obedience to the gospel teachings of their mothers served to strengthen them in battle would have been stirring for the young commander. It possibly led him to reflect on his own experience and see how the Lord had guided and preserved him in battle from an early age.

Today, the story continues to inspire readers of all ages, but especially youths and young adults, who face an increasingly menacing world (One interesting modern-day application can be seen in John E. Kammayer, The Art of Nephite War, Far West Publications, 2014, chapter 19, which focuses on the application to Latter-day Saint soldiers.). Like the stripling warriors, through faith, courage, and obedience, youth today can overcome today’s challenges “with the strength of God” (Alma 56:56).

21 Yea, they were men of truth and soberness, for they had been taught to keep the commandments of God and to walk uprightly before him.

verses 20-21 The protection which these young men will receive in battle is attributed directly to their righteousness. See the material on “holy wars” in the commentary for Alma 46:22.

22 And now it came to pass that Helaman did march at the head of his two thousand stripling soldiers, to the support of the people in the borders of the land on the south by the west sea.

verse 22 The term stripling means an adolescent or one who is just passing from boyhood into manhood; a lad.

“to the support of the people in the borders of the land on the south by the west sea” Repeated, careful readings of the Book of Mormon text suggests that the terms “east sea” (or “sea east”) and “west sea” (or “sea west”) are likely designated names rather than ones that give local directions. This is similar to the North Sea’s present name, which names a sea south of Scandinavia and west of central Europe. Perhaps the Nephite historians derived the east sea and west sea names from the names the Mulekites gave the ocean they had just crossed when they first came to America (presumably first landing somewhere in the Gulf of Mexico) and from the name Lehi’s colony gave the Pacific Ocean that they had crossed (consistent with Helaman 6:10). Therefore, the seas’ names could have a correct directional meaning in only a few locations. As one moves about in Mesoamerica, the names west sea and east sea would lose all directional meaning. This concept helps when we read in this particular verse that “Helaman did march at the head of his two thousand stripling soldiers, to the support of the people in the borders of the land on the south by the west sea.” We understand this to mean that he marched south to the borders of the Nephite lands by the Pacific Ocean (Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, “A Correlation of the Sidon River and the Lands of Manti and Zarahemla with the Southern End of the Rio Grijalva,” 45).

23 And thus ended the twenty and eighth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi.

1 And now it came to pass in the commencement of the twenty and ninth year of the judges, that Ammoron sent unto Moroni desiring that he would exchange prisoners.

2 And it came to pass that Moroni felt to rejoice exceedingly at this request, for he desired the provisions which were imparted for the support of the Lamanite prisoners for the support of his own people; and he also desired his own people for the strengthening of his army.

3 Now the Lamanites had taken many women and children, and there was not a woman nor a child among all the prisoners of Moroni, or the prisoners whom Moroni had taken; therefore Moroni resolved upon a stratagem to obtain as many prisoners of the Nephites from the Lamanites as it were possible.

verses 4-14 To say that Moroni was inclined toward being candid and forthright is to understate the fact. Initially, we may surmise that he would have made a less effective diplomat than military commander. One cannot help but smile at his irrepressible candor. He is writing to Ammoron to negotiate a trade of prisoners, yet he cannot help including his honest feelings about Ammoron: “I would tell you concerning that awful hell that awaits to receive such murderers as thou and thy brother” and “thou art a child of hell.” Then, just in case Ammoron did not catch the full flavor of his message: “Behold, I am in my anger.” Moroni’s forthrightness and integrity would not permit him to fail to express his honest feelings in most every situation.

We will learn, however, in the following chapter (see the commentary for Alma 55:2) that Moroni’s character is far deeper than that of a mere “hothead.”

4 Therefore he wrote an epistle, and sent it by the servant of Ammoron, the same who had brought an epistle to Moroni. Now these are the words which he wrote unto Ammoron, saying:

verse 4 Hugh Nibley wrote:

When the Lamanites finally suggested the exchange of war prisoners that he had been waiting for, Moroni sent them a ‘get-tough’ letter, deliberately taunting Ammoron . . . and insisting on receiving a Nephite prisoner with his wife and children in exchange for one Lamanite soldier. This three-to-one exchange was actually to the advantage of the Lamanites, who were eager enough to transfer the feeding of noncombatants from themselves to the Nephites, but Moroni wanted to get the best possible bargain by not appearing too eager and so got tough. The result was an exchange of insults between the chiefs with mounting tempers, and in the end the deal fell through. This was not to be the last time that Moroni's hot temper ran away with him (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 315-16).

verses 5-14 These verses contain a letter from Captain Moroni to Ammoron. These is an interesting feature of this letter and five other letters in the Book of Mormon. They are, including this letter: (1) Moroni to Ammoron, 67 BC (Alma 54:5–14); (2) Ammoron to Moroni, 67 BC (Alma 54:16–24); (3) Helaman to Moroni, 66 BC (Alma 56:2–58:41) (4) Moroni to Pahoran, 66–65 BC (Alma 60:1–36); (5) Pahoran to Moroni, 66–65 BC (Alma 61:2–21); and (6) Giddianhi to Lachoneus, 12–13 AD (3 Nephi 3:2–10).

This feature, which is often overlooked, is a form that these letters have in common. This is referred to as the letters' "epistolary form." This form follows an ancient convention. Robert F. Smith explained that one noticeable thing about these and other Book of Mormon epistles "is that they never violate the ancient Hittite-Syrian, Neo-Assyrian, Amarna, and Hebrew format in which the superior correspondent is always listed first" (Robert F. Smith, "Epistolary Form in the Book of Mormon," FARMS Review 22, no. 2, 2010: 127). This means that if the writer of the letter wishes to defer to the receiver of the letter, he will list the "superior" person first, and himself second.

Notice in this particular letter, that form is followed in that Moroni enters Ammoron's name first and his own second. Notice that in the other letter in this chapter—one written by Ammoron to Moroni, Ammoron deliberately lists his own name first and then reemphasizes that insult by listing his own name again before entering Moroni's name. A point of importance is that Joseph Smith could have known nothing about this epistolary form. Yet, here, and in the above-mentioned letters, that form is found.

5 Behold, Ammoron, I have written unto you somewhat concerning this war which ye have waged against my people, or rather which thy brother hath waged against them, and which ye are still determined to carry on after his death.

6 Behold, I would tell you somewhat concerning the justice of God, and the sword of his almighty wrath, which doth hang over you except ye repent and withdraw your armies into your own lands, or the land of your possessions, which is the land of Nephi.

7 Yea, I would tell you these things if ye were capable of hearkening unto them; yea, I would tell you concerning that awful hell that awaits to receive such murderers as thou and thy brother have been, except ye repent and withdraw your murderous purposes, and return with your armies to your own lands.

8 But as ye have once rejected these things, and have fought against the people of the Lord, even so I may expect you will do it again.

9 And now behold, we are prepared to receive you; yea, and except you withdraw your purposes, behold, ye will pull down the wrath of that God whom you have rejected upon you, even to your utter destruction.

verse 9 “now behold, we are prepared to receive you” We are prepared to engage you in battle.

10 But, as the Lord liveth, our armies shall come upon you except ye withdraw, and ye shall soon be visited with death, for we will retain our cities and our lands; yea, and we will maintain our religion and the cause of our God.

verse 10 “as the Lord liveth, our armies shall come upon you except ye withdraw” By now the reader is likely sensitive to those phrases that indicate the taking of an oath. Here Moroni swears an oath to attack the Lamanites lest they agree to exchange prisoners on Moroni’s terms and then withdraw from the Nephite lands.

11 But behold, it supposeth me that I talk to you concerning these things in vain; or it supposeth me that thou art a child of hell; therefore I will close my epistle by telling you that I will not exchange prisoners, save it be on conditions that ye will deliver up a man and his wife and his children, for one prisoner; if this be the case that ye will do it, I will exchange.

verse 11 “it supposeth me that I talk to you concerning these things in vain; or it supposeth me that thou art a child of hell” Moroni says, in effect, “I don’t believe you are going to grant this request because I believe you a child of hell.” Again, we are inclined to chuckle over what appears to be Moroni’s almost brutal candor.

12 And behold, if ye do not this, I will come against you with my armies; yea, even I will arm my women and my children, and I will come against you, and I will follow you even into your own land, which is the land of our first inheritance; yea, and it shall be blood for blood, yea, life for life; and I will give you battle even until you are destroyed from off the face of the earth.

verse 12 “the land of our first inheritance” This phrase seems to refer to the land of Nephi which the Nephites began to occupy within a few years of Lehi’s arrival in the promised land. The more specific term “the place of our fathers’ first inheritance” (see Alma 22:28) refers to a west coastal area of the land of Nephi where father Lehi and his family initially settled in about 589 BC. The concept of a “land of . . . first inheritance” was firmly established among ancient Israelite peoples. Hugh Nibley explained, referring to this same custom among Book of Mormon peoples:

No matter where a group or family move to . . . the first land allotted to them is always regarded as “the land of their inheritance,” thus Alma 22:28; 54:12-13; Ether 7:16; Mormon 2:27-28; 1 Nephi 13:15; Alma 35:9, 14; 43:12; Jacob 3:4; Alma 62:42; Mormon 3:17. This is a powerful argument for the authenticity of the Book of Mormon both because the existence of such a system is largely the discovery of modern research and because it is set forth in the Book of Mormon very distinctly and yet quite casually (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 6, 100).

13 Behold, I am in my anger, and also my people; ye have sought to murder us, and we have only sought to defend ourselves. But behold, if ye seek to destroy us more we will seek to destroy you; yea, and we will seek our land, the land of our first inheritance.

verse 13 Again, “the land of our first inheritance” refers to the land of Nephi. Moroni threatens not only to drive the Lamanites out of Nephite territory but also to pursue them into their own lands and drive them out of those lands as well. He is obviously very angry!

Hugh Nibley has referred to Moroni as “high-spirited and short-tempered” and has even referred to this letter to Ammoron, written in anger, as “ill-advised.” Dr. Nibley, obviously a great admirer of Moroni, is then quick to point out Moroni’s many character strengths:

High-spirited and short-tempered he certainly was, as his ill-advised letters to Pahoran (Alma 60:1-36) and Ammoron (Alma 54:11-13) amply attest. But his magnanimous nature as a lover of peace and fair play always prevailed. He always calls the enemy his brothers, with whom he is loath to contend. You cannot ask for a less warlike spirit than that of an army who “were compelled reluctantly to contend with their brethren, the Lamanites,” who waged war “for the space of many years, . . . notwithstanding their much reluctance”; who were “sorry to take up arms against the Lamanites, because they did not delight in the shedding of blood; yea . . . they were sorry to be the means of sending so many of their brethren out of this world” (Alma 48:21-23). In battle Moroni always calls an end to the fighting and proposes a settlement the moment the enemy shows signs of weakening (Alma 43:54; 44:1, 20); and though surprise and deception are the essence of strategy, he refused to take advantage of an enemy who was too drunk to fight—that would be an “injustice” (Alma 55:19). He even made special excuses for sending spies behind enemy lines (Alma 43:27-30). With never a thought of punishing a beaten foe, Moroni sought no reprisals even after the gravest provocations. He was satisfied to take his defeated adversaries at their word and trust them to return to their homes or settle among the Nephites as they chose (Alma 44:6, 11, 19-20), even granting them Nephite lands for their rehabilitation (Alma 62:16-17). His attitude is well expressed in an exchange of letters with his friend Pahoran, who writes: “We would not shed the blood of the Lamanites if they would stay in their own land. We would not shed the blood of our [Nephite] brethren if they would not rise up in rebellion and take the sword against us. We would subject ourselves to the yoke of bondage if it were requisite with the justice of God”—which, indeed, in the Book of Mormon story it sometimes was (Alma 61:10-13). “We do not desire to be men of blood,” says Moroni on the battlefield; “ye are in our hands, yet we do not desire to slay you. . . We have not come . . . that we might shed your blood for power” (Alma 44:1-2) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 353-54).

14 Now I close my epistle. I am Moroni; I am a leader of the people of the Nephites.

verse 14 “I am a leader of the people of the Nephites” Apparently one criterion by which the peoples of the Book of Mormon are categorized is who rules over them. Those who lived in the land of Zarahemla were not all pure descendants of Nephi. We know that they included at least some Zoramites, Lamanites (the people of Ammon), and Mulekites. Thus, we read this peculiar phrase “the people of the Nephites.”

verses 15-24 Don’t try to read and understand Ammoron’s rejoinder without first reviewing the concept of the tradition of hatred which the Lamanites held against the Nephites (see the commentaries for Jacob 3:3-9 and 2 Nephi 1:28-29).

15 Now it came to pass that Ammoron, when he had received this epistle, was angry; and he wrote another epistle unto Moroni, and these are the words which he wrote, saying:

16 I am Ammoron, the king of the Lamanites; I am the brother of Amalickiah whom ye have murdered. Behold, I will avenge his blood upon you, yea, and I will come upon you with my armies for I fear not your threatenings.

verses 15-16 Amalickiah’s legacy of treachery, fraud, and deceit did not die with him. Amalickiah’s brother Ammoron succeeded him as king of the Lamanites, and he did not hesitate to continue his fallen brother’s warfare against the Nephites (Alma 52). Like his brother, Ammoron had no love for his former brethren, and demanded no less than total surrender or annihilation. “We will wage a war which shall be eternal, either to the subjecting the Nephites to our authority or to their eternal extinction,” boasted Ammoron (verse 20).

Ammoron’s hatred for the Nephites also ran on a deeply personal level. In a heated letter to Moroni, the new Lamanite king vowed, here in verse 16, “I am Ammoron, the king of the Lamanites; I am the brother of Amalickiah whom ye have murdered. Behold, I will avenge his blood upon you, yea, and I will come upon you with my armies for I fear not your threatenings”. Ironically, Amalickiah had sworn that he would drink the blood of Moroni (Alma 49:27; 51:9), but now it was Amalickiah’s blood that needed to be avenged.

Besides feeling personally obligated to avenge the blood of his brother, Ammoron went back to the origins of tribal conflict in the earliest days of the Nephite–Lamanite split. See the following verse. In verse 54 he says, “I am a bold Lamanite,” declared Ammoron, a former Zoramite, thus making it clear he had switched sides, adopting a new political and cultural identity.

The dynamics fueling Ammoron's worldview and objectives are complex. At a most basic level, this is a rather obvious example of tribalism and ethnic tension. While political aspirations were undoubtedly tied up in Ammoron's declaration, it is important to note that he appealed to a deeply rooted tribal or clan rivalry as the motivation for his political goals. In perpetuating this tribal antagonism, Ammoron promoted an ideology fundamentally at odds with the egalitarian and anti-tribal ideals of Nephite prophets (cf. 2 Nephi 26:33; Mosiah 4:19; 4 Nephi 1:2, 17) (See Brant A. Gardner, Traditions of the Fathers: The Book of Mormon as History, Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2015, 188–189).

An additional motivating factor for Ammoron may be related to the Hebrew judicial concept of "blood vengeance." In a world with no real equivalent to modern law enforcement, "one of the most important clan duties" in many ancient cultures was "for the nearest of kin to hunt down and carry out the death penalty on a person that had slain a member of the sept or family" (Morris Jastrow, Jr., "Avenger of Blood," in Jewish Encyclopedia, online at jewishencyclopedia.com; A "sept" is an archaic term synonymous with "clan" or "family." Compare "Blood-Avenger," in Encyclopedia Judaica, online at jewishvirtuallibrary.org). Ancient Hebrew law allowed for this, granting the legal right and duty for a kinsman to avenge the blood of a murdered family or clan member (Exodus 21:12–14; Numbers 35:16–28; Deuteronomy 19:4–13) (Ze'ev W. Falk, Hebrew Law in Biblical Times, Provo, UT and Winona Lake, IN: BYU Press and Eisenbrauns, 2001, 72).

This avenger of blood is called a goel in biblical Hebrew. Conventionally translated as "redeemer" (Ludwig Koehler and Walter Baumgartner, The Hebrew and Aramaic Lexicon of the Old Testament, 2 vols., Leiden: Brill, 2001, 1:169), one of the responsibilities of being an avenging kinsman (a goel) was to bring about justice, rectifying the intentional and hateful murder of a near family member by killing the murderer or a substitute (David Ewert, "Avenger of Blood," in The Oxford Companion to the Bible, ed. Bruce M. Metzger and Michael D. Coogan, New York, NY: Oxford University Press, 1993, 68; Bernhard W. Anderson, Understanding the Old Testament, abridged 4th ed., Upper Saddle River, NJ: Prentice–Hall, 1998, 430–431. Other duties of a goel included redeeming property, including family sold into debt slavery—see Leviticus 25:25, 47–55; Jeremiah 32:6–12—and marrying the widow of a close family member—see Deuteronomy 25:5–10; Ruth 3–4). At the same time, one suspected of wrongful homicide had the right to flee to a city of refuge, where a disinterested body of elders and Levites would hear the case (Numbers 35:9–24; Deuteronomy 4:41–44).

Extending this legal procedure into the theological realm, Jehovah was, naturally, considered the divine goel (redeemer, avenger) of Israel as a whole (Exodus 6:6; 15:13; Psalm 74:2; 94). He was expected to avenge Israel's blood shed by her physical and spiritual enemies and also to redeem Israel or buy her back from bondage, slavery, or debt servitude.

The language in Alma 54 surely suggests that Ammoron was familiar with this underlying institution of blood redemption. He saw himself as acting in a redemptive capacity. His threat to Moroni that he would specifically “avenge [his brother Amalickiah’s] blood upon you” invokes and captures the thrust of the blood vengeance mechanism stemming from the earliest days of ancient Israelite history.

Recalling that both Amalickiah and Ammoron were former Nephites, it makes sense that Ammoron would invoke the concept of Hebraic blood vengeance in his threat against Moroni. Moreover, since the Zoramites rejected the law of Moses (Alma 31:9), it is not surprising that Ammoron failed to extend to Moroni the protections of refuge and a trial that the law of Moses would have guaranteed to him.

In a straightforward reaction, Ammoron threatened to hold Moroni personally accountable for the death of his brother, Amalickiah. Teancum was one of Moroni’s warriors, and although he apparently acted on his own initiative, Ammoron would have naturally invoked his traditional rights and duties to avenge the death of his brother. He tried to do this by putting Moroni on notice that he was a hunted man.

Yet Ammoron himself acted rashly in making this threat. His motives were not based in measured legal steps. Why, for example, did he not seek the blood of the slayer, Teancum, who was still alive? The answer to this question probably lies in Ammoron’s desire to escalate the situation, using the death of King Amalickiah as justifying a call for the death of a higher-ranking Nephite, like Moroni. This, however, was not a call for legal justice. Ammoron, assuming unto himself the role of divine avenger, was obviously out for revenge and not a legal settlement.

Ammoron’s reaction typifies one more way in which the war chapters in the book of Alma are composed as a portrait of stark opposites. The righteous heroes Moroni and Helaman stand in contrast with the villains Amalickiah and Ammoron. Where Moroni was honorable, just, and righteous (Alma 48:17–18), Amalickiah was power-hungry, treasonous, and deceitful (Alma 46:4–5; 47:30, 35). Where Moroni treated his enemies nobly (Alma 44:1–7), Ammoron treated his enemies spitefully, and in this case vindictively (Alma 54:16–24). This point was included by Mormon in his final record in order to paint for modern readers a clear picture of what good and bad leaders look like.

By studying Ammoron’s personality, including his literal thirst for blood and vengeance, readers of the Book of Mormon are also warned to avoid allowing past grievances and old wounds to consume one with hatred and malice. Had Ammoron sought the true Redeemer’s way of reconciliation instead of raw vengeance, it’s very likely that thousands of lives, including his own (Alma 62:35–36), would have been spared from years of bloody and senseless conflict.

17 For behold, your fathers did wrong their brethren, insomuch that they did rob them of their right to the government when it rightly belonged unto them.

verse 17 “For behold, your fathers did wrong their brethren” Please recall that Ammoron and his brother Amalickiah were not Lamanites by blood. Rather they were Nephite (descendants of Zoram—Alma 49:25; 54:23) dissenters. Thus, he accuses Moroni, “your fathers did wrong their brethren” (italics added). He doesn’t include himself with the Lamanites. Please review also the Hebrew tradition of primogeniture in the commentary for 1 Nephi 16:37.

“rightly belonged unto them” One point of some interest but little importance is that in the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon this phrase was, “rightfully belonged unto them.” As Oliver Cowdery copied the original manuscript to create the “printer’s manuscript,” he changed “rightfully” to “rightly.”

18 And now behold, if ye will lay down your arms, and subject yourselves to be governed by those to whom the government doth rightly belong, then will I cause that my people shall lay down their weapons and shall be at war no more.

19 Behold, ye have breathed out many threatenings against me and my people; but behold, we fear not your threatenings.

20 Nevertheless, I will grant to exchange prisoners according to your request, gladly, that I may preserve my food for my men of war; and we will wage a war which shall be eternal, either to the subjecting the Nephites to our authority or to their eternal extinction.

21 And as concerning that God whom ye say we have rejected, behold, we know not such a being; neither do ye; but if it so be that there is such a being, we know not but that he hath made us as well as you.

verse 21 “but if it so be that there is such a being, we know not but that he hath made us as well as you” Ammoron intends to say, “if there is such a being, then he is our God as well as your God, and he will judge which of us is in the wrong.”

22 And if it so be that there is a devil and a hell, behold will he not send you there to dwell with my brother whom ye have murdered, whom ye have hinted that he hath gone to such a place? But behold these things matter not.

23 I am Ammoron, and a descendant of Zoram, whom your fathers pressed and brought out of Jerusalem.

verse 23 Here the word pressed means forced against his will.

24 And behold now, I am a bold Lamanite; behold, this war hath been waged to avenge their wrongs, and to maintain and to obtain their rights to the government; and I close my epistle to Moroni.

verse 24 “behold, this war hath been waged to avenge their wrongs” The antecedent for “their” is “us” in the verse 21, referring to the Lamanite people. He intends to say, “this war hath been waged to avenge the wrongs which you have perpetrated against us, the Lamanites.”

verses 23-24 As is well known, when the words of the Book of Mormon were translated “by the gift and power of God,” there was no punctuation at all in the early manuscripts, and that is the way the translated text was delivered to E.B. Grandin’s print shop. Typesetter John Gilbert reported that when he sat down to prepare the text for publication, “every chapter . . . was one solid paragraph, without a punctuation mark, from beginning to end” (Royal Skousen, “John Gilbert’s 1892 Account of the 1830 Printing of the Book of Mormon” in The Disciple as Witness: Essays on Latter-day Saint History and Doctrine in Honor of Richard Lloyd Anderson, ed. Stephen D. Ricks, Donald W. Parry, and Andrew H. Hedges, 402). So, he added punctuation and paragraphing as he went along. He did a good job, especially for someone reading the book for the first time, but there are a few sentences that could have been punctuated in more than one way, with slightly different results. The punctuation of the Book of Mormon does not enjoy the same revealed status as the words themselves. Hence from time to time there are some verses in which it may be worth considering alternate punctuation.

Verse 24 is just such an example. The word behold is a common interjection in the Book of Mormon that means something like “pay attention to what follows,” and behold now may simply be an intensification of that idea (as in Helaman 7:29). But what if we were to shift the comma after now back one word? These two verses would then read: “I am Ammoron, and a descendant of Zoram, whom your fathers pressed and brought out of Jerusalem. And behold, now I am a bold Lamanite . . .” This emendation may be preferable because Ammoron’s point is that once he was a Zoramite (allied with the Nephites) but now he is a Lamanite. In fact, he is now the king of the Lamanites (so the word behold may even be taken in the unusual sense of “look at me!”). This reading makes sense in the context of the passage as well: Ammoron is closing a belligerent letter to Moroni with a strong rejection of Nephite culture and everything associated with it. Another fact supports this suggested alternate punctuation. The original manuscript has a slightly different wording here: “And behold I am now a bold Lamanite . . .”

1 Now it came to pass that when Moroni had received this epistle he was more angry, because he knew that Ammoron had a perfect knowledge of his fraud; yea, he knew that Ammoron knew that it was not a just cause that had caused him to wage a war against the people of Nephi.

2 And he said: Behold, I will not exchange prisoners with Ammoron save he will withdraw his purpose, as I have stated in my epistle; for I will not grant unto him that he shall have any more power than what he hath got.

verse 2 It would seem that Moroni's motive for deciding not to accept Ammoron's offer to exchange prisoners on Moroni's terms was deeper than simply anger. More than simply setting the terms for an exchange of prisoners, Moroni's epistle to Ammoron had been mainly focused on proclaiming the justness of the Nephite cause and warning Ammoron against continuing to pursue the conflict. "The first half of Moroni's letter builds on a rhetorical formula repeated four times: 'except ye repent and withdraw' (Alma 54:6, 7) or 'except ye withdraw' (Alma 54:9, 10) your armies and your murderous intentions, God's wrath and death will come upon you" (See Richard Dilworth Rust, Feasting on the Word: The Literary Testimony of the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1997, 151. For a more formal analysis of Moroni's rhetorical strategy, see 152–153).

It becomes clear that Moroni's terms for the prisoner exchange were accompanied by an ultimatum to cease the war. Ammoron's reply not only revealed his "perfect knowledge of his fraud" (Alma 55:1), but that he would gladly exchange prisoners so that, as he stated, "I may preserve my food for my men, and we will wage a war which shall be eternal" (Alma 54:20). In other words, Ammoron outrightly dismissed Moroni's warnings and showed that the prisoner exchange would only facilitate further warfare.

A careful reading of Moroni's epistle can help demonstrate that, rather than going back on his word, Moroni was likely justified in withdrawing his offer. Ammoron had utterly refused the most essential part of the bargain—to cease the war—and Moroni was certainly not going to "grant unto him that he shall have any more power than what he hath got."

Because the text demonstrates Moroni's anger and frustration in response to Ammoron's actions (Alma 54:13; 55:1), some may read into this scenario that Moroni was simply a hotheaded and unwise negotiator. Yet Mormon, who likely had more access to material about Moroni than appears in the text (See Helaman 3:14; Words of Mormon 1:5), consistently saw Moroni's choices and character in a favorable light (Grant Hardy, Understanding the Book of Mormon, New York, NY: Oxford University Press, 2010, 175-77). Moreover, the narrative itself demonstrates that Moroni's choice to forego a prisoner exchange turned to the Nephites' favor, for they were able to not only rescue the captives, but also boldly arm even the women and children, results that Moroni had openly announced and predicted in his letter (Alma 55:12, 17).

Whether or not Moroni's anger was a form of righteous indignation. President Gordon B. Hinckley taught that anger, when controlled, can sometimes be appropriate. See Gordon B. Hinckley, "Slow to Anger," Ensign, Nov. 2007, 62–65: "Anger may be justified in some circumstances (The scriptures tell us that Jesus drove the moneychangers from the temple, saying, 'My house shall be called the house of prayer; but ye have made it a den of thieves,' Matthew 21:13.), these epistles demonstrate that Moroni was able to channel his passion toward defending and protecting his people as God had entrusted him to do. Likewise, modern prophets and apostles, with their admitted personal flaws or weaknesses, have been called by God to accomplish His own purposes. Elder David A. Bednar taught, "I am blessed to observe on a daily basis the individual personalities, capacities, and noble characters of these leaders. Some people find the human shortcomings of the Brethren troubling and faith diminishing. For me those imperfections are encouraging and faith promoting" (David A. Bednar, "Chosen to Bear Testimony of My Name," Ensign, Nov. 2015, 128–131).

Mormon's assessment of Moroni's character can be a guiding star in helping readers assess his true worth and character. Concerning his righteousness, Mormon declared, "Yea, verily, verily I say unto you, if all men had been, and were, and ever would be, like unto Moroni, behold, the very powers of hell would have been shaken forever; yea, the devil would never have power over the hearts of the children of men" (Alma 48:17).

3 Behold, I know the place where the Lamanites do guard my people whom they have taken prisoners; and as Ammoron would not grant unto me mine epistle, behold, I will give unto him according to my words; yea, I will seek death among them until they shall sue for peace.

4 And now it came to pass that when Moroni had said these words, he caused that a search should be made among his men, that perhaps he might find a man who was a descendant of Laman among them.

verse 4 Apparently at this point in the Book of Mormon story, the Lamanites were physically distinguishable from the Nephites. Perhaps there were some language differences as well, though there is abundant evidence that the two groups had no major difficulties in communicating with each other.

5 And it came to pass that they found one, whose name was Laman; and he was one of the servants of the king who was murdered by Amalickiah.

6 Now Moroni caused that Laman and a small number of his men should go forth unto the guards who were over the Nephites.

7 Now the Nephites were guarded in the city of Gid; therefore Moroni appointed Laman and caused that a small number of men should go with him.

verses 8-15 These next eight verses present an almost comical picture of the Lamanites who appear somewhat naive and gullible. One gains the impression that the Nephites, at least in this instance, were cleverer than the Lamanites. The final touch is put on this impression by verses 29 through 31 below.

Dr. Hugh Nibley puts his own delightful spin on Moroni's plan to free the Nephite prisoners held in the town of Gid:

[Moroni] planned a ruse to free the war prisoners held in the city of Gid. The trick exploited the well-known psychology of troops on permanent guard duty. Such troops must always be on the alert for what they never expect to happen and what, if they do their duty, never will happen. Their way of life becomes a stultifying bore, with the same dull routines from day to day and from week to week. Nothing offers a more welcome release to such misery than a little nip now and then, or, better still, a party. A native Lamanite in the Nephite service answered the challenge of the Lamanite guards one evening with the announcement that his little party were escapees from the Nephites who had managed to get away with some of their wine. Of course, the guards insisted on sampling the stuff on the spot and on the sly. The protest of its owners that they should keep it against the day of battle "only made them more desirous to drink of the wine" (Alma 55:10). It was a typical "G.I." binge with everybody getting happily drunk at the guard-house since the stuff was doctored, "having been prepared in its strength" (Alma 55:13). While the guards were carousing and falling asleep, weapons were being thrown over the wall at certain places [to the Nephite prisoners within] under Moroni's personal supervision, and the guards even "had they awakened" would have been out of a job (Alma 55:16-18) (Since Cumorah, 316).

8 And when it was evening Laman went to the guards who were over the Nephites, and behold, they saw him coming and they hailed him; but he saith unto them: Fear not; behold, I am a Lamanite. Behold, we have escaped from the Nephites, and they sleep; and behold we have taken of their wine and brought with us.

9 Now when the Lamanites heard these words they received him with joy; and they said unto him: Give us of your wine, that we may drink; we are glad that ye have thus taken wine with you for we are weary.

verse 9 Wine in Mesoamerica "was probably made from the maguey plant or from other similar plants. The maguey plant is a relative to the century plant and has a large center with the appearance of a giant pineapple. The unfermented pulp juice is processed into tequila or mescal" (Joseph L. Allen, Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon, 174).

10 But Laman said unto them: Let us keep of our wine till we go against the Nephites to battle. But this saying only made them more desirous to drink of the wine;

verse 10 “Let us keep of our wine till we go against the Nephites to battle”

It is apparent that the Lamanites, and perhaps the Nephites as well, used their “wine” to prepare themselves for battle. Obviously, the wine could only impair their physical functioning but was likely used to “enhance” their bravery. Note in the following verse that “wine” was part of the Lamanite rations which were intended to “strengthen [them] to go against the Nephites.”

11 For, said they: We are weary, therefore let us take of the wine, and by and by we shall receive wine for our rations, which will strengthen us to go against the Nephites.

12 And Laman said unto them: You may do according to your desires.

13 And it came to pass that they did take of the wine freely; and it was pleasant to their taste, therefore they took of it more freely; and it was strong, having been prepared in its strength.

14 And it came to pass they did drink and were merry, and by and by they were all drunken.

verse 14 The phrase “by and by” means soon, presently, in a short while.

15 And now when Laman and his men saw that they were all drunken, and were in a deep sleep, they returned to Moroni and told him all the things that had happened.

16 And now this was according to the design of Moroni. And Moroni had prepared his men with weapons of war; and he went to the city Gid, while the Lamanites were in a deep sleep and drunken, and cast in weapons of war unto the prisoners, insomuch that they were all armed;

17 Yea, even to their women, and all those of their children, as many as were able to use a weapon of war, when Moroni had armed all those prisoners; and all those things were done in a profound silence.

18 But had they awakened the Lamanites, behold they were drunken and the Nephites could have slain them.

19 But behold, this was not the desire of Moroni; he did not delight in murder or bloodshed, but he delighted in the saving of his people from destruction; and for this cause he might not bring upon him injustice, he would not fall upon the Lamanites and destroy them in their drunkenness.

verse 19 “he would not fall upon the Lamanites and destroy them in their drunkenness” As we might have predicted, Moroni again does the decent thing and refuses to take advantage of these drunken Lamanites.

20 But he had obtained his desires; for he had armed those prisoners of the Nephites who were within the wall of the city, and had given them power to gain possession of those parts which were within the walls.

21 And then he caused the men who were with him to withdraw a pace from them, and surround the armies of the Lamanites.

22 Now behold this was done in the night-time, so that when the Lamanites awoke in the morning they beheld that they were surrounded by the Nephites without, and that their prisoners were armed within.

23 And thus they saw that the Nephites had power over them; and in these circumstances they found that it was not expedient that they should fight with the Nephites; therefore their chief captains demanded their weapons of war, and they brought them forth and cast them at the feet of the Nephites, pleading for mercy.

verse 23 “their chief captains demanded their weapons of war, and they brought them forth and cast them at the feet of the Nephites, pleading for mercy”

The Lamanite chief captains saw the hopelessness of their situation. They demanded that their own Lamanite soldiers deliver to them their weapons. Then, these Lamanite captains brought the weapons forth and cast them at the feet of the Nephites, begging for mercy.

24 Now behold, this was the desire of Moroni. He took them prisoners of war, and took possession of the city, and caused that all the prisoners should be liberated, who were Nephites; and they did join the army of Moroni, and were a great strength to his army.

25 And it came to pass that he did cause the Lamanites, whom he had taken prisoners, that they should commence a labor in strengthening the fortifications round about the city Gid.

26 And it came to pass that when he had fortified the city Gid, according to his desires, he caused that his prisoners should be taken to the city Bountiful; and he also guarded that city with an exceedingly strong force.

27 And it came to pass that they did, notwithstanding all the intrigues of the Lamanites, keep and protect all the prisoners whom they had taken, and also maintain all the ground and the advantage which they had retaken.

28 And it came to pass that the Nephites began again to be victorious, and to reclaim their rights and their privileges.

29 Many times did the Lamanites attempt to encircle them about by night, but in these attempts they did lose many prisoners.

30 And many times did they attempt to administer of their wine to the Nephites, that they might destroy them with poison or with drunkenness.

verses 29-30 At this point the Lamanites attempted to utilize some the tricks the Nephites had used, including the wine-trick, but the Nephites were pretty well on to them.

31 But behold, the Nephites were not slow to remember the Lord their God in this their time of affliction. They could not be taken in their snares; yea, they would not partake of their wine, save they had first given to some of the Lamanite prisoners.

verse 31 “They could not be taken in their snares” The Nephites knew of the Lamanite subterfuge and would not be taken in by the “snares” of the Lamanites.

32 And they were thus cautious that no poison should be administered among them; for if their wine would poison a Lamanite it would also poison a Nephite; and thus they did try all their liquors.

verse 32 “thus they did try all their liquors” Nephites tested all of the Lamanite wine by forcing a Lamanite prisoner to drink it first. If the Lamanite prisoner lived, then the Nephites knew the wine was safe.

33 And now it came to pass that it was expedient for Moroni to make preparations to attack the city Morianton; for behold, the Lamanites had, by their labors, fortified the city Morianton until it had become an exceeding stronghold.

34 And they were continually bringing new forces into that city, and also new supplies of provisions.

35 And thus ended the twenty and ninth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi.

Alma Chapter 56

The sons of Helaman (the 2,000 stripling warriors) are mentioned in only four chapters of the Book of Mormon: Alma 53, 56, 57, and 58. It is interesting to note that of these four chapters, only Alma 53 is narrated in the third person by Mormon who abridged the large plates of Nephi. In Alma 56-58, Mormon elects to provide us with the account of the sons of Helaman from the original source, which is a letter from Helaman to captain Moroni. With the exception of one verse of personal commentary (Alma 56:52) Mormon lets us see their battles through the pen of the man who witnessed the courage of these 2,000 stripling warriors first hand.

1 And now it came to pass in the commencement of the thirtieth year of the reign of the judges, on the second day in the first month, Moroni received an epistle from Helaman, stating the affairs of the people in that quarter of the land.

verse 1 What time of the year did this event occur? How does the Nephite calendar correspond to our calendar today? For a discussion of this question, see the commentary for Alma 16:1.

“the affairs of the people in that quarter of the land” Helaman wrote his letter from the southwest quarter of the greater land of Zarahemla.

2 And these are the words which he wrote, saying: My dearly beloved brother, Moroni, as well in the Lord as in the tribulations of our warfare; behold, my beloved brother, I have somewhat to tell you concerning our warfare in this part of the land.

verse 2 “And these are the words which he wrote, saying” Obviously Mormon wrote verse 1 and also this particular phrase. Helaman’s letter to Moroni begins in this verse with the salutation, “My dearly beloved brother, Moroni.” His letter extends through Alma 58:41 and is evidently quoted verbatim except for a single third-person comment by Mormon in Alma 56:52.

“as well in the Lord as in the tribulations of our warfare” Helaman intends to say that he regards Moroni to be his brother both in spiritual and military affairs.

3 Behold, two thousand of the sons of those men whom Ammon brought down out of the land of Nephi—now ye have known that these were descendants of Laman, who was the eldest son of our father Lehi;

4 Now I need not rehearse unto you concerning their traditions or their unbelief, for thou knowest concerning all these things—verse 4 If the reader desires a review of the origins of these two thousand young men, see the commentary for Alma 53:9.

5 Therefore it sufficeth me that I tell you that two thousand of these young men have taken their weapons of war, and would that I should be their leader; and we have come forth to defend our country.

6 And now ye also know concerning the covenant which their fathers made, that they would not take up their weapons of war against their brethren to shed blood.

7 But in the twenty and sixth year, when they saw our afflictions and our tribulations for them, they were about to break the covenant which they had made and take up their weapons of war in our defense.

verse 7 “our tribulations for them” Helaman speaks of “our tribulations on their behalf.”

8 But I would not suffer them that they should break this covenant which they had made, supposing that God would strengthen us, insomuch that we should not suffer more because of the fulfilling the oath which they had taken.

9 But behold, here is one thing in which we may have great joy. For behold, in the twenty and sixth year, I, Helaman, did march at the head of these two thousand young men to the city of Judea, to assist Antipus, whom ye had appointed a leader over the people of that part of the land.

10 And I did join my two thousand sons, (for they are worthy to be called sons) to the army of Antipus, in which strength Antipus did rejoice exceedingly; for behold, his army had been reduced by the Lamanites because their forces had slain a vast number of our men, for which cause we have to mourn.

11 Nevertheless, we may console ourselves in this point, that they have died in the cause of their country and of their God, yea, and they are happy.

12 And the Lamanites had also retained many prisoners, all of whom are chief captains, for none other have they spared alive. And we suppose that they are now at this time in the land of Nephi; it is so if they are not slain.

verses 13-15 Dr. Hugh Nibley feels that Helaman included a map in his letter to Moroni. His belief is based upon these three verses in which Helaman seems to be referring to an enclosed map (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 317-18).

13 And now these are the cities of which the Lamanites have obtained possession by the shedding of the blood of so many of our valiant men;

14 The land of Manti, or the city of Manti, and the city of Zeezrom, and the city of Cumeni, and the city of Antiparah.

15 And these are the cities which they possessed when I arrived at the city of Judea; and I found Antipus and his men toiling with their might to fortify the city.

16 Yea, and they were depressed in body as well as in spirit, for they had fought valiantly by day and toiled by night to maintain their cities; and thus they had suffered great afflictions of every kind.

verse 16 The army of Antipus had obviously experienced set back after set back in their campaign to maintain Nephite control of the cities in the southwest quadrant of the land. They had, in fact, lost control of every city but two—Judea and an unnamed city near the west coast.

17 And now they were determined to conquer in this place or die; therefore you may well suppose that this little force which I brought with me, yea, those sons of mine, gave them great hopes and much joy.

verse 17 The men of Antipus were discouraged and depleted to their last. Their back was “to the wall.” They had committed themselves to hold the city of Judea or die. Obviously, the arrival of Helaman and his two thousand young soldiers was a real morale booster for those Nephites under Antipus. Antipus’s army had been working feverishly to fortify the city of Judea.

18 And now it came to pass that when the Lamanites saw that Antipus had received a greater strength to his army, they were compelled by the orders of Ammoron to not come against the city of Judea, or against us, to battle.

19 And thus were we favored of the Lord; for had they come upon us in this our weakness they might have perhaps destroyed our little army; but thus were we preserved.

20 They were commanded by Ammoron to maintain those cities which they had taken. And thus ended the twenty and sixth year. And in the commencement of the twenty and seventh year we had prepared our city and ourselves for defense.

21 Now we were desirous that the Lamanites should come upon us; for we were not desirous to make an attack upon them in their strongholds.

verse 21 While the Nephites by this time felt pretty good about their chances of successfully defending the city of Judea with its incomplete fortifications, they were not sufficiently strong to succeed in an offensive initiative.

22 And it came to pass that we kept spies out round about, to watch the movements of the Lamanites, that they might not pass us by night nor by day to make an attack upon our other cities which were on the northward.

verse 22 The Nephites maintained a careful watch hoping to catch the Lamanite forces in open field, believing that this would give them a better chance for victory.

23 For we knew in those cities they were not sufficiently strong to meet them; therefore we were desirous, if they should pass by us, to fall upon them in their rear, and thus bring them up in the rear at the same time they were met in the front. We supposed that we could overpower them; but behold, we were disappointed in this our desire.

verse 23 “they were not sufficiently strong to meet them” The Nephites in the more northern cities were not sufficiently strong to withstand an attack by the Lamanite army.

“we were disappointed in this our desire” The Lamanites remained in their well-fortified captured cities.

24 They durst not pass by us with their whole army, neither durst they with a part, lest they should not be sufficiently strong and they should fall.

25 Neither durst they march down against the city of Zarahemla; neither durst they cross the head of Sidon, over to the city of Nephihah.

26 And thus, with their forces, they were determined to maintain those cities which they had taken.

verses 23-26 Obviously, a stalemate had developed with neither side being sufficiently confident to initiate an attack.

27 And now it came to pass in the second month of this year, there was brought unto us many provisions from the fathers of those my two thousand sons.

verse 27 Obviously, the garrison in this quarter of the land depended on Zarahemla or Melek for provisions. It might also be concluded that the terrain in this area was unsuitable for raising sufficient food to sustain the large army. We also note that the closest significant population center where appreciable food could be raised was Zarahemla, and that the distance to Zarahemla was not sufficiently large so as to preclude transport of the needed provisions (Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, “A Correlation of the Sidon River and the Lands of Manti and Zarahemla with the Southern End of the Rio Grijalva,” 149).

28 And also there were sent two thousand men unto us from the land of Zarahemla. And thus we were prepared with ten thousand men, and provisions for them, and also for their wives and their children.

29 And the Lamanites, thus seeing our forces increase daily, and provisions arrive for our support, they began to be fearful, and began to sally forth, if it were possible to put an end to our receiving provisions and strength.

verse 29 To sally forth is to rush out, as a body of troops, from a fortified place to attack besiegers.

Hugh Nibley adds his comments:

The boys continued getting packages from home, and then two thousand new recruits arrived from the capital. At this the Lamanites began to grow uneasy in the face of what looked like a Nephite buildup, and so it was possible to stage another decoy act by giving it a new twist. The two thousand sons of Helaman were instructed to escort a supply-train up the coast, knowing that the Lamanite spies from the city of Antiparah would be sure to spot them. Naturally it was a chance not to be missed for the Lamanites, and at any rate the supplies had to be stopped. So, they took a calculated risk and sent out a large force in pursuit of the two thousand who moved briskly and kept out of reach, following instructions. Even when the Lamanites learned that another Nephite force was pursuing them they continued the chase of the two thousand, for they expected a situation like that and felt strong enough to cope with it—“Even . . . when they saw the army of Antipus pursuing them . . . they did not turn to the right nor to the left, but pursued their march in a straight course after us” (Alma 56:30-37). In the hot pace that the three armies were setting each other nobody dared relax or turn to either side; but when the straining troops of Antipus started stepping on Lamanite heels the Lamanite army turned to face them with overpowering numbers (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 318).

30 Now when we saw that the Lamanites began to grow uneasy on this wise, we were desirous to bring a stratagem into effect upon them; therefore Antipus ordered that I should march forth with my little sons to a neighboring city, as if we were carrying provisions to a neighboring city.

verse 30 “we were desirous to bring a stratagem into effect upon them” The Book of Mormon’s rich accounts of warfare in the first century BC are replete with battlefield strategies, various military maneuvers, topographical awareness, innovative fortifications and weaponry, concerns over provisions, military intelligence, and even covert, late-night operations.

These narratives have captured the imagination of Latter-day Saints of all ages, from young boys in primary to popular fiction writers. Perhaps less recognized, these chapters have also caught the attention of those some with both academic and professional military expertise (See Hugh Nibley, Since Cumorah, The Collected Works of Hugh Nibley: Volume 7, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1988, 291–333; Hugh Nibley, “Warfare and the Book of Mormon,” in Warfare in the Book of Mormon, ed. Hamblin, “The Importance of Warfare in Book of Mormon Studies,” in Warfare in the Book of Mormon, 481–499, reprinted in Book of Mormon Authorship Revisited, ed. Noel B. Before Hugh Nibley was the popular BYU professor and scholar, he was a soldier in World War II (For Nibley's time in the military, see Boyd Jay Petersen, Hugh Nibley: A Consecrated Life, Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Book, 2002, 167–222). After experiencing the horrors of war, he strenuously avoided the war chapters in the Book of Mormon (Nibley, Since Cumorah, 291). When he finally turned his critical-eye toward the military accounts, he quickly saw, “It is real war that we see here, a tedious, sordid, plodding, joyless routine of see-saw successes and losses—brutally expensive, destructive, exhausting, and boring, with constant marches and countermarches that end sometimes in fiasco and sometimes in intensely unpleasant engagements.” Nibley felt this kind of war could only be described by someone who experienced it. Nibley writes as one would write—as only one could write—who had gone through a long war as a front-line observer with his eyes wide open. Everything is strictly authentic, with the proper emphasis in the proper place. Strategy and tactics are treated with the knowledge of an expert: logistics and supply; armaments and fortifications; recruiting and training; problems of morale and support from the home front; military intelligence from cloak and dagger to scouting and patrolling; interrogation, guarding, feeding, and exchange of war prisoners; propaganda and psychological warfare; rehabilitation and resettlement; feelers for peace and negotiations at various levels; treason; profiteering; and the exploitation of the war economy by individuals and groups—it is all there” (Nibley, Since Cumorah, 292).

Several years later, former U.S. Army reserve officer John E. Kammeyer concluded, “the Book of Mormon does indeed depict warfare on three levels: it is realistic war, it is realistic Iron Age warfare, and it is realistic Mesoamerican warfare” (Kammeyer, The Nephite Art of War, 182). Consistent with these conclusions, William J. Hamblin, a military historian, also concluded “the Book of Mormon [warfare] uniquely reflects its dual heritage of the ancient Near East and Mesoamerica” (Hamblin, “The Importance of Warfare in Book of Mormon Studies,” 496).

Morgan Deane, who is a PhD candidate in military history, also served in the Marine Corps. Bringing his unique set of expertise, Deane remarked, “Leaders in The Book of Mormon responded in realistic and organized fashion” (Deane, Bleached Bones, 91).

David E. Spencer, who has a unique background that combines U.S. Army experience with an academic and professional expertise in defense studies, concluded, after careful study of the maneuvers in Alma 56, that: “These seemingly sudden, illogical actions . . . speak volumes about the authenticity of the text and the military expertise of the author, as when all of the clues provided in the text are examined in depth, the logic becomes apparent” (Spencer, Moroni's Command, 91).

Many aspects of military theory are universal across time and space. Nonetheless, proper understanding and expertise in the strategy and tactics of war requires years of study, extensive training, and real-life experience. Joseph Smith lacked that kind of background (For what Joseph Smith could have known about military theory, see Kammeyer, The Nephite Art of War, chapter 1), yet several modern readers with just such qualifications have found that the Book of Mormon accounts of wartime strategy are strikingly realistic.

According to Spencer—who has been involved in creating battle scenarios for training purposes—this kind of accuracy was beyond the ability of Joseph Smith to fabricate (For his experience making-up battle simulations, see Spencer, Moroni's Command, 4).

This is the sort of unconscious consistency in war accounts that would be almost impossible for someone writing a made-up story—as Joseph Smith has been accused of—to get right. And yet the Book of Mormon gets them right repeatedly (Spencer, Moroni's Command, 91).

The realism of the Book of Mormon's crucial accounts about warfare carries with it many equally authentic lessons that are critical for our day (See Deane, Bleached Bones for application of Book of Mormon war principles to modern military practice and policy. For Latter-day Saint perspectives on war, see Patrick Q. Mason, J. David Pulsipher, and Richard L. Bushman, eds., War and Peace in Our Time: Mormon Perspectives, Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2012; Duane Boyce, Even unto Bloodshed: An LDS Perspective on War, Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2015). The horrors of inhumane militarism carries with it a stark warning for modern societies. No one knew this better than Mormon, the Nephite prophet, historian, and commander-in-chief. Kammeyer rightly concluded that if Mormon's record presents real, authentic accounts of devastating wars and rightly attributes them to wickedness, then “we have to take seriously the book's assertion that survival of a society depends on obedience to God” (Kammeyer, The Nephite Art of War, 182).

31 And we were to march near the city of Antiparah, as if we were going to the city beyond, in the borders by the seashore.

verse 31 “the city beyond, in the borders by the seashore” This city is never named in the text. Please see the map, Book of Mormon Lands, a Proposed Setting. On this map, this city is referred to as simply “city.”

32 And it came to pass that we did march forth, as if with our provisions, to go to that city.

33 And it came to pass that Antipus did march forth with a part of his army, leaving the remainder to maintain the city. But he did not march forth until I had gone forth with my little army, and came near the city Antiparah.

verse 33 “leaving the remainder to maintain the city” Antipus, you will recall, marched forth from the city of Judea, leaving part of his army behind to maintain Judea.

34 And now, in the city Antiparah were stationed the strongest army of the Lamanites; yea, the most numerous.

35 And it came to pass that when they had been informed by their spies, they came forth with their army and marched against us.

36 And it came to pass that we did flee before them, northward. And thus we did lead away the most powerful army of the Lamanites;

37 Yea, even to a considerable distance, insomuch that when they saw the army of Antipus pursuing them, with their might, they did not turn to the right nor to the left, but pursued their march in a straight course after us; and, as we suppose, it was their intent to slay us before Antipus should overtake them, and this that they might not be surrounded by our people.

verse 37 “pursued their march in a straight course” Generally it is accepted that straight is the correct modifier when straight modifies the word course and especially when it placed immediately contiguous to course (Reynolds and Skousen, “Strait and Narrow,” 32). See the supplemental article, Strait and Straight in the Book of Mormon.

38 And now Antipus, beholding our danger, did speed the march of his army. But behold, it was night; therefore they did not overtake us, neither did Antipus overtake them; therefore we did camp for the night.

39 And it came to pass that before the dawn of the morning, behold, the Lamanites were pursuing us. Now we were not sufficiently strong to contend with them; yea, I would not suffer that my little sons should fall into their hands; therefore we did continue our march, and we took our march into the wilderness.

40 Now they durst not turn to the right nor to the left lest they should be surrounded; neither would I turn to the right nor to the left lest they should overtake me, and we could not stand against them, but be slain, and they would make their escape; and thus we did flee all that day into the wilderness, even until it was dark.

41 And it came to pass that again, when the light of the morning came we saw the Lamanites upon us, and we did flee before them.

42 But it came to pass that they did not pursue us far before they halted; and it was in the morning of the third day of the seventh month.

verse 42 We will learn that this unexpected stopping of the Lamanite army will pose a dilemma for Helaman. Perhaps the army of Antipus had caught up with the Lamanites and had engaged them in battle. If Helaman and his young warriors continued running, they might be leaving the army of Antipus without their expected and needed support. On the other hand, if the Lamanites stopped for the sole purpose of deceiving Helaman and making him think that Antipus had caught up with them, and if Helaman ordered his forces back against the Lamanites, he might be sending them into a trap. We will learn that he will leave the decision up to his “sons.”

43 And now, whether they were overtaken by Antipus we knew not, but I said unto my men: Behold, we know not but they have halted for the purpose that we should come against them, that they might catch us in their snare;

44 Therefore what say ye, my sons, will ye go against them to battle?

45 And now I say unto you, my beloved brother Moroni, that never had I seen so great courage, nay, not amongst all the Nephites.

46 For as I had ever called them my sons (for they were all of them very young) even so they said unto me: Father, behold our God is with us, and he will not suffer that we should fall; then let us go forth; we would not slay our brethren if they would let us alone; therefore let us go, lest they should overpower the army of Antipus.

verse 46 “as I had ever called them my sons . . . they said unto me: Father” Helaman says here, “Because they were young and I was in the habit of referring to them as sons, they called me “father.”

“Behold our God is with us, and he will not suffer that we should fall” The remarkable reason behind this bravery is found in the next verse. They had a simple and unquestioning faith in the things their mothers had taught them!

47 Now they never had fought, yet they did not fear death; and they did think more upon the liberty of their fathers than they did upon their lives; yea, they had been taught by their mothers, that if they did not doubt, God would deliver them.

verse 47 It will ever be true that good and righteous men die in battle. How did the mother of these stripling warriors dare teach their sons “that if they did not doubt, God would deliver them”? We may assume that the Lord had communicated with the mothers and confirmed through the Spirit that he would protect them provided they were obedient and faithful. For these young men, the Lamanites were less the enemy and more a test of obedience. The Lamanites were the fire in which these young men would be refined. The real enemy was the possibility of wavering in their faith in the power of God to deliver them.

48 And they rehearsed unto me the words of their mothers, saying: We do not doubt our mothers knew it.

verse 48 “We do not doubt our mothers knew it” In the commentary for Alma 54:23-24, we discussed that fact that the punctuation of the text of the Book of Mormon does not enjoy the same revealed status as the words themselves. Please review that commentary. We may speculate about the meaning of this verse which may be altered somewhat by a change in punctuation. As the verse now stands, it appears that the young men are expressing confidence in their mothers' testimonies: "We do not doubt [that] our mothers knew it." But with a break in the middle—either a semicolon or a period—the meaning changes slightly: "We do not doubt; our mothers knew it," which implies something along the lines of "We do not doubt, because our mothers knew it." Or even, "We do not doubt. After all, our mothers knew." This amended punctuation fits the context better. The previous verse makes it clear that God's promise of deliverance depended on the faith of the young men themselves rather than on the belief of their mothers. And indeed, in the next chapter Helaman credits their miraculous preservation to their own lack of doubts (Alma 57:21, 26-27).

49 And it came to pass that I did return with my two thousand against these Lamanites who had pursued us. And now behold, the armies of Antipus had overtaken them, and a terrible battle had commenced.

50 The army of Antipus being weary, because of their long march in so short a space of time, were about to fall into the hands of the Lamanites; and had I not returned with my two thousand they would have obtained their purpose.

51 For Antipus had fallen by the sword, and many of his leaders, because of their weariness, which was occasioned by the speed of their march—therefore the men of Antipus, being confused because of the fall of their leaders, began to give way before the Lamanites.

52 And it came to pass that the Lamanites took courage, and began to pursue them; and thus were the Lamanites pursuing them with great vigor when Helaman came upon their rear with his two thousand, and began to slay them exceedingly, insomuch that the whole army of the Lamanites halted and turned upon Helaman.

verse 52 "Helaman came upon their rear" Note that all the way through Helaman's letter to Moroni (Alma 56:2 through Alma 58:41), Helaman refers to himself in the first person. However, in this verse, and in only this verse, there is an unexplained change to the third person. In the printer's manuscript of the original edition of the Book of Mormon, it appeared that the word "I" appeared before Helaman but was crossed out. It appears likely that the text should read "I Helaman came upon their rear with my two thousand . . . the Lamanites halted and turned upon me" ("Conjectural Emendation and the Text of the Book of Mormon," Stan Larson, a FARMS reprint). As the current text now stands, we would have to suggest that perhaps this verse is an editorial comment by the prophet Mormon.

53 Now when the people of Antipus saw that the Lamanites had turned them about, they gathered together their men and came again upon the rear of the Lamanites.

54 And now it came to pass that we, the people of Nephi, the people of Antipus, and I with my two thousand, did surround the Lamanites, and did slay them; yea, insomuch that they were compelled to deliver up their weapons of war and also themselves as prisoners of war.

55 And now it came to pass that when they had surrendered themselves up unto us, behold, I numbered those young men who had fought with me, fearing lest there were many of them slain.

56 But behold, to my great joy, there had not one soul of them fallen to the earth; yea, and they had fought as if with the strength of God; yea, never were men known to have fought with such miraculous strength; and with such mighty power did they fall upon the Lamanites, that they did frighten them; and for this cause did the Lamanites deliver themselves up as prisoners of war.

57 And as we had no place for our prisoners, that we could guard them to keep them from the armies of the Lamanites, therefore we sent them to the land of Zarahemla, and a part of those men who were not slain of Antipus, with them; and the remainder I took and joined them to my stripping Ammonites, and took our march back to the city of Judea.

1 And now it came to pass that I received an epistle from Ammoron, the king, stating that if I would deliver up those prisoners of war whom we had taken that he would deliver up the city of Antiparah unto us.

verse 1 It is obvious that Ammoron knew that he did not have sufficient man power to hold the city of Antiparah against the now powerful Nephite army. He hoped to strike a bargain with Helaman, yet he was now dealing from a position of weakness rather than a position of strength. He attempted a clever ploy and offered to surrender the city in exchange for all of the Lamanite prisoners taken by the Nephites.

2 But I sent an epistle unto the king, that we were sure our forces were sufficient to take the city of Antiparah by our force; and by delivering up the prisoners for that city we should suppose ourselves unwise, and that we would only deliver up our prisoners on exchange.

verse 2 “we would only deliver up our prisoners on exchange” Helaman was not taken in by Ammoron’s sly attempt to at deception. Helaman proposes his own plan for prisoner exchange. He would exchange one Lamanite prisoner for the release of one Nephite prisoner held captive by the Lamanites.

3 And Ammoron refused mine epistle, for he would not exchange prisoners; therefore we began to make preparations to go against the city of Antiparah.

verse 3 So Ammoron called off the prisoner exchange.

4 But the people of Antiparah did leave the city, and fled to their other cities, which they had possession of, to fortify them; and thus the city of Antiparah fell into our hands.

verse 4 “the people of Antiparah did leave the city” The Lamanite defenders of the city abandoned the city when they realized their hopeless plight. The Nephites took control of Antiparah without having to engage anyone in battle.

5 And thus ended the twenty and eighth year of the reign of the judges.

6 And it came to pass that in the commencement of the twenty and ninth year, we received a supply of provisions, and also an addition to our army, from the land of Zarahemla, and from the land round about, to the number of six thousand men, besides sixty of the sons of the Ammonites who had come to join their brethren, my little band of two thousand. And now behold, we were strong, yea, and we had also plenty of provisions brought unto us.

7 And it came to pass that it was our desire to wage a battle with the army which was placed to protect the city Cumeni.

8 And now behold, I will show unto you that we soon accomplished our desire; yea, with our strong force, or with a part of our strong force, we did surround, by night, the city Cumeni, a little before they were to receive a supply of provisions.

verse 8 Helaman organized a military blockade of Cumeni and cut the supply line for the Lamanites in the city.

9 And it came to pass that we did camp round about the city for many nights; but we did sleep upon our swords, and keep guards, that the Lamanites could not come upon us by night and slay us, which they attempted many times; but as many times as they attempted this their blood was spilt.

10 At length their provisions did arrive, and they were about to enter the city by night. And we, instead of being Lamanites, were Nephites; therefore, we did take them and their provisions.

verse 10 “instead of being Lamanites, were Nephites” Helaman implies that his Nephite guards surprised the Lamanites who were delivering provisions to the Lamanites in the city of Cumeni. They captured the Lamanites and the provisions they were delivering.

11 And notwithstanding the Lamanites being cut off from their support after this manner, they were still determined to maintain the city; therefore it became expedient that we should take those provisions and send them to Judea, and our prisoners to the land of Zarahemla.

12 And it came to pass that not many days had passed away before the Lamanites began to lose all hopes of succor; therefore they yielded up the city unto our hands; and thus we had accomplished our designs in obtaining the city Cumeni.

verse 12 Helaman’s blockade was successful. He had starved the Lamanites out and forced them to surrender.

verses 13-18 Hugh Nibley has a delightful way of succinctly summarizing the historical events in the Book of Mormon and, at the same time, adding his own editorial spice:

By now the Nephites were simply swamped with prisoners of war, who, seeing the embarrassment of their captors, began to stage prison riots, for behold, they would break out in great numbers, and would fight with stones, and with clubs” and had to be bloodily suppressed. A very large body of prisoners was being escorted back to the capital by crack Nephite troops when they collided with a Lamanite army escorting a large supply train . . . The [Nephite] guards forgot about their prisoners and high-tailed it back to Helaman's headquarters or command post to report the new danger; only just as they arrived there they found the headquarters company hotly engaged with the advanced elements of the same Lamanite army, and were able to join in the fighting just in time to turn the tide and save the command post" (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 319-20).

13 But it came to pass that our prisoners were so numerous that, notwithstanding the enormity of our numbers, we were obliged to employ all our force to keep them, or to put them to death.

14 For behold, they would break out in great numbers, and would fight with stones, and with clubs, or whatsoever thing they could get into their hands, insomuch that we did slay upwards of two thousand of them after they had surrendered themselves prisoners of war.

15 Therefore it became expedient for us, that we should put an end to their lives, or guard them, sword in hand, down to the land of Zarahemla; and also our provisions were not any more than sufficient for our own people, notwithstanding that which we had taken from the Lamanites.

16 And now, in those critical circumstances, it became a very serious matter to determine concerning these prisoners of war; nevertheless, we did resolve to send them down to the land of Zarahemla; therefore we selected a part of our men, and gave them charge over our prisoners to go down to the land of Zarahemla.

verse 16 We will learn that those chosen to escort the prisoners to Zarahemla were some from among the 2,060 of the sons of Helaman. They were led by Gid, and a more detailed account of this prisoner-transporting incident is found in verses 28-34 of this chapter.

17 But it came to pass that on the morrow they did return. And now behold, we did not inquire of them concerning the prisoners; for behold, the Lamanites were upon us, and they returned in season to save us from falling into their hands. For behold, Ammoron had sent to their support a new supply of provisions and also a numerous army of men.

18 And it came to pass that those men whom we sent with the prisoners did arrive in season to check them, as they were about to overpower us.

verse 18 "did arrive in season to check them" To check means to stop; to restrain; to curb.

19 But behold, my little band of two thousand and sixty fought most desperately; yea, they were firm before the Lamanites, and did administer death unto all those who opposed them.

20 And as the remainder of our army were about to give way before the Lamanites, behold, those two thousand and sixty were firm and undaunted.

verse 20 Undaunted means not cowed by fear; intrepid.

21 Yea, and they did obey and observe to perform every word of command with exactness; yea, and even according to their faith it was done unto them; and I did remember the words which they said unto me that their mothers had taught them.

verse 21 “they did obey and observe to perform every word of command with exactness” Obviously, there is real power in obedience “with exactness.” The Lord has taught: “I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say; but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise” (D&C 82:10). Notice how the young warriors intuitively understood that obedience to their leaders was an extension of their obedience to God. Their obedience to their leader Helaman was immediate and exact. Would it have been possible to obey God without obeying Helaman? Here is the ultimate test of obedience: to show one’s allegiance to a perfect and infallible God by how we obey those less than perfect who are called to lead us.

In this verse Helaman directly attributes the last-minute Nephite victory to the faithfulness of his stripling warriors: “Yea, and they did obey and observe to perform every word of command with exactness; yea, and even according to their faith it was done unto them.” This dedication and diligence saved the Nephites from “critical circumstances” (verse 16) that otherwise might very well have doomed the Nephite war effort.

The language in Alma 57 in describing the sons of Helaman hearkens back to the language of another ancient military campaign: that of the Israelite conquest of Canaan as recorded in the book of Joshua. As the children of Israel were preparing for war with Canaanite enemies, the Lord commanded them through the prophet-general Joshua, “Be strong and of a good courage . . . that thou mayest observe to do according to all the law, which Moses my servant commanded thee: turn not from it to the right hand or to the left, that thou mayest prosper whithersoever thou goest” (Joshua 1:6–7).

This command to the Israelites was repeated throughout the campaign in Canaan (cf. Joshua 10:25; 23:6). It was conjoined with a promise that if the children of Israel were strictly faithful and obedient to all the Lord’s commandments, he would lead them, fight for them, deliver them from their enemies, and prosper them in the land of promise (Joshua 1:8, 23). The book of Joshua retells several instances where the Israelites were routed because of their disobedience to the Lord (e.g. Joshua 7). The clear intention of these accounts was to show the dangers of rebellion, disobedience, and apostasy, especially during precarious times when exacting obedience to God was necessary for collective success and national salvation.

On a strictly pragmatic level, the success or failure of a military campaign largely depends on the effectiveness of the combat force. Victory is dependent on troops that are disciplined, loyal, obedient, and quick to execute their commanders' orders. Helaman's stripling warriors more than proved their combat effectiveness in their quick, decisive, and unflinching bravery and loyalty in the face of opposition.

On a spiritual level, this portrayal of the sons of Helaman may serve to reinforce an important doctrine in the Book of Mormon; namely, "Inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments, ye shall prosper in the land ... Inasmuch as ye will not keep my commandments ye shall be cut off from the presence of the Lord" (Alma 9:13). Much more than merely to acquire wealth, to "prosper" in a scriptural sense is to fulfill righteous desires or promises and, ultimately, to find safety in the Lord's presence. This was true also for the ancient Israelites, who were promised both temporal and spiritual blessings in the land of promise should they "prosper" by keeping the Lord's commandments.

Likening the tenacity of the stripling warriors to modern followers of Christ, Elder David F. Evans of the Seventy remarked, "In life, it is when the rains descend and the floods come and the winds blow and beat upon us and on our house that we determine whether our faith is strong and whether we put our trust in God continually" ("Tenacity and Discipleship," Ensign, June 2016, 20). Like the ancient Nephites and Israelites, modern believers can find strength in following their Lord's commandments, especially in times of adversity.

22 And now behold, it was these my sons, and those men who had been selected to convey the prisoners, to whom we owe this great victory; for it was they who did beat the Lamanites; therefore they were driven back to the city of Manti.

23 And we retained our city Cumeni, and were not all destroyed by the sword; nevertheless, we had suffered great loss.

24 And it came to pass that after the Lamanites had fled, I immediately gave orders that my men who had been wounded should be taken from among the dead, and caused that their wounds should be dressed.

25 And it came to pass that there were two hundred, out of my two thousand and sixty, who had fainted because of the loss of blood; nevertheless, according to the goodness of God, and to our great astonishment, and also the joy of our whole army, there was not one soul of them who did perish; yea, and neither was there one soul among them who had not received many wounds.

verse 25 Each and every one of the 2,060 sons of Helaman had been wounded, but not one had been killed!

26 And now, their preservation was astonishing to our whole army, yea, that they should be spared while there was a thousand of our brethren who were slain. And we do justly ascribe it to the miraculous power of God, because of their exceeding faith in that which they had been taught to believe—that there was a just God, and whosoever did not doubt, that they should be preserved by his marvelous power.

27 Now this was the faith of these of whom I have spoken; they are young, and their minds are firm, and they do put their trust in God continually.

28 And now it came to pass that after we had thus taken care of our wounded men, and had buried our dead and also the dead of the Lamanites, who were many, behold, we did inquire of Gid concerning the prisoners whom they had started to go down to the land of Zarahemla with.

29 Now Gid was the chief captain over the band who was appointed to guard them down to the land.

30 And now, these are the words which Gid said unto me: Behold, we did start to go down to the land of Zarahemla with our prisoners. And it came to pass that we did meet the spies of our armies, who had been sent out to watch the camp of the Lamanites.

31 And they cried unto us, saying—Behold, the armies of the Lamanites are marching towards the city of Cumeni; and behold, they will fall upon them, yea, and will destroy our people.

verse 31 “the armies of the Lamanites are marching towards the city of Cumeni” It is interesting that the original text of the Book of Mormon rendered this phrase “the Lamanites are a marching towards the city (italics added).” This latter form is actually better Hebrew (see John 21:3).

32 And it came to pass that our prisoners did hear their cries, which caused them to take courage; and they did rise up in rebellion against us.

33 And it came to pass because of their rebellion we did cause that our swords should come upon them. And it came to pass that they did in a body run upon our swords, in the which, the greater number of them were slain; and the remainder of them broke through and fled from us.

34 And behold, when they had fled and we could not overtake them, we took our march with speed towards the city Cumeni; and behold, we did arrive in time that we might assist our brethren in preserving the city.

35 And behold, we are again delivered out of the hands of our enemies. And blessed is the name of our God; for behold, it is he that has delivered us; yea, that has done this great thing for us.

36 Now it came to pass that when I, Helaman, had heard these words of Gid, I was filled with exceeding joy because of the goodness of God in preserving us, that we might not all perish; yea, and I trust that the souls of them who have been slain have entered into the rest of their God.

verse 36 “the rest of their God” For a discussion of the concept of the rest of the Lord, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 21:10.

Helaman continues his letter to Moroni.

1 And behold, now it came to pass that our next object was to obtain the city of Manti; but behold, there was no way that we could lead them out of the city by our small bands. For behold, they remembered that which we had hitherto done; therefore we could not decoy them away from their strongholds.

2 And they were so much more numerous than was our army that we durst not go forth and attack them in their strongholds.

3 Yea, and it became expedient that we should employ our men to the maintaining those parts of the land which we had regained of our possessions; therefore it became expedient that we should wait, that we might receive more strength from the land of Zarahemla and also a new supply of provisions.

verse 3 Again, a stalemate had developed. Both the Nephites and the Lamanites were safely holed up behind the Moroni-designed fortifications, and the Lamanites were simply too numerous for the Nephites to consider an attack. The Nephites were badly in need of additional men and provisions.

4 And it came to pass that I thus did send an embassy to the governor of our land, to acquaint him concerning the affairs of our people. And it came to pass that we did wait to receive provisions and strength from the land of Zarahemla.

verse 4 Apparently the “embassy”—the person or persons that Helaman dispatched to communicate with Pahoran in the city of Zarahemla did not immediately report back to Helaman. Otherwise he would have learned that Pahoran had serious problems of his own in the capital which prevented him from sending aid to the forces of Helaman. We will learn of these problems in Alma 61.

5 But behold, this did profit us but little; for the Lamanites were also receiving great strength from day to day, and also many provisions; and thus were our circumstances at this period of time.

6 And the Lamanites were sallying forth against us from time to time, resolving by stratagem to destroy us; nevertheless we could not come to battle with them, because of their retreats and their strongholds.

verse 6 “the Lamanites were sallying forth against us from time to time”
This tactic of harassment was one which the Lamanites had learned from the Nephites. Hugh Nibley observed: “As in all long wars, the two opponents in their methods, armaments, tricks, and appearance come to be more and more alike, for an enemy may not be allowed safely to monopolize any technical advantage for long” (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 321).

7 And it came to pass that we did wait in these difficult circumstances for the space of many months, even until we were about to perish for the want of food.

8 But it came to pass that we did receive food, which was guarded to us by an army of two thousand men to our assistance; and this is all the assistance which we did receive, to defend ourselves and our country from falling into the hands of our enemies, yea, to contend with an enemy which was innumerable.

verse 8 What is known of supplying armies in ancient America provides a striking resemblance to this narrative. John L. Sorenson explained, “The logistics of maintaining a force in the field in Mesoamerica, either defensively or on the attack, was a serious challenge under ancient conditions. ... Typically, a supply of food was carried by soldiers on their backs from their home communities. ... Supplies continually brought from the home base by a transport column were required or desirable: (John L. Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2013, 419. For a more thorough treatment of logistics in Nephite warfare, see, John E. Kammeyer, The Nephite Art of War (Far West Publications at Smashword, 2012, Revised Edition 2014)” 72–80).

Similar to an ancient Mesoamerican environment, the Book of Mormon never mentions the use of animals for battle (See Brant A. Gardner, Traditions of the Fathers: The Book of Mormon as History, Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2015, 294; According to Kitty F. Emery, “A Zooarchaeological Test for Dietary Resource Depression at the End of the Classic Period in the Petexbatun, Guatemala,” Human Ecology 36, no. 5, 2008: 620, “The only domestic Maya animal during the classic period was the dog.” John L. Sorenson paints a much more complex and potentially expansive picture of animal domestication in ancient Mesoamerica, but in either case there seems to be no evidence of domesticated animals being used in a military context. See Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex, 309–321. See also Kammeyer, Nephite Art of War, 74–75) or even to haul war supplies (See Ashley E. Sharpe and Kitty F. Emery, “Differential Animal Use within Three Late Classic Maya States: Implications for Politics and Trade,” 287. This likely indicates that the soldiers themselves had to carry heavy packs over long distances (See Traci Ardren and Justin Lowry, “The Travels of Maya Merchants in the Ninth and Tenth Centuries AD: Investigations at Xuenkal and the Greater Cupul Province, Yucatan, Mexico,” World Archeology 43, no. 3, 2016: 429: “Both overland and sea transport relied upon human carriers; there were no domesticated pack animals in Classic times and depictions of ancient traders wearing heavy back racks full of items are known from elite pottery and native books.”). Whether the fathers of the stripling warriors personally delivered these supplies, or whether they were simply dispatched by battle-capable Nephite warriors is ambiguous in the text. What is clear is that for some reason the transport of these essential provisions to the Nephite and Ammonite soldiers had either been halted or otherwise deterred.

9 And now the cause of these our embarrassments, or the cause why they did not send more strength unto us, we knew not; therefore we were grieved and also filled with fear, lest by any means the judgments of God should come upon our land, to our overthrow and utter destruction.

verse 9 “Embarrassments” are problems or difficulties. The failure of Pahoran to send sufficient reinforcements or supplies was deeply troubling to Helaman and his forces. They even began to grieve and despair.

10 Therefore we did pour out our souls in prayer to God, that he would strengthen us and deliver us out of the hands of our enemies, yea, and also give us strength that we might retain our cities, and our lands, and our possessions, for the support of our people.

11 Yea, and it came to pass that the Lord our God did visit us with assurances that he would deliver us; yea, insomuch that he did speak peace to our souls, and did grant unto us great faith, and did cause us that we should hope for our deliverance in him.

verse 11 “our God did visit us with assurances that he would deliver us” Helaman and his forces were somewhat comforted by the Lord, yet apparently some doubts lingered on. At least they took courage to the point of mounting an offensive against the Lamanite stronghold in the city of Manti.

12 And we did take courage with our small force which we had received, and were fixed with a determination to conquer our enemies, and to maintain our lands, and our possessions, and our wives, and our children, and the cause of our liberty.

verse 12 “to conquer our enemies, and to maintain our lands, and our possessions, and our wives, and our children, and the cause of our liberty” The wording of this verse suggests that Helaman and his forces had reflected on the fundamental covenants they had entered into with the Lord—the so-called “promise/curse”—at the encouragement of Moroni. To review this concept, see the introductory commentary for Alma 43 (see also Alma 46).

13 And thus we did go forth with all our might against the Lamanites, who were in the city of Manti; and we did pitch our tents by the wilderness side, which was near to the city.

verse 13 “we did go forth with all our might against the Lamanites, who were in the city of Manti” Here is an important lesson to be found in the response of Helaman and his men to the Lord’s promised deliverance. Rather than idly waiting for God to provide for their needs, Helaman’s armies maintained their faith as they took the initiative and successfully executed a military strategy to take over a Lamanite stronghold. Elder D. Todd Christofferson has taught, “Likewise, as we plead with God for our daily bread—for help in the moment that we cannot ourselves provide—we must still be active in doing and providing that which is within our power” (D. Todd Christofferson, “Give Us This Day Our Daily Bread,” CES Fireside for Young Adults, delivered at Brigham Young University, January 9, 2011, accessed at lds.org). Eventually, we will learn that it was because of the corruption of government officials in the very center of Nephite territory that had stalled provisions from reaching Helaman’s men (Alma 61:3–4).

“by the wilderness side” One side of the city of Manti faced the wilderness. This was the wilderness separating the larger land of Nephi from the larger land of Zarahemla. It was therefore from this direction that the Lamanites’ supplies from the land of Nephi arrived in the city of Manti. In order for Helaman’s plan to work, he had to insolently (boldly—even in a haughty, disrespectful manner) deploy his relatively small number of forces in a highly visible location which produced a threat of cutting off the Lamanites’ supply line.

14 And it came to pass that on the morrow, that when the Lamanites saw that we were in the borders by the wilderness which was near the city, that they sent out their spies round about us that they might discover the number and the strength of our army.

verse 14 The Lamanite spies were easily able to discover the small size and obvious vulnerability of the Nephite forces.

15 And it came to pass that when they saw that we were not strong, according to our numbers, and fearing that we should cut them off from their support except they should come out to battle against us and kill us, and also supposing that they could easily destroy us with their numerous hosts, therefore they began to make preparations to come out against us to battle.

16 And when we saw that they were making preparations to come out against us, behold, I caused that Gid, with a small number of men, should secrete himself in the wilderness, and also that Teomner and a small number of men should secrete themselves also in the wilderness.

verse 16To “secrete” is to hide or conceal in a secret place.

17 Now Gid and his men were on the right and the others on the left; and when they had thus secreted themselves, behold, I remained, with the remainder of my army, in that same place where we had first pitched our tents against the time that the Lamanites should come out to battle.

18 And it came to pass that the Lamanites did come out with their numerous army against us. And when they had come and were about to fall upon us with the sword, I caused that my men, those who were with me, should retreat into the wilderness.

verse 18 The third of the army, with which Helaman remained, had to beat a very hasty retreat indeed, since being caught by the large Lamanite force would have meant certain annihilation.

19 And it came to pass that the Lamanites did follow after us with great speed, for they were exceedingly desirous to overtake us that they might slay us; therefore they did follow us into the wilderness; and we did pass by in the midst of Gid and Teomner, insomuch that they were not discovered by the Lamanites.

20 And it came to pass that when the Lamanites had passed by, or when the army had passed by, Gid and Teomner did rise up from their secret places, and did cut off the spies of the Lamanites that they should not return to the city.

21 And it came to pass that when they had cut them off, they ran to the city and fell upon the guards who were left to guard the city, insomuch that they did destroy them and did take possession of the city.

22 Now this was done because the Lamanites did suffer their whole army, save a few guards only, to be led away into the wilderness.

23 And it came to pass that Gid and Teomner by this means had obtained possession of their strongholds. And it came to pass that we took our course, after having traveled much in the wilderness towards the land of Zarahemla.

verse 23 “Gid and Teomner by this means had obtained possession of their strongholds” The Lamanite strongholds in Manti were captured by Gid and Teomner.

Apparently Helaman had begun his hasty retreat in a southward direction but eventually turned in a more northerly direction toward the city of Zarahemla.

24 And when the Lamanites saw that they were marching towards the land of Zarahemla, they were exceedingly afraid, lest there was a plan laid to lead them on to destruction; therefore they began to retreat into the wilderness again, yea, even back by the same way which they had come.

25 And behold, it was night and they did pitch their tents, for the chief captains of the Lamanites had supposed that the Nephites were weary because of their march; and supposing that they had driven their whole army therefore they took no thought concerning the city of Manti.

verse 25 “supposing that they had driven their whole army therefore they took no thought concerning the city of Manti” The Lamanite chief captains wrongly assumed they were pursuing the entire Nephite army. They did not consider that part of the army might have been left behind to capture the city of Manti.

26 Now it came to pass that when it was night, I caused that my men should not sleep, but that they should march forward by another way towards the land of Manti.

27 And because of this our march in the night-time, behold, on the morrow we were beyond the Lamanites, insomuch that we did arrive before them at the city of Manti.

28 And thus it came to pass, that by this stratagem we did take possession of the city of Manti without the shedding of blood.

29 And it came to pass that when the armies of the Lamanites did arrive near the city, and saw that we were prepared to meet them, they were astonished exceedingly and struck with great fear, insomuch that they did flee into the wilderness.

verse 29 Having been out-smarted, the defeated and discouraged Lamanites fled into the wilderness back to the land of Nephi taking with them many Nephite hostages—women and children.

30 Yea, and it came to pass that the armies of the Lamanites did flee out of all this quarter of the land. But behold, they have carried with them many women and children out of the land.

31 And those cities which had been taken by the Lamanites, all of them are at this period of time in our possession; and our fathers and our women and our children are returning to their homes, all save it be those who have been taken prisoners and carried off by the Lamanites.

32 But behold, our armies are small to maintain so great a number of cities and so great possessions.

verse 32 Obviously, though the Nephites again had possession of all of their lands, their hold on their lands was a bit tenuous because of the scant number of their occupation forces.

33 But behold, we trust in our God who has given us victory over those lands, insomuch that we have obtained those cities and those lands, which were our own.

verse 33 Helaman expresses his conviction that righteousness on the part of the Nephites will ensure God's protection over them.

34 Now we do not know the cause that the government does not grant us more strength; neither do those men who came up unto us know why we have not received greater strength.

verse 34 “neither do those men who came up unto us know why we have not received greater strength” We will learn in Alma 61 of a major insurrection and rebellion against the government of Pahoran in Zarahemla mounted by the king-men. Pahoran was driven out of Zarahemla and forced to seek refuge in the land of Gideon. Why did the most recent reinforcements from Zarahemla not have more insight into these developments? Why were they not able to inform Helaman of the precarious political situation in Zarahemla? Apparently, these difficulties were in an early state of development when these men left the capital, and they lacked insight into the situation beginning to unfold there.

Elder Neal A. Maxwell has perceived another interesting lesson from this verse. He wrote: “Even while in deep difficulties, those of deep faith are generously disposed, as was reflected in Helaman’s report to Moroni from the battle front: ‘Behold, we do not know but what ye are unsuccessful . . . if so, we do not desire to murmur. . . But behold, it mattereth not—we trust God will deliver us, notwithstanding the weakness of our armies, yea, and deliver us out of the hands of our enemies’ (Alma 58:35, 37)” (A Wonderful Flood of Light, 66- 67).

35 Behold, we do not know but what ye are unsuccessful, and ye have drawn away the forces into that quarter of the land; if so, we do not desire to murmur.

verse 35 Keep in mind that Helaman is writing to Moroni who is fighting in another quarter of the land. Helaman knows there are more men available in Zarahemla. Here he says to Moroni, “I am puzzled as to why I’m not receiving more men and supplies. Perhaps you are having so much trouble in your quarter that all of the men and supplies are going to you. If that is the case, then we certainly gladly accept that as a valid reason why we are receiving no help.”

“we do not desire to murmur” Helaman offers an apology for being negative. Notice how Helaman, who is in the process of complaining to Moroni, is doing so in a meek and humble way so as not to show disrespect for the chief governor Pahoran or to offend his chief commander Moroni. President Harold B. Lee taught: “The men under you will never be loyal to you if they see that you are disloyal to those who preside over you” (“Loyalty,” Address given to Seminary and Institute personnel at Brigham Young University July 8, 1966).

36 And if it is not so, behold, we fear that there is some faction in the government, that they do not send more men to our assistance; for we know that they are more numerous than that which they have sent.

verse 36 “there is some faction in the government” Perhaps Helaman is beginning to learn of the events in Zarahemla. He says to Moroni, “If you also are not receiving men and supplies, then something is obviously wrong in Zarahemla.”

There are a number of instances in original manuscript of the Book of Mormon where Dr. Royal Skousen feels that Oliver made a mistake in transcribing Joseph Smith’s dictation. If a word or a phrase was unknown to him, he substituted a more common word or phrase (but with varying degrees of success). In each of these cases, the substitution is found in the original manuscript and was later copied into the printer’s manuscript. It was then either corrected by the typesetter or appeared in the 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon. This phrase offers such an example. In the original and printer’s manuscripts, this phrase read “there is some fraction [part of the whole] in the government.” The word fraction was corrected by the typesetter, and it therefore was changed to faction (a group within a larger organization producing strife or dissension) in the 1830 edition. Dr. Skousen feels that the reading in the present edition is the correct one.

37 But, behold, it mattereth not—we trust God will deliver us, notwithstanding the weakness of our armies, yea, and deliver us out of the hands of our enemies.

verse 37 Helaman expresses his faith, though one can almost feel the uncertainty and insecurity with which he is struggling.

38 Behold, this is the twenty and ninth year, in the latter end, and we are in the possession of our lands; and the Lamanites have fled to the land of Nephi.

39 And those sons of the people of Ammon, of whom I have so highly spoken, are with me in the city of Manti; and the Lord had supported them, yea, and kept them from falling by the sword, insomuch that even one soul has not been slain.

40 But behold, they have received many wounds; nevertheless they stand fast in that liberty wherewith God has made them free; and they are strict to remember the Lord their God from day to day; yea, they do observe to keep his statutes, and his judgments, and his commandments continually; and their faith is strong in the prophecies concerning that which is to come.

verse 40 “they stand fast in that liberty wherewith God has made them free” The oft-mentioned “promise/curse” of the Book of Mormon has also been referred to as the Nephite “freedom thesis.” As long as the covenant people were obedient they would remain free and not find themselves in bondage to another people. The disobedient, of course, have no such promise (K. Douglas Bassett, “Nephi’s Freedom

41 And now, my beloved brother, Moroni, may the Lord our God, who has redeemed us and made us free, keep you continually in his presence; yea, and may he favor this people, even that ye may have success in obtaining the possession of all that which the Lamanites have taken from us, which was for our support. And now, behold, I close mine epistle. I am Helaman, the son of Alma.

Alma Chapter 59

Scripture Mastery

Alma 59-61 Captain Moroni writes to Pahoran, the chief judge in Zarahemla, asking for reinforcements. When they don't arrive, Moroni writes again and threatens to march on Zarahemla if help is not sent. Pahoran responds by informing Moroni, by letter, of the rebellions in Zarahemla.

1 Now it came to pass in the thirtieth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi, after Moroni had received and had read Helaman's epistle, he was exceedingly rejoiced because of the welfare, yea, the exceeding success which Helaman had had, in obtaining those lands which were lost.

verse 1 "Moroni . . . was exceedingly rejoiced because of the welfare . . . which Helaman had had" Note here that the prophet Mormon is again writing as the first person. In this unusual phrase "rejoiced" is used as an adjective meaning something like happy, pleased, or delighted. "Welfare" is a noun which here means that Helaman had fared well or had experienced success.

2 Yea, and he did make it known unto all his people, in all the land round about in that part where he was, that they might rejoice also.

verse 2 In his own humble and self-effacing way, Moroni sang the praises of Helaman for all to hear.

3 And it came to pass that he immediately sent an epistle to Pahoran, desiring that he should cause men to be gathered together to strengthen Helaman, or the armies of Helaman, insomuch that he might with ease maintain that part of the land which he had been so miraculously prospered in regaining.

verse 3 "that part of the land which he had been so miraculously prospered in regaining" Here is another unusual word usage. "Prospered," ordinarily, is an intransitive verb (one that is not used with a direct object) that means to thrive, flourish, to be successful or fortunate. There is another archaic definition that renders prosper a transitive verb (one that is used with a direct object). It means something like to make successful, fortunate, or blessed with success. It is this latter definition that applies here to the word "prospered." Helaman had prospered the land. Though it is not said here, the Lord had prospered Helaman in allowing him his military successes.

4 And it came to pass when Moroni had sent this epistle to the land of Zarahemla, he began again to lay a plan that he might obtain the remainder of those possessions and cities which the Lamanites had taken from them.

verse 4 Now was the time when Moroni would begin a major offensive to recapture those Nephite cities held by the Lamanites. An integral part of his plan was that those cities already held by the Nephites would remain so.

5 And it came to pass that while Moroni was thus making preparations to go against the Lamanites to battle, behold, the people of Nephihah, who were gathered together from the city of Moroni and the city of Lehi and the city of Morianton, were attacked by the Lamanites.

verse 5 At this time the Lamanites had possession of the cities of Moroni, Lehi, and Morianton. Some of the Nephites from those cities had fled to the city of Nephihah hoping to find some security. We will learn that they found no such thing.

6 Yea, even those who had been compelled to flee from the land of Manti, and from the land round about, had come over and joined the Lamanites in this part of the land.

verse 6 “even those who had been compelled to flee from the land of Manti, and from the land round about” The use of the phrase “even those” here might lead one to assume that Mormon was referring, in this verse, to Nephites from the city of Manti. He is not, of course. Instead he is referring to those Lamanites who returned to the city of Manti after pursuing Helaman and his forces in the wilderness only to find Manti firmly in the possession of Gid, Teomner, and Helaman. They had probably returned to their homes in the land of Nephi and then subsequently been dispatched by Ammoron to Captain Moroni’s southeast quarter of the Nephite land.

7 And thus being exceedingly numerous, yea, and receiving strength from day to day, by the command of Ammoron they came forth against the people of Nephihah, and they did begin to slay them with an exceedingly great slaughter.

8 And their armies were so numerous that the remainder of the people of Nephihah were obliged to flee before them; and they came even and joined the army of Moroni.

9 And now as Moroni had supposed that there should be men sent to the city of Nephihah, to the assistance of the people to maintain that city, and knowing that it was easier to keep the city from falling into the hands of the Lamanites than to retake it from them, he supposed that they would easily maintain that city.

verse 9 Moroni had mistakenly assumed: (1) that Pahoran had sent reinforcements to the city of Nephihah to secure it against attack from the Lamanites, and (2) that those who defended Nephihah, having the advantage of his own ingenious defensive fortifications, could easily defend the city against a hostile takeover.

Moroni’s grand plan assumed that all of those cities which had been taken back by the Nephites would remain in Nephite hands. This would allow him to concentrate on a strategem to take back those cities held by the Lamanites. This capture of Nephiah by the Lamanites and the pouring into his camp of Nephite refugees from Nephiah meant that his plans were in ruins.

10 Therefore he retained all his force to maintain those places which he had recovered.

verse 10 Moroni did not anticipate having to use his own forces to defend the city of Nephiah. Instead he felt he had but to defend the cities which his own forces had taken plus concentrate on his offensive plans.

11 And now, when Moroni saw that the city of Nephiah was lost he was exceedingly sorrowful, and began to doubt, because of the wickedness of the people, whether they should not fall into the hands of their brethren.

verse 11 To say that Moroni was “exceedingly sorrowful” is something of an understatement and perhaps a bit of a mis-statement as well. His grand plan for wresting the Nephite cities in the southeast quarter of the land from the Lamanites lay in shambles. He was more than sorrowful. He was certainly furious and frustrated. One can almost picture him, in his anger, casting about for reasons as to why this disaster might have happened. It occurred to him that the wickedness of the Nephites in Nephiah might have been in part responsible for their defeat at the hands of the Lamanites. Undoubtedly, he was correct in his assessment of the worthiness or lack thereof the Nephites in Nephiah.

12 Now this was the case with all his chief captains. They doubted and marveled also because of the wickedness of the people, and this because of the success of the Lamanites over them.

verse 12 One can also picture his chief captains standing about Moroni shaking their heads in agreement so as not to further anger him.

13 And it came to pass that Moroni was angry with the government, because of their indifference concerning the freedom of their country.

verse 13 And while he is applying blame for the fall of Nephiah, he might as well blame the government. We will learn that, in his anger, he will write a letter accusing Pahoran of less than honorable motives and of various misdeeds. Moroni undoubtedly would later regret writing the letter in anger. He eventually discovers that Pahoran had not been at fault and that his motives were pure. Your author finds it comforting and refreshing that this larger-than-life character, Moroni, is after all quite human. In this incident, I feel Moroni would agree today that he had been carried away by his anger to some unwise excesses.

This chapter consists of a letter Moroni wrote to Pahoran in the city of Zarahemla. Hugh Nibley, an obvious admirer of Moroni, never-the-less has referred to this letter as “ill-advised” (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 353-54) and has been somewhat critical of Moroni’s writing this condemning and accusatory letter before he had obtained enough of the facts. Brother Nibley writes:

Heavy-hearted (“exceedingly sorrowful”) for the loss of Nephihah, Moroni wrote another letter to Pahoran, “the chief judge and the governor over the land (verse 1),” in which he appears as a very tired commander indeed, following up a serious military blunder with an equally deplorable political one. The letter seethes with the resentment of the man at the front for the easy-living ways of the “VIP’s” back at the capital—the old misunderstandings between the “office” and the “field.” He starts out by reminding the governor of his duty to supply the armies in the field, and reminds him that both he and Helaman have suffered from short supplies from the beginning. He admits his ignorance of the situation and asks for information, and yet he cannot resist passing judgment with a peevish and quite unjustified charge of negligence: “We desire to know the cause of this . . . neglect; yea . . . of your thoughtless state (verse 6).” He goes on to charge deliberate mismanagement: “Ye have withheld your provisions (verse 9),” and incompetence: “for ye ought to have stirred yourselves more diligently. . . . Ye have neglected them insomuch that the blood of thousands shall come upon your heads for vengeance (verse 10).”

This is getting serious, but there is worse to come. Swept on by the momentum of his pent-up emotions, the frustrated commander, who has just seen his favorite project for ending the war go to pot, piles one accusation on another. The government officials, he claims, in their comfortable offices, “sit upon [their] thrones in a state of thoughtless stupor (verse 7)” (a wonderful expression), and have trusted in the goodness of God to justify their neglect, and blandly attributed the calamities overtaking the soldiers in the field not to their own high and mighty indifference but, of all things, to the wickedness of the poor soldiers themselves and other suffering victims of the war. The politicians are responsible for the disasters and setbacks of the war, for “the wickedness . . . first commenced at our head (verse 15),” back in the days when the king-men threw the nation into turmoil at the beginning of the war: It was “the desire of power and authority which those king-men had over us” that opened the door to the murderous Lamanites; nay, they “are [still] seeking for power and authority, yea, even those king-men.” Moroni even goes so far as to hint that Pahoran himself is one of those power-seekers, and worse still, “we know not but what ye are also traitors to your country (verse 18).” . . . Moroni may only have suspicions, but what he suspects is the very worst. He becomes scathingly sarcastic as he describes the fat government officials complacently sitting in idleness, surrounded by hordes of lazy slackers like themselves, “tens of thousands, who do also sit in idleness, while there are thousands around about . . . who are falling by the sword (verse 22).” The picture may seem overdrawn to us, and yet it probably was not, for that is actually the way things are in wartime.

Moroni’s next step was to charge the head of the state with immoral behavior and call upon him to repent. But now comes the height of his indiscretion, for after lecturing the governor like a “Dutch uncle,” Moroni promises him a good spanking, and ends up threatening open rebellion: “And except ye grant mine epistle, and come out and show unto me a true spirit of freedom . . . I will come unto you. . . I will stir up insurrections among you, even until those who have desires to usurp power and authority shall become extinct (verse 27).” This is not as bad as it sounds, for he is not attacking those in authority but those who have usurped it, namely that power-seeking faction he knows so well. Still, the same Moroni who had begun his letter with a profession of ignorance and a request for information can now bring the flat accusation and fling a challenge at the governor: “I do not fear your power nor your authority, but it is my God whom I fear, . . . and it is because of your iniquity that we have suffered so much loss (verse 28).” Carried along in the spirit of his eloquence, he shifts from vague references to troublemakers to placing the blame squarely on the shoulders of the people to whom he is writing: “and, except ye do minister unto our relief, behold, I come unto you, even in the land of Zarahemla, and smite you with the sword (verse 30).”

It seems strange that this man who had deplored more than anything else the contentions and dissensions among the Nephites as the principal cause of their misfortunes in war, should now propose to add to the turmoil by stirring up insurrection. But Moroni was bursting with pent-up emotions and the accumulated memories of reverses that could have been avoided and operations that could have ended the war had the necessary support been forthcoming from home. He knows, as Helaman suspects, that someone in high places is working against him, and for his noble and idealistic nature the thought that anyone should make capital of the miseries of others was simply maddening—yet he had seen that sort of thing going on in the capital all his life. “The Lord will not suffer that ye shall live and wax strong in your iniquities (verse 31),” he writes to Pahoran. He does not blame the Lamanites—they are only doing what they think is right, “it is the tradition of their fathers that has caused their hatred (verse 32);” the real enemy is as ever the private citizen or public official seeking to promote himself: “Your iniquity is for the cause of your love of glory and the vain things of the world (verse 32).” Finally, Moroni goes all out: the Lord has commanded him, he says, to go up in battle against the governors if they do not repent (verses 34-35)! He closes with what might be called Moroni’s watchword: “I seek not for power, but to pull it down” (verse 36).

It was, to say the least, not the most tactful letter in the world, but Moroni's patience was worn out. Also, it turned out, he was right—on every point but one. And that point was an important one: he had accused the wrong man. Aside from that, he had the situation correctly sized up—his long experience with the king-men had not been for nothing (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 323-25).

1 And it came to pass that he wrote again to the governor of the land, who was Pahoran, and these are the words which he wrote, saying: Behold, I direct mine epistle to Pahoran, in the city of Zarahemla, who is the chief judge and the governor over the land, and also to all those who have been chosen by this people to govern and manage the affairs of this war.

2 For behold, I have somewhat to say unto them by the way of condemnation; for behold, ye yourselves know that ye have been appointed to gather together men, and arm them with swords, and with cimeters, and all manner of weapons of war of every kind, and send forth against the Lamanites, in whatsoever parts they should come into our land.

3 And now behold, I say unto you that myself, and also my men, and also Helaman and his men, have suffered exceedingly great sufferings; yea, even hunger, thirst, and fatigue, and all manner of afflictions of every kind.

4 But behold, were this all we had suffered we would not murmur nor complain.

5 But behold, great has been the slaughter among our people; yea, thousands have fallen by the sword, while it might have otherwise been if ye had rendered unto our armies sufficient strength and succor for them. Yea, great has been your neglect towards us.

6 And now behold, we desire to know the cause of this exceedingly great neglect; yea, we desire to know the cause of your thoughtless state.

7 Can you think to sit upon your thrones in a state of thoughtless stupor, while your enemies are spreading the work of death around you? Yea, while they are murdering thousands of your brethren—verse “sit upon your thrones” Thrones? Pahoran was not a king, rather he was a governor of a republic. Would he have had a throne? The Nephite leader still sat on a “judgment seat,” and undoubtedly still had a throne of sorts to sit on while officiating in his office. It seems most likely that, in his anger and frustration, Moroni was using a slang expression with much negative implication. Had Moroni been a man of coarser expression we can just imagine what word he might have use in place of “thrones.”

“in a state of thoughtless stupor” Moroni is cutting in his criticism. Stupor is a state of intellectual insensibility; suspension of sensibility; moral stupidity; heedlessness; or inattention.

8 Yea, even they who have looked up to you for protection, yea, have placed you in a situation that ye might have succored them, yea, ye might have sent armies unto them, to have strengthened them, and have saved thousands of them from falling by the sword.

9 But behold, this is not all—ye have withheld your provisions from them, insomuch that many have fought and bled out their lives because of their great desires which they had for the welfare of this people; yea, and this they have done when they were about to perish with hunger, because of your exceedingly great neglect towards them.

10 And now, my beloved brethren—for ye ought to be beloved; yea, and ye ought to have stirred yourselves more diligently for the welfare and the freedom of this people; but behold, ye have neglected them insomuch that the blood of thousands shall come upon your heads for vengeance; yea, for known unto God were all their cries, and all their sufferings—

11 Behold, could ye suppose that ye could sit upon your thrones, and because of the exceeding goodness of God ye could do nothing and he would deliver you? Behold, if ye have supposed this ye have supposed in vain.

12 Do ye suppose that, because so many of your brethren have been killed it is because of their wickedness? I say unto you, if ye have supposed this ye have supposed in vain; for I say unto you, there are many who have fallen by the sword; and behold it is to your condemnation;

verse 12 “if ye have supposed this ye have supposed in vain” Captain Moroni has asked an interesting question: “Do ye suppose that, because so many of your brethren have been killed it is because of their wickedness?” Moroni is trying to pin the responsibility for the deaths of many righteous Nephites on Pahoran and his government who he mistakenly thinks has been shirking his duties. But we may take another lesson from Moroni’s question. The vicissitudes of mortality do not necessarily happen to the wicked. The nature of this mortal existence is that there occur to all people, regardless of their spiritual qualifications or lack thereof, what we might call “mortal accidents,” hardships that are not deserved. It is the nature of this mortal experience. See Adversity and Suffering in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 1.

13 For the Lord suffereth the righteous to be slain that his justice and judgment may come upon the wicked; therefore ye need not suppose that the righteous are lost because they are slain; but behold, they do enter into the rest of the Lord their God.

verse 13 “the rest of the Lord their God” For a discussion of the concept of the rest of the Lord, see the commentary for 2 Nephi 21:10.

14 And now behold, I say unto you, I fear exceedingly that the judgments of God will come upon this people, because of their exceeding slothfulness, yea, even the slothfulness of our government, and their exceedingly great neglect towards their brethren, yea, towards those who have been slain.

15 For were it not for the wickedness which first commenced at our head, we could have withstood our enemies that they could have gained no power over us.

16 Yea, had it not been for the war which broke out among ourselves; yea, were it not for these king-men, who caused so much bloodshed among ourselves; yea, at the time we were contending among ourselves, if we had united our strength as we hitherto have done; yea, had it not been for the desire of power and authority which those king-men had over us; had they been true to the cause of our freedom, and united with us, and gone forth against our enemies, instead of taking up their swords against us, which was the cause of so much bloodshed among ourselves; yea, if we had gone forth against them in the strength of the Lord, we should have dispersed our enemies, for it would have been done, according to the fulfilling of his word.

17 But behold, now the Lamanites are coming upon us, taking possession of our lands, and they are murdering our people with the sword, yea, our women and our children, and also carrying them away captive, causing them that they should suffer all manner of afflictions, and this because of the great wickedness of those who are seeking for power and authority, yea, even those king-men.

18 But why should I say much concerning this matter? For we know not but what ye yourselves are seeking for authority. We know not but what ye are also traitors to your country.

19 Or is it that ye have neglected us because ye are in the heart of our country and ye are surrounded by security, that ye do not cause food to be sent unto us, and also men to strengthen our armies?

20 Have ye forgotten the commandments of the Lord your God? Yea, have ye forgotten the captivity of our fathers? Have ye forgotten the many times we have been delivered out of the hands of our enemies?

21 Or do ye suppose that the Lord will still deliver us, while we sit upon our thrones and do not make use of the means which the Lord has provided for us?

22 Yea, will ye sit in idleness while ye are surrounded with thousands of those, yea, and tens of thousands, who do also sit in idleness, while there are thousands round about in the borders of the land who are falling by the sword, yea, wounded and bleeding?

23 Do ye suppose that God will look upon you as guiltless while ye sit still and behold these things? Behold I say unto you, Nay. Now I would that ye should remember that God has said that the inward vessel shall be cleansed first, and then shall the outer vessel be cleansed also.

verse 23 “God has said that the inward vessel shall be cleansed first, and then shall the outer vessel be cleaned” Here, Moroni attributes a statement to God which we do not find in our present-day scripture. In rebuking those in the central government he thought were responsible for not providing additional needed troops, Moroni drew upon a divinely stated law that is not found elsewhere in the Book of Mormon: “Now I would that ye should remember that God has said that the inward vessel shall be cleansed first, and then shall the outer vessel be cleansed also” (Alma 60:23).

It is likely that Moroni’s principle here stems from ancient Jewish law. Clay pots and various vessels were plentiful in Israelite civilization, and in order for people to eat ritually clean food out of them, these containers needed to be in a state of ritual purity. In Leviticus, the Lord established laws of impurity regarding dead animals (specifically creeping things like rodents and lizards) which might happen to contaminate various kinds of vessels by falling into them: “And upon whatsoever any of them, when they are dead, doth fall, it shall be unclean; whether it be any vessel of wood, or raiment, or skin, or sack, whatsoever vessel it be, wherein any work is done, it must be put into water, and it shall be unclean until the even; so it shall be cleansed. And every earthen vessel, whereinto [literally, into the midst of] any of them falleth, whatsoever is in it shall be unclean; and you shall break it” (Leviticus 11:32-33).

Another provision of the law stated: “When a man dieth in a tent: all that come into the tent, and all that is in the tent, shall be unclean seven days. And every open vessel, which hath no covering bound upon it, is unclean” (Numbers 19:14-15).

These regulations came to raise a number of issues: did this rule of impurity apply only to a piece of pottery that had an inside and an outside, like a jar but not a plate? Apparently yes, otherwise how could the animal corpse fall “into the midst” of it (Leviticus 11:33)? Was it enough to be in the same space with the dead or person, or was impurity transferred to an open vessel only by actual contact? Evidently, no contact was required (Numbers 19:15). Was the vessel rendered impure if the dead animal came in contact with the inside only? Apparently yes, for corpse contamination of the outside of a covered vessel did not render the pot impure. If only the outside of the container was contaminated, could it be purified simply by immersing it in water until the end of the day? Yes (Leviticus 11:32). If the inside of an open vessel was contaminated, did it have to be smashed? Yes (Leviticus 11:33). Clearly, these regulations were quite specific, and documents from Egypt show that pot impurity was of actual ancient concern (For pot impurity amid the Jewish community at Elephantine four centuries before Christ, see Bezazel Porten and Ada Yardeni, “Ostrakon Clermont-Ganneau 125: A Case of Ritual Purity,” Journal of the American Oriental Society 113, 1993: 451-456).

Implicit behind these rules is the assumption that the inside of a vessel was more susceptible to impurity than the outside. This distinction would logically account for the idea that cleansing the greater impurity inside a vessel would automatically purify the lesser impurity outside, and thus, for several reasons, it would make more sense to cleanse the inside of a vessel before the outside.

Understandably, these legalities could easily be imbued with symbolic importance. From the teachings of Jesus in the New Testament, it is clear that he was aware of rules regarding pot purity and their metaphorical significance. In one instance, Christ affirmed Isaiah's condemnation that "This people honoureth me with their lips [the outside], but their heart [the more susceptible inside] is far from me" (Mark 7:6-8) (See also Matthew 15:1-9; 23:26-27. These verses seem to suggest that while the Pharisees were strict to follow the traditional statutes concerning vessel impurity, they were not following the more weighty commandments of God).

Wrestling with these ancient issues, the Jewish schools of Hillel and Shammai at the time of Jesus argued about the order of cleansing a container, whether one should purify its inside or its outside first (See Jacob Neusner, A History of the Mishnaic Law of Purities, Part 3: Kelim, Leiden: Brill, 1974: 374-81; Mishnah Kelim 2:1; TB Hullim 24b; Sipra, Shemini 7:6; Jacob Milgrom, Leviticus 1-16, New York: Doubleday, 1991, 675). Jesus made use of this debate to draw a moral lesson, when he condemned the Pharisees for being like people who purify the outside of a vessel, "but within they are full of extortion and excess. . . Cleanse first that which is within the cup and platter, that the outside of them may be clean also" (Matthew 23:26).

When Captain Moroni required of Pahoran that "the inward vessel shall be cleansed first, and then shall the outer vessel be cleansed also" (Alma 60:23), he invoked legal provisions from the Law of Moses that would have been known to Pahoran. Moroni built upon the essential "inner-outer" dichotomy, when he spoke of those in the inner "heart of our country . . . surrounded by security" (verse 19), and those outside, "round about in the borders of the land" (verse 22). He presumed that the inner part could become seriously contaminated quite easily, simply by idleness and dereliction of duty (verses 18, 22). He assumed that as soon as the inward vessel were cleansed, then would the outer vessel be consequently "cleansed also" (verse 23). Thus, it made compelling sense to begin by cleaning up the situation in the inner capital city.

While Jesus took issue with those Pharisees who began by cleansing the outside of a vessel, Moroni knew of no one who was suggesting that the soldiers in the outreaches needed to be purified first. Still, the overall agreement between the arguments of Jesus and Moroni strongly suggest that they were drawing upon these laws from Leviticus and Numbers. Moroni attributed these rules of pot purification unequivocally to God in order to heighten the impact of his metaphorical indictment. Whatever the explanation, the textual interaction of these texts demonstrates the value of studying the Bible and the Book of Mormon together.

A unifying component in these statements and concerns about impurities can be found in ancient temple theology. Vessels used in the ancient Israelite temples needed to be kept pure (See Donald W. Parry, “Service and Temple in King Benjamin’s Speech,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 16, no. 2, 2007: 45; Donald W. Parry, “Demarcation Between Sacred Space and Profane Space: the Temple of Herod Model,” in Temples of the Ancient World: Ritual and Symbolism, ed. Donald W. Parry, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1994, 428; Hugh Nibley, Mormonism and Early Christianity, ed. Todd M. Compton and Stephen D. Ricks, Salt Lake City and Provo UT, Deseret Book and FARMS, 1987, 394). which seems to be directly related to Isaiah’s injunction to “be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the Lord” (Isaiah 52:11; 3 Nephi 20:41). Echoing this sentiment, Psalms 24:3–4 emphasized the need for both external cleanliness as well as internal purity: “Who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart?” (see also 2 Nephi 25:16 and Alma 5:19).

The inner most parts of the temple in Jerusalem were considered more holy than the outer portions, with the holy of holies as the most sacred and cosmically central of all (Parry, “Demarcation of Space,” 414). The same principle applied in Zarahemla, the key temple city of the Nephites. Moroni’s call for Pahoran to cleanse the inner city might also have carried an implication that the temple in Zarahemla had been desecrated by Pahoran’s failure to support the soldiers in the field, some of whom had even died, along with women and children (Alma 60:17).

Recognizing that “the Lord hath said he dwelleth not in unholy temples, but in the hearts of the righteous doth he dwell” (Alma 34:36), Moroni would also have hoped that Pahoran’s heart would change, so that God’s Spirit could sanctify the deepest and most inward parts of his soul and impel him to action in behalf of Moroni’s desperate situation (See David A. Bednar, “Clean Hands and a Pure Heart,” Ensign, November 2007, 82, online at lds.org). And just as an individual must purify his or her heart in order to enter the presence of the Lord (John W. Welch, The Sermon at the Temple and the Sermon on the Mount: A Latter-Day Saint Approach, Provo UT: FARMS, 2010, 45.), so too must a nation be pure in heart—and in the case of Moroni’s people, pure in its central government—if God is to bless them together with peace and prosperity (See Psalms 24:4-5; D&C 97:21. See also, Ezra Taft Benson, “Cleansing the Inner Vessel,” Ensign, May 1986, online at LDS.org).

This particular verse of scripture formed the basis of an important address by a latter-day prophet. In a solemn assembly at general conference April 6, 1986, Ezra Taft Benson was sustained by members of the Church as the prophet, seer, and revelator, and president of the church. In his opening address at that conference, President Benson told of the urgent need for church members to “cleanse the inner vessel” (note that he changed the adjective “inward” found in Alma 60:23 to “inner”). By this he meant that each of us ought to make specific changes in our personal lives. He said, “We will be lengthening our stride in the future. To do so, we must first cleanse the inner vessel by awaking and arising, being morally clean, using the Book of Mormon, and conquering pride.”

In commencing that cleansing, he declared, “The Book of Mormon has not been, nor is it yet, the center of our personal study, family teaching, preaching, and missionary work. Of this we must repent” (“Cleansing the Inner Vessel,” Ensign, May 1986:4-7). During Christ’s mortal ministry, he metaphorically accused the scribes and Pharisees of cleansing the outer vessel (to maintain a righteous public appearance) but leaving their inner vessel (their heart and mind) corrupt and wicked (Matthew 23:25-28). If the inward or inner vessel is cleansed through repentance, then the outer vessel is automatically cleaned. If one is truly righteous, he need not worry about appearances.

24 And now, except ye do repent of that which ye have done, and begin to be up and doing, and send forth food and men unto us, and also unto Helaman, that he may support those parts of our country which he has regained, and that we may also recover the remainder of our possessions in these parts, behold it will be expedient that we contend no more with the Lamanites until we have first cleansed our inward vessel, yea, even the great head of our government.

25 And except ye grant mine epistle, and come out and show unto me a true spirit of freedom, and strive to strengthen and fortify our armies, and grant unto them food for their support, behold I will leave a part of my freemen to maintain this part of our land, and I will leave the strength and the blessings of God upon them, that none other power can operate against them—

27 And I will come unto you, and if there be any among you that has a desire for freedom, yea, if there be even a spark of freedom remaining, behold I will stir up insurrections among you, even until those who have desires to usurp power and authority shall become extinct.

verse 27 “I will stir up insurrections among you” An insurrection is a rising against civil or political authority; the open and active opposition by a group to the execution of law in a city or state.

28 Yea, behold I do not fear your power nor your authority, but it is my God whom I fear; and it is according to his commandments that I do take my sword to defend the cause of my country, and it is because of your iniquity that we have suffered so much loss.

29 Behold it is time, yea, the time is now at hand, that except ye do bestir yourselves in the defence of your country and your little ones, the sword of justice doth hang over you; yea, and it shall fall upon you and visit you even to your utter destruction.

verse 29 “bestir yourselves” Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines bestir as, “to put into brisk or vigorous action; to move with life and vigor.”

Today, we spell the word defense with an “s” rather than a “c” as is used here. Obviously, in the early nineteenth century, “defence” was a proper spelling. It is found in some eleven verses in the present edition of the Book of Mormon. The word “defense” (with an “s”) is not found in the Book of Mormon. Defence is used today in Great Britain.

30 Behold, I wait for assistance from you; and, except ye do administer unto our relief, behold, I come unto you, even in the land of Zarahemla, and smite you with the sword, insomuch that ye can have no more power to impede the progress of this people in the cause of our freedom.

31 For behold, the Lord will not suffer that ye shall live and wax strong in your iniquities to destroy his righteous people.

32 Behold, can you suppose that the Lord will spare you and come out in judgment against the Lamanites, when it is the tradition of their fathers that has caused their hatred, yea, and it has been redoubled by those who have dissented from us, while your iniquity is for the cause of your love of glory and the vain things of the world?

verse 32 “traditions of their fathers” See the commentary for Enos 1:14 and Mosiah 10:12-17. Moroni says that the Nephites cannot blame the Lamanites, as they are only defending the traditions of their fathers. Rather the blame rests upon Pahoran and the Nephites in government.

33 Ye know that ye do transgress the laws of God, and ye do know that ye do trample them under your feet. Behold, the Lord saith unto me: If those whom ye have appointed your governors do not repent of their sins and iniquities, ye shall go up to battle against them.

34 And now behold, I, Moroni, am constrained, according to the covenant which I have made to keep the commandments of my God; therefore I would that ye should adhere to the word of God, and send speedily unto me of your provisions and of your men, and also to Helaman.

35 And behold, if ye will not do this I come unto you speedily; for behold, God will not suffer that we should perish with hunger; therefore he will give unto us of your food, even if it must be by the sword. Now see that ye fulfil the word of God.

36 Behold, I am Moroni, your chief captain. I seek not for power, but to pull it down. I seek not for honor of the world, but for the glory of my God, and the freedom and welfare of my country. And thus I close mine epistle.

verse 36 “I seek not for power, but to pull it down. I seek not for honor of the world, but for the glory of my God, and the freedom and welfare of my country” If there is a concise statement or slogan that embodies the essence of the prophet Moroni, then this is it!

This chapter is Pahoran's answer by letter to Moroni. Hugh Nibley offers his appraisal of Pahoran:

Fortunately the man thus wrongly accused was a governor worthy of his high office, as his wise, temperate, and constructive reply reveals. Instead of getting on his high horse, Pahoran reacted to Moroni's withering onslaught by telling him that he had a right to be upset, as he himself is (verse 2), and that instead of resenting such language addressed to himself he understands Moroni's intention perfectly and rejoices in his greatness of heart (verse 9). As a matter of fact, Moroni has made a pretty good estimate of the situation, for there were indeed plenty of important people in the capital who were only too pleased to see the great Moroni in trouble—"who do joy at your afflictions;" what is more, Moroni had correctly guessed who they were—the old power-seekers, who had actually been able to take over the government by clever propaganda, "for they have used great flattery, and they have led away the hearts of many people," and being in office had succeeded in intimidating the opposition, "and have daunted our freemen" (verses 2-4). They had forced the president, Pahoran, to leave town, but in doing so he had energetically rallied as many supporters as he could (verse 5), and was sure that the masses of the people, who had always followed Moroni, were still behind him, and that the ruling clique did not dare risk a test of strength in the field (verse 7) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 326-27).

1 Behold, now it came to pass that soon after Moroni had sent his epistle unto the chief governor, he received an epistle from Pahoran, the chief governor. And these are the words which he received:

2 I, Pahoran, who am the chief governor of this land, do send these words unto Moroni, the chief captain over the army. Behold, I say unto you, Moroni, that I do not joy in your great afflictions, yea, it grieves my soul.

3 But behold, there are those who do joy in your afflictions, yea, insomuch that they have risen up in rebellion against me, and also those of my people who are freemen, yea, and those who have risen up are exceedingly numerous.

verse 3 Though Pahoran does not refer to them by name, those who rebelled against him are the king-men. For a review of the origins and identity of this troublesome group, see the commentary for Alma 1:2 and for Alma 51:5.

"those of my people who are freemen" This verse is a bit ambiguous and may initially be interpreted as implying that some of the freemen among the Nephites had also risen up in rebellion. A closer consideration, however, suggests that the king-men had risen up in rebellion against both Pahoran and his people, the freemen.

4 And it is those who have sought to take away the judgment-seat from me that have been the cause of this great iniquity; for they have used great flattery, and they have led away the hearts of many people, which will be the cause of sore affliction among us; they have withheld our provisions, and have daunted our freemen that they have not come unto you.

verse 4 “they have withheld our provisions” These king-men have seized sufficient power that they are in a position to withhold those supplies which had been intended for the forces of Moroni and Helaman.

“they . . . have daunted our freemen” To daunt means to intimidate or to make afraid. Apparently, the freemen were so discouraged and disheartened that they would not come out into the field of battle to the aid of Moroni and Helaman.

5 And behold, they have driven me out before them, and I have fled to the land of Gideon, with as many men as it were possible that I could get.

6 And behold, I have sent a proclamation throughout this part of the land; and behold, they are flocking to us daily, to their arms, in the defense of their country and their freedom, and to avenge our wrongs.

7 And they have come unto us, insomuch that those who have risen up in rebellion against us are set at defiance, yea, insomuch that they do fear us and durst not come out against us to battle.

verse 7 “And they have come unto us, insomuch that those who have risen up in rebellion against us are set at defiance” Seeing so many freemen gathering to Gideon has caused the king-men to be “set at defiance”—that is, they have assumed a defensive and cautious posture rather than an openly aggressive one.

8 They have got possession of the land, or the city, of Zarahemla; they have appointed a king over them, and he hath written unto the king of the Lamanites, in the which he hath joined an alliance with him; in the which alliance he hath agreed to maintain the city of Zarahemla, which maintenance he supposeth will enable the Lamanites to conquer the remainder of the land, and he shall be placed king over this people when they shall be conquered under the Lamanites.

Hugh Nibley previews the coming verses:

Who the new government were becomes apparent when we learn that upon seizing the capital they had abolished democratic government and set up a monarchy, and, as might be expected, immediately entered into negotiations with the king of the Lamanites. It was the old royalist [or king-men] crowd that Moroni knew so well (verse 8). Pahoran, who was as much for popular government and as little interested in personal power as Moroni himself, proposed a plan for restoring the old government. But first of all, as a civil officer he explored every possibility of avoiding violence. Like

Moroni, he would, he says, gladly suffer the Lamanites if they would let him: “We should not shed the blood of the Lamanites if they would stay in their own land” (verse 10). This is no self-righteous accusing, since every battle in Moroni’s time was fought on Nephite, not on Lamanite, soil. So far is Pahoran from patriotic heroics that he declares, “We would subject ourselves to the yoke of bondage, if it were requisite with the justice of God, or if he should command us” (verse 12), and he insists that one should take to the sword only when words have failed (verse 14). But “the spirit of God” is “the spirit of freedom” (verse 15), so what was he to do now? Even in this dire emergency he hesitates to use force, being “worried concerning what we should do, whether it should be just in us to go against our brethren” (verse 19). Like Moroni sparing the drunken guards, he is more concerned with doing what is just than anything else, and it is Moroni’s letter, he says, that has made up his mind for him, since it declares that the Lord wants action (verse 20). So, full of fight and ginger, he and his supporters join up with a small task-force of Moroni’s that had marched to meet them, and as soon as Moroni raised his Title of Liberty the people flocked in ecstatic thousands to the well-known banner. Moroni and Pahoran, now fast friends, made a triumphant progress through the land, culminating in a battle in which the army of King Pachus and his supporters was quickly beaten (Alma 62:3-8) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 327-28).

9 And now, in your epistle you have censured me, but it mattereth not; I am not angry, but do rejoice in the greatness of your heart. I, Pahoran, do not seek for power, save only to retain my judgment-seat that I may preserve the rights and the liberty of my people. My soul standeth fast in that liberty in the which God hath made us free.

verse 9 This reply of Pahoran’s is to be treasured as one of the fine examples of self-effacement, meekness, and humility in the scriptures. Moroni had attacked Pahoran rather vigorously in his letter, yet Pahoran’s reply is written with a quiet and calm spirit without any attempt to retaliate against Moroni.

Instead of firing back at Moroni for assuming the worst in him, Pahoran calmly explained the situation and urged for continued resistance against both domestic and foreign threats to Nephite freedom.

This exchange between Moroni and Pahoran is revealing on a number of levels. It provides important glimpses into the personalities of these men. Although a man of great faith, it is clear that Moroni was also susceptible to anger, frustration, doubt, and misplaced outrage at those whom he assumed had slighted him. At the same time Pahoran is revealed in his letter to be a man of patience in the face of being wrongfully accused. His “reply is a remarkable example of emotional restraint. By choosing not to take offense, he was able to communicate clearly and work toward resolving the problem” (Larry W. Tippetts, “Toward Emotional Maturity: Insights from the Book of Mormon,” Religious Educator 11, no. 2, 2010: 96).

That Mormon preserved Moroni’s letter to Pahoran in his abridgment is remarkable. It shows a level of honesty on Mormon’s part, since he was willing to include information that portrayed Moroni, one of his heroes (Alma 48:17), in an unflattering light.

Readers can learn an important lesson from Moroni’s shortcoming. Moroni’s anxieties and frustrations were undoubtedly real. He and his army were facing serious Lamanite threats, and no assistance from the government was forthcoming. Nevertheless, he might have benefited from giving Pahoran the benefit of the doubt and being careful not to jump to hasty conclusions or pass unwarranted judgment. His example cautions all of us to be careful not to allow anger, doubt, or uncertainties to create a negative influence.

As President Dieter F. Uchtdorf taught, “Sometimes questions arise because we simply don’t have all the information and we just need a bit more patience. When the entire truth is eventually known, things that didn’t make sense to us before will be resolved to our satisfaction.” President Uchtdorf accordingly recommended to “first doubt your doubts before you doubt your faith” (“Come, Join with Us,” Ensign, November 2013, 22–23). While President Uchtdorf was speaking specifically about those who question their testimonies of the gospel, his counsel can be applied to other areas, such as when doubting someone’s sincerity or intentions, as in Moroni’s case.

Also setting an important example for modern readers, ultimately Moroni reconciled with Pahoran, and “was filled with exceedingly great joy because of the faithfulness” of the chief judge (Alma 62:1). The two eventually put the entire misunderstanding behind them and united their forces in a successful bid to restore Pahoran to the judgment seat (verses 6–8).

verses 10-21 In these verses Pahoran will outline for Moroni his plan for recapturing control of the Nephite government.

10 And now, behold, we will resist wickedness even unto bloodshed. We would not shed the blood of the Lamanites if they would stay in their own land.

verse 10 Pahoran’s plan for recapturing control of the government is based on a generally defensive strategy rather than an aggressive and preemptive one. He makes it clear that he will “will resist wickedness even unto bloodshed” meaning that he regards bloodshed even in a military context as “wickedness” which should be avoided if at all possible.

11 We would not shed the blood of our brethren if they would not rise up in rebellion and take the sword against us.

12 We would subject ourselves to the yoke of bondage if it were requisite with the justice of God, or if he should command us so to do.

13 But behold he doth not command us that we shall subject ourselves to our enemies, but that we should put our trust in him, and he will deliver us.

14 Therefore, my beloved brother, Moroni, let us resist evil, and whatsoever evil we cannot resist with our words, yea, such as rebellions and dissensions, let us resist them with our swords, that we may retain our freedom, that we may rejoice in the great privilege of our church, and in the cause of our Redeemer and our God.

verse 14 “let us resist evil, and whatsoever evil we cannot resist with our words” Among the first principles of the righteous exercise of priesthood authority is the principle of persuasion (D&C 121:41-43). We should use words whenever possible to encourage a necessary change in another’s behavior. These words should be offered in the spirit of long-suffering, gentleness, meekness, and love unfeigned (D&C 121:41).

“Whatsoever evil we cannot resist with our words . . . let us resist them with our swords, that we may retain our freedom” There will always be times when patient persuasion fails. Then we are obliged simply to turn away unless those who will not be persuaded are bent upon destroying our country and church or placing those of our country or church in bondage. When we are faced with those who would take away our freedom or those who would destroy our country and church, then we are justified in taking up the sword.

15 Therefore, come unto me speedily with a few of your men, and leave the remainder in the charge of Lehi and Teancum; give unto them power to conduct the war in that part of the land, according to the Spirit of God, which is also the Spirit of freedom which is in them.

verse 15 “according to the Spirit of God, which is also the Spirit of freedom” Commenting upon the relationship between the Spirit of God and the spirit of freedom, President Ezra Taft Benson taught: “The Founding Fathers knew that ‘where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty’” (Teachings of Ezra Taft Benson, 599).

16 Behold I have sent a few provisions unto them, that they may not perish until ye can come unto me.

17 Gather together whatsoever force ye can upon your march hither, and we will go speedily against those dissenters, in the strength of our God according to the faith which is in us.

18 And we will take possession of the city of Zarahemla, that we may obtain more food to send forth unto Lehi and Teancum; yea, we will go forth against them in the strength of the Lord, and we will put an end to this great iniquity.

19 And now, Moroni, I do joy in receiving your epistle, for I was somewhat worried concerning what we should do, whether it should be just in us to go against our brethren.

verse 19 Obviously Pahoran had exercised considerable patience and long-suffering in dealing with the rebellious king-men faction among the Nephites. Now, however, his limit has been exceeded, and he has chosen the strategy of military force.

20 But ye have said, except they repent the Lord hath commanded you that ye should go against them.

21 See that ye strengthen Lehi and Teancum in the Lord; tell them to fear not, for God will deliver them, yea, and also all those who stand fast in that liberty wherewith God hath made them free. And now I close mine epistle to my beloved brother, Moroni.

verse 21 The natural leadership abilities of Pahoran are apparent here as he wisely counsels his chief military commander Moroni.

Alma Chapter 62

1 And now it came to pass that when Moroni had received this epistle his heart did take courage, and was filled with exceedingly great joy because of the faithfulness of Pahoran, that he was not also a traitor to the freedom and cause of his country.

verse 1 Elder Neal A. Maxwell commented upon the effect Pahoran's reply to Moroni had on the chief military commander:

Pahoran's was not a resentful rejoinder lamenting the fact that Moroni was foolish without the facts. Pahoran did not engage in sarcasm or bitterness by lamenting that things were at least as rough for him as they were for Moroni and the army. He could have been sarcastic, saying he no longer had any throne to sit upon "in a state of thoughtless stupor." He could have justifiably boiled over at the accusation of his being a traitor, telling Moroni to do his job as chief captain and that Pahoran would do his job as governor. Instead, this exchange permitted these two leaders to rally themselves and their forces to retake the city. Moroni, when he received Pahoran's reply, indicated that his "heart did take courage," and that he rejoiced "because of the faithfulness of Pahoran" (Meek and Lowly, 24-25).

2 But he did also mourn exceedingly because of the iniquity of those who had driven Pahoran from the judgment-seat, yea, in fine because of those who had rebelled against their country and also their God.

verse 2 "In fine" means in conclusion or in summary. Here Mormon states that Moroni mourned over those who had driven Pahoran from office, in fact over all those who had rebelled.

3 And it came to pass that Moroni took a small number of men, according to the desire of Pahoran, and gave Lehi and Teancum command over the remainder of his army, and took his march towards the land of Gideon.

4 And he did raise the standard of liberty in whatsoever place he did enter, and gained whatsoever force he could in all his march towards the land of Gideon.

verse 4 Brother Hugh Nibley comments: "This was the third time that his Title of Liberty had been called out to put down a royalist coalition, timed to take advantage of a great national crisis; yet he pardoned, without penalty or punishment, all who would prove their loyalty by willingness 'to take up arms in defense of their country'" (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 328).

5 And it came to pass that thousands did flock unto his standard, and did take up their swords in the defense of their freedom, that they might not come into bondage.

verse 5 “did take up their swords” One weapon described by Mesoamerican historians is called the macuahuitl. Although some critics of the Book of Mormon have argued that the macuahuitl is merely a club studded with obsidian, there is documentation of several witnesses of this instrument describing it clearly as a sword (Matthew Roper, Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 5/1 [1996], 150-58; see also Brother Roper’s “Swords and Cimeters in the Book of Mormon,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 8/1 [1999], 34-43).

6 And thus, when Moroni had gathered together whatsoever men he could in all his march, he came to the land of Gideon; and uniting his forces with those of Pahoran they became exceedingly strong, even stronger than the men of Pachus, who was the king of those dissenters who had driven the freemen out of the land of Zarahemla and had taken possession of the land.

7 And it came to pass that Moroni and Pahoran went down with their armies into the land of Zarahemla, and went forth against the city, and did meet the men of Pachus, insomuch that they did come to battle.

8 And behold, Pachus was slain and his men were taken prisoners, and Pahoran was restored to his judgment-seat.

9 And the men of Pachus received their trial, according to the law, and also those king-men who had been taken and cast into prison; and they were executed according to the law; yea, those men of Pachus and those king-men, whosoever would not take up arms in the defense of their country, but would fight against it, were put to death.

verse 9 We may be assured that the Nephite law dealt fairly and reasonably with these king-men. Those who were executed not only failed to take up arms in support of their government, but also took up arms and fought against their government with the intent of bringing it down. Though the Nephite law and its enforcement were fair, these king-men had clearly picked the wrong time to break this law as is evidenced in the following verse.

10 And thus it became expedient that this law should be strictly observed for the safety of their country; yea, and whosoever was found denying their freedom was speedily executed according to the law.

verse 10 In times of national crisis and emergency, it was necessary to strictly enforce the laws for the “safety” or security of the country.

11 And thus ended the thirtieth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi; Moroni and Pahoran having restored peace to the land of Zarahemla, among their own people, having inflicted death upon all those who were not true to the cause of freedom.

12 And it came to pass in the commencement of the thirty and first year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi, Moroni immediately caused that provisions should be sent, and also an army of six thousand men should be sent unto Helaman, to assist him in preserving that part of the land.

13 And he also caused that an army of six thousand men, with a sufficient quantity of food, should be sent to the armies of Lehi and Teancum. And it came to pass that this was done to fortify the land against the Lamanites.

14 And it came to pass that Moroni and Pahoran, leaving a large body of men in the land of Zarahemla, took their march with a large body of men towards the land of Nephihah, being determined to overthrow the Lamanites in that city.

15 And it came to pass that as they were marching towards the land, they took a large body of men of the Lamanites, and slew many of them, and took their provisions and their weapons of war.

verse 15 “they took a large body of men of the Lamanites” The verb “to take” here obviously means to engage in battle and defeat. Brother Nibley comments: “[Moroni’s] first interest was to retake Nephihah, lost by his own miscalculation, and during the operation who should assist him but Pahoran, familiarizing himself with the war’s problems at first hand. On the way to Nephihah, the two commanders ran into a special task-force of Lamanites and defeated it. What followed showed that the tide of war was turning and there was a new spirit in the air—Moroni’s patience and humanity in dealing with the defeated was beginning to bear fruit. For, instead of making prisoners of the beaten Lamanites, Moroni permitted all of them who would accept the usual covenant (about four thousand of them) to go off and settle peaceably among the people of Ammon! (verse 17) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 328).

16 And it came to pass after they had taken them, they caused them to enter into a covenant that they would no more take up their weapons of war against the Nephites.

17 And when they had entered into this covenant they sent them to dwell with the people of Ammon, and they were in number about four thousand who had not been slain.

verse 17 Brother Nibley comments on these converted Lamanites: “If the Nephites are not all good, the Lamanites are by no means all bad. For many years, it was only because Nephite dissenters stirred them up that the Lamanites came to war against the Nephites. It was hardened Lamanite troopers who had sworn vengeance upon the Nephites (Alma 25:1) who, upon returning from a campaign, of their own free will went over in large numbers 'and did join themselves to the people of God, who were the people of Anti-Nephi-Lehi' (Alma 25:13). It was fierce tribesmen with a long record of savagery and bloodshed who suddenly decided to bury their weapons and became the most righteous people in the New World (Alma 24:19). It was also the Lamanite veterans of a long war who later went over in droves to join them, becoming overnight model Nephite citizens (Alma 62:17, 29)" (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 344-45).

Moroni and Pahoran obviously had great confidence in the oral covenant or oath which the Lamanites made in this instance.

18 And it came to pass that when they had sent them away they pursued their march towards the land of Nephihah. And it came to pass that when they had come to the city of Nephihah, they did pitch their tents in the plains of Nephihah, which is near the city of Nephihah.

19 Now Moroni was desirous that the Lamanites should come out to battle against them, upon the plains; but the Lamanites, knowing of their exceedingly great courage, and beholding the greatness of their numbers, therefore they durst not come out against them; therefore they did not come to battle in that day.

20 And when the night came, Moroni went forth in the darkness of the night, and came upon the top of the wall to spy out in what part of the city the Lamanites did camp with their army.

verse 20 To climb to the top of a wall from the outside of a Nephite-fortified city must have been a daunting task. See the commentary for Alma 49:18. No wonder the attacking Nephites needed strong cords and ladders to be let down from the top of the wall (described in the following verse).

21 And it came to pass that they were on the east, by the entrance; and they were all asleep. And now Moroni returned to his army, and caused that they should prepare in haste strong cords and ladders, to be let down from the top of the wall into the inner part of the wall.

22 And it came to pass that Moroni caused that his men should march forth and come upon the top of the wall, and let themselves down into that part of the city, yea, even on the west, where the Lamanites did not camp with their armies.

23 And it came to pass that they were all let down into the city by night, by the means of their strong cords and their ladders; thus when the morning came they were all within the walls of the city.

24 And now, when the Lamanites awoke and saw that the armies of Moroni were within the walls, they were affrighted exceedingly, insomuch that they did flee out by the pass.

verse 24 “insomuch that they did flee out by the pass” Here the “place of entrance” of this Nephite city is referred to as “the pass.” See the commentary for Alma 49:18.

25 And now when Moroni saw that they were fleeing before him, he did cause that his men should march forth against them, and slew many, and surrounded many others, and took them prisoners; and the remainder of them fled into the land of Moroni, which was in the borders by the seashore.

26 Thus had Moroni and Pahoran obtained the possession of the city of Nephiah without the loss of one soul; and there were many of the Lamanites who were slain.

27 Now it came to pass that many of the Lamanites that were prisoners were desirous to join the people of Ammon and become a free people.

verse 27 Brother Nibley comments: “Plainly everybody was getting rather tired of war when thousands of Lamanite warriors began to see the light—that the people of Ammon were the really sensible people after all. And so, the wicked Lamanites, who had made life a hell for the Nephites for as long as anyone could remember, whose territories and resources still remained intact and unravaged by war, and who still outnumbered the Nephites by an immense margin, were dismissed without even a reprimand, and in short order became model citizens of the Nephite realm (verse 29). This also solved the vexing prisoner of war problem” (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 328-29).

28 And it came to pass that as many as were desirous, unto them it was granted according to their desires.

29 Therefore, all the prisoners of the Lamanites did join the people of Ammon, and did begin to labor exceedingly, tilling the ground, raising all manner of grain, and flocks and herds of every kind; and thus were the Nephites relieved from a great burden; yea, insomuch that they were relieved from all the prisoners of the Lamanites.

30 Now it came to pass that Moroni, after he had obtained possession of the city of Nephiah, having taken many prisoners, which did reduce the armies of the Lamanites exceedingly, and having regained many of the Nephites who had been taken prisoners, which did strengthen the army of Moroni exceedingly; therefore Moroni went forth from the land of Nephiah to the land of Lehi.

31 And it came to pass that when the Lamanites saw that Moroni was coming against them, they were again frightened and fled before the army of Moroni.

32 And it came to pass that Moroni and his army did pursue them from city to city, until they were met by Lehi and Teancum; and the Lamanites fled from Lehi and Teancum, even down upon the borders by the seashore, until they came to the land of Moroni.

33 And the armies of the Lamanites were all gathered together, insomuch that they were all in one body in the land of Moroni. Now Ammoron, the king of the Lamanites, was also with them.

34 And it came to pass that Moroni and Lehi and Teancum did encamp with their armies round about in the borders of the land of Moroni, insomuch that the Lamanites were encircled about in the borders by the wilderness on the south, and in the borders by the wilderness on the east.

35 And thus they did encamp for the night. For behold, the Nephites and the Lamanites also were weary because of the greatness of the march; therefore they did not resolve upon any stratagem in the night-time, save it were Teancum; for he was exceedingly angry with Ammoron, insomuch that he considered that Ammoron, and Amalickiah his brother, had been the cause of this great and lasting war between them and the Lamanites, which had been the cause of so much war and bloodshed, yea, and so much famine.

36 And it came to pass that Teancum in his anger did go forth into the camp of the Lamanites, and did let himself down over the walls of the city. And he went forth with a cord, from place to place, insomuch that he did find the king; and he did cast a javelin at him, which did pierce him near the heart. But behold, the king did awaken his servants before he died, insomuch that they did pursue Teancum, and slew him.

verse 36 Teancum had previously slain Amalickiah, Ammoron's brother. Now Teancum gives his life shortly after killing Ammoron.

Teancum's bravery, while admirable, ultimately got the better of him. George Reynolds and Janne Sjodahl observed how Teancum's decision was undoubtedly "rash," and that his failing was that he did not keep in mind "his personal safety when he thought the good of his country required the sacrifice" (George Reynolds and Janne Sjodahl, Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 7 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 1955–1976, 5:178).

This would not have been abnormal for Teancum. Brant Gardner explained how the Nephite general had "acted unilaterally and impulsively in the past (Alma 51:33–34) and had probably fretted at being forced to play a waiting game on the eastern front for a couple of years." With this in mind "it is perhaps not surprising that Teancum [took] matters into his own hands" (Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 4:762). What is also not entirely surprising was the unfortunate outcome, given the circumstances.

The untimely demise of Teancum can serve as a cautionary tale for readers of the Book of Mormon. While becoming angry or upset is an understandable response to times when circumstances out of our control, this example from Teancum warns about the potential dangers of acting out of anger. Unlike when he coolly and carefully planned the timing of his killing of Amalickiah, Teancum, in this instance, was upset and not able to clearly weigh the substantial risks of this situation. Unlike the first foray when he took a servant with him (Alma 51:33), this time he went alone. Having scaled a wall, carrying a cord, and not finding Ammoron quickly, the best Teancum could do was to throw a javelin at him, hitting him close to his heart (Alma 62:36), whereas before he had been able to stab Amalickiah with precision at close range (Alma 51:34). Under these circumstances, while Lehi and Moroni bitterly mourned the loss of a valiant and true friend, the final epitaph given to Teancum by Mormon was terse: “But behold, he was dead, and had gone the way of all the earth” (62:37).

President Thomas S. Monson warned, “We are all susceptible to those feelings which, if left unchecked, can lead to anger. We experience displeasure or irritation or antagonism, and if we so choose, we lose our temper and become angry with others” (Thomas S. Monson, “School Thy Feelings, O My Brother,” Ensign, November 2009, 68. See also Gordon B. Hinckley, “Slow to Anger,” Ensign, November 2007, 62–63, 66).

Readers of the Book of Mormon can appreciate the examples in its pages that illustrate the dangers of becoming angry. They can likewise learn from these examples how to avoid or overcome such.

For instance, at the beginning of the Book of Mormon, Nephi and his brothers were cruelly mistreated by Laban, who himself became “angry” with Nephi’s brother Laman when the latter requested the brass plates (1 Nephi 3:11–14). Laman in turn became “angry” with Nephi when the resulting outcome was less than favorable (verse 28). Nephi had many opportunities to become angry and dissatisfied with things but instead remained composed and rational. This permitted him to seek and find inspiration from the Spirit of the Lord, which ultimately led to him succeeding in his mission to retrieve the brass plates (1 Nephi 4).

We must not, however, impugn Teancum’s righteous example. He undoubtedly deserved all of the praise Mormon afforded him in his moving eulogy; that “he had been a man who had fought valiantly for his country, yea, a true friend to liberty; and he had suffered very many exceedingly sore afflictions” (Alma 62:37). Nevertheless, Teancum’s overconfidently acting on his own initiative serves as a powerful warning to modern readers of the Book of Mormon.

37 Now it came to pass that when Lehi and Moroni knew that Teancum was dead they were exceedingly sorrowful; for behold, he had been a man who had fought valiantly for his country, yea, a true friend to liberty; and he had suffered very many exceedingly sore afflictions. But behold, he was dead, and had gone the way of all the earth.

38 Now it came to pass that Moroni marched forth on the morrow, and came upon the Lamanites, insomuch that they did slay them with a great slaughter; and they did drive them out of the land; and they did flee, even that they did not return at that time against the Nephites.

39 And thus ended the thirty and first year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi; and thus they had had wars, and bloodsheds, and famine, and affliction, for the space of many years.

40 And there had been murders, and contentions, and dissensions, and all manner of iniquity among the people of Nephi; nevertheless for the righteous' sake, yea, because of the prayers of the righteous, they were spared.

verse 40 President Spencer W. Kimball taught that God had given a special promise to the Nephites which applies to all the peoples of America. This promise was that if they would remain sufficiently righteous, they would not have to fight (“The False Gods We Worship,” Ensign [June 1976] 6:3-6). Gerald Hansen Jr. observed: “The irony of the wars in the book of Alma is that the Nephites were righteous enough to win the wars, but not righteous enough to prevent them from taking place” (The Book of Mormon: Alma, the Testimony of the Word, edited by Monte S. Nyman and Charles D. Tate, Jr. 278). The principle here is that a righteous minority may save a nation from destruction.

41 But behold, because of the exceedingly great length of the war between the Nephites and the Lamanites many had become hardened, because of the exceedingly great length of the war; and many were softened because of their afflictions, insomuch that they did humble themselves before God, even in the depth of humility.

verse 41 “many were softened because of their afflictions, insomuch that they did humble themselves before God, even in the depth of humility” Regarding the nature of the Lord’s chastening, Elder Neal A. Maxwell taught: “Afflictions can soften us and sweeten us, and can be a chastening influence. We often think of chastening as something being done to punish us, such as by a mortal tutor who is angry and peevish with us. Divine chastening, however, is a form of learning as it is administered at the hands of a loving Father (Helaman 12:3)” (All These Things Shall Give Thee Experience, 39).

42 And it came to pass that after Moroni had fortified those parts of the land which were most exposed to the Lamanites, until they were sufficiently strong, he returned to the city of Zarahemla; and also Helaman returned to the place of his inheritance; and there was once more peace established among the people of Nephi.

verse 42 “there was once more peace established among the people of Nephi” An interesting pattern may be discerned in the Book of Mormon. Here a period of peace follows the death of the Nephite dissenter Ammoron. When we look at the truly vicious villains in the Book of Mormon, the record shows that beginning with Laman and Lemuel they came almost exclusively from the Nephite groups. Ammoron was a Nephite-Zoramite (Alma 54:23-24), and thus so were his brother Amalickiah and his son Tubaloth. Others of these vicious dissenters of Nephite or Mulekite origin were: Sherem, Noah and his priest Amulon, Nehor, Amlici, the people of Ammonihah, Korihor, the Zoramites, Jacob (Alma 52:20), Pachus and the king-men (Alma 51:5-8; 62:6), Morianton (Alma 50:25-36), Paanchi (Helaman 1:3-7), Kishkumen and Gadianton (Helaman 1:9-12; 2:4-14), and probably Zerahemnah. Even when the record calls some of these lesser-known villains such as Tubaloth (see the commentary for Helaman 1:16) and Coriantumr “Lamanites” or even “bold Lamanites,” we have already been told that their true parentage was Nephite or Mulekite (see the commentary for Helaman 1:15 and 16). To be sure, the Nephites did not consider the Lamanites to be peaceful neighbors, and these unrighteous Lamanites did send armies from time to time to attack the Nephites, but there is no mistaking that the record emphasizes that the majority of the time, it was the Nephite dissenters who were the true “hard hearts” who continually stirred up, recruited, and inspired the reluctant Lamanites to go into battle (see Alma 21:3; 23:13-15; 24; 27:2-3; 43:44; 47:1-6; 48:1-3; 52:1-4; 62:35-38; 63:14-15; Helaman 1:14-33; 4:4). Indeed, here in this verse we learn that within two verses of the death of the dissenting Nephite Ammoron, the great Nephite-Lamanite wars were over (see Alma 62:36-38), and the peace was not broken for another eight years when more Nephite dissenters will stir up Lamanite hearts yet again (see Alma 63:14-16).

43 And Moroni yielded up the command of his armies into the hands of his son, whose name was Moronihah; and he retired to his own house that he might spend the remainder of his days in peace.

44 And Pahoran did return to his judgment-seat; and Helaman did take upon him again to preach unto the people the word of God; for because of so many wars and contentions it had become expedient that a regulation should be made again in the church.

verse 44 “because of so many wars and contentions it had become expedient that a regulation should be made again in the church” Apparently during this time of dissension, war, and national crisis, there had been something of a general apostasy from the church. The church organization needed to be set in order and the people re-taught and rebaptized.

45 Therefore, Helaman and his brethren went forth, and did declare the word of God with much power unto the convincing of many people of their wickedness, which did cause them to repent of their sins and to be baptized unto the Lord their God.

46 And it came to pass that they did establish again the church of God, throughout all the land.

47 Yea, and regulations were made concerning the law. And their judges, and their chief judges were chosen.

verse 47 Also the organization of government had deteriorated and needed to be re-established and reorganized.

48 And the people of Nephi began to prosper again in the land, and began to multiply and to wax exceedingly strong again in the land. And they began to grow exceedingly rich.

49 But notwithstanding their riches, or their strength, or their prosperity, they were not lifted up in the pride of their eyes; neither were they slow to remember the Lord their God; but they did humble themselves exceedingly before him.

50 Yea, they did remember how great things the Lord had done for them, that he had delivered them from death, and from bonds, and from prisons, and from all manner of afflictions and he had delivered them out of the hands of their enemies.

51 And they did pray unto the Lord their God continually, insomuch that the Lord did bless them, according to his word, so that they did wax strong and prosper in the land.

52 And it came to pass that all these things were done. And Helaman died, in the thirty and fifth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi.

Alma Chapter 63

1 And it came to pass in the commencement of the thirty and sixth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi, that Shiblon took possession of those sacred things which had been delivered unto Helaman by Alma.

verse 1 “Shiblon took possession of those sacred things which had been delivered unto Helaman by Alma” Shiblon the son of the younger Alma and the brother of Helaman. Shiblon’s brother Helaman, of course, had just died. The “sacred things” include the plates, the breastplate, the sword of Laban, the Urim and Thummim, and the director or Liahona.

Shiblon’s record will only last through verse 11 of this chapter. Then possession of the records will be assumed by Helaman, the son of Helaman.

2 And he was a just man, and he did walk uprightly before God; and he did observe to do good continually, to keep the commandments of the Lord his God; and also did his brother.

verse 2 “and also did his brother” It is not clear whether this has reference to Shiblon’s brother Helaman or to his other brother Corianton. The latter had taken his father Alma’s counsel to heart. He had repented and had returned to the ministry (Alma 42:31).

3 And it came to pass that Moroni died also. And thus ended the thirty and sixth year of the reign of the judges.

verse 3 Moroni died at a surprisingly young age. We know that he had been twenty-five years old in 74 BC (Alma 43:17), and he died in 55 BC—at an age of about forty-four years!

4 And it came to pass that in the thirty and seventh year of the reign of the judges, there was a large company of men, even to the amount of five thousand and four hundred men, with their wives and their children, departed out of the land of Zarahemla into the land which was northward.

verse 4 “the land which was northward” The Book of Mormon text often speaks of a mysterious land. It may be referred to, as it is in this verse, as the “land which was northward” or simply the “land northward” (Alma 63:5-8, 10; Helaman 3:3-4, 7, 10-11). In another place, it is referred to as the “northernmost part of the land” (3 Nephi 7:12). It is possible that this land is in the same location as the “great city of Jacobugath” (3 Nephi 9:9). Joseph L. Allen (Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon, 97-107) suggests that this mysterious land might be the ancient city of Teotihuacan, built in the valley of Mexico, near where Mexico City lies today. The ancient culture which inhabited this city had its beginnings about 150 BC and fell about AD 750. The circumstantial evidence that Teotihuacan might have played a role in the Book of Mormon includes the fact that between 55 BC to AD 29, the Book of Mormon mentions several migrations into this land where large bodies of water were found (see also Alma 63:7-8; Helaman 3:3-4, 12; 3 Nephi 7:12).

According to Dr. John L. Sorenson: "In former times the floor of the Valley of Mexico was occupied by a set of lakes that were greater in combined size than anything else in central Mexico. It was this lake system that allowed the Aztecs to facilitate movement of goods needed to support their great city" (An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, 266-67).

This is same time period when, according to archaeologists, Teotihuacan was experiencing a high growth rate. Also, the valley of Mexico contained many lakes, in fact Mexico City is built on a dry lake bed. The Book of Mormon speaks of the people in the land northward building houses out of cement because timber was scarce in the land (Helaman 3:7, 10-11). The archaeological site of Teotihuacan contains many buildings made of cement, and timber is indeed scarce in the valley of Mexico.

5 And it came to pass that Hagoth, he being an exceedingly curious man, therefore he went forth and built him an exceedingly large ship, on the borders of the land Bountiful, by the land Desolation, and launched it forth into the west sea, by the narrow neck which led into the land northward.

verse 5 "Hagoth" For commentary on the Hebrew derivation of the name Hagoth, see the supplemental article, Names in the Book of Mormon.

"curious" The word curious in this verse means desirous to discover what is unknown; inquisitive.

6 And behold, there were many of the Nephites who did enter therein and did sail forth with much provisions, and also many women and children; and they took their course northward. And thus ended the thirty and seventh year.

verses 5-6 These verses contain the only mention in the Book of Mormon of shipbuilding and exploring by sea in the Nephites' promised land. It so happens that on the west-sea side (Pacific) of the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, which qualifies by many criteria as the narrow neck of land, there are a pair of large, placid lagoons, over thirty miles long. They could have provided a sheltered place not only to construct Hagoth's ships but also to master their use. In the mountains overlooking the lagoons, the Spaniards long afterward located timber that they found ideal for their own shipbuilding purposes. Also, it is generally agreed by Mesoamericanists that over a period of many centuries large seagoing rafts (de facto "ships") from Ecuador actually came up the Pacific coast to the Isthmus of Tehuantepec and beyond on trading expeditions (see Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, 268-69; Robert C.

West, "Aboriginal Sea Navigation between Middle and South America," American Anthropologist 63 [1961]: 133-35). No other spot north of Panama fits the Hagoth story as well as the Pacific coast "by the narrow neck of land."

7 And in the thirty and eighth year, this man built other ships. And the first ship did also return, and many more people did enter into it; and they also took much provisions, and set out again to the land northward.

8 And it came to pass that they were never heard of more. And we suppose that they were drowned in the depths of the sea. And it came to pass that one other ship also did sail forth; and whither she did go we know not.

verse 8 So what became of Hagoth and the people on his ship? And what about those on the other ship? Obviously from this verse the Nephites supposed that they were lost at sea. But were they?

In the Church since its early days there has been considerable interest in the idea that these people sailed into the south Pacific and settled in the Hawaiian Islands or on the other Polynesian Islands or even in New Zealand. Joseph Smith was never known to have taught this idea, and apparently, it originated with Elder George Q. Cannon, who is said to have received "a knowledge directly from the Lord" (Britsch, R. Lanier, Unto the Islands of the Sea: A History of the Latter-day Saints in the Pacific, 97-98).

It should be noted that the Church has never taken an official position on the connection between Hagoth and the Polynesians, but we have access to many statements by members of the Twelve and by presidents of the Church in direct support of this relationship. These have been summarized by Robert E. Parsons in his article "Hagoth and the Polynesians" in The Book of Mormon: Alma, the Testimony of the Word, 249-62. Following is a partial list of citations of those who have made statements about this possible relationship.

Elder Mark E. Petersen in general conference (CR [April 1962] 111-15); Elder Hugh B. Brown in his prayer during the laying of the cornerstone of the New Zealand temple (Cummings, David W., Mighty Missionary of the Pacific, 63); President David O. McKay in his dedicatory prayer at the New Zealand temple (Church News, 10 May 1958, 2, 6); Elder Gordon B. Hinckley ("Temple in the Pacific" Improvement Era [July 1958] 61:509); President Spencer W. Kimball in quoting former President Joseph F. Smith ("Official Report of the Samoa Area Conference Held in Pago Pago and Apia, Samoa," February 1976, 15); and President Brigham Young (Barber, Ian G. "Mormonism Among the Tangata Whenua," a paper delivered at the annual Mormon History Association Conference, Hawaii, June 1990, 12).

9 And it came to pass that in this year there were many people who went forth into the land northward. And thus ended the thirty and eighth year.

10 And it came to pass in the thirty and ninth year of the reign of the judges, Shiblon died also, and Corianton had gone forth to the land northward in a ship, to carry forth provisions unto the people who had gone forth into that land.

verses 9-10 A careful reading of these events shows that in the space of two years Mormon reported at least five notable migrations—three by sea, two by land, and all of them “northward.” Alma 63:9 could be argued to be somewhat ambiguous as to the mode of travel: “And it came to pass that in this year there were many people who went forth into the land northward.” Within the immediate context of sea voyages and the building of more ships, it’s possible to assume that the people who “went forth” were actually sailing forth. However, it should be remembered that land migration is also part of this context (verse 4), and that Mormon had just reported that “one other ship also did sail forth; and whither she did go we know not” (verse 8). After this he introduced the next details about migration with the phrase “And it came to pass” which often acts as a marker between separate ideas (verse 9). It would seem odd for Mormon to explicitly mention “one other ship” (which sort of has a tone of finality to it) and remark upon its uncertain fate, and then report an additional seafaring journey without even mentioning that it was by ship. Because of the difficulty of such a reading, it seems much more likely that this chapter’s final—though unspecified—mention of a journey northward was by land rather than by sea. This point is relevant because two northward land migrations within a short period of time holds greater implications for Nephite territorial expansion.

Although brief, Mormon’s sampling of these migrations helps the reader catch a glimpse of an expanding Nephite civilization. While nothing is said further concerning the matter, Mormon’s mentioning that “Hagoth built even more ships” implies that further seafaring migrations may have been on the horizon (For a treatment of oceanic voyages in the Americas, see John L. Sorenson “Transoceanic Voyaging: How Ancient America Became Civilized,” Springville UT: Book of Mormon Central Archive, 2013, 11–14; See also, Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex, 150–172).

The uncertainty concerning the final destination of Hagoth’s voyagers (and potentially Hagoth himself, assuming he accompanied the second journey of his ship), has captured the attention of Book of Mormon readers for generations (Russel T. Clement, “Polynesian Origins: More Word on the Mormon Perspective,” Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought 13, Winter 1980: 91). As stated above, several LDS prophets and general authorities have believed Hagoth’s seafarers were progenitors of various peoples of the Pacific Islands. Thus, for many Polynesians the story about Hagoth and the possibility of other Lehite voyages by sea has significantly influenced perceptions of cultural identity and heritage. Officially, though, the LDS church claims no specific revelation or position on these matters.

While the fate of Hagoth’s travelers is not certainly known, the very fact that their journeys are mentioned at all is relevant to interpreting the Book of Mormon. Mormon was very selective about what he included in his narrative (Grant Hardy, Understanding the Book of Mormon: A Reader's Guide, New York, NY: Oxford University Press, 2010, 207), which suggests that digressing into details about these migrations must have served some overarching narrative goal.

Wherever they went and whatever their relationship with the indigenous peoples in the Pacific, Hagoth's oceanic voyagers certainly open up the possibility for the Lehi lineage to have been dispersed to locations far away from the central locus of the Book of Mormon narrative (For possible linguistic connections related to Hagoth's voyagers, see Brian D. Stubbs and John L. Sorenson, "Was There Hebrew Language in Ancient America? An Interview with Brian Stubbs," Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 9, no. 2, 2000: 62; Brian D. Stubbs, "A Few Hundred Hints of Egyptian and Northwest Semitic in Uto-Aztecan," presentation given at the 2006 Fair Mormon conference, online at Fairmormon.org; Brian D. Stubbs, Exploring the Explanatory Power of Semitic and Egyptian in Uto-Aztecan, Provo, UT: Grover Publications, 2015, 359–362). Thematically speaking, this helps readers recognize that even among the Nephites, the scattering of Israel was still taking place. Indeed, nine years after Hagoth set sail, large numbers of Nephites migrated a "great distance" to the north (Helaman 3:3), and Mormon's description of their multiplying and spreading abroad to the south, north, west and east, uses language similar to the covenantal promise given to Jacob in Genesis 28:14, indicating that he saw these migrations as part of that larger Abrahamic narrative.

Furthermore, the fact that ships were being built at all and that Nephites were feeling a need to relocate suggest that population growth and industry were being restored after the lengthy war between the Nephites and the Lamanites. This renewed economic prosperity accompanied by a northward expansion helps set the stage for the next phase of Nephite history. As John L. Sorenson explained: "Other major realignments took place during the Expansion phase. Cultural, and probably genetic, interchange continued between the main Lamanite and Nephite centers. . . As the Book of Mormon narrative approached AD 30, the picture of society throughout the 'promised land' occupied by Lehi's descendants was one of factional fragmentation and perhaps increasing cultural differentiation within a highly variegated set of environments. It was evidently difficult for the component peoples to maintain stable social and cultural conditions" (Sorenson, Mormon's Codex, 51–53).

In other words, expansion and prosperity helped pave the way for increasing social complexity and eventual instability. Sorenson's analysis helps demonstrate that the story about Hagoth and the other voyages northward was not merely a casual digression into historical trivia. On the contrary, Mormon (who would have had a personal interest in the land northward where he grew up—As is implied in Mormon 1:6), presented this information to help readers better conceptualize the large scale transportations and important transformations happening among the Nephite and Lamanite civilizations (For possible implications of northward expansion, see Mark Alan Wright, “Heartland as Hinterland: The Mesoamerican Core and North American Periphery of Book of Mormon Geography,” Interpreter: A Journal of Mormon Scripture 13, 2015: 111-129; Tyler Livingston, “The Book of Mormon and Mesoamerican travels ‘Northward,’” Book of Mormon Archeological Forum, January 2011, online at bmaf.org). No narrative takes place in a historical vacuum, and the better readers understand the historical backdrop of the Book of Mormon, the more real and meaningful its sacred stories will become to them.

11 Therefore it became expedient for Shiblon to confer those sacred things, before his death, upon the son of Helaman, who was called Helaman, being called after the name of his father.

verse 11 Helaman, the son of Helaman, becomes the record keeper and will become the chief judge in the land of Zarahemla for the fourteen years prior to his death in 39 BC. Little is known of his personal affairs. He was given charge of Nephite historical records by his uncle, Shiblon, in 53 BC, and the book of Helaman in the Book of Mormon takes its name from him (“Helaman 3,” Encyclopedia of Mormonism, volume 2). Besides the plates, Helaman was of course also given charge of the other “sacred things” including the breastplate, the sword of Laban, the Urim and Thummim, and the director or Liahona.

12 Now behold, all those engravings which were in the possession of Helaman were written and sent forth among the children of men throughout all the land, save it were those parts which had been commanded by Alma should not go forth.

verse 12 Copies of the scriptures were distributed widely. It was common practice to distribute copies of the scriptures among all the Nephites (see also Jacob 7:23; and Alma 14:1) who were continually encouraged by their leaders to read them. For example King Benjamin encouraged his sons to search the scriptures diligently (Mosiah 1:7), and Alma counseled the poor Zoramites to “search the scriptures” (Alma 33:2).

“save it were those parts which had been commanded by Alma should not go forth” The reader will recall that previously the younger Alma commanded his son Helaman to “retain” or keep secret the specific mechanisms of the secret combinations of the Jaredites—the oaths, covenants, and agreements. This, of course, was to prevent them from being disseminated among the Nephite people. These forbidden secret writings were undoubtedly found on the twenty-four plates found by the people of Limhi in the days of King Mosiah. These plates contained the record of the Jaredites which will be translated by the prophet Moroni and become the book of Ether.

13 Nevertheless, these things were to be kept sacred, and handed down from one generation to another; therefore, in this year, they had been conferred upon Helaman, before the death of Shiblon.

14 And it came to pass also in this year that there were some dissenters who had gone forth unto the Lamanites; and they were stirred up again to anger against the Nephites.

15 And also in this same year they came down with a numerous army to war against the people of Moronihah, or against the army of Moronihah, in the which they were beaten and driven back again to their own lands, suffering great loss.

16 And thus ended the thirty and ninth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi.

17 And thus ended the account of Alma, and Helaman his son, and also Shiblon, who was his son.

The Book of Helaman

An account of the Nephites. Their wars and contentions, and their dissensions. And also the prophecies of many holy prophets, before the coming of Christ, according to the records of Helaman, who was the son of Helaman, and also according to the records of his sons, even down to the coming of Christ. And also many of the Lamanites are converted. An account of their conversion. An account of the righteousness of the Lamanites, and the wickedness and abominations of the Nephites, according to the record of Helaman and his sons, even down to the coming of Christ, which is called the book of Helaman.

Paul R. Cheesman, writing in the Encyclopedia of Mormonism, wrote the following about the book of Helaman in the Book of Mormon:

The book of Helaman chronicles one of the most tumultuous periods in the history of the Nephites and Lamanites (52 BC to 1 BC). . .

This book takes its name from its first author, Helaman, the son of Helaman. Other contributors to the record were Nephi and Lehi, sons of Helaman (16:25), and Mormon, the principal editor of the Book of Mormon, who added political and religious commentary.

The account opens after Helaman had received custody of the Nephite records from his uncle Shiblon (Alma 63:11) in the fortieth year of the reign of the judges (ca. 52 BC). The narrative falls into six major segments: the record of Helaman (chapters 1-3); the record of Nephi (chapters 4-6); the prophecy of Nephi (chapters 7-11); Mormon's editorial observations on God's power (chapter 12); the prophecy of Samuel the Lamanite (chapters 13-15); and a brief statement about the five-year period before Jesus's birth (chapter 16). Several religious discourses are woven into the narrative, including Helaman's admonition to his sons (5:6-12), Nephi's psalm (7:7-9), Nephi's sermon from the tower in his garden (7:13-29; 8:11-28), Nephi's prayer (11:10-16), and Samuel's long speech atop the walls of Zarahemla (13:5-39; 14:2-15:17) (volume 1, "Book of Mormon").

Later on in the Book of Mormon, in 3 Nephi 8-9, we will read of the great destruction, storms, earthquakes, tempests, lightning, fires, and darkness that occurred at the time of the Savior's crucifixion and death—all of which will result in the destruction of the more wicked among the people. We will learn that God brought this destruction upon the people because of their iniquity. The book of Helaman chronicles the rapid decline of this people to a state of wickedness which will result in the Lord's destroying many of them from off the face of the earth.

The accounts in the book of Helaman and the book of 3 Nephi constitute a type of foreshadowing of our dispensation in that they were written of the period just prior to the Lord's coming to the Nephites at the temple in the land Bountiful. In an analogous way, we now await his second coming and, before that blessed event, we anticipate a major cleansing of the earth—a destruction of the wicked prior to that coming.

Chapter Outline of Helaman

A brief outline of the book of Helaman, worth committing to memory, is as follows:

Helaman 5 Mission of Nephi and Lehi to the land of Nephi. They have a miraculous experience in a Lamanite prison during which they are surrounded by a wall of fire.

Helaman 7-9 Nephi prays and preaches from his garden tower. He miraculously visualizes the murder of the chief judge and even identifies his murderer.

Helaman Chapter 1

Scripture Mastery

Helaman 1 Because of dissension and disorganization in the Nephite government following the murder by Kishkumen of the chief judge Pahoran, the son of Pahoran, as he sat upon the judgment seat, a well-armed Lamanite army, led by a large and mighty man named Coriantumr captures for a time the city of Zarahemla. Coriantumr is eventually defeated and slain by Moronihah, the son of Captain Moroni, and his Nephite army.

1 And now behold, it came to pass in the commencement of the fortieth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi, there began to be a serious difficulty among the people of the Nephites.

verse 1 “it came to pass in the commencement of the fortieth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi” The book of Helaman is a good example of a type of historical writing, common in the Near East, referred to as “annalistic” writing. In annalistic writing, the record keeper records events year by year and is careful to document the succession of years. Historical records so recorded are called “annals.” In the book of Helaman, the editor Mormon mentions almost every year and itemizes that year’s events. At times, years are mentioned when almost nothing of note occurs. Consider, for example, Helaman 3:2: “And there was no contention among the people in the forty and fourth year; neither was there much contention in the forty and fifth year.”

In order that you might remain well-oriented as to time, keep in mind that Jesus’s birth will occur in the ninety first year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi (ca. 1 BC).

2 For behold, Pahoran had died, and gone the way of all the earth; therefore there began to be a serious contention concerning who should have the judgment-seat among the brethren, who were the sons of Pahoran.

3 Now these are their names who did contend for the judgment-seat, who did also cause the people to contend: Pahoran, Paanchi, and Pacumeni.

verse 3 “Pahoran” The Egyptian name transliterated Paهران means “the Syrian.” Pahura is the Canaanite (now Palestinian) adaptation of the name (Echoes and Evidences of the Book of Mormon, ed. Donald W. Parry, Daniel C. Peterson, John W. Welch, 458.)

“Paanchi” We have discussed on occasion the Egyptian influence found in Ancient Judah at the time Lehi departed that land and the resulting Egyptian influence found among the Book of Mormon peoples. It is interesting to note that Paankhi was an important royal name of the Late Period in Egypt from 525 to 332 BC (Hugh Nibley, “Book of Mormon Near Eastern Background” in Encyclopedia of Mormonism). Also Egyptologist Gunther Vittmann, in an article on the name Paankhi (pronounced “Pi-ankhi” or “Pa-ankhi”), indicates that it is a Twenty-Fifth Dynasty royal name of Meroitic (meaning of an ancient ruined city on the Nile—Meroe) origin (Orientalia 43 [1974]: 12-16). Even critics of the Book of Mormon concede that this name is indisputably Egyptian in origin. See also the supplemental article, Names in the Book of Mormon.

“Pacumeni” “This name resembles that borne by some of the last priest governors of Egypt, whose names are rendered Pamenech, Pa-mnkh, Pamenches, etc.” (Hugh Nibley, Lehi in the Desert, 22-23).

Here, we come to a very troublesome and alarming time in the history of the stability of the Nephite government. Key leaders such as Helaman (Alma 62:52), Moroni (Alma 63:3), and Shiblon (v. 10) had all recently died. Because of that void, when Pahoran passed away (verse 2), at least one cause for alarm becomes apparent: within five years the Nephites had lost several of their finest and most admirable leaders—men who had been pivotal in holding their nation together during the long defensive military campaign against the Lamanites.

As might be expected, the death of Chief Judge Pahoran caused no small disturbance among the people. The position of chief judge was much more like a king than many readers may realize, and when Pahoran died, his three sons—Pahoran, Paanchi, and Pacumeni—all “did contend for the judgment-seat; therefore, they did cause three divisions among the people” (Helaman 1:4).

This scenario almost precisely matches what King Mosiah feared would happen if he didn’t transform the Nephite monarchy into a system of judges (Mosiah 29:7). Richard L. Bushman, however, has noted that Mosiah’s reforms weren’t altogether successful: “The institution of judgeships, rather than beginning a republican era in Book of Mormon history, slid back at once toward monarchy” (Richard L. Bushman, “The Book of Mormon and the American Revolution,” in Book of Mormon Authorship:

New Light on Ancient Origins, ed. Noel B. Reynolds, Provo, UT: Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, 1982; reprinted by FARMS, 1996, 201).

On the other hand, Brant A. Gardner has explained that monarchical successions could actually be somewhat beneficial: “An advantage of monarchies in which the dead king has an adult son is the clarity of the process, with the son having a divinely sanctioned mandate to replace the father” (Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 5:41). Unfortunately, the situation after Pahoran’s death was a full realization of Mosiah’s fears without the advantageous stability that monarchical successions sometimes provide. According to Gardner, “Not only was the chief judge’s death a time of transition, but it was the first time that the surviving chief judge had not declared his ruler. . . Complicating things even more, the crisis of succession came at a time of increasing internal divisions among the Nephites. Pahoran’s death became a spark that ignited already-smoldering divisions (Gardner, Second Witness, 5:41–42).

Recognizing that this leadership vacuum presented an opportunity for an insurgency, the secret band of Kishkumen (which soon became the band of Gadianton) began to assert their influence. After Pahoran, the son of Pahoran, was chosen by the voice of the people as chief judge (Helaman 1:7), Paanchi did not accept this decision. As he was “about to . . . rise up in rebellion,” he was apprehended, convicted of rebellion, and executed (Helaman 1:7-8). Paanchi’s followers then enlisted “one Kishkumen” who “murdered Pahoran as he sat upon the judgment seat” (Helaman 1:9).

Pacumeni was then chosen to fill Pahoran’s place as chief judge, but he was shortly thereafter killed during a Lamanite invasion of Zarahemla (Helaman 1:21). After this, Helaman the son of Helaman was appointed chief judge, and Kishkumen then attempted to assassinate Helaman (For a legal analysis of these events and proceedings, see “The Case of Paanchi,” in John W. Welch, The Legal Cases in the Book of Mormon, Provo, UT: BYU Press and Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2008, 311-322). From this narrative of intrigue and social unrest, we can see that the Gadianton robbers played a crucial role in destabilizing the Nephite government. Gardner concluded, “Above and beyond the simple reporting of history, Mormon is including this event because from it he traces the beginnings of secret combinations in the Nephite society. For Mormon, this covenant among conspirators is more important than the actual murder. Political assassinations will become a defining trait of the Gadianton robbers (Gardner, Second Witness, 5:45).

It is imperative that modern readers of the Book of Mormon recognize how dangerous the Gadianton robbers were to the safety and stability of Nephite society. Mormon wrote, “And behold, in the end of this book ye shall see that this Gadianton did prove the overthrow, yea, almost the entire destruction of the people of Nephi” (Helaman 2:13). Grant Hardy has noted that the way Mormon clarified the relationship between the Gadianton robbers and the entire destruction of his people is unusually explicit (See Grant Hardy, Understanding the Book of Mormon: A Reader's Guide, New York, NY: Oxford University Press, 2010, 162–163).

This episode at the beginning of the book of Helaman demonstrates and warns that such secret societies thrive on a society's internal division and are prone to target key leaders and political figures, especially at times of transition in power or weakness in leadership. Moroni thus directly warned latter-day readers about the rise of secret combinations: "Wherefore, the Lord commandeth you, when ye shall see these things come among you that ye shall awake to a sense of your awful situation. . . For it cometh to pass that whoso buildeth it [a secret combination] up seeketh to overthrow the freedom of all lands, nations, and countries; and it bringeth to pass the destruction of all people, for it is built up by the devil, who is the father of all lies (Ether 8:24–25) (See also Richard Dilworth Rust, "'I Know Your Doing': The Book of Mormon Speaks to Our Times," Ensign, December 1988, online at LDS.org).

Thankfully, when it comes to the leadership, governance, and succession in the presidency of His church, the Lord himself has established crucial safeguards and protections. Elder Russell M. Nelson declared, "The calling of fifteen men to the holy apostleship provides great protection for us as members of the Church. . . The Church today has been organized by the Lord Himself. He has put in place a remarkable system of governance that provides redundancy and backup. That system provides for prophetic leadership even when the inevitable illnesses and incapacities may come with advancing age. Counterbalances and safeguards abound so that no one can ever lead the Church astray ("Sustaining the Prophets," Ensign, November 2014, 75, online at lds.org).

Despite the complexities and dangers of the modern world; despite the rise of secret combinations and modern-day Gadianton robbers; despite the vulnerability that nations and their leaders may face in the increasing chaos and turmoil—despite all of these things, those who place faith in Jesus Christ can trust that His established Church and His appointed leaders are safeguarding the keys of the kingdom.

As Elder Gary E. Stevenson declared, "Yes, the keys are safely in the possession of prophets, seers, and revelators" (Gary E. Stevenson, "Where Are the Keys and Authority of the Priesthood?" Ensign, May 2016, 32, online at lds.org). This thought should give comfort and solace to all who have faith in Christ, for in these latter days Zion has been established "for a defense, and for a refuge from the storm, and from wrath when it shall be poured out without mixture upon the whole earth" (D&C 115:6).

4 Now these are not all the sons of Pahoran (for he had many) but these are they who did contend for the judgment-seat; therefore, they did cause three divisions among the people.

5 Nevertheless, it came to pass that Pahoran was appointed by the voice of the people to be chief judge and a governor over the people of Nephi.

verse 5 “the voice of the people” This implies that a democratic type of voting was in place. King Mosiah, the son of King Benjamin, had instituted the “majority vote” which the people of his day utilized in selecting judges. He taught that the majority vote, the “voice of the people,” would seldom lead to erroneous decisions. When the majority vote did lead to an unrighteous decision, then that people were ripe in iniquity and likely to be destroyed (Mosiah 29:25-27).

6 And it came to pass that Pacumeni, when he saw that he could not obtain the judgment-seat, he did unite with the voice of the people.

7 But behold, Paanchi, and that part of the people that were desirous that he should be their governor, was exceedingly wroth; therefore, he was about to flatter away those people to rise up in rebellion against their brethren.

verse 7 Paanchi and his followers plan a coup d’ etat that is, unfortunately for Paanchi, discovered by the Nephite government.

This verse marks “the beginning of the end” of the Nephite people, since “Paanchi and his followers” are the charter members of the secret society of the Gadianton robbers which will prove to be the eventual downfall of the Nephite nation.

8 And it came to pass as he was about to do this, behold, he was taken, and was tried according to the voice of the people, and condemned unto death; for he had raised up in rebellion and sought to destroy the liberty of the people.

verse 8 Paanchi is condemned to death, not for his ambition—his desire to become chief judge—nor for his opposition to Pahoran. Rather, he is accused of sedition—seeking to subvert the liberties of the people. The exact method for trying him and finding him guilty by the “voice of the people” is not made clear. Perhaps he was tried fairly by a jury or a council of his peers.

9 Now when those people who were desirous that he should be their governor saw that he was condemned unto death, therefore they were angry, and behold, they sent forth one Kishkumen, even to the judgment-seat of Pahoran, and murdered Pahoran as he sat upon the judgment-seat.

verse 9 “and murdered Pahoran as he sat upon the judgment-seat” Apparently Pahoran was murdered as he sat in audience. This is obviously a time when the chief judge would be easily accessible and vulnerable, and an assassination so timed would give immediate and effective public attention to the cause of the murderer’s supporters.

10 And he was pursued by the servants of Pahoran; but behold, so speedy was the flight of Kishkumen that no man could overtake him.

11 And he went unto those that sent him, and they all entered into a covenant, yea, swearing by their everlasting Maker, that they would tell no man that Kishkumen had murdered Pahoran.

12 Therefore, Kishkumen was not known among the people of Nephi, for he was in disguise at the time that he murdered Pahoran. And Kishkumen and his band, who had covenanted with him, did mingle themselves among the people, in a manner that they all could not be found; but as many as were found were condemned unto death.

verses 11-12 There are several instances of evil oaths or evil covenants in the book of Helaman and the early chapters of 3 Nephi (see also Helaman 2:3; 6:21-26, 30; 3 Nephi 6:28-30; 7:11). One may argue that Satan is the author and administrator of these secret combinations. He is also the great impersonator or imitator. Just as God uses the covenant to bind and commit his followers to an agreement, so does Satan do the same to bind his adherents to evil purposes.

Victor L. Ludlow has written of Satan's evil covenants and has pointed out the characteristics that typify these covenants ("Secret Covenant Teachings of Men and the Devil in Helaman through 3 Nephi 8," The Book of Mormon: Helaman through 3 Nephi 8, According To Thy Word, 265-82). I will draw upon his article in commenting upon these covenants in the book of Helaman and in 3 Nephi 1-7. His material will be utilized in my commentary for the following verses: Helaman 1:11-12; 6:21-22, 26, and 30. It is useful for us to study these characteristics that we may learn more about the techniques Satan utilizes with us.

We may utilize the evil covenant found here in verses 11 and 12 to identify and study some of the key elements of Satan's covenants with man:

1. Irony—Note the phrase: "they all entered into a covenant, yea, swearing by their everlasting Maker" It is chilling and ironic that this wicked oath was regarded by those who made it as a religious oath. They swore their Satanic oath in the name of God!

2. Murder—Their group goal is to overthrow and kill people in authority, political or religious, over them (see also Helaman 2:3). Perhaps we might extend this idea to suggest that if they were able, they would kill the ultimate chief judge—the Savior himself. Their destruction of those in authority is in itself a great irony. In doing so they inadvertently subjugate themselves to the master authoritarian himself, even the devil and those authoritarians who follow him, the evil leaders of the earth. The group is also inclined to destroy those who learn of their wickedness, those who have discovered their identity. Thus, prophets are often attacked. Commenting on the peculiar phenomenon of murder being carried out as a religious act, Daniel C. Peterson wrote:

This seems odd to those of us unaccustomed to thinking of murder as a religious act. But the very word assassin was given to us by a religious sect of the medieval Near East who bore it as a name. The “Assassins” carried out daring murders for many years from mixed religious and political motives. The Assassins offer, in fact, a remarkably close parallel to the ‘secret combinations’ of the Nephite and Jaredite traditions. . . And it would seem, from the story of Cain and Abel as recorded in the book of Moses, that such “religious” oaths go back to the very beginning of human history (Moses 5:29) (Studies in Scripture, Volume Eight, Alma 30 to Moroni, 94, 104).

3. Secrecy—Note the phrase: “swearing . . . they would tell no man that Kishkumen had murdered Pahoran.” Here is an important element of the Satanic covenant—secrecy. They attempt to avoid the consequences of their actions and defy justice as they take an oath of secrecy.

4. Disguise—“Kishkumen and his band . . . did mingle themselves among the people, in a manner that they all could not be found.” Secret combinations tend to become “wolves in sheep’s clothing.” These conspirators resumed their ordinary daily pursuits as seemingly ordinary respected citizens, hoping to remain anonymous. They were successful in that only some of them were identified and punished. On the surface it is often difficult if not impossible to tell a good man from an evil man. Evil men may appear to be regular and virtuous, even exemplary members of society. Keep in mind that Satan himself can appear as an angel of light.

For more characteristics of evil covenants, see the commentary for Helaman 6:21-22, 26, and 30.

13 And now behold, Pacumeni was appointed, according to the voice of the people, to be a chief judge and a governor over the people, to reign in the stead of his brother Pahoran; and it was according to his right. And all this was done in the fortieth year of the reign of the judges; and it had an end.

verse 13 “Pacumeni was appointed, according to the voice of the people . . . and it was according to his right” Undoubtedly Pacumeni, like Pahoran before him, was selected chief judge by some type of democratic majority vote.

14 And it came to pass in the forty and first year of the reign of the judges, that the Lamanites had gathered together an innumerable army of men, and armed them with swords, and with cimeters and with bows, and with arrows, and with head-plates, and with breastplates, and with all manner of shields of every kind.

verse 14 “the Lamanites had gathered together an innumerable army of men” This verse is obviously hyperbole and simply indicates that a relatively large body of soldiers was involved.

15 And they came down again that they might pitch battle against the Nephites. And they were led by a man whose name was Coriantumr; and he was a descendant of Zarahemla; and he was a dissenter from among the Nephites; and he was a large and a mighty man.

verse 15 The original Book of Mormon manuscript for Helaman 1:15 shows how the name “Coriantumr” was first written by Oliver Cowdery phonetically as “Coriantummer” but was then crossed out and spelled correctly on the same line. This is consistent with the account of witnesses who suggested that Joseph spelled the proper names that he translated.

16 Therefore, the king of the Lamanites, whose name was Tubaloth, who was the son of Ammoron, supposing that Coriantumr, being a mighty man, could stand against the Nephites, with his strength and also with his great wisdom, insomuch that by sending him forth he should gain power over the Nephites—verse 16 Tubaloth was obviously not a Lamanite by birth. Rather, he was the son of Ammoron, the brother and successor of the notorious Nephite dissenter Amalickiah (Alma 46-49, 51). Not surprisingly he chose yet another Nephite dissenter, the Mulekite Coriantumr (“a descendant of Zarahemla”), to lead his forces against the Nephites. It would appear that apostates can often be counted on to hate that from which they apostatized.

17 Therefore he did stir them up to anger, and he did gather together his armies, and he did appoint Coriantumr to be their leader, and did cause that they should march down to the land of Zarahemla to battle against the Nephites.

18 And it came to pass that because of so much contention and so much difficulty in the government, that they had not kept sufficient guards in the land of Zarahemla; for they had supposed that the Lamanites durst not come into the heart of their lands to attack that great city Zarahemla.

verse 18 “because of so much contention and so much difficulty in the government” This undoubtedly refers to the confusion and contention produced by the bitter rebellion of Paanchi, the murder of Pahoran, and the need to elect two new chief judges in rapid succession.

19 But it came to pass that Coriantumr did march forth at the head of his numerous host, and came upon the inhabitants of the city, and their march was with such exceedingly great speed that there was no time for the Nephites to gather together their armies.

verse 19 In reference to this blitzkrieg attack by Coriantumr and the Lamanites, Hugh Nibley wrote:

It struck with such speed and force under the leadership of the Nephite defector Coriantumr that it achieved a complete surprise, and before anyone was aware of what had happened, he had succeeded in taking and occupying Zarahemla itself! Coriantumr instantly followed up his advantage by marching through the country almost unopposed (verse 24), burning and destroying as he went, “slaying the people with a great slaughter, both [sic.] men, women, and children” (verse 27). But like the Germans in Russia, Coriantumr had really gotten himself in a jam: his drive had been successful because it was completely unexpected; and it had been unexpected because it was utterly foolish. The Nephite forces were stationed, of course, on the frontiers (verses 18, 26), and so Coriantumr’s great breakthrough which had put him in the heart of the country had also got him neatly surrounded (verses 25, 32). The Nephite army leaders only had to tighten the bag until Coriantumr was forced to surrender (verses 28-32) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 330).

20 Therefore Coriantumr did cut down the watch by the entrance of the city, and did march forth with his whole army into the city, and they did slay every one who did oppose them, insomuch that they did take possession of the whole city.

21 And it came to pass that Pacumeni, who was the chief judge, did flee before Coriantumr, even to the walls of the city. And it came to pass that Coriantumr did smite him against the wall, insomuch that he died. And thus ended the days of Pacumeni.

verse 21 This verse contains the first reference to the fact that the city of Zarahemla did in fact have a surrounding wall. We will read more about this wall in the story of Samuel the Lamanite (Helaman 13:4).

22 And now when Coriantumr saw that he was in possession of the city of Zarahemla, and saw that the Nephites had fled before them, and were slain, and were taken, and were cast into prison, and that he had obtained the possession of the strongest hold in all the land, his heart took courage insomuch that he was about to go forth against all the land.

23 And now he did not tarry in the land of Zarahemla, but he did march forth with a large army, even towards the city of Bountiful; for it was his determination to go forth and cut his way through with the sword, that he might obtain the north parts of the land.

verse 23 The reader ought to maintain a “mind’s eye” geographic orientation. See the Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands.

24 And, supposing that their greatest strength was in the center of the land, therefore he did march forth, giving them no time to assemble themselves together save it were in small bodies; and in this manner they did fall upon them and cut them down to the earth.

verse 24 After Coriantumr took possession of Zarahemla he likely thought the whole land was his, “supposing that their greatest strength was in the center of the land.” We will learn that the Nephite strength was actually in “the cities around about in the borders” (verse 26). So while the invaders “had come into the center of the land, and had taken the capital city . . . and were marching through the most capital parts of the land . . . taking possession of many cities and of many strongholds” (verse 27), they were really playing right into chief captain Moronihah’s hands (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 6, 421- 22).

25 But behold, this march of Coriantumr through the center of the land gave Moronihah great advantage over them, notwithstanding the greatness of the number of the Nephites who were slain.

26 For behold, Moronihah had supposed that the Lamanites durst not come into the center of the land, but that they would attack the cities round about in the borders as they had hitherto done; therefore Moronihah had caused that their strong armies should maintain those parts round about by the borders.

27 But behold, the Lamanites were not frightened according to his desire, but they had come into the center of the land, and had taken the capital city which was the city of Zarahemla, and were marching through the most capital parts of the land, slaying the people with a great slaughter, both men, women, and children, taking possession of many cities and of many strongholds.

28 But when Moronihah had discovered this, he immediately sent forth Lehi with an army round about to head them before they should come to the land Bountiful.

verse 28 To “head” means to intercept.

29 And thus he did; and he did head them before they came to the land Bountiful, and gave unto them battle, insomuch that they began to retreat back towards the land of Zarahemla.

30 And it came to pass that Moronihah did head them in their retreat, and did give unto them battle, insomuch that it became an exceedingly bloody battle; yea, many were slain, and among the number who were slain Coriantumr was also found.

31 And now, behold, the Lamanites could not retreat either way, neither on the north, nor on the south, nor on the east, nor on the west, for they were surrounded on every hand by the Nephites.

32 And thus had Coriantumr plunged the Lamanites into the midst of the Nephites, insomuch that they were in the power of the Nephites, and he himself was slain, and the Lamanites did yield themselves into the hands of the Nephites.

33 And it came to pass that Moronihah took possession of the city of Zarahemla again, and caused that the Lamanites who had been taken prisoners should depart out of the land in peace.

verse 33 Hugh Nibley pointed out that Moronihah's lenient approach here is typical of what Moroni would have done. He describes the period immediately following the defeat of Coriantumr's army:

And then what? The Nephite commander Moronihah did just as his namesake Moroni would have—he let all the Lamanites “depart out of the land in peace.” No reprisals or vengeance for an army that had seized the capital and devastated the land without mercy! What would the Nephites think in reading the history of some of our present-day wars?” (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 330).

34 And thus ended the forty and first year of the reign of the judges.

Helaman Chapter 2

1 And it came to pass in the forty and second year of the reign of the judges, after Moronihah had established again peace between the Nephites and the Lamanites, behold there was no one to fill the judgment-seat; therefore there began to be a contention again among the people concerning who should fill the judgment-seat.

2 And it came to pass that Helaman, who was the son of Helaman, was appointed to fill the judgment-seat, by the voice of the people.

verse 2 “Helaman, who was the son of Helaman” This Helaman was the keeper of the records and other sacred things which had been given them by his uncle Shiblon, the brother of Helaman (Alma 63:11). Thus, we might regard Helaman as also the presiding high priest.

3 But behold, Kishkumen, who had murdered Pahoran, did lay wait to destroy Helaman also; and he was upheld by his band, who had entered into a covenant that no one should know his wickedness.

4 For there was one Gadianton, who was exceedingly expert in many words, and also in his craft, to carry on the secret work of murder and of robbery; therefore he became the leader of the band of Kishkumen.

verse 4 The name Gadianton is here used for the first time in the Book of Mormon. It will be used in thirty-two more verses in the book. It is interesting that in the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon, this name was spelled “Gaddianton.” The printer changed the spelling when he set the type. It is notable that the Hebrew word giddud means robber (see the commentary for 3 Nephi 3:12).

Gadianton was a highly skilled, professional propagandist. Hugh Nibley comments on his strategy:

He worked out a plan which he guaranteed would put Kishkumen and his gang in complete control of the government. All they had to do was murder the chief judge Helaman, as they had already murdered his predecessor Pahoran II, and make Gadianton himself judge—he would take care of the rest. The plan miscarried and the villains had to skip town, and yet before many years “this Gadianton did prove the overthrow, yea, almost the entire destruction of the people of Nephi” (Helaman 2:13) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 359).

In commenting on the takeover of this band of Paanchists by Gadianton, Daniel C. Peterson has pointed out an interesting parallel: “One cannot fail to be reminded of the takeover of an already-existing conspiratorial group in the Weimar Republic—the National Socialist German Workers’ Party—by an ambitious young ex-corporal named Adolf Hitler. If any one could be said to be ‘exceedingly expert in many words,’ it is he. Yet the pattern holds with remarkable consistency wherever such conspiracies arise:

Lenin, Mussolini, and Castro also come to mind. All were leaders of revolutionary organizations; all were given to seemingly endless speeches” (Studies in Scripture, Volume Eight, Alma 30 to Moroni, 105).

Commenting on this secret band, Brother Peterson has also pointed out: “Although they would never be successful in Gadianton’s lifetime, so complete was his control over them and so completely were they identified with him that ever afterward they were known among the Nephites as ‘Gadianton’s robbers’” (Ibid.).

Hugh Nibley summarized the characteristics of the secret band that eventually caused the overthrow of the Nephite culture:

Let us summarize the essential nature of what some have called “Gadiantonism”:

Objectives: (1) “Power and gain,” the two being interactive. Power wins gain, and gain wins power. (2) Control or overthrow of the government; using political office “to rule and do according to their wills, that they might get gain and glory” (Helaman 7:5).

Methods: (1) Secret agreements between individuals and groups. The Gadiantons are essentially an underground movement. (2) Assassination. These two things, “secret combinations” and “that men should shed blood,” have been forbidden by God “in all things . . . from the beginning of man” (Ether 8:19). (3) “Payola.” “Akish did offer them money” (Ether 9:11); “letting the guilty . . . go unpunished because of their money” (Helaman 7:5). (4) Skillful propaganda and public relations: “flattering words.” (5) The hate campaign: a steady output of charges, accusations, and rumors, in the manner of Amalickiah: Accuse—always accuse. Eagerness to accuse is from the devil, as Brigham Young often taught. (6) Intimidation: “breathing out many threatenings,” operating “by the hand of secrecy,” wearing fearsome disguises (3 Nephi 4:7). (7) Showmanship, e.g., the picturesque uniforms and romantic appeal to the young (3 Nephi 1:29). (8) Tight control of members—death penalty for betrayal (Ether 8:14; Helaman 1:11).

Attitude: (1) The Gadiantons were totally partisan, the laws and interests of the combination taking priority over all other laws and interests. (2) All were ambitious; hence they labored [diligently] for power and gain. Cain is the type and model. (3) The combinations were highly competitive, feuding fiercely among themselves. (4) They sought to project a noble image, with much talk of rights and wrongs, high courage and upright character (see the letter to Lachoneus in 3 Nephi 2). (5) They professed piety and religion, swearing their forbidden oaths not by the demons but “by the God of heaven” (Ether 8:14), “by their everlasting Maker” (Helaman 1:11). (6) They were paranoid, always attributing their troubles to the wickedness of others; never the aggressors, they are constantly seeking to avenge their wrongs. Vengeance is their watchword.

Ecology [the spacing and interdependence of people and institutions]: (1) They flourish best in an affluent business society, and wither in times of poverty. (2) They crystallize around ambitious individuals. (3) They readily coalesce with king-men, would-be nobility, great families, ambitious local officials, and rapacious Lamanite overlords, i.e., with all who are opposed to popular government among the Nephites. (4) They have destroyed every civilization in the New World in which they have been able to thrive. (5) They cannot thrive or even survive without the acceptance and encouragement of the society in general. Being predatory and non-productive, i.e., parasites, they must have a complacent society to host and support them. Such a society is one which accepts as desirable the Gadianton goals of power and gain. (6) They can become dormant for long periods of time and then, when circumstances are favorable, suddenly appear in full strength and vigor, their plans having been buried and preserved intact against the day of opportunity.

The Gadiantons, terrible as they were, are treated more as a symptom than as a disease. The society that has them is sick, but they are like maggots that prey only on dead tissue. They simply exploit the evil situation that gives them their opportunity (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 370-72).

5 Therefore he did flatter them, and also Kishkumen, that if they would place him in the judgment-seat he would grant unto those who belonged to his band that they should be placed in power and authority among the people; therefore Kishkumen sought to destroy Helaman.

verse 5 Gadianton wanted to be chief judge, and he promised positions of power and influence to those who would help him acquire that office.

6 And it came to pass as he went forth towards the judgment-seat to destroy Helaman, behold one of the servants of Helaman, having been out by night, and having obtained, through disguise, a knowledge of those plans which had been laid by this band to destroy Helaman—

7 And it came to pass that he met Kishkumen, and he gave unto him a sign; therefore Kishkumen made known unto him the object of his desire, desiring that he would conduct him to the judgment-seat that he might murder Helaman.

8 And when the servant of Helaman had known all the heart of Kishkumen, and how that it was his object to murder, and also that it was the object of all those who belonged to his band to murder, and to rob, and to gain power, (and this was their secret plan, and their combination) the servant of Helaman said unto Kishkumen: Let us go forth unto the judgment-seat.

9 Now this did please Kishkumen exceedingly, for he did suppose that he should accomplish his design; but behold, the servant of Helaman, as they were going forth unto the judgment-seat, did stab Kishkumen even to the heart, that he fell dead without a groan. And he ran and told Helaman all the things which he had seen, and heard, and done.

verse 9 This “servant of Helaman” appears to have been, in fact, a sort of intelligence specialist employed by Helaman for the express purpose of infiltrating the secret band of Gadianton.

This story may be shocking to many readers, who may expect the servant to have taken Kishkumen prisoner so he could face trial. In a previous situation, Mormon felt it necessary to explain why enemy soldiers were detained without a trial, yet he gave no explanation in this case (See Alma 51:9: “And it came to pass that there were four thousand of those dissenters who were hewn down by the sword; and those of their leaders who were not slain in battle were taken and cast into prison, for there was no time for their trials at this period.”). A careful reading of Mormon’s narrative, however, suggests he viewed killing Kishkumen as the correct decision.

In Helaman 2, Mormon uses the rare phrase “out by night.” This phrase appears only three times in the Book of Mormon: when Nephi kills Laban (1 Nephi 4:22), when Teancum kills Amalickiah (Alma 51:33), and just before Helaman’s servant kills Kishkumen (Helaman 2:6). Ancient Israelite authors often used a rare word or phrase like this from an earlier story as a way of alluding back to the previous story (It does not matter where in the story the phrase appears or what it refers to, the simple presence of the phrase shows that one story should be read in light of the other story. See Peter J. Leithart, Deep Exegesis: The Mystery of Reading Scripture, Waco, TX: Baylor University Press, 2009, 109–115; Phyllis A. Bird, Missing Persons and Mistaken Identities: Women and Gender in Ancient Israel, Minneapolis, MN: Augsburg Fortress, 1997, 198; H. G. M. Williamson, “Isaiah 62:4 and the Problem of Inner-Biblical Allusions,” Journal of Biblical Literature 119, 2000: 734–739). Comparing the connected stories allows the reader to use information from the first story to answer questions about the second story (Yairah Amit, Hidden Polemics in Biblical Narrative, trans. Jonathan Chipman, BibInt 25, Leiden: Brill, 2000, 42). Assuming Mormon used this ancient literary technique, the stories of Nephi and Teancum may explain why Helaman’s servant killed Kishkumen instead of taking him prisoner.

In Alma 51:33–34, for example, when Teancum was “out by night,” he killed Amalickiah so silently “that he did not awake his servants.” He did this by stabbing him in the heart (Alma 51:34). Helaman’s servant also stabbed Kishkumen in “the heart,” killing him so silently “that he fell dead without a groan” (Helaman 2:9). This comparison suggests that Kishkumen had to be killed because an attempt to take him prisoner would have been loud enough to alert his friends, just like anything but a silent killing would have awakened Amalickiah’s servants (cf. Alma 62:36).

This conclusion is supported by the fact that Kishkumen was part of a secret combination. When dealing with a secret society, one never knows who is part of the conspiracy and who is not (John W. Welch, The Legal Cases in the Book of Mormon, Provo, UT: Brigham Young University Press and the Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2008, 319). In ancient Assyria, when one of the king’s servants attempted to expose a plot against him, he unknowingly reported it to a man who was in league with the assassins, and was promptly killed (Frances Reynolds, The Babylonian Correspondence of Esarhaddon and Letters to Assurbanipal and Sin-šarru-iškun from Northern and Central Babylonia, SAA 18; Helsinki: Helsinki University Press, 2003, 82).

This threat may explain why Helaman's servant didn't somehow incapacitate Kishkumen and take him away to stand trial. It was impossible to know how many people were in on the conspiracy, and a co-conspirator could have been lurking around any corner. The only safe thing was to kill Kishkumen so quietly that his death did not alert anyone else who might have been nearby. It is also possible that Kishkumen may have been a formidable opponent. In attempting to incapacitate Kishkumen, Helaman's servant might have been injured or killed, and Helaman would have been killed shortly thereafter. Killing Kishkumen quickly may have been the only way to save Helaman. In addition, the servant couldn't have let Kishkumen out of his sight to warn other guards because then he might have lost track of him. Because Kishkumen was on his way to kill Helaman, the servant may have not had enough time to warn someone of the plan. The servant's only option was to kill Kishkumen.

A comparison to 1 Nephi 4, which also uses the phrase "out by night," may be illuminating. When Nephi stumbled upon Laban, the Spirit told Nephi to kill him. When Nephi resisted, the Spirit told Nephi to "slay him, for the Lord hath delivered him into thy hands" (1 Nephi 4:12, emphasis added). This justification may refer to Exodus 21:13 (emphasis added), which states that it is acceptable to kill someone "if a man lie not in wait, but God deliver him into his hand" (1 Samuel 17:46 is an even closer verbal parallel than the Exodus story, but in either case, the story in 1 Nephi shows a good justification for the action (See Ben McGuire, "Nephi and Goliath: A Case Study of Literary Allusion in the Book of Mormon" Journal of the Book of Mormon and Other Restoration Scripture 18/1, 2009: 16–31). The striking parallel between these texts indicates that the Spirit was legally authorizing Nephi to slay Laban (See John W. Welch, "Legal Perspectives on the Slaying of Laban," Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 1, no. 1, 1992: 133).

In the same way, Mormon may have been implying that the killing of Kishkumen was legal as well. Mormon specifically noted that the servant of Helaman only killed Kishkumen after he heard from his mouth "that it was his object to murder, and also that it was the object of all those who belonged to his band to murder, and to rob, and to gain power" (Helaman 2:8) (See Welch, Legal Cases, 332–333). Simply becoming part of a conspiracy to overthrow the government appears to have been illegal during this period (See Welch, Legal Cases, 319: "Apparently, these oath-swearing conspirators—like robbers or outlaws who had placed themselves outside the law and therefore were not entitled to its protections—compare the summary execution of the robber Zemnariah in 3 Nephi 4:28)—were held incontestably guilty upon arrest. Once again, the law that required more than mere intent must have been satisfied by the element of the conspirator's oath.”). Thus, the servant of Helaman could legally kill Kishkumen as a traitor.

The Book of Mormon sometimes contains details that can be confusing or unclear to modern readers. This is because ancient texts were written in a different style than most books today. The Israelite literary scholar, Hermann Gunkel, noted, “In very many situations where the modern writer would expect a psychological analysis,” the ancient Israelite author “simply presents an action” (Hermann Gunkel, The Legends of Genesis: The Biblical Saga and History, trans. W. H. Carruth, New York, NY: Schocken Books, 1975, 60–61). Because of this, modern readers can understand the book better if they look carefully at the exact words of the author and where else he said those words. This ancient literary technique of using an early story to explain a later story reveals a higher moral justification for the servant's actions. The Spirit finally got Nephi to kill Laban by telling him, “It is better that one man should perish than that a nation should dwindle and perish in unbelief” (1 Nephi 4:13). Mormon likely expected his readers to recognize that the servant's motivation in killing Kishkumen was similar to Nephi's reasons for slaying Laban: it was better for Kishkumen to die than for the Nephite nation to dwindle and perish in the unbelief brought about by having a band of robbers in a position of power.

People who want to understand the Book of Mormon better have many good resources at their disposal, one of the best resources is the book itself. If readers remember that they can use one part of the Book of Mormon to explain a more confusing part of the book, this will help readers in many ways. As they put themselves into the real-life situations recounted in the book, and as they comprehend the writing conventions of its authors and abridgers, they will understand its message more clearly. All this helps in affirming the justice and equity of this true testament of our Lord and Lawgiver, Jesus Christ.

10 And it came to pass that Helaman did send forth to take this band of robbers and secret murderers, that they might be executed according to the law.

11 But behold, when Gadianton had found that Kishkumen did not return he feared lest that he should be destroyed; therefore he caused that his band should follow him. And they took their flight out of the land, by a secret way, into the wilderness; and thus when Helaman sent forth to take them they could nowhere be found.

verse 11 “And they took their flight out of the land, by a secret way, into the wilderness” Ray C. Hillam has pointed out that from here on, the operation of the Gadianton robbers will provide a textbook example of guerrilla warfare conducted from their headquarters in the “wilderness” (“The Gadianton Robbers and Protracted War,” BYU Studies, volume 15, number 2, 215).

12 And more of this Gadianton shall be spoken hereafter. And thus ended the forty and second year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi.

13 And behold, in the end of this book ye shall see that this Gadianton did prove the overthrow, yea, almost the entire destruction of the people of Nephi.

verse 13 This editorial comment was written by Mormon who was certainly in a position to see clearly the destructive influence of the Gadianton robbers over the centuries subsequent to their inception.

14 Behold I do not mean the end of the book of Helaman, but I mean the end of the book of Nephi, from which I have taken all the account which I have written.

verse 14 This verse suggests that the entire official Nephite record, the large plates of Nephi Mormon utilized in producing his abridgment, were referred to as the “book of Nephi.” Mormon likely organized his abridgment around a series of books to which he gave distinctive names—Mosiah, Alma, Helaman, etc.

Helaman chapter 3

Helaman 3:35 Though they were persecuted by other members of the church, the humble and persecuted saints in Zarahemla did fast and pray oft, and did wax stronger and stronger in their humility, and firmer and firmer in the faith of Christ.

1 And now it came to pass in the forty and third year of the reign of the judges, there was no contention among the people of Nephi save it were a little pride which was in the church, which did cause some little dissensions among the people, which affairs were settled in the ending of the forty and third year.

verse 1 “save it were a little pride which was in the church, which did cause some little dissensions among the people” What exactly is pride, and how might it lead to dissensions among people? For a discussion of universal sin, see “Pride” in The Natural Self and “Spiritual Self,” volume 1 chapter 5 of Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine.

2 And there was no contention among the people in the forty and fourth year; neither was there much contention in the forty and fifth year.

3 And it came to pass in the forty and sixth, yea, there was much contention and many dissensions; in the which there were an exceedingly great many who departed out of the land of Zarahemla, and went forth unto the land northward to inherit the land.

verse 3 “And it came to pass in the forty and sixth, yea, there was much contention” This wording of this phrase is awkward. It would read more smoothly if the word “yea” were instead “year.” There are several LDS scholars working with what is called the “critical text” or “critical edition” of the Book of Mormon. This is a project designed to determine, as far as is possible, the original text of the Book of Mormon and to determine the historical evolution of the text, that is, to study the changes that have occurred over the several editions of the book that have been published. Relative to this particular verse, these scholars have suggested what they call a “conjectural emendation” to this phrase in verse 3. By studying the usage of the word yea in the text and by studying also the pattern of mistakes that Oliver Cowdery tended to make when he was taking dictation from Joseph, they have suggested that this phrase was likely intended to read: “And it came to pass in the forty and sixth year there was much contention.” They found, for example that in the Book of Mormon text the word yea is used to provide emphasis of something which has just been said. It emphasizes some particular aspect. In this verse, it doesn’t emphasize anything. They also observed that on some twenty different occasions, Oliver Cowdery, on intending to write the word year, left off the r and wrote instead yea. Most of the time he caught himself and inserted a small r, but on this occasion, he did not (Royal Skousen, “The Critical Text of the Book of Mormon,” a FARMS reprint).

“an exceedingly great many who departed out of the land of Zarahemla, and went forth unto the land northward to inherit the land” These Nephite migrants were following a pattern set by Hagoth and his people ten years earlier (Alma 63:4-10).

4 And they did travel to an exceedingly great distance, insomuch that they came to large bodies of water and many rivers.

verses 3-4 “the land northward . . . [which contained] . . . large bodies of water and many rivers” We have previously discussed the possible identification of a land which might be the “land northward” (see the commentary for Alma 63:4). For the reader’s convenience and for the sake of review, I will repeat that commentary:

The Book of Mormon text often speaks of a mysterious land. It may be referred to, as it is in this verse, as the “land which was northward” or simply the “land northward” (Alma 63:5-8, 10; Helaman 3:3-4, 7, 10-11). In another place, it is referred to as the “northernmost part of the land” (3 Nephi 7:12). It is possible that this land is in the same location as the “great city of Jacobugath” (3 Nephi 9:9). Joseph L. Allen (Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon, 97-107) suggests that this mysterious land might be the ancient city of Teotihuacan, built in the valley of Mexico, near where Mexico City lies today. The ancient culture which inhabited this city had its beginnings about 150 BC and fell about AD 750. The circumstantial evidence that Teotihuacan might have played a role in the Book of Mormon includes the fact that between 55 BC and AD 29, the Book of Mormon mentions several migrations into this land where large bodies of water were found (see also Alma 63:7-8; Helaman 3:3-4, 12; 3 Nephi 7:12).

According to Dr. John L. Sorenson: “In former times the floor of the valley of Mexico was occupied by a set of lakes that were greater in combined size than anything else in central Mexico. It was this lake system that allowed the Aztecs to facilitate movement of goods needed to support their great city” (An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, 266-67).

This is the same time period when, according to archaeologists, Teotihuacan was experiencing a high growth rate. Also, the valley of Mexico contained many lakes, in fact Mexico City is built on a dry lake bed. The Book of Mormon speaks of the people in the land northward building houses out of cement because timber was scarce in the land (Helaman 3:7, 10-11). The archaeological site of Teotihuacan contains many buildings made of cement, and timber is indeed scarce in the valley of Mexico (see also the commentary for verse 7).

5 Yea, and even they did spread forth into all parts of the land, into whatever parts it had not been rendered desolate and without timber, because of the many inhabitants who had before inherited the land.

verse 5 It would seem that the Nephites strongly preferred wood as their favorite building material and that they used cement only when wood was not available. It is likely they were more dependent upon forests than we are today! This verse particularly refers to the land which was north of the narrow neck of land, as indicated by the following verse. Previous populations of people, presumably at least in part Jaredites, had not practiced effective conservation techniques and had, in some measure, denuded the land of its forests.

6 And now no part of the land was desolate, save it were for timber; but because of the greatness of the destruction of the people who had before inhabited the land it was called desolate.

verse 6 All parts of the land were inhabited, even though many were denuded of timber. Even the land Desolation was inhabited, its name notwithstanding.

7 And there being but little timber upon the face of the land, nevertheless the people who went forth became exceedingly expert in the working of cement; therefore they did build houses of cement, in the which they did dwell.

verse 7 Northward, there was “little timber upon the face of the land,” and the Nephite colonists from the land of Zarahemla who settled in the land northward in the first century BC are credited with becoming expert “in the working of cement” (see also verses 9, 11). This technology was not apparently available in Zarahemla.

Here we have several testable facts: the Book of Mormon tells us that people in ancient America became very skillful in the use of cement at a precise historical time. No one in the nineteenth century could have known that cement, in fact, was extensively used in Mesoamerica beginning at about this time, the middle of the first century BC (see Matthew G. Wells and John W. Welch, “Concrete [pun intended] Evidence for the Book of Mormon,” in Reexploring the Book of Mormon, ed. Welch, 212-14).

Central and Gulf Coast Mexico was the scene of the culmination of concrete engineering. Particularly at the vast ruins of Teotihuacan, north of present-day Mexico City, large constructions of this material can still be seen (Rene Millon and James A. Bennyhoff, “A Long Architectural Sequence at Teotihuacán,” American Antiquity 26, no. 4, 1961: 516–523; Rebecca Sload, “Radiocarbon Dating of Teotihuacán Mapping Project TE28,” FAMSIS, 2007, online at famsi.org, each mention finding charcoal underneath concrete structures which was radiocarbon dated to ca. 50 BC–AD 110, although both dated the use of concrete at their respective sites to later phases of development. For Latter-day Saint discussion connecting Teotihuacán to the land northward, see John L. Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1985, 266–267; Joseph L. Allen and Blake J. Allen, Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon, revised edition, American Fork, UT: Covenant Communications, 2011, 193–213; Brant A. Gardner, Traditions of the Fathers, Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2015, 327–337).

The area of Teotihuacan is, of course, northward from the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, which most LDS scholars consider to be the dividing point between the Nephite lands southward and northward. Teotihuacan has a city center that is literally built of cement. Apparently, the use of cement appeared suddenly on the scene in the middle of the first century BC in the area of Teotihuacan. The earliest sample discovered was “a fully developed product.” The cement floor slabs at this site “were remarkably high in structural quality.” Although exposed to the elements of nearly two thousand years, they still “exceed many present-day building code requirements” (David S. Hyman, A Study of the Calcareous Cements in Pre-Hispanic Mesoamerican Building Construction, Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University, 1970, ii, 6-7). It is also interesting that in that area timber is scarce and is very expensive. Until recently in that area, when steel has started to play a major role in construction, most modern buildings were built with cement. The earliest concrete known is from the Valley of Mexico and dates to perhaps two centuries BC. We may assume that the Nephites’ expertise in cement work was taught to them by people who were already living in the “land northward” and had earlier experience in that technology.

Ancient American cement was made using limestone, and has, thus far, only been found in Mesoamerica (See Matthew G. Wells and John W. Welch, “Concrete Evidence for the Book of Mormon,” in Reexploring the Book of Mormon: A Decade of New Research, ed. John W. Welch, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1992, 212–214; John L. Sorenson, “How Could Joseph Smith Write So Accurately about Ancient American Civilization?,” in Echoes and Evidences of the Book of Mormon, ed. Donald W. Parry, Daniel C. Peterson, and John W. Welch, Provo, UT: FARMS, 2002, 287–288; John W. Welch, “A Steady Stream of Significant Recognitions,” in Echoes and Evidences, 372–374.). While some people were aware of pre-Columbian American cement in the early 19th century, its origins, history, and development remained obscure well into the 20th century.

In 1970, David S. Hyman was “not able to uncover clues relative to the origins of American cement manufacturing” (David S. Hyman, Precolumbian Cements: A Study of the Calcareous Cements in Prehispanic Mesoamerican Building Construction [PhD dissertation, Johns Hopkins University, 1970], ii.). The earliest samples he had found dated to the first century AD but were so “technically well advanced” that Hyman was convinced there must have been earlier, less developed forms (Hyman, Precolumbian Cements, ii; sec. 6, p. 15).

Since that time, earlier precedents have indeed been found. In a 1991 report, Matthew G. Wells documented that a “limey whitewash,” which was “not structural” but “is believed to be a precursor to later structural developments,” was in use as early as the ninth century BC (Matthew G. Wells, “Cement in Ancient Mesoamerica: A Survey,” unpublished manuscript, October 1991, updated February 1998, p. 2). During the Middle Preclassic period (ca. 800–300 BC), “the Maya of the lowlands had discovered . . . that if limestone fragments were burnt, and the resulting powder mixed with water, a white plaster of great durability was created” (Michael D. Coe and Stephen Houston, The Maya, 9th edition, London, UK: Thames and Hudson, 2015, 81).

According to Mayan experts Michael D. Coe and Stephen Houston, it was not until the Late Preclassic period (300 BC–AD 250) that the Maya “quickly realized the structural value of a concrete-like fill made from limestone rubble” and lime-rich mud (Coe and Houston, The Maya, 81. The full quote mentions “rubble and marl,” which is a “lime-rich mud or mudstone which contains variable amounts of clays and silt.” See Wikipedia, s.v., “Marl,” online at <https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Marl>, accessed August 9, 2016). This led to “an explosion of activity around 100 BC” (Coe and Houston, The Maya, 81),

These discoveries place the development and expansion of lime cement in Mesoamerica for structural building construction very close to the same period that the cement mentioned in the Book of Mormon becomes widespread in the northern lands.

Despite the fact that pre-Columbian cement had been known to some in the early 19th century, the Book of Mormon was criticized for this point as recently as the early 20th century. In 1929, Heber J. Grant related a story from his youth where a fellow with a doctorate “ridiculed [him] for believing in the Book of Mormon.” This was because it mentioned that “people had built their homes out of cement and that they were very skillful in the use of cement.” This well-educated young man went on to declare, “There had never been found and never would be found, a house built of cement by the ancient inhabitants of this country, because the people in that early age knew nothing about cement.”

According to President Grant, he responded by bearing impassioned testimony of the Book of Mormon: “That does not affect my faith one particle. I read the Book of Mormon prayerfully and supplicated God for a testimony in my heart and soul of the divinity of it, and I have accepted it and believe it with all my heart. . . . If my children do not find cement houses, I expect that my grandchildren will.”

His antagonist responded with more ridicule. “Well what is the good of talking to a fool like that” (This story is related in Heber J. Grant, Conference Report, April 1929, p. 129; cited in Matthew Roper, “Exceedingly Expert in the Working of Cement , Howlers #9,” Ether’s Cave: A Place for Book of Mormon Research, July 1, 2013, online at <http://etherscave.blogspot.com/2013/07/exceedingly-expert-in-working-of-> . . . accessed August 8, 2016. Roberts to Grant, March 1, 1932, identified the antagonist as a Mr. Morgan, brother of John Morgan.). Grant did not have to wait for future generations to validate the Book of Mormon on this point. Despite being well-educated, his friendly critic was misinformed—cement had already been found in pre-Columbian America. Still, as in so many other instances, as more is learned about cement in ancient America, the correlation with the Book of Mormon gets stronger.

John L. Sorenson observed, “The first-century-BC appearance of cement in the Book of Mormon agrees strikingly with the archaeology of central Mexico” (John L. Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex: An Ancient American Book, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2013, 322). Both Sorenson and John W. Welch remarked, “No one in the nineteenth century could have known that cement, in fact, was extensively used in Mesoamerica beginning at about this time, the middle of the first century BC” (Sorenson, “How Could Joseph Smith Write So Accurately,” 287; Welch, “A Steady Stream,” 372–373, differs only slightly in wording: “No one in the nineteenth century could have known that cement, in fact, was extensively used in Mesoamerica beginning largely at this time, the middle of the first century BC.”). And it is more than the mere mention of cement. As Welch put it, “The dating by archaeologists of this technological advance to the precise time mentioned in the book of Helaman seems far from knowable to anyone in the world in 1829” (Welch, “A Steady Stream,” 274).

While other examples of alleged anachronisms have revealed the value in being patient and waiting for new light from archaeology, this example teaches another kind of lesson: sometimes, even well-educated and well-intended people can be wrong (cf. 2 Nephi 9:28–29).

Rather than panicking at overconfident dismissals or jumping to presupposed outcomes, it is always wiser to continue to investigate the facts to the best of one’s ability. In some cases, further time and patience may be necessary to bring additional clarity and understanding, but in other cases—as with cement—the concrete evidence that people can confidently build upon is gratefully already available (H. Curtis Wright, “Introduction,” in John A. Tvedtnes, The Book of Mormon and Other Hidden Books: “Out of Darkness and Unto Light,” Provo, UT: FARMS, 2000, ix–xii, similarly tells the story of a family in the Midwest which was bombarded with critical material dismissing the ancient practice of writing on metal plates, a practice which was already well-attested to at the time of the criticism.).

8 And it came to pass that they did multiply and spread, and did go forth from the land southward to the land northward, and did spread insomuch that they began to cover the face of the whole earth, from the sea south to the sea north, from the sea west to the sea east.

verse 8 “they did multiply and spread . . . insomuch that they began to cover the face of the whole earth” This statement should be interpreted as being hyperbolic rather than being a specific geographic declaration. It simply means that the people spread out all over the land. Hugh Nibley comments on what it means “to cover”:

Terms like “great,” “mighty,” “numerous,” etc., are purely relative and cannot for a moment be taken to indicate population on a modern scale. We are told, for example, that the people of the great northern migration “began to cover the face of the whole earth” (Helaman 3:8). What is meant by “cover”? In case one thinks of something like greater Los Angeles one need only read a few verses farther to learn that the Gadianton robbers established their cells “in the more settled parts of the land” (Helaman 3:23), which makes it clear that “covering the face of the whole earth” does not mean a dense and uniform occupation but can signify the thinnest possible settlement (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 6, 420).

“from the sea south to the sea north” This phrase is troublesome and seems not to fit with the geographical hypothesis proposed by John L. Sorenson. See the map Book of Mormon Lands, a Proposed Setting. There is no north sea or south sea! It seems likely that the entire phrase “the face of the whole earth, from the sea south to the sea north, from the sea west to the sea east” is not only hyperbolic but also metaphorical. It is likely that Mormon is waxing poetical and that the phrase has no real concrete meaning, rather he intends only to say that the Nephites spread over a wide area. It is interesting that in a parallel passage in Helaman 11 (verse 20) describing the same sort of population expansion no north or south sea is mentioned: “And thus it did come to pass that the people of Nephi began to prosper again in the land, and began to build up their waste places, and began to multiply and spread, even until they did cover the whole face of the land, both on the northward and on the southward, from the sea west to the sea east.” Here all specific references or allusions to Book of Mormon seas are only to the east and west seas.

“and did go forth from the land southward to the land northward” This statement could well refer to Book of Mormon lands being the “land southward” and the “land northward” being the lands of what is not Mexico.

On a much larger scale, in Joseph Smith’s day there was a view that the western hemisphere was populated across the Bering Strait (between northeastern Russia and Alaska), and that civilization moved from the Northwest through North America and then to Central America. This verse may suggest that migrations went the opposite way. Today archaeologists, linguists, and historians who have studied the matter are agreed that a long sequence of cultural transmissions and migrations moved northward from southern Mexico. There are also many discovered cultural links between Mesoamerica and South America (John L. Sorenson, “Mesoamericans in Pre-Columbian North America,” in Reexploring the Book of Mormon, edited by John W. Welch, 218).

9 And the people who were in the land northward did dwell in tents, and in houses of cement, and they did suffer whatsoever tree should spring up upon the face of the land that it should grow up, that in time they might have timber to build their houses, yea, their cities, and their temples, and their synagogues, and their sanctuaries, and all manner of their buildings.

verse 9 “the people who were in the land northward did dwell in tents” It would seem that no matter how firmly the Nephite people were established in cities, some of them always considered themselves wanderers in a strange land, and they had their tents readily available (see also Omni 1:12, 27; Mosiah 2:6; 10:13-16; 22:2; 24:20).

“they did suffer whatsoever tree should spring up upon the face of the land that it should grow up” Here is a colorful way of stating that timber was scarce and valuable, and the people encouraged the growing and perhaps planting of trees that they may be later harvested for their lumber.

“temples, and their synagogues, and their sanctuaries” For a discussion on the various places of worship among the Nephites, see the commentary for Alma 16:13.

10 And it came to pass as timber was exceedingly scarce in the land northward, they did send forth much by the way of shipping.

verse 10 “they did send forth much by the way of shipping” It is notable that the people were beginning to utilize ships for transportation and trade. This likely took place via the Pacific Ocean or “west sea” (see Alma 63:5-6). This verse, in spite of its use of the phrase “send forth,” seems to refer to the importing of timber. They sent forth other goods in return for timber imports.

11 And thus they did enable the people in the land northward that they might build many cities, both of wood and of cement.

12 And it came to pass that there were many of the people of Ammon, who were Lamanites by birth, did also go forth into this land.

verse 12 These people who were moving to the north and were spreading all over the land were obviously a mixture of cultural groups who would go on to intermarry and mingle their various racial bloods. It is difficult to know whether to refer to them as Nephites or Lamanites, as either designation seems arbitrary and inaccurate.

verses 13-17 Here Mormon suddenly pauses in his narrative and editorializes about the general decay of the Nephite culture from his vantage point in about AD 380.

13 And now there are many records kept of the proceedings of this people, by many of this people, which are particular and very large, concerning them.

verse 13 One might suppose that this verse refers to the peoples who had migrated to the lands northward. Yet it is clear from the context that Mormon is referring to the large plates of Nephi, the record kept of the people in Book of Mormon lands.

Perhaps this verse is pertinent in another way. Opponents of the Book of Mormon have repeatedly raised alternate theories regarding its authorship. A variety of theories have been proposed including such proposed authors as Joseph Smith, Solomon Spaulding, Oliver Cowdery, or Sidney Rigdon. Modern computers have given birth to a new science of analyzing word patterns in documents whose authorship is disputed. The technique is called “wordprint analysis” or “wordprinting.” This technique has been applied, by Dr. John L. Hilton, to the Book of Mormon and to related writings (“On Verifying Wordprint Studies: Book of Mormon Authorship,” BYU Studies 30 [1990]: 89-108). It is based on the fact that each individual author subconsciously uses a consistent and characteristic pattern as he employs such common words as “and,” “the,” “of,” and “that.” Sixty-five different patterns of usage have been identified. Utilizing these patterns, it is possible for researchers to ascertain with a high degree of statistical certainty whether two separate works were written by the same or by different authors. The technique has been applied to translated works, and it has been determined that the process of translation does not invalidate the technique.

Specific conclusions drawn thus far by Dr. Hilton include the following:

1. The writings of Nephi in the Book of Mormon were written by a different author than the writings of the younger Alma.
2. The writings of Nephi and the writings of Alma were found not to be written by Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, or Solomon Spaulding.

14 But behold, a hundredth part of the proceedings of this people, yea, the account of the Lamanites and of the Nephites, and their wars, and contentions, and dissensions, and their preaching, and their prophecies, and their shipping and their building of ships, and their building of temples, and of synagogues and their sanctuaries, and their righteousness, and their wickedness, and their murders, and their robbings, and their plundering, and all manner of abominations and whoredoms, cannot be contained in this work.

verse 14 “behold, a hundredth part of the proceedings of this people . . . cannot be contained in this work” Mormon is implying that voluminous records were available to him as commenced his work of abridgement, and he was able to include only a “hundredth part” of those materials. The phrase “this work,” of course, refers to the plates of Mormon. If the reader still has a lingering confusion regarding the nomenclature of all the plates pertinent to the Book of Mormon, please see the supplemental article, “Those Confusing Book of Mormon Plates.” Mormon likely included those parts of the history which, by inspiration, he felt would be applicable to us today.

Please note the many “ands” in this verse—there are eighteen in all. Biblical Hebrew uses the equivalent of the conjunction and much more than English uses and, particularly in historical narrative and prose but also in poetry and direct speech. Its frequent use in English sounds irregular and repetitive. Consider the ten ands in the KJV of 1 Samuel 17:34-35:

And David said unto Saul, Thy servant kept his father's sheep, and there came a lion, and a bear, and took a lamb out of the flock: and I went out after him, and smote him, and delivered it out of his mouth: and when he arose against me, I caught him by his beard, and smote him, and slew him (emphasis mine).

Compare also the thirteen ands in a single verse of Joshua:

And Joshua, and all Israel with him, took Achan the son of Zerah, and the silver, and the garment, and the wedge of gold, and his sons, and his daughters, and his oxen, and his asses, and his sheep, and his tent, and all that he had: and they brought them unto the valley of Achor (Joshua 7:24, emphasis mine).

The Book of Mormon corresponds to the Old Testament in its use of many ands throughout its historical and prose sections. This particular verse is an excellent example. There are other examples in the Book of Mormon. There are twenty-two ands in 1 Nephi 11:30-32, twelve ands in 1 Nephi 12:4, eight ands in Mosiah 10:8; and fifteen ands in Alma 46:12-13.

15 But behold, there are many books and many records of every kind, and they have been kept chiefly by the Nephites.

verse 15 “many books and many records of every kind” We are aware, of course, of both the large plates of Nephi and the small plates of Nephi. And the large plates of Nephi were likely a large collection of plates consisting of several subsets. In this phrase, Mormon may refer to the large plates of Nephi, or perhaps there were other “books and records” kept which cannot be classified among the plates of Nephi.

As you read this verse and some others in the Book of Mormon, you may intuitively conclude that all of the inhabitants of the Western Hemisphere two thousand years ago were literate. Archaeologists have provided evidence that this is not the case. Actually, the Book of Mormon does provide evidence of literacy among the ruling and priestly classes (Alma 59-60; Mormon 6:2; Mosiah 1:2) but not among all the Book of Mormon people—let alone all the inhabitants of the Western Hemisphere.

16 And they have been handed down from one generation to another by the Nephites, even until they have fallen into transgression and have been murdered, plundered, and hunted, and driven forth, and slain, and scattered upon the face of the earth, and mixed with the Lamanites until they are no more called the Nephites, becoming wicked, and wild, and ferocious, yea, even becoming Lamanites.

verse 16 “And they have been handed down from one generation to another by the Nephites, even until they have fallen into transgression” Notice that the two “they’s” in this phrase have different antecedents. The first “they” refers to the “many books and many records of every kind” spoken of by the prophet Mormon in the previous verse. The second “they” refers to the Nephites in the time of Mormon who apostatized from the truth and who now (at the time of Mormon's writing) were being "hunted . . . driven forth . . . slain, and scattered."

17 And now I return again to mine account; therefore, what I have spoken had passed after there had been great contentions, and disturbances, and wars, and dissensions, among the people of Nephi.

verse 17 "what I have spoken had passed" Here Mormon seems to be referring to the migration of peoples to the land northward. He intends to say, "This migration occurred following a period of great contention and war among the people of Nephi."

18 The forty and sixth year of the reign of the judges ended;

19 And it came to pass that there was still great contention in the land, yea, even in the forty and seventh year, and also in the forty and eighth year.

20 Nevertheless Helaman did fill the judgment-seat with justice and equity; yea, he did observe to keep the statutes, and the judgments, and the commandments of God; and he did do that which was right in the sight of God continually; and he did walk after the ways of his father, insomuch that he did prosper in the land.

verse 20 Keep in mind that the Helaman spoken of here is Helaman, the son of Helaman, and the primary author of the large part of the book of Helaman. Other contributing authors to the book of Helaman were Nephi and Lehi, the sons of this same Helaman, and the prophet Mormon.

21 And it came to pass that he had two sons. He gave unto the eldest the name of Nephi, and unto the youngest, the name of Lehi. And they began to grow up unto the Lord.

verse 21 These two sons of Helaman will establish themselves as valiant servants. The older of the two, Nephi will become one of the most valiant and noble prophets in all of the Book of Mormon.

22 And it came to pass that the wars and contentions began to cease, in a small degree, among the people of the Nephites, in the latter end of the forty and eighth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi.

Hugh Nibley comments on the peaceful circumstances of this particular time but then provides an ominous preview of things to come:

In Helaman [chapter] 3, after a thumbnail picture of a civilization—a skillfully condensed vignette like one of those astonishing ivory panoramas carved on a single elephant's tusk (Helaman 3:14), we are introduced into the underworld and are told how skillfully the crime families gradually infiltrate the whole society during a time of peace and prosperity, getting themselves "established in the more settled parts of the land" so quietly that their activities “were not known unto those who were at the head of the government” (Helaman 3:23).

The prosperity of the time is actually called “astonishing beyond measure,” a time of “peace and exceedingly great joy” (Helaman 3:25, 32). Yet scarcely two years later “pride . . . began to enter into the church” (Helaman 3:33), and soon “the more humble part of the people,” suffering great persecutions, “did wax stronger and stronger in their humility” (Helaman 3:34-35), while the great majority had their vices “grow upon them from day to day, . . . because of their exceedingly great riches and their prosperity” (Helaman 3:36-37).

Such was the way of the church. The general public (not the church members) were able to drive out the worst criminals, who went to stir things up among the Lamanites (Helaman 4:1-2) and finally persuaded them to make war against the Nephites who had thrown them out. The worst offenders in those days were “those who professed to belong to the church of God. And it was because of the pride of their hearts, because of their exceeding riches, yea, of their oppression of the poor, withholding their substance from the hungry,” and so on (Helaman 4:11-12), that “in the space of not many years” (Helaman 4:26) the Nephites were reduced to a sorry, materialistic people, hopelessly outnumbered by their enemies but with no inclination whatsoever to call upon God. “The voice of the people . . . chose evil, . . . therefore they were ripening for destruction, for the laws had become corrupted” (Helaman 5:2). Nephi gave up the judgment seat in disgust (Helaman 5:4) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 553-54).

23 And it came to pass in the forty and ninth year of the reign of the judges, there was continual peace established in the land, all save it were the secret combinations which Gadianton the robber had established in the more settled parts of the land, which at that time were not known unto those who were at the head of government; therefore they were not destroyed out of the land.

verse 23 “the secret combinations which Gadianton the robber had established . . . which at that time were not know unto those who were at the head of government” Gadianton and his band had truly gone underground to the point where even the heads of government did not know of their existence. Brother Nibley Comments: “And that explains how it was possible later on, in the midst of great peace and prosperity, for the chief of state, Cezoram, and after him his son and successor, to be murdered in office in such a way that the assassins were never discovered (Helaman 6:15)” (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 363-64).

24 And it came to pass that in this same year there was exceedingly great prosperity in the church, insomuch that there were thousands who did join themselves unto the church and were baptized unto repentance.

verse 24 The “prosperity” here may well refer to a righteous spiritual prosperity rather than material prosperity.

25 And so great was the prosperity of the church, and so many the blessings which were poured out upon the people, that even the high priests and the teachers were themselves astonished beyond measure.

verse 25 “even the high priests and the teachers were themselves astonished beyond measure” One is reminded of the Lord’s revelation to the prophet Habakkuk: “I will work a work in your days, which ye will not believe, though it be told you” (Habakkuk 1:5).

26 And it came to pass that the work of the Lord did prosper unto the baptizing and uniting to the church of God, many souls, yea, even tens of thousands.

27 Thus we may see that the Lord is merciful unto all who will, in the sincerity of their hearts, call upon his holy name.

verse 27 “Thus we may see” Here again is that phrase which identifies this verse as an editorial comment by the prophet Mormon (see the commentary for Alma 50:19). Mormon’s editorial comment extends through verse 30.

28 Yea, thus we see that the gate of heaven is open unto all, even to those who will believe on the name of Jesus Christ, who is the Son of God.

29 Yea, we see that whosoever will may lay hold upon the word of God, which is quick and powerful, which shall divide asunder all the cunning and the snares and the wiles of the devil, and lead the man of Christ in a strait and narrow course across that everlasting gulf of misery which is prepared to engulf the wicked—verse 29 “whosoever will may lay hold upon the word of God” To “lay hold upon the word of God” is to study the scriptures and obey the commandments therein.

President Ezra Taft Benson quoted this verse in an address to priesthood leaders of the Church. Before he did so, he asked a question of them: “Are there members of your flock who are deep in sin and need to pull themselves back? Helaman’s promise is for them.” He suggested that a powerful tool for bringing the wayward back is the “word of God” (“The Power of the Word.” Ensign [May 1986] 16:80-81).

The “wiles” of the Devil refers to his tricks and his strategies for deceiving and ensnaring.

What is a “man of Christ”? Certainly, it is a man (or woman) who is in tune with and enlightened by the Spirit of the Holy Ghost and who is truly striving to obey and thereby making steady progress in their spiritual growth.

“strait and narrow course” While some may object to the use of the word strait here rather than straight, there is significant justification for its use as discussed in the supplemental article Strait and Straight in the Book of Mormon.

30 And land their souls, yea, their immortal souls, at the right hand of God in the kingdom of heaven, to sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and with Jacob, and with all our holy fathers, to go no more out.

verse 30 “to sit down with . . . all our holy fathers, to go no more out” Elder Bruce R. McConkie wrote:

Saved persons remain in their exalted state forever. They cannot fall, but dwell forever in the celestial city, to go out never more at all. Their lot is “to sit down” in the kingdom of heaven “with Abraham, and Isaac, and with Jacob, and with all our holy fathers, to go no more out.” (Helaman 3:30.) Their inheritance is in that realm from which no friend departs and into which no enemy enters. They are as God, and God is as he is from everlasting to everlasting (Doctrinal New Testament Commentary, volume 3, 459).

verses 29-30 Hugh Nibley comments on the complex imagery of these verses, pointing out how this pattern is typical of Near Eastern literature:

Sometimes imagery seems to get remarkably jumbled up in the Book of Mormon, as in Helaman 3:29-30. . . Here in a single sentence we have the image of the rod or staff (‘lay hold’), the sword, the nets, the path, the yawning gulf, the ship, the throne, and the kingdom. To us this may appear rather tasteless and overdone, but it is typical [Hebrew thought] (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 161-62).

31 And in this year there was continual rejoicing in the land of Zarahemla, and in all the regions round about, even in all the land which was possessed by the Nephites.

32 And it came to pass that there was peace and exceedingly great joy in the remainder of the forty and ninth year; yea, and also there was continual peace and great joy in the fiftieth year of the reign of the judges.

33 And in the fifty and first year of the reign of the judges there was peace also, save it were the pride which began to enter into the church—not into the church of God, but into the hearts of the people who professed to belong to the church of God—

34 And they were lifted up in pride, even to the persecution of many of their brethren. Now this was a great evil, which did cause the more humble part of the people to suffer great persecutions, and to wade through much affliction.

verse 34 “And they were lifted up in pride, even to the persecution of many of their brethren” For a discussion of pride, the section “Pride” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 5, The “Natural Self” and “Spiritual Self.” The persecution of more humble members by those who profess membership in the church is a sure sign of spiritual sickness. Some may find it difficult to understand how church members could persecute other church members. Consider the following description of a secular church youth group:

In the study of Elmtown's youth, it was found that religion was remote from the lives of the great majority of them. . . . To most students . . . the church is a community facility like the school, the drug store, the city government, and the bowling alley. And this is in the heart of the Bible Belt. Many of the youngsters attend church functions regularly, but carry their status feelings with them, often in a most un-Christian manner. . . . A socially select gang of girls attending the Sunday night "fellowship" meetings at the most elite church deliberately make any girl of whom they do not approve feel so uncomfortable that she will not attend again.

For the majority of American Christians . . . going to church is the nice thing that proper people do on Sundays. It advertises their respectability, gives them a warm feeling that they are behaving in a way their God-fearing ancestors would approve, and adds (they hope) a few cubits to their social stature by throwing them with a social group with which they wish to be identified (Vance Packard, The Status Seekers, New York: Picket Books, 1971, 174).

Why would the proud be inclined to persecute their brethren? The proud tend to view others as their competitors rather than their equals. Rather than lifting others, they are inclined to try always to outdistance them. They are given to judging others based on strictly worldly criteria. Those whom they judge to be inferior are likely to be treated disdainfully or simply ignored. They are apt to be highly class-conscious, smug, and arrogant. It is not difficult to understand why they might mistreat the more humble among their brothers and sisters.

35 Nevertheless they did fast and pray oft, and did wax stronger and stronger in their humility, and firmer and firmer in the faith of Christ, unto the filling their souls with joy and consolation, yea, even to the purifying and the sanctification of their hearts, which sanctification cometh because of their yielding their hearts unto God.

verse 35 Yet these unpretentious saints, in spite of the mistreatment by the prideful saints, remained humble and grew in the faith. Because of their remaining faithful in the face of much pain and affliction, they were rewarded by the Spirit "with joy and consolation."

"Even to the purifying and the sanctification of their hearts" For a review of the important process of sanctification, please see Justification and Sanctification, in chapter 17 of volume 1, Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine.

"which sanctification cometh because of their yielding their hearts unto God" Elder Neal A. Maxwell asks a most provocative question: "Are we really ready . . .

. to accept the reality that there is only one name and only one way whereby we can obtain salvation? (2 Nephi 31:21)” (Not My Will, But Thine, 13).

36 And it came to pass that the fifty and second year ended in peace also, save it were the exceedingly great pride which had gotten into the hearts of the people; and it was because of their exceedingly great riches and their prosperity in the land; and it did grow upon them from day to day.

37 And it came to pass in the fifty and third year of the reign of the judges, Helaman died, and his eldest son Nephi began to reign in his stead. And it came to pass that he did fill the judgment-seat with justice and equity; yea, he did keep the commandments of God, and did walk in the ways of his father.

verse 37 This Nephi is certainly one of God’s greatest, though unsung prophets as will become apparent as we read the account of his ministry.

Helaman Chapter 4

1 And it came to pass in the fifty and fourth year there were many dissensions in the church, and there was also a contention among the people, insomuch that there was much bloodshed.

verse 1 “there were many dissensions in the church” It was the nature of Nephite civilization that dissensions within the church soon led to civil dissensions which came to plague the entire Nephite nation and plunge it into a destructive series of wars with the Lamanites.

2 And the rebellious part were slain and driven out of the land, and they did go unto the king of the Lamanites.

3 And it came to pass that they did endeavor to stir up the Lamanites to war against the Nephites; but behold, the Lamanites were exceedingly afraid, insomuch that they would not hearken to the words of those dissenters.

verse 3 The Lamanites had been beaten too many times and were not enthusiastic about the prospects of yet another assault on the Nephites. Daniel C. Peterson wrote: “The great war narrated in the book of Alma had ended in utter Lamanite defeat only a little more than two decades earlier, and the spectacular campaign led by Coriantumr had concluded disastrously just thirteen years before. And both of these military catastrophes had been set in motion by dissenters from the Nephites, who often seemed more than willing to fight their erstwhile brethren down to the last drop of Lamanite blood. Thus, the Lamanites did not respond favorably to the incitements of this particular group of dissenters” (Studies in Scripture, Volume Eight, Alma 30 to Moroni, 99).

4 But it came to pass in the fifty and sixth year of the reign of the judges, there were dissenters who went up from the Nephites unto the Lamanites; and they succeeded with those others in stirring them up to anger against the Nephites; and they were all that year preparing for war.

verse 4 But yet another wave of dissenters wore down the Lamanites’ reluctance to fight the Nephites.

5 And in the fifty and seventh year they did come down against the Nephites to battle, and they did commence the work of death; yea, insomuch that in the fifty and eighth year of the reign of the judges they succeeded in obtaining possession of the land of Zarahemla; yea, and also all the lands, even unto the land which was near the land Bountiful.

6 And the Nephites and the armies of Moronihah were driven even into the land of Bountiful; verse 6 The city and land of Bountiful was the vital northernmost fortification of the eastern border of Nephite territory at this time. Its strategic purpose was to restrict access to the land northward in order to prevent the Nephites from becoming boxed in by the Lamanites (Alma 22:29, 33; 50:32-34; 51:28-32; 52:9; Helaman 1:23, 28).

7 And there they did fortify against the Lamanites, from the west sea, even unto the east; it being a day's journey for a Nephite, on the line which they had fortified and stationed their armies to defend their north country.

verse 7 Exactly what distant is being referred to here that is “a day’s journey for a Nephite.” It would appear that the length of the fortified line created by the Nephites for defense against the Lamanites could be negotiated by a Nephite on foot in one day. Apparently, the fortified line began at the west sea and extended toward the east. No east sea is mentioned (see also Alma 22:32).

8 And thus those dissenters of the Nephites, with the help of a numerous army of the Lamanites, had obtained all the possession of the Nephites which was in the land southward. And all this was done in the fifty and eighth and ninth years of the reign of the judges.

verse 8 “all the possession of the Nephites which was in the land southward” Notice here that the land of Zarahemla is divided into a land northward (including the land Bountiful into which the Nephites had retreated) and a land southward which includes the city of Zarahemla.

9 And it came to pass in the sixtieth year of the reign of the judges, Moronihah did succeed with his armies in obtaining many parts of the land; yea, they regained many cities which had fallen into the hands of the Lamanites.

10 And it came to pass in the sixty and first year of the reign of the judges they succeeded in regaining even the half of all their possessions.

11 Now this great loss of the Nephites, and the great slaughter which was among them, would not have happened had it not been for their wickedness and their abomination which was among them; yea, and it was among those also who professed to belong to the church of God.

verses 12-14 In these three following verses, Mormon interrupts his narrative to offer some observations on the reasons for the Nephites’ inability to defend against this Lamanite invasion. One might expect Mormon, himself a great military commander, to comment on military tactics or strategy. Instead he comments on the wickedness of the Nephites, which wickedness had even extended into the church of God. Competent as Mormon was in military matters, he never forgot that the Lord ultimately determines the course of all human affairs.

12 And it was because of the pride of their hearts, because of their exceeding riches, yea, it was because of their oppression to the poor, withholding their food from the hungry, withholding their clothing from the naked, and smiting their humble brethren upon the cheek, making a mock of that which was sacred, denying the spirit of prophecy and of revelation, murdering, plundering, lying, stealing, committing adultery, rising up in great contentions, and deserting away into the land of Nephi, among the Lamanites—verse 12 Here are enumerated the major sins of the Nephites. Perhaps their most formative and fundamental sin was that of pride and the consequent withdrawal of the Spirit of God. The other sins mentioned here spring from pride and its consequences. For a discussion of the sin of pride see “Pride” in volume 1, chapter 5, The “Natural Man” and “Spiritual Man” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine.

“deserting away” Stan Larson has suggested an alternate word for “deserting” here:

Deserting in the phrase “deserting away into the land of Nephi, among the Lamanites” of Helaman 4:12 has appeared in every printed edition of the Book of Mormon. The word deserting would normally be found in a context indicating an abandoning of military service. However, the printer’s manuscript has “desenting.” This could be taken either as deserting or dissenting. A consideration in favor of the latter is the association of the same preposition, away, found in 3 Nephi 3:11 where it talks about dissenting away. Also, Oliver Cowdery’s spelling habits in the Book of Mormon manuscript should be considered. There are ten other places where dissent (or related forms) are spelled as desent, which certainly pushes in favor that dissenting was the intent of the printer’s manuscript at this point. Thus, by a not-too-far-fetched conjectural emendation the text becomes dissenting” (BYU Studies, volume 18, number 4, 568).

13 And because of this their great wickedness, and their boastings in their own strength, they were left in their own strength; therefore they did not prosper, but were afflicted and smitten, and driven before the Lamanites, until they had lost possession of almost all their lands.

verse 13 To be “left in their own strength” is, of course, to be cut off from the Lord’s protective influence.

14 But behold, Moronihah did preach many things unto the people because of their iniquity, and also Nephi and Lehi, who were the sons of Helaman, did preach many things unto the people, yea, and did prophesy many things unto them concerning their iniquities, and what should come unto them if they did not repent of their sins.

15 And it came to pass that they did repent, and inasmuch as they did repent they did begin to prosper.

16 For when Moronihah saw that they did repent he did venture to lead them forth from place to place, and from city to city, even until they had regained the one-half of their property and the one-half of all their lands.

verse 16 While Moronihah succeeded in winning back about one half of all the Nephite lands, the remainder would become irretrievably lost to the Nephites.

17 And thus ended the sixty and first year of the reign of the judges.

18 And it came to pass in the sixty and second year of the reign of the judges, that Moronihah could obtain no more possessions over the Lamanites.

19 Therefore they did abandon their design to obtain the remainder of their lands, for so numerous were the Lamanites that it became impossible for the Nephites to obtain more power over them; therefore Moronihah did employ all his armies in maintaining those parts which he had taken.

verse 19 The Nephites are forced to adopt a military strategy of mere defense and containment.

20 And it came to pass, because of the greatness of the number of the Lamanites the Nephites were in great fear, lest they should be overpowered, and trodden down, and slain, and destroyed.

21 Yea, they began to remember the prophecies of Alma, and also the words of Mosiah; and they saw that they had been a stiffnecked people, and that they had set at naught the commandments of God;

verse 21 “they had been a stiffnecked people” There is symbolism involved in being “stiffnecked.” This term may represent the people’s refusal to bow their heads in humble reverence and submission to God. To be “stiffnecked” is to be proud and stubborn.

22 And that they had altered and trampled under their feet the laws of Mosiah, or that which the Lord commanded him to give unto the people; and they saw that their laws had become corrupted, and that they had become a wicked people, insomuch that they were wicked even like unto the Lamanites.

verses 21-22 Throughout the Book of Mormon, it is clear that there was an intimate relationship between the spiritual and secular laws of the Nephite peoples. The “standard works” or the scriptural records of the Church of God—the brass plates of Laban and the small and large plates of Nephi—contained the laws of the gospel and the scriptural basis for the Nephite civil government and law. The corruption of civil law was always preceded by the rejection of those moral principles upon which that law was founded (see also Helaman 5:2). This is a grand principle and should well serve as a warning for all nations of the world even today. We regard the constitution of the United States of America as an inspired document. We believe that God inspired the founding fathers so that a country might be established with sufficient freedoms to allow the establishment and growth of the Lord's Church in these last days. Yet, this country still lacks the ideal form of government which will pertain during the Millennium—a theocracy with the Lord Jesus Christ at its head. The government of the United States is a necessary compromise. Thus, this country has been foreseen in prophecy as the “great Gentile nation.”

23 And because of their iniquity the church had begun to dwindle; and they began to disbelieve in the spirit of prophecy and in the spirit of revelation; and the judgments of God did stare them in the face.

verse 23 “the judgments of God did stare them in the face” The judgments of God stare a people in the face when that people is on the very threshold of incurring the wrath and judgments of God because of their behavior.

24 And they saw that they had become weak, like unto their brethren, the Lamanites, and that the Spirit of the Lord did no more preserve them; yea, it had withdrawn from them because the Spirit of the Lord doth not dwell in unholy temples—verse 24 “the Spirit of the Lord did no more preserve them” These Nephites had broken their sacred covenants, and thus the Spirit could no longer dwell with and preserve them.

Mormon likens the condition of the apostate Nephites to that of an unholy temple wherein the Spirit can no longer dwell.

25 Therefore the Lord did cease to preserve them by his miraculous and matchless power, for they had fallen into a state of unbelief and awful wickedness; and they saw that the Lamanites were exceedingly more numerous than they, and except they should cleave unto the Lord their God they must unavoidably perish.

verses 24-25 After Moronihah defeated Coriantumr, a brief period of relative peace had followed. However, within a little more than a decade, in a sadly recurring cycle seen throughout Book of Mormon history, pride, divisiveness, disaffection, sin, wickedness, corruption, and rebellion plagued the Nephites. This occurred some thirty years before the birth of Christ. Helaman 4 reports that within a decade, the Nephites had lost half the land of Zarahemla as well as much of their belief in the spirit of prophecy and revelation.

Mormon told this sad story that he knew not only from history but also from his own personal experiences four hundred years later. The years 43 and 42 BC had been celebrated as years of “great prosperity,” church growth, astonishing blessings, openness to all who “believe on the name of Jesus Christ,” and “continual peace” and rejoicing (Helaman 3:23–32). But within only two years, the people were again caught up with “exceedingly great pride” (verse 36). You read in Helaman 3 that Helaman, the son of Helaman, suddenly died, leaving his fairly young son Nephi in the judgment-seat. During this time, “there were many dissensions in the church, and there was also a contention among the people” (Helaman 4:1), and the government tottered.

A rebellious Nephite faction eventually joined the ranks of the Lamanites and succeeded in stirring up the latter into a war-frenzy (Helaman 4:3–4). Battle commenced, with the result that the Lamanites captured all the land of Zarahemla and exiled the Nephite government and populace into the land of Bountiful (verses 5–9).

The Nephites fought back, regaining half of their lands (Helaman 4:10), but in telling this tragic story, Mormon lamented, “Now this great loss of the Nephites, and the great slaughter which was among them, would not have happened had it not been for their wickedness and their abomination which was among them; yea, and it was among those also who professed to belong to the church of God” (Helaman 4:11). The wickedness at this time included pride, oppressing the poor, mocking that which was sacred, denying the spirit of prophecy and revelation, murder, plunder, dishonesty, theft, adultery, contention, and desertion (verse 12).

In a somewhat startling moment of self-awareness, the Nephites came to their senses and acknowledged their sins, problems, and weaknesses. The Nephites became greatly afraid when they “began to remember the prophecies of Alma, and also the words of Mosiah,” as well as when “they saw that they had been a stiffnecked people, and that they had set at naught the commandments of God” (Helaman 4:21).

Additionally, the Nephites recognized that “they had become weak, like unto their brethren, the Lamanites, and that the Spirit of the Lord did no more preserve them; yea, it had withdrawn from them because the Spirit of the Lord doth not dwell in unholy temples” (Helaman 4:24). The Nephites ultimately accepted their need to repent: “They saw that the Lamanites were exceedingly more numerous than they, and except they should cleave unto the Lord their God they must unavoidably perish” (verse 25).

The Nephites, although being a remnant of the Lord’s chosen people, were not inherently safe from the sins and weaknesses of the world. Coming off of a period of prosperity and peace that included an increase in the church’s membership and prestige, many of the Nephites during the time recorded in Helaman 3 began to fall into the dangerous snares of pride. As Mormon has recorded, in the 41 BC, there appeared to be peace, but pride began to enter “into the hearts of the people who professed to belong to the church of God,” and in the next year that pride “had gotten into the hearts of the people; and it was because of their exceedingly great riches and their prosperity in the land; and it did grow upon them from day to day" (Helaman 3:33, 36).

Thus, the Nephites quickly became their own worst enemies by allowing their spiritual successes, military victories, and material gains to grow into unchecked pride and soon into outright contention. Daniel C. Peterson perceived, "Wealth . . . carries with it major risks to the spiritual wellbeing of those who possess it. It can, in fact, come to possess them. Sometimes, oddly, those who have more than enough of worldly goods can become more obsessed with them than those who must struggle to make ends meet. So it was with the Nephites at this time" (Daniel C. Peterson, "Their Own Worst Enemies," in The Book of Mormon, Part 2: Alma 30 to Moroni, Studies in Scripture, Volume 8, ed. Kent P. Jackson, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 1988, 103).

Perhaps this sad condition spread so rapidly because these material successes arose dramatically in an unregulated decade of post-war boom. Perhaps people felt insecure due to lingering worries about Gadianton terrorism. Perhaps disgruntled political partisans saw opportunities to expand. Whatever the economic or political causes, their spiritual failures to act righteously and to keep the commandments of God exposed the church and the people to impending disasters. Only when they repented could Moronihah "venture to lead them forth from place to place, and from city to city, even until they had regained one one-half" of what they had lost (Helaman 4:15–16).

Mormon's account of this time of Nephite history offers many sobering lessons for modern readers. The fact that these sins and problems began with Nephite members of the church probably made these attractions and temptations all the more difficult to resist. This should warn all modern followers of Christ to be careful not to slip into an attitude of "all is well in Zion" (2 Nephi 28:21). Even devoted disciples are readily at risk if they assume they are immune to the dangers of pride, selfishness, and contention.

As President Thomas S. Monson warned, "We cannot afford to be complacent. We live in perilous times; the signs are all around us" ("Constant Truths for Changing Times," Ensign, May 2005, online at lds.org). These same perils can easily be seen at times plaguing Nephite history, and therefore they serve as a reminder for modern readers to "beware of pride, lest ye become as the Nephites of old" (Doctrine and Covenants 38:39).

26 For behold, they saw that the strength of the Lamanites was as great as their strength, even man for man. And thus had they fallen into this great transgression; yea, thus had they become weak, because of their transgression, in the space of not many years.

verse 26 Brother Hugh Nibley comments: "In the space of not many years,' the Nephites were reduced to a sorry, materialistic people, hopelessly outnumbered by their enemies but with no inclination whatsoever to call upon God" (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 553-54). The book of Helaman repeatedly makes the point that a great civilization can be lost in a very short time (see also Helaman 6:32; 7:6).

Helaman Chapter 5

Scripture Mastery

Helaman 5 The mission of Nephi and Lehi to the land of Nephi. They have a miraculous experience in a Lamanite prison during which they are surrounded by a wall of fire.

Helaman 5:8-12 Posthumous counsel of Helaman to his sons Nephi and Lehi: Remember, remember that it is upon the rock of our Redeemer, who is Christ, the Son of God, that ye must build your foundation; that when the devil shall send forth his mighty winds, yea, his shafts in the whirlwind, yea, when all his hail and his mighty storm shall beat upon you, it shall have no power over you to drag you down to the gulf of misery and endless wo, because of the rock upon which ye are built, which is a sure foundation, a foundation whereon if men build they cannot fall.

2 For as their laws and their governments were established by the voice of the people, and they who chose evil were more numerous than they who chose good, therefore they were ripening for destruction, for the laws had become corrupted.

verse 2 The ominous situation described here was just what Mosiah had warned of some sixty years previously. At that time he abolished the monarchy and established the system of judges. He taught that the laws under which the Nephites then lived were correct and given to them by the hand of the Lord. He taught also that creating a more representative form of government would tend to lead to the continuation of correct laws: “Now it is not common that the voice of the people desireth anything contrary to that which is right; but it is common for the lesser part of the people to desire that which is not right; therefore . . . do your business by the voice of the people [majority vote]” (Mosiah 29:25-26). But Mosiah also warned: “If the time comes that the voice of the people doth choose iniquity, then is the time that the judgments of God will come upon you; yea, then is the time he will visit you with great destruction” (Mosiah 29:27). Thus, we might conclude that the Nephite people are now ripe for destruction or “ripened in iniquity” (Ether 2:9; 9:20). Amulek, in his preaching to the people of Ammonihah, had also recalled the words of king Mosiah and had issued a similar warning (Alma 10:19).

It is sobering to realize that even a fundamentally sound form of government, such as the constitutional government of the United States of America, may fail in times of wickedness when the majority of people choose that which is morally wrong. In such a government, the majority rules, but if the majority is not morally right, then the government will not protect the righteous, but instead will protect the wicked in their wickedness. President John Adams often expressed his conviction that a nation’s liberty is ultimately dependent upon the morality of the people. He said: “[The Constitution] was made only for a moral and religious people. It is wholly inadequate to the government of any other” (Nelson, W. O., The Charter of Liberty [Salt Lake City: Deseret Book] 1987, 101). On another occasion President Adams said: “We have no government armed with power capable of contending with human passions, unbridled by morality and religion” (Ibid.).

We know that the Book of Mormon was written specifically for our time. It is clear that the Lord knew that the same kinds of dangers to the integrity of government would exist in our day, and he has seen to it that we are appropriately warned. Early signs of significant deterioration of a people’s culture might include a loss of respect for authority, a lack of trust in the doctrines of Jesus Christ, a cessation of miracles, a replacement of spiritual things by rationalism, humanism, materialism, and skepticism. In latter-day revelation, the Lord said: “Beware of pride, lest ye become as the Nephites of old” (D&C 38:39).

3 Yea, and this was not all; they were a stiffnecked people, insomuch that they could not be governed by the law nor justice, save it were to their destruction.

verse 3 The people had turned from just laws and righteous principles and would not be governed by such. They had become so wicked that the voice of the people chose only those laws that allowed them to do evil. These would surely lead to their physical captivity, destruction, and ultimately spiritual death.

4 And it came to pass that Nephi had become weary because of their iniquity; and he yielded up the judgment-seat, and took it upon him to preach the word of God all the remainder of his days, and his brother Lehi also, all the remainder of his days;

verse 4 “Nephi . . . yielded up the judgment-seat, and took it upon him to preach the word of God all the remainder of his days” Nephi doubtless knew of the similar action of his great-grandfather Alma (Alma 4:15-19).

verses 5-12 Here Mormon cites a direct quotation from Helaman. It has been pointed out by Ronald D. Anderson that Helaman, in counseling his sons, uses the word remember thirteen times in these eight verses. Brother Anderson suggests that Helaman’s frequent use of this word is intentional and is intended to identify and emphasize the main theme of his counsel. Brother Anderson further points out that this use of repetition of a word or phrase for emphasis is a common literary device used in the Bible. This literary technique has been called by its German name “leitwörter” meaning “theme words” (“Leitwörter in Helaman and 3 Nephi” in The Book of Mormon: Helaman Through 3 Nephi 8, According To Thy Word, 241-49).

In studying these verses, the reader should also keep in mind the rich meaning of the verb to remember. To remember means more than simply maintaining a fact in one's memory. It means to be obedient to, to follow, to dedicate oneself to, to prayerfully ponder, to strive, and to act.

5 For they remembered the words which their father Helaman spake unto them. And these are the words which he spake:

verses 6-12 Helaman is here quoted posthumously by the prophet Mormon. This counsel of Helaman was doubtless found on the large plates of Nephi. Helaman's counsel proved to be most influential in the lives of his sons (see Helaman 5:14). The theme of his remarks is "remembrance." Helaman counsels them to remember to keep the commandments, to remember the example of their forefathers, to remember that salvation comes only through Jesus Christ, and to remember that Jesus Christ is our sure foundation. Ultimately remembrance is divine awakening of memories of the spirit. It is a reminder of that which we have previously known. President Joseph F. Smith said:

All those salient truths which come home so forcibly to the head and heart seem but the awakening of the memories of the spirit. Can we know anything here that we did not know before we came? Are not the means of knowledge in the first estate equal to those of this? . . . By the power of the Spirit . . . through obedience, we often catch a spark from the awakened memories of the immortal soul, which lights up our whole being as with the glory of our former home (Gospel Doctrine. Salt Lake City: Deseret Book, 1978, 13-14).

There is apparently a great spiritual significance in this type of remembrance, and, indeed, in pondering these particular subjects. In response to our striving to remember, it would seem that the Spirit stands ready to witness to us the truth of those things we are pondering and seeking and obeying.

6 Behold, my sons, I desire that ye should remember to keep the commandments of God; and I would that ye should declare unto the people these words. Behold, I have given unto you the names of our first parents who came out of the land of Jerusalem; and this I have done that when you remember your names ye may remember them; and when ye remember them ye may remember their works; and when ye remember their works ye may know how that it is said, and also written, that they were good.

verse 6 "I have given unto you the names of our first parents who came out of the land of Jerusalem" I have named you after Father Lehi and his son Nephi. Jennifer Clark Lane has taught: "In the Book of Mormon, names have importance and significance consistent with Israelite practices recorded in the Old Testament (i.e., a name can be a memorial, an indication of change of character, and a part of a covenant or an adoptive relationship). The Israelite concept that the term name (sem) also means memorial is demonstrated in the passage when Helaman talks with his sons Nephi and Lehi about their names” (Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, “The Lord Will Redeem His People: Adoptive Covenant and Redemption in the Old Testament and Book of Mormon,” 47).

“and this I have done that when you remember your names ye may remember them; and when ye remember them ye may remember their works; and when ye remember their works ye may know how that it is said, and also written, that they were good” Regarding the importance of remembering of our forefathers and the Lord’s promises to them, Joseph Smith taught:

The ancients . . . obtained from God promises of such weight and glory, that our hearts are often filled with gratitude that we are even permitted to look upon them. . . . If we are the children of the Most High, and are called with the same calling with which they were called, and embrace the same covenant that they embraced, and are faithful to the testimony of our Lord as they were, we can approach the Father in the name of Christ as they approached him, and for ourselves, obtain the same promises (TPJS, 65-66).

Nephi, the son of Lehi, wrote: “My soul delighteth in the covenants of the Lord which he hath made to our fathers; yea, my soul delighteth in his grace, and in his justice, and power, and mercy in the great and eternal plan of deliverance” (2 Nephi 11:5). Previously, this same Nephi had stated with confidence: “The Lord is able to deliver us even as our fathers” (1 Nephi 4:3). In this context, see also the preface to the Book of Mormon, Mosiah 27:16, Alma 29:11-12, and Alma 36:29. As we grow in our understanding of the past, our perception of the present and our vision of the future expand.

7 Therefore, my sons, I would that ye should do that which is good, that it may be said of you, and also written, even as it has been said and written of them.

8 And now my sons, behold I have somewhat more to desire of you, which desire is, that ye may not do these things that ye may boast, but that ye may do these things to lay up for yourselves a treasure in heaven, yea, which is eternal, and which fadeth not away; yea, that ye may have that precious gift of eternal life, which we have reason to suppose hath been given to our fathers.

9 O remember, remember, my sons, the words which king Benjamin spake unto his people; yea, remember that there is no other way nor means whereby man can be saved, only through the atoning blood of Jesus Christ, who shall come; yea, remember that he cometh to redeem the world.

verse 9 Helaman likely makes reference here to Mosiah 3:17: “There shall be no other name given nor any other way nor means whereby salvation can come unto the children of men, only in and through the name of Christ, the Lord Omnipotent.” The prophet Nephi also emphasized that the name of Jesus Christ is the only name by which man is saved: “Behold I say unto you, that as these things are true, and as the Lord God liveth, there is none other name given under heaven save it be this Jesus Christ, of which I have spoken, whereby man can be saved” (2 Nephi 25:20).

10 And remember also the words which Amulek spake unto Zeezrom, in the city of Ammonihah; for he said unto him that the Lord surely should come to redeem his people, but that he should not come to redeem them in their sins, but to redeem them from their sins.

verse 10 “he should not come to redeem them in their sins, but to redeem them from their sins” (italics mine). Helaman has reference here to Amulek’s teachings in Alma 11:34-37. To redeem mankind “in their sins” is to save or exalt everyone without regard to their propensity for righteousness or evil. It was Satan in the premortal world who offered to save all men in their sins. Brigham Young taught: “If you undertake to save all, you must save them in unrighteousness and corruption” (JD, 13:282). Christ’s atonement is infinite in its scope. It is endless and eternal in its applications, yet it has limitations. It cannot save an individual in his sins. It cannot bestow power and glory and eternal life in the celestial kingdom upon those who are unrepentant and unclean. The atonement makes it possible for man to be redeemed “from his sins”—they may be blotted out based upon his repentance and obedience.

11 And he hath power given unto him from the Father to redeem them from their sins because of repentance; therefore he hath sent his angels to declare the tidings of the conditions of repentance, which bringeth unto the power of the Redeemer, unto the salvation of their souls.

verse 11 “And he hath power given unto him from the Father to redeem them from their sins because of repentance” Here is a profound concept regarding the divine sonship of the Savior. Jesus lived a sinless life, his motives and love for us were absolutely pure, and he agonizingly atoned in Gethsemane and on the cross. We know his sacrifice resulted in his being enabled to forgive those whom he judged worthy of forgiveness. This authority was given him by those who enforce the law of justice. Yet, here we learn that he could not have become our Savior and he could not have put into effect the great law of mercy without, in addition, “power given unto him from the Father.” This final power must have been granted him following his atoning sacrifice.

Other significant powers were vested in him at the time of his birth into mortality by virtue of his relationship with his Father. The body in which he performed his mortal ministry was sired by the Father in the most literal sense. He was not the son of Joseph. He was the literal son of the Eternal Father. He consequently had power over his life—the complete freedom to either lay down his life voluntarily or not do so. It was apparently vital that he be in complete control to surrender to his crucifixion voluntarily or not, as he wished. His sacrifice had to be the voluntary sacrifice of a God, not the sacrifice of a man. He confirmed that this was so: “I lay down my life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again” (John 10:17-18). He also consequently had the power to endure the physical, mental, and spiritual agony required to complete the process of atoning without succumbing to those extreme adversities.

“the tidings of the conditions of repentance” The “tidings” are the good news: Our Savior has made it possible to have our sins deleted and return to live with God again! Repentance, of course, is essential. Without it there can be no redemption from the spiritual fall.

“which bringeth unto the power of the Redeemer, unto the salvation of their souls” This phrase is clearer if one word is inserted: “which bringeth unto them the power of the Redeemer . . .”

12 And now, my sons, remember, remember that it is upon the rock of our Redeemer, who is Christ, the Son of God, that ye must build your foundation; that when the devil shall send forth his mighty winds, yea, his shafts in the whirlwind, yea, when all his hail and his mighty storm shall beat upon you, it shall have no power over you to drag you down to the gulf of misery and endless wo, because of the rock upon which ye are built, which is a sure foundation, a foundation whereon if men build they cannot fall.

verse 12 There is some danger that the reader may become distracted by the repeated metaphors in this verse. The concept of building one’s foundation on the “rock of our Redeemer” is a vital one that deserves a few words of comment and some considerable pondering.

How, in a practical sense, does one build one’s foundation upon the Lord? Primarily, it would seem, one must strive to acquire one of the most fundamental and vital gifts of the Spirit, that of a revealed testimony of Jesus. One who possesses this gift enjoys a close and personal relationship with the Savior and comes to center one’s life around him. The individual who has been so favored is never again the same as before. There comes with a personal testimony of Christ a peace and comfort and confidence in his presence, a dependence upon him, and a daily seeking him out. A few moments’ contemplation of the Savior is often accompanied by that particular and unique nudge by the Spirit which each individual comes to know as his own particular indication of divine contact.

As with any of the gifts of the Spirit there is an earthly counterpart for which we must strive “in the trenches” as we “experiment upon the word.” It is the diligent seeking after this earthly counterpart that is eventually rewarded by the Spirit with the priceless gift. And how do we “experiment upon the word”? By praying earnestly and often; studying, pondering, and prayerfully reading the scriptures; proactively looking for opportunities to obey his commandments; obediently and humbly responding to any opportunity to serve in his Church; and looking for opportunities to teach others of him and of his atonement, his mercy, and his incomparable grace.

But there is more to the symbolism of the rock. Nephi, the son of Lehi, often referred to Christ as the rock (1 Nephi 15:15; 2 Nephi 4:35; 2 Nephi 18:14, quoting Isaiah 8:14. Jacob, Nephi's younger brother, also used this imagery (2 Nephi 9:45; Jacob 4:15–17; 7:25).

This idea of Christ's being a stone or rock that serves as a refuge or place of safety is also common in the Old Testament. Books such as the Psalms, Isaiah, and Deuteronomy, that the Lehites would likely have had access to on the plates of brass, use similar language. Note the following verses, for example: "But the Lord is my defense; and my God is the rock of my refuge" (Psalm 94:22). "Be thou my strong habitation, whereunto I may continually resort: thou hast given commandment to save me; for thou art my rock and my fortress" (Psalm 71:3). "For in the time of trouble he shall hide me in his pavilion: in the secret of his tabernacle shall he hide me; he shall set me up upon a rock" (Psalm 27:5). "And a man [i.e. the messianic king and those who rule with Him] shall be as an hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land" (Isaiah 32:2). "For thou hast been a strength to the poor, a strength to the needy in his distress, a refuge from the storm, a shadow from the heat, when the blast of the terrible ones is as a storm against the wall" (Isaiah 25:4).

It is interesting to note that similar imagery is used as a warning to the wicked. They will need to hide themselves in the rocks in order to escape the wrath of the Lord when he comes to visit them in judgment. The Lord will bring a storm of lightning, hail, arrows, whirlwinds, and so on, to punish the wicked. A few representative verses include: "Enter into the rock, and hide thee in the dust, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majesty. . . . For the day of the Lord of hosts shall be upon every one that is proud and lofty, and upon every one that is lifted up; and he shall be brought low: . . . And they shall go into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majesty, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth" (Isaiah 2:10, 12, 19). Also, "And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; And said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb" (Revelation 6:15–16). In addition, "Thou shalt be visited of the Lord of hosts with thunder, and with earthquake, and great noise, with storm and tempest, and the flame of devouring fire" (Isaiah 29:6).

In these passages, it is the Lord who comes, in His wrath, with fire, hail, tempest and fury, and the wicked must hide in the rocks. In Zechariah 9:14, the Lord is said to come specifically with "arrows" and with "whirlwinds." This language is very similar to what Helaman says of Satan: "when the devil shall send forth his mighty winds, yea, his shafts [arrows] in the whirlwind, yea, when all his hail and his mighty storm shall beat upon you” (Helaman 5:12). There are examples in the Bible where it is not the Lord Himself who comes in this manner. Isaiah 28:2 reads: “Behold, the Lord hath a mighty and strong one, which as a tempest of hail and a destroying storm, as a flood of mighty waters overflowing, shall cast down to the earth with the hand” (Cf. Psalm 18:14; 144:6; Isaiah 66:15; Habakkuk 3:14). This verse does not specify to whom the Lord is referring, but the context indicates that the “mighty and strong one” is a reference to the Assyrian army, or perhaps to a specific Assyrian king whom the Lord is allowing to punish the rebellious northern kingdom of Israel (cf. Isaiah 10:5–6). The interesting thing to note, for our purposes, is that Isaiah 14 creates a parallel between a prideful king of Assyria and Lucifer (Isaiah 14:12: “How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning!”).

Satan often impersonates or imitates God in His different capacities. One striking example is in the Book of Moses 1:12–22, where Satan “came tempting” Moses, asking him to worship him, after Moses had just seen God in His great glory. When Moses refused, recognizing the difference in glory between God and Satan, the Evil One ranted and cried out: “I am the Only Begotten, worship me” (Moses 1:19). Moses continued resisting and called upon God, and then “Satan began to tremble, and the earth shook” before he “departed hence” (Moses 1:21–22).

In the imagery of the Hebrew Bible, the rocks are a place of refuge and safety from storms, hail, and arrows in the whirlwind, and the Lord is ultimately the rock and refuge of Israel. Scriptures such as Isaiah 25:4 describe Jehovah as a place of refuge from the storm, when times of trouble arise. Others, such as Isaiah 28, depict the Lord as the cornerstone of the temple, a sure foundation upon which to build. The imagery common to these passages, that the Lord is the Rock, inspires faith in the idea that despite all that the Adversary has to throw at believers, they can seek refuge and safety in Christ. They can be sure that if they build their lives upon Him, His Atonement, and His Gospel, they will be building on a safe and secure foundation.

Here in Helaman 5:12, Helaman described a situation in which Satan, instead of the Lord, is coming in wrath with storm, hail, and arrows in the whirlwind, in order to attack not the wicked, but the righteous. Satan has co-opted this function of Deity and attacks the righteous with all of his infernal power. Under these circumstances, Helaman desired that his sons, Nephi and Lehi, remember the important scriptural principle, one repeated many times in the words of prophets both from the Old World and the New, that Christ is the Rock a place of refuge, safety and stability. It is likely that Helaman would have expected that the imagery he used would have brought up many related scriptural passages to their minds, such as those discussed above.

Helaman’s words share this common background together with Jesus’s concluding parable of the wise man who built his house upon the rock. In 3 Nephi, Jesus declared that those who adhere to His doctrine and do the things that He commanded will be building upon His rock, “and the gates of hell shall not prevail against them” (3 Nephi 11:39; cf. 14:24; 18:12–13).

As Nephi and Lehi went out to preach the gospel among a hardhearted people, they knew that Satan would do his best to tempt, discourage, and destroy them. They chose to rehearse these powerful words of their father in order to remind themselves in whom they could trust and upon what foundation they could build their spiritual house so that it would never be moved out of its place.

Elder Neil L. Andersen of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles recently admonished: “Don’t let the whirlwinds drag you down. . . Build more firmly your foundation upon the rock of your Redeemer. . . Embrace more deeply His love, His mercy and grace, and the powerful gifts of His Atonement. As you do, I promise you that you will see the whirlwinds for what they are—tests, temptations, distractions, or challenges to help you grow. And as you live righteously year after year, I assure you that your experiences will confirm to you again and again that Jesus is the Christ. The spiritual rock under your feet will be solid and secure (Neil L. Andersen, “Spiritual Whirlwinds,” Ensign, May 2014, 21).

13 And it came to pass that these were the words which Helaman taught to his sons; yea, he did teach them many things which are not written, and also many things which are written.

14 And they did remember his words; and therefore they went forth, keeping the commandments of God, to teach the word of God among all the people of Nephi, beginning at the city Bountiful; verse 14 It is interesting to note that Nephi and Lehi began their mission in the city Bountiful in the land Bountiful. From here they will travel to the city of Gid and then to the city of Mulek, cities near the borders of the east sea.

“And they did remember his words” This phrase illustrates an interesting editorial technique that was discovered in the Bible following the time of the prophet Joseph Smith called “repetitive resumption.” For a description of this technique, see the commentary for Alma 11:20. Repetitive resumption refers to an editor’s return to an original narrative following a deliberate interlude. Old Testament writers accomplished this by repeating a key word or phrase that immediately preceded the textual interruption. Here, the editor, Mormon, just prior to this verse had inserted a brief account of Helaman’s powerful discourse to his sons Nephi and Lehi (verses 6-12). This insertion was intentionally prefaced by the editorial introduction, “For they remembered the words which their father Helaman spake unto them” (see verse 5). The editor then, in this verse (verse 14), uses the phrase “And they did remember his words” in order to return to his original narrative. This is another example of repetitive resumption.

15 And from thenceforth to the city of Gid; and from the city of Gid to the city of Mulek;

16 And even from one city to another, until they had gone forth among all the people of Nephi who were in the land southward; and from thence into the land of Zarahemla, among the Lamanites.

verse 16 Formerly the “land southward” was the Lamanite land of Nephi, south of the land of Zarahemla. At the time of this verse, the land southward is everything south of the land Bountiful. The definition of the land southward and the land northward changes from time to time depending on the political situation of the moment. The land of Zarahemla, formerly the Nephite capital, is now, of course, under Lamanite control.

17 And it came to pass that they did preach with great power, insomuch that they did confound many of those dissenters who had gone over from the Nephites, insomuch that they came forth and did confess their sins and were baptized unto repentance, and immediately returned to the Nephites to endeavor to repair unto them the wrongs which they had done.

verse 17 It is truly remarkable that Nephite dissenters were moved to re-accept the gospel. Usually, as a group, they are unlikely to be receptive to the promptings of the Spirit.

18 And it came to pass that Nephi and Lehi did preach unto the Lamanites with such great power and authority, for they had power and authority given unto them that they might speak, and they also had what they should speak given unto them—

19 Therefore they did speak unto the great astonishment of the Lamanites, to the convincing them, insomuch that there were eight thousand of the Lamanites who were in the land of Zarahemla and round about baptized unto repentance, and were convinced of the wickedness of the traditions of their fathers.

verse 19 “the wickedness of the traditions of their fathers” See the commentary for Enos 1:14 and Mosiah 10:12-17. See also verse 51 of this chapter.

20 And it came to pass that Nephi and Lehi did proceed from thence to go to the land of Nephi.

21 And it came to pass that they were taken by an army of the Lamanites and cast into prison; yea, even in that same prison in which Ammon and his brethren were cast by the servants of Limhi.

verse 21 “they were taken by an army of the Lamanites” Apparently the Lamanites at times maintained a standing army even when they were not fighting the Nephites.

This Ammon was not the missionary Ammon, the son of Mosiah. Rather this was the Ammon, of Mulekite descent, who had been sent to the land of Nephi nearly a century earlier along with fifteen other men. King Mosiah had dispatched them to inquire after the Nephites who had traveled to the land of Nephi under the direction of Zeniff several years previously. Ammon and his men had been imprisoned by the very people they set out to rescue. Once their identity and purpose were discovered, however, they had been released and were instrumental in rescuing Limhi and his group of Nephites.

22 And after they had been cast into prison many days without food, behold, they went forth into the prison to take them that they might slay them.

verse 22 Be careful to keep the pronouns “they” and “them” straight in this verse and in the three following verses. The first “they” refers to Nephi and Lehi. The second and third “theys” refer to the Lamanites who had imprisoned Nephi and Lehi.

verses 23-33 Here the Lord intervenes in a powerful and dramatic way to save these Nephite missionaries, Nephi and Lehi. The extent of his intervention suggests that the continued preaching of Nephi and Lehi and the conversion of these Lamanites was of major importance to the Lord’s purposes. For most of the remainder of the Book of Mormon, it will be the Lamanites and not the Nephites who are the righteous followers of the Lord.

23 And it came to pass that Nephi and Lehi were encircled about as if by fire, even insomuch that they durst not lay their hands upon them for fear lest they should be burned. Nevertheless, Nephi and Lehi were not burned; and they were as standing in the midst of fire and were not burned.

verse 23 “Nephi and Lehi were encircled about as if by fire” Exactly with what or by whom were Nephi and Lehi encircled about? It is likely that they were encircled by the protective presence of heavenly beings accompanied by the glory and power and brightness of God which gave them the appearance of fire (see verse 39). At the time of the Savior’s appearance to the Book of Mormon people, a similar situation will occur. Following Christ’s blessing of the little children, the multitude “cast their eyes towards heaven, and they saw the heavens open, and they saw angels descending out of heaven as it were in the midst of fire; and they came down and encircled those little ones about, and they were encircled about with fire; and the angels did minister unto them” (3 Nephi 17:24).

24 And when they saw that they were encircled about with a pillar of fire, and that it burned them not, their hearts did take courage.

verse 24 Doubtless Nephi and Lehi were initially apprehensive and concerned about their own safety when this glorious manifestation began.

25 For they saw that the Lamanites durst not lay their hands upon them; neither durst they come near unto them, but stood as if they were struck dumb with amazement.

26 And it came to pass that Nephi and Lehi did stand forth and began to speak unto them, saying: Fear not, for behold, it is God that has shown unto you this marvelous thing, in the which is shown unto you that ye cannot lay your hands on us to slay us.

27 And behold, when they had said these words, the earth shook exceedingly, and the walls of the prison did shake as if they were about to tumble to the earth; but behold, they did not fall. And behold, they that were in the prison were Lamanites and Nephites who were dissenters.

verse 27 “they that were in prison” These were not the fellow prisoners of Lehi and Nephi. Rather they were those Lamanites who had gone “forth into the prison to take them that they might slay them.” We will learn that there were some three hundred of them.

28 And it came to pass that they were overshadowed with a cloud of darkness, and an awful solemn fear came upon them.

29 And it came to pass that there came a voice as if it were above the cloud of darkness, saying: Repent ye, repent ye, and seek no more to destroy my servants whom I have sent unto you to declare good tidings.

30 And it came to pass when they heard this voice, and beheld that it was not a voice of thunder, neither was it a voice of a great tumultuous noise, but behold, it was a still voice of perfect mildness, as if it had been a whisper, and it did pierce even to the very soul—

verse 30 “it was a still voice of perfect mildness, as if it had been a whisper, and it did pierce even to the very soul” Ralph C. Hancock has observed: “Revealed light and natural light [secular learning] are not completely distinct categories. Revelation engages natural reason and indeed may build upon it. It is sometimes described in LDS teaching as ‘a still voice of perfect mildness’ able to ‘pierce unto the very soul’ (Helaman 5:30) or as a spirit that resonates with the mind to produce a feeling of ‘pure intelligence’ or ‘sudden strokes of ideas’ (TPJS, 151). It is thus appropriate to seek and prepare for revelation by the effort of reason: ‘You must study it out in your mind; then you must ask me if it be right’ (D&C 9:8)” (Encyclopedia of Mormonism, volume 3, “Reason and Revelation”).

“it was not a voice of thunder” Elder Neal A. Maxwell comments: “True faith is not to be brought about by overwhelming and intimidating intervention from God, either.

The Lord is a shepherd with a ‘mild’ and ‘pleasant’ voice—not a shouting and scolding sheepherder” (Not My Will, But Thine, 32).

31 And notwithstanding the mildness of the voice, behold the earth shook exceedingly, and the walls of the prison trembled again, as if it were about to tumble to the earth; and behold the cloud of darkness, which had overshadowed them, did not disperse—

32 And behold the voice came again, saying: Repent ye, repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand; and seek no more to destroy my servants. And it came to pass that the earth shook again, and the walls trembled.

verse 32 “repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand” Of what is the Lord prophesying here? His mortal ministry, perhaps? Or maybe the post-mortal life of all of us? Is it not true that for each individual this mortal phase is most fragile and transient, and the next phase of our lives is virtually always near (“at hand”)? Our mortal experience is so fleeting and so temporary that it is wholly inappropriate to regard the next life to be a long way off. It is the nature of man, however, particularly in his youth to inappropriately regard his mortal life as permanent unless the Spirit whispers to him otherwise or unless calamitous circumstances cause him to realize the truly temporary nature of this mortal phase.

33 And also again the third time the voice came, and did speak unto them marvelous words which cannot be uttered by man; and the walls did tremble again, and the earth shook as if it were about to divide asunder.

verse 33 “marvelous words which cannot be uttered by man” It is not clear whether these words were included on the large plates and Mormon simply chose not to include them here, or whether they were never even recorded because of their sacred nature.

34 And it came to pass that the Lamanites could not flee because of the cloud of darkness which did overshadow them; yea, and also they were immovable because of the fear which did come upon them.

verse 34 This spectacular supernatural display had completely stunned and immobilized the Lamanites. Fortunately, an apostate Nephite was nearby whose heart was touched. He was able to explain to the Lamanites how they might find their way out of this “cloud of darkness.”

35 Now there was one among them who was a Nephite by birth, who had once belonged to the church of God but had dissented from them.

verse 35 We will learn that this verse refers to the rather enigmatic character Aminadab (see verse 39). The brief episode in his life that unfolds in these few verses should give hope to parents whose child has rebelled and rejected the gospel.

36 And it came to pass that he turned him about, and behold, he saw through the cloud of darkness the faces of Nephi and Lehi; and behold, they did shine exceedingly, even as the faces of angels. And he beheld that they did lift their eyes to heaven; and they were in the attitude as if talking or lifting their voices to some being whom they beheld.

verse 36 This shining countenance has been observed when mortals are transfigured in the presence of the Lord. In the cases of Abinadi and Stephen just prior to their executions (Mosiah 13:5; Acts 6:15) and in the case of Moses coming down from Sinai (Exodus 34:29-35).

37 And it came to pass that this man did cry unto the multitude, that they might turn and look. And behold, there was power given unto them that they did turn and look; and they did behold the faces of Nephi and Lehi.

38 And they said unto the man: Behold, what do all these things mean, and who is it with whom these men do converse?

39 Now the man's name was Aminadab. And Aminadab said unto them: They do converse with the angels of God.

40 And it came to pass that the Lamanites said unto him: What shall we do, that this cloud of darkness may be removed from overshadowing us?

verse 40 Here, the Lamanites' cry for help and mercy is more than merely an appeal to be helped out from under this frightening cloud of darkness. The Spirit had apparently witnessed to them the seriousness of their spiritual plight. They were sinners badly in need of repentance, and the Holy Ghost had made them keenly aware of that fact. They realized that they were lost without someone to redeem or rescue them.

41 And Aminadab said unto them: You must repent, and cry unto the voice, even until ye shall have faith in Christ, who was taught unto you by Alma, and Amulek, and Zeezrom; and when ye shall do this, the cloud of darkness shall be removed from overshadowing you.

verse 41 Aminadab may have been addressing here primarily the Nephite dissenters who called themselves Lamanites. Alma, Amulek, and Zeezrom never did preach among the Lamanites per se. They did, however, about 45 years earlier, travel together to preach in the land of the Zoramites who were Nephite dissenters and likely the ancestors of some of those present during this experience in the Lamanite prison. It is interesting to note that following the mission to the Zoramites of Alma, Amulek, and Zeezrom, the Zoramites who remained unconverted “became Lamanites” (see Alma 43:4). It is certainly possible that Aminadab and some of his Lamanite friends were young Zoramites during the mission to the Zoramites, remained unconverted during that mission, and later become Lamanites.

The conversion of Aminadab, formerly an apostate Nephite, should be heartening to parents of rebellious offspring. Usually apostates become and remain the church’s bitterest enemies. On occasion they are capable, as was the case with Aminadab, of dredging up and recalling from deep within their memories those truths they believed in former times.

“you must repent . . . even until ye shall have faith in Christ” Here is a reminder of the fundamental process of utilizing faith to acquire gifts of the Spirit—in this case a testimony of Jesus Christ. The process, which Alma has referred to as “experimenting on the word” (Alma 32:27), involves diligent and persistent striving including study, pondering, prayer, and most importantly repeatedly repenting and deliberately obeying the Lord’s commandments. This process may be appropriately referred to as “manifesting one’s deliberate faith.” Then comes the precious spiritual gifts—the inevitable gifts of the spirit that accompany deliberate obedience. These spiritual gifts are increments of the attributes of Christ. They are received by an obedient individual through revelation and become a second type of faith—the obedient individual’s revealed faith. The sum total of an individual’s spiritual gifts makes up his or her revealed faith. This faith is the essence of spiritual strength, spiritual character, and spiritual growth. Elder Dallin H. Oaks taught:

When a person has gone through the process that results in what the scriptures call a broken heart and a contrite spirit, that person is not only eligible to be cleansed from sin. He is also strengthened, and that strengthening is essential for us to realize the purpose of the cleansing, which is to return to our Heavenly Father. To be admitted to his presence we must be more than clean. We must also be changed from a weak person who once transgressed into a strong person with the spiritual stature that qualifies one to dwell in the presence of God (“Sin and Suffering.” BYU Devotional Fireside Speeches 1989-90, 150-51).

As we repent of our sins, we gain what President McKay termed a “consciousness of victory over self and of communion with the Infinite. Spirituality impels one to conquer difficulties and to acquire more and more strength. To feel one’s faculties unfolding, and truth expanding the soul is one of life’s sublimest experiences” (“The True Purpose of Life,” Improvement Era [December 1963] 66:1057). This exquisite emotional experience is referred to in the scriptures—it is the experience of true joy.

“when ye shall do this, the cloud of darkness shall be removed from overshadowing you” Aminadab may be reciting something that he had heard Amulek preach to the Zoramites forty-five years earlier. Amulek had warned the Zoramites that if they did not repent, there would come a “night of darkness wherein there can be no labor performed” (Alma 34:33).

42 And it came to pass that they all did begin to cry unto the voice of him who had shaken the earth; yea, they did cry even until the cloud of darkness was dispersed.

verse 42 “they all did begin to cry unto the voice of him who had shaken the earth” In teaching of the process of repentance, President Spencer W. Kimball has taught of the principle of “godly sorrow” (2 Corinthians 7:9-11). This type of sorrow is actually a gift of the Spirit given to the sinner who has assiduously sought and pled for the Lord’s forgiveness. In essence, it is a clear and painful insight into one’s eternal fate were the blessings of the Lord’s atonement never to be extended. Once the sinner has received the gift of godly sorrow, he is, with profound gratitude, inclined to completely and without condition, submit his will to the Lord. President Kimball has compared this man’s heartfelt cry for mercy to a surrender, and he has pointed out that the surrender must be unconditional and not conditional. He observed, “Many of us have not yet surrendered, or if it has been a surrender, it has been a conditional surrender, with many reservations” (Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball. Ed. Edward L. Kimball: Salt Lake City: Bookcraft, 1982: 106). We must submit completely to the will of God. We may not know if or when or how the clouds of darkness will disperse. Nevertheless, we must continue to cry unto the Lord. Only through clouds of darkness can our faith be tested and strengthened.

This same unconditional surrender to the will of God may also occur in circumstances that do not involve sin. Referring to the ancient Hebrew captives Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego as examples, Elder Neal A. Maxwell wrote:

[Their] response to a persecuting king was, as they were about to be thrown into a fiery furnace heated seven times its usual capacity: “If it be so, our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace . . .” And then the three words: “But if not, be it know unto thee, O king, that we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up” (Daniel 3:17-18, italics added). But if not. There will be times in each of our lives when our faith must not be conditioned upon God’s rescuing or relieving us, because in fact he may not—at least, not as we would choose to be rescued. . . Matching those three young men are three young women whose names we do not have. They are mentioned in the book of Abraham, remarkable young women about whom I am anxious to know more. They were actually sacrificed upon the altar because “they would not bow down to worship [an idol] of wood or stone” (Abraham 1:11) (Not My Will, But Thine. Salt Lake City: Bookcraft, 1988, 119-20).

43 And it came to pass that when they cast their eyes about, and saw that the cloud of darkness was dispersed from overshadowing them, behold, they saw that they were encircled about, yea every soul, by a pillar of fire.

44 And Nephi and Lehi were in the midst of them; yea, they were encircled about; yea, they were as if in the midst of a flaming fire, yet it did harm them not, neither did it take hold upon the walls of the prison; and they were filled with that joy which is unspeakable and full of glory.

verse 44 “neither did it take hold upon the walls of the prison” The prison walls did not catch fire.

“they were filled with that joy which is unspeakable and full of glory” Ordinarily this joy, which is a marvelous gift which can only be experienced through the influence of the Spirit, is given to those who have earned it by diligent striving and obedience. Here the Spirit gratuitously allows these newly-converted, or re-converted, Lamanites to experience a sampling of it.

No gift of the Spirit should be regarded as being permanent or perfect. One may earn a gift, the gift of a broken heart and contrite spirit for example, through years of diligent striving. That gift should be regarded, however, as always being in a dynamic or fluid state. One can always continue to strive and build upon that gift. In addition one might also backslide and lose part, or all, of the gift one once possessed. In certain circumstances, the Spirit might bestow temporarily some gifts to those he wishes to reward or spiritually affirm. These gifts might be provided as a sign and an encouragement along the road of spiritual growth. The gift of joy in this verse and the gift of prophecy in the following verse might be examples. Ordinarily signs are given as a reward to those who are faithful and not to those inclined to be faithless and skeptical. It is likely that the three hundred or so Lamanites gathered at the prison were not the hardened, cynical apostates from whom the Spirit had completely withdrawn. Certainly, there were some of the latter among the Lamanite peoples. Rather, these Lamanites at the prison were more likely individuals inclined to be responsive to promptings of the Spirit. The Spirit is not “casting pearls before swine” here. He is doubtless rewarding those who had already begun to wonder and seek after spiritual things. Obviously, the Spirit had been active among the people in this group for some time.

45 And behold, the Holy Spirit of God did come down from heaven, and did enter into their hearts, and they were filled as if with fire, and they could speak forth marvelous words.

46 And it came to pass that there came a voice unto them, yea, a pleasant voice, as if it were a whisper, saying:

47 Peace, peace be unto you, because of your faith in my Well Beloved, who was from the foundation of the world.

verse 47 The gift of peace, comfort, and spiritual security and confidence is yet another gift of the Spirit given to those who sincerely repent of their sins (D&C 59:23). It accompanies the remission of their sins.

Who is speaking here? The Father? The Son? The verse suggests that it is either the Father or, more likely, the Son speaking as though he were the Father by the principle of divine investiture of authority.

48 And now, when they heard this they cast up their eyes as if to behold from whence the voice came; and behold, they saw the heavens open; and angels came down out of heaven and ministered unto them.

verse 48 Who were these “angels”? Joseph Smith taught that “there are no angels who minister to this earth but those who do belong or have belonged to it” (D&C 130:5). Also President Joseph F. Smith observed:

When messengers are sent to minister to the inhabitants of this earth, they are not strangers, but from the ranks of our kindred, friends, and fellow-beings and fellow-servants. The ancient prophets who died were those who came to visit their fellow creatures upon the earth. They came to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob; it was such beings—holy beings if you please—who waited upon the Savior and administered to him on the Mount. . .

In like manner our fathers and mothers, brothers, sisters and friends who have passed away from this earth, having been faithful, and worthy to enjoy these rights and privileges, may have a mission given them to visit their relatives and friends upon the earth again, bringing from the divine Presence messages of love, of warning, of reproof, and instruction, to those whom they had learned to love in the flesh (Gospel Doctrine, 435-37).

49 And there were about three hundred souls who saw and heard these things; and they were bidden to go forth and marvel not, neither should they doubt.

verse 49 “they were bidden to go forth and marvel not, neither should they doubt” These new converts were commanded to “marvel not.” In other words, they were commanded not to wonder or be surprised or over-awed by what they had seen and heard.

50 And it came to pass that they did go forth, and did minister unto the people, declaring throughout all the regions round about all the things which they had heard and seen, insomuch that the more part of the Lamanites were convinced of them, because of the greatness of the evidences which they had received.

verse 50 Here is an illustration of a general rule. Those who are converted to the Savior, tend to become saviors themselves. He has invited each of us to join him in his ministry to become “a savior unto my people Israel” (D&C 86:11).

The labors of this remarkable force of three hundred Lamanite missionaries resulted in the conversion of “the more part,” which we assume is the majority, of the Lamanite people in the land of Nephi! The prophet Mormon will later look back upon this experience of Nephi and Lehi and offer his explanation of what enabled it to happen: “Behold, it was the faith of Nephi and Lehi that wrought the change upon the Lamanites” (Ether 12:14).

51 And as many as were convinced did lay down their weapons of war, and also their hatred and the tradition of their fathers.

52 And it came to pass that they did yield up unto the Nephites the lands of their possession.

verse 52 The Lamanites gave back to the Nephites the lands that the latter had lost in battle. We will learn that this included even the city and land of Zarahemla.

Helaman Chapter 6

1 And it came to pass that when the sixty and second year of the reign of the judges had ended, all these things had happened and the Lamanites had become, the more part of them, a righteous people, insomuch that their righteousness did exceed that of the Nephites, because of their firmness and their steadiness in the faith.

verse 1 The reader has a tendency to regard the Lamanites as a primitive and uncivilized and even savage culture, yet we sense, by their response to the gospel message a significant sophistication and spiritual sensitivity. In the next several verses, we will read of their desire to share the gospel with their erstwhile enemies, the Nephites. Perhaps the influence of the Nephite dissenters who joined with the Lamanites in previous years contributed to the upgrading of the secular civilization of the Lamanites (see Mosiah 24:4-7).

2 For behold, there were many of the Nephites who had become hardened and impenitent and grossly wicked, insomuch that they did reject the word of God and all the preaching and prophesying which did come among them.

verse 2 The word “impenitent” means feeling no regret or guilt.

3 Nevertheless, the people of the church did have great joy because of the conversion of the Lamanites, yea, because of the church of God, which had been established among them. And they did fellowship one with another, and did rejoice one with another, and did have great joy.

verse 3 “And they did fellowship one with another, and did rejoice one with another, and did have great joy” We will see that the amicable relationship between the Nephite church goers and the newly converted Lamanites will spread into the secular cultures of both peoples and result in a generally friendly relationship between the Nephites and Lamanites. This will occur in spite of the fact that probably the minority of Nephites were committed to the church. We thus see another illustration of the powerful influence which the church culture had over the civil culture.

4 And it came to pass that many of the Lamanites did come down into the land of Zarahemla, and did declare unto the people of the Nephites the manner of their conversion, and did exhort them to faith and repentance.

verse 4 Apparently, the land and city of Zarahemla are now back in the hands of the Nephites (see Helaman 5:52).

5 Yea, and many did preach with exceedingly great power and authority, unto the bringing down many of them into the depths of humility, to be the humble followers of God and the Lamb.

6 And it came to pass that many of the Lamanites did go into the land northward; and also Nephi and Lehi went into the land northward, to preach unto the people. And thus ended the sixty and third year.

verse 6 It is likely that the “land northward” here refers to the northern part of the former land of Zarahemla and not the lands north of the narrow neck of land. The missionaries in this verse likely traveled to the land Bountiful and other Nephite cities near the east coast.

verses 1-6 The Book of Mormon is often perceived as portraying the Lamanites only as a cursed, benighted, and loathsome people. Obviously, this is a simplistic and ultimately incorrect perception (see also Helaman 13:1). From this point in the text to its end, there will be a continual erosion of the distinction between the descendants of Laman and Nephi. By the time of the “golden age” following the Savior’s personal visit to the Book of Mormon peoples, all distinctions between the former Nephites and Lamanites will have vanished. Subsequently when they separate again into Nephites and Lamanites, it will not be according to their pedigrees or genealogies but whether or not they accepted and lived the gospel of Jesus Christ (see the supplemental article, Book of Mormon Myths).

verses 7-13 These verses describe a most unusual period in the history of Nephite-Lamanite relations in the Book of Mormon. It lasted about five years, from the sixty-second through the sixty sixth years of the reign of Judges, and was characterized by a peaceful coexistence between Nephites and Lamanites, free travel, and prosperity.

These verses, which comprise the annual report for the sixty-fourth year of the reign of judges, have been found to be written in chiasmic form (see the supplemental article, Hebrew Language and the Book of Mormon). It is suggested that Mormon likely copied these pages verbatim from the large plates of Nephi. Apparently, the contemporary historian, probably Nephi in this instance, used the poetic form of chiasmus to record the events of an extraordinary year in the annals of his people. Using chiasmus would also insure against additions to or deletions from the text, since any alteration would be strikingly apparent.

The chiasmic diagram is as follows:

a peace (verse 7)

b freedom of travel and trade in both lands (verses 7-8)

c rich (verse 9)

d gold, silver, precious metals (verse 9)

e south (verses 10)

f Lehi (verse 10)

g north (verse 10)
 h Mulek (verse 10)
 i son of Zedekiah (verse 10)
 i' the Lord (verse 10)
 h' Mulek (verse 10)
 g' north (verse 10)
 f' Lehi (verse 10)
 e' south (verse 10)
 d' gold, silver, precious ores (verse 11)
 c' rich (verse 11)
 b' prosperity in both lands (verses 12-13)
 a' peace (verse 13)

The center of this chiasm involves two individual words. Just as divine names often appear at the center of biblical chiasms, at the very apex of this passage, the words Zedekiah and Lord stand parallel to each other. The parallelism between these two names is intriguing. The root, Zedek, in Hebrew means just or righteous. The suffix -iah is the same as the theophoric suffix, -yah meaning Lord (YHWH). Thus, the central chiasmic structure in Helaman 6:10 actually would have worked better and would have been more obvious in Hebrew (or its related Nephite dialect) than in the English translation. It would have consisted of “righteous Lord” and “Lord.”

Why was chiasmus used here? Because the spread of peace and prosperity is the major theme in this scriptural passage, it is meaningful that names designating Jehovah (Yahweh) are situated in its very center. This suggests that the original scribal record keeper (whoever it was) may have used chiasmus to emphasize the central role that the Lord God had played in providing the posterity of Lehi and Mulek with their numerous blessings and favorable circumstances in their two lands. It should be noted that not only does the center of this chiasm invoke names of God, but at the point where the chiasm reverses its order the Lord is described as bringing “Mulek into the land north, and Lehi into the land south” (Helaman 6:10). In other words, the verse explicitly describes the Lord’s influence in leading these groups of people into their respective locations—lands where they were currently experiencing peace and prosperity. The clear inference, then, is that the Lord was leading them to prosperity.

In addition, the 64th year of the Reign of Judges (27 BC) was a most remarkable year. After more than a decade of hostility between the peoples in the lands of Nephi and Zarahemla, free and open opportunities for travel and trade were suddenly possible. The extraordinary missionary successes, three years earlier, of Nephi and Lehi, the sons of Helaman, facilitated much of this, as Helaman 5 glowingly reports. This would turn out to be a brief period of peace that would end within four years.

The two-way traffic made possible by this brief window of peace and righteous sharing of ethical and religious values (see Helaman 6:4–6) was ideally suited to an inverted chiasmic presentation of these reciprocal interactions—both “in the land south and in the land north” (verse 9) and, emphatically also, “in the north and in the south” (verse 12).

The chiasmic structure of this year’s report also draws double attention to the exceeding prosperity, gains, and riches (Helaman 6:8–9), and the exceeding increases, well-being, and flourishing (verses 12–13) among the people in both of these lands. Indeed, such a symbolic and purposeful (as well as accurate and elegant) approach employed in this record would have deeply impressed Mormon. All of this would have encouraged Mormon to incorporate this annal unredacted (not altered). As Sorenson explained, “[Mormon’s] primary criterion comes through repeatedly in his book. The aim was to ensure that his readers, especially the future inhabitants of the American promised land and particularly Lehi’s descendants, grasp the significance for them of the promise and prophecy given to father Lehi: “Inasmuch as ye will keep my commandments ye shall prosper in the land.” (Jarom 1:9) (Sorenson, “Mormon’s Sources,” 12).

This well-crafted annal efficiently illustrates that central principle. Moreover, messages written in classic forms tend to radiate a sense of agelessness, not only to their immediate audiences but also to future generations. Modern readers, therefore, can also readily relate to the enduring truths enshrined in this chronicler’s report, that peace and prosperity at all times are dependent upon one’s willingness to keep God’s commandments. Notably, this promise was not only extended to Lehi and his posterity, but to “all those who should be led out of other countries by the hand of the Lord” (2 Nephi 1:5) (For a further treatment of this topic, see Hugh Nibley, The Prophetic Book of Mormon, The Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, Volume 8, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1989, 504–508).

Concerning the overall worth of this chiasm, Welch concluded, “Helaman 6:7–13 deserves to take its place among the finest examples of chiasmus found in the Book of Mormon” (Welch, “Significant Recognitions,” 347). Not only is this instance a model example of the ancient poetic form, but the fact that its central message is most impactful in ancient Hebrew is yet another evidence of the Book of Mormon’s authenticity and divine imprimatur (approval). As Welch put it, at several levels—verbally, historically, and theologically—“Joseph Smith would have had no way of consciously concocting this parallelism on his own” (Welch, “Significant Recognitions,” 347).

A parenthetical note of some interest: The use of chiasmus has been pointed out in Hebrew scripture and in the Book of Mormon. It has now also been described in ancient Mayan texts (Allen J. Christenson, “The Use of Chiasmus in Ancient Mesoamerica,” a FARMS reprint).

7 And behold, there was peace in all the land, insomuch that the Nephites did go into whatsoever part of the land they would, whether among the Nephites or the Lamanites.

8 And it came to pass that the Lamanites did also go whithersoever they would, whether it were among the Lamanites or among the Nephites; and thus they did have free intercourse one with another, to buy and to sell, and to get gain, according to their desire.

verse 8 Webster's 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language defines intercourse as, "Communication; commerce; connection by reciprocal dealings between persons or nations, either in common affairs and civilities, in trade, or correspondence by letters."

It is apparent from this verse and a few others in the text (see Mosiah 24:7; 3 Nephi 6:11-12) that trading for goods and services was a common practice among the peoples of the Book of Mormon. It is likely that trade was carried out both on a "national" level (among their own people, the Nephites and Lamanites) and on an "international" level (with people outside Book of Mormon lands).

It is probably important for the student of the book of Mormon to have at least a rudimentary understanding of the nature of trading practices among ancient Mesoamerican peoples since Mesoamerica is the likely venue of the Book of Mormon story, and studies have been done that have demonstrated an "international" trade among the people of Mexico and Central America at the time of the Book of Mormon story. If the reader has an interest in this topic, I would refer you to the helpful article by Allen J. Christenson, "Nephite Trade Networks and the Dangers of a Class Society" (The Book of Mormon: Helaman Through 3 Nephi 8, According To Thy Word, 223-40). Clearly trading practices do have significant impact on the cultural, social, and religious lives of the people who engage in trade. The Book of Mormon does not, of course, describe in any detail the trading customs of its people, but there are allusions and evidences in the text that suggest that trade was important and contributed to changing important events in the Book of Mormon story.

Most communities are unable to live in complete isolation from their neighbors, since those in any one community do not enjoy all the resources and skills necessary to make themselves fully economically independent. Trade with other areas and other peoples is therefore desirable and even necessary in order to obtain goods and services not available locally.

There is nothing inherently wicked about trading with one's neighbors. There are, for example, times when it is likely that trade flourished, and the people prospered in righteousness (4 Nephi 1:23). There are, however, several possible adverse consequences that may occur and likely did indirectly impact negatively the spiritual well-being of the Nephites and Lamanites. These may be summarized as follows:

1. Often the communities who happen to be in position to engage in active trade, because of their favorable strategic locations along the trade routes, are in position to benefit financially to an unprecedented extent. Within these communities there arises a bureaucracy of wealthy and powerful merchants and officials. This results in a newly rich upper class. This newly and rapidly acquired wealth leads to a gap in wealth between those who participate in the business of trade and those who do not. This leads to the appearance of a relatively poor or underprivileged class (3 Nephi 6:12). The elite class often smugly places themselves in rank and privilege above those with less wealth. The rich often are inclined to deprive the poor of their liberties (Helaman 3:36; 6:17, 39; 3 Nephi 6:11-14). It appears that at times in the Book of Mormon, not only were the poor denied access to the benefits of lucrative foreign trade, they were even banned from participation in the religious rituals of the elite class as in the instance of the poor Zoramites (Alma 32:5).

2. Among those ancient Mesoamerican societies involved in active foreign trade, there was a powerful tendency for the head of government to be a king with near totalitarian powers rather than an elected official whose influence was limited by checks and balances of a more democratic government. “Unless a state was ruled by an individual powerful enough to strictly control trade relationships, negotiate international economic and social alliances, and enforce impartial justice in the flow of goods from place to place [a king], foreign merchants could not function effectively” (Christenson, Ibid., 227.) Such a king was also in a position to direct the opportunities for trading to those in his society whom he favored, thus enhancing his influence. The king also had an opportunity to benefit financially to an outrageous extent under these circumstances through the selling of these opportunities. There are several instances in the Book of Mormon when there arose a strong desire on the part of some of the people (sometimes called the “king-men”) to set up a king at the head of government. It is likely that these instances correlated with the spread of trade networks among the Nephites and Lamanites (Alma 51:5-8; 61:8; Helaman 7:4-5; 3 Nephi 3:10; 6:30; 7:1, 12). These king-men were anxious to seize control of the government in order to control the lucrative trading industry. As a result we often find them seeking to establish alliances with the Lamanites, with whom they likely wanted to establish profitable economic ties (Alma 35:2-11; 48:2; 61:8).

3. The establishment of foreign trade was not always a peaceful process. There was considerable wealth at stake and, as might be predicted, unscrupulous people were attracted to the business. One such example was the Gadianton robbers whose motivation was likely primarily economic (see 4 Nephi 1:46 and verses 17-18 of this chapter). In order to benefit fully from the business of foreign trade, they had to seize the reigns of government (Helaman 7:5). It is clear that from their initial appearance in the Book of Mormon their agenda was the acquisition of wealth and power through political control (Helaman 1:9; 2:8; 6:15, 18-19; 9:6). Whenever the Gadianton Society was able to grab control they moved to adopt a class-based society based on wealth (Helaman 6:39).

It is clear that the church came out in opposition to the economic privileges of the wealthy and the resulting neglect or abuse of the lower socioeconomic class. Specifically, the prophets counseled against class-based societies and the institution of kingship. Consequently, the church became a threat to this new economic order.

9 And it came to pass that they became exceedingly rich, both the Lamanites and the Nephites; and they did have an exceeding plenty of gold, and of silver, and of all manner of precious metals, both in the land south and in the land north.

verse 9 The mutual prosperity of both the Nephites and Lamanites because of free trade is a clear cut illustration of an economic law that is well known in our day but unrecognized in Joseph Smith's time. This has been pointed out by Daniel C. Peterson (Studies in Scripture, Volume Eight, Alma 30 to Moroni, 106). Brother Peterson quotes the textbook written by the Nobel laureate economist Paul A. Samuelson (Economics, 8th edition, 668): "There is essentially only one argument for free or freer trade, but it is an exceedingly powerful one, namely: Unhampered trade promotes a mutually profitable international division of labor, greatly enhances the potential real national product of all countries, and makes possible higher standards of living all over the globe."

10 Now the land south was called Lehi and the land north was called Mulek, which was after the son of Zedekiah; for the Lord did bring Mulek into the land north, and Lehi into the land south.

verse 10 When Mosiah, the father of King Benjamin, led the righteous Nephites from the land of Nephi north to the land of Zarahemla about 210 BC, the Book of Mormon lands became divided into the southern land of the Lamanites, the land of Nephi, and the northern Nephite territory, the land of Zarahemla (see the Hypothetical Map of Book of Mormon Lands). Obviously, the names of the lands of the Book of Mormon story evolved with time. The original land of Nephi later became the land of Lehi-Nephi, and at this time in the story it has again become the land of Lehi. Apparently the land of Zarahemla is now referred to as the land of Mulek.

11 And behold, there was all manner of gold in both these lands, and of silver, and of precious ore of every kind; and there were also curious workmen, who did work all kinds of ore and did refine it; and thus they did become rich.

verse 11 The identity of this "precious ore" is unknown. John L. Sorenson has speculated that it might have been iron ore used to make polished mirrors or magnetite used to make compasses (An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, 285).

For many years archaeologists have supposed that metals were not used in Mesoamerica prior to AD 900. The current literature shows that between fifty and one hundred specimens from about forty sites predate AD 900. These known fragments date back to at least 100 BC (John L. Sorenson, "FARMS Update" in Insights [May 1992], 2).

"curious workmen" One meaning of the word curious in Webster's 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language is, "Accurate; careful not to mistake; solicitous to be correct."

12 They did raise grain in abundance, both in the north and in the south; and they did flourish exceedingly, both in the north and in the south. And they did multiply and wax exceedingly strong in the land. And they did raise many flocks and herds, yea, many fatlings.

verse 12 "flocks and herds, yea, many fatlings" The specific animal species referred to here is unknown. A "fatling" is an animal which has been raised and fattened before it is slaughtered for food.

13 Behold their women did toil and spin, and did make all manner of cloth, of fine-twined linen and cloth of every kind, to clothe their nakedness. And thus the sixty and fourth year did pass away in peace.

14 And in the sixty and fifth year they did also have great joy and peace, yea, much preaching and many prophecies concerning that which was to come. And thus passed away the sixty and fifth year.

15 And it came to pass that in the sixty and sixth year of the reign of the judges, behold, Cezoram was murdered by an unknown hand as he sat upon the judgment-seat. And it came to pass that in the same year, that his son, who had been appointed by the people in his stead, was also murdered. And thus ended the sixty and sixth year.

16 And in the commencement of the sixty and seventh year the people began to grow exceedingly wicked again.

verses 15-16 It had been some twenty-four years since Gadianton had been forced to go underground. Yet, we will learn that it is his group of robbers and murderers that has again surfaced and is responsible for the murder of these two chief judges. It is pertinent to note that this group would likely have remained underground and kept in check were it not for the general moral depravity of the people. Unfortunately, as is noted in this verse, "the people [had begun] to grow exceedingly wicked again."

17 For behold, the Lord had blessed them so long with the riches of the world that they had not been stirred up to anger, to wars, nor to bloodshed; therefore they began to set their hearts upon their riches; yea, they began to seek to get gain that they might be lifted up one above another; therefore they began to commit secret murders, and to rob and to plunder, that they might get gain.

verse 17 “they began to set their hearts upon their riches” As we have observed on previous occasions in the Book of Mormon, wealth carries with it major risks to the spiritual well being of those who possess it. Wealth may even come to literally possess the wealthy. Here is one of life’s great ironies: Those with an abundance of the world’s goods tend to become more obsessed with them than those who have to struggle just to make ends meet.

Just what is it about wealth that tends to be erosive of one’s spiritual growth? Perhaps the best general answer is that wealth makes available things of the world that would not be otherwise available including material possessions, comfort or ease (which is erosive of one’s proactive work ethic), and social position. In all of these things of the world, there is a tendency to like them, to appreciate them, to come to depend on them, and to come to want more of them. Another question may be asked: Does any wealthy man ever emerge from his wealth truly unscathed spiritually? Certainly some do, but there can be no doubting the danger of wealth.

“they began to seek to get gain that they might be lifted up one above another” The sequence here is an old familiar refrain. Start with a removal of the Spirit of God. Then with wealth comes the feeling of superiority which results in people’s becoming status-conscious. With a feeling of status, comes a greater appetite for more of the same. Then comes a desperate need to acquire the things that will provide that status. Then, these things come to be all important. Then, any scruples that may stand in the way of their acquisition are pushed aside. Even murder may be permissible as long as one is not found out.

Brother Hugh Nibley observed:

The most calamitous effect of wealth, according to the Book of Mormon, is the inequality it begets in any society. Right at the beginning, Jacob sounds the warning: “Many of you have begun to search for . . . precious ores, in the which this . . . land of promise . . . doth abound most plentifully. And the hand of providence hath smiled upon you most pleasingly . . . and because some of you have obtained more abundantly than that of your brethren ye are lifted up in the pride of your hearts. . . Do ye not suppose that such things are abominable unto him who created all flesh? And the one being is as precious in his sight as the other” (Jacob 2:12-13, 21). Jacob then denounces the “grosser crime” of immorality, which in the Book of Mormon as in secular history is the infallible attendant on the pride of wealth. Inequality is not only the result of wealth-seeking: it is sometimes actually its purpose: “They began to seek to get gain that they might be lifted up one above another” (Helaman 6:17) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 358).

Elder George Q. Cannon taught:

I see young men growing up, and in their growth is the love of wealth, the love of ease and worldly comfort, and the desire and greed for money. I will tell you that the man who has the greed or hunger for money within him, and does not repress it, can not be a Latter-day Saint. A woman who has the love of finery and of earthly ease and comfort within her, and that is the paramount feeling in her heart, can not be a Latter-day Saint. No man can be a Latter-day Saint in truth and in deed who does not hunger after righteousness and the things of God more than he does after everything else upon the face of the earth; and whenever you see or feel this money hunger, this dress hunger, this hunger for worldly ease and comfort in yourselves or others, you may know that the love of God is being withdrawn from you or them, and sooner or later it will be extinguished, and the love of the world will grow until it becomes predominant.

I do not know anything more corrupting than this greed, hunger and lust for the things of this life, or anything more degrading and debasing in its effects, except it be the love or lust for women. As a people we believe that lust for women is, next to murder, shedding innocent blood, the most deadly of all sins. Committing whoredom or adultery destroys the man who indulges in it, and next to that, in my estimation, is the love of wealth—the lusting after the things of this life; and there ought to be, and is in every rightly constituted nature, a constant warfare against this evil. We have this to contend with. We should watch it in our children and in ourselves, and we should endeavor to govern and bring all our feelings and desires into such a position that they can be controlled by the love of the truth (Conference talk October 6, 1873).

18 And now behold, those murderers and plunderers were a band who had been formed by Kishkumen and Gadianton. And now it had come to pass that there were many, even among the Nephites, of Gadianton's band. But behold, they were more numerous among the more wicked part of the Lamanites. And they were called Gadianton's robbers and murderers.

verse 18 Kishkumen is, of course, dead (Helaman 2:9) and Gadianton never specifically surfaces again in Mormon's historical account, yet their legacy lives on!

Perhaps it would be helpful to the reader to digress here for a few moments and comment on a present-day issue raised by opponents of the LDS Church. Some have seen a parallel between Gadianton's robber band and the Masons of Joseph Smith's day.

The so-called "environmentalist theory" of the origin of the Book of Mormon has become very fashionable in anti-Mormon circles today. This theory, simply stated, holds that Joseph Smith absorbed the images, attitudes, and conceptions present in the New York rural culture in which he was reared, and he wove them into the Book of Mormon story.

The proponents of this theory hold that the Gadianton robbers are a classic specific example. In almost comical flailing and remonstrating, some Book of Mormon critics have claimed that the term “secret combinations” was strictly confined to the Masons during an anti-Masonic agitation of the late 1820s (Robert N. Hullinger, Mormon Answer to Skepticism: Why Joseph Smith Wrote the Book of Mormon, 114, notes 30 and 31). They therefore have claimed that the “Gadianton robbers” are merely nineteenth-century Freemasons, transparently disguised. They maintain that Joseph’s “idea” for the Gadianton robbers came from this secret society in Joseph’s nineteenth century environment. They point to several basic parallels between the Gadianton robbers and the Masons of the 1820s: (1) Both groups have secret signs and secret words which aid in mutual identification. (2) Both have oaths for fraternal protection which, when uttered, obliged the members to protect each other. (3) Both claim to have ancient origins. (4) Both groups are referred to as “secret societies” and “secret combinations.” The Book of Mormon refers to Gadianton and his band using these terms, and the newspapers of the early nineteenth century used these same terms to refer to Masonry of that period. (5) Both groups were seen as a threat to the institutions of their native lands.

The claim of these critics seems so ludicrous as to demand no explanation, but consider the following observations:

While Joseph obviously became interested in Masonry in the early 1840s in Nauvoo, there is not even the slightest mention of Masonry in any of his earlier writings. He never talked about it, and indeed seemed to have no concern or interest whatever in it during those early years.

Literally thousands of organizations have had their own signs and words used for the purpose of mutual identification and protection. Even the early Christians had such signs. If an early Christian, for example, wanted to identify himself or herself to a brother or a sister, he or she traced with a stick or a toe in the sand a figure of a fish.

People and their organizations have always had a tendency to try to relate themselves to their pristine origins. It has never been particularly desirable to belong to a novel or new organization. The past is the model. Man always tends to look to the past and claim his roots of authority from the past.

Regarding the fact that both groups were regarded as a threat to the institutions of their day, again, we have a very general or generic parallel. Every organization that is considered revolutionary may be seen as a threat to the institutions of its day.

The terms “secret society” and “secret combination” were certainly terms that were “in the air” during Joseph Smith’s early years. He couldn’t have helped reading and hearing them. Let us never lose sight of the fact that the process of translating the Book of Mormon had nothing to do with Joseph’s culture or his use of English. He translated the entire Book of Mormon by being divinely allowed to read every word from an English text revealed to him.

It must be a discouraging to be one of those who are constantly railing and flailing against the truth.

19 And it was they who did murder the chief judge Cezoram, and his son, while in the judgment-seat; and behold, they were not found.

20 And now it came to pass that when the Lamanites found that there were robbers among them they were exceedingly sorrowful; and they did use every means in their power to destroy them off the face of the earth.

verse 20 Regarding the Lamanites' successful campaign against the secret combination, Ray C. Hillam, has written: "Initially [the robbers] had found sanctuary among the Lamanites, but the Lamanite leaders, being politically embarrassed by their presence, 'did use every means in their power to destroy them. . .' (Helaman 6:20). Their success in removing them from their midst came through (1) the building of the people's faith in their leaders and obedience to law, (2) the vigorous and forceful suppression and pursuit of the robbers, and (3) a conversion program for those Gadianon rebels who would listen (verses 34, 37). Because of this comprehensive strategy by the Lamanites, the band of robbers was utterly destroyed among them" (BYU Studies, volume 15, number 2, 216).

21 But behold, Satan did stir up the hearts of the more part of the Nephites, insomuch that they did unite with those bands of robbers, and did enter into their covenants and their oaths, that they would protect and preserve one another in whatsoever difficult circumstances they should be placed, that they should not suffer for their murders, and their plunderings, and their stealings.

verse 21 Brother Nibley comments:

Determined to "get gain" at any price, the Nephites soon learned that the quickest way to get rich with a minimum risk and the best way to avoid the inconvenience of the law was to belong to a protective society: "The more part of the Nephites . . . did unite with those bands of robbers, and did enter into their covenants and their oaths, that they would protect and preserve one another." With this type of insurance, an individual could operate with impunity "contrary to the laws of their God," enjoying the protection and priority of another system of laws—the rules of the society or corporation (verses 23-24). This system, Helaman tells us, went right back to the beginning of the race, and took root among the Nephites at the time when they "did trample under their feet the commandments of God . . . and did build up unto themselves idols of their gold and silver" (verse 31). It was not idols, please note, but the gold and silver itself that they worshipped (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 364).

22 And it came to pass that they did have their signs, yea, their secret signs, and their secret words; and this that they might distinguish a brother who had entered into the covenant, that whatsoever wickedness his brother should do he should not be injured by his brother, nor by those who did belong to his band, who had taken this covenant.

verse 22 Brother Nibley continues:

The Gadianton Protective Association soon became the biggest business in America! Card-carrying members (those who knew the secret signs and words—verse 22) could do about anything they wanted “contrary to the laws of their country and also the laws of their God” (Helaman 6:23), and thus acquire unlimited wealth and power. Nevertheless, we must not think of the protective association as a lawless outfit. Far from it! They operated with great integrity, instructing their members in all the company rules and disciplining them in accordance with those rules (verse 24). For them the laws of the land were supplanted by this new code of laws (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 6, 383).

verses 21-22 We may study these verses to learn some of the important characteristics of Satan’s covenants with man (for some other key features of these evil covenants, see the commentary for Helaman 1:11-12; 6:26, 30). These features are:

1. Anarchy (a society without government or laws)—“that they should not suffer for their murders, and their plunderings, and their stealings.” Members of this wicked covenant order have a total disregard for the law and for anyone or anything placed over them. They are rebellious and defiant. They seek to produce political and social chaos. When government and the law of the land begins to crumble under their influence and fail to provide adequate protection for the people, those without the evil covenant order feel they have to join with the wicked in order to survive.

2. Extreme humanism—“that they would protect and preserve one another in whatsoever difficult circumstances they should be placed.” The people look to other mortals (instead of God) for sustenance and security.

3. Counterfeiting the Lord’s system of covenants—“they did have their signs, yea, their secret signs, and their secret words; and this that they might distinguish a brother who had entered into the covenant.” Satan’s covenants include a blasphemous counterfeit of the Lord’s signs and tokens. There is also a brotherhood, and though it will not endure, it is a replica of the priesthood brotherhood that exists in the Lord’s church. Satan’s brotherhood actually quickly becomes a form of bondage since once a person is in, it is difficult and unsafe to get out.

23 And thus they might murder, and plunder, and steal, and commit whoredoms and all manner of wickedness, contrary to the laws of their country and also the laws of their God.

24 And whosoever of those who belonged to their band should reveal unto the world of their wickedness and their abominations, should be tried, not according to the laws of their country, but according to the laws of their wickedness, which had been given by Gadianton and Kishkumen.

verse 24 Members of this secret band operated by the rules of their organization and “not according to the laws of their country,” which they felt were too confining.

25 Now behold, it is these secret oaths and covenants which Alma commanded his son should not go forth unto the world, lest they should be a means of bringing down the people unto destruction.

26 Now behold, those secret oaths and covenants did not come forth unto Gadianton from the records which were delivered unto Helaman; but behold, they were put into the heart of Gadianton by that same being who did entice our first parents to partake of the forbidden fruit—verses 25-26 When Alma the younger passed the records along to his son Helaman, Helaman learned that the secret works of darkness were had among the Jaredite peoples. Apparently, the blueprint for these wicked secret combinations—their oaths, their covenants, their agreements, their signs, and their secret abominations—were found upon the twenty-four plates upon which Ether had recorded the record of his people. Alma warned his son to keep this part of the Jaredite record from the people lest they “fall into darkness also and be destroyed” (Alma 37:21-32). We know that Helaman was diligent in following this instruction of his father. How then were the secrets of this secret combination passed along from the Jaredites to the descendants of Lehi? Did Gadianton really receive them anew from Satan by revelation? It is more likely that they were passed along in more ordinary ways. John L. Sorenson has addressed this topic:

The Nephite secret combination pattern is obviously very similar to what had been present among the Jaredites. Was there a historical connection? It is true that Alma instructed his son Helaman not to make known to their people any contents of Ether’s record that might give them operating procedures for duplicating the secret groups (see Alma 37:27-29). A later writer says that it was the devil who “put into the heart” of Gadianton certain information of that sort (see Helaman 6:26). Yet an efficient alternative explanation of how the later secret groups came to look so much like those of the Jaredites is direct transmission of the tradition through survivors of the Jaredites to the people of Zarahemla and thus to Gadianton. This process probably would have been unknown to Alma or other elite Nephite writers, who must have had little to do directly with the mass of “Mulekite” folk. Support for the idea comes from a statement by Giddianhi, one-time “governor” of the Gadianton organization. Their ways, he claimed, “are of ancient date and they have been handed down unto us” (3 Nephi 3:9) (Journal of Book of Mormon Studies: “When Lehi’s Party Arrived in the Land, Did They Find Others There”, volume 1, Fall 1992, 21).

“by that same being who did entice our first parents” Here is implied another characteristic of Satan’s evil covenants, that of false promises. Satan entices by offering “anything in this world” if people will by follow him. He promises further that any worldly thing can be had without guilt or fear of punishment. Yet it is this worldliness which leads one away from the greatest eternal reward and into the curse of captivity to the devil.

27 Yea, that same being who did plot with Cain, that if he would murder his brother Abel it should not be known unto the world. And he did plot with Cain and his followers from that time forth.

verse 27 The brief biblical account of Cain and Abel in Genesis 4 contains nothing of the manner in which Cain entered into a secret covenant with Satan by which Cain became Master Mahan, master of the great secret that he could murder and get gain; thus giving rise to secret combinations on the earth. These truths were obviously contained on the brass plates, Mormon's source for this material. Also we have had it restored to us today by revelation to Joseph Smith as he wrote his inspired revision of the Bible (see Moses 5).

verses 26-27 These verses contain characters and events that we might well take for granted and pass right on by. These characters are Adam and Eve, Cain, and Satan, and the events are the transgression of Adam and Cain's murdering Abel. It is important to know that sophisticated Bible scholars today feel that these were not characters that actually existed and events that actually occurred. Rather they have concluded that these characters and these incidents are merely myths and legends of an ancient culture (Interpreter's Bible, 1:484, 520). Yet the Book of Mormon confirms and re-confirms that fact that these characters did actually live and that these events literally did occur.

Other analogous events and characters, that intellectual Bible scholars explain in mythological terms and which the Book of Mormon validates, include the story of the tower of Babel (see verse 28; Interpreter's Bible, 1:562), Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (Helaman 3:30; 8:17; Interpreter's Bible, 1:442-43), and Moses's parting the Red Sea (Helaman 8:11; Interpreter's Bible, 1:834-35).

28 And also it is that same being who put it into the hearts of the people to build a tower sufficiently high that they might get to heaven. And it was that same being who led on the people who came from that tower into this land; who spread the works of darkness and abominations over all the face of the land, until he dragged the people down to an entire destruction, and to an everlasting hell.

verse 28 Commenting on this verse, Elder Neal A. Maxwell wrote: "These . . . words tell us who the architect of the tower was and how he caressed mortal egos of his clients for his own purposes. He has not lost that skill" (Plain and Precious Things, 85).

29 Yea, it is that same being who put it into the heart of Gadianton to still carry on the work of darkness, and of secret murder; and he has brought it forth from the beginning of man even down to this time.

30 And behold, it is he who is the author of all sin. And behold, he doth carry on his works of darkness and secret murder, and doth hand down their plots, and their oaths, and their covenants, and their plans of awful wickedness, from generation to generation according as he can get hold upon the hearts of the children of men.

verse 30 “doth hand down their plots, and their oaths, and their covenants, and their plans of awful wickedness, from generation to generation” Wickedness often carries on from one generation to the next by “false traditions” that are difficult to break. If wickedness is already established among a people, Satan’s job is greatly facilitated as he seeks to have his secrets and methods passed on.

“according as he can get hold upon the hearts of the children of men” Satan’s power and influence depends completely upon the acquiescence of those whom he would attempt to lead. We possess the power to crush him, while he can only bruise us—but only if we allow him to do so.

31 And now behold, he had got great hold upon the hearts of the Nephites; yea, insomuch that they had become exceedingly wicked; yea, the more part of them had turned out of the way of righteousness, and did trample under their feet the commandments of God, and did turn unto their own ways, and did build up unto themselves idols of their gold and their silver.

verses 30-31 Just what is the precise role played by Satan in leading a man down to hell? In what way is he the “author of all sin”? It has been suggested that perhaps Satan gets too much of the blame for a man’s failure to respond to spiritual promptings.

Perhaps the man himself is largely to blame. After all, is it not true that the designer of this great mortal experience with all its challenges and opportunities for both spiritual growth and spiritual deterioration was, in fact, God himself and not Satan? And is it not also true that within each of the children of God there is an element of the so-called “natural self” or the “natural man”—that side of each man that possesses a propensity, hidden or overt, to respond to the worldly influences that we encounter during this mortal testing period? Certainly, Satan did not have any role in creating men with the characteristics they have always possessed. Even if Satan did not exist, there would still be evil in God’s universe because in each man exists the potential for pride, disobedience, lustfulness, and worldliness. Indeed, while Satan may function as the cheerleader, the facilitator, the role model for wickedness, he did not create it. He is not the inventor of the “natural self” within each of us. Who did create it then? Was it God? Would God or could God ever create something evil? Certainly not. Whence cometh evil in God's universe then? It seems likely that from the time of man's most elementary and primitive state, when he existed as an intelligence—that primordial essence of each of individual—there existed a potential for both good and evil, obedience and disobedience. God did not create the intelligences; indeed they have co-existed with God forever (D&C 93:29; Abraham 3:18). They have always existed, a fact that defies human understanding. From the moment they were swept up into our Father in Heaven's round of creation they began to test themselves against the eternal law. They each possessed agency. Each intelligence also had a "natural self." Each was therefore inclined to do the easy and comfortable thing and not the more difficult thing. From the earliest time we can imagine, spiritual growth resulted from doing the more difficult and challenging thing—from obeying God's commandments. Some intelligences were more obedient and some less so. When it came time for the spiritual creation or spirit birth, when all intelligences were embodied with a body of spirit matter, some were honored to be embodied with bodies after the image of their heavenly parents, and some were not.

Later on, among those who were spiritual offspring of our heavenly parents in the premortal world, there eventually appeared a great rift. Some were more adherent to God's plan while others forfeited forever their opportunity to be born on earth with a mortal body and continue their progress toward godhood. They were cast out of heaven. Lucifer was their leader, their provocateur, their agitator, but certainly he was not responsible for the evil, "natural" tendencies of his followers.

What then is Satan's part in all of this? Just how does he function? What techniques does he employ? Does he have free access to men's hearts, or does he operate with significant restrictions? Is his role in influencing the thoughts and behavior of men in any way comparable to that of the role of the Spirit of God?

It is true that this earth's mortal obstacle course, with all of its opportunities, challenges, and pitfalls, is just as God would have it. It provides for each individual born into mortality a fitting and proper test of his mettle, and an opportunity to either succeed or fail, based on that individual's own merits, in returning again to the presence of our heavenly parents. By virtue of God's plan for us, we each have the inalienable right to exercise our agency while we are here on earth. Satan cannot interfere with that right, and God also will not, and actually cannot, interfere with our right to choose. On literally thousands of occasions, here in mortality, we will each have an opportunity to choose good or choose evil. The choice is entirely our own. The choosing of good is inevitably more difficult—more challenging. It requires strength of character. It is in the choosing, that we enable either the Holy Spirit or Satan to prompt us. The role of the Spirit and that of Satan are, in a curious way, analogous, but in diametrically opposite directions.

There are perhaps two specific parts or roles Satan plays in pulling a man down spiritually:

1. Through his ministrations here on earth, he has managed to create a setting where there the evil and purely worldly influences are abundantly and widely advertised. Worldliness is made easily available to all. That worldliness that entices, tempts, and allures is all around us—it is ubiquitous. One need not venture far without encountering myriad opportunities to commit serious sins.

2. His second, and perhaps his most influential role in defeating a man's spiritual resolve is put into action only when a man, faced with the decision to either obey a commandment or to cave in to his natural self and commit sin decides on the latter. Satan is powerless when we obey. It is when we chose to sin that his influenced on us begins. Choosing evil or committing sin not only insulates us from the Spirit of God, but it also renders us more responsive to the whisperings of the devil. As we choose evil he will comfort and affirm us in that chosen path. If sin produces in us discouragement and a low spiritual self esteem, he will attempt to provide us with abundant rationalizations, self-justifications, and reasons why we should not worry. His ministrations will provide us with reassurances that we are "all right," and "it's okay to go ahead and sin again." He will try to instill in us a specious pride in our own strength, a self-sufficiency, and a fierce independence. He would teach us that we need not be reliant on anyone. We can and should stand on our own and not seek or accept counsel from others. Who are they, after all, to presume to teach us anything? At any rate, others are only competitors who would seek to lift themselves at our expense. Humility, Satan would suggest, is not a virtue; rather it is a weakness. He would have us become cynical about any need, on our part, to repent. One might well hear him say, "Are you a child or an adult? Do you need someone telling you what to do, or are you mature enough to choose for yourself? Both of you are old enough—you are two consenting adults; what you choose to do in the privacy of your bedroom is nobody's business. You're not hurting anyone else. Go ahead and do what you want."

Thus we see clearly the nature of Satan's ministrations or "temptations." The farther we go with him down his pathway, the more difficult it is to turn back. As we place ourselves more firmly in his grasp, new and evil ideas may occur to us. He instills these ideas, and in this way, he becomes the "author of all sin." Ultimately his road leads away from our intended and eternal celestial home and toward eternal captivity.

On the other hand, when a righteous choice is made, we make it possible for the Spirit of God to make contact. We also block the potential line of communication between us and Satan. The Spirit's ministrations will allow us to experience true joy and lasting satisfaction. We will be prompted to love, rather than resent, others. We will view others as our fellow mortal sojourners as individuals just like ourselves, struggling to achieve their spiritual goals in this difficult world. We will be imbued with a desire to help others whenever it is possible. We will also become inclined, as we respond to the Spirit, to accept and love ourselves in spite of our occasional failings. We will sense the love and concern of others and are grateful to receive their help whenever it is needed. We also become keenly aware of the love of our Father in heaven and of our Savior for us. We are lifted by it and inclined to repent of our “natural” inclinations in order to please the Father and Son and draw closer to them.

Both Satan and the Holy Spirit have limited access to us, and that access is determined exclusively by us. It is true that each of us possesses, as a free gift at our birth, a small yearning for eternal and spiritual things. This is actually a subtle tendency possessed by all men to respond to the promptings of the Holy Ghost and is referred to as the “spirit of Christ” or the “light of Christ.” This free gift may prove to be an invaluable influence even in the life of the sinner in serving to invite him back to the road to the celestial kingdom. The sinner, over time, however, may completely “block” or neutralize this subtle gift as he responds repeatedly to Satan’s attempts to influence him. He may then completely lose his ability to respond to the Spirit, but will increase in his ability to hear clearly the promptings of Satan. For a more complete discussion of the “natural” and “spiritual” self each of us possesses, and for further discussion of the Role of Satan in our lives, see the following chapters in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine: (1) volume 1, chapter 5, The “Natural Self” and “Spiritual Self,” (2) volume 1, chapter 6, The Gospel and the Two Natures of Man, and (3) volume 1, chapter 16, The Role of Satan.

verse 31 “they . . . did turn unto their own ways, and did build up unto themselves idols of their gold and their silver” Money was the name of the game, the ultimate motivation.

32 And it came to pass that all these iniquities did come unto them in the space of not many years, insomuch that a more part of it had come unto them in the sixty and seventh year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi.

33 And they did grow in their iniquities in the sixty and eighth year also, to the great sorrow and lamentation of the righteous.

34 And thus we see that the Nephites did begin to dwindle in unbelief, and grow in wickedness and abominations, while the Lamanites began to grow exceedingly in the knowledge of their God; yea, they did begin to keep his statutes and commandments, and to walk in truth and uprightness before him.

35 And thus we see that the Spirit of the Lord began to withdraw from the Nephites, because of the wickedness and the hardness of their hearts.

verse 35 “because of the wickedness and the hardness of their hearts” See the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

36 And thus we see that the Lord began to pour out his Spirit upon the Lamanites, because of their easiness and willingness to believe in his words.

verse 36 President Spencer W. Kimball, always an enthusiastic supporter of the Native American groups, believed that the effects of this pouring out of the Lord’s Spirit has had an enduring effect on the “Lamanites” of today: “Lamanites show great devotion. The converted Lamanite is devout. Few ever apostatize. Some lose their way as they partake of the worldliness about them, but generally the children of Lehi of the twentieth century have inherited that grace and ability to believe like their ancestors of the long ago. We read in Helaman 6:36: “And thus we see that the Lord began to pour out his Spirit upon the Lamanites, because of their easiness and willingness to believe in his words” (The Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball, 178).

Today, we understand that most all of the “native Americans”—the “American Indians” are probably not descendants of the Book of Mormon peoples. Oh, that all of the American Indians were like unto the Lamanites described in Helaman 6.

37 And it came to pass that the Lamanites did hunt the band of robbers of Gadianton; and they did preach the word of God among the more wicked part of them, insomuch that this band of robbers was utterly destroyed from among the Lamanites.

verse 37 The Lamanites put into effect a comprehensive plan for ridding themselves of the Gadianton band. It included (1) the building of their people’s faith in God and in his statutes. Since these were intimately related to the laws of the land, they also acquired faith in their governmental leaders (verse 34). (2) the vigorous and forceful pursuit and eradication of the robbers, and (3) a conversion program for those Gadianton rebels who would listen. Because of this comprehensive strategy by the Lamanites, the “band of robbers was utterly destroyed from among [them].”

38 And it came to pass on the other hand, that the Nephites did build them up and support them, beginning at the more wicked part of them, until they had overspread all the land of the Nephites, and had seduced the more part of the righteous until they had come down to believe in their works and partake of their spoils, and to join with them in their secret murders and combinations.

verse 38 The greater part of the Nephites had been reduced to believing “in their works” and partaking “of their spoils.” In other words, the Nephites began to share in the ill-gotten gain of the Gadianton robbers including their money and material possessions.

39 And thus they did obtain the sole management of the government, insomuch that they did trample under their feet and smite and rend and turn their backs upon the poor and the meek, and the humble followers of God.

verses 38-39 Ray C. Hillam observed, “The Nephites had . . . become particularly vulnerable to infiltration and subversion by the Gadianton rebels. Being soft and permissive, they were soon politically seduced, even ‘the righteous until they had come . . . to believe in their [the rebels’] works and partake of their spoils, and to join with them.’ And ‘they [the Gadianton leaders] did obtain the sole management of the government’ of the Nephites (Helaman 6:38-39) and ‘usurped the power and authority of the land’ (Helaman 7:4)” (BYU Studies, volume 15, Number 2, 217).

verse 39 Brother Nibley wrote:

If the reader has imagined to himself the Gadianton band as abandoned wretches or street Arabs lurking in dark alleys and fleeing from the light of day in dingy and noisome hideouts, let him disabuse his mind of such a concept. They were a highly-respected concern that made their handsome profits by operating strictly within the letter of the law, as they interpreted and controlled it. They were the government, the well-to-do, the respectable, and the law-abiding citizens (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 6, 385).

40 And thus we see that they were in an awful state, and ripening for an everlasting destruction.

41 And it came to pass that thus ended the sixty and eighth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi.

Helaman Chapter 7

The Prophecy of Nephi, the son of Helaman—God threatens the people of Nephi that he will visit them in his anger, to their utter destruction except they repent of their wickedness. God smiteth the people of Nephi with pestilence; they repent and turn unto him. Samuel, a Lamanite, prophesies unto the Nephites. Comprising chapters 7 to 16 inclusive.

This headnote or superscription, written by the prophet Mormon, contains a sentence that arguably doesn't quite belong here. It is the sentence "Samuel, a Lamanite, prophesies unto the Nephites." It doesn't quite belong because it is redundant—it is repeated by Mormon in a headnote for Helaman 13 which is a more appropriate location. The prophet Samuel's preaching is reported in Helaman chapters 13-16. This minor disjuncture may have been due to the exigencies of time and circumstances that must have plagued Mormon in abridging the many records in his possession. The end for the Nephites was drawing near, and he undoubtedly was feeling the pressure of it all.

The suggestion has been made that it might have been reasonable to divide the book of Helaman, turning the single book into "Helaman" (chapters 1-6 of our present book of Helaman) and "Nephi, son of Helaman" (chapters 7-16).

Scripture Mastery

Helaman 7-9 Nephi prays and preaches from his garden tower. He miraculously visualizes the murder of the chief judge and even identifies his murderer.

1 Behold, now it came to pass in the sixty and ninth year of the reign of the judges over the people of the Nephites, that Nephi, the son of Helaman, returned to the land of Zarahemla from the land northward.

2 For he had been forth among the people who were in the land northward and did preach the word of God unto them, and did prophesy many things unto them;

verse 2 Again, it is likely that the "land northward" is not the land Desolation which is north of the narrow neck of land. Nephi had probably been preaching in the northern part of the former land of Zarahemla—the northern part of the present land of Mulek (see Helaman 6:10 and its commentary). This likely included the land Bountiful.

3 And they did reject all his words, insomuch that he could not stay among them, but returned again unto the land of his nativity.

verse 3 The word nativity means birth.

4 And seeing the people in a state of such awful wickedness, and those Gadianton robbers filling the judgment-seats—having usurped the power and authority of the land; laying aside the commandments of God, and not in the least aright before him; doing no justice unto the children of men;

verse 4 “laying aside the commandments of God, and not in the least aright before him” In Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language, the definition of the word aright is “in a right form; without mistake or crime.” The implication here is that the ethic or rules of conduct of the Gadianton robbers was hardly correct in the eyes of God. They were laying aside God’s commandments, an action that was “not in the least aright” before God.

5 Condemning the righteous because of their righteousness; letting the guilty and the wicked go unpunished because of their money; and moreover to be held in office at the head of government, to rule and do according to their wills, that they might get gain and glory of the world, and, moreover, that they might the more easily commit adultery, and steal, and kill, and do according to their own wills—verse 5 Brother Hugh Nibley writes: “The Gadiantons ‘did obtain the sole management of the government’ [Helaman 6:39] . . . and ‘they governed in the interest of one class alone’ (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 9, 100).

Further:

The Gadiantons knew where the real power lay, and they were careful to fill the judgment seats with their own people who could make and interpret the laws to their own advantage, “letting the guilty and the wicked go unpunished because of their money.” And what could anybody do about it, now they were the law, “held in office at the head of the government, to rule and do according to their wills,” deciding for themselves what was right and wrong and enjoying unlimited power? Nephi was helpless in his high office and looked on “in the agony of his soul” (Helaman 7:6). . . . And yet in all this they considered themselves very righteous—it was all perfectly legal (Helaman 7:5; 8:1-7). It was time for something to happen—a terrible drought at Nephi’s request [will bring] the people to their senses and [break] the Gadianton power (Helaman 11:4-10) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 555).

Still further:

The one thing the Gadianton administration respected was money, and their policy was “to rule and do according to their wills, that they might get gain and glory of the world,” naturally [as mentioned in the previous paragraph] “letting the guilty and the wicked go unpunished because of their money” (Helaman 7:5). To operate with impunity they needed public support: “Ye have united yourselves unto . . . that secret band . . . established by Gadianton!” [Helaman 7:25] cries Nephi to his countrymen. “Yea, wo shall come unto you because of that pride which ye have suffered to enter your hearts, which has lifted you up beyond that which is good because of your exceedingly great riches!" (Helaman 7:25-26) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 364-65).

"Condemning the righteous because of their righteousness" Joseph Fielding McConkie and Robert L. Millet have aptly written:

Wickedness and righteousness have no tolerance for each other. Like light and darkness, they cannot share the same space at the same time. If light is to shine, darkness must flee; if darkness is to reign, the light must give way. Each seeks the victory over the other. Thus, it is that the truly pure, honest, and righteous cannot avoid the bile, spleen, and gall of the wicked (Doctrinal Commentary of the Book of Mormon, Volume III—Alma through Helaman, 367).

6 Now this great iniquity had come upon the Nephites, in the space of not many years; and when Nephi saw it, his heart was swollen with sorrow within his breast; and he did exclaim in the agony of his soul:

7 Oh, that I could have had my days in the days when my father Nephi first came out of the land of Jerusalem, that I could have joyed with him in the promised land; then were his people easy to be entreated, firm to keep the commandments of God, and slow to be led to do iniquity; and they were quick to hearken unto the words of the Lord—

8 Yea, if my days could have been in those days, then would my soul have had joy in the righteousness of my brethren.

verses 7-8 One cannot help being a bit amused here at Nephi's wish and lament. Certainly, in the days of father Lehi and his family there was much good and many who were obedient. There was also much stubbornness and recalcitrance. Isn't it true, for all of us, that at times the past somehow seems easier, more pleasant and more favorable than our present reality? Ralph Waldo Emerson said: "Memories assume pleasing forms as clouds do afar off."

9 But behold, I am consigned that these are my days, and that my soul shall be filled with sorrow because of this the wickedness of my brethren.

10 And behold, now it came to pass that it was upon a tower, which was in the garden of Nephi, which was by the highway which led to the chief market, which was in the city of Zarahemla; therefore, Nephi had bowed himself upon the tower which was in his garden, which tower was also near unto the garden gate by which led the highway.

verse 10 Brother Hugh Nibley has reported the relatively recently-discovered custom of the ancient Hebrews of having special shrines or prayer-rooms in their houses for the purpose of domestic worship. In other places in scripture these have been referred to as "closets and secret places" (Luke 12:3; Alma 34:26). Nephi's tower might well have been such a designated place though it was obviously not secret (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 6, 405).

See also the commentary on “tower” in Omni 1:22.

“in his garden” For decades the prevailing view was that cities with high-density populations did not exist at all in Mesoamerica. More recently, work at places like Teotihuacan and Monte Alban have demonstrated unquestionably that cities in the modern sense were indeed known during the Book of Mormon times. In at least some of these cities, garden areas were cultivated immediately adjacent to single habitation complexes.

“by the highway which led to the chief market” This is the only instance in which the word “market” is used in the Book of Mormon. What is the significance of the description chief market? The adjective “chief” implies that the cities of this time period had more than one market and that one of the markets was either larger or more important than the others. Wallace E. Hunt, Jr. has described evidence that the larger ancient cities of Mesoamerica, the most likely geographic site for the lands of the Book of Mormon, had main or central (chief) markets as well as satellite or smaller markets (“The Marketplace,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, volume 4, number 2, 138-41).

Mormon’s mention in this verse that Nephi was “upon a tower, which was in the garden of Nephi, which was by the highway which led to the chief market” is actually both relevant to the story and historically well attested. Wallace Hunt explained, “If we look at Mesoamerica . . . we find that reference to a market (marketplace) is not only proper but crucial to Mormon’s description of Nephi’s praying and its effect upon the people” (Wallace E. Hunt Jr., “The Marketplace,” in Pressing Forward with the Book of Mormon: The FARMS Updates of the 1990s, ed. John W. Welch and Melvin J. Thorne, Provo UT: FARMS, 1999, 197). According to Eric Thompson, “The present-day markets of highland Guatemala are enchanting, colorful, and thought-provoking, but they are but pale shadows of the markets in pre-Columbian times” (J. Eric S. Thompson, The Rise and Fall of Maya Civilization, 2nd ed., Norman, OK: University of Oklahoma Press, 1966, 222, as cited in Hunt, “The Marketplace,” 97). Although Mesoamerican scholars see the emergence of a more organized market system as taking place after the period of the Book of Mormon, the issue remains uncertain (See Eleanor M. King and Leslie C. Shaw, “Introduction: Research on Maya Markets,” in The Ancient Maya Marketplace: The Archaeology of Transient Space, ed. Eleanor M. King, Tuscon, AZ: The University of Arizona Press, 2015, 27). Morely and Brainerd concluded that “the most important economic institution of the ancient Maya was the centralized market” (Sylvanus G. Morley and George W. Brainerd, The Ancient Maya, 4th ed., Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press, 1983, 249 as cited in Hunt, “The Marketplace,” 97. For further information concerning ancient American markets, see John L. Sorenson, “Nephi’s Garden and Chief Market,” in Reexploring the Book of Mormon: A Decade of New Research, ed. John W. Welch, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1992, 236–238).

Aside from a central or chief market, ancient Mesoamerican cities also had subsidiary markets that, together with the main market, worked as an organized trade network (Sorenson, “Nephi’s Garden and Chief Market,” 237). These market systems were typically coordinated so that on a certain day (or days) of the week, traders from outlying areas would buy and sell their goods at the central market. After this they would exchange these goods with other traders in neighboring market locations, who in turn would transport the goods to outlying settlements (Deborah L. Nichols, “The Merchant’s World: Commercial Diversity and the Economics of Interregional Exchange in Highland Mesoamerica,” in Merchants, Markets, and Exchange in the Pre-Columbian World, ed. Kenneth G. Hirth and Joanne Pillsbury, Washington, D.C.: Dumbarton Oaks Research Library and Collections, 2013, 104; Leslie C. Shaw and Eleanor M. King, “The Maya Marketplace at Maax Na, Belize,” in The Ancient Maya Marketplace, 178).

It is also well known that an extensive network of highways traversed ancient America (See John L. Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex: An Ancient American Book, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2013, 356–357). and some proposed sites for Mesoamerican markets, such as the Maax Na Marketplace in Belize, did indeed have a main road or causeway that led into a central market plaza (Shaw and King, “Market Place at Maax Na,” 177–181). Furthermore, in some Mesoamerican cities “garden areas were cultivated immediately adjacent to single habitation complexes” (Sorenson, “Nephi’s Garden and Chief Market,” 236–237), and low-rising pyramidal towers were enclosed within private family compounds (For information concerning towers, see Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex, 323–325; Kerry Hull, “War Banners: A Mesoamerican Context for the Title of Liberty,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 24, 2015: 106–108. See also Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytic and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 5:121: “Nephi’s tower was almost certainly one of the many low pyramidal structures that archaeologists have found in the majority of Mesoamerican sites from Book of Mormon times on. Those attached to private compounds were lower than the stepped pyramids in public squares used for public rituals, but they were nevertheless similarly constructed, if not nearly so high. Nephi’s tower was low enough to allow easy conversation with the crowd—Helaman 7:12–13. In a family compound, such towers would have been suitable for prayer and communion with God.”). The convergence of these features in ancient Mesoamerica provides a very believable real-world context for Nephi’s public statement.

Prophets in ancient Israel would often stage a creative scene wherein they would act out or symbolically represent a central component of their prophetic message. For example, as John W. Welch explained, “When Jeremiah wanted to impress the people of Jerusalem with his prophecy that they would be yoked into bondage by the Babylonians, he draped himself with thongs and a yoke and thus went forth proclaiming his message of doom (see Jeremiah 27:2–11). Other similar symbolic or parabolic acts performed as prophetic oracles are found in Jeremiah 13:1–11 (hiding a waistcloth), Jeremiah 19:1–13 (smashing a bottle), 1 Kings 11:29–39 (tearing a garment into twelve pieces), 2 Kings 13:15–19 (shooting an arrow), and Isaiah 20:2–6 (walking naked)

It has been suggested that this sermon of Nephi was similarly staged as a prophetic allegory in the form of some kind of mock funeral sermon. This might explain the “great mourning” and “lamentation.” Perhaps the crowd gathered because they were curious to know who had died. In that context he will prophetically announce the death of the chief judge (Helaman 8:27) (John W. Welch, “Was Helaman 7–8 an Allegorical Funeral Sermon?” in Reexploring the Book of Mormon, 239).

Welch suggested eight reasons for similarly seeing Nephi’s prophetic lament as a sort of staged funeral sermon (Welch, “Allegorical Funeral Sermon,” 240–241. See also, Donald W. Parry, “Symbolic Action as Prophecy in the Old Testament,” in Sperry Symposium Classics: The Old Testament, ed. Paul Y. Hoskisson, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book, Religious Studies Center, and Brigham Young University, 2005, 337–355; Menahem Haran, “From Early to Classical Prophecy: Continuity and Change,” Vetus Testamentum 27, Fasc. 4, 1977: 358–397). As people may have been wondering in this case who had died, Nephi asked them, “Why will ye die?” (Helaman 7:17). He then publicly rebuked them for their wickedness and then prophesied concerning the chief judge who had, unbeknownst to the people, just been murdered (Helaman 8:27). Thus, in response to both physical and spiritual death, Nephi conspicuously acted out a poignant funerary lament.

If this event was indeed so staged, then Nephi’s choice to publicly mourn on a private tower next to the highway makes a lot of sense. His whole purpose would have been to make a scene, and the throngs of people on their way to a centralized market (perhaps on an appointed market day) would have provided a sizable audience.

When “the people came together in multitudes” (Helaman 7:11), Nephi was able to deliver the heart of his message as he boldly declared, “And ye have set your hearts upon the riches and the vain things of this world, for the which ye do murder, and plunder, and steal, and bear false witness against your neighbor, and do all manner of iniquity” (verse 21).

The irony of this rebuke would have been stinging, for the people—at that very moment—were likely on their way to buy and sell the riches upon which they had set their hearts and which they were seeking “to get gain that they might be lifted up one above another” (Helaman 6:17).

The news of such a strange and marvelous prophecy would surely have traveled along the same trade network that was otherwise distributing the wealth and riches that were leading to wickedness.

Nephi didn't have a modern conference center with a raised podium and a microphone. He didn't have the internet, television, or radio to transmit his message to his people. Instead, he had a tower next to a highway leading to a market. And while Nephi's message was initially intended for an ancient audience, there can be no doubt that his cry of warning was included for our day.

To modern readers, Moroni stirringly declared, "Behold, I speak unto you as if ye were present, and yet ye are not. But behold, Jesus Christ hath shown you unto me, and I know your doing. And I know that ye do walk in the pride of your hearts . . . For behold, ye do love money, and your substance, and your fine apparel, and the adorning of your churches, more than ye love the poor and the needy, the sick and the afflicted" (Mormon 8:35–37).

For a modern world largely preoccupied with concerns about wealth and materialism, Nephi's prophetic lament remains an instructive and stirring warning against pride, greed, and spiritual indifference.

11 And it came to pass that there were certain men passing by and saw Nephi as he was pouring out his soul unto God upon the tower; and they ran and told the people what they had seen, and the people came together in multitudes that they might know the cause of so great mourning for the wickedness of the people.

12 And now, when Nephi arose he beheld the multitudes of people who had gathered together.

13 And it came to pass that he opened his mouth and said unto them: Behold, why have ye gathered yourselves together? That I may tell you of your iniquities?

14 Yea, because I have got upon my tower that I might pour out my soul unto my God, because of the exceeding sorrow of my heart, which is because of your iniquities!

15 And because of my mourning and lamentation ye have gathered yourselves together, and do marvel; yea, and ye have great need to marvel; yea, ye ought to marvel because ye are given away that the devil has got so great hold upon your hearts.

verse 15 "ye have gathered yourselves together, and do marvel" The gathered Nephites wondered why Nephi was praying for their souls. After all, they considered themselves righteous.

Gerald Hansen, Jr., in commenting on this verse, observed: "When people go to church for status or out of habit, then the teachings of Christ to treat everyone with respect, to have mercy, and to do justly, have little or no effect in the lives of those who profess righteousness. In reality, church-going can be part of the spiritual problem. The intolerant and unjust who have religion have often convinced themselves that God loves them because they do religious things. They are spiritually oblivious, or as God says to the wealthy, lukewarm member of the church in Laodicea, “[thou] knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked” (Revelation 3:17). The Nephites in the book of Helaman are a great example of this phenomenon. When Nephi severely chastised them, they marveled. In spite of their gross wickedness, they were shocked that he thought they were wicked” (“The Terrifying Book of Helaman” in The Book of Mormon: Helaman Through 3 Nephi 8, According To Thy Word, 173-74).

“ye are given away” You have surrendered your will and your agency to the devil.

16 Yea, how could you have given way to the enticing of him who is seeking to hurl away your souls down to everlasting misery and endless wo?

verse 16 “how could you have given way . . .” This literary style is called the prophetic lament. The lament always begins with the word how (see also Isaiah 1:21).

“him who is seeking to hurl away your souls down to everlasting misery and endless wo” Just where is Satan seeking to hurl these souls? This passage realistically refers to the spirit prison, though ultimately Satan desires that many will, at the end, “remain filthy still” (D&C 88:102) and be hurled into outer darkness.

17 O repent ye, repent ye! Why will ye die? Turn ye, turn ye unto the Lord your God. Why has he forsaken you?

verse 17 “Why has he forsaken you?” We are not accustomed to reading that God has forsaken anyone, yet here that seems to be the case. In what way has God forsaken these wicked Nephites? He has withdrawn his Spirit and has left them spiritually adrift. The reader should be assured that in doing this the Lord has not, nor would he ever, violate the law of justice.

18 It is because you have hardened your hearts; yea, ye will not hearken unto the voice of the good shepherd; yea, ye have provoked him to anger against you.

verse 18 “ye have provoked him to anger against you” A thoughtful consideration of the Lord’s anger leads to the conclusion that it consists mainly of a poignant and agonizing disappointment.

19 And behold, instead of gathering you, except ye will repent, behold, he shall scatter you forth that ye shall become meat for dogs and wild beasts.

verse 19 We have discussed previously the reasons why the Lord gathers or scatters a people (see the discussion of the gathering and scattering of Israel in the introductory commentary for 1 Nephi 20). The only circumstances under which the Lord will assist in his peoples' gathering are true repentance and conversion to the gospel of Jesus Christ (Isaiah 43:1-7; Jeremiah 3:12-23; 16:11-21; 1 Nephi 10:14; 2 Nephi 9:2; 10:6-7; 3 Nephi 20:29-33). The dispersion or scattering of a people occur when they apostatize from the truth (Deuteronomy 28:15, 25, 64; Jeremiah 16:11-13; 2 Nephi 6:9-11; 10:5-6; Helaman 7:19).

20 O, how could you have forgotten your God in the very day that he has delivered you?

verse 20 Nephi will answer his own question in the following verse.

“in the very day that he has delivered you” This phrase should be interpreted figuratively and not literally. The Lord's redemption (the result of his atoning suffering and death) to individuals and to groups of individuals is available or offered to the worthy on any day or in any situation.

21 But behold, it is to get gain, to be praised of men, yea, and that ye might get gold and silver. And ye have set your hearts upon the riches and the vain things of this world, for the which ye do murder, and plunder, and steal, and bear false witness against your neighbor, and do all manner of iniquity.

22 And for this cause wo shall come unto you except ye shall repent. For if ye will not repent, behold, this great city, and also all those great cities which are round about, which are in the land of our possession, shall be taken away that ye shall have no place in them; for behold, the Lord will not grant unto you strength, as he has hitherto done, to withstand against your enemies.

23 For behold, thus saith the Lord: I will not show unto the wicked of my strength, to one more than the other, save it be unto those that repent of their sins, and hearken unto my words. Now therefore, I would that ye should behold, my brethren, that it shall be better for the Lamanites than for you except ye shall repent.

verse 23 “it shall be better for the Lamanites than for you except ye shall repent” The implication here is obvious. Those who receive light knowledge are responsible to live in accordance with it. Those who sin after having received knowledge of the truth by revelation bear greater condemnation than those who sin in ignorance (D&C 82:3; Luke 12:48).

24 For behold, they are more righteous than you, for they have not sinned against that great knowledge which ye have received; therefore the Lord will be merciful unto them; yea, he will lengthen out their days and increase their seed, even when thou shalt be utterly destroyed except thou shalt repent.

verse 24 “he will lengthen out their days” The Lamanites will never be completely annihilated, rather a remnant will be preserved even to the latter days (see Helaman 15:15-16).

Hugh Nibley has pointed out that the Lord made distinct and different two-part promises to both the Nephites and the Lamanites:

The Nephites and Lamanites each received a promise in the beginning, and each promise contained two parts, a promise of bliss and a promise of woe, “for this is the cursing and the blessing of God upon the land” (Alma 45:16). . . For the Lamanites the penalty of their backsliding is that they shall be scattered and smitten and driven by the Gentiles; the reward of their faith is that they are to survive all their afflictions and in time become the Lord’s own people again. For the Nephites the promised reward of faith is that nothing on earth can, without their own will and action, in any way ever mar their liberty, security, prosperity, and happiness: “And now there was nothing in all the land to hinder the people from prospering continually, except they should fall into transgression” (3 Nephi 6:5). This tremendous guarantee is matched by a promise of total extinction in case they should fail to comply with the conditions of the contract. Since they never became fully ripe in iniquity as did the Nephites, the Lamanites were allowed to remain in the land, paying for the privilege by taking a terrible beating: “Wherefore, if ye are cursed, behold, I leave my blessing upon you. . . . Because of my blessing the Lord God will not suffer that ye shall perish” (2 Nephi 4:6-7). It was an unconditional promise of survival (Jacob 3:5-9; Helaman 7:24; 15:14-17). No such promise was given the Nephites, and Enos was told that though the Nephites might perish, still the Lamanites would survive to receive his record (Enos 1:13, 16) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 389-90).

“increase their seed” An abundant and righteous posterity is a blessing at times promised to the faithful. We know that Abraham, because of his obedience, was promised a posterity as numerous as “the stars of the heaven, and as the sand upon the sea shore” (Genesis 22:17). This blessing also applies to our dispensation. For those who enter into the new and everlasting covenant of marriage, “this promise is yours also, because ye are of Abraham” (D&C 132:31).

25 Yea, wo be unto you because of that great abomination which has come among you; and ye have united yourselves unto it, yea, to that secret band which was established by Gadianton!

26 Yea, wo shall come unto you because of that pride which ye have suffered to enter your hearts, which has lifted you up beyond that which is good because of your exceedingly great riches!

27 Yea, wo be unto you because of your wickedness and abominations!

28 And except ye repent ye shall perish; yea, even your lands shall be taken from you, and ye shall be destroyed from off the face of the earth.

29 Behold now, I do not say that these things shall be, of myself, because it is not of myself that I know these things; but behold, I know that these things are true because the Lord God has made them known unto me, therefore I testify that they shall be.

verse 29 Nephi, as a prophet, appropriately seals his message with his testimony of the message's divine origin.

1 And now it came to pass that when Nephi had said these words, behold, there were men who were judges, who also belonged to the secret band of Gadianton, and they were angry, and they cried out against him, saying unto the people: Why do ye not seize upon this man and bring him forth, that he may be condemned according to the crime which he has done?

2 Why seest thou this man, and hearest him revile against this people and against our law?

verse 2 These evil judges are asking, “Why do you tolerate this man’s reviling against you and your laws? In response to Nephi’s criticizing the status quo, those with status desired to silence him. They did it by a technique that some might call patriotism. It is actually a false patriotism used by those who wish to put down anyone whom they oppose. The usual tactic is to portray themselves as loyal and patriotic and then cast aspersions on the motives and morals of those with differing ideas. When Nephi spoke out against them, these dishonest judges made it appear that he (Nephi) was the one who was disloyal, charging him with reviling against the people, the law, and the judges.

3 For behold, Nephi had spoken unto them concerning the corruptness of their law; yea, many things did Nephi speak which cannot be written; and nothing did he speak which was contrary to the commandments of God.

verses 2-3 In preaching and warning according to the commandments of God, perhaps Nephi had broken the law of the land. Apparently, there was a law against “revil[ing] against this people and against our law.” If indeed contempt of institutions was a crime, Nephi was guilty, for he had plainly “spoken unto them concerning the corruptness of their law.”

4 And those judges were angry with him because he spake plainly unto them concerning their secret works of darkness; nevertheless, they durst not lay their own hands upon him, for they feared the people lest they should cry out against them.

5 Therefore they did cry unto the people, saying: Why do you suffer this man to revile against us? For behold he doth condemn all this people, even unto destruction; yea, and also that these our great cities shall be taken from us, that we shall have no place in them.

6 And now we know that this is impossible, for behold, we are powerful, and our cities great, therefore our enemies can have no power over us.

verses 4-6 Why did not the judges take matters into their own hands and initiate legal action against Nephi for what they considered treasonable rhetoric against their government? Why did they “durst not lay their hands upon him,” and why did they appeal to the people with the question: “Why do you suffer this man to revile against us”? A possible reason has been suggested by Noel B. Reynolds in his article “Book of Mormon, Government and Legal History” (Encyclopedia of Mormonism, volume 1):

At the time the Nephites abandoned the monarchy, Mosiah instituted a major reform of Nephite procedural law. A system of judges and other officers was instituted; lower judges were judged by a higher judge (Mosiah 29:28); judges were paid for the time spent in public service (Alma 11:3); a standardized system of weights and measures was instituted (Alma 11:4-19); slavery was formally prohibited (Alma 27:9); and defaulting debtors faced banishment (Alma 11:2). There were officers (Alma 11:2) and lawyers who assisted, but their official functions are not clear. It appears that ordinary citizens had sole power to initiate lawsuits (otherwise, the judges would have brought the action against Nephi in Helaman 8:1).

There would yet come a time when the judges would acknowledge no such restraints: “Many . . . who testified of the things pertaining to Christ . . . were taken and put to death secretly by the judges, so that the knowledge of their death came not unto the governor . . . until after their death” (3 Nephi 6:23).

verse 6 “therefore our enemies can have no power over us” Supposedly the Nephites and Lamanites existed at this time in a condition of peace (Helaman 6:34-37). So who were the Nephites’ “enemies”? Might there have been other, non-Lamanite groups which might have considered to be enemies?

7 And it came to pass that thus they did stir up the people to anger against Nephi, and raised contentions among them; for there were some who did cry out: Let this man alone, for he is a good man, and those things which he saith will surely come to pass except we repent;

8 Yea, behold, all the judgments will come upon us which he has testified unto us; for we know that he has testified aright unto us concerning our iniquities. And behold they are many, and he knoweth as well all things which shall befall us as he knoweth of our iniquities; verse 8 “he has testified aright unto us” We have recently above discussed the definition of the word aright. It is “in a right form; without mistake or crime; correctly.”

9 Yea, and behold, if he had not been a prophet he could not have testified concerning those things.

10 And it came to pass that those people who sought to destroy Nephi were compelled because of their fear, that they did not lay their hands on him; therefore he began again to speak unto them, seeing that he had gained favor in the eyes of some, insomuch that the remainder of them did fear.

verses 11-24 In these verses Nephi will cite examples of past prophets' prophesying of Christ hoping to win support for his own prophecies. His argument is that if his hearers reject his words, the words of a living prophet, then they are rejecting the testimonies of such revered prophets as Isaiah, Moses, Zenos, Jeremiah, Lehi, and others.

11 Therefore he was constrained to speak more unto them saying: Behold, my brethren, have ye not read that God gave power unto one man, even Moses, to smite upon the waters of the Red Sea, and they parted hither and thither, insomuch that the Israelites, who were our fathers, came through upon dry ground, and the waters closed upon the armies of the Egyptians and swallowed them up?

12 And now behold, if God gave unto this man such power, then why should ye dispute among yourselves, and say that he hath given unto me no power whereby I may know concerning the judgments that shall come upon you except ye repent?

13 But, behold, ye not only deny my words, but ye also deny all the words which have been spoken by our fathers, and also the words which were spoken by this man, Moses, who had such great power given unto him, yea, the words which he hath spoken concerning the coming of the Messiah.

14 Yea, did he not bear record that the Son of God should come? And as he lifted up the brazen serpent in the wilderness, even so shall he be lifted up who should come.

15 And as many as should look upon that serpent should live, even so as many as should look upon the Son of God with faith, having a contrite spirit, might live, even unto that life which is eternal.

verses 14-15 Here again is a reference to that colorful story of the Lord's setting fiery serpents upon the disobedient Israelites (see the commentary for 1 Nephi 17:41 and for 2 Nephi 25:20). If the reader desires to review this story, please do so in Numbers 21:4-9. Briefly, because of the sins of the Israelites in the wilderness, the Lord sent among them poisonous serpents. These serpents bit many, and, as a result, many died. Moses petitioned the Lord for a way to save his people from these serpents. In response, the Lord commanded Moses to make a serpent of brass and place it on a pole. Whosoever was bitten by a poisonous serpent could be saved from death by looking upon the brass serpent. The serpent, of course, was a type and symbol of Christ.

One of the ways in which the Book of Mormon is "Another Testament of Jesus Christ" is that it testifies that the mortal ministry of Jesus Christ was the fulfillment of prophecy given in Old Testament times. An example of these Old Testament prophecies includes the fact that the law of Moses was given “and all things which have been given of God from the beginning of the world . . . are [for] the typifying of [Christ]” (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 11:4). Examples of these types and prophecies, in addition to the brazen serpent, are: the coming of a prophet like Moses (Deuteronomy 18:15-19; Acts 3:22-23; 1 Nephi 22:20-21); a virgin bearing a son (Isaiah 7:14; Matthew 1:23; 2 Nephi 17:14); and the suffering servant (Isaiah 53; Mark 9:12; Romans 4:25; Mosiah 13:33 - 15:1). The Book of Mormon “establish[es] the truth” (1 Nephi 13:40) of the New Testament’s references to Old Testament prophecies (see John 5:39; Luke 24:27).

16 And now behold, Moses did not only testify of these things, but also all the holy prophets, from his days even to the days of Abraham.

17 Yea, and behold, Abraham saw of his coming, and was filled with gladness and did rejoice.

verse 17 The mortal Christ testified to the Pharisees, “Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day: and he saw it, and was glad” (John 8:56-59). The biblical antecedent of this testimony is not found in our present-day Old Testament. It is, however, found in the Joseph Smith Translation: “It came to pass, that Abram looked forth and saw the days of the Son of Man, and was glad, and his soul found rest, and he believed in the Lord; and the Lord counted it unto him for righteousness” (JST, Genesis 15:12). It is also likely that the “Ephraim Bible”—the brass plates of Laban—contained this reference and was the likely source material for Nephi in this verse.

18 Yea, and behold I say unto you, that Abraham not only knew of these things, but there were many before the days of Abraham who were called by the order of God; yea, even after the order of his Son; and this that it should be shown unto the people, a great many thousand years before his coming, that even redemption should come unto them.

verse 18 “the order of God; yea, even after the order of his Son” These phrases refer to the same priesthood that we would call today the Melchizedek priesthood.

“a great many thousand years before his coming” The traditional chronology of the Irish Anglican archbishop James Ussher (AD 1581-1656), places the fall of Adam at 4,004 BC. To arrive at that number, Ussher worked back from known dates using the data for births and deaths given for the various patriarchs in the text of the book of Genesis. Unfortunately, these numbers are not consistent in the various manuscripts and versions of the Bible, and we have no way of knowing which, if any, of these that have come down to us are accurate, except as they may occasionally appear in modern scripture (see D&C 107:42-53). The question here is whether we ought to regard this phrase as simply hyperbole, or whether, in fact, the fall of Adam and the introduction of the family of man to the earth did occur much earlier than 4,000 BC. Only four thousand years before the coming of Christ does not seem to qualify as “a great many thousand years.” I don’t feel speculation about the age of the earth—and particularly speculation about the duration of the history of the family of man here on earth beginning with Adam and Eve—is entirely appropriate here. It seems certain, however, that the earth’s age is far older than the traditional six, or so, thousand years. In fact, it will not be surprising to find that the creation of this earth began even millions or billions of years ago. It is even possible that the history of family of man here on the earth, is also longer than the six thousand years. See “The Duration of Our Premortal Experience” in volume 1, chapter 3, The Creation, in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine.

19 And now I would that ye should know, that even since the days of Abraham there have been many prophets that have testified these things; yea, behold, the prophet Zenos did testify boldly; for the which he was slain.

verse 19 From reading the Book of Mormon, one might conclude that the two dominant prophetic voices recorded on the brass plates were those of Isaiah and Zenos both of whom died as martyrs.

20 And behold, also Zenock, and also Ezias, and also Isaiah, and Jeremiah, (Jeremiah being that same prophet who testified of the destruction of Jerusalem) and now we know that Jerusalem was destroyed according to the words of Jeremiah. O then why not the Son of God come, according to his prophecy?

verses 19-20 Here is a bit of insight regarding those non-Biblical prophets whose writings were presumably found on the brass plates, Zenos, Zenock, and Ezias. They lived and wrote “since the days of Abraham.” Since Abraham, Isaiah, and Jeremiah are mentioned in chronological order, we might logically assume that the others are also. Thus, it is likely that Zenos, Zenock, and Ezias all lived after the time of Abraham and before the days of Isaiah, and perhaps they lived and ministered in the chronological order just mentioned. Abraham’s birth is thought by Bible scholars to have been about 2167 BC. The birth of Isaiah was about 770 BC. For further information concerning these prophets, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 19:10, 1 Nephi 5:16, and the introductory commentary for Jacob 5.

Verse 20 is the only mention of the prophet Ezias in the Book of Mormon. It is possible that Ezias is the same as the one called Esaias, a contemporary of Abraham, one who is twice mentioned in the revelations given to Joseph Smith (D&C 76:100; 84:12-13).

verse 20 It is notable that the Book of Mormon prophets including Lehi (1 Nephi 5:13; 7:14) had access to some of the writings of Jeremiah who was a contemporary of Lehi’s in Jerusalem. Obviously, these writings of Jeremiah were contained on the plates of brass. Here Nephi indicates that Jeremiah had prophesied of the Messiah’s first coming. However, current texts of Jeremiah do not have clear references to this event, underscoring the observation that in the transmission of the biblical text, parts may have been lost, or that Lehi may have possessed a fuller version. This should not be surprising since ancient evidence both from Dead Sea fragments and from the Septuagint version of Jeremiah suggests that the text of his book has not been well preserved (William J. Adams Jr. “Prophecies of Jeremiah,” Encyclopedia of Mormonism, volume 2).

21 And now will you dispute that Jerusalem was destroyed? Will ye say that the sons of Zedekiah were not slain, all except it were Mulek? Yea, and do ye not behold that the seed of Zedekiah are with us, and they were driven out of the land of Jerusalem? But behold, this is not all—verse 21 We know that all the sons of Zedekiah were not slain. There is even evidence that the surviving son of Zedekiah, Mulek, might be mentioned in the Old Testament. Please review the commentary for Mosiah 25:2.

22 Our father Lehi was driven out of Jerusalem because he testified of these things. Nephi also testified of these things, and also almost all of our fathers, even down to this time; yea, they have testified of the coming of Christ, and have looked forward, and have rejoiced in his day which is to come.

verse 22 In trying to convince the people of Zarahemla to rectify the wickedness of their laws, Nephi appealed in this verse to the testimonies of those who long before had “testified of the coming of Christ.” By doing so, he reminded the people of the laws of God. Corrupt judges were attempting to have Nephi put on trial (verse 1), but Nephi turned the tables on them by symbolically bringing them to trial instead (John W. Welch, The Legal Cases in the Book of Mormon, Provo, UT: BYU Press and the Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2008, 325).

Because they had rejected the Law of Moses for their own unjust laws, the first witness he brought against them was Moses himself. After all, who could judge better than Moses if his laws were being negated? Nephi reminded them of the miracles Moses performed by the power of God (verse 11) and then pointed them toward the most important part of the Law of Moses: Christ. “Yea, did he not bear record that the Son of God should come? And as he lifted up the brazen serpent in the wilderness, even so shall he be lifted up who should come” (verse 14).

Nephi then called his second witness, the Psalms, which he quotes in verse 15 (emphasis added): “And as many as should look upon that serpent should live, even so as many as should look upon the Son of God with faith, having a contrite spirit, might live, even unto that life which is eternal.” Here Nephi combined his comments on Moses with an allusion to Psalm 34:18–19, talking about how Christ saved the people in the wilderness, and can still save them now: “The Lord is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart; and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit.”

His next witness was Abraham, the father of the covenant between Jehovah and his people: “Yea, and behold, Abraham saw of his coming, and was filled with gladness and did rejoice” (verse 17). This statement may have a common background with the version of Genesis 15:2 found in the Joseph Smith Translation and evidently on the plates of brass: “And it came to pass, that Abram looked forth and saw the days of the Son of Man, and was glad, and his soul found rest” (Robert J. Matthews. “The Joseph Smith Translation—Historical Source and Doctrinal Companion to the Doctrine & Covenants,” Ninth Annual Church Educational System Religious Educators’ Symposium, Salt Lake City, UT: The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1985, 22). Nephi then listed Zenos, Zenock, Ezias, Isaiah, and Jeremiah in quick succession. This list gave him the symbolically significant number of seven named witnesses from the plates of brass to support his witness of Christ (See Corbin Volluz, “A Study in Seven: Hebrew Numerology in the Book of Mormon,” BYU Studies Quarterly 53, no. 2, 2014: 57–83).

Nephi then moved from the Old World to the New World, using the very people in the audience as witnesses against themselves: “Now we know that Jerusalem was destroyed according to the words of Jeremiah. O then why not the Son of God come, according to his prophecy? And now will you dispute that Jerusalem was destroyed? Will ye say that the sons of Zedekiah were not slain, all except it were Mulek? Yea, and do ye not behold that the seed of Zedekiah are with us, and they were driven out of the land of Jerusalem?” (verses 20–22). It is important to note that Nephi is in Zarahemla at this point, as noted in Helaman 7:10, and that Zarahemla is the city where the Mulekites originally settled as noted in Omni 1:14. Therefore, it is likely that many of these people would be at least partially related to the Mulekites.

Because some people in the audience were descendants of Mulek, who left Jerusalem while it was being destroyed, they provided living witnesses to the truthfulness of Jeremiah’s prophecy concerning the destruction of Jerusalem (cf. Omni 1:15). And if Jeremiah’s prophecy about the destruction of Jerusalem was correct, Nephi argued, surely his prophecy about the coming of Christ was also correct.

Nephi continued drawing from New World prophets, citing Lehi, Nephi, and those who followed them as additional witnesses. Finally, he called the heavens and the earth to witness what he had said. “In this ye have sinned, for ye have rejected all these things, notwithstanding so many evidences which ye have received; yea, even ye have received all things, both things in heaven, and all things which are in the earth, as a witness that they are true” (verse 24). This juridical (pertaining to legal matters) move likely reflects the ancient Israelite practice manifest in Isaiah 1:2, “Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth: for the Lord hath spoken, I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me.” Nephi’s indictment and calling of witnesses forms a superb example of what has been identified by many biblical scholars as a “prophet lawsuit” (See Kirsten Nielsen, Yahweh as Prosecutor and Judge, Sheffield, England: JSOT, 1978; John W. Welch, “Benjamin’s Speech as a Prophetic Lawsuit,” in John W. Welch and Stephen D. Ricks, eds., King Benjamin’s Speech: “That Ye May Learn Wisdom,” Provo: FARMS, 1998, 225–32. Biblical passages regularly identified as utilizing the prophetic lawsuit literary form include Isaiah 1:2–3, 18–20; Jeremiah 2:4–13; Micah 6:1–8; Hosea 4:1–3; and Malachi 3:5).

Helaman 8 begins with the people’s nearly bringing Nephi to trial before local judges. But throughout this chapter, Nephi successfully called higher witnesses to testify against them before God instead. He formally put the people on divine trial, and pronounced them worthy of “everlasting destruction” but suspended the judgment if they would repent (verse 26).

Nephi knew that “at the mouth of two witnesses, or three witnesses, shall he that is worthy of death be put to death” (verse 6) (John W. Welch, The Legal Cases in the Book of Mormon, Provo, UT: BYU Press and the Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2008, 242). But Nephi emphatically called many more than the required number of witnesses, urging the people to reject their flawed legal system and return to the laws authorized by God. That law was grounded in the scriptures to which he referenced so frequently (See also 2 Nephi 27:14: “Wherefore, the Lord God will proceed to bring forth the words of the book; and in the mouth of as many witnesses as seemeth him good will he establish his word; and wo be unto him that rejecteth the word of God!”).

There are times in the Book of Mormon when prophets needed to stand up and criticize negative trends they saw around them. Sometimes, as in Nephi’s case, they stood alone. Many people might find themselves in a similar position in today’s world. But Nephi reminded readers of the Book of Mormon that they are never really alone in pushing back against corruption within society. Modern readers can, like Nephi, appeal to the scriptures and personal revelation in resisting any negative trends around them.

23 And behold, he is God, and he is with them, and he did manifest himself unto them, that they were redeemed by him; and they gave unto him glory, because of that which is to come.

verse 23 The pronouns “them” and “they” in this verse refer back to Lehi, Nephi, and “our fathers” in the previous verse.

“he is God” Christ is indeed God. Elder Bruce R. McConkie wrote: “If we are to envision our Lord’s true status and glory, we must come back to the pronouncement of pronouncements, the doctrine of doctrines, the message of messages, which is that Christ is God” (Promised Messiah, 98).

24 And now, seeing ye know these things and cannot deny them except ye shall lie, therefore in this ye have sinned, for ye have rejected all these things, notwithstanding so many evidences which ye have received; yea, even ye have received all things, both things in heaven, and all things which are in the earth, as a witness that they are true.

verse 24 “seeing ye know these things and cannot deny them except ye shall lie” Nephi is able to discern the hearts of some in his audience. The Spirit whispers to him that some of his hearers are sinning against the “pricks” of their consciences.

25 But behold, ye have rejected the truth, and rebelled against your holy God; and even at this time, instead of laying up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where nothing doth corrupt, and where nothing can come which is unclean, ye are heaping up for yourselves wrath against the day of judgment.

verse 25 “ye are heaping up for yourselves wrath against the day of judgment” This is a colorful way of saying that those who rebel against God in this life shall feel the wrath of God at the time of the final judgment.

26 Yea, even at this time ye are ripening, because of your murders and your fornication and wickedness, for everlasting destruction; yea, and except ye repent it will come unto you soon.

27 Yea, behold it is now even at your doors; yea, go ye in unto the judgment-seat, and search; and behold, your judge is murdered, and he lieth in his blood; and he hath been murdered by his brother, who seeketh to sit in the judgment-seat.

28 And behold, they both belong to your secret band, whose author is Gadianton and the evil one who seeketh to destroy the souls of men.

Helaman Chapter 9

1 Behold, now it came to pass that when Nephi had spoken these words, certain men who were among them ran to the judgment-seat; yea, even there were five who went, and they said among themselves, as they went:

2 Behold, now we will know of a surety whether this man be a prophet and God hath commanded him to prophesy such marvelous things unto us. Behold, we do not believe that he hath; yea, we do not believe that he is a prophet; nevertheless, if this thing which he has said concerning the chief judge be true, that he be dead, then will we believe that the other words which he has spoken are true.

3 And it came to pass that they ran in their might, and came in unto the judgment-seat; and behold, the chief judge had fallen to the earth, and did lie in his blood.

4 And now behold, when they saw this they were astonished exceedingly, insomuch that they fell to the earth; for they had not believed the words which Nephi had spoken concerning the chief judge.

5 But now, when they saw they believed, and fear came upon them lest all the judgments which Nephi had spoken should come upon the people; therefore they did quake, and had fallen to the earth.

6 Now, immediately when the judge had been murdered—he being stabbed by his brother by a garb of secrecy, and he fled, and the servants ran and told the people, raising the cry of murder among them;

verse 6 “he being stabbed by his brother” One might wonder if this murder by stabbing or cutting was not part of the evil covenant Satan had made with his followers in this secret combination. In ancient times covenant making involved symbolic acts and customary rituals. For example, when two parties reached a covenantal agreement, they could close or confirm the agreement by a symbolic act such as cutting the throat of an animal. The animal could then be used as a sacrificial offering, or the meat of the animal could be used as the main course of a feast of celebration. One example in the Book of Mormon where “cutting” comes close to describing a symbolic ritual is found in Alma 46:21-22 when the people rent their garments as a token that they would not forsake the Lord. Satan may have also directed his followers in the secret combinations to use a knife or sword in cutting or stabbing the flesh of their victims.

“by a garb of secrecy” No one had witnessed Seantum killing his brother Seezoram. Cases of unwitnessed murders presented special problems under the law of Moses. Generally speaking, a person could not be convicted of murder on circumstantial evidence, for such was ruled out under Israelite law, which required every fact to be substantiated by the testimony of two eyewitnesses (see Deuteronomy 19:15). While the two-witness rule would seem to be an insurmountable barrier in the way of ever obtaining a conviction in this case, such a heinous crime could not simply be ignored. If a person was found slain in the land and the murderer could not be found, solemn rituals, oaths of innocence, and special purification of all the men in the village had to be performed (see Deuteronomy 21:1-9). Things will turn out differently in Seantum's case, however, for he will soon be exposed in a way that opened the door to an exceptional rule of evidence that justified his conviction.

Nephi will first reveal to the people that Seantum was the murderer, that they would find blood on the skirts of his cloak, and that he would say certain things to them when they told him, "We know that thou are guilty" (see verse 34). Indeed, Seantum will immediately confess his guilt (see verses 37-38). Ordinarily Seantum's confession would not be admissible in a Jewish court of law. In this case, his confession was sufficient. For the explanation of why, see the commentary for verses 35-36 below.

7 And behold the people did gather themselves together unto the place of the judgment-seat—and behold, to their astonishment they saw those five men who had fallen to the earth.

8 And now behold, the people knew nothing concerning the multitude who had gathered together at the garden of Nephi; therefore they said among themselves: These men are they who have murdered the judge, and God has smitten them that they could not flee from us.

9 And it came to pass that they laid hold on them, and bound them and cast them into prison. And there was a proclamation sent abroad that the judge was slain, and that the murderers had been taken and were cast into prison.

10 And it came to pass that on the morrow the people did assemble themselves together to mourn and to fast, at the burial of the great chief judge who had been slain.

verse 10 It is instructive to note that the Nephites, like their Israelite ancestors, fasted in connection with mourning for their dead. In ancient Israel, the day after the death of a political leader was traditionally a day of fasting, mourning, and burial (see 1 Samuel 31:13; 2 Samuel 1:12). The Book of Mormon gives no reason for these fasts, but they may have been to obtain solace for the living rather than mercy for the dead.

11 And thus also those judges who were at the garden of Nephi, and heard his words, were also gathered together at the burial.

12 And it came to pass that they inquired among the people, saying: Where are the five who were sent to inquire concerning the chief judge whether he was dead? And they answered and said: Concerning this five whom ye say ye have sent, we know not; but there are five who are the murderers, whom we have cast into prison.

13 And it came to pass that the judges desired that they should be brought; and they were brought, and behold they were the five who were sent; and behold the judges inquired of them to know concerning the matter, and they told them all that they had done, saying:

14 We ran and came to the place of the judgment-seat, and when we saw all things even as Nephi had testified, we were astonished insomuch that we fell to the earth; and when we were recovered from our astonishment, behold they cast us into prison.

15 Now, as for the murder of this man, we know not who has done it; and only this much we know, we ran and came according as ye desired, and behold he was dead, according to the words of Nephi.

16 And now it came to pass that the judges did expound the matter unto the people, and did cry out against Nephi, saying: Behold, we know that this Nephi must have agreed with some one to slay the judge, and then he might declare it unto us, that he might convert us unto his faith, that he might raise himself to be a great man, chosen of God, and a prophet.

17 And now behold, we will detect this man, and he shall confess his fault and make known unto us the true murderer of this judge.

verse 17 To “detect” in this context means to catch or discover his misdeed.

18 And it came to pass that the five were liberated on the day of the burial. Nevertheless, they did rebuke the judges in the words which they had spoken against Nephi, and did contend with them one by one, insomuch that they did confound them.

19 Nevertheless, they caused that Nephi should be taken and bound and brought before the multitude, and they began to question him in divers ways that they might cross him, that they might accuse him to death—verse 19 “they began to question him in divers ways that they might cross him” Their effort was to try to “cross him,” that is, get him to contradict himself.

20 Saying unto him: Thou art confederate; who is this man that hath done this murder? Now tell us, and acknowledge thy fault; saying, Behold here is money; and also we will grant unto thee thy life if thou wilt tell us, and acknowledge the agreement which thou hast made with him.

verse 20 “Thou art confederate” Here the judges are accusing him by saying, “We know you have an accomplice with whom you plotted this murder.”

21 But Nephi said unto them: O ye fools, ye uncircumcised of heart, ye blind, and ye stiffnecked people, do ye know how long the Lord your God will suffer you that ye shall go on in this your way of sin?

verse 21 The “uncircumcised of heart” are those who have spiritual impurities which need to be cut away. These fail to yield their hearts to God. It was father Lehi’s contemporary, Jeremiah, who commanded the Israelites to “circumcise yourselves to the Lord, and take away the foreskins of your heart” (Jeremiah 4:4).

22 O ye ought to begin to howl and mourn, because of the great destruction which at this time doth await you, except ye shall repent.

23 Behold ye say that I have agreed with a man that he should murder Seezoram, our chief judge. But behold, I say unto you, that this is because I have testified unto you that ye might know concerning this thing; yea, even for a witness unto you, that I did know of the wickedness and abominations which are among you.

verse 23 Nephi says, “The reason you have accused me of conspiring to murder the chief judge is that you resent my exposing “the wickedness and abominations which are among you.” You are angry with me and wish to destroy me.

24 And because I have done this, ye say that I have agreed with a man that he should do this thing; yea, because I showed unto you this sign ye are angry with me, and seek to destroy my life.

25 And now behold, I will show unto you another sign, and see if ye will in this thing seek to destroy me.

verse 25 Nephi says, “I will show you another sign, and I will see if you are still convinced that I am guilty.”

26 Behold I say unto you: Go to the house of Seantum, who is the brother of Seezoram, and say unto him—

27 Has Nephi, the pretended prophet, who doth prophesy so much evil concerning this people, agreed with thee, in the which ye have murdered Seezoram, who is your brother?

verse 27 Nephi instructs those who go to the house of Seantum to say, “Has Nephi, the pretended prophet, conspired with you in your plot to murder Seezoram your brother?”

28 And behold, he shall say unto you, Nay.

29 And ye shall say unto him: Have ye murdered your brother?

30 And he shall stand with fear, and wist not what to say. And behold, he shall deny unto you; and he shall make as if he were astonished; nevertheless, he shall declare unto you that he is innocent.

verse 30 “wist not what to say” Wist is the preterit or past tense of wis which means to know. Seantum, when asked this question, will not know what to say—he will be stuck for an answer.

31 But behold, ye shall examine him, and ye shall find blood upon the skirts of his cloak.

32 And when ye have seen this, ye shall say: From whence cometh this blood? Do we not know that it is the blood of your brother?

verse 32 “Do we not know that it is the blood of your brother?” An interesting Hebraism in the Book of Mormon that has not received much attention is the Hebrew use of negative rhetorical questions. When an emphatically positive meaning is intended, sometimes a negative question will be asked. In other words, when the questioner is completely certain of the answer and wishes to convey positive or even emphatic force, he may ask a negative question. A couple of biblical examples will serve to illustrate. In Judges 4:14 Deborah wishes to say to Barak, “The Lord is indeed going out before you,” but instead she asks him, “Is not the Lord gone out before thee?” In Deuteronomy 11:30, the intended meaning is, “As you know, these mountains are across the Jordan.” Instead, the author asks, “Are they not on the other side [of the] Jordan?”

In this particular verse, the reader intends to say, “We know that this blood on the skirts of your cloak is the blood of your brother.” Instead, he uses the peculiar Hebraism and asks, “Do we not know that it is the blood of your brother?”

33 And then shall he tremble, and shall look pale, even as if death had come upon him.

34 And then shall ye say: Because of this fear and this paleness which has come upon your face, behold, we know that thou art guilty.

35 And then shall greater fear come upon him; and then shall he confess unto you, and deny no more that he has done this murder.

36 And then shall he say unto you, that I, Nephi, know nothing concerning the matter save it were given unto me by the power of God. And then shall ye know that I am an honest man, and that I am sent unto you from God.

verses 35-36 Seantum will be convicted of this murder and executed. Since the Law of Moses traditionally required two or three witnesses for a conviction (Deuteronomy 17:6), why is it that Seantum’s conviction could have been legal. Thankfully, a story in the book of Joshua set a precedent that helps explain what happened in Helaman 9.

Shortly after the Israelite conquest of Jericho, the Israelites attempted to take over a city called Ai but were soundly defeated (Joshua 7:3–5). Wondering what was wrong, Joshua prayed to know why they had lost the battle (verses 6–9). God told Joshua that someone had taken something from the city, even though everything was supposed to be either destroyed or consecrated to the Lord (verses 10–11) (See Joshua 6:18–19 in which the Lord explained that everything that could burn was to be destroyed, and all the precious metals were to be offered to the Lord for use in the Tabernacle.).

Because of this, God refused to fight with them, and they lost (Joshua 7:12). Joshua discovered through revelation that the culprit was an Israelite soldier named Achan (verses 16–18) (Casting lots was considered to be a valid way of obtaining revelation from the Lord in Ancient Israel, and that is what Joshua does to determine the will of the Lord in this case. See John W. Welch, The Legal Cases in the Book of Mormon, Provo, UT: BYU Press and Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2008, 331). When Joshua confronted Achan, he confessed to the crime and Joshua sent people to find what Achan had stolen (verses 19–22). Achan was then summarily executed (verse 25).

In both Seantum's and Achan's cases, a person was condemned for a capital crime, even though he was the only witness. Thus, it would seem that the two-witness law had been violated in both of these instances. However, Jewish legal authorities have noted that even though two witnesses were generally needed for a conviction, there was an exception to this rule. John Welch noted that the two-witness rule could only be overridden if the witness incriminated themselves, and if two conditions were met:

1. They confessed outside of court or the will of God was obviously manifest in bringing them to justice.
2. Physical evidence was produced that proved who committed the crime.

As Welch notes, "Quite remarkably, Seantum's self-incriminating confession was precisely such a case on all counts, and thus his execution would not have been legally problematic. His confession was spontaneous and occurred outside of court. The evidence of God's will was supplied through Nephi's prophecy. The tangible evidence was present in the blood found on Seantum's cloak" (See Welch, Legal Cases, 332–333).

Just as in the case of Achan, Seantum had been detected through revelation, he had confessed to the crime spontaneously and out of court, and obvious physical evidence corroborated that he had committed this criminal act (See Welch, Legal Cases, 93). Because the case met all of these conditions, it is likely that these factors could stand in the place of the two or three witnesses normally required.

Seantum could be convicted because other factors were present in his case, and Mormon was careful to mention each of those three factors with precision. Even though Seantum's conviction might otherwise seem irregular, it was consonant with the biblical precedent of Achan.

The technically precise legality of this case demonstrates the stark contrast between the corrupt judgments of the Gadianton robbers who currently filled the judgment seat, and the righteous judgments of God, delivered by Nephi. It has been noted that, as the influence of the Gadianton robbers continued to increase, "God's entrance into this proceeding demonstrated that he was aware of the corruption of political officials to the point of openly sustaining and validating the words of his prophets. In this case especially, righteous judgment equates with God's judgment" (See Welch, Legal Cases, 334). Thus, by revealing the scene of this homicide to the prophet Nephi, God forcefully made the point that He was still in control. No matter how well the people concealed their wickedness from others, they could never hide it from God.

Because the trial and execution of Seantum displayed so prominently God's awareness of the corruption of the wicked and His support for the righteous, as Welch explained, "The case of Seantum would have sustained and encouraged the righteous few in this society in their adamant determination to resist civil corruption, to challenge and expose secret combinations, to induce confessions of secret wrongdoings, and to judge courageously and righteously themselves" (See Welch, Legal Cases, 334).

Finally, in some situations, modern readers may need to be a lone voice for righteousness, even on occasions when surrounded by wickedness. As President Thomas S. Monson has stated, "May we maintain the courage to defy the consensus. May we ever choose the harder right instead of the easier wrong" (Thomas S. Monson, "Choices," Ensign, May, 2016, 86).

Surely the Lord's directing of the outcome in the trial of Seantum would likely have encouraged the small band of righteous Nephites living in a wicked society. This story can be equally encouraging to modern readers as they live in difficult times.

37 And it came to pass that they went and did, even according as Nephi had said unto them. And behold, the words which he had said were true; for according to the words he did deny; and also according to the words he did confess.

38 And he was brought to prove that he himself was the very murderer, insomuch that the five were set at liberty, and also was Nephi.

39 And there were some of the Nephites who believed on the words of Nephi; and there were some also, who believed because of the testimony of the five, for they had been converted while they were in prison.

40 And now there were some among the people, who said that Nephi was a prophet.

41 And there were others who said: Behold, he is a god, for except he was a god he could not know of all things. For behold, he has told us the thoughts of our hearts, and also has told us things; and even he has brought unto our knowledge the true murderer of our chief judge.

verse 41 Excessive and inappropriate religious zeal is just as incorrect as stubbornly failing to believe the truth. Any virtue overdone may become a vice. To make the Lord's servants objects of worship is to pervert the message those servants bring.

Helaman Chapter 10

Scripture Mastery

Helaman 10:4-7 Remarkable promise to prophet Nephi: All things shall be done unto thee according to thy word, for thou shalt not ask that which is contrary to my will.

1 And it came to pass that there arose a division among the people, insomuch that they divided hither and thither and went their ways, leaving Nephi alone, as he was standing in the midst of them.

2 And it came to pass that Nephi went his way towards his own house, pondering upon the things which the Lord had shown unto him.

verse 2 “Nephi went his way . . . pondering upon the things which the Lord had shown unto him” Consider for a moment the benefits of pondering the things of the Lord. Nephi, the son of Lehi, pondered the words of his father, and an exceptional vision of the condescension of God was revealed to him. As Joseph Smith pondered James 1:5, he was motivated to pray and the sublime vision of the Father and the Son was opened to him. President Joseph F. Smith received D&C 138 as he pondered the scriptures and the Savior’s atonement.

3 And it came to pass as he was thus pondering—being much cast down because of the wickedness of the people of the Nephites, their secret works of darkness, and their murderings, and their plunderings, and all manner of iniquities—and it came to pass as he was thus pondering in his heart, behold, a voice came unto him saying:

verses 4-7 It seems clear that in these next four verses, this magnificent prophet has his calling and election made sure. For people to have their calling and election made sure “means that the Lord seals their exaltation upon them while they are yet in this life” (McConkie, Bruce R. Mormon Doctrine. 2nd edition. Salt Lake City: Bookcraft, 1979). This topic is seldom discussed in church settings, perhaps because of its unusually sacred nature. I will provide only a few comments here. Please see a more complete discussion of this topic in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 16, Calling and Election Made Sure. I have also drawn from a helpful article by Andrew C. Skinner (“Nephi’s Ultimate Encounter with Deity: Some Thoughts on Helaman 10,” The Book of Mormon: Helaman through 3 Nephi 8, According To Thy Word, 115-127).

Joseph Smith, in referring to this principle, said: “This principle ought (in its proper place) to be taught, for God hath not revealed anything to Joseph, but what he will make known unto the Twelve, and even the least Saint may know all things as fast as he is able to bear them” (TPJS, 149). Other scriptural expressions for having one’s calling and election made sure include, “sealed up unto eternal life,” receiving the “Second Comforter,” and receiving “the more sure word of prophecy.”

We have been taught that the doctrine of election means that in our premortal existence certain individuals were designated (elected) to receive certain gifts or blessings in mortality. To be called is virtually synonymous with being elected. Both are closely related to foreordination. Please review the commentary for Alma 13:3.

Many are elected or called by being foreordained in the premortal world, probably as hands are laid upon spirit heads. We may assume that all of God’s children are foreordained to one day return to the celestial presence of God.

Obviously premortal calling or election is a conditional or contingent blessing. Before this foreordination can be “made sure,” each individual must prove his worthiness by consistent dedication to the gospel principles even in the face of adversity. In referring to the grand key whereby an individual’s premortal conditional election to eternal life may be made sure and unconditional, Joseph Smith wrote:

After a person has faith in Christ, repents of his sins, and is baptized for the remission of his sins and receives the Holy Ghost (by the laying on of hands), which is the first Comforter, then let him continue to humble himself before God, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, and living by every word of God, and the Lord will soon say unto him son, thou shalt be exalted. When the Lord has thoroughly proved him, and finds that the man is determined to serve him at all hazards, then the man will find his calling and election made sure, then it will be his privilege to receive the other Comforter which the Lord hath promised the saints (TPJS, 150).

What about Nephi, the Son of Helaman? How did he qualify himself to receive this glorious blessing? An overview of his life makes it plain that he was a model of consistent righteous living and service in the face of significant opposition. As we have already read, Nephi yielded up the judgment seat, the office of chief judge, to another so that he could devote his full time and energies to the service of the Lord (Helaman 5:1-4). Because of his efforts eight thousand Lamanites in the land of Zarahemla were converted and baptized (Helaman 5:18-19). He was cast into prison (Helaman 5:21-22) and there endured much privation and hardship by going many days without food while awaiting his execution. Eventually he was rescued by the Lord, transfigured, heard the voice of the Lord, and was ministered to by angels (Helaman 5:36, 44-48; 6:1). He served a mission in the land northward (as previously reviewed, probably the land Bountiful and surrounding lands) for six years and was roundly rejected by virtually everyone (Helaman 7:3). He returned discouraged and heart-sick over the wickedness of his people. Shortly thereafter he was confronted by a group of judges seeking his destruction. He responded to their threats by boldly prophesying to them and by rebuking them. His life was characterized by unflinching loyalty to the Savior’s cause.

One other point regarding being sealed up to eternal life is worthy of discussion. Some scriptural exegetes have concluded that having one’s calling and election made sure means that the Lord has offered to him the unconditional guarantee that his probation is over—that he surely will be exalted almost regardless of his subsequent actions. The only way, they feel, that such an individual can lose this “guarantee” is by committing the unpardonable sin or shedding innocent blood. There is no question that the individual who achieves the high level of spiritual progress required in order to be sealed up to eternal life is unlikely to commit serious sin. His soul has been refined to the point where worldliness has little power over him, and all of his inclinations are to continue to obey and continue to progress. It would seem, however, to this author, that any mortal can still lose his place in the celestial heaven by succumbing to the temptations of the world while he is here on earth. If the individual who has entered into the sacred covenant of being sealed up to eternal life, does not persist in his obedience or commits major sin, it is illogical to assume he would not lose his calling and election. This sacred covenant is not a license to commit sin or rest on one’s spiritual laurels.

4 Blessed art thou, Nephi, for those things which thou hast done; for I have beheld how thou hast with unwearyingness declared the word, which I have given unto thee, unto this people. And thou hast not feared them, and hast not sought thine own life, but hast sought my will, and to keep my commandments.

verse 4 “thou hast with unwearyingness declared the word” Perhaps the most important aspect of the virtue of “unwearyingness” is consistency. A sign of spiritual maturity is the tendency to be consistent and steadfast in righteousness and in service. This is in contrast to the “unsteadiness of the hearts” of others (see Helaman 12:1). One illustration of the unfailing consistency and unquestioned obedience is seen in verse 12 of this chapter. As taught by Joseph Smith, Nephi was “thoroughly proved” as he served the Lord “at all hazards” (TPJS, 150).

In illustrating the “unwearyingness” of some of the Lord’s servants, Elder Neal A. Maxwell wrote a charming anecdote: “President Spencer W. Kimball exhibited the same ‘unwearyingness’ as the Lord commended in Nephi (Helaman 10:4-5). One of the author’s last real conversations with President Kimball included his wistful comment concerning his ministry: ‘I should have done more!’ How he could have done more none of us knows, but this comment is indicative of his unwearyingness. He endured so well the unusual number of afflictions life placed upon him while serving so many so incessantly” (A Wonderful Flood of Light, 124).

“And thou hast not feared them” Nephi has preached the gospel boldly and without allowing himself to be intimidated by any person or situation. There can be no mistake about the Lord’s commandment to each us to screw up our courage and be bold in proclaiming the gospel. The Lord said to the prophet Joseph Smith: “But with some I am not well pleased, for they will not open their mouths, but they hide the talent which I have given unto them, because of the fear of man. Wo unto such, for mine anger is kindled against them” (D&C 60:2).

“thou . . . hast not sought thine own life” Nephi has been motivated only by the Lord and his cause. He has given no thought to any personal aggrandizement or any other personal concerns, for that matter (Matthew 10:39).

5 And now, because thou hast done this with such unwearyingness, behold, I will bless thee forever; and I will make thee mighty in word and in deed, in faith and in works; yea, even that all things shall be done unto thee according to thy word, for thou shalt not ask that which is contrary to my will.

verse 5 What a remarkable blessing! The Lord has extended to Nephi an invitation to ask for anything he wishes—for knowledge, power, and blessings up to and including eternal life. We will learn that this gift is part of the sealing power (for a discussion of the sealing power, see the commentary for verse 7). This blessing was granted at least in part because the Lord knew the mind of Nephi and knew that he would ask for nothing amiss. Elder Marion G. Romney taught: “The time will come when we shall know the will of God before we ask. Then everything for which we pray will be ‘expedient.’ Everything for which we ask will be ‘right.’ That will be when as a result of righteous living, we shall so enjoy the companionship of the Spirit that he will dictate what we ask” (CR, October 1944, 56). The Lord said, “He that asketh in the Spirit asketh according to the will of God; wherefore it is done even as he asketh” (D&C 46:30). Also, “And if ye are purified and cleansed from all sin, ye shall ask whatsoever you will in the name of Jesus and it shall be done. But know this, it shall be given you what you shall ask” (D&C 50:29-30). It is this kind of empowerment that will enable Nephi to command that a great famine occur among his people in order to humble them and bring them to repentance.

The particular blessing contained in this verse tends to accompany the covenant of having one’s calling and election made sure (see also D&C 132:40, 49). Elder Neal A. Maxwell wrote: “There is a . . . line in our spiritual progress that, if crossed by means of ‘unwearied diligence’ and righteousness, yields both renewal and reward. We will not even ask amiss in our petitions, and, therefore, our prayers will be granted even as we ask (D&C 50:29-30; 46:30)” (We Will Prove Them Herewith, 101).

Apparently one of Nephi’s wishes, like the younger Alma (Alma 45:18), was to maintain his opportunities to serve the Lord here on earth after his mortal life was over, for he was apparently translated (see 3 Nephi 1:2-3).

6 Behold, thou art Nephi, and I am God. Behold, I declare it unto thee in the presence of mine angels, that ye shall have power over this people, and shall smite the earth with famine, and with pestilence, and destruction, according to the wickedness of this people.

verse 6 “Behold, thou art Nephi, and I am God.” Since it is reasonable to assume that Nephi knew who he was, and since we know that if the Lord speaks no words in idleness, such a statement must have profound meaning. It appears to be an acknowledgment, in the presence of divine witnesses (the text says “angels”), of a special relationship of mutual love and respect between the Lord and Nephi. The Lord was claiming him as his servant and part of his spiritual posterity. It was also formal acknowledgment of a special covenant which the Lord was confirming with Nephi” (Andrew C. Skinner, The Book of Mormon: Helaman through 3 Nephi 8, According To Thy Word, 120).

“Behold, I declare it unto thee in the presence of mine angels” It obvious that the Lord is entering into a covenant with Nephi. But there is the implication something more here that is often overlooked. First, God states, in this verse, that His words to Nephi are being given “in the presence of [God’s] angels.” Then it appears that God’s declaration to Nephi was being given in a temple (“if ye shall say unto this temple,” verse 8). These somewhat unexpected and often overlooked details suggest that Nephi was being shown a vision of a divine council inside a holy temple.

In ancient Israel, some prophets received visions in which they saw God’s “divine council,” a group composed of God and His “royal court” in heaven. Accounts of these experiences have similar elements: the prophet has a pressing need for help, often related to knowing how to help a wicked group of people (see Genesis 14:11; 1 Samuel 7:5-9; Jeremiah 14:11; Isaiah 6:5). The prophet is in a temple or mountain setting (Isaiah 6:1. It is possible that the experience of Moses in Exodus 19–20 was similar to this as well. See also Joel S. Baden, The Composition of the Pentateuch: Renewing the Documentary Hypothesis, New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 2012, 118). He sees the divine council, or a messenger from the council (1 Kings 22:19-23; Jeremiah 23:18). The Lord reassures him and gives him knowledge (Ezekiel 2:10; Isaiah 6:5). He is then empowered and called to speak and act on God’s behalf (Isaiah 6:1-13; Amos 3:7; Habakkuk 2:2).

Over the years, several LDS biblical scholars have noted continuities between these Israelite throne manifestations and the revelatory experiences of Book of Mormon prophets (For example, in the 1986 FARMS newsletter, see John W. Welch, “Lehi’s Council Vision and the Mysteries of God,” reprinted in Reexploring the Book of Mormon, Provo: FARMS and Deseret Book, 1992, 24–25). Recently, David Bokovoy, one such LDS biblical scholar, explained that elements like these “provide a type of template for depicting an official encounter between witness and worshipper in preparation for the introduction to advanced revelatory truths” (David E. Bokovoy, “‘Thou Knowest That I Believe’: Invoking The Spirit of the Lord as Council Witness in 1 Nephi 11,” Interpreter: A Journal of Mormon Scripture 1, 2012: 17).

Isaiah 6 is a good example of what this template looks like, as Stephen Ricks has carefully explained.⁹ Isaiah said that he, “saw . . . the Lord sitting upon a throne . . . [in] the temple” (verse 1). God was surrounded by seraphs, which are heavenly beings (verse 2). This follows the pattern of seeing the divine council in a temple or mountain setting (See Stephen D. Ricks, “Heavenly Visions and Prophetic Calls in Isaiah 6, 2 Nephi 16, the Book of Mormon, and the Revelation of John,” in Isaiah in the Book of Mormon, ed. Donald W. Parry and John W. Welch, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1998, 175–181; David E. Bokovoy, “On Christ and Covenants: An LDS Reading of Isaiah’s Prophetic Call,” Studies in the Bible and Antiquity 3, 2011: 29–49). Isaiah was concerned with knowing how to help the people be less wicked, saying that he lived “in the midst of a people of unclean lips” (verse 5). The Lord symbolically cleansed him and reassured him by telling him that his “iniquity [was] taken away” (verse 7). The Lord gave him information that some people would not be able to understand (verse 10). God also told him to “go, and tell this people” (verse 9).

Father Lehi had an experience very similar to this, as did his son Nephi (John W. Welch, “The Calling of Lehi as a Prophet in the World of Jerusalem,” in Glimpses of Lehi’s Jerusalem, ed. John W. Welch, David Rolph Seely, and Jo Ann H. Seely, Provo, UT: FARMS, 2004, 421–448; Kevin L. Tolley, “To ‘See and Hear’,” Interpreter: A Journal of Mormon Scripture 18, 2016: 139–147). In Nephi’s case, the divine council experience in 1 Nephi 11 contains a detail that helps explain Helaman 10. It began as Nephi was “pondering” Lehi’s account of his dream in his “heart” (1 Nephi 11:1). Nephi was then spiritually transported to a high mountain where he had his divine council experience (Bokovoy, “‘Thou Knowest That I Believe’,” 22). The only other time something happened in the Book of Mormon as a character was “pondering” in his “heart,” was the experience of this later Nephi, in Helaman 10:3. According to the ancient Israelite writing style that Book of Mormon authors likely employed, this detail was a signal to the reader to read Helaman 10 in conjunction with and comparison to 1 Nephi 11 (John E. Harvey, Retelling the Torah: The Deuteronomistic Historian’s Use of Tetrateuchal Narratives, JSOTSup 403, New York, NY: T&T Clark, 2004, 61).

This comparison indicates that the experience of Nephi, the son of Helaman, in Helaman chapter 10 is yet another example of the sacred divine council experience. Nephi needed help, and was “pondering” how he could help eliminate “the wickedness of the people” (verse 3). He then found himself at a “temple” (verse 8) on a “mountain” (verse 9). Angels were present (verse 6). The Lord reassured him by telling him that he was “blessed” because he had been keeping God’s commandments (verse 4). God gave him religious truths and empowered him with the ability to “seal” and “loose” on “earth” and in “heaven” (verse 7). Finally, Nephi was called to speak and act on God’s behalf, being told to “go and declare” God’s words to the people (verse 11).

Seeing Nephi, the son of Helaman, as being admitted into the presence of the divine council explains the presence of angels, temples, mountains, and sealing in Helaman 10. As the leading Nephite prophet and high priest Nephi would have been familiar with the Israelite temple traditions, having officiated over the main temple in Zarahemla, the temple King Benjamin, Mosiah, Alma, and Helaman used.

Moreover, Nephi was “much cast down because of the wickedness of the people of the Nephites” (Helaman 10:3). Considering that he had narrowly escaped being put to death and that the Gadianton robbers had killed the chief judge, his great concern and need for divine guidance and reassurance was certainly a reasonable response.

Yet it was during this difficult time of personal obedience and sacrifice that Nephi not only heard God’s voice (Helaman 10:3), but had an expansive prophetic experience with the Lord and His heavenly host. Nephi’s profound story reminds readers that sometimes the most spiritual experiences only come after the most painful experiences.

Joseph B. Wirthlin stated, referring to Christ’s crucifixion, “Each of us will have our own Fridays—those days when the universe itself seems shattered and the shards of our world lie littered about us in pieces. We all will experience those broken times when it seems we can never be put together again. We will all have our Fridays. But I testify to you in the name of the One who conquered death—Sunday will come. In the darkness of our sorrow, Sunday will come. No matter our desperation, no matter our grief, Sunday will come. In this life or the next, Sunday will come.”

During what may have been one of Nephi’s darkest moments, God blessed Nephi and swore an oath to Nephi in His own name that He would always be with him and answer his prayers (Compare 1 Nephi, where Nephi swears by God and himself, 1 Nephi 4:32, but God just swears by himself, as He sometimes does. See, for example, Genesis 22:13; Isaiah 45:23; Jeremiah 22:5; Amos 8:7. God swears by himself because there is no other higher authority by which he can make an oath and covenant; see Hebrews 6:13). This is a powerful reminder of God’s personal care and covenantal reassurance in the darkest of times. This principle is as true for readers of the Book of Mormon today as it was for Nephi the son of Helaman shortly before the birth of Christ.

7 Behold, I give unto you power, that whatsoever ye shall seal on earth shall be sealed in heaven; and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven; and thus shall ye have power among this people.

verse 7 Students of the New Testament will recognize the wording of this verse as being almost identical to Matthew 16:19 and 18:18. In Matthew 16:19 the Lord said to Peter, “I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.” This may seem like a question with an all-too-obvious answer, but what precisely is the sealing power? Apparently, there are three distinct correct answers to this question. The general sealing power consists of three separate parts, each with a distinct definition:

1. In the first, the root “seal” in “sealing power” is interpreted as meaning connect. The sealing power is the power to connect people together in families for eternity.

Specifically, “sealing” refers to the marriage of a husband and wife and to the joining together of children and parents in relationships that are to endure forever. The sealing together of husband, wife, and children in eternal family units is the culminating ordinance of the priesthood, to which all other ordinances are preparatory. It must be performed by one holding the “sealing power.”

2. In the second definition, to “seal” does not mean to connect. Rather it means to certify as authentic. Signets and “seals” have been used for centuries to indicate authenticity or proper authority. In the secular world today, licenses, diplomas, legal documents, and the like bear seals that officially attest to their authenticity. So it is with matters of the eternities. This sealing power is the priesthood power given to the Lord’s authorized servants to perform certain acts on earth and have them recognized (sealed) or validated in heaven. In this context, the word “seal” appears many times in the scriptures. Jesus Christ was “sealed” by God the Father (John 6:27). Paul reminded ancient saints that God had anointed and “sealed” them (2 Corinthians 1:21-22) and told others they “were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest [assurance] of our inheritance until the redemption” (Ephesians 1:13-14). John spoke of the servants of God being sealed in their foreheads (Revelation 7:3). This is the authority by which “all covenants, contracts, bonds, obligations, oaths, vows, performances, connections, associations, or expectations” can be “made and entered into and sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise” and receive “efficacy, virtue, or force in and after the resurrection of the dead” (D&C 132:7). Elder Bruce R. McConkie said, “All things that are not sealed by this power have an end when men are dead. Unless a baptism has this enduring seal, it will not admit a person to the Celestial Kingdom . . . All things gain enduring force and validity because of the sealing power” (Mormon Doctrine, 615-16).

3. But there is even more to this sealing power! Consider the account in this particular verse of the Lord giving to Nephi, the son of Helaman, the “sealing power.” Just exactly what is this power that the Lord is bestowing upon Nephi? It is defined in the verses which follow: “And thus, if ye shall say unto this temple it shall be rent in twain, it shall be done. And if ye shall say unto this mountain, be thou cast down and become smooth, it shall be done. And behold, if ye shall say that God shall smite this people, it shall come to pass. And now behold, I command you, that ye shall go and declare unto this people, that thus saith the Lord God, who is the Almighty: Except ye repent ye shall be smitten, even unto destruction (Helaman 10:8-11).

So what is this awesome power? It is simply the power possessed by its recipient to ask for anything he feels is appropriate, and it shall be brought to pass by divine mandate. And how did Nephi qualify to receive this great blessing? The Lord previously explained to him: “I will bless thee forever; and I will make thee mighty in word and in deed, in faith and in works; yea, even that all things shall be done unto thee according to thy word, for [I know that] thou shalt not ask that which is contrary to my will” (Helaman 10:5, italics mine). The bestowal of this power is a manifestation of the Lord’s ultimate confidence in its recipient that the power will not be misused. In this context, the prophet Elijah, who also possessed the sealing power at the time of the wicked Israelite king Ahab, sealed up the heavens so that there would be no rain: “As the Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand, there shall not be dew nor rain these years, but according to my word” (1 Kings 17:1).

In modern times this sealing authority, in its entirety including all three of its distinct parts, was restored to the earth in the Kirtland Temple on April 3, 1836, by the prophet Elijah, who was the ancient custodian of this power (D&C 110:13-16). The Prophet / President of the Church holds and exercises the keys and power of sealing on earth, including all of its three vital parts. The president can designate parts of this power to others for the purpose of the administration of the Kingdom of God on the earth. For example, general authorities of the Church, the presidencies of temples, and a limited number of officiators in each temple receive part of this sealing power during their tenure. After one is approved by the First Presidency to receive the sealing power, the President of the Church, one of his counselors, or a member of the Twelve specifically designated by the president confers the sealing power upon him by the laying on of hands. This is the specific authority to perform the temple sealing ordinances, the eternal connecting together of families.

It makes sense that such power would have been given to faithful prophets in the Old Testament and among the Nephites as well as apostles of the New Testament. One might well wonder if the original and unspoiled Old Testament may have contained such promises. We know that our present Old Testament does not.

Is Nephi actually receiving here the keys of the priesthood? Apparently, he is. Is Nephi the first Nephite prophet to receive the keys of the priesthood? This is after all the first mention of such a bestowal in the Book of Mormon. It is likely that other Nephite prophets also held the keys of presidency though it was not mentioned. One might expect that Lehi, Nephi, Jacob, Mosiah, Alma, Mormon, and Moroni might also have held these keys. It is likely that any righteous man who has the blessing of receiving the sealing power has also had his calling and election made sure, he has received the “more sure word of prophecy.”

8 And thus, if ye shall say unto this temple it shall be rent in twain, it shall be done.

9 And if ye shall say unto this mountain, Be thou cast down and become smooth, it shall be done.

10 And behold, if ye shall say that God shall smite this people, it shall come to pass.

11 And now behold, I command you, that ye shall go and declare unto this people, that thus saith the Lord God, who is the Almighty: Except ye repent ye shall be smitten, even unto destruction.

12 And behold, now it came to pass that when the Lord had spoken these words unto Nephi, he did stop and did not go unto his own house, but did return unto the multitudes who were scattered about upon the face of the land, and began to declare unto them the word of the Lord which had been spoken unto him, concerning their destruction if they did not repent.

verse 12 “he did stop and did not go unto his own house, but did return unto the multitudes” Even when being given the daunting task of calling a rebellious people to repentance, Nephi obeys immediately. He demonstrates what it really means to have an eye single to the glory of God, to have one’s own will swallowed up in the will of the Lord.

13 Now behold, notwithstanding that great miracle which Nephi had done in telling them concerning the death of the chief judge, they did harden their hearts and did not hearken unto the words of the Lord.

verse 13 It should not be surprising to learn that Nephi’s miraculous prophesying of the death of the Nephite Judge Seezoram and the identifying of his murderer, Seantum, did not result in the wholesale conversion of those who witnessed it. “Faith cometh not by signs, but signs follow those that believe” (D&C 63:9).

14 Therefore Nephi did declare unto them the word of the Lord, saying: Except ye repent, thus saith the Lord, ye shall be smitten even unto destruction.

15 And it came to pass that when Nephi had declared unto them the word, behold, they did still harden their hearts and would not hearken unto his words; therefore they did revile against him, and did seek to lay their hands upon him that they might cast him into prison.

16 But behold, the power of God was with him, and they could not take him to cast him into prison, for he was taken by the Spirit and conveyed away out of the midst of them.

verse 16 “for he was taken by the Spirit and conveyed away out of the midst of them” Elder Bruce R. McConkie has written of other instances in which others have been bodily transported from place to place by the power of the Spirit:

Ezekiel was lifted up and carried by the Spirit (Ezekiel 8:2-3). Nephi “was caught away in the Spirit of the Lord, yea, into an exceeding high mountain,” upon which he “never had before” set his “foot” (1 Nephi 11:1). Mary herself “was carried away in the Spirit” at the time of the conception of Jesus (1 Nephi 11:19-21). . . After Philip baptized the eunuch, “the Spirit of the Lord caught [him] away,” and he was carried to Azotus (Acts 8:39-40). It is not an unheard-of thing for the Lord, by the power of the Spirit, to transport mortals from place to place (The Mortal Messiah, volume 1, 413-14).

17 And it came to pass that thus he did go forth in the Spirit, from multitude to multitude, declaring the word of God, even until he had declared it unto them all, or sent it forth among all the people.

18 And it came to pass that they would not hearken unto his words; and there began to be contentions, insomuch that they were divided against themselves and began to slay one another with the sword.

19 And thus ended the seventy and first year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi.

Helaman Chapter 11

This chapter illustrates a typical example of the so-called prosperity–pride–destruction cycle we see repeatedly in the Book of Mormon (see the commentary for Jacob 2:14).

1 and now it came to pass in the seventy and second year of the reign of the judges that the contentions did increase, insomuch that there were wars throughout all the land among all the people of Nephi.

2 And it was this secret band of robbers who did carry on this work of destruction and wickedness. And this war did last all that year; and in the seventy and third year it did also last.

verses 1-2 Brother Hugh Nibley wrote in response to the questions, “Who was left for the Gadianton Robbers to loot if everybody belonged? And who was fighting against whom?”

There were levels of control and profit-taking, as in a modern franchise set-up; at the heart of everything was the original band of charter members, a sort of central committee, whose meetings and manipulations were top-secret (Helaman 6:22-24). But there is no love lost among criminals, “the devil will not support his children at the last day,” says Mormon, “but doth speedily drag them down to hell” (Alma 30:60). Inevitably interests and ambitions conflict, and so with criminal interests fighting each other “there were wars throughout all the land among the people of Nephi. And it was this secret band of robbers who did carry on this work of destruction and wickedness” (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 361-62).

3 And it came to pass that in this year Nephi did cry unto the Lord, saying:

4 O Lord, do not suffer that this people shall be destroyed by the sword; but O Lord, rather let there be a famine in the land, to stir them up in remembrance of the Lord their God, and perhaps they will repent and turn unto thee.

5 And so it was done, according to the words of Nephi. And there was a great famine upon the land, among all the people of Nephi. And thus in the seventy and fourth year the famine did continue, and the work of destruction did cease by the sword but became sore by famine.

verses 4-5 “let there be a famine in the land” In the previous chapter, we discussed, in some detail, the sealing power of the priesthood. We will soon learn that the Lord will honor Nephi’s request for a famine because of the sealing power that Nephi possessed.

It is sometimes easy for Latter-day Saints to become complacent in their exercise of priesthood power. For some, the priesthood might have lost some of its wonder.

However, the dramatic exercise of this power by Nephi here in the Book of Mormon and by Elijah in 1 Kings 17 stands as a vivid reminder of the life-giving effects of the priesthood. Their ancient stories help readers appreciate the value and meaning of that holy power in modern times. Let us compare the experiences of both Elijah and Nephi to help us to better appreciate the dramatic power of priesthood in those ancient days in our day as well.

The beginning of Elijah's experience is found in 1 Kings 17:1. The first recorded words from Elijah about his experience are his testament to the wicked king Ahab, that "there shall not be dew nor rain these years, but according to my word." Elijah, just like Nephi, used the priesthood to "seal" the heavens to keep it from raining. It is clear that Nephi's famine was also caused by drought, because when Nephi asked the Lord to stop the famine, he specifically asked him to "send forth rain" (see verse 13). In other words, Nephi used his recently-acquired sealing power to "seal" the heavens, just as did Elijah.

This connection between Elijah and Nephi's sealing the heavens is strengthened by the many allusions to the Elijah story in the story of Nephi son of Helaman.

Elijah and the Sealing Power

Elijah causes a famine by "sealing" the heavens

Elijah experiences a fire and an earthquake in connection with hearing a soft voice from God (1 Kings 19).

Elijah warns that the unrepentant will be eaten by dogs (2 Kings 9:36).

Elijah has an experience in which he stands before the Lord (1 Kings 17:1; 18:15).

Elijah says that "rain" will cease "according to my words" (1 Kings 17:1)

Elijah is taken by the spirit from place to place (1 Kings 18:12; 2 Kings 2:16).

Nephi and the Sealing Power

Nephi causes a famine by "sealing" the heavens

Nephi experiences a fire and an earthquake in connection with hearing a soft voice from God (Helaman 5:23, 30–31).

Nephi warns that the unrepentant will be eaten by dogs (Helaman 7:19).

Nephi has an experience in which he stands before the Lord (Helaman 10).

Nephi says that "rain" will cease "according to my words" (Helaman 10:16-17)

Nephi is taken by the spirit from place to place (Helaman 10:16-17).

Elijah does not have a recorded death or burial (2 Kings 2:11). Elijah was taken to heaven without tasting death.

Nephi does not have a recorded death. He simply disappeared out of the land, never to be heard from again (3 Nephi 1:3).

These connections demonstrate that both Elijah and Nephi used the power of the priesthood to seal the heavens. In addition to that, when read alongside the Elijah story, Helaman 11 becomes a powerful reminder of the reality of the priesthood. Modern readers may rarely think about the cosmic power of the priesthood, but priesthood power is still just as potent today as the incomprehensible power that Nephi and Elijah used to seal the heavens.

President Henry B. Eyring stated that the keys of the priesthood “reside in the Church today and will continue to the end of time.” These keys are “the same divine authorization given by the Lord to Peter, as He had promised: ‘And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven’” (Henry B. Eyring, “Families Under Covenant,” Ensign, May 2012, 62, online at lds.org).

Through the exercise of priesthood keys, sacred covenants can be solemnized, and those who remain true and faithful will be sealed up unto eternal life. As King Benjamin concluded his covenant speech, “Therefore, I would that ye should be steadfast and immovable, always abounding in good works, that Christ, the Lord God Omnipotent, may seal you his, that you may be brought to heaven, that ye may have everlasting salvation and eternal life, through the wisdom, and power, and justice, and mercy of him who created all things, in heaven and in earth, who is God above all” (Mosiah 5:15).

6 And this work of destruction did also continue in the seventy and fifth year. For the earth was smitten that it was dry, and did not yield forth grain in the season of grain; and the whole earth was smitten, even among the Lamanites as well as among the Nephites, so that they were smitten that they did perish by thousands in the more wicked parts of the land.

verse 6 “in the season of grain” Those familiar with the seasons of Mesoamerica, the likely location of the Book of Mormon story, know that the only two seasons are the rainy season (May to October) and the dry season (October to May) (see also verse 13). The “season of grain” is dependent upon the season of rain.

7 And it came to pass that the people saw that they were about to perish by famine, and they began to remember the Lord their God; and they began to remember the words of Nephi.

verse 7 “the people saw that they were about to perish by famine, and they began to remember the Lord their God” In that charming way that suggests a twinkle in his eye and is so characteristic of him, Brother Hugh Nibley wrote concerning this verse: “The famine was horrendous and put a stop to everything, so finally the people were willing to give up their stocks and bonds and settle for just their lives” (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 362- 63).

Joseph Fielding McConkie and Robert L. Millet commented on famines in the scriptures: “Famine is one of heaven’s most eloquent sermons. When virtually all else has failed to get the attention of the rebellious and turn them to God, famines have succeeded. Famines can strip men of every sense of self-sufficiency and turn their eyes and ears to the voice of heaven (see Isaiah 51:19; Jeremiah 14:13-18; Amos 4:6)” (Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, volume 3, 390).

8 And the people began to plead with their chief judges and their leaders, that they would say unto Nephi: Behold, we know that thou art a man of God, and therefore cry unto the Lord our God that he turn away from us this famine, lest all the words which thou hast spoken concerning our destruction be fulfilled.

9 And it came to pass that the judges did say unto Nephi, according to the words which had been desired. And it came to pass that when Nephi saw that the people had repented and did humble themselves in sackcloth, he cried again unto the Lord, saying:

10 O Lord, behold this people repenteth; and they have swept away the band of Gadianton from amongst them insomuch that they have become extinct, and they have concealed their secret plans in the earth.

verse 10 Were the Gadianton robbers a secular group of thieves, or were they in fact an organization akin almost to a fraternal or “religion”? They probably were in fact the latter. Consider the following points. We are told in this verse that after they were abolished as a group, they “concealed their secret plans in the earth.” Are you reminded of any other records that were sealed up in the earth by religious groups? How about the Dead Sea scrolls? Even the records of the Book of Mormon were buried by the Nephite remnants.

11 Now, O Lord, because of this their humility wilt thou turn away thine anger, and let thine anger be appeased in the destruction of those wicked men whom thou hast already destroyed.

12 O Lord, wilt thou turn away thine anger, yea, thy fierce anger, and cause that this famine may cease in this land.

13 O Lord, wilt thou hearken unto me, and cause that it may be done according to my words, and send forth rain upon the face of the earth, that she may bring forth her fruit, and her grain in the season of grain.

14 O Lord, thou didst hearken unto my words when I said, Let there be a famine, that the pestilence of the sword might cease; and I know that thou wilt, even at this time, hearken unto my words, for thou saidst that: If this people repent I will spare them.

15 Yea, O Lord, and thou seest that they have repented, because of the famine and the pestilence and destruction which has come unto them.

16 And now, O Lord, wilt thou turn away thine anger, and try again if they will serve thee? And if so, O Lord, thou canst bless them according to thy words which thou hast said.

17 And it came to pass that in the seventy and sixth year the Lord did turn away his anger from the people, and caused that rain should fall upon the earth, insomuch that it did bring forth her fruit in the season of her fruit. And it came to pass that it did bring forth her grain in the season of her grain.

18 And behold, the people did rejoice and glorify God, and the whole face of the land was filled with rejoicing; and they did no more seek to destroy Nephi, but they did esteem him as a great prophet, and a man of God, having great power and authority given unto him from God.

verse 18 Brother Hugh Nibley comments: "The end of the famine saw a great improvement in spiritual matters, the more part of the people, both the Lamanites and Nephites, belonging to the church. A period of economic expansion and much building also followed, and yet within a scant three years 'there began to be much strife' again, certain groups of dissenters taking to murder and plunder in the old style, building up great strength in the mountains and the wilderness" (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 6, 388-89).

19 And behold, Lehi, his brother, was not a whit behind him as to things pertaining to righteousness.

verse 19 The fact that the Book of Mormon account gives most of its attention to Nephi and relatively ignores his brother Lehi may be less the result any inadequacies had by Lehi and more the result of the editor Mormon's arbitrary decision.

20 And thus it did come to pass that the people of Nephi began to prosper again in the land, and began to build up their waste places, and began to multiply and spread, even until they did cover the whole face of the land, both on the northward and on the southward, from the sea west to the sea east.

21 And it came to pass that the seventy and sixth year did end in peace. And the seventy and seventh year began in peace; and the church did spread throughout the face of all the land; and the more part of the people, both the Nephites and the Lamanites, did belong to the church; and they did have exceedingly great peace in the land; and thus ended the seventy and seventh year.

22 And also they had peace in the seventy and eighth year, save it were a few contentions concerning the points of doctrine which had been laid down by the prophets.

23 And in the seventy and ninth year there began to be much strife. But it came to pass that Nephi and Lehi, and many of their brethren who knew concerning the true points of doctrine, having many revelations daily, therefore they did preach unto the people, insomuch that they did put an end to their strife in that same year.

24 And it came to pass that in the eightieth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi, there were a certain number of the dissenters from the people of Nephi, who had some years before gone over unto the Lamanites, and taken upon themselves the name of Lamanites, and also a certain number who were real descendants of the Lamanites, being stirred up to anger by them, or by those dissenters, therefore they commenced a war with their brethren.

25 And they did commit murder and plunder; and then they would retreat back into the mountains, and into the wilderness and secret places, hiding themselves that they could not be discovered, receiving daily an addition to their numbers, inasmuch as there were dissenters that went forth unto them.

verses 24-25 This group of robbers and murderers will soon assume the identity of—no surprise here—the Gadianton robbers. Their methods of operation are typical examples of guerrilla warfare like, for example, Fidel Castro in the mountains of Cuba. Guerrillas hide in the mountains and come out of the mountains to make sorties down into the low lands, only when they think they can be successful. When they are hiding, as the Gadianton robbers did in the wilderness, they cannot be defeated. They are fighting on their own terms and on their own turf. The iron clad principles of guerrilla warfare are: Never fight on the other guy's terms, fight only on your own terms. Never try to hold territory. Simply continue making lightning attacks then retreat. If the enemy pursues, wipe them out. If you don't think you can win, hide. You're not out to prove your bravery. You can't afford to lose any battles. You don't have enough soldiers or weapons. These are the basic rules which the Gadianton robbers follow in the following verses, and these rules lead to their success (see verses 28 and 29 below). It is interesting that later the Gadianton robbers will violate these rules, and when they do, they are annihilated (see 3 Nephi 4).

It is interesting that it was not until the twentieth century when the principles of guerrilla warfare were laid out in writing. Joseph could have known nothing of guerrilla warfare when he translated the Book of Mormon, yet he has accurately described a form of warfare that he could have known nothing about from his environment in rural New York in 1829.

Permit me to digress for a moment and express to you, the reader, that as I have studied the Book of Mormon for the past several years, I cannot begin to estimate how many times I have had the Spirit of the Lord wash over me and cause me to think, and even say aloud, “There is no way Joseph could have written this book.” Indeed, I know by the power of the Spirit that it is true and authentic!

“receiving daily an addition to their numbers, inasmuch as there were dissenters that went forth unto them” Obviously this guerrilla-warfare style of life had a romantic and adventurous appeal to some of the younger generation of Nephites who went off and joined up with the bands in significant numbers.

26 And thus in time, yea, even in the space of not many years, they became an exceedingly great band of robbers; and they did search out all the secret plans of Gadianton; and thus they became robbers of Gadianton.

27 Now behold, these robbers did make great havoc, yea, even great destruction among the people of Nephi, and also among the people of the Lamanites.

28 And it came to pass that it was expedient that there should be a stop put to this work of destruction; therefore they sent an army of strong men into the wilderness and upon the mountains to search out this band of robbers, and to destroy them.

29 But behold, it came to pass that in that same year they were driven back even into their own lands. And thus ended the eightieth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi.

30 And it came to pass in the commencement of the eighty and first year they did go forth again against this band of robbers, and did destroy many; and they were also visited with much destruction.

verse 30 Hugh Nibley comments: “Within a year the mountains and the wilderness became so infested with the robbers as to be closed entirely to Nephite occupation. The bands were well organized and defied both Nephite and Lamanite military power, making themselves an object of terror to the whole land by their raids and onslaughts. Still the people continued to forget the Lord and to ripen again for destruction for another five years” (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 6, 388-89).

Hugh Nibley has also added to our insight regarding the bands of robbers in the Book of Mormon:

These bands of robbers [in the Book of Mormon] are not some exotic invention of romantic fancy, but a major factor in world history. We think of the age-old traditions of Seth and his robber bands in the Egyptian literature, of Pompey’s Pirates or the Algerians, the Vikings, the Free Companies of the fourteenth century, the Kazaks, the Robber Barons, the Assassins, the Bagaudi, the Druze, the militant orders that imitated them (Templars, Knights of Rhodes, and so on), the Vitalian Brothers, the Riffs, and finally the Medellin drug lords of the south, whose long arm can constrain the leaders of nations. All of these operators were terrorists, and they held whole armies at bay and overthrew kingdoms. The best and perhaps the earliest description of such bands in action is from the Amarna Letters, where we find Lehi's own ancestors, the wandering, plundering Khabiru of the fourteenth century BC, actually overthrowing city after city in Palestine and disrupting the lives of nations (Prophetic Book of Mormon, 556).

31 And they were again obliged to return out of the wilderness and out of the mountains unto their own lands, because of the exceeding greatness of the numbers of those robbers who infested the mountains and the wilderness.

32 And it came to pass that thus ended this year. And the robbers did still increase and wax strong, insomuch that they did defy the whole armies of the Nephites, and also of the Lamanites; and they did cause great fear to come unto the people upon all the face of the land.

33 Yea, for they did visit many parts of the land, and did do great destruction unto them; yea, did kill many, and did carry away others captive into the wilderness, yea, and more especially their women and their children.

34 Now this great evil, which came unto the people because of their iniquity, did stir them up again in remembrance of the Lord their God.

35 And thus ended the eighty and first year of the reign of the judges.

36 And in the eighty and second year they began again to forget the Lord their God. And in the eighty and third year they began to wax strong in iniquity. And in the eighty and fourth year they did not mend their ways.

verse 36 Brother Nibley comments:

The prophets in the Book of Mormon marvel at how soon a righteous people can become wicked, and the speed of the reverse process is even more surprising. It is a common fallacy to think of things happening very slowly in history, and especially in ancient history. But the student has only to compare any two consecutive decades of history to realize that things do not move slowly at all—history moves at breath-taking speed. . . [Here] as the result of a single famine, a wicked nation becomes a righteous nation. . . If the hardened criminals in a Lamanite prison could suddenly be “encircled about, yea every soul, by a pillar of fire . . . and . . . filled with that joy which is unspeakable and full of glory” (Helaman 5:43-44) and then go forth as missionaries to convert “the more part of the Lamanites” (Helaman 5:50)—if all such changes seem rather sudden, we have only to think of countless parallels in our own history. How long did it take millions of Germans and Italians, individually and collectively, to change completely from one state of mind to another? As a single speech could turn thousands of mild and sober citizens into ranting fanatics, so with the disappearance of the leader, dangerous men of war reverted just as quickly to well-meaning and sympathetic human beings. Does it take fifty years for great nations to change from fast friendship to bitter enmity? Twenty-four hours is enough (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 345-46).

37 And it came to pass in the eighty and fifth year they did wax stronger and stronger in their pride, and in their wickedness; and thus they were ripening again for destruction.

verse 37 For a discussion of the concepts of “pride” and “ripening . . . for destruction, see “Pride” in volume 1, chapter 5, The “Natural Man” and “Spiritual Man” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine.

38 And thus ended the eighty and fifth year.

Helaman Chapter 12

Scripture Mastery

Helaman 12:3 Except the Lord doth chasten his people with many afflictions, yea, they will not remember him.

Do wealth and prosperity invariably lead a person away from things of the spirit? Helaman chapter 12 is a discourse on just this subject. When the Lord blesses a people with material blessings, does that people always come to overlook the role of the Lord in their material successes? Perhaps not invariably, but certainly man has had this tendency. This scenario plays itself out repeatedly in the Book of Mormon. It would seem that an abundance of riches virtually guarantees the spiritual destruction of a people. If such is the case, then why doesn't God withhold the dangerous wealth from man? The reason, of course, is that this life is intended as a probationary state, and for it to be a real probation, these must be "an opposition in all things" (2 Nephi 2:11).

This entire chapter is an editorial by the prophet Mormon in which he comments upon the spiritual blindness of the Nephites and warns of the great destructions to occur among them prior to the Lord's visit to them. His warning is, of course, pertinent to us today as we have been taught of the great destructions to occur among us just prior to the Lord's second coming. Mormon not only warns of the destruction but he specifies the main reasons for it: pride and especially lusting after material things.

verses 1-3 It is interesting and instructive to compare the accounts of history written by secular historians with the history written by the prophet Mormon. Secular historians, most often lacking any spiritual insight, tend to report history and analyze historical events purely in terms of tangible and scientifically measurable factors that influence the events of history. A secular historian is more likely to describe a people's material successes or failures and attribute them to known social, political, or economic phenomena. Any possible divine influences on the course of history will be ignored because they cannot be verified or measured. This approach of writing history with attention mainly to visible achievements tends to completely ignore any spiritual or religious values of a culture.

Thomas W. Mackay has observed:

Mormon perceived history from the larger perspective of the eternities. He was clearly in the prophetic tradition. His was not a world-view restricted by a mechanistic notion of causation. Rather, the events of human history demonstrated God's justice and his ultimate control of the affairs of men. Providential causation, in direct fulfillment of prophecy, is the hall-mark of Mormon's portrayal of history. Thus, his primary concern is righteousness, for if man, by his behavior, sets himself at the cross-currents to the cosmos, then he will heap upon himself divine retribution. Such a perspective stands in stark contrast to that taken by most modern historians. Their concern is with the more physical and tangible products of a culture” (“Mormon’s Philosophy of History” in The Book of Mormon: Helaman through 3 Nephi 8, According To Thy Word, 137).

Mormon not only has the benefit of personal revelation, but he also has access to the written prophecies of many inspired prophets. Mormon accepted as truth all the words of the prophets before him. Additionally, he lived during the days when the annihilation of the Nephites, according to previous dire prophetic warnings, actually took place. He is able to witness that destruction, that fulfillment of prophecy, first hand. Mormon views the historical evolution of the Book of Mormon peoples as simply the results of their righteousness and wickedness and the consequent blessings or punishments of a just God. He likely regarded as particularly poignant the prophecies of Samuel the Lamanite who not only called his contemporaries to repentance but also prophesied of the time when the Nephites’ disobedience and internal dissension would result in their extinction, with the Lamanites merely supplying the physical means of that extinction. Samuel’s prophecies are poignant to Mormon because Mormon was a personal witness to the fulfillment of those prophecies. For Mormon, the issue of a people’s righteousness is the only issue, and he minimizes the importance of their material “progress” or “growth” or the physical trappings of their civilization. As might be expected, Mormon also acknowledges Satan’s evil influences in the course of history (Helaman 2:21, 25-2).

Thomas W. Mackay has also commented on the lack of correlation between material and spiritual achievements of a people:

Prosperity [does not] act as a reliable indicator of righteousness. Prosperity in and of itself is not a valid measure of society, because it may be the result of wickedness or of righteousness. Worldly success may occur, but the most important results of righteousness are evident in the hearts and minds of people—their attitudes, responses, and motivations. . . . Frequently there is a time-lag factor between the righteousness or wickedness of a people and the increases or decreases in economic and material manifestations of God’s intervention or blessings. . . . For example, to a prophet, a particular people [may be] already in a moral decline before its “zenith” as interpreted by an uninspired secular historian (Ibid., 136, 138).

It is likely that as Mormon was abridging the records of this highly volatile period of Nephite history, he became increasingly frustrated over the erratic and unreliable behavior and spiritual commitment of the Nephites. In Helaman 12 Mormon departs from his historical account to vent his exasperation over the Nephites’ irresponsibility and spiritual immaturity. One can easily sense his disappointment and anger in this chapter’s first few verses.

1 And thus we can behold how false, and also the unsteadiness of the hearts of the children of men; yea, we can see that the Lord in his great infinite goodness doth bless and prosper those who put their trust in him.

verse 1 “thus we can behold how false . . . the children of men” “False” means being untrue to what one purports to be—indeed, hypocritical.

“the unsteadiness of the hearts of the children of men” To be unsteady is to be inconsistent and erratic in convictions and behavior. This is in contrast to the “unwearyingness” which the Lord attributed to the prophet Nephi (Helaman 10:4). Another adjective for the opposite of “unsteadiness” used in the scriptures is steadfastness.

“we can see that the Lord in his great infinite goodness doth bless and prosper those who put their trust in him” This is simply a reiteration of the now well-known “promise/curse” of the Book of Mormon.

2 Yea, and we may see at the very time when he doth prosper his people, yea, in the increase of their fields, their flocks and their herds, and in gold, and in silver, and in all manner of precious things of every kind and art; sparing their lives, and delivering them out of the hands of their enemies; softening the hearts of their enemies that they should not declare wars against them; yea, and in fine, doing all things for the welfare and happiness of his people; yea, then is the time that they do harden their hearts, and do forget the Lord their God, and do trample under their feet the Holy One—yea, and this because of their ease, and their exceedingly great prosperity.

verse 2 “then is the time that they do harden their hearts” Here is a universal foible. “In the day of their peace they esteemed lightly my counsel; but, in the day of their trouble, of necessity they feel after me” (D&C 101:7-8). See also the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6.

“they . . . do trample under their feet the Holy One” To “trample” God under foot means to set aside his counsels and to be disobedient to his commands.

3 And thus we see that except the Lord doth chasten his people with many afflictions, yea, except he doth visit them with death and with terror, and with famine and with all manner of pestilence, they will not remember him.

verse 3 For the meaning of chasten, see the commentary for Mosiah 23:21.

verses 4-6 Here Mormon itemizes in plain language the almost universal weaknesses of fallen man that are so offensive to God. The Book of Mormon does not teach the doctrine of human depravity, but it does teach that mortal man has a “fallen” nature.

4 O how foolish, and how vain, and how evil, and devilish, and how quick to do iniquity, and how slow to do good, are the children of men; yea, how quick to hearken unto the words of the evil one, and to set their hearts upon the vain things of the world!

5 Yea, how quick to be lifted up in pride; yea, how quick to boast, and do all manner of that which is iniquity; and how slow are they to remember the Lord their God, and to give ear unto his counsels, yea, how slow to walk in wisdom's paths!

6 Behold, they do not desire that the Lord their God, who hath created them, should rule and reign over them; notwithstanding his great goodness and his mercy towards them, they do set at naught his counsels, and they will not that he should be their guide.

7 O how great is the nothingness of the children of men; yea, even they are less than the dust of the earth.

verse 7 This verse may seem puzzling since it seems to debase mankind, and we know that man is supremely important to God (See Moses 1:39). Actually the verse is not meant to be demeaning to man. Rather, it emphasizes his utter dependence upon the Lord—thus the “nothingness of the children of men.” Another idea is also implied. The earth itself—those intelligences that inhabit the so-called inanimate things of the earth—are more obedient to God's commandments than is man. The next several verses make explicit this latter idea.

verses 8-18 Notice in these verses that God accomplishes his purposes by communicating with the elements. Implicit in this idea is that the “inanimate” elements of the earth are combined with intelligences who control the elements and who maintain and exercise their agency. God would never deny any intelligence its free exercise of agency. Hence when God commands, he really requests. Those intelligences controlling the elements obey because they know, love, and honor him.

8 For behold, the dust of the earth moveth hither and thither, to the dividing asunder, at the command of our great and everlasting God.

9 Yea, behold at his voice do the hills and the mountains tremble and quake.

10 And by the power of his voice they are broken up, and become smooth, yea, even like unto a valley.

11 Yea, by the power of his voice doth the whole earth shake;

12 Yea, by the power of his voice, do the foundations rock, even to the very center.

verses 13-20 These verses contain a series of conditional “if-then” statements. In English, a typical conditional clause would be “if you come, then I will come,” with then being optional. The first part of such sentences is the “condition.” The second part is the consequence. In Hebrew, this same clause is expressed as “if you come and I will come.” It is instructive to note that in the original text of the Book of Mormon, there were at least fourteen occurrences of this non-English expression. One occurrence was accidentally removed in 1 Nephi 17:50 as Oliver Cowdery was producing the printer’s manuscript by copying from the original manuscript: “if he should command me that I should say unto this water be thou earth and it shall be earth.” The remaining thirteen occurrences were all removed by Joseph Smith in his editing for the second edition, including one from the famous passage in Moroni 10:4: “and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart with real intent having faith in Christ and he will manifest the truth of it unto you.” Verse 13 of this chapter was rendered in the original edition: “yea, if he saith unto the earth, Move, and it is moved (italics added).” Joseph’s use of the more typical Hebrew construction in his original translation supports the idea that Joseph’s translation was a literal one and not simply a reflection of his own dialect. It is extraordinarily doubtful that Joseph, or any other native English speaker, would have ever spoken this way. An “if-and” conditional sentence grates on our ears. If someone were to use it in our presence, we would find it very odd. . . (Royal Skousen, Journal of Book of Mormon Studies: “The Original Language of the Book of Mormon: Upstate New York Dialect, King James English, or Hebrew?” 34).

13 Yea, and if he say unto the earth—Move—it is moved.

14 Yea, if he say unto the earth—Thou shalt go back, that it lengthen out the day for many hours—it is done; verses 14-15 “surely it is the earth that moveth and not the sun” These verses likely refer to the biblical account in which Joshua commanded the sun and the moon to stand still so that his army might complete their rout of the Amorites (Joshua 10:12-14). However, Mormon makes a technical correction to that account. The biblical account assumed that the earth was stationary and that the sun revolved around it. It is fascinating to learn that Mormon knew that the earth revolves around the sun, and not vice versa. This is known as a heliocentric (sun at the center) view of our planetary system. Obviously, the Book of Mormon people knew something about astronomy (see the commentary for Alma 30:44). They apparently had a more accurate understanding of the nature of the earth’s movement than did their Greek contemporaries who at that time predominantly believed in a stationary earth.

15 And thus, according to his word the earth goeth back, and it appeareth unto man that the sun standeth still; yea, and behold, this is so; for surely it is the earth that moveth and not the sun.

16 And behold, also, if he say unto the waters of the great deep—Be thou dried up—it is done.

17 Behold, if he say unto this mountain—Be thou raised up, and come over and fall upon that city, that it be buried up—behold it is done.

18 And behold, if a man hide up a treasure in the earth, and the Lord shall say—Let it be accursed, because of the iniquity of him who hath hid it up—behold, it shall be accursed.

19 And if the Lord shall say—Be thou accursed, that no man shall find thee from this time henceforth and forever—behold, no man getteth it henceforth and forever.

20 And behold, if the Lord shall say unto a man—Because of thine iniquities, thou shalt be accursed forever—it shall be done.

verses 18-20 “accursed” From Webster’s 1828 American Dictionary of the English Language, we read the definition of accursed: “Doomed to destruction or misery; separated from the faithful; cast out of the church; excommunicated; worthy of the curse; detestable; execrable [pronounce execrable with the accent on the first syllable—‘ex’].”

21 And if the Lord shall say—Because of thine iniquities thou shalt be cut off from my presence—he will cause that it shall be so.

verses 22-26 After strongly denouncing the wicked and inconsistent tendencies of mankind, Mormon now lovingly reminds us that through the gift of repentance man may be saved.

22 And wo unto him to whom he shall say this, for it shall be unto him that will do iniquity, and he cannot be saved; therefore, for this cause, that men might be saved, hath repentance been declared.

23 Therefore, blessed are they who will repent and hearken unto the voice of the Lord their God; for these are they that shall be saved.

24 And may God grant, in his great fulness, that men might be brought unto repentance and good works, that they might be restored unto grace for grace, according to their works.

verse 24 “that they might be restored unto grace for grace” To receive “grace for grace” is to receive incremental blessings from the Father as we obey him and selflessly serve others. These incremental blessings are gifts of the Spirit that result in our continued sanctification or growth toward acquiring the character of God. They are “restored” to the process of spiritual growth when they repent of their sins and return to the fold.

25 And I would that all men might be saved. But we read that in the great and last day there are some who shall be cast out, yea, who shall be cast off from the presence of the Lord;

verse 25 “there are some who shall be cast out, yea, who shall be cast off from the presence of the Lord” The expression “cast off” means to suffer spiritual death. It is synonymous with being cast out of the Lord’s presence. This broad group would include those who inherit the terrestrial and telestial kingdoms and those who become sons of perdition.

26 Yea, who shall be consigned to a state of endless misery, fulfilling the words which say: They that have done good shall have everlasting life; and they that have done evil shall have everlasting damnation. And thus it is. Amen.

verse 26 Those who receive “everlasting life” are not just those who will live forever. All will live forever. These are the ones who inherit the celestial kingdom. “Everlasting damnation” is that punishment handed out by God to all those not in the celestial glory. The word damnation implies that there will be a limit placed on the spiritual progress which they can make in their assigned eternal realm.

We should not assume that those “who shall be consigned to a state of endless misery” will in fact feel miserable for all eternity. We are taught in the Doctrine and Covenants that the words “endless” and “eternal,” when applied to punishment, don’t refer to the duration of the punishment. Rather they refer to the source or instigator of that punishment—God himself—who is endless and eternal (D&C 19:10-12). In other words, endless and eternal are other words for God. Eternal punishment is God’s punishment.

Helaman Chapter 13

The prophecy of Samuel, the Lamanite, to the Nephites. Comprising chapters 13 to 15 inclusive.

Scripture Mastery

Helaman 13-16 The preaching and prophecies of Samuel the Lamanite from the wall around Zarahemla

It is suggested that the reader review the principle of “leitwörter” in the commentary for Helaman 5:5-12. Here in Helaman 13 Mormon gives an account of the preaching of the Lamanite prophet Samuel to the people of Zarahemla. In doing so, Mormon uses the principle of “leitwörter” by including repetitively a few theme words and phrases that give emphasis to the essence of his message. Those theme words or phrases (“leitwörter”) are: “saith the Lord,” “a curse,” “riches,” and “your destruction is made sure.” The salient theme of Samuel’s message is obvious: Samuel’s message is not his own message, it is the Lord’s. Those who set their minds upon the material riches of the world will be cursed, and lest they repent, their destruction is made sure.

1 And now it came to pass in the eighty and sixth year, the Nephites did still remain in wickedness, yea, in great wickedness, while the Lamanites did observe strictly to keep the commandments of God, according to the law of Moses.

verse 1 “in the eighty and sixth year” This date references the reign of judges which began about 92 BC. Thus, the date is about 6 BC.

2 And it came to pass that in this year there was one Samuel, a Lamanite, came into the land of Zarahemla, and began to preach unto the people. And it came to pass that he did preach, many days, repentance unto the people, and they did cast him out, and he was about to return to his own land.

3 But behold, the voice of the Lord came unto him, that he should return again, and prophesy unto the people whatsoever things should come into his heart.

verse 3 “the voice of the Lord came unto him” In his book Prophecy in Early Christianity and the Ancient Mediterranean World, biblical scholar David E. Aune sets forth the various formulaic expressions that characterize prophetic speech in the Old Testament (see Donald W. Parry, “Thus Saith the Lord: Prophetic Language in Samuel’s Speech,” JBMS 1/1 [1992]:181-83). These expressions serve to formally introduce vital, sacred utterances and to announce that the Lord is the source behind them. The Book of Mormon prophets used the same formulas in their prophetic discourse. This particular expression, “the voice of the Lord came unto him,” is called the revelation formula (e.g., 1 Samuel 15:10; Zechariah 7:1). This expression indicates the origin of the message and the authority of the speaker. For other uses in the Book of Mormon, see verses 5, 7; Jacob 2:11; and Alma 43:24.

“whatsoever things should come into his heart” Here is an acceptable definition of revelation to a prophet of God. Personal revelation is, of course, available to each of the honest in heart as well as to the Lord’s prophets. Unlike the prophet, however, the individual is entitled to revelation concerning issues of his own stewardship. The prophet is entitled to revelations regarding all of the people.

4 And it came to pass that they would not suffer that he should enter into the city; therefore he went and got upon the wall thereof, and stretched forth his hand and cried with a loud voice, and prophesied unto the people whatsoever things the Lord put into his heart.

5 And he said unto them: Behold, I, Samuel, a Lamanite, do speak the words of the Lord which he doth put into my heart; and behold he hath put it into my heart to say unto this people that the sword of justice hangeth over this people; and four hundred years pass not away save the sword of justice falleth upon this people.

verse 5 It is characteristic of the Lord that he never destroys a people without giving them every chance to return to him. As had been his pattern in times past, he sent a prophet (at other times, many prophets) to plead with them to repent and to warn them of the inevitable consequences should they refuse to hear his message.

“four hundred years pass not away save the sword of justice falleth upon this people” While the Book of Mormon account does not end until AD 421 (Moroni 10:1), the destruction of the Nephite people and culture will begin in earnest in AD 385 and will be virtually complete by AD 400 (Mormon 6; 8:2, 6).

6 Yea, heavy destruction awaiteth this people, and it surely cometh unto this people, and nothing can save this people save it be repentance and faith on the Lord Jesus Christ, who surely shall come into the world, and shall suffer many things and shall be slain for his people.

verse 6 “Yea, heavy destruction awaiteth this people” What period of destruction is referred to here? We will learn from 3 Nephi 8 that one period of significant destruction is just prior to the advent of the resurrected Jesus on the western hemisphere which will occur about forty years hence. Apparently, however, Samuel’s warning refers mainly to the great final battles of the Nephites in about AD 385 when they were virtually annihilated by the Lamanites (see the previous verse).

verses 5-6 Some have been bothered by what seems to be a repetitious and poor literary style of these two verses because of the frequent use of the term “this people.”

7 And behold, an angel of the Lord hath declared it unto me, and he did bring glad tidings to my soul. And behold, I was sent unto you to declare it unto you also, that ye might have glad tidings; but behold ye would not receive me.

verse 7 The “glad tidings” are, of course, that Jesus Christ would come into the world, suffer many things, be slain for his people, and make available to all mankind the opportunity of forgiveness from sin and the opportunity to return again to their celestial home (see also Mosiah 3:5).

8 Therefore, thus saith the Lord: Because of the hardness of the hearts of the people of the Nephites, except they repent I will take away my word from them, and I will withdraw my Spirit from them, and I will suffer them no longer, and I will turn the hearts of their brethren against them.

verse 8 “Therefore, thus saith the Lord” Apparently these are the Lord’s own words which were put into Samuel’s heart (see verse 5). These words of the Lord extend through verse 20.

There are actually six different expressions or forms of speech used by prophets in the Book of Mormon to indicate prophetic authority and prerogative. In other words, when a prophet delivers the word of the Lord, he will announce it as such using one of these speech forms. These have been identified and categorized by Donald W. Parry (Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 1/1 [1992], 181-83). They include “Thus saith the Lord” (the messenger formula); “Listen to the words of Christ” (the proclamation formula); “As the Lord liveth” (the oath formula); “Wo be unto” (the Woe formula); “I say unto you” (the announcement formula); and “The word of the Lord came unto me saying” (the revelation formula).

Here the Lord outlines the immediate consequences of the Nephites’ recalcitrance, the withdrawal of the Spirit and the visitation of destruction upon them in battle. In the next verse, he defines the long-term consequence of their disobedience—their eventual annihilation.

9 And four hundred years shall not pass away before I will cause that they shall be smitten; yea, I will visit them with the sword and with famine and with pestilence.

10 Yea, I will visit them in my fierce anger, and there shall be those of the fourth generation who shall live, of your enemies, to behold your utter destruction; and this shall surely come except ye repent, saith the Lord; and those of the fourth generation shall visit your destruction.

verse 10 “there shall be those of the fourth generation who shall live, of your enemies, to behold your utter destruction” This verse may be a bit confusing set in its present context. It actually has reference to a 166-year period following the Lord's appearance to the Nephites on the western hemisphere. Following the Savior's appearance there were many years of general righteousness among the people. This was the "golden age" of the Nephites which lasted until AD 200 (three generations). During this idyllic period men "did deal justly one with another" and "there were not rich and poor, bond and free" (4 Nephi 1:2-3). This period has been referred to as the Nephite "mini-millennium." Following this period (in the "fourth generation") the people began to wax strong in iniquity, and the Lord began to visit them with destruction (3 Nephi 27:32).

11 But if ye will repent and return unto the Lord your God I will turn away mine anger, saith the Lord; yea, thus saith the Lord, blessed are they who will repent and turn unto me, but wo unto him that repenteth not.

12 Yea, wo unto this great city of Zarahemla; for behold, it is because of those who are righteous that it is saved; yea, wo unto this great city, for I perceive, saith the Lord, that there are many, yea, even the more part of this great city, that will harden their hearts against me, saith the Lord.

13 But blessed are they who will repent, for them will I spare. But behold, if it were not for the righteous who are in this great city, behold, I would cause that fire should come down out of heaven and destroy it.

14 But behold, it is for the righteous' sake that it is spared. But behold, the time cometh, saith the Lord, that when ye shall cast out the righteous from among you, then shall ye be ripe for destruction; yea, wo be unto this great city, because of the wickedness and abominations which are in her.

verse 14 "it is for the righteous' sake that it is spared" One is reminded of Abraham's bartering with the Lord over the destruction of Sodom (Genesis 18:23-32).

"when ye shall cast out the righteous from among you, then shall ye be ripe for destruction" The negative metaphor of "ripening" occurs frequently in the Book of Mormon and refers to a fruit's going from ripe to overripe to rotten.

Richard D. Draper has summarized the specific criteria found in the Book of Mormon by which a people may be found by the Lord to be "ripe": (1) when "the voice [the majority] of this people should choose iniquity" (Alma 10:19); (2) when the people "turn aside the just for a thing of naught and revile against that which is good, and say that it is of no worth" (2 Nephi 28:16); (3) when they reject "every word of God" (1 Nephi 17:35); and (4) "when [they] shall cast out the righteous from among [them]" (Journal of Book of Mormon Studies: "Hubris and Ate: A Latter-day Warning from the Book of Mormon," 24).

15 Yea, and wo be unto the city of Gideon, for the wickedness and abominations which are in her.

verse 15 Samuel is preaching on the wall of Zarahemla, yet he specifically condemns the neighboring city of Gideon. One need not doubt that Gideon deserved this special condemnation.

16 Yea, and wo be unto all the cities which are in the land round about, which are possessed by the Nephites, because of the wickedness and abominations which are in them.

17 And behold, a curse shall come upon the land, saith the Lord of Hosts, because of the peoples' sake who are upon the land, yea, because of their wickedness and their abominations.

18 And it shall come to pass, saith the Lord of Hosts, yea, our great and true God, that whoso shall hide up treasures in the earth shall find them again no more, because of the great curse of the land, save he be a righteous man and shall hide it up unto the Lord.

verse 18 The great sin of the Nephites in Zarahemla was that they substituted the love of riches for the love of God.

“whoso shall hide up treasures in the earth shall find them again no more”

There was apparently a well-established Hebrew tradition of burying sacred things in times of peril to keep them safe. For example, the Torah itself was buried when Israel sinned, to be dug up in later times. The Dead Sea Scrolls are another example of how in times of dire peril all those sacred things that had been dedicated, including the holy writings, were buried for safety (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 2, 151-52). We may summarize Samuel's message: Those who set their hearts upon their riches will lose them.

“save he be a righteous man and shall hide it up unto the Lord” Here we gain the impression that the riches are not evil in and of themselves. Rather the evil is in the hearts of those who come to love riches more than they love God. Brother Hugh Nibley observed:

The righteous can be entrusted with unlimited wealth because they do not put their hearts upon it. To his highly prosperous subjects King Benjamin announced, “I . . . have not sought gold nor silver nor any manner of riches of you” (Mosiah 2:12). And his even more prosperous son was never guilty of “seeking for gain, yea, for that lucre which doth corrupt the soul” (Mosiah 29:40). Riches are to be accepted gratefully as a fringe benefit, in the Book of Mormon, but never to be the object of our search: “But the laborer in Zion shall labor for Zion; for if they labor for money they shall perish” (2 Nephi 26:31). The condemnation of the Nephites in the days of wickedness and vengeance is ever that “they have set their hearts upon their riches.” “Ye are cursed because of your riches,” says Samuel the Lamanite, “and also are your riches cursed because ye have set your hearts upon them.” At the very beginning Nephi declares, “But wo unto the rich . . . their hearts are upon their treasures; wherefore, their treasure is their God” (2 Nephi 9:30). And another Nephi at the time of Christ repeats the refrain: “O, how could you have forgotten your God in the very day that he has delivered you? . . . Ye have set your hearts upon the riches and the vain things of this world” (Helaman 7:20-21) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 356).

19 For I will, saith the Lord, that they shall hide up their treasures unto me; and cursed be they who hide not up their treasures unto me; for none hideth up their treasures unto me save it be the righteous; and he that hideth not up his treasures unto me, cursed is he, and also the treasure, and none shall redeem it because of the curse of the land.

verse 19 “Treasures” here may be interpreted in a literal sense as one’s material possessions or in a figurative sense as those things, both animate and inanimate, that are most highly prized by an individual. In a figurative sense, then, to “hide up” one’s treasures to the Lord is to dedicate one’s life to him.

As mentioned in the prior verse, Brother Hugh Nibley has found evidence that the hiding up of treasures is an ancient Israelite practice:

In 2 Baruch, we read an interesting thing. All the treasures of Israel, he says, must be hid up unto the Lord so that strangers may not get possession of them. And in Helaman, where people are rebuked for hiding their private treasures, we read, “They shall hide up their treasures unto [the Lord].” It’s a commandment. . . Later Baruch tells us how “they hid all the vessels of the sanctuary, lest the enemy should get possession of them.” Though this writing was published only since [the Book of Mormon’s publication], a more recent find gives it solid historical dimensions—the famous Copper Scroll, found in Cave Four at Qumran. The significance of this, an important record written on copper alloy sheets and hidden up, is that it was in fact written and prepared with the express purpose of its being hidden up. That’s why it was written, for it contains a record of all the other treasures hidden up to the Lord. Here we have a concrete and indisputable example of an ancient Israelite practice (Temple and Cosmos, 216-17).

20 And the day shall come that they shall hide up their treasures, because they have set their hearts upon riches; and because they have set their hearts upon their riches, and will hide up their treasures when they shall flee before their enemies; because they will not hide them up unto me, cursed be they and also their treasures; and in that day shall they be smitten, saith the Lord.

verse 20 “cursed be they and also their treasures” Again, if we interpret a man’s “treasures” as those things which are ultimately of most importance to him, then this verse avers that if our lives and resources are not used for righteous purposes, we will lose whatever abilities and possessions we have.

21 Behold ye, the people of this great city, and hearken unto my words; yea, hearken unto the words which the Lord saith; for behold, he saith that ye are cursed because of your riches, and also are your riches cursed because ye have set your hearts upon them, and have not hearkened unto the words of him who gave them unto you.

verse 21 Samuel summarizes two reasons why the unrighteous people of Zarahemla are cursed. First, they have set their hearts upon their riches, and secondly, they have a mind-set that they have earned and are entitled to all their material possessions. They do not acknowledge that all things upon the earth are really the Lord's and he only allows us to utilize them while we are here. As Hugh Nibley succinctly puts it: "They simply refused to regard or treat their riches as gifts, but insisted that they were earnings" (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 9, 136).

22 Ye do not remember the Lord your God in the things with which he hath blessed you, but ye do always remember your riches, not to thank the Lord your God for them; yea, your hearts are not drawn out unto the Lord, but they do swell with great pride, unto boasting, and unto great swelling, envyings, strifes, malice, persecutions, and murders, and all manner of iniquities.

verse 22 "Ye do not remember the Lord your God in the things with which he hath blessed you, but ye do always remember your riches" Samuel aptly summarizes the materialism of the Nephites in Zarahemla.

"great pride, unto boasting, and unto great swelling, envyings, strifes, malice, persecutions, and murders, and all manner of iniquities" Materialism seems to automatically and inevitably result in a cascade of additional sins that are itemized here. "Great swelling" is an ostentatious life style. The "persecutions," "murders," and "all manner of iniquities" are the crimes committed for the sake of riches.

23 For this cause hath the Lord God caused that a curse should come upon the land, and also upon your riches, and this because of your iniquities.

verses 22-23 Dr. Hugh Nibley, in his writings, often refers to materialism and the acquisition of material things as "the economy." Through the operation of what Dr. Nibley calls "Samuel's Law," Samuel sets forth the interesting rule that when "the economy" becomes the main and engrossing concern of a society—or as the Book of Mormon states it, when "they begin to set their hearts upon their riches"—the economy will self-destruct, that is they will lose their riches. This is how Samuel puts it: "Ye do always remember your riches . . . your hearts are not drawn out unto the Lord, but they do swell with great pride . . . envyings, strifes, malice, persecutions and murders, and all manner of iniquities." Dr. Nibley states, "Note well the sequence of folly: first we are well pleased with ourselves because of our wealth, then comes the game of status and prestige, leading to competitive maneuvers, hatred, and dirty tricks, and finally the ultimate solution [murders]. Where wealth guarantees respectability, principles melt away as the criminal element rises to the top” (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 349-50).

One may easily notice that considerable attention is given in the Book of Mormon to warnings against the sin of pride or an over-concern with things of the world. Why is this so? Because pride provides incontrovertible evidence that an individual possesses the wrong perspective. Things of the world are all important, and things of the eternities are ignored or worse. Pride is likely the most dangerous trap into which we mortals may fall. Materialism and worldly acquisition is a jealous master who will not be served halfheartedly and will suffer no rival, not even God: “Their treasure is their God” (2 Nephi 9:20). “Ye cannot serve God and Mammon” (Matthew 6:24). There is little reason to doubt that Samuel’s law operates on an individual basis as well in a society of people. That is, one who becomes taken up by his or her material possessions is in danger of losing them—perhaps even before mortal death.

24 Yea, wo unto this people, because of this time which has arrived, that ye do cast out the prophets, and do mock them, and cast stones at them, and do slay them, and do all manner of iniquity unto them, even as they did of old time.

25 And now when ye talk, ye say: If our days had been in the days of our fathers of old, we would not have slain the prophets; we would not have stoned them, and cast them out.

verse 25 The Nephites deceive themselves by saying, “Had we lived in earlier days among those earlier true prophets, we certainly would not have slain them or cast them out.” They imply that their evil actions are justified because their contemporary prophets like Samuel and Nephi were false prophets. It has ever been easier to acknowledge the prophets of old more than the contemporary ones.

26 Behold ye are worse than they; for as the Lord liveth, if a prophet come among you and declareth unto you the word of the Lord, which testifieth of your sins and iniquities, ye are angry with him, and cast him out and seek all manner of ways to destroy him; yea, you will say that he is a false prophet, and that he is a sinner, and of the devil, because he testifieth that your deeds are evil.

verse 26 “Behold ye are worse than they” Samuel’s reference here is to those “of old time” mentioned in verse 24 who “cast out the prophets” and mocked them “and cast stones at them” and did “slay them, and do all manner of iniquity unto them.” The people of Samuel’s day claimed to be better than those who persecuted the prophets in past times. But in fact, the Lord, through his prophet Samuel, avers that they are more wicked.

“you will say that he is a false prophet, and that he is a sinner” “Cursed are all those that shall lift up the heel against mine anointed, saith the Lord, and cry they have sinned when they have not sinned before me, saith the Lord, but have done that which was meet in mine eyes, and which I commanded them. But those who cry transgression do it because they are the servants of sin, and are the children of disobedience themselves” (D&C 121:16-17).

27 But behold, if a man shall come among you and shall say: Do this, and there is no iniquity; do that and ye shall not suffer; yea, he will say: Walk after the pride of your own hearts; yea, walk after the pride of your eyes, and do whatsoever your heart desireth—and if a man shall come among you and say this, ye will receive him, and say that he is a prophet.

verse 27 Here Samuel points out their hypocrisy by describing the type of “prophet” these Nephites were willing to accept. These Nephites were obviously not willing to take the first step of repentance by acknowledging their sins. Instead they assuaged their consciences with the soothing and false counsel of “foolish and blind guides” (verse 29). Anyone who could justify the actions of these wicked Nephites was automatically in their good graces. And he who could sanctify their actions became their prophet.

28 Yea, ye will lift him up, and ye will give unto him of your substance; ye will give unto him of your gold, and of your silver, and ye will clothe him with costly apparel; and because he speaketh flattering words unto you, and he saith that all is well, then ye will not find fault with him.

verse 28 Hugh Nibley comments on this verse: “This is, incidentally, exactly how prophets were treated in Ancient America, where the Chilans (prophets) were held in such high esteem that they were carried on men’s shoulders when they went abroad—lifted up. Another bull’s-eye for the Book of Mormon” (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 344).

29 O ye wicked and ye perverse generation; ye hardened and ye stiffnecked people, how long will ye suppose that the Lord will suffer you? Yea, how long will ye suffer yourselves to be led by foolish and blind guides? Yea, how long will ye choose darkness rather than light?

30 Yea, behold, the anger of the Lord is already kindled against you; behold, he hath cursed the land because of your iniquity.

31 And behold, the time cometh that he curseth your riches, that they become slippery, that ye cannot hold them; and in the days of your poverty ye cannot retain them.

verse 31 “he curseth your riches, that they become slippery” None of their possessions can be kept safe from slipping away from them in their time of spiritual poverty.

32 And in the days of your poverty ye shall cry unto the Lord; and in vain shall ye cry, for your desolation is already come upon you, and your destruction is made sure; and then shall ye weep and howl in that day, saith the Lord of Hosts. And then shall ye lament, and say:

verse 32 “in the days of your poverty” The “days of your poverty” refers to the time when an individual comes to realize that he has sinned and wishes it he had done otherwise. Among the pitiful individuals in spirit prison “there shall be weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth, and this because of their own iniquity, being led captive by the will of the devil” (Alma 40:13).

“your desolation is already come upon you” Desolation is spiritual and emotional ruin, a feeling of abandonment.

“your destruction is made sure” One who has had ample opportunity to hear and accept Jesus and his gospel and yet rejects them has failed the test of mortal probation (see also verse 38). He is sealed up to destruction—spiritual death. One is reminded of the light-minded expression: “His ‘falling and rejection’ is made sure.”

33 O that I had repented, and had not killed the prophets, and stoned them, and cast them out. Yea, in that day ye shall say: O that we had remembered the Lord our God in the day that he gave us our riches, and then they would not have become slippery that we should lose them; for behold, our riches are gone from us.

34 Behold, we lay a tool here and on the morrow it is gone; and behold, our swords are taken from us in the day we have sought them for battle.

35 Yea, we have hid up our treasures and they have slipped away from us, because of the curse of the land.

verses 34-35 Mae Blanch has written: “It is not surprising that in a society where wealth is more important than God, stealing should be raised to a fine art. Theft, fraud, deception, loss of treasure buried to keep it safe would bring the people to poverty—the loss of their false god” (“Samuel the Lamanite” in Studies in Scripture, Volume Eight, Alma 30 to Moroni, 119).

36 O that we had repented in the day that the word of the Lord came unto us; for behold the land is cursed, and all things are become slippery, and we cannot hold them.

37 Behold, we are surrounded by demons, yea, we are encircled about by the angels of him who hath sought to destroy our souls. Behold, our iniquities are great. O Lord, canst thou not turn away thine anger from us? And this shall be your language in those days.

verse 37 “Behold, we are surrounded by demons” The prophet Mormon, in describing the Nephites of his day as possessing the “sorrowing of the damned,” wrote, “And it came to pass that the Nephites began to repent of their iniquity, and began to cry even as had been prophesied by Samuel the prophet; for behold no man could keep that which was his own, for the thieves, and the robbers, and the murderers, and the magic art, and the witchcraft which was in the land” (Mormon 2:10).

38 But behold, your days of probation are past; ye have procrastinated the day of your salvation until it is everlastingly too late, and your destruction is made sure; yea, for ye have sought all the days of your lives for that which ye could not obtain; and ye have sought for happiness in doing iniquity, which thing is contrary to the nature of that righteousness which is in our great and Eternal Head.

verse 38 “your days of probation are past . . . it is everlastingly too late” Samuel delivers a most solemn and ominous warning. In essence, “It is too late to repent. Your destruction will surely occur.”

“ye have sought for happiness in doing iniquity” The humanistic and hedonistic philosophies of men hold that individuals should be free to gratify their own carnal desires, to set their own moral standards, to live for the pleasure of the moment, and to do all of this without guilt. In order to sin without guilt, of course, one must lower his moral standard to correspond with his behavior. This is exactly opposite the true gospel principle, which is that to remove guilt one must repent and lift his behavior to correspond to the Lord’s standard. And inevitably that lifting involves an element of pain. The humanistic and hedonistic philosophies are more comfortable. Among those who espouse these philosophies of men, there is a significant and profound irony: They can never find true happiness. This fact is expounded so often in the scripture that it has become almost trite, yet can there be a fact more profound and more important (Alma 41:10)? True happiness is God’s goal for all his children and may only be found in living according to righteous principles. It is utterly impossible to find it in iniquity. Even so, man goes on stubbornly trying to find happiness in sin (Mormon 2:3). As Paul said of the Jews in his day, “For they being ignorant of God’s righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves to the righteousness of God” (Romans 10:3).

39 O ye people of the land, that ye would hear my words! And I pray that the anger of the Lord be turned away from you, and that ye would repent and be saved.

Helaman Chapter 14

1 And now it came to pass that Samuel, the Lamanite, did prophesy a great many more things which cannot be written.

2 And behold, he said unto them: Behold, I give unto you a sign; for five years more cometh, and behold, then cometh the Son of God to redeem all those who shall believe on his name.

verse 2 It is interesting to note that while the moment of the Savior's second coming to the earth is a carefully kept secret, it is obvious that he, the Lord, had no intention of keeping secret the time of his mortal birth.

Matthew Roper has raised an interesting question: In view of Samuel's obviously specific knowledge about the time of the coming of Christ, why did king Benjamin and the younger Alma not speak more specifically of this date and of the significance of Lehi's six-hundred-year prophecy (1 Nephi 10:4) in their public discourses in the land of Zarahemla? Brother Roper suggests:

The most likely explanation may be that this information was considered a mystery, reserved for the faithful (Alma 12:9-11). Nephite prophets often concealed certain scriptural information from the public at various times in their history, for diverse reasons (Alma 37:27-29; 45:9; 3 Nephi 28:25; Ether 4:1). I would suggest that Samuel's prophecy was considered significant and unique because it was the first public disclosure of the date of Christ's birth among the people of Zarahemla and not because the information was new. The largely negative reaction of the people (Helaman 16:6-23; 3 Nephi 1:4-10) is reason enough for the prophets to have concealed the information so long (Matthew Roper, Review of Books on the Book of Mormon, 366).

We have thus far read of Samuel's making two very specific prophecies. First, he declared, "four hundred years pass not away save the sword of justice falleth upon this people" (Helaman 13:5, 9 cf. Alma 45:10). Here, in this verse, Samuel prophesies, "Behold, I give unto you a sign; for five years more cometh, and behold, then cometh the Son of God to redeem all those who shall believe on his name."

Such precise prophetic predictions are rare in scripture. The only other example in the Book of Mormon, also involving the timing of Christ's birth, is Lehi's and Nephi's 600-year prophecy (see 1 Nephi 10:3; 19:8; 2 Nephi 25:19). Samuel's five-year prophecy was particularly unique. Brant A. Gardner wrote (Second Witness: Analytical and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 5:190): "The specificity of this prophecy is unique in the scriptural canon. Other time-specific prophecies (e.g., that the Messiah would be born six hundred years from Lehi's departure from Jerusalem, and that the Nephites would be destroyed in four hundred years) were uttered about a future so distant that no listener would still be alive. Because six hundred and four hundred are round numbers, they also might be understood by the listeners as generic rather than specific figures. . . . The five-year prophecy, however, is absolute, finite, and testable within the lifetime of virtually all of Samuel's listeners."

Even within Samuel's own discourse, there is another prophecy—the sign of Christ's death—where the exact timing is not mentioned (see Helaman 14:14, 20–27). While Samuel's prophecy in Helaman 14 never mentions the timing of the sign of Christ's death, it is evident from 3 Nephi 8:1–4 that the timing had been revealed to the Nephites at some point. Whether it was Samuel who revealed the timing or someone else is not clear, as it only says that the people "began to look with great earnestness for the sign which had been given by the prophet Samuel" (3 Nephi 8:3). Only the sign, not the timing, is connected to Samuel. Perhaps the timing was revealed by the "just man" who kept the record and "did many miracles in the name of Jesus" (3 Nephi 8:1). It could also have been revealed in some of the "much preaching and prophesying which was sent among them" in the wake of the first sign (3 Nephi 2:10). If it was Samuel, it would appear that Mormon omitted that detail when he copied over Samuel's prophecies, perhaps for the reasons that will be suggested below: the timing did not coincide with a number full of symbolic significance. It seems likely that when the exact timing is included in the record, the timing itself was somehow significant.

All ancient societies had important calendar units or time periods that were carefully marked (For general reference and background on the Mesoamerican calendrical systems, including the "long count"—the tun—system, see Mary Miller and Karl Taube, An Illustrated Dictionary of the Gods and Symbols of Ancient Mexico and the Maya, London, UK: Thames and Hudson, 1993, 48–54; Kaylee Spencer-Ahrens and Linnea H. Wren, "Arithmetic, Astronomy, and the Calendar," in Lynn V. Foster, Handbook to Life in the Ancient Maya World, New York, NY: Oxford University Press, 2002, 250–260; Joel W. Palka, The A to Z of Ancient Mesoamerica, Lanham, MA: Scarecrow Press, 2010, 22–23).

LDS Mesoamericanist John E. Clark noted, "The major cycle of Maya time was a four-hundred-year period called a baktun" (John E. Clark, "Archaeological Trends and Book of Mormon Origins," in The Worlds of Joseph Smith: A Bicentennial Conference at the Library of Congress, ed. John W. Welch, Provo, UT: BYU Press, 2005, 90). Each baktun was broken down into 20 units called a katun, a 20-year cycle, and the katun was subdivided into units called a hotun, which was a five-year cycle (Mark Alan Wright, "Nephite Daykeepers: Ritual Specialists in Mesoamerica and the Book of Mormon," in Ancient Temple Worship: Proceedings of the Expound Symposium, 14 May 2011, ed. Matthew B. Brown, Jeffrey M. Bradshaw, Stephen D. Ricks, and John S. Thompson, Salt Lake City and Orem, UT: Eborn Books and Interpreter Foundation, 2014, 253). According to John L. Sorenson, "Omens and prophecies ... among the Maya were commonly phrased in terms of the beginning or ending of whole calendar units” (John L. Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1985, 274).

In this light, it is significant that both of Samuel the Lamanite’s time-specific prophecies correlate to the specific units of measurement within the Mesoamerican calendrical system. It is important to note that the Nephites need not be using the Mayan calendar to nonetheless recognize the sacred importance of these numbers in the calendaring of their neighbors, and to even be influenced in such a way to as also give weight and import to time cycles of 5, 20, and 400 years themselves. Though commonly referred to as the “Maya” calendar system, it was known throughout Mesoamerica and likely had its origins among the Olmec between 500–400 BC. An early use of this calendar system is attested in 36 BC, on Stela 2 in Chiapa de Corzo, confirming its use in Samuel’s time (See Gardner, Second Witness, 5:177; Foster, Handbook to Life, 36–37). Interestingly, Chiapa de Corzo is in Chiapas, Mexico in the Grijalva River valley, believed by some scholars to be the land of Zarahemla. Chiapa de Corzo is even identified by some scholars as the Nephite city of Sidom (See John L. Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1985, 5–38, 148–167, 197, 204–206; Joseph L. Allen and Blake L. Allen, Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon, revised edition, American Fork, UT: Covenant Communications, 2011, 748–749, 770–772; John L. Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex: An Ancient American Book, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2013, 128, 581–585, 592, 597–598).

As Clark put it, “Samuel the Lamanite warned the Nephites that one baktun ‘shall not pass away before . . . they [would] be smitten’ (Helaman 13:9)” (John E. Clark, “Archaeology, Relics, and Book of Mormon Belief,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 14, no. 2, 2005: 47. Also, Clark, “Archaeological Trends,” 90: “The Book of Mormon records several references to a significant four-hundred-year prophecy, consistent with this idiosyncratic Mesoamerican calendar practice.” In addition to Helaman 13:5, 9, see Alma 45:10; Mormon 8:6; Moroni 10:1).

Another LDS Mesoamericanist, Mark Wright, suggested, “Samuel the Lamanite may have been making a hotun prophecy when he stated that in ‘five years’ signs would be given concerning the birth of Christ (Helaman 14:2)” (Mark Alan Wright, “Nephite Daykeepers: Ritual Specialists in Mesoamerica and the Book of Mormon,” in Ancient Temple Worship: Proceedings of the Expound Symposium, 14 May 2011, ed. Matthew B. Brown, Jeffrey M. Bradshaw, Stephen D. Ricks, and John S. Thompson, Salt Lake City and Orem, UT: Eborn Books and Interpreter Foundation, 2014, 253). Interestingly, according to Sorenson, “In Yucatan at the time of the Spanish conquest, the ruler or his spokesman . . . had the duty to prophesy five years in advance what fate the next twenty-year katun would bring” (John L. Sorenson, “The Book of Mormon as a Mesoamerican Record,” in Book of Mormon Authorship Revisited: The Evidence for Ancient Origins, ed. Noel B. Reynolds, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1997, 409; Sorenson, Mormon's Codex, 193, 440–441). In similar fashion, Samuel the Lamanite prophesied the fate of the next baktun (Helaman 13:5, 9). It is therefore highly significant that Samuel the Lamanite's chronologically precise prophecies each used time periods that were likely important within the broader cultural context of the Nephites. The use of these culturally important time periods likely served to legitimize Samuel's prophetic authority and credibility.

As Sorenson observed, "In Mesoamerican thinking, Alma's and Samuel's prophecies for an entire baktun would have been exceedingly profound statements" (Sorenson, Ancient American Setting, 274). Another Latter-day Saint Mesoamerican expert agreed: "Samuel's prophecy included such a powerfully evocative number that the people would doubtless have considered the entire prophecy highly symbolic" (Gardner, Second Witness, 5:177).

A prophecy of destruction in 400 years—in one baktun—could also be considered a warning of destruction in the here and now. Indeed, Samuel warned that at that very moment, "the sword of justice hangeth over this people," that "the anger of the Lord is already kindled against you," and that the only way out was repentance followed by continuing faith in Jesus Christ (Helaman 13:5–6, 30).

Meanwhile, the hotun was a period commonly celebrated and commemorated. Samuel's prophecy warned the people in advanced that the next hotun would truly be a cause to celebrate—it would mark the birth of the Lord and Savior into the world. Mormon recorded that the coming of the sign did indeed bring "glad tidings unto the people" (3 Nephi 1:26). The occasion was no doubt honored and celebrated for hotuns and katuns to come, not only as marking the birth of Christ but also in commemoration of the miraculous timing of the sign—coming, as it did, just in time to spare the believers from being executed (3 Nephi 1:8–16).

This background also potentially explains why a specific time frame for the sign of Christ's death goes unmentioned in Samuel's prophecy. It did not come at the completion of an important unit of time, as did the birth of Christ (a hotun) and the ultimate fall of the Nephites (a baktun). Mormon, it seems, mentioned the specific time frame of these events when it coincided with time cycles deemed important within the surrounding culture. The prophetic use of highly symbolic time periods in Book of Mormon prophecy appears to be an example of the Lord speaking "unto men according to their language, unto their understanding" (2 Nephi 31:3; cf. Doctrine and Covenants 1:24) (See Mark Alan Wright, "According to Their Language, unto Their Understanding': The Cultural Context Hierophanies and Theophanies in Latter-day Saint Canon," Studies in the Bible and Antiquity, 2011: 51–65).

3 And behold, this will I give unto you for a sign at the time of his coming; for behold, there shall be great lights in heaven, insomuch that in the night before he cometh there shall be no darkness, insomuch that it shall appear unto man as if it was day.

4 Therefore, there shall be one day and a night and a day, as if it were one day and there were no night; and this shall be unto you for a sign; for ye shall know of the rising of the sun and also of its setting; therefore they shall know of a surety that there shall be two days and a night; nevertheless the night shall not be darkened; and it shall be the night before he is born.

5 And behold, there shall a new star arise, such an one as ye never have beheld; and this also shall be a sign unto you.

verse 5 Commenting on this verse, Joseph Fielding McConkie, Robert L. Millet, and Brent L. Top wrote:

There is no Old Testament prophecy on this aspect of the Savior's birth that is comparable to that of Samuel the Lamanite. The nearest allusion is found in the prophecy of Balaam, who, speaking of the Messiah himself, said: "There shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel" (Numbers 24:17). This prophecy obviously refers to the first coming of Christ but does not announce itself as indicating a sign of his birth. The only other related passage is in the book of Revelation, where Christ refers to himself as "the bright and morning star" (Revelation 22:16). The appearance of a star, or of a phenomenon of light accompanying the birth of one destined to a significant role in history, is a common motif in the literature of the ancient Near East. Such legends are but the dim recollection of the lost prophecy of the star that was to announce the Messiah's birth (Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 410).

It is obvious that a prophet or prophets in the Old World had prophesied of this sign, for when the wise men arrived in Judea seeking the Messiah of the Jews, they said, "We have seen his star in the East and have come to worship him" (JST, Matthew 3:2). The implication is that not only they knew of the new star which would bear record of the Messiah's birth, but the Jews in Judea did as well (see also the commentary for 3 Nephi 1:21).

6 And behold this is not all, there shall be many signs and wonders in heaven.

verses 4-6 The fulfillment of these prophecies of Samuel is recorded in 3 Nephi 1.

7 And it shall come to pass that ye shall all be amazed, and wonder, insomuch that ye shall fall to the earth.

8 And it shall come to pass that whosoever shall believe on the Son of God, the same shall have everlasting life.

verse 8 Here is the essence of Samuel's message. All who shall fully accept Christ and his gospel shall be exalted.

9 And behold, thus hath the Lord commanded me, by his angel, that I should come and tell this thing unto you; yea, he hath commanded that I should prophesy these things unto you; yea, he hath said unto me: Cry unto this people, repent and prepare the way of the Lord.

10 And now, because I am a Lamanite, and have spoken unto you the words which the Lord hath commanded me, and because it was hard against you, ye are angry with me and do seek to destroy me, and have cast me out from among you.

11 And ye shall hear my words, for, for this intent have I come up upon the walls of this city, that ye might hear and know of the judgments of God which do await you because of your iniquities, and also that ye might know the conditions of repentance;

12 And also that ye might know of the coming of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Father of heaven and of earth, the Creator of all things from the beginning; and that ye might know of the signs of his coming, to the intent that ye might believe on his name.

verse 12 “Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Father of heaven and of earth, the Creator of all things from the beginning” These twenty-one words seem to be standard sacred terminology used by the Nephites to describe the Savior. Apparently, they were derived from the words given to King Benjamin by an angel of God (see Mosiah 3:8). Samuel likely learned these words from Nephi and Lehi during their ministry among the Lamanites (see Helaman 5:50). We know that the words of Benjamin were especially important to these two missionaries. Their father Helaman had charged them especially to “remember, remember, my sons, the words which King Benjamin spake unto his people” (Helaman 5:4). Lehi and Nephi likely used the precise words of Benjamin in their preaching.

The reference here to Jesus as the “Father” should not be surprising. John A. Widtsoe commented upon this usage:

The title “Father” is used in behalf of Jesus Christ who was commissioned by his Father to create the earth and all things on it. Mosiah, a Book of Mormon prophet, speaks of Jesus Christ as “the Father of heaven and earth” because he was the creator of “all things” as pertaining to the earth (Mosiah 3:8; also Helaman 14:12; Ether 4:7; 2 Nephi 25:12). Adam likewise, being the first man, has been called the father (D&C 29:34). This is not an uncommon use of the word. George Washington is called the father of his country. A man who creates a great business is called the father of the institution. The Indians are said to speak of the great father in Washington. The leader of any cause is frequently referred to as its father (Evidences and Reconciliations, 54-55).

Another aspect of this verse is worth noting. Let us first recall the method of translation used by Joseph Smith as he brought forth the book of Mormon. He dictated his translation to a scribe pausing only to allow the scribe to complete the recording and read it back to him. Once recorded, he did not go back and review or revise the text. At the beginning of each translation session, he simply began exactly where he had left off in the previous session without going back to review. In this verse, Joseph dictated twenty-one words verbatim found also in Mosiah 3:8. How would he have accomplished this unless the Book of Mormon is indeed a literal translation? Can you quote twenty-one words of King Benjamin without looking? This is yet another example of the remarkable internal consistency in the Book of Mormon.

Author's note: A second and careful comparison of Mosiah 3:8 and Helaman 14:12 reveals an extra "of" in the twenty-one-word phrase here in Helaman 14:12. Thus, the phrase in Mosiah contains only twenty words. I will let the above commentary stand, though we must qualify our claim to include the idea that this phrase in Helaman is almost verbatim with that in Mosiah.

Another note of interest: We previously commented on another twenty-one-word phrase quoted by the prophet Alma (see Alma 36:22 and its commentary). It is identical with a phrase originally written by the prophet Nephi, son of Lehi, in 1 Nephi 1:8. In this particular case, the prophet Alma was obviously using a quote from the prophet Nephi that he (Alma) had found on the small plates of Nephi. And in this case, Alma's quoting of Nephi is exact and not simply nearly exact.

The quotation from Mosiah 3:8 in this verse is not the only reference to an earlier prophet found in Samuel's prophecies. Contributions from several scholars demonstrate that Samuel's prophecies—when looked at in their entirety—significantly relied on a variety of prior prophetic teachings, biblical phrases, and prophetic speech patterns.

S. Kent Brown, for example, found that Samuel's prophecies contain poetic laments which noticeably "mirror traits found in Hebrew poetry" (S. Kent Brown, "The Prophetic Laments of Samuel the Lamanite," in From Jerusalem to Zarahemla: Literary and Historical Studies of the Book of Mormon, Provo, UT: Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, 1998, 141). Donald W. Parry has noted, "Six prophetic speech forms" are "present in Samuel's speech" (Donald W. Parry, "'Thus Saith the Lord': Prophetic Language in Samuel's Speech," Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 1, no. 1, 1992: 183. Parry labeled the six prophetic forms as [1] the messenger formula, [2] the proclamation formula, [3] the oath formula, [4] the woe oracle, [5] the announcement formula, and [6] the revelation formula, 181–183). Quinten Barney has argued that Samuel's prophecy drew "heavily upon the words of Zenos as he prophesied concerning the death of Christ" (Quinten Barney, "Samuel the Lamanite, Christ, and Zenos: A Study of Intertextuality," Interpreter: A Journal of Mormon Scripture 18, 2016: 168). And according to Shon Hopkin and John Hilton III, Samuel's use of selected biblical phrases—"saith the Lord," "Lord of Hosts," "signs and wonders," and "anger of the Lord" being "kindled"—in his discourse is consistently found at a higher frequency than for any other speaker in the Book of Mormon (besides biblical authors quoted in the Book of Mormon) (Shon Hopkin and John Hilton III, “Samuel’s Reliance on Biblical Language,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 24, 2015: 50).

Although previous Lamanite missionaries had success preaching in Zarahemla a few years earlier (see Helaman 6:4–5), the Nephites were not as humble and teachable when Samuel, as an excluded visitor, spoke to them from the walls of that very city. Recognizing that they viewed him as an outsider, Samuel declared, “And now, because I am a Lamanite, and have spoken unto you the words which the Lord hath commanded me . . . ye are angry with me and do seek to destroy me” (Helaman 14:10).

Thus, in explaining Samuel’s significant use of biblical language, Hopkin and Hilton suggested, “It may be that as an ‘outsider’ Samuel sought to bolster his authority by using language similar to that found on the brass plates” (Shon Hopkin and John Hilton III, “Samuel’s Reliance on Biblical Language,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 24, 2015: 51). Along a similar line of thought, Samuel’s use of various traditional prophetic speech forms is evidence of his conscious desire to speak in a voice that, according to Parry, was “indicative of prophetic authority and prerogative” (Donald W. Parry, “‘Thus Saith the Lord’: Prophetic Language in Samuel’s Speech,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 1, no. 1, 1992: 183). These modes of expression gave his words a ring of power and truth.

It is also likely that Samuel’s reliance on scriptural language and concepts was intended to evoke certain themes or ideas which were immediately relevant to his own prophecies. For example, Samuel’s quotation of the lengthy name-title of Christ in Mosiah 3:8 could have helped his Nephite listeners recall that Christ’s coming had been prophesied by King Benjamin over a century earlier (see Mosiah 3:5–10).

They would also have remembered that this particular formulaic name had been given to their predecessors as part of an enduring covenant, in order to distinguish them from all other people (see Mosiah 1:11; 5:7–10). Samuel’s utterance of that holy covenantal name may well have surprised and even enraged his hostile listeners.

After having identified seven distinct literary sections in King Benjamin’s famous speech, John W. Welch noted, “The all-important sacred name is given at the very center of section 3 (see Mosiah 3:8), and the crucial terms on which the efficacy of the atonement depend are stated at the precise center of section 4 (Mosiah 3:18–19)” (John W. Welch, “Benjamin’s Speech: A Masterful Oration,” in King Benjamin’s Speech, 69).

Thus, the central importance of this sacred name-title likely held deep religious significance to the Nephites in Zarahemla, whose ancestors unitedly centered their lives on Jesus Christ and covenanted to become His sons and daughters through His atoning sacrifice. Echoing Benjamin’s rhetorical placement of this name at the center of his coronation speech, Samuel placed Christ’s special name-title near the midpoint of his own prophetic judgment speech.

Like Samuel, modern readers of the Book of Mormon can greatly benefit from studying, memorizing, and using the sacred language contained in the canon of LDS scripture. Quoting prophetic language readily lends authority and power to applicable teachings of central importance. Elder Richard G. Scott has taught, “The scriptures provide the strength of authority to our declarations when they are cited correctly. They can become stalwart friends that are not limited by geography or calendar. They are always available when needed. Their use provides a foundation of truth that can be awakened by the Holy Ghost. Learning, pondering, searching, and memorizing scriptures is like filling a filing cabinet with friends, values, and truths that can be called upon anytime, anywhere in the world” (Richard G. Scott, “The Power of Scripture,” Ensign, November 2011, 6, online at lds.org).

13 And if ye believe on his name ye will repent of all your sins, that thereby ye may have a remission of them through his merits.

verse 13 Don’t pass by this verse without pausing to fully appreciate the important and profound truth it contains. This verse defines what it means to “believe on his name.” One who believes on his name is willing to abandon his sins, repent of them, and obey the Lord’s commandments.

14 And behold, again, another sign I give unto you, yea, a sign of his death.

verse 14 “a sign of his death” This prophesied “sign of his death”—actually multiple signs of his death—are described in verses 20-28 of this chapter.

verses 15-19 Let us review briefly the fundamental gospel doctrines that allow us to understand these next few verses. The fall of man has a dual nature—two major aspects or features. The first is the fall or transgression of Adam. The second is the fall of each individual as each commits sin. Adam’s transgression results in (1) physical death—all men born into mortality will eventually suffer physical death. (2) spiritual death—all men are separated from God while here on earth (the so-called “first death”). Neither of these consequences of Adam’s transgression will have permanent consequences for any of God’s children. Man is not to blame for them and therefore will not suffer for them, except temporarily. Christ’s atonement will automatically do away with these consequences of the fall of Adam. All men will be resurrected, and no one will be excluded from the presence of God eternally because of Adam. In addition, each man will, in fact return to the presence of God, and remain there at least long enough to be judged. The fall of each individual, on the other hand, brings about a “permanent” spiritual death, or separation from God, for all men (the so-called “second death”). This separation is permanent at least until each man repents of his sins and receives forgiveness from the Savior. Christ’s suffering in Gethsemane and on the cross qualified him to forgive us of our sins, and he will do so on condition of our repentance.

15 For behold, he surely must die that salvation may come; yea, it behooveth him and becometh expedient that he dieth, to bring to pass the resurrection of the dead, that thereby men may be brought into the presence of the Lord.

verse 15 The Savior's atoning suffering and death were an absolute necessity. We do not have the opportunity for exaltation because of his kindness or goodness or sinlessness or even because of his love for us. We have this opportunity only because he was willing to suffer, bleed, and die—indeed to become our Savior by paying the awful price. This verse also implies that no one may be “brought into the presence of the Lord” to live eternally lest they first be resurrected and receive an eternal body. We know from modern revelation that this will be an eternal celestial body as opposed to the other types of eternal bodies man may receive.

16 Yea, behold, this death bringeth to pass the resurrection, and redeemeth all mankind from the first death—that spiritual death; for all mankind, by the fall of Adam being cut off from the presence of the Lord, are considered as dead, both as to things temporal and to things spiritual.

verse 16 As mentioned in the commentary above, the scriptures speak of two spiritual deaths, the “first death” and the “second death.” Here, the term “first death” refers to that spiritual death or separation from God which is due to Adam's transgression. As we have previously stated, Christ's death and atonement “redeemeth all mankind from the first death” (italics mine). The consequences of Adam's transgression (both the “first death” and the physical death) are automatically overcome or reversed by the Savior's atonement. The “second death” is the separation from God which occurs as a consequence of a man's own sins. This second death is “permanent” as is discussed above, and also below in verse 18 and its commentary.

17 But behold, the resurrection of Christ redeemeth mankind, yea, even all mankind, and bringeth them back into the presence of the Lord.

verse 17 Is “all mankind” really brought back “into the presence of the Lord” by the Savior's death and resurrection? They are, but only temporarily. All men will at least be ushered into the presence of God for a private audience to be judged of him. This is due to an unconditional consequence of the atonement, the overcoming of the “first death.”

18 Yea, and it bringeth to pass the condition of repentance, that whosoever repenteth the same is not hewn down and cast into the fire; but whosoever repenteth not is hewn down and cast into the fire; and there cometh upon them again a spiritual death, yea, a second death, for they are cut off again as to things pertaining to righteousness.

verse 18 “it bringeth to pass the condition of repentance” The Savior’s atonement made repentance possible.

“second death” This term is used several times in the Book of Mormon. It implies an eternal separation from God. This “second death” is the spiritual death that results from man’s own sins. This death is permanent except the man repent. On occasion in scripture the term “second death” may refer to that place of eternal damnation where Satan and his sons live, so-called outer darkness (see also Jacob 3:11). From modern revelation, we now know that the second death will be suffered by all who fail to qualify for exaltation in God’s celestial presence, including those who inherit the terrestrial and telestial kingdoms. On occasion the eternal banishment of a man to outer darkness is referred to as the “third death”—the third spiritual death.

19 Therefore repent ye, repent ye, lest by knowing these things and not doing them ye shall suffer yourselves to come under condemnation, and ye are brought down unto this second death.

20 But behold, as I said unto you concerning another sign, a sign of his death, behold, in that day that he shall suffer death the sun shall be darkened and refuse to give his light unto you; and also the moon and the stars; and there shall be no light upon the face of this land, even from the time that he shall suffer death, for the space of three days, to the time that he shall rise again from the dead.

verse 20 The “sign of his death”—the great destruction, death, and darkness occurring at the time of his crucifixion had been previously prophesied of by Zenos and Nephi (1 Nephi 19:10-11). This specific sign is prophesied to occur only in the New World. A variation of this sign occurred also in the Old World in that there was three hours of darkness following the Savior’s death (Matthew 27:45; Mark 15:33).

21 Yea, at the time that he shall yield up the ghost there shall be thunderings and lightnings for the space of many hours, and the earth shall shake and tremble; and the rocks which are upon the face of this earth, which are both above the earth and beneath, which ye know at this time are solid, or the more part of it is one solid mass, shall be broken up;

22 Yea, they shall be rent in twain, and shall ever after be found in seams and in cracks, and in broken fragments upon the face of the whole earth, yea, both above the earth and beneath.

23 And behold, there shall be great tempests, and there shall be many mountains laid low, like unto a valley, and there shall be many places which are now called valleys which shall become mountains, whose height is great.

24 And many highways shall be broken up, and many cities shall become desolate.

25 And many graves shall be opened, and shall yield up many of their dead; and many saints shall appear unto many.

verse 25 This prophecy of Samuel's was fulfilled in the Old World. Following the resurrection of Christ, "many" of the faithful saints who had lived and died since the days of Adam were resurrected and appeared as special witness of the resurrection unto some who were worthy of their ministrations (Matthew 27:51-53). The Book of Mormon provides no record of this prophecy's having been fulfilled in the New World.

There is some evidence that saints might also have been resurrected in the New World at the time of the Savior's resurrection. During the Savior's visit to the New World following his resurrection, he will point out to the prophet Nephi (the son of Nephi and grandson of Helaman) that there was an important omission regarding resurrection of the saints at the time of the Savior's resurrection in the Nephite scriptural record. The Savior will say to the prophet Nephi, referring to the large and small plates of Nephi:

And it came to pass that he said unto Nephi: Bring forth the record which ye have kept. And when Nephi had brought forth the records, and laid them before him, he cast his eyes upon them and said: Verily I say unto you, I commanded my servant Samuel, the Lamanite, that he should testify unto this people, that at the day that the Father should glorify his name in me that there were many saints who should arise from the dead, and should appear unto many, and should minister unto them. And he said unto them: Was it not so? And his disciples answered him and said: Yea, Lord, Samuel did prophesy according to thy words, and they were all fulfilled. And Jesus said unto them: How be it that ye have not written this thing, that many saints did arise and appear unto many and did minister unto them? And it came to pass that Nephi remembered that this thing had not been written. And it came to pass that Jesus commanded that it should be written; therefore it was written according as he commanded (3 Nephi 23:7-13).

The reader may well be confused at this point. Just what exactly was the Savior pointing out to Nephi that was missing from the Nephite scriptural record? There seem to be two possibilities:

1. The Savior may have been pointing out to the prophet Nephi that Samuel's prophecy itself—that saints would be resurrected at the time of the Savior's resurrection was not included in the Nephite record. If this is true, then this verse (Helaman 14:25) might not have been added until several years following Samuel's prophesying from the wall around Zarahemla. The account in 3 Nephi says that the error was corrected "according as he [the Savior] commanded."

Some Book of Mormon scholars have suggested that this is the most likely possibility. In other words, they have supposed that the omission the Lord is speaking of in 3 Nephi was this particular verse—Helaman 14:25—the prophecy that saints would be resurrected. They have agreed that this verse was inserted years after the account of Samuel's prophecies were originally recorded (D. Lynn Johnson, Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, "The Missing Scripture," 85).

2. The other possibility is that the Savior was pointing out that this prophecy of Samuel's was fulfilled—also in the New World—but its fulfillment was not recorded in the Nephite scriptural record. This possibility is suggested by the fact that in the 3 Nephi account, the Lord's disciples, referring to the words of Samuel, said to the Savior, "they were all fulfilled." If saints had only been resurrected in the Old World, how would the Lord's disciples have known that this prophecy had been fulfilled. Also, the Lord will say in 3 Nephi to the prophet Nephi, "How be it that ye have not written this thing, that many saints did arise and appear unto many and did minister unto them? (italics added)." How could the Lord have expected them to know that saints did arise if they only did so in the Old World. One point against this possibility is that the passage in 3 Nephi does say, "Jesus commanded that it should be written; therefore it was written according as he commanded (3 Nephi 23:13). If saints were resurrected in the New World, we don't have record of it in the Book of Mormon.

Other scholars have suggested that this second possibility is the most likely one. They have supposed that the Savior was pointing out to Nephi that the account of the fulfillment of the prophecy was omitted from the record and not the prophecy itself (McConkie, Millet, and Top, Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, volume IV, 159). They suggest that presumably Nephi made the needed correction on the large plates, but we still do not have the account of the fulfillment of this prophecy in the present-day Book of Mormon.

There is yet a third possibility for the "missing scripture." It will be discussed in the commentary for 3 Nephi 23:6-13.

26 And behold, thus hath the angel spoken unto me; for he said unto me that there should be thunderings and lightnings for the space of many hours.

27 And he said unto me that while the thunder and the lightning lasted, and the tempest, that these things should be, and that darkness should cover the face of the whole earth for the space of three days.

28 And the angel said unto me that many shall see greater things than these, to the intent that they might believe that these signs and these wonders should come to pass upon all the face of this land, to the intent that there should be no cause for unbelief among the children of men—verses 20-28 The fulfillment of these prophecies of Samuel are recorded in 3 Nephi 8.

29 And this to the intent that whosoever will believe might be saved, and that whosoever will not believe, a righteous judgment might come upon them; and also if they are condemned they bring upon themselves their own condemnation.

verse 29 "a righteous judgment might come upon them" Through the process of the atonement, Christ became the perfect judge, capable of meting out “righteous judgment” upon the children of men. For a further discussion of the concept of “righteous judgment” see the section “Just What did happen in Gethsemane and at Calvary” in volume 1, chapter 5, The Essence of the Lord’s Atonement in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine.

30 And now remember, remember, my brethren, that whosoever perisheth, perisheth unto himself; and whosoever doeth iniquity, doeth it unto himself; for behold, ye are free; ye are permitted to act for yourselves; for behold, God hath given unto you a knowledge and he hath made you free.

verse 30 “whosoever perisheth, perisheth unto himself” Whosoever dies a spiritual death is completely responsible for his own fate.

“God hath given unto you a knowledge” Agency alone does not make an individual accountable. He must also have some concept of what is right and wrong. A basic “knowledge” of what is right and what is wrong is given to all men. An important aspect of this propensity for knowing right from wrong is the spirit or light of Christ (Moroni 7:16).

“he hath made you free” The word “free” refers to agency or the doctrine of agency. We often say that God has given to man his agency and that agency is a free gift. Yet, we know that each individual has always possessed agency. It is God’s gift to us in the sense that he has placed us in a situation and setting wherein we may utilize that agency to grow toward godhood. All accountable individuals have their agency and are responsible for their own actions. Speaking of all men, Alma said, “for behold, they are their own judges, whether to do good or do evil” (Alma 41:7). See Agency and Freedom in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 13.

There are three conditions that must exist in order for mortals to be accountable before God (see the commentary for Alma 12:14). These are law, adequate knowledge of the law (including the mental competence to know), and agency. Knowledge of the law is essential. Only when a man is accountable to God is he able to grow spiritually.

31 He hath given unto you that ye might know good from evil, and he hath given unto you that ye might choose life or death; and ye can do good and be restored unto that which is good, or have that which is good restored unto you; or ye can do evil, and have that which is evil restored unto you.

verse 31 Here is yet another reference to the “law of restoration.” The reader may wish to review this most important concept in the introductory commentary for Alma 41.

Helaman Chapter 15

1 And now, my beloved brethren, behold, I declare unto you that except ye shall repent your houses shall be left unto you desolate.

verse 1 “your houses shall be left unto you desolate” This terminology seems to have originated with the prophet Isaiah (see Isaiah 15:9; 23:22). The phrase implies that unless the people repent, the day will come when their beautiful and lavishly adorned homes will be uninhabited. This will occur because their land will be cursed by the Lord and become unproductive, desolate, and uninhabitable.

2 Yea, except ye repent, your women shall have great cause to mourn in the day that they shall give suck; for ye shall attempt to flee and there shall be no place for refuge; yea, and wo unto them which are with child, for they shall be heavy and cannot flee; therefore, they shall be trodden down and shall be left to perish.

verse 2 Donna Lee Bowen and Camille S. Williams have commented on the oft-used biblical imagery of God as the husband and his people as wife:

In a sense, the woman is the image of God's people. The biblical imagery of God as husband and his people as wife is continued in the Book of Mormon, mostly from the writings of Isaiah. Decadent Israel is described as devoid of honorable men, in that they valued women as decorative sex objects (2 Nephi 13:16-26; Isaiah 3:16-26). When God's people become unfaithful to him, they are called “the whore of all the earth” (2 Nephi 10:16). When he calls his people to repentance, the Lord asks rhetorically, “Have I put thee away? . . . Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement?” (2 Nephi 7:1; Isaiah 50:1). The images of a mother too weak to nurse her child and a pregnant woman so near term she is unable to flee destruction are used to motivate the Nephites to repent (Helaman 15:1-2); the woman whose children are lost is the image of desolation (1 Nephi 21:20-21). Those who accept “marriage” with the Lord are to experience joy as abundant as that of a barren woman who becomes a mother of many children, and the Lord consoles his people by saying, “For thy maker, thy husband, the Lord of Hosts is his name” (Encyclopedia of Mormonism, volume 4, “Women in the Book of Mormon,” 1,577).

3 Yea, wo unto this people who are called the people of Nephi except they shall repent, when they shall see all these signs and wonders which shall be showed unto them; for behold, they have been a chosen people of the Lord; yea, the people of Nephi hath he loved, and also hath he chastened them; yea, in the days of their iniquities hath he chastened them because he loveth them.

verse 3 “they have been a chosen people of the Lord” For a discussion of what it means to be a chosen people, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:19-20.

“in the days of their iniquities hath he chastened them because he loveth them” In this last dispensation, the Lord said to his people through Joseph Smith: “Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you whom I love, and whom I love I also chasten that their sins may be forgiven, for with the chastisement I prepare a way for their deliverance in all things out of temptation, and I have loved you” (D&C 95:1).

4 But behold my brethren, the Lamanites hath he hated because their deeds have been evil continually, and this because of the iniquity of the tradition of their fathers. But behold, salvation hath come unto them through the preaching of the Nephites; and for this intent hath the Lord prolonged their days.

verse 4 “the Lamanites hath he hated because their deeds have been evil continually” In our modern terminology, it would be more accurate to say, “The Lord has withdrawn his Spirit from the Lamanites because their deeds have been evil continually.” There is also some scriptural precedent for the idea that if an individual is not obedient, the Father’s love will be withdrawn from him: “If you keep not my commandments, the love of the Father shall not continue with you, therefore you shall walk in darkness” (D&C 95:12). Also, “If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him” (1 John 2:15). But, is not the Lord’s love for us unconditional? Let us consider this interesting question.

Divine love has recently become a subject of some discussion and, I believe, some misunderstanding both in and out of the Church. One round of this discussion seems to have begun with the publication of an article entitled “Divine Love” by Elder Russell M. Nelson (Ensign, February 2003, 20). In his excellent article, Elder Nelson made the point that divine love is, at least in some sense, conditional. He wrote, “While divine love can be called perfect, infinite, enduring, and universal, it cannot correctly be characterized as unconditional” (Ibid.). His article met with considerable criticism from those without the Church who lack a complete understanding of the concept of divine love.

Most all of us carry the intuitive notion that God’s love for us is unconditional. Indeed we have been so taught by apostles and prophets. For example, President Gordon B. Hinckley wrote, “In moments of quiet, we reflect upon [Christ’s] matchless life and His unconditional love for each of us” (LDS Church News, 11 December 1993, 4). Elder Neal A. Maxwell wrote, “[Christ’s] duties have long been galactic, yet He noticed the widow casting in her mite. I am stunned at His perfect, unconditional love of all” (Even As I Am, 115). Elder Joseph B. Wirthlin added, “Faith [in the Lord’s will] turns us toward the Savior, his life, and his unconditional love for us” (Finding Peace in Our Lives, 177). The Family Home Evening Resource Book counsels families to: “Have a scripture search for examples of unconditional love. As you find scriptural examples, draw parallels for your own family so that family members can see how divine unconditional love can be applied in their own lives” (Lesson 17: “Love At Home,” 74). And in an Ensign editorial: "To love completely with a wholeness even as Christ loved, to manifest a mature and unconditional love in all human relations, would minimize many fears" (Editorial: "With an Eye Single to His Glory," Ensign, December 1971, 153).

And yet, Elder Nelson teaches in his article that it is important to acknowledge a part of God's love as conditional and contingent upon our obedience to the Lord's commands.

At first these teachings seem to create an enigma. Is Christ's love unconditional or conditional? The solution to this seeming mystery is a simple one. To completely understand God's love for us, one must recognize and understand two separate types of love under the umbrella of "divine love." These are charity and grace.

Charity. The Book of Mormon prophet Moroni addressed the Lord, "And now I know that this love which thou hast had for the children of men is charity" (Ether 12:34). Christ possesses this attribute, this love called charity, to perfection, and he has commanded that we also strive to acquire it. "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another" (John 13:34). Moroni continues: "Wherefore, except men shall have charity they cannot inherit that place which thou hast prepared in the mansions of thy Father" (Ether 12:34).

Charity is a concern for others that grows and grows and eventually comes to displace our concern for ourselves (Matthew 10:39). Previously, I suggested a test for charity: When you are concerned about the temporal and spiritual welfare of others as much as you are concerned for your own, you have charity.

God's (the Father's and the Son's) charity for us exceeds our ability to comprehend (1 John 4:8). He is our exemplar, the epitome of charity. This is a love he feels passionately. By virtue of this charity he yearns for our spiritual and eternal success. He longs to spend eternity with each of us in his celestial presence (Moses 1:39). This aspect of God's love for us is aptly called unconditional, perfect, infinite, enduring, and universal. It is extended to all humankind (Matthew 5:45; 2 Nephi 26:33; 3 Nephi 12:45). "This is my commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you" (John 15:12). A clear example of charity here on earth is parental love, perhaps especially maternal love.

Grace. The scriptural passages referring to divine love can be confusing if one does not distinguish clearly between those referring to his charity and those referring to his grace. Grace is God's love for us. It is particularly that aspect of his love that impels him to extend to us blessings greater than we actually merit. The concept of God's grace is intimately associated with his responsibility to eventually judge each of us. We often refer to his grace using the closely related word mercy.

In his judgment of us, God (Jesus Christ) is bound by the law of justice which decrees eternal fairness in all eternal matters. When he extends his grace to us, he does so in the form of blessings. He is able to extend to us these blessings by virtue of his atoning sacrifice. When he does this, he extends to us the blessings of his atonement. And again, because of his atoning sacrifice, he is able to “violate” the law of justice and provide us blessings greater than we actually deserve. This is necessary since the law of justice holds that if a man or woman commits a single sin, he or she is no longer eligible to enter the celestial heaven. In fact, a single sin eliminates the possibility of an individual’s entering any degree of glory. But the Savior solved this problem. Because of his atoning sacrifice, the law of justice allows him to forgive sins (to justify those individuals guilty of sin) and render a person again eligible for a kingdom of glory.

While Christ has the capacity to extend infinite grace to us his creatures, he is bound by his sense of justice to extend his grace, his blessings, to us according to our obedience and worthiness. Not everyone will receive a full measure of his grace and become exalted. Some will, according to their worthiness, receive the blessings of his grace to a more limited extent.

We may thus accurately say that this aspect of his love, the blessings we receive according to his grace and mercy, are given conditionally and not unconditionally. We may wish to refer to his grace as infinite because it is wrought by virtue of his infinite atonement. His grace is not, however, infinite in the sense that all of God’s children receive it unconditionally and in full measure.

In the scriptures we also encounter passages that reference this particular aspect of his love, his grace: “He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him” (John 14:21, emphasis added). “Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him” (John 14:23, emphasis added). “If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father’s commandments, and abide in his love” (John 15:10). “If you keep not my commandments, the love of the Father shall not continue with you, therefore you shall walk in darkness” (D&C 95:12). “And he loveth those who will have him to be their God. Behold, he loved our fathers, and he covenanted with them, yea, even Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; and he remembered the covenants which he had made; wherefore, he did bring them out of the land of Egypt” (1 Nephi 17:40). “I love them that love me; and those that seek me early shall find me” (Proverbs 8:17).

Other scriptural passages emphasize that his divine blessings to us, given by virtue of his grace and mercy, are conditional (see 1 Kings 3:14; 6:12; Malachi 3:10; Mosiah 2:22; 3 Nephi 24:10; D&C 85:3; 119:4-5).

God will always love us (extend his charity to us) unconditionally, “regardless.” But he cannot bless us (extend his grace to us) unconditionally.

There is another explanation for the seemingly harsh language used by Samuel with regard to the Lamanites. In ancient societies, according to Raymond Westbrook, “Terms of affect such as ‘love’ [and ‘hate’] are employed in servant-master/vassal-overlord relations” (Raymond Westbrook, “Patronage in the Ancient Near East,” Journal of the Economic and Social History of the Orient 48, no. 2, 2005: 213. For more on suzerain / vassal relations in the Book of Mormon, see RoseAnn Benson and Stephen D. Ricks, “Treaties and Covenants: Ancient Near Eastern Legal Terminology in the Book of Mormon,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 14, no. 1, 2005: 48–61, 128–129).

David Bokovoy explained: “Scholars in recent decades have shown that in the biblical world the word love often represented a covenantal devotion to one’s superior, while its opposite, namely hate, at times signified the status of an individual outside of this affiliation. While the connotation of these words for Westerners usually signifies an intense emotional charge, in the ancient Near East, love and hate often carried the aforementioned unique covenantal connotation.” Bokovoy concluded, “Thus, the words love and hate in the biblical world often carried a deliberate connotation of political alliance (or lack thereof)” (David E. Bokovoy, “Love vs. Hate: An Analysis of Helaman 15:1–4,” Insights: A Window on the Ancient World 22, no. 2, 2002: 2. This was clarified in 1963, when an Ancient Middle Eastern scholar named William L. Moran was reading a text called the Vassal Treaty of Esarhaddon. The Assyrian king Esarhaddon wanted to make sure that those ruling under him would continue to be loyal to his successor, Assurbanipal, so he said to them, “You shall love Assurbanipal as yourselves.” To Moran, this seemed like a strange thing to say. As biblical scholar James Kugel puts it, “Love? Surely the vassals were not being told to become enamored of the future king’s winning personality! It seemed to Moran as if love here must have less to do with emotion than with loyalty, political loyalty.” See James L. Kugel, How to Read the Bible: A Guide to Scripture, Then and Now, New York, NY: Free Press, 2007, 353).

Examples of this usage can be found throughout the Old and New Testaments (See also Deuteronomy 10:12; 11:1, 13, 22; 30:19–20, which all equate love with serving God, just as the vassal serves the suzerain.). In the time of Solomon, for example, Hiram, who was the king of a neighboring state, was described as “a lover of David” (1 Kings 5:1), when Hiram was simply serving under David (Kugel, How to Read the Bible, 354). Jesus taught, “No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon” (Matthew 6:24; 3 Nephi 13:24). This either / or scenario is clarified when God and mammon are thought of as rival suzerains making competing demands on a vassal. See also Malachi 1:2–3, where the Hebrew word for “love” can be understood as referring political alliance. Compare this to a similar statement in Moses 7:20 which makes the point more clearly: “But the Lord said unto Enoch: Zion have I blessed, but the residue of the people have I cursed.” Those in the covenant are blessed; those outside the covenant are not. The vassal can only be loyal (show “love”) to one, which necessarily would betray (show “hate” for) his or her covenant with the other. Thus, an ancient ruler who was serving under Pharaoh could write to the Pharaoh and say, “My lord, just as I love the king my lord, so [does] the king of Nuhasse [love him, and] the king of Ni’I . . . all these kings are servants of my lord.” This letter directly associates loving the king with being a servant to the king. Another such letter describes a civil war by saying: “Behold the city! Half of it loves the sons of ‘Abd-Asirta, half of it [loves] my lord.” These examples demonstrate the close relationship between love and loyalty in antiquity (See Kugel, How to Read the Bible, 354).

As another example of this concept in the Old Testament, Bokovoy referenced the Ephraimites, of whom the Lord declared, “I hated them . . . [and] I will love them no more” because of “the wickedness of their doings” (Hosea 9:15). Bokovoy noted, “in the context of ancient Near Eastern treaties these acts were tantamount to a political insurrection,” thus, “the Ephraimites were removed from God’s covenantal house or family” (Bokovoy, “Love vs. Hate,” 2).

Samuel clearly placed the Lamanites—his own people—on the “hate” side of this divide, noting that their “deeds have been evil continually” due to the “iniquity of the tradition of their fathers” (Helaman 15:4). “Significantly,” remarked Bokovoy, “Samuel uses the verb hate in the same context in which it appears in the book of Hosea. God hated the Lamanites in a parallel manner to the way he hated the Ephraimites: their evil acts had placed them outside the boundary of his covenantal relationship” (Bokovoy, “Love vs. Hate,” 2).

Recognizing that the words love and hate were technical terms used in ancient covenantal expressions, and realizing that God’s hatred, in its scriptural contexts, was about loyal covenantal allegiance (or its opposite) provides important clarification for Samuel’s statement. As Bokovoy explained, “Samuel’s message relates perfectly to the context of ‘love’ and ‘hate’ in the ancient sense of alliance” (Bokovoy, “Love vs. Hate,” 2).

Moreover, when Samuel’s words are read in their entirety, it becomes clear that he was actually aiming to demonstrate God’s ultimate love toward the Lamanites, who were still people of covenant. Samuel described how “salvation hath come unto them” (Helaman 15:4), how they now “do observe to keep his commandments” (verse 5), how “they are striving with unwearied diligence” to preach the gospel (verse 6), how they “believe the holy scriptures” (verse 7), how they “are firm and steadfast in the faith” (verse 8), how “they have buried their weapons of war . . . because of their faith in Christ” (verse 9), and how “the Lord shall bless them and prolong their days, notwithstanding their iniquity” (verse 10).

In short, the Lamanites had rejuvenated their covenant status with the Lord, and Samuel hoped that he could inspire the backsliding Nephites to do the same.

Ultimately, the Lord extends His love, loyalty, and allegiance to all who come unto to Him. In fact, the Book of Mormon repeatedly emphasizes God’s eternal love and mercy for all His children, including the Lamanites (For a small sampling of this theme, see 1 Nephi 17:35; 2 Nephi 26:33; Jacob 3:5–8; Enos 1:13; Mosiah 2:21–22; Alma 26:23–26; Helaman 11:9–17; 3 Nephi 10:5–6; Mormon 6:17; Ether 12:33–34; and Moroni 7:45–48). In both the Old and New Worlds, Jesus commanded His disciples to be like God in doing likewise: “And behold it is written also, that thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy; But behold I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them who despitefully use you and persecute you” (3 Nephi 12:43–44; cf. Matthew 6:43–44).

Thus, when taken in its proper ancient scriptural context, Samuel’s prophetic forewarning actually demonstrates the preeminence of God’s eternal love for all of His children—especially His willingness to forgive those who, like the Lamanites, have committed grave sins.

“the iniquity of the tradition of their fathers” See the commentary for Enos 1:14 and Mosiah 10:12–17. See also verses 7 and 15 of this chapter.

verses 1–4 David E. Bokovoy has proffered an explanation for Samuel’s use of the words hate and love in these verses (FARMS Insights, volume 22, 2002). A literary genre found in ancient Hebrew writings is based on the “suzerainty treaty” of ancient Israel (pronounced with emphasis on the first syllable—soo’ za rin tē). This is a treaty that exists between a vassal Lord, the suzerain, and his subjects. In this relationship, the subject was required to love the suzerain with all his heart. This love implied more of a political commitment rather than an emotional attachment. Loving the suzerain with all one’s heart signified the severance of all other political allegiances. In writing of the relationship of Yahweh to Israel, prophet writers sometimes utilized the idea of the “suzerainty treaty” in which Yahweh was the suzerain Lord and the people of Israel were his subjects.

Scholars in recent decades have shown that in the biblical world the word love often represented a covenantal devotion to one’s superior, while its opposite, namely hate, at times signified the status of an individual outside of this affiliation. While the connotation of these words for Westerners usually signifies an intense emotional charge, in the ancient Near East, love and hate often carried the aforementioned unique covenantal connotation (for an example, see Hosea 9:15). The words love and hate in the biblical world often carried a deliberate connotation of political alliance (or lack thereof).

In these verses wherein Samuel the Lamanite describes God’s love and hatred, there seems to be conveyed a specific nuance derived from the world of antiquity. When Samuel presents his inspired message to the people of Nephi, he declares, “They [the Nephites] have been a chosen people of the Lord; yea, the people of Nephi hath he loved” (verse 3). With these words, Samuel attempts to remind the Nephites that they have traditionally served as God’s covenant people. In this relationship, the Lord has acted as the Nephite suzerain from whom the people of Nephi have received reciprocal “love.” In contrast, Samuel presents his own people, the Lamanites, as those whom God “hath hated because their deeds have been evil continually” (verse 4). Significantly, Samuel uses the verb hate in the same context in which it appears in the book of Hosea (see again, Hosea 9:15). God hated the Lamanites in a parallel manner to the way he hated the Ephraimites: their evil acts had placed them outside the boundary of his covenantal relationship. While some modern readers have expressed concern regarding this apparently harsh statement preserved in the Book of Mormon, Samuel’s message relates perfectly to the context of “love” and “hate” in the ancient sense of alliance.

verses 5-9 In these verses Mae Blanch has found evidence of the Lamanites’ true repentance according to the criteria set forth by President Spencer W. Kimball (“Samuel the Lamanite” in Studies in Scripture, Volume Eight, Alma 30 to Moroni, 121-22). These criteria include: (1) sorrow for sin (verse 9); (2) abandonment of sin (verse 5); (3) confession of sin; (4) restitution for sin (verses 6, 9); and (5) doing the will of the Lord (verses 5, 7).

5 And I would that ye should behold that the more part of them are in the path of their duty, and they do walk circumspectly before God, and they do observe to keep his commandments and his statutes and his judgments according to the law of Moses.

verse 5 “they do observe to keep his commandments and his statutes and his judgments according to the law of Moses” The righteous Lamanites and the righteous Nephites will be observers of the law of Moses until that law is superseded at the time of the Savior’s personal visit to the Book of Mormon people in the land Bountiful. During his visit the Lord will declare that the law (the Mosaic law) had been given by him (3 Nephi 15:4-5).

6 Yea, I say unto you, that the more part of them are doing this, and they are striving with unwearied diligence that they may bring the remainder of their brethren to the knowledge of the truth; therefore there are many who do add to their numbers daily.

verse 6 Regarding the concept of “unwearied diligence,” Elder Neal A. Maxwell wrote: “With enduring comes a willingness . . . to ‘press forward’ (2 Nephi 31:20) even when we are bone-weary and would much rather pull off to the side of the road” (Men and Women of Christ, 70). Elder Maxwell taught further: “Few balances are more difficult to strike than achieving equipoise between the counsel of the Lord to guard against running faster than we have strength and means (Mosiah 4:27; D&C 10:4), and his counsel to display ‘unwearied diligence’ in our discipleship. It would be both foolish and untrue to suggest that discipleship is free of physical fatigue—clearly it is not. There are unmistakable times when ‘the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak’

(Matthew 26:41). However, part of enduring well to the end includes moving forward, even when we are truly physically fatigued. Even so, it includes as well those moments when the need for renewal through rest, repose, or respite calls for ‘sacred idleness’” (We Will Prove Them Herewith, 100).

7 And behold, ye do know of yourselves, for ye have witnessed it, that as many of them as are brought to the knowledge of the truth, and to know of the wicked and abominable traditions of their fathers, and are led to believe the holy scriptures, yea, the prophecies of the holy prophets, which are written, which leadeth them to faith on the Lord, and unto repentance, which faith and repentance bringeth a change of heart unto them—

8 Therefore, as many as have come to this, ye know of yourselves are firm and steadfast in the faith, and in the thing wherewith they have been made free.

9 And ye know also that they have buried their weapons of war, and they fear to take them up lest by any means they should sin; yea, ye can see that they fear to sin—for behold they will suffer themselves that they be trodden down and slain by their enemies, and will not lift their swords against them, and this because of their faith in Christ.

verse 9 “they have buried their weapons of war, and they fear to take them up lest by any means they should sin” Presumably Samuel makes reference here to the Anti-Nephi-Lehies (see Alma 23 and 24), though this same pattern of conversion might have occurred with other Lamanites, including those converted by Nephi, the son of Helaman, and his brother Lehi, even down to the time of Samuel. This pattern consists of accepting the prophesied Christ, rejecting their former lifestyles, taking upon themselves a covenant of pacifism, and burying their weapons and renouncing warfare.

10 And now, because of their steadfastness when they do believe in that thing which they do believe, for because of their firmness when they are once enlightened, behold, the Lord shall bless them and prolong their days, notwithstanding their iniquity—verse 10 “the Lord shall bless them and prolong their days, notwithstanding their iniquity” This statement of Samuel’s is a future reference to the Lamanites and their descendants as a people. It does not refer to any individual Lamanite, since any individual who accepts Christ and truly repents of his sins is forgiven of those sins and does not have to be blessed “notwithstanding [his] iniquity.”

11 Yea, even if they should dwindle in unbelief the Lord shall prolong their days, until the time shall come which hath been spoken of by our fathers, and also by the prophet Zenos, and many other prophets, concerning the restoration of our brethren, the Lamanites, again to the knowledge of the truth—verse 11 We know the Lord will never completely abandon the remnants of the Lamanites and allow them to be annihilated. Zenos did prophesy of the time in the latter days when all of the rebellious Israelites, including the remnants of the Lamanites would return to the fold (1 Nephi 19:15- 17).

12 Yea, I say unto you, that in the latter times the promises of the Lord have been extended to our brethren, the Lamanites; and notwithstanding the many afflictions which they shall have, and notwithstanding they shall be driven to and fro upon the face of the earth, and be hunted, and shall be smitten and scattered abroad, having no place for refuge, the Lord shall be merciful unto them.

verse 12 “in the latter times” This expression refers to our dispensation, the dispensation of the fulness of times.

13 And this is according to the prophecy, that they shall again be brought to the true knowledge, which is the knowledge of their Redeemer, and their great and true shepherd, and be numbered among his sheep.

14 Therefore I say unto you, it shall be better for them than for you except ye repent.

verse 14 The Lord’s covenants contain great blessings for those who enter into and continue faithful to them. They also include cursings for those who do not live up to them. The greater the blessings offered, the more grave the cursings. The Nephites had been promised by the Lord that if they were faithful, nothing on earth could in any way ever mar their liberty, security, prosperity, and happiness: “And now there was nothing in all the land to hinder the people from prospering continually, except they should fall into transgression” (3 Nephi 6:5). This lofty promise was matched by a promise of total extinction in case they should fail to comply with the conditions of the covenant.

15 For behold, had the mighty works been shown unto them which have been shown unto you, yea, unto them who have dwindled in unbelief because of the traditions of their fathers, ye can see of yourselves that they never would again have dwindled in unbelief.

16 Therefore, saith the Lord: I will not utterly destroy them, but I will cause that in the day of my wisdom they shall return again unto me, saith the Lord.

verses 15-16 We have previously discussed the fact that the Lamanites will never be completely destroyed from off the earth (see the commentary for Helaman 7:24). Here is reiterated at least part of the reason. Because they had not the same spiritual advantages as the Nephites (prophets, scripture, righteous traditions of their fathers) they are not under the same condemnation as the Nephites. Not only will they not be destroyed, but in the latter days (“the day of my wisdom”), some of them will repent and join the Church of Jesus Christ.

17 And now behold, saith the Lord, concerning the people of the Nephites: If they will not repent, and observe to do my will, I will utterly destroy them, saith the Lord, because of their unbelief notwithstanding the many mighty works which I have done among them; and as surely as the Lord liveth shall these things be, saith the Lord.

verse 17 “as the Lord liveth shall these things be” The Lord swears a solemn oath to destroy the Nephite people and culture lest they repent.

Helaman Chapter 16

1 And now, it came to pass that there were many who heard the words of Samuel, the Lamanite, which he spake upon the walls of the city. And as many as believed on his word went forth and sought for Nephi; and when they had come forth and found him they confessed unto him their sins and denied not, desiring that they might be baptized unto the Lord.

verse 1 “they confessed unto him their sins and denied not” They truly repented.

2 But as many as there were who did not believe in the words of Samuel were angry with him; and they cast stones at him upon the wall, and also many shot arrows at him as he stood upon the wall; but the Spirit of the Lord was with him, insomuch that they could not hit him with their stones neither with their arrows.

3 Now when they saw that they could not hit him, there were many more who did believe on his words, insomuch that they went away unto Nephi to be baptized.

4 For behold, Nephi was baptizing, and prophesying, and preaching, crying repentance unto the people, showing signs and wonders, working miracles among the people, that they might know that the Christ must shortly come—

5 Telling them of things which must shortly come, that they might know and remember at the time of their coming that they had been made known unto them beforehand, to the intent that they might believe; therefore as many as believed on the words of Samuel went forth unto him to be baptized, for they came repenting and confessing their sins.

verse 5 “Telling them of things which must shortly come” Nephi explained to the people the signs of the Lord’s coming—those miraculous happenings which foretold the imminent birth of the Savior.

“that they might know and remember at the time of their coming that they had been made known unto them beforehand” We might rephrase this passage for clarity, “that the people who witness the signs of the coming of the Lord might recall that Nephi had prophesied of them.” Thus, those people would recognize them—the signs—for what they are.

6 But the more part of them did not believe in the words of Samuel; therefore when they saw that they could not hit him with their stones and their arrows, they cried unto their captains, saying: Take this fellow and bind him, for behold he hath a devil; and because of the power of the devil which is in him we cannot hit him with our stones and our arrows; therefore take him and bind him, and away with him.

7 And as they went forth to lay their hands on him, behold, he did cast himself down from the wall, and did flee out of their lands, yea, even unto his own country, and began to preach and to prophesy among his own people.

8 And behold, he was never heard of more among the Nephites; and thus were the affairs of the people.

verse 8 One interesting fact we may derive from this verse is that Samuel did not write the account of his own story in the Book of Mormon record. He could not have since he jumped from the wall, fled, and was never seen again among the Nephites. The account was somehow retrieved and recorded by the prophet Nephi onto the large plates of Nephi.

9 And thus ended the eighty and sixth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi.

10 And thus ended also the eighty and seventh year of the reign of the judges, the more part of the people remaining in their pride and wickedness, and the lesser part walking more circumspectly before God.

11 And these were the conditions also, in the eighty and eighth year of the reign of the judges.

12 And there was but little alteration in the affairs of the people, save it were the people began to be more hardened in iniquity, and do more and more of that which was contrary to the commandments of God, in the eighty and ninth year of the reign of the judges.

13 But it came to pass in the ninetieth year of the reign of the judges, there were great signs given unto the people, and wonders; and the words of the prophets began to be fulfilled.

14 And angels did appear unto men, wise men, and did declare unto them glad tidings of great joy; thus in this year the scriptures began to be fulfilled.

verse 14 “angels did appear unto men, wise men” Here, Mormon declares that “the scriptures began to be fulfilled” when angels started to appear to the people in the ninetieth year of the reign of the judges (Helaman 16:14). In making this statement, one of the scriptures that Mormon may have been referring to is Alma 13:26, in which Alma declared that the coming of Christ “shall be made known unto just and holy men, by the mouth of angels,” just as it had been made known unto their fathers.

Mention of the appearance of angels bringing information concerning the coming of the Savior into the world recurs frequently in the Book of Mormon. In 1 Nephi 11–14, an angel interpreted for Nephi the vision of his father, Lehi, and showed him the coming of Christ into the world and the fulfillment of Christ’s mission among mortals. Nephi wrote that an angel had told him (or his father) that “the God of Israel” would come six hundred years from the time that Lehi left Jerusalem (1 Nephi 19:8). An angel told Nephi’s brother, Jacob, that the Lord God, the Holy One of Israel, would come in the flesh to the Jews at Jerusalem and that they would scourge and crucify Him (2 Nephi 6:9). 2 Nephi 10:3 records a revelation to Jacob in which an angel told him that the One whose coming he was shown would be called “Christ” (See the commentary for 2 Nephi 10:3). Similarly, Nephi related that, according to “the angel of God, his name shall be Jesus Christ, the Son of God” (2 Nephi 25:19).

King Benjamin, in his great speech to his people, told of how an angel had come to him and declared the “glad tidings of great joy,” of how “the Lord Omnipotent who reigneth, who was, and is from all eternity to all eternity, shall come down from heaven among the children of men” (Mosiah 3:5), and that He would perform great miracles, including the atoning sacrifice and the Resurrection (verses 3–11).

When the coming of the expected Savior was finally near, the Book of Mormon record indicates that the scriptures began to be fulfilled, and angels began (again) to appear to “wise men” (Helaman 16:14). There is an interesting parallel here with the “wise men” that followed the star to Christ’s birthplace in Matthew 2:1–12. According to some early Christian traditions, the “star” that “went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was” (Matthew 2:9) was actually an angel (angels are often associated with stars in the literature) (See Dale C. Allison, Studies in Matthew: Interpretation Past and Present, Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Academic, 2005, 17–41).

One of these “wise men” to which angels began to appear was the prophet and high priest Nephi, son of Nephi, grandson of Helaman, of whom the record states that “so great was his faith on the Lord Jesus Christ that angels did minister unto him daily” (3 Nephi 7:18).

Why did Mormon interrupt his narrative to specify that angels began to appear to wise men? The fact that angels had come to Nephite prophets in the past and were prophesied to come in the future must have been generally known in Nephite societies. For example, when Aaron preached about Christ to the Amlicites (a group of Nephite apostates) in Alma 21, even they immediately supposed that he had received an angelic visit. Alma 21:5 states that “there arose an Amlicite and began to contend with him, saying: “What is that thou hast testified? Hast thou seen an angel?” This is an emended rendering of the verse, as found in Royal Skousen, ed., The Book of Mormon: The Earliest Text (New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 2009, 356).

On an earlier occasion, Alma had reminded his opponents in Ammonihah of another reason why angels are sent. The Lord sends angels to mortals because of their “faith and repentance and their holy works” (Alma 12:30; cf. Alma 11:31).

Mormon likely had episodes such as one in Helaman 16 in mind at the time when he summarized the several reasons why God sent angels to declare the coming of Christ: “For behold, God . . . sent angels to minister unto the children of men, to make manifest concerning the coming of Christ . . . Wherefore, by the ministering of angels, and by every word which proceeded forth out of the mouth of God, men began to exercise faith in Christ . . . and thus it was until the coming of Christ (Moroni 7:22, 25).

Mormon knew that our merciful Father in Heaven desired that His children have the ability to recognize the signs of the coming of Christ, whether it was in the time of father Lehi, the prophet Samuel, in Mormon's own time, or in the days leading up to Christ's Second Coming. Our unchanging God would always send angels to visit worthy individuals who would have the faith, strength, and wisdom (hence "wise men") to declare the "glad tidings" and fortify the faith of those who have not had the same eye-witness manifestation.

15 Nevertheless, the people began to harden their hearts, all save it were the most believing part of them, both of the Nephites and also of the Lamanites, and began to depend upon their own strength and upon their own wisdom, saying:

16 Some things they may have guessed right, among so many; but behold, we know that all these great and marvelous works cannot come to pass, of which has been spoken.

verses 15-16 Here is a typical reaction of a spiritually unresponsive individual to the fulfillment of prophecy. He says, in effect, "We can account for these few things by mere coincidence—the prophets simply "guessed right" in a few instances. Wait and see. Not all of the prophecies will come to pass."

17 And they began to reason and to contend among themselves, saying:

18 That it is not reasonable that such a being as a Christ shall come; if so, and he be the Son of God, the Father of heaven and of earth, as it has been spoken, why will he not show himself unto us as well as unto them who shall be at Jerusalem?

verse 18 "it is not reasonable that such a being as a Christ shall come" These unrighteous Nephites feel that the prophecies of Christ's birth are simply absurd and unscientific.

19 Yea, why will he not show himself in this land as well as in the land of Jerusalem?

verses 18-19 Though these unbelievers had been told that Christ would appear to the Nephites, they appear to be unaware of that fact. This selective inattention is also typical of the spiritually unresponsive.

20 But behold, we know that this is a wicked tradition, which has been handed down unto us by our fathers, to cause us that we should believe in some great and marvelous thing which should come to pass, but not among us, but in a land which is far distant, a land which we know not; therefore they can keep us in ignorance, for we cannot witness with our own eyes that they are true.

verse 20 "behold, we know that this is a wicked tradition, which has been handed down unto us by our fathers" Part of the Nephite "tradition of the fathers" has become the prophecies of the coming of the Savior. Here it is referred to as a “wicked tradition” by the Nephite unbelievers. Their claim of wickedness for this tradition seems based on the fact that since Christ is prophesied to be born in a distant land, then the validity of the “tradition” or prophecy cannot be verified.

21 And they will, by the cunning and the mysterious arts of the evil one, work some great mystery which we cannot understand, which will keep us down to be servants to their words, and also servants unto them, for we depend upon them to teach us the word; and thus will they keep us in ignorance if we will yield ourselves unto them, all the days of our lives.

verse 21 The pronouns “they,” “their,” and “them” refer to the traditions of the Nephite fathers. Obviously, the unbelieving Nephites are paranoid about the powers of these traditions. This paranoia likely stems from their ambivalent feelings about these traditions. Deep in their hearts, they have a nagging feeling, indeed a fear, that they are true.

“thus will they keep us in ignorance if we will yield ourselves unto them, all the days of our lives” They are saying, “we need to think for ourselves and not just believe blindly in these foolish traditions.”

22 And many more things did the people imagine up in their hearts, which were foolish and vain; and they were much disturbed, for Satan did stir them up to do iniquity continually; yea, he did go about spreading rumors and contentions upon all the face of the land, that he might harden the hearts of the people against that which was good and against that which should come.

verse 22 It was likely not difficult for Satan to convince these non-believing Nephites that those signs and wonders that signaled the coming of the Lord were nothing but a plot meant to deceive them.

23 And notwithstanding the signs and the wonders which were wrought among the people of the Lord, and the many miracles which they did, Satan did get great hold upon the hearts of the people upon all the face of the land.

24 And thus ended the ninetieth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi.

25 And thus ended the book of Helaman, according to the record of Helaman and his sons.

verse 25 The book of Helaman ends just one year before the birth of Christ.

Third Nephi
The Book of Nephi
The Son of Nephi, who was the Son of Helaman

And Helaman was the son of Helaman, who was the son of Alma, who was the son of Alma, being a descendant of Nephi who was the son of Lehi, who came out of Jerusalem in the first year of the reign of Zedekiah, the king of Judah.

The original author of the book of Third Nephi is Nephi who will become the chief disciple of Jesus. The prophet Mormon also contributed.

Chapter Outline of 3 Nephi

A brief outline of the book of 3 Nephi, worth committing to memory, is as follows:

3 Nephi 1 Signs of Christ's birth—"At the going down of the sun there was no darkness."

3 Nephi 3-4 The Nephites gather themselves together to defend themselves against the Gadianton band led by Giddianhi and then Zemnarihah. The Nephites are led by the Chief Judge Lachoneus and the military captain Gidgiddoni. The Gadianton band is eventually defeated. Zemnarihah is hanged from a tree, and then the tree is felled.

3 Nephi 8 Signs of Christ's crucifixion—great destruction throughout the land.

3 Nephi 9-10 The Lord's voice is heard out of the darkness following the period of destruction at the time of the Savior's crucifixion.

3 Nephi 11-28 Christ's Ministry Among the Nephites at Bountiful

3 Nephi 12-14 Jesus's Sermon at the Temple in Bountiful

3 Nephi 20 Isaiah 52

3 Nephi 22 Isaiah 54

Scripture Mastery

3 Nephi 1 The signs of Christ's birth—"At the going down of the sun there was no darkness."

While describing the contents of the Book of Mormon in a First Presidency message in 2004, President Gordon B. Hinckley said, "It contains what has been described as the fifth Gospel, a moving testament of the New World concerning the visit of the resurrected Redeemer on the soil of this hemisphere” (President Gordon B. Hinckley, “Four Cornerstones of Faith,” Ensign, February 2004, online at lds.org. See also President Gordon B. Hinckley, “The Cornerstones of Our Faith,” Ensign, November 1984, online at lds.org).

In April 1904, B. H. Roberts mentioned that some debated whether “fifth Gospel” was an appropriate designation of 3 Nephi, demonstrating the idea originated at least a century earlier than President Hinckley’s use (See B. H. Roberts, Conference Report, April 1904, 16).

Gospel literally means “good news,” and so in one sense 3 Nephi is a “gospel” because—along with Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John—it declares the good news of Christ’s Atonement and resurrection (Gaye Strathern and Andrew C. Skinner, “Introduction,” in Third Nephi: An Incomparable Scripture, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2012, viii: “All five Gospels testify that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. They are Gospels because they all declare the ‘good news’ that the atonement of Jesus Christ makes salvation available to all who come unto him with faith, repentance, baptism, the sanctifying power of the Holy Ghost, and by enduring to the end, 3 Nephi 27:13–21.” Interestingly, according to Christopher M. Tuckett, “Within first-century Christianity, the term ‘gospel’ was used to refer to the Christian kerygma centering on in the death and resurrection of Jesus.” See Christopher M. Tuckett, “Introduction to the Gospels,” in Eerdmans Commentary on the Bible, ed. James D. G. Dunn and John W. Rogerson, Grand Rapids, MI: Wm. B. Eerdmans, 2003, 989. In 3 Nephi 27:13–15, Jesus likewise defined gospel as centering on His death and resurrection, thus making the Book of Mormon usage authentic to the first-century AD. See also Andrew C. Skinner, “Jesus’s Gospel-Defining Discourse in 3 Nephi 27:13–21: Doctrinal Apex of His New World Visit,” in Incomparable Scripture, 281–307). As a literary genre, though, gospel is somewhat difficult to define (See Tuckett, “Introduction to the Gospels,” 990–993. See also Christopher Tuckett, “Gospel, Gospels,” in Eerdmans Dictionary of the Bible, ed. David Noel Freedman, Grand Rapids, MI: Wm. B. Eerdmans, 2000, 522–524; Mark Allan Powell, “The Gospels,” in Harper Collins Bible Dictionary, revised and updated, ed. Mark Allan Powell, San Francisco, CA: Harper One, 2011, 338–340). Broadly speaking, gospels are texts which focus on the life, teachings, and miracles of Jesus.

Beyond the four canonical gospels, there are additional early Christian texts dubbed “gospels,” such as the Gospel of Mary, the Infancy Gospel of James, the Gospel of Nicodemus (The Acts of Pilate), the Gospel of the Ebionites, the Gospel of the Hebrews, the Gospel of the Nazareans, the Gospel of Thomas, and the Gospel of Philip. Some of these deal mostly with the post-resurrection acts and teachings of Christ, similar to 3 Nephi (Tuckett, “Introduction to the Gospels,” 989–990 mentions some of these. Literature on the post-resurrection ministry of Christ in the Old World is frequently considered to be a genre unto itself, called the 40-day literature, since Christ's post-resurrection ministry was 40 days. See Hugh Nibley, Mormonism and Early Christianity, The Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, Volume 4, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1987, 10–44. A listing with information about each of these documents is available at fortydayministry.com). Hugh Nibley compared the 3 Nephi account with many of these early Christian post-resurrection traditions and felt that 3 Nephi fit so naturally within that body of literature that “with the title removed, any scholar would be hard put to detect its irregular origin” (Hugh W. Nibley, “Two Shots in the Dark,” in Book of Mormon Authorship: New Light on Ancient Origins, ed. Noel B. Reynolds, Provo, UT: Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, 1982; reprinted by FARMS, 1996, 123; reprinted in Hugh Nibley, The Prophetic Book of Mormon, The Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, Volume 8, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1989, 409).

Nibley's work might suggest that 3 Nephi is a “gospel” within the meaning and tradition given to that genre by early Christians. Yet the designation as a fifth Gospel carries greater weight, suggesting it belongs within the same class as the four canonized Gospels, which, as New Testament scholar Christopher M. Tuckett observed, are quite different from the non-canonized gospels (Tuckett, “Introduction to the Gospels,” 990: “Thus the Gospels which were finally placed in the [New Testament] canon are rather different in kind from the ones that were not.”).

The four Gospels are of course somewhat different within themselves, but a number of points neatly suggest that 3 Nephi has a place alongside them. Some examples include:

- Much like Matthew and Luke, 3 Nephi begins with the fulfillment of prophesied signs of the Savior's birth (3 Nephi 1; cf. Matthew 1–2; Luke 1–2) (Andrew C. Skinner, Third Nephi: The Fifth Gospel, Springville, UT: Cedar Fort, 2012, 5–9).
- Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John all mention John the Baptist, the forerunner sent to prepare the way for Christ in the Old World (Matthew 3; Mark 1; Luke 3; John 1). 3 Nephi likewise records the ministry of a forerunner who baptizes among the Nephites—the prophet Nephi, son of Nephi (3 Nephi 7:15–26) (See the commentary for 3 Nephi 7:23-24).
- Just as Jesus did, Nephi cast out devils, healed the sick, and even raised his brother from dead. As the Savior's New World forerunner, Nephi preformed his miracles “in the name of Jesus” (3 Nephi 7:19–22). Thus, as New Testament scholar Krister Stendahl put it, 3 Nephi “transposes the ministry of Jesus into a ministry of Nephi, a man of miracles in the name of Jesus” (Krister Stendahl, “The Sermon on the Mount and Third Nephi,” in Reflections on Mormonism: Judaeo-Christian Parallels, Provo, UT: Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, 1978, 141).
- Matthew, Mark, and Luke all record the Father bearing witness of the Son (See Matthew 3:17; 17:5; Mark 1:11; 9:7; Luke 3:22; 9:35), as does 3 Nephi 11:7).

- Just as all four Gospels document the death and crucifixion of Jesus (Matthew 27; Mark 15; Luke 23; John 19), 3 Nephi records the fulfillment of prophesied signs confirming the Savior's death and three days in the tomb (3 Nephi 8–10) (See Skinner, Fifth Gospel, 9–19. See also the commentary on 3 Nephi 8:20). The 3 Nephi account may even help clarify the timeline of Christ's entombment, since the account of the destruction adds information about the timing and duration Christ's death (David B. Cummings, "Three Days and Three Nights: Reassessing Jesus's Entombment," Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 16, no. 1, 2007: 56–63, 86; Jeffrey R. Chadwick, "Dating the Death of Jesus," BYU Studies Quarterly 54, no. 4, 2015: 135–191, esp. 183–188).
- Just as the New Testament Gospels record the teachings of the Savior during His earthly ministry, 3 Nephi records the teachings of the resurrected Lord (Stendahl, "The Sermon on the Mount and Third Nephi," 141). This includes the Sermon at the Temple (3 Nephi 12–14) (See the commentary for 3 Nephi 12:6), which parallels the Sermon on the Mount (Matthew 5–7) and Sermon on the Plain (Luke 6:17–49), the clarification of teachings recorded in John about His "other sheep" (See John 10:16; cf. 3 Nephi 15:17–24. See also Skinner, Fifth Gospel, 74–77), and the institution of the sacrament (See 3 Nephi 18:1–10; 20:3–8; cf. Matthew 26:26–28; Mark 14:22–24; Luke 22:19–20. See Skinner, Fifth Gospel, 108–110).
- The Nephite record stands as a fifth witness of the bodily resurrection of Christ (3 Nephi 11), in a way that exceeds the all other Gospels, canonical (See Matthew 28; Mark 16; Luke 24; John 20–21) and non-canonical (See Skinner, Fifth Gospel, 21–27).

Several more points of comparison could be made (For the most detailed treatment of 3 Nephi as a gospel, see Skinner, Fifth Gospel. See also Monte S. Nyman, Book of Mormon Commentary, 6 vols., Orem, UT: Granite, 2003, volume 5). Yet just as the New Testament Gospels have key differences that ought to be noticed, 3 Nephi is different from the other four gospels in important respects. As LDS gospel scholar Andrew C. Skinner noted, the Savior "said and did things of which the four Gospels have no record, and for which 3 Nephi is our treasured source" (Skinner, Fifth Gospel, 20). Key among these are the post-resurrection nature of the Savior's ministry, and the emphasis on the temple in Christ's teachings (See Skinner, Fifth Gospel, 37–47; John W. Welch, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1999).

Many have attempted to imitate the gospels, and have failed miserably (For a discussion of modern imitation gospels in comparison with 3 Nephi, see Richard Lloyd Anderson, "Imitation Gospels and Christ's Book of Mormon Ministry," in Apocryphal Writings and the Latter-day Saints, ed. C. Wilfred Griggs, Provo, UT: Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, 1986, 53–107). Yet 3 Nephi offers an authentic fifth Gospel which "complements and supplements the four biblical Gospels" (Skinner, Fifth Gospel, 2). As Skinner pointed out, it is unique among Gospel accounts in possessing material “reviewed and edited by the Savior himself” (Skinner, Fifth Gospel, 3. In support of this, Skinner cited 3 Nephi 23:7–8).

In the October 2016 General Conference, Brother Brian K. Ashton similarly taught, “Jesus’s visit to the Nephites after His Resurrection was carefully organized to teach us the things of greatest importance” (Brian K. Ashton, “The Doctrine of Christ,” Ensign, November 2016, online at lds.org). Thus, disciples of Christ can be confident that “3 Nephi contains those matters that the Savior himself felt were and are most important” (Skinner, Fifth Gospel, 3).

In July 1838, the Prophet Joseph Smith taught, “The fundamental principles of our religion are the testimony of the apostles and prophets concerning Jesus Christ, that he died, was buried, and rose again the third day, and ascended up into heaven” (Elder’s Journal, July 1838, p. 44, online at josephsmithpapers.org, grammar standardized).

President Ezra Taft Benson taught that the Book of Mormon, “is the keystone in our witness of Christ” (Ezra Taft Benson, “The Book of Mormon: The Keystone of Our Religion,” Ensign, November 1986, 5), a point Elder Gary E. Stevenson reiterated recently (Gary E. Stevenson, “Look to the Book, Look to the Lord,” Ensign, November 2016, online at lds.org). While the entire Book of Mormon is saturated with various testimonies of Christ, the Gospel of 3 Nephi is the preeminent reason that the Book of Mormon stands as a keystone witness of Christ’s divinity.

By detailing the post-resurrection appearance and ministry of Jesus Christ in the Americas, “3 Nephi stands as an independent witness of the linchpin doctrine of the entire Christian faith—the bodily Resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ” (Skinner, Fifth Gospel, 3). It is a Gospel, not of the mortal Jesus, but of the risen Lord (Strathern and Skinner, “Introduction,” viii: “It is not the account of the mortal Christ but the account of the resurrected, glorified Christ.”). In a time of ever increasing skepticism about who Jesus was and who He claimed to be, the Book of Mormon, as LDS author Michael R. Ash observed, “is a unique second witness to the divinity of Christ and the reality of the Resurrection” (Michael R. Ash, Shaken Faith Syndrome: Strengthening One’s Testimony in the Face of Criticism and Doubt, 2nd edition, Redding, CA: Fair Mormon, 2013, 125).

“Truly, 3 Nephi is worthy of the designation Fifth Gospel—the capstone of all Gospel accounts,” Skinner concluded (Skinner, Fifth Gospel, 3). It is a Gospel the world desperately needs now—a Gospel which has the potential to soften hearts, change minds, and convert people unto the Lord. Skinner resolved, “For this Fifth Gospel we should be forever grateful and perhaps much more active in filling the earth with its contents” (Skinner, Fifth Gospel, 20).

1 Now it came to pass that the ninety and first year had passed away and it was six hundred years from the time that Lehi left Jerusalem; and it was in the year that Lachoneus was the chief judge and the governor over the land.

verse 1 The two methods of Nephite chronological reckoning are mentioned here. We will learn that there will be yet a third method.

For over five hundred years after the arrival of the Lehi and his extended family in the New World, the only reference date for their dating was the date of Lehi's departure from Jerusalem (2 Nephi 5:28, 34). We may easily connect this date to biblical chronology since Lehi's family likely departed Jerusalem in the first month of 587 BC (Randall P. Spackman, "Introduction to Book of Mormon Chronology: The Principal Prophecies, Calendars, and Dates," a FARMS reprint). See the commentary for 1 Nephi 10:4. This first era continued for 609 years before it was terminated.

The second major reference date was the date when Alma the younger began to preside as the first chief judge of the people which was about ninety-one years before the birth of Christ. This second era is referred to as "the year of the reign of the judges." It was supplementary in that it was utilized concomitantly with the aforementioned system, and both eras ran simultaneously. This era continued for one-hundred years before it was terminated. Yet another era will begin nine years after the signs of the Messiah's birth were seen, "the Nephites began to reckon their time from this period when the sign was given, or from the coming of Christ" (3 Nephi 2:5-8). The first two eras were brought to a close at the inception of this third era.

"it was six hundred years from the time that Lehi left Jerusalem" We will learn later in this chapter that the Savior's birth will take place during this year. This six hundred year period between the departure of Lehi's family from Jerusalem and the birth of the Savior has been discussed previously in the commentary for 1 Nephi 10:4. For the convenience of the reader, we will repeat that discussion here:

There is a problem with this "six hundred years" since Lehi and his family probably left Jerusalem in 587 BC and the Savior was likely born between 4 and 6 BC. Six hundred years from 587 BC would be AD 13. Randall P. Spackman in his helpful article "Introduction to Book of Mormon Chronology: The Principal Prophecies, Calendars, and Dates," (a FARMS reprint) has provided us with a compelling explanation of the problem: The principal time-keeping system throughout the Middle East in the sixth century BC was a twelve-moon lunar calendar. By this calendar a year lasted 354.367 days. The principle of the solar calendar was also understood in which a year lasted 365.24 days, but the twelve-moon lunar calendar continued in use as the principal Babylonian, Egyptian, and Jewish religious calendar throughout ancient history. These religious calendars appear to have been based on direct observation of the moon by the priests to determine the times of religious festivals. "The priests also recognized that the solar year . . . was about eleven days longer than the twelve-moon calendar. For purposes of seasonal or agricultural rituals, the priests probably added or “intercalated” a 13th moon every two or three years. This was not an exact process in the time of Lehi, but it was an ancient one. Accurate intercalation schedules for adding the 13th moon were not worked out in Babylonia until the fifth century BC. In Lehi’s day in Jerusalem, a 13th moon was added to the year when it became clear that the religious festivals were starting to occur too early in the agricultural or seasonal cycle” (Spackman, 15).

Brother Spackman feels it unlikely that Lehi and his people ever tried to intercalate their calendar. Thus, their year was slightly over 354 days long. Brother Spackman also makes a compelling argument for the fact that Lehi and his family probably left Jerusalem in January 587 BC according to our present-day Gregorian calendar. Lehi would probably have begun his 600-year count on the first new moon day that followed his departure. The date of that new moon was January 19, 587 BC. He apparently began the count as he camped in the wilderness. Lehi’s righteous posterity kept this year count and were taught expressly to look forward to the birth of the Savior in 600 years by this lunar calendar. After 600 years or 7,200 moons, the 601st year of Lehi’s prophetic period would have begun with the new moon of March 8, 5 BC. In the “commencement” of this long-awaited year, the sign of the Messiah’s birth was seen in the heavens and he was born at Bethlehem probably in the spring of 5 BC.

If the Savior was born in the period of 4 to 6 B.C., how is it that our current system of dating does not coincide with this date? How could there have been such a significant mistake in dating such an important event such as the Savior’s birth? After all, our present BC–AD system is based upon that very event. Dr. John L. Sorenson has pointed out that: “The year of the Savior’s birth did not become significant to the calendar used in Europe until centuries after the event. The monk Dionysius Exiguus calculated the date soon after AD 500, but he made a mistake, mainly due to the inadequate historical materials available. So, Christ was not born in 1 BC, neither in AD 1, but probably in 4 or 5 BC, or a bit earlier still” (An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, 272).

“Lachoneus was the chief judge and the governor over the land” Lachoneus may have become the chief judge in this particular year. If so, he will serve as chief judge and governor for about thirty years and be succeeded by his son, also named Lachoneus (3 Nephi 6:19).

2 And Nephi, the son of Helaman, had departed out of the land of Zarahemla, giving charge unto his son Nephi, who was his eldest son, concerning the plates of brass, and all the records which had been kept, and all those things which had been kept sacred from the departure of Lehi out of Jerusalem.

verse 2 “and all those things which had been kept sacred from the departure of Lehi out of Jerusalem” This phrase refers to those sacred relics that served as symbols of authority to the possessor (see Alma 50:38 and its commentary).

In addition to the plates of brass, the small plates of Nephi, and the large collection of plates referred to as the large plates of Nephi, these relics included the sword of Laban, the Urim and Thummim, the breast plate, and the director or Liahona.

The succession of righteous prophets or keepers of the plates from King Benjamin to the son of Nephi can seem a bit confusing. It is, however very simple. Let us briefly review this succession:

1. Benjamin delivers the plates to his son Mosiah who becomes the final Nephite king (124 BC).

2. Mosiah places them in the possession of Alma's son, Alma the younger (92 BC). This Alma had been converted miraculously and later becomes the first chief judge of the people. He eventually gives up the office of chief judge to spend full time in his other office of high priest of the people.

3. Alma passes the plates along to his son, Helaman (74 BC) who valiantly leads the two thousand stripling warriors at the same time that captain Moroni is leading the Nephite army in other parts of the land.

4. The plates eventually end up in the possession of Helaman's son Helaman, but prior to that, they are held for a four-year period by the older Helaman's brother, Shiblon (57 to 53 BC). The younger Helaman writes the large part of the book of Helaman, serves as a righteous chief judge in Zarahemla, and sees the rise of the Gadianon robbers.

5. Helaman hands the plates on to his son Nephi (39 BC) who, with his brother Lehi, preaches valiantly and converts thousands of Lamanites. At one point Nephi and his brother are protected from destruction in a Lamanite prison by a miraculous protective ring of fire. Nephi later preaches from his garden tower and miraculously predicts the murder of the chief judge Seezoram.

6. Nephi disappears mysteriously, but not before he delivers the plates to his son Nephi (1 AD), who is the prophet during the time of great wickedness between the time of the Savior's birth and the Lord's appearance at the temple in Bountiful. Nephi eventually becomes one of the Lord's twelve disciples or apostles.

As long as we are at it, we might as well complete this list of plate keepers.

7. Nephi is succeeded by his son, also named Nephi. This Nephi dies in 111 AD.

8. The record is then kept by his son Amos. Amos keeps the record for eighty-four years and dies in 194 AD.

9. Amos gives the record to his son also named Amos. This Amos dies in 305 AD.

10. Amos's brother Ammaron keeps the record in his stead. In 320 AD Ammaron is constrained by the Holy Ghost to hide all the sacred records in a hill called Shim. After hiding the records, Ammaron is inspired to approach a boy named Mormon who is ten years old at the time and command him that when he reaches the age of twenty-four, Mormon should remove from their hiding place the large plates of Nephi and take possession of them.

11. Mormon does so in 335 AD. Years later, Mormon abridges the large plates of Nephi onto another set of plates, the plates of Mormon (380 AD). Mormon is eventually slain by Lamanites in about 385 AD. Before his death he buries the large plates of Nephi in the hill Cumorah.

12. Mormon gives to his son Moroni the small plates of Nephi and the plates of Mormon. These plates will be combined into a single set with the plates of Mormon at the front and the small plates of Nephi at the back. This set will eventually be delivered to Joseph Smith Jr. just after midnight in the early morning hours of September 22, 1827.

3 Then he departed out of the land, and whither he went, no man knoweth; and his son Nephi did keep the records in his stead, yea, the record of this people.

verse 3 Although the text never explains the fate of the prophet Nephi, it seems possible and even likely that he was translated. For a summary of the accomplishments of this remarkable prophet, see the commentary for Helaman 10:4-7. This verse is reminiscent of Alma 45:18 which relates the fate of Alma the younger, the great-grandfather of Nephi: “He departed out of the land of Zarahemla . . . and it came to pass that he was never heard of more; as to his death or burial we know not of.” Terrence L. Szink has pointed out the remarkable similarities in the lives of Alma the younger and Nephi:

Nephi and Alma in fact led very similar lives. Among other things both were judges (Nephi—Helaman 3:37; Alma—Mosiah 29:42-44), both gave up their judgeship to devote more time to service in the church (Nephi—Helaman 5:1-4; Alma—Alma 4:20), and, finally, weary with the wickedness of their people, both wished for something different than the circumstances in which they found themselves: Nephi wanted to live in the days when Lehi and his family left Jerusalem (Helaman 7:7), and Alma wanted to speak with the voice of an angel (Alma 29:1-3) (Studies in Scripture, Volume Eight, Alma 30 to Moroni, 136).

Three additional Nephite apostles will yet be translated in the remaining pages of the Book of Mormon (3 Nephi 28). For a discussion of the doctrine of translated beings, see Doctrine of Translation in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, chapter 17.

4 And it came to pass that in the commencement of the ninety and second year, behold, the prophecies of the prophets began to be fulfilled more fully; for there began to be greater signs and greater miracles wrought among the people.

5 But there were some who began to say that the time was past for the words to be fulfilled, which were spoken by Samuel, the Lamanite.

6 And they began to rejoice over their brethren, saying: Behold the time is past, and the words of Samuel are not fulfilled; therefore, your joy and your faith concerning this thing hath been vain.

verse 6 “they began to rejoice over their brethren” This rejoicing was a negative gloating by the antagonistic unbelievers rather than a positive emotion.

7 And it came to pass that they did make a great uproar throughout the land; and the people who believed began to be very sorrowful, lest by any means those things which had been spoken might not come to pass.

verse 7 This verse is a poignant reminder that here in mortality even the faithful depend on faith and hope that in the due time of the Lord, all will be revealed and they will be vindicated in their beliefs.

8 But behold, they did watch steadfastly for that day and that night and that day which should be as one day as if there were no night, that they might know that their faith had not been vain.

verse 8 The reader will recall that the prophet Samuel the Lamanite had predicted that “there shall be one day and a night and a day, as if it were one day and there were no night; and this shall be unto you for a sign; for ye shall know of the rising of the sun and also of its setting” (Helaman 14:4).

9 Now it came to pass that there was a day set apart by the unbelievers, that all those who believed in those traditions should be put to death except the sign should come to pass, which had been given by Samuel the prophet.

verse 9 “all those who believed in those traditions” We have encountered the word “traditions” on many occasions in the Book of Mormon, yet we have not taken the time to define it. It refers to the customs, beliefs, and stories that are handed down from generation to generation either by word of mouth or by written records.

A common characteristic of the unbeliever is set forth in this verse. Since they do not believe or know or feel, they conclude that no one else can believe or know or feel. Since they were the powerful majority, they could calendar this awful ultimatum.

Brother Hugh Nibley commented on this intent of the non-believers to put to death the believers if the foretold events did not occur by a certain date:

It was the overwhelming majority of unbelievers who actually set a date for a general massacre of those who expected the coming of Christ (3 Nephi 1:9, 16). Fantastic as this may seem, it has many parallels in history: the slaughter of the Magi in Lehi’s day, the Sicilian Vespers, the liquidation of the Mamlukes, St. Bartholomew’s, the slaughter of the Donatists, the Bloodbath of Stralsund, etc., most of them attempts at the complete wiping out of large unorthodox minorities, and most of them engineered by devout intellectuals. It is a grim and authentic psychological touch in the Book of Mormon (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 6, 370).

10 Now it came to pass that when Nephi, the son of Nephi, saw this wickedness of his people, his heart was exceedingly sorrowful.

11 And it came to pass that he went out and bowed himself down upon the earth, and cried mightily to his God in behalf of his people, yea, those who were about to be destroyed because of their faith in the tradition of their fathers.

verse 11 “he went out and bowed himself down upon the earth” In commenting upon the subject of obeisance (bowing down or showing deference), Elder Bruce R. McConkie, wrote:

Obeisance . . . is a true and proper part of the worship of the Eternal King. Faithful people have always bowed down when worshiping the Lord (Genesis 24:52; Numbers 22:31). Prayer is properly made on bowed knees (Alma 46:13; Helaman 7:10; 3 Nephi 1:11). Nephi the disciple bowed himself before Jesus (3 Nephi 11:19), who in turn bowed himself before the Father (3 Nephi 19:19, 27). In mocking desecration of sacred worship, the tormentors of our Lord bowed before him as they “platted a crown of thorns” upon his head (Matthew 27:29; Mark 15:19). There is a coming day when every knee shall bow to Christ (D&C 76:110), even as “all things bow in humble reverence” before the Father (D & C 76:93) (Mormon Doctrine, 541).

What a joy it will be to one day bow ourselves in adoration before our Savior!

We have often discussed the Lamanites’ incorrect traditions of their fathers. The reader must keep in mind that the Nephites also had a set of unwritten and correct traditions which were handed down (see the commentary for Enos 1:14).

12 And it came to pass that he cried mightily unto the Lord, all that day; and behold, the voice of the Lord came unto him, saying:

13 Lift up your head and be of good cheer; for behold, the time is at hand, and on this night shall the sign be given, and on the morrow come I into the world, to show unto the world that I will fulfil all that which I have caused to be spoken by the mouth of my holy prophets.

verses 12-13 These interesting verses have caused some to ask the question: “How was Jesus able to speak to Nephi? Nephi’s prayer was offered the day prior to Christ’s mortal birth. Was his spirit not, therefore, in Mary’s womb waiting to be born? When does the spirit enter the body? At conception? At the time of quickening? At birth? Might the physical presence of the spirit come and go from the womb?” We are obviously not given to know the answers to these questions. It is not difficult to imagine that the Holy Ghost himself or an angel messenger might have been commissioned to speak to Nephi the words of Christ. We are taught in latter day scripture that all the Lord's words will be fulfilled "whether [they are spoken] by mine own voice or by the voice of my servants, it is the same" (D&C 1:38).

14 Behold, I come unto my own, to fulfil all things which I have made known unto the children of men from the foundation of the world, and to do the will, both of the Father and of the Son—of the Father because of me, and of the Son because of my flesh. And behold, the time is at hand, and this night shall the sign be given.

verse 14 "I come unto my own" Jesus will come unto his own people the Jews to fulfill all the prophecies made of him and to fulfill the law of Moses.

"from the foundation of the world" This phrase refers to man's premortal existence or first estate.

"to do the will, both of the Father and of the Son—of the Father because of me, and of the Son because of my flesh" How are we to interpret this rather enigmatic statement of the Lord's? Three interpretations are suggested:

1. It would seem that Jesus is saying that here in mortality, he will do the will of, or be answerable to, two individuals: to his Father, Elohim, and to himself. The Father and the Son, of course, are of one mind. If he does the will of one then he does also the will of the other. Yet, here he seems to draw a subtle contrast between doing the will of the Father and doing the will of the Son. The contrast between the phrases "because of me" and "because of my flesh" suggests an intended contrast between the spirit and the flesh. Perhaps he is suggesting that as he takes upon himself mortality he will be, just as are the rest of us, subject both to the influences of the Spirit and to influences of the flesh—at least he will know and understand both through his personal experiences here on earth. His spirit will be answerable to the Father—"to do the will . . . of the Father because of me [my spirit's responding to the Holy Spirit]." He himself, and no one else, will be responsible also to keep the pulls of the flesh in check—"to do the will . . . of the Son because of my flesh."

2. Alternatively, it may be more correct to apply this statement specifically to Christ's assigned mission to atone for the sins of all mankind. The will of the Father is that the Son pay the demands of justice and thus atone for all men. The Son is uniquely able to accomplish this only "because of me"—because of the divine nature he will receive when he is sired by Elohim. Having that nature will enable him to pay the price and make the atonement. It is also the will of the Son that this atonement be made. This awesome sacrifice, however, can only be effective if it is given willingly and without coercion. The Savior must overcome the pulls of the flesh—the fear, the horror, the apprehension, the uncertainty—and willingly submit himself "because of the flesh," or in the setting of the pulls of the flesh.

3. Elder Bruce R. McConkie seems to have interpreted this statement as simply Jesus's teaching that he is both the Father and the Son—that his actions in mortality are in accordance with the will of the Father and the Son because he is both the Father and the Son. Commenting upon the idea that Jesus is “the Father because of me,” Elder McConkie said: “This can only be taken to mean that he was the Father because he had the power of the Father; that his will was swallowed up in the will of the Father; that he could do all things because of his inheritance from that Supreme Being” (The Promised Messiah, 371-72). And how was Jesus “the Son because of my flesh”? “It is clear that he is the Son because of the flesh, meaning that he was born into the world as other mortals are. He had a body that was conceived and nurtured in the womb of a mortal woman (Ibid.). Elder McConkie then pointed out that this same thought is put forth in latter-day revelation: “I am in the Father, and the Father in me, and the Father and I are one—The Father because he gave me of his fulness, and the Son because I was in the world and made flesh my tabernacle, and dwelt among the sons of men” (D&C 93:3-4).

15 And it came to pass that the words which came unto Nephi were fulfilled, according as they had been spoken; for behold, at the going down of the sun there was no darkness; and the people began to be astonished because there was no darkness when the night came.

verse 15 This miraculous interruption of the conventional twenty-four-hour light-dark cycle has been referred to as “a celebration of light” (Encyclopedia of Mormonism, volume 2, “Light and Darkness”). But just how could this seemingly impossible miracle happen?

Exactly how God produced such a sign is impossible to know for certain, but there are natural astronomical and atmospheric events which may shed some light on this matter. Hugh Nibley suggested to his students once that this sign could have been caused by a supernova, comparing it to one in AD 1054 which “could be seen all over the world” and “was almost as bright as the sun” (Hugh Nibley, Teachings of the Book of Mormon, 4 vols., American Fork and Provo, UT: Covenant Communications and FARMS, 2004, 3:291. Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 5:191–192, critiqued this suggestion and proposed, instead, that it was a volcanic eruption, which would have provided light more locally.). Astronomers have documented a supernova in the 11th century which, according to lead researcher Frank Winkler, provided enough light that “people could probably have read manuscripts at midnight by its light” (“Astronomers Peg Brightness of History’s Brightest Star,” National Optical Astronomy Observatory News, March 5, 2003, online at noao.edu. This is reporting on a supernova documented in AD 1006, not 1054).

Yet Samuel made it sound like the new star in the sky was a separate sign from the night without darkness (Helaman 14:5) (Gardner, Second Witness, 5:191–192: “If a day, a night, and a day of light had occurred in the Old World, the evangelists who noted other signs and miracles of Christ’s birth would surely have made it part of their record. We must therefore assume that the lighted night was a New World phenomenon, not a worldwide one. . . . A bright new star would be a good explanation for the Old-World phenomenon, but there is still the issue of the differentially described phenomena for the Old and New Worlds. The descriptions point to different underlying events that are described in a similar context.”). In this regard, John A. Tvedtnes noted some possible similarities to the atmospheric effects caused by an explosion that took place in a remote part of Russia on June 30, 1908 (John A. Tvedtnes, “A Modern Example of Night without Darkness,” Insights: An Ancient Window 18, no. 5, October 1998: 4). Known to scholars simply as the “Tunguska event,” scientists are still unsure what exactly caused the explosion (Nigel Waston, “The Tunguska Event,” History Today 58, no. 7, July 2008: 7). Its effect on the night sky, however, is well documented. As reported by NASA, “Night skies glowed, and reports came in that people who lived as far away as Asia could read newspapers outdoors as late as midnight” (Tony Phillips, “The Tunguska Impact—100 Years Later,” NASA Science News, June 30, 2008, online at science.nasa.gov).

In the most comprehensive study on the event to date, Vladimir Rubtsov documented “atmospheric phenomena” in 155 different places (Vladimir Rubtsov, The Tunguska Mystery (New York, NY: Springer, 2009), 15), spread across several days, beginning a few days before the explosion (Rubtsov, The Tunguska Mystery, 13). Tvedtnes reported, “For months afterward, there were spectacular sunrises and sunsets throughout the world, caused by the vast amount of dust thrown up into the atmosphere” (Tvedtnes, “A Modern Example,” 4). There were also “daytime anomalies such as intense and prolonged solar halos, mother-of-pearl clouds, and a Bishop’s ring” (Rubtsov, The Tunguska Mystery, 21. A Bishop’s ring “is a diffuse brown or bluish halo around the Sun,” p. 21, so-called because of its discovery by the Reverend S. Bishop.).

It was the night of June 30, however, which was most spectacular. According to Rubtsov, “throughout a territory of about 12 million km², there was no night separating June 30 and July 1” (Rubtsov, The Tunguska Mystery, 14). That evening, a Soviet astronomer “waited in vain for night to fall,” and in Germany, “The intensity of the nighttime luminosity was considerable. . . . At 1.15 [AM] it was as light as daytime” (Rubtsov, The Tunguska Mystery, 17). Despite covering a vast region, “no atmospheric anomalies occurred in the area of Tunguska” itself (Rubtsov, The Tunguska Mystery, 17. On p. 18, it is noted that the nearest report to Tunguska is 600 km away.), and the intensity of nighttime light “seemed to increase from East to West,” thus indicating that it was brighter the farther away from the Tunguska explosion one went (Rubtsov, The Tunguska Mystery, 18).

A miracle can be defined as “a beneficial event brought about through divine power that mortals do not understand and of themselves cannot duplicate” (Paul C. Hedengren, “Miracles,” in Encyclopedia of Mormonism, 4 vols., ed. Daniel H. Ludlow, New York, NY: Macmillan, 1992, 2:908). God uses miracles so that great benefits may be brought about for mankind “according to their faith” (see Mosiah 8:18; Alma 37:40). At the same time, Elder John A. Widtsoe, a member of the Quorum of the Twelve and himself a scientist, gave assurances that “This is a universe of law and order,” and thus “a miracle simply means a phenomenon not understood, in its cause and effect relations” (John A. Widtsoe, Joseph Smith as Scientist: A Contribution to Mormon Philosophy, Salt Lake City, UT: YMMIA, 1908, 35).

The phenomena and anomalies associated with the Tunguska event in 1908, with nightglows in the days before, with total day-like brightness the night after, and also with continuing nightglows and even daytime effects in the days that followed surprisingly demonstrate at least one possible naturalistic understanding of how God could have fulfilled Samuel’s prophecy, even if such astronomical and atmospheric observations cannot be fully understood or explained. While obviously, no explosion was reported in the Book of Mormon, it should be pointed out that (1) the explosion happened in the morning of June 30, 1908, so would not have been seen immediately before nightfall; and (2) the nightlight effect was stronger at greater distances away from the explosion. If a similar, though perhaps smaller scale, phenomena occurred in a remote area somewhere a few hundred miles from Nephite territory, they likely would not have seen, felt, or heard the explosion. In the Tunguska event, the falling object was seen as “a bright bluish-white light in the sky” from 600 miles away (See Waston, “The Tunguska Event,” 7). Such a sight by Nephite astronomers could have been understood as one of the “great lights in heaven” or the “many signs and wonders in heaven” foretold by Samuel. Mormon does assure readers that there were other signs leading up to the night without darkness, which nonetheless failed to persuade detractors (3 Nephi 1:4–5).

Regardless of the actual method the Lord used to accomplish this miracle, the night without darkness was deeply symbolic and meaningful. Kimberly M. Berkey noted, “The excessive light surrounding Christ’s birth acts as a kind of morning” (Kimberly M. Berkey, “Temporality and Fulfillment in 3 Nephi 1,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 24, 2015: 74), the beginning of a new dawn welcoming the Savior into the world: the Light of the World had come, introduced into the world by light.

Furthermore, just as with the appearance of the new star, any method for making night bright as day would have required a great deal of advanced planning on the part of the Lord. Elder Neal A. Maxwell taught, “the so-called ‘little star of Bethlehem’ was actually very large in its declaration of divine design! It had to have been placed in its precise orbit long, long before it shone so precisely!” (Neal A. Maxwell, “In Him All Things Hold Together,” BYU Speeches, March 31, 1991, online at speeches.byu.edu).

Elder Maxwell went on to explain that the Lord puts the same care and attention into the lives of his children. “His overseeing precision pertains not only to astrophysical orbits but to human orbits as well” (Maxwell, “In Him All Things Hold Together”). Just as the new star “was in its precise orbit long before it so shone,” so are individuals “placed in human orbits to illuminate” (Neal A. Maxwell, “Encircled in the Arms of His Love,” Ensign, November 2002, online at lds.org).

In contrast, beginning at the crucifixion of Christ and extending for three consecutive days “there was thick darkness upon all the face of the land, insomuch that the inhabitants thereof who had not fallen could feel the vapor of darkness; and there could be no light” (3 Nephi 8:20-21).

16 And there were many, who had not believed the words of the prophets, who fell to the earth and became as if they were dead, for they knew that the great plan of destruction which they had laid for those who believed in the words of the prophets had been frustrated; for the sign which had been given was already at hand.

verse 16 “there were many, who had not believed the words of the prophets, who fell to the earth and became as if they were dead” Undoubtedly these erstwhile non-believers were awe-struck and overcome with fear and consternation over the implications of their now-obvious mistake.

17 And they began to know that the Son of God must shortly appear; yea, in fine, all the people upon the face of the whole earth from the west to the east, both in the land north and in the land south, were so exceedingly astonished that they fell to the earth.

verse 17 “in fine” This phrase may be interpreted as “finally,” “eventually” or “in summary.”

“all the people upon the face of the whole earth” This phrase is a hyperbole which actually is intended to mean “all the people in the lands of Zarahemla and Nephi” or “all the people in the Book of Mormon lands.” The phrase is also likely hyperbolic in another sense. It seems unlikely that all of the former non-believers fell to the earth in humble acknowledgment of their erroneous ways and beliefs.

18 For they knew that the prophets had testified of these things for many years, and that the sign which had been given was already at hand; and they began to fear because of their iniquity and their unbelief.

19 And it came to pass that there was no darkness in all that night, but it was as light as though it was mid-day. And it came to pass that the sun did rise in the morning again, according to its proper order; and they knew that it was the day that the Lord should be born, because of the sign which had been given.

20 And it had come to pass, yea, all things, every whit, according to the words of the prophets.

21 And it came to pass also that a new star did appear, according to the word.

verse 21 Please review the commentary for Helaman 14:5 regarding this “new star.”

verses 15-21 It is interesting to note that in this description of the fulfillment of the new-star prophecy and in the prophecy itself (Helaman 14:3-6), the sentence order and wording imply that the new star was not the cause of there being no darkness that night. The event is difficult for astronomers to explain by any natural phenomena, and no account of any comparable incident is given by any New Testament writer nor by any other contemporary historical record from the eastern hemisphere. This apparently was a remarkable sign given in the Nephite regions of the world only, though the new star could perhaps be the same observed by the wise men in the New Testament account (Matthew 2:1-2).

22 And it came to pass that from this time forth there began to be lyings sent forth among the people, by Satan, to harden their hearts, to the intent that they might not believe in those signs and wonders which they had seen; but notwithstanding these lyings and deceivings the more part of the people did believe, and were converted unto the Lord.

verse 22 In spite of the best efforts of Satan, these signs had been so powerful that the majority, the “more part,” of the people were converted to the Lord. This conversion, however, will be short-lived. Three years hence the hearts of most of these converts will be hardened again (see 3 Nephi 2:1). See the discussion of hard-heartedness in the commentary for Alma 10:6. Obviously, the conversion of these people was superficial. It had, after all, occurred as the result of a miraculous outward sign and required no active work on their part. It should also be noted that before the night without darkness, these people had doubted the other signs as they began to occur. Elder Bruce R. McConkie has written on the quality of testimony that results from supernatural signs:

Faith that is based on signs alone is weak and ineffective. It continually demands added and greater signs to keep it alive, and those relying on such visible supernatural guidance soon begin “to be less and less astonished at a sign or a wonder from heaven” until they are in danger of disbelieving all they have “heard and seen” (3 Nephi 2:1). Thus, belief based on supernatural experiences is less to be desired than that which stands on its own feet. “Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed” (John 20:29) (Mormon Doctrine, “Signs” 714).

23 And it came to pass that Nephi went forth among the people, and also many others, baptizing unto repentance, in the which there was a great remission of sins. And thus the people began again to have peace in the land.

24 And there were no contentions, save it were a few that began to preach, endeavoring to prove by the scriptures that it was no more expedient to observe the law of Moses. Now in this thing they did err, having not understood the scriptures.

verse 24 One small group believed that since Christ had been born it was no longer necessary to obey the law of Moses. These were most likely a group of sincere believers who had simply misunderstood the scriptures. The law of Moses would actually remain intact until the time of Christ's resurrection when it would be fulfilled.

25 But it came to pass that the y soon became converted, and were convinced of the error which they were in, for it was made known unto them that the law was not yet fulfilled, and that it must be fulfilled in every whit; yea, the word came unto them that it must be fulfilled; yea, that one jot or tittle should not pass away till it should all be fulfilled; therefore in this same year were they brought to a knowledge of their error and did confess their faults.

verse 25 “the law was not yet fulfilled, and that it must be fulfilled in every whit” The law of Moses was indeed fulfilled in Christ, but not until after his death and resurrection (3 Nephi 12:18).

26 And thus the ninety and second year did pass away, bringing glad tidings unto the people because of the signs which did come to pass, according to the words of the prophecy of all the holy prophets.

27 And it came to pass that the ninety and third year did also pass away in peace, save it were for the Gadianton robbers, who dwelt upon the mountains, who did infest the land; for so strong were their holds and their secret places that the people could not overpower them; therefore they did commit many murders, and did do much slaughter among the people.

28 And it came to pass that in the ninety and fourth year they began to increase in a great degree, because there were many dissenters of the Nephites who did flee unto them, which did cause much sorrow unto those Nephites who did remain in the land.

29 And there was also a cause of much sorrow among the Lamanites; for behold, they had many children who did grow up and began to wax strong in years, that they became for themselves, and were led away by some who were Zoramites, by their lyings and their flattering words, to join those Gadianton robbers.

verse 29 “many children who did grow up and began to wax strong in years, that they became for themselves” As the children of the Lamanites grew to maturity, they “became for themselves,” or became independent of parental influences and began to make their own decisions.

“they . . . were led away by some who were Zoramites, by their lyings and their flattering words, to join those Gadianton robbers” We previously encountered the Zoramites who were Nephite apostates in Alma 31-35 during the mission of Alma the younger and others to their land to reclaim them from their apostasy and to prevent them from entering into an alliance with the Lamanites. Here we learn that the Zoramites are still dissident and are luring naive young Lamanites to join the Gadianton robbers. We are surprised, yet pleased, to learn that two centuries later the Zoramites will be back in the Nephite fold (see 4 Nephi 1:36).

30 And thus were the Lamanites afflicted also, and began to decrease as to their faith and righteousness, because of the wickedness of the rising generation.

verses 27-30 Hugh Nibley comments:

The criminal element took to the hills and there established retreats where they built up strength from dissenters joining them until they were able to reestablish the Gadianton organization. Terrorism was the name of the game. From their secure places, they would strike and withdraw, making a special effort to kidnap “especially women and children,” to assure the permanence of their society (Helaman 11:33). At the same time, Zoramite recruiters brought a host of young Nephites into the organization by the prospect of such things as romantic adventure, gaudy makeup, danger, loot, and license to kill (3 Nephi 1:28-30). Soldiers of fortune also flocked to the camps (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 555-56).

3 Nephi Chapter 2

1 And it came to pass that thus passed away the ninety and fifth year also, and the people began to forget those signs and wonders which they had heard, and began to be less and less astonished at a sign or a wonder from heaven, insomuch that they began to be hard in their hearts, and blind in their minds, and began to disbelieve all which they had heard and seen—

verse 1 “the people began to forget those signs and wonders which they had heard, and began to be less and less astonished at a sign or a wonder from heaven” Here is an obvious characteristic of the non-believer, the sinner, the “natural man.” When the influence of the Spirit is withdrawn from an individual and he sinks deep into the worldly mire, he is less and less apt to be impressed by any wonders sent forth from God. He will disavow any thought of heavenly influence and will seek instead naturalistic explanations for any miracle. Another principle is operative here. While miracles or supernatural occurrences may induce faith in those who are blessed to observe them, this faith tends not to be strong and enduring. The faith that endures is developed “precept upon precept; line upon line . . . here a little, [and] there a little” (Isaiah 28:13) over the years of obedience and striving. “Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed” (John 20:29).

“hard in their hearts, and blind in their minds” Hardhearted? Spiritually blind? Spiritually deaf? Do all these terms have specific meanings? Elder Bruce R. McConkie has differentiated between spiritual deafness and blindness:

Spiritual deafness describes the state of those who are lacking in spirituality, whose spirit ears are not attuned to the whisperings of the still small voice of the Spirit. Similarly, spiritual blindness is the identifying mark which singles out those who are unable to see the hand of God manifest in the affairs of men. Such have “unbelief and blindness of heart” (D&C 58:15); they are “hard in their hearts, and blind in their minds” (3 Nephi 2:1) (Mormon Doctrine, “Deafness,” 184).

To harden one’s heart is to willfully close one’s heart against the Holy Spirit, in rebellion against God, in order to accomplish one’s own will. The resulting hard-heartedness can result in the Spirit’s ceasing to strive with a person and in spiritual death. Hard-heartedness can lead progressively from indulging oneself somewhat in wrongdoing to gross wickedness. Hard-heartedness is associated with complaining or murmuring, unbelief, blindness of mind, anger, impenitence, stiffneckedness, pride and sexual sin, desire for vengeance, abominations, cruelty, and murder. Hard-heartedness restricts spiritual understanding and can eventually lead to “know[ing] nothing” concerning the mysteries of God, and then being “taken captive by the devil” (Alma 12:9-11). It resists the softening action of the Holy Spirit and its attendant virtues, like meekness, compassion, and humility. It renders one vulnerable to lies, and blind to divine signs and wonders. Hard heartedness flourishes in conditions of ease and prosperity.

2 Imagining up some vain thing in their hearts, that it was wrought by men and by the power of the devil, to lead away and deceive the hearts of the people; and thus did Satan get possession of the hearts of the people again, insomuch that he did blind their eyes and lead them away to believe that the doctrine of Christ was a foolish and a vain thing.

verse 2 For an especially apt specific example of the general rule contained in this verse, flip back to 1 Nephi 16:37-38. In these verses in 1 Nephi, Laman and Lemuel rebel against, and even plot to kill, their brother Nephi and their father Lehi even though these recalcitrant brothers had previously seen an angel who had rebuked them (1 Nephi 3:29-31). It would seem that there's nothing new or original in Satan's techniques in trying to lead astray the family Adam. Why should he change his approaches, when the old ones seem to work so well?

Elder Neal A. Maxwell adds his warning:

How quickly he moves in, even where people have had special spiritual experiences, seeking to get people who have seen signs "To disbelieve all which they had heard and seen" (3 Nephi 2:1-2). The adversary has a better chance to persuade us that what we believe is foolish if we worry about looking foolish in front of our fellow men. We read about the subtleties of the devil and that the adversary persuadeth not one man to do good (Alma 12:4; Moroni 7:17). He cheateth people's souls; and having thus persuaded people that there is no devil, he becomes a shepherd of many (2 Nephi 28:21-22; Alma 5:39) (Things as They Really Are, 41-42).

"thus did Satan get possession of the hearts of the people" Hugh Nibley commented on the dangerous and chilling power Satan possesses in obtaining control over man:

It is on that principle of opposites that Satan's participation in our lives is to be explained. If we can be "encircled about eternally in the arms of [God's] love" (2 Nephi 1:15), we can also be "encircled about by the bands of death, and the chains of hell, and an everlasting destruction" (Alma 5:7); and if we can be perfectly united in the at-one-ment, we can also be "cast out" (Alma 5:25), separated and split off forever—"their names shall be blotted out . . . the names of the wicked shall not be mingled with the names of my people" (Alma 5:57). When Satan claims you as his, there is indeed a horrible oneness; for he too will embrace you to get power over you: Do "not choose eternal death, according to the will of the flesh and the evil which is therein, which giveth the spirit of the devil power to captivate, to bring you down to hell, that he may reign over you in his own kingdom" (2 Nephi 2:29; cf. 1 Nephi 13:29; 2 Nephi 28:19; Alma 8:9). He will hold you in his strong embrace, having a great hold over you (Alma 10:25; 12:17; 27:12; Helaman 16:23). Joseph Smith felt that power, and it was not an imaginary power at all, a power many have felt since (JS-H 1:16). For he “get[s] possession” of you (3 Nephi 2:2), “for Satan desireth to have you” (3 Nephi 18:18), just as the Lord does. So, while on the one hand, God “inviteth and enticeth to do good” and be one with him, so on the other hand Satan “inviteth and enticeth to sin” (Moroni 7:12-13) (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 9, 585).

“doctrine of Christ” Again, as a reminder: The “doctrine of Christ,” also called the gospel of Christ (Jacob 7:6; 2 Nephi 31:2, 21), consists of those teachings that, when adhered to, make it possible to return to live eternally in the presence of our heavenly parents and our Savior. This doctrine is the “only way . . . under heaven whereby man can be saved in the kingdom of God” (2 Nephi 31:21)—it is the only doctrine with the power to save. This doctrine is the gospel or “good news” of the atonement—that it is indeed possible for us to achieve this sublime goal, that of being exalted.

3 And it came to pass that the people began to wax strong in wickedness and abominations; and they did not believe that there should be any more signs or wonders given; and Satan did go about, leading away the hearts of the people, tempting them and causing them that they should do great wickedness in the land.

verse 3 The great sign marking Christ’s birth, the night with no darkness that accompanied the appearance of the new star, was given to the Book of Mormon people in their 91st year of the reign of the judges (3 Nephi 1:4, 13–15, 19–21). This sign and many other signs and wonders caused many to believe in the words of the prophets and to be “converted unto the Lord” (3 Nephi 1:22). By the 95th year, only a few years later, we now read that “the people began to forget those signs and wonders which they had heard, and began to be less and less astonished at a sign or a wonder from heaven . . . and began to disbelieve all which they had heard and seen” (verse 1).

The people had begun to rationalize and explain away what they had seen, even to the point of attributing the signs and wonders to the devil. This is exactly the result that Satan had been trying to achieve. As Mormon despondently states in this the prior verse, “and thus did Satan get possession of the hearts of the people again, insomuch that he did blind their eyes and lead them away to believe that the doctrine of Christ was a foolish and a vain thing.”

Over the next ten years, the disbelief continued to grow among the people: “Thus, in the space of less than fifteen years from the sign of Christ’s birth, the land went from a state of peace, where “the more part of the people did believe” (3 Nephi 1:22–23), to “a state of many afflictions,” where the people faced destruction because of their iniquity and disbelief (3 Nephi 2:19).

The Lord’s people have long had mixed experiences with seeking and receiving signs from heaven. The Lord directed Moses to work wonders so that the Egyptians would listen to the words of God's prophet (Exodus 4:8; 7:8–10). Signs were given to assure the Lord's people of His promises (Genesis 9:11–17). However, the Lord has also warned people against seeking signs (For example, when Christ told the Pharisees, "A wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign"—Matthew 12:39; 16:4; Mark 8:12; Luke 11:29; cf. Jacob 7:13–14; Alma 30:44; Alma 32:17) and has instructed that they not trust signs and wonders if they come from misleading sources (Deuteronomy 13:1–5). The Nephites had been taught that Satan could work his own wonders and could even transform "himself nigh unto an angel of light" to confuse people (2 Nephi 9:9. See also Revelation 13:1–15; 2 Corinthians 11:14; 2 Thessalonians 2:9; Matthew 24:24).

For these reasons and others, it is perhaps understandable that some would be wary of the seemingly unexplainable events that they had witnessed. However, those whose hearts were open, who "understood the scriptures," and believed "the words of the prophecy of all the holy prophets" (3 Nephi 1:24, 26), were able to recognize the true source of those heavenly wonders. Those who allowed Satan to harden their hearts (3 Nephi 1:22), however, could not discern true, divine signs and wonders for what they were.

One of the reasons so many were deceived was because Satan was particularly active in this period preceding the coming of Christ to the Book of Mormon peoples. BYU Professor John W. Welch commented on the years between the giving of the sign of Christ's birth to the time of his coming, as recorded in the early chapters of Third Nephi: "These years witnessed gross errors, robbers, secret oaths, anti-establishment rituals, taunting, slaughter, fear, blood, execution, iniquity, murder, conspiracy, and assassination, even to the point of stoning the prophets and casting them out from among them" (John W. Welch, "Seeing Third Nephi as the Holy of Holies of the Book of Mormon," Journal of the Book of Mormon and Other Restoration Scripture 19, no. 1, 2010: 39).

The rapid growth of the power and audacity of the Gadianton robbers in this period caused the righteous Nephites and Lamanites to withdraw from the "temple-city" of Zarahemla and gather together for seven years in order to starve out these enemies. The strategy worked, but during this time, the people had no access to the spiritual protection of their temple. Welch explained: "During these extremely vile and templeless years, Satan was on a rampage. Indeed, the name Satan appears in greater concentration in these chapters than anywhere else in the Book of Mormon. Satan knew that Jesus had been born, and in response he did everything he could to reign with horror and bloodshed upon this world" (Welch, "Third Nephi as the Holy of Holies," 39–40).

Today, the leading up to the second coming of Christ is, similarly, an age in which Satan is on a rampage. Satan likewise tries today to confuse through "lyings and deceivings." The late Elder Neal A. Maxwell, of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, drew a comparison between the two time periods when he warned: “How quickly [Satan] moves in even where people have had special spiritual experiences, seeking to get people who have seen signs ‘to disbelieve all which they had heard and seen’ (3 Nephi 2:1–2). The adversary has a better chance to persuade us that what we believe is foolish if we worry about looking foolish in front of our fellowmen (Neal A. Maxwell, Things As They Really Are, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 1978, 41).

4 And thus did pass away the ninety and sixth year; and also the ninety and seventh year; and also the ninety and eighth year; and also the ninety and ninth year;

5 And also an hundred years had passed away since the days of Mosiah, who was king over the people of the Nephites.

verse 5 A reminder: It was at the death of king Mosiah that the younger Alma became the first chief judge of the people and the years began to be counted according to the “reign of the judges.”

6 And six hundred and nine years had passed away since Lehi left Jerusalem.

7 And nine years had passed away from the time when the sign was given, which was spoken of by the prophets, that Christ should come into the world.

8 Now the Nephites began to reckon their time from this period when the sign was given, or from the coming of Christ; therefore, nine years had passed away.

verses 5-8 Undoubtedly the reader is by now familiar with the dating references in the Book of Mormon. In case a review would be helpful: The Nephites reckoned their dates by three different events. These were: (1) Lehi’s leaving Jerusalem; (2) the commencement of the reign of the judges which was about 91 BC—sometimes alternatively referred to as the year Mosiah died (Mosiah 29:44-46); and (3) the sign of the birth of Christ (3 Nephi 1:15). See the commentary for 3 Nephi 1:1.

It is a notable irony that the Nephites began to reckon their time from the time of the night without darkness, even though most of them will soon come to doubt the validity of the sign. This is somewhat analogous to our situation today in the western world where time is measured from the birth of Christ, yet many people do not believe in Christ as the Son of God.

For a discussion on the actual birth date of the Savior, see the commentary for 3 Nephi 1:1.

9 And Nephi, who was the father of Nephi, who had the charge of the records, did not return to the land of Zarahemla, and could nowhere be found in all the land.

verse 9 It is interesting that Mormon still had the issue of Nephi’s mysterious disappearance on his mind and here he mentions it again “out of the blue,” so to speak.

We have already discussed the disappearance and probably translation of this Nephi some nine years earlier (3 Nephi 1:3).

10 And it came to pass that the people did still remain in wickedness, notwithstanding the much preaching and prophesying which was sent among them; and thus passed away the tenth year also; and the eleventh year also passed away in iniquity.

11 And it came to pass in the thirteenth year there began to be wars and contentions throughout all the land; for the Gadianton robbers had become so numerous, and did slay so many of the people, and did lay waste so many cities, and did spread so much death and carnage throughout the land, that it became expedient that all the people, both the Nephites and the Lamanites, should take up arms against them.

12 Therefore, all the Lamanites who had become converted unto the Lord did unite with their brethren, the Nephites, and were compelled, for the safety of their lives and their women and their children, to take up arms against those Gadianton robbers, yea, and also to maintain their rights, and the privileges of their church and of their worship, and their freedom and their liberty.

verse 12 Apparently by now the covenant of pacifism entered into by the Lamanites who were converted by Ammon and his brethren had expired. This covenant not to bear arms had lasted for at least eighty-four years and through a few generations. (Alma 27:21-26; 43:11-12; Alma 24:5-6, 15-19, 20-24; 26:31-34; 44:20; Helaman 5:51; 15:9).

13 And it came to pass that before this thirteenth year had passed away the Nephites were threatened with utter destruction because of this war, which had become exceedingly sore.

14 And it came to pass that those Lamanites who had united with the Nephites were numbered among the Nephites;

15 And their curse was taken from them, and their skin became white like unto the Nephites;

verse 15 Notice that in this verse, the facts of their curse being removed and their skin becoming white were two separate occurrences—“their curse was taken from them, and their skin became white” (italics mine). The curse was not the dark skin. Rather the curse was the loss of the Spirit—the spiritual separation from God. The dark skin was only the mark of the curse, and it had previously been prophesied that the mark would be removed from them when they were restored to the Savior and his gospel (2 Nephi 30:6).

For a useful summary of the Lamanites, particularly a consideration of their skin color, see the commentary for Mormon 5:15.

It has been suggested by some that the Lamanites' dark skin, in the early days of the Book of Mormon story, may have been the natural result of the intermarrying of Laman, Lemuel, and those of their persuasion with the indigenous peoples who were already in the New World on their arrival. This issue is discussed in the commentary for 2 Nephi 5:21-23. There remain some misgivings about the idea that God brought about skin color changes in the Book of Mormon by completely natural means. Here in this verse, for example, it is difficult to see how the Lamanites' skin could become white in any natural way. Perhaps, however, that when there became no distinction between Nephite and Lamanite, with all the intermarrying that would produce, everyone's skin would be indistinguishable.

16 And their young men and their daughters became exceedingly fair, and they were numbered among the Nephites, and were called Nephites. And thus ended the thirteenth year.

verse 16 “they were numbered among the Nephites” This joining of the Lamanites with the Nephites likely provided a larger and stronger military force as noted in the following verse. We will learn that this advantage, however, is short lived.

17 And it came to pass in the commencement of the fourteenth year, the war between the robbers and the people of Nephi did continue and did become exceedingly sore; nevertheless, the people of Nephi did gain some advantage of the robbers, insomuch that they did drive them back out of their lands into the mountains and into their secret places.

verse 17 “in the commencement of the fourteenth year” There is reason to believe that the Nephite year began in the month we call April (3 Nephi 8:5). Thus the “fourteenth year” began in April of AD 14 and ended in March of AD 15.

18 And thus ended the fourteenth year. And in the fifteenth year they did come forth against the people of Nephi; and because of the wickedness of the people of Nephi, and their many contentions and dissensions, the Gadianton robbers did gain many advantages over them.

19 And thus ended the fifteenth year, and thus were the people in a state of many afflictions; and the sword of destruction did hang over them, insomuch that they were about to be smitten down by it, and this because of their iniquity.

verse 19 “the sword of destruction did hang over them” This phrase is Mormon's colorful way of saying that the Nephite society was on the brink of destruction.

3 Nephi Chapter 3

Scripture Mastery

3 Nephi 3-4 The Nephites gather themselves together to defend themselves against the Gadianton band led by Giddianhi and then Zemnarihah. The Nephites are led by the Chief Judge Lachoneus and the military captain Gidgiddoni. The Gadianton band is eventually defeated. Zemnarihah is hanged from a tree, and then the tree is felled.

Chapter 3 contains a letter that Mormon inserted into the record from Giddianhi, the leader of the Gadianton robbers, to Lachoneus, the governor of the Nephites. Terrence L. Szink has provided us with an interesting comparison between this letter and one written to captain Moroni by Ammoron, a Lamanite king some forty-seven years earlier (Alma 54):

In both letters, there is a request for the surrender of the Nephites (Alma 54:18; 3 Nephi 3:6-7), although in the case of Giddianhi, it is more an invitation to Lachoneus to turn the people over to him and join with him in oppressing them. Both opponents claim that they have been wronged and that they have been unjustly deprived of their “rights of government” (Alma 54:17-18; 3 Nephi 3:10). Both letters contain a rejection of God (Alma 54:21-22; 3 Nephi 3:2); and finally, both threaten destruction (Alma 54:20; 3 Nephi 3:3-4).

The differences in the letters demonstrate that in the case of the Gadianton robbers, the Nephites were confronted with an enemy much more sophisticated and dangerous than any previous. . .

Another difference in the letters is the sophisticated tone of Giddianhi’s message. He repeatedly compliments Lachoneus, referring to him as “most noble,” praises his “firmness” and his “noble spirit in the field of battle.” He claims to be motivated by a feeling for the welfare of the Nephite leader. All this was intended to entice Lachoneus into selling his people out and joining with the robbers, and it is in striking contrast to the direct boldness of Ammoron’s letter. Giddianhi was a “smooth operator,” a man who, although apparently well educated, was entirely without conscience and not to be trusted under any circumstance (Studies in Scripture, Volume Eight, Alma 30 to Moroni, 128-30).

Some have seen parallels in our day to the sophisticated Gadianton robbers. Terrence L. Szink has suggested that this parallel may be “the rich and powerful drug trafficking organizations that threaten to destroy our society. They use many of the same tactics and have the same goals as the Gadianton robbers” (Ibid., 130).

We may divide 3 Nephi 3 into two halves:

1. The first half (verses 1-10) illustrates the adversary’s tactics. We read, for example, that he uses flattery, sarcasm, doubt, and skepticism in verse 2; intimidation, fear, and threats in verse 3; accusation in verse 4; and hypocrisy in verse 5. In verse 6 he uses the false multiple choice dilemma (yield or be destroyed) when we know that these are not the only choices; Satan inevitably leaves out the option of turning to God. In verse 7, he uses entrapment; verse 9, reversal of values—he makes good seem bad and bad seem good; and finally, in verse 10 he uses justification or transfer of blame. Evil always seems to justify itself.

2. The second half of chapter 3 illustrates Lachoneus's righteous responses to Giddianhi's evil threats. We may learn important lessons from his responses as we battle the enticings of Satan in our own lives. Lachoneus's responses include don't be afraid (verse 12); decisions based on fear are inevitably bad decisions; pray for strength (verse 12); gather together (verse 13; see also D&C 115:5-6; 101:20-22); build fortifications (verse 14—today our fortifications may be the programs of the Church); place the guards (verse 14—the priesthood is to keep watch over the Church); repent (verse 15); exert oneself to follow the prophet (verse 16) and his apostles (verse 19); don't flirt with danger (verses 20-21); and arm yourself with the whole armor of God (verse 26).

Giddianhi knew that his epistle was liable to be read by multiple individuals, and perhaps even be made known to the general public. Hence, it can be reasonably categorized as “on the record” —or in public view (3 Nephi 3:11–12, for example, suggests that Lachoneus, to some degree or another, informed his people concerning Giddianhi's intentions for war). According to Brown and Levinson, a speaker who goes “on the record” may strategically seek to “enlist public pressure against the addressee or in support of himself; he can get credit for honesty, for indicating that he trusts the addressee; he can get credit for outspokenness, avoiding the danger of being seen to be a manipulator; [and] he can avoid the danger of being misunderstood” (Penelope Brown and Stephen C. Levinson, Politeness: Some Universals in Language Usage, New York, NY: Cambridge University Press, 1987, 71).

Several of Giddianhi's strategies, such as boldness and upfront honesty about his intentions, seem to comply generally with this list. It is even possible that Giddianhi gave a countdown to impending destruction as a form of public pressure, a motivation for as many Nephites as possible to dissent from their own government and join his cause (See Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 5:255: “Giddianhi can confidently assume that Zarahemla still holds many sympathizers and that victory will be assured in an all-out battle”).

Although efforts at persuasion aren't inherently evil, Giddianhi's use of rhetoric was clearly aimed to manipulate and gain control over the Nephite nation. Despite Giddianhi's attempts to ingratiate himself with the Nephites, he couldn't hide from them his ulterior motives, nor could he completely veil the actual import and consequences of what he was proposing—the end to their religious and political freedom (See Brant A.

Gardner, Second Witness, 5:254: “From the Nephite perspective . . . it would not only mean political and economic submission, but the probable destruction of their religion”).

Ironically, Giddianhi’s open and unabashed attempts at flattery and persuasion significantly backfired. Instead of being charmed or impressed, Lachoneus “was exceedingly astonished, because of the boldness of Giddianhi demanding the possession of the land of the Nephites, and also of threatening the people” (3 Nephi 3:11). And instead of cowering in fear, succumbing to Giddianhi’s demands, or changing their minds about the justness of the robbers’ cause, Lachoneus saw through these duplicitous formalisms, and the Nephites ultimately placed their faith in the Lord and followed Lachoneus until they achieved victory over Giddianhi and his robbers (see 3 Nephi 4:8–14).

To help all of us similarly avoid flattery and deception in their own time, the Lord has made available the gift of discernment (See 1 Corinthians 12:10; Alma 18:18; D&C 46:23). Elder David A. Bednar taught that the gift of discernment helps its recipients to “read under the surface” and “detect hidden error and evil in others” (David A. Bednar, “Quick to Observe,” a devotional delivered at Brigham Young University, December 2006, online at lds.org).

President Stephen L. Richards explained, “Every member in the restored Church of Christ could have this gift if he willed to do so. He could not be deceived with the sophistries of the world. He could not be led astray by pseudo-prophets and subversive cults. Even the inexperienced would recognize false teachings, in a measure at least. . . . We ought to be grateful every day of our lives for this sense which keeps alive a conscience which constantly alerts us to the dangers inherent in wrongdoers and sin (As cited in David A. Bednar, “Quick to Observe,” online at lds.org).

1 And now it came to pass that in the sixteenth year from the coming of Christ, Lachoneus, the governor of the land, received an epistle from the leader and the governor of this band of robbers; and these were the words which were written, saying:

verse 1 Notice that both Lachoneus and Giddianhi have the title of “governor.” Apparently, the titles “chief judge” and “governor” are interchangeable. We have no way of knowing whether or not Lachoneus was a democratically elected “governor.” We are reminded that the Gadianton robbers considered themselves a political organization. They considered their leader, Giddianhi, the head of a government in exile.

verses 2-10 In his letter, notice how virtuous Giddianhi is, at least in his own judgment. In a parable, the Savior warned us to be cautious about accepting a man’s estimate of his own righteousness at face value. When “two men went up into the temple to pray,” one of them proclaimed his righteousness and the other his sinful condition. As it turns out, the self-proclaimed labels were both incorrect (Luke 18:10-14).

2 Lachoneus, most noble and chief governor of the land, behold, I write this epistle unto you, and do give unto you exceedingly great praise because of your firmness, and also the firmness of your people, in maintaining that which ye suppose to be your right and liberty; yea, ye do stand well, as if ye were supported by the hand of a god, in the defence of your liberty, and your property, and your country, or that which ye do call so.

verse 2 Giddianhi is a typical example of the “king-men” in the Book of Mormon. The reader may wish to review the salient features of the “king-men” in the introductory commentary for Alma 46. Please note that though he is one of the king-men, he tries to appear to be one of the “freemen”—particularly in this verse. He speaks strongly for the individual rights and liberty of all people. Hugh Nibley has commented that “the king-men have always made a big thing of sounding like freemen” (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 340-42).

“ye do stand well, as if ye were supported by the hand of a god” It is typical for a skeptic to seek for alternate explanations for those occurrences that the faithful would regard as being caused by divine intervention. Elder Boyd K. Packer explained: “One thing is for sure: the skeptic will never know, for he will not meet the requirement of faith, humility, and obedience to qualify him for the visitation of the Spirit” (That All May Be Edified, 340).

verses 3-10 Here Giddianhi delivers his ultimatum. We will learn that Lachoneus did not answer the letter, but prepared his people for battle and eventually defeated the attacking force.

3 And it seemeth a pity unto me, most noble Lachoneus, that ye should be so foolish and vain as to suppose that ye can stand against so many brave men who are at my command, who do now at this time stand in their arms, and do await with great anxiety for the word—Go down upon the Nephites and destroy them.

verse 3 “do await with great anxiety” Here, of course the word “anxiety” means an earnest and intense desire.

4 And I, knowing of their unconquerable spirit, having proved them in the field of battle, and knowing of their everlasting hatred towards you because of the many wrongs which ye have done unto them, therefore if they should come down against you they would visit you with utter destruction.

5 Therefore I have written this epistle, sealing it with mine own hand, feeling for your welfare, because of your firmness in that which ye believe to be right, and your noble spirit in the field of battle.

verses 6-7 Brother Hugh Nibley comments on the “deal” that Giddianhi is about to propose to Lachoneus:

The chief who signs himself the governor of the Society (verse 9) begins by expressing warm admiration for the Nephite governor’s firmness “in maintaining that which ye suppose to be your right and liberty” (verse 2), showing himself to be a fair-minded and sporting type. In the next verse, he is very patronizing—every inch the “big-shot.” “And it seemeth a pity unto me, most noble Lachoneus, that ye should be so foolish and vain as to suppose that ye can stand against so many brave men who are at my command” (verse 3). So, big hearted as he is, the chief proposes a deal, but not until he has first given a little sermon which burns with righteous indignation for the wrongs he and his people have suffered (verse 4). The deal is that Lachoneus, for whose genuine talent and courage the chief again expresses his sincere admiration, is to be taken into the Society, and in return for bringing with him all the property over which his authority extends, he is to be received on a fifty-fifty basis—“not our slaves, but our brethren and partners of all our substance” (verses 6- 7). It was all very high-minded and idealistic. The chief was speaking only in the name of virtue; he was simply giving the other side a break, “feeling for your welfare,” as he so nicely put it (verse 5). If the deal was refused, it would be curtains—“ye shall become extinct” (verse 8). All he is asking for, Giddianhi concludes, is “that this my people may recover their rights and government, who have dissented away from you because of your wickedness in retaining from them their rights of government” (verse 10). And let no one suppose that his followers did not sincerely believe that they were the righteous and offended ones, and their opponents just too wicked to live with (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 6, 391-92).

6 Therefore I write unto you, desiring that ye would yield up unto this my people, your cities, your lands, and your possessions, rather than that they should visit you with the sword and that destruction should come upon you.

7 Or in other words, yield yourselves up unto us, and unite with us and become acquainted with our secret works, and become our brethren that ye may be like unto us—not our slaves, but our brethren and partners of all our substance.

verse 7 This is an interesting verse, and it illustrates a fascinating point. The Gadianton band are not simply robbers in the usual sense. Robbers need people to pray upon—they have to have “sheep to shear.” What is the point of inviting everyone to join? If they were simply a band of robbers and everyone joined with them, there would be no one to rob. In fact, the Gadianton adherents are more than just a band of robbers, they are an ideological party. They are called “robbers” by their enemies, but there is more to them than that. They apparently have their own government and their own secret documents and their own secret oaths and covenants.

8 And behold, I swear unto you, if ye will do this, with an oath, ye shall not be destroyed; but if ye will not do this, I swear unto you with an oath, that on the morrow month I will command that my armies shall come down against you, and they shall not stay their hand and shall spare not, but shall slay you, and shall let fall the sword upon you even until ye shall become extinct.

verse 8 It is likely that Giddianhi was sincere and meant what he said here in this verse (see the discussion of oath taking in the commentary for 1 Nephi 4:31-33).

9 And behold, I am Giddianhi; and I am the governor of this the secret society of Gadianton; which society and the works thereof I know to be good; and they are of ancient date and they have been handed down unto us.

verse 9 Note that Giddianhi “bears his testimony” of the ideology of the society of Gadianton. He points to the secret society’s “works” and states that they are venerable, old, and good—indeed, of “ancient date.” We have learned previously that the Gadianton robbers did not obtain their secret oaths and covenants from the twenty-four plates that contained the record of the Jaredites (Alma 37:27, 29). Rather they were given to Gadianton “by that same being who did entice our first parents to partake of the forbidden fruit” (see Helaman 6:26 and its commentary). These secret oaths were the very essence of the Gadianton society. The penalty for betrayal of these oaths was death. This fact produced a degree of devotion to evil not found among any of the Nephites’ previous enemies.

John L. Sorenson has suggested a practical way in which the secret oaths of the Gadianton society might have been “of ancient date and . . . handed down unto” those in the Gadianton society at the time of Giddianhi:

The Nephite secret combination pattern is obviously very similar to what had been present among the Jaredites. Was there a historical connection? . . . An efficient alternative explanation of how the later secret groups came to look so much like those of the Jaredites is direct transmission of the tradition through survivors of the Jaredites to the people of Zarahemla [the Mulekites] and thus to Gadianton. This process probably would have been unknown to Alma or other elite Nephite writers, who must have had little to do directly with the mass of “Mulekite” folk (Journal of Book of Mormon Studies: “When Lehi’s Party Arrived in the Land, Did They Find Others There,” 21).

10 And I write this epistle unto you, Lachoneus, and I hope that ye will deliver up your lands and your possessions, without the shedding of blood, that this my people may recover their rights and government, who have dissented away from you because of your wickedness in retaining from them their rights of government, and except ye do this, I will avenge their wrongs. I am Giddianhi.

11 And now it came to pass when Lachoneus received this epistle he was exceedingly astonished, because of the boldness of Giddianhi demanding the possession of the land of the Nephites, and also of threatening the people and avenging the wrongs of those that had received no wrong, save it were they had wronged themselves by dissenting away unto those wicked and abominable robbers.

12 Now behold, this Lachoneus, the governor, was a just man, and could not be frightened by the demands and the threatenings of a robber; therefore he did not hearken to the epistle of Giddianhi, the governor of the robbers, but he did cause that his people should cry unto the Lord for strength against the time that the robbers should come down against them.

verse 12 “the threatenings of a robber” Today we would not make much of the difference between the terms thief (Hebrew ganab) and robber (Hebrew gedud). However, in Hebrew tradition there was a significant difference. The legal distinctions between theft and robbery, especially under the laws of ancient Israel, have been analyzed by Bernard S. Jackson, professor of law at the University of Kent-Canterbury (Theft in Early Jewish Law [Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1972]). A thief was usually a local person who stole from his neighbor. He was tried and punished civilly, most often by a court composed of his fellow townspeople. Robbers, on the other hand, were often outsiders, brigands, highwaymen. They usually acted in organized groups rivaling local governments and attacking towns. They swore oaths and extorted ransom. They were dealt with militarily and could be executed summarily. Thieves, however, were a much less serious threat to society. This distinction seems to be made consistently in the Book of Mormon (John W. Welch, “Theft and Robbery in the Book of Mormon and in Ancient Near Eastern Law,” a FARMS reprint). This explains how Laban could call the sons of Lehi “robbers” and threaten to execute them on the spot without a trial, for that is how a military officer like Laban no doubt would have dealt with a robber. It also explains why the Lamanites are always said to “rob” from the Nephites but never from their own brethren—that would-be theft, not robbery. It also explains the rise and fearful menace of the Gadianton society, who are always called “robbers” in the Book of Mormon, never “thieves.” It is also probably no coincidence that the Hebrew word for “band” or “bandits” is gedud, and the most famous Book of Mormon robbers were known as Gadianton’s “band.”

The importance of this ancient legal tradition in the Book of Mormon is further enhanced by the fact that Anglo-American common law would have provided Joseph Smith with quite a different understanding of the legal definitions of the terms theft and robbery, inconsistent in many ways with the dominant usages found in the Book of Mormon. In ordinary American usage, the two terms are nearly synonymous.

Moreover, if Joseph Smith had relied on the language of his King James Bible for legal definitions of these terms, he would have stumbled into error, for that translation uses the English words thief and robber indiscriminately. For example, the same phrase is translated inconsistently from the Hebrew or Greek of Jeremiah 7:11 as “den of robbers” and yet from the identical Greek in Matthew 21:13 as “den of thieves,” even though Jesus was quoting Jeremiah on that occasion, to say nothing of the fact that thieves do not have dens. In addition, the same word for robbers in the Greek New Testament (lestai) is sometimes translated as “thieves” (crucified next to Jesus in Matthew 27:38) and other times as “robber” (describing Barabbas in John 18:40). Nevertheless, there was indeed an important ancient distinction between thieves and robbers that no translator should neglect, and over which Joseph Smith did not blunder.

13 Yea, he sent a proclamation among all the people, that they should gather together their women, and their children, their flocks and their herds, and all their substance, save it were their land, unto one place.

verse 13 “save it were their land” Some have poked harmless fun at this phrase as perhaps being unnecessary.

14 And he caused that fortifications should be built round about them, and the strength thereof should be exceedingly great. And he caused that armies, both of the Nephites and of the Lamanites, or of all them who were numbered among the Nephites, should be placed as guards round about to watch them, and to guard them from the robbers day and night.

15 Yea, he said unto them: As the Lord liveth, except ye repent of all your iniquities, and cry unto the Lord, ye will in no wise be delivered out of the hands of those Gadianton robbers.

verse 15 Lachoneus realized that military preparations were not enough to prepare his people to meet the challenge of the Gadianton robbers.

16 And so great and marvelous were the words and prophecies of Lachoneus that they did cause fear to come upon all the people; and they did exert themselves in their might to do according to the words of Lachoneus.

17 And it came to pass that Lachoneus did appoint chief captains over all the armies of the Nephites, to command them at the time that the robbers should come down out of the wilderness against them.

18 Now the chiefest among all the chief captains and the great commander of all the armies of the Nephites was appointed, and his name was Gidgiddoni.

19 Now it was the custom among all the Nephites to appoint for their chief captains, (save it were in their times of wickedness) some one that had the spirit of revelation and also prophecy; therefore, this Gidgiddoni was a great prophet among them, as also was the chief judge.

verse 19 “some one that had the spirit of revelation and also prophecy” We might interpret this as simply one who has lived in such a way that he is deserving of and responsive to the Spirit of the Holy Ghost.

20 Now the people said unto Gidgiddoni: Pray unto the Lord, and let us go up upon the mountains and into the wilderness, that we may fall upon the robbers and destroy them in their own lands.

21 But Gidgiddoni saith unto them: The Lord forbid; for if we should go up against them the Lord would deliver us into their hands; therefore we will prepare ourselves in the center of our lands, and we will gather all our armies together, and we will not go against them, but we will wait till they shall come against us; therefore as the Lord liveth, if we do this he will deliver them into our hands.

verse 21 Gidgiddoni explains that the Lord has forbidden the Nephites to become the aggressors. Gidgiddoni also may have in mind the practical fact that every time the Nephites have gone up in the mountains of the wilderness, they have been defeated. He then outlines a good counter-guerrilla strategy (see the commentary for Helaman 11:24-25).

22 And it came to pass in the seventeenth year, in the latter end of the year, the proclamation of Lachoneus had gone forth throughout all the face of the land, and they had taken their horses, and their chariots, and their cattle, and all their flocks, and their herds, and their grain, and all their substance, and did march forth by thousands and by tens of thousands, until they had all gone forth to the place which had been appointed that they should gather themselves together, to defend themselves against their enemies.

verse 22 “the proclamation of Lachoneus” The Nephites are about to assemble enough provisions to last for seven years and gather themselves to an appointed place. The intent of this plan was to literally starve the robbers to death.

There is an interesting geographic note that relates to this incident. Note the description of the place of gathering in the next verse. It has been pointed out by Dr. Joseph L. Allen (Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon, 37-38) that the mountains between the Chiapas depression (the proposed location of the city of Zarahemla and the River Sidon) and the Coatzacoalcos River (the “line” separating the land Bountiful from the land of Desolation—see the illustration, Book of Mormon Lands, a Proposed Setting—are known today as the Lacandone Mountains. The associated valley and the area are called Lacanha. Perhaps the similarity between the name of this area and the name of the great Nephite governor, Lachoneus, is only accidental, but it is also most interesting (see also the commentary for the following verse).

23 And the land which was appointed was the land of Zarahemla, and the land which was between the land Zarahemla and the land Bountiful, yea, to the line which was between the land Bountiful and the land Desolation.

verse 23 We have little information to inform us as to the exact location of this land to which the Nephites with all their resources will gather. This land has to be large enough to accommodate the “great many thousand people who were called Nephites (see the following verse),” yet small enough to have a defensible perimeter and small enough to be besieged by the armies of robbers (3 Nephi 4:7). One might propose a large but limited area in the northern part of the greater land of Zarahemla between the Sidon basin as it runs true north and the parallel line that separates the land Bountiful from the land of Desolation (see the illustration, Book of Mormon Lands, A Proposed Setting. Just how large this land is, the Book of Mormon text does not explain.

24 And there were a great many thousand people who were called Nephites, who did gather themselves together in this land. Now Lachoneus did cause that they should gather themselves together in the land southward, because of the great curse which was upon the land northward.

verse 24 “Lachoneus did cause that they should gather themselves together in the land southward, because of the great curse which was upon the land northward” The “land southward” is in this case in the greater land of Zarahemla. The “land northward” refers to the land Desolation. While your author is not specifically aware of the Lord’s pronouncing a curse upon the land Desolation, it is clear that the Nephites regarded it as a cursed and almost haunted land probably because they had discovered there the ruins and the bones of the destroyed Jaredite nation (see Alma 22:30 and Mosiah 8:8). Hence, they gave it the name “Desolation.”

25 And they did fortify themselves against their enemies; and they did dwell in one land, and in one body, and they did fear the words which had been spoken by Lachoneus, insomuch that they did repent of all their sins; and they did put up their prayers unto the Lord their God, that he would deliver them in the time that their enemies should come down against them to battle.

verse 25 The defensive preparations of the Nephites were completed.

26 And they were exceedingly sorrowful because of their enemies. And Gidgiddoni did cause that they should make weapons of war of every kind, and they should be strong with armor, and with shields, and with bucklers, after the manner of his instruction.

verse 26 “and with bucklers” “A buckler is a small shield designed specifically for defense against the sword, but in general it can refer to any type of small shield that is strapped to the forearm" (Warfare in the Book of Mormon, edited by Stephen D. Ricks and William J. Hamblin, 408-09).

3 Nephi Chapter 4

1 And it came to pass that in the latter end of the eighteenth year those armies of robbers had prepared for battle, and began to come down and to sally forth from the hills, and out of the mountains, and the wilderness, and their strongholds, and their secret places, and began to take possession of the lands, both which were in the land south and which were in the land north, and began to take possession of all the lands which had been deserted by the Nephites, and the cities which had been left desolate.

verse 1 “began to take possession of the lands, both which were in the land south and which were in the land north” It would seem likely that the reference here is only to the greater land of Zarahemla, both its northern and southern parts. It seems likely that the robbers took control of all those parts of the greater land of Zarahemla outside the area where the Nephites and Lamanites were gathered.

2 But behold, there were no wild beasts nor game in those lands which had been deserted by the Nephites, and there was no game for the robbers save it were in the wilderness.

verse 2 Hugh Nibley refers to the robbers as “a predatory order” which found itself in difficult straits because “there was no loot” for them to plunder (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 366-67).

3 And the robbers could not exist save it were in the wilderness, for the want of food; for the Nephites had left their lands desolate, and had gathered their flocks and their herds and all their substance, and they were in one body.

verse 3 The only option open to the robbers was to live hungry and in the wilderness, since the Nephites had abandoned their lands and had left them desolate.

The aim of Lachoneus was to simply sit tight and starve out the Nephites’ former exploiters. In effect, what Lachoneus did was to call a general strike. There would be no one to provide food and other provisions for the robbers.

4 Therefore, there was no chance for the robbers to plunder and to obtain food, save it were to come up in open battle against the Nephites; and the Nephites being in one body, and having so great a number, and having reserved for themselves provisions, and horses and cattle, and flocks of every kind, that they might subsist for the space of seven years, in the which time they did hope to destroy the robbers from off the face of the land; and thus the eighteenth year did pass away.

verse 4 The use of “horses” in this context suggests that whatever animal is referred to as a “horse” here was used largely for food and not to carry or pull things (see the commentary for Enos 1:21).

“that they might subsist for the space of seven years” We will learn that these gathered provisions did, in fact, last seven years from AD 18 to AD 25.

5 And it came to pass that in the nineteenth year Giddianhi found that it was expedient that he should go up to battle against the Nephites, for there was no way that they could subsist save it were to plunder and rob and murder.

verse 5 The Gadianton people were literally parasites whose host was no longer providing food. They were forced into battle.

6 And they durst not spread themselves upon the face of the land insomuch that they could raise grain, lest the Nephites should come upon them and slay them; therefore Giddianhi gave commandment unto his armies that in this year they should go up to battle against the Nephites.

7 And it came to pass that they did come up to battle; and it was in the sixth month; and behold, great and terrible was the day that they did come up to battle; and they were girded about after the manner of robbers; and they had a lamb-skin about their loins, and they were dyed in blood, and their heads were shorn, and they had head-plates upon them; and great and terrible was the appearance of the armies of Giddianhi, because of their armor, and because of their being dyed in blood.

verse 7 “they had a lamb-skin about their loins, and they were dyed in blood” While the fierce appearance of the warriors would have been frightening, it may have been the lamb-skins and their being dyed in blood that was the most disturbing (Matthew Brown suggested that the lamb-skin and the blood is a point of emphasis by proposing that 3 Nephi 4:7 forms a chiasm, where the turning point focuses on the lamb-skin about their loins and their being dyed in blood. See Matthew Brown, “Girded About with a Lambskin,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 6, no. 2, 1997: 127–128).

Early in the Book of Mormon, the Lamanites were known to shave their heads and dress only in a skin about their loins (See Enos 1:20; Mosiah 10:8; Alma 3:5; Alma 43:20), yet this verse uniquely identifies the army as wearing a lamb-skin, possibly a new choice in garment that was particularly appalling to the Nephites. Perhaps the Gadianton robbers had girded themselves with a “lamb-skin” and had dyed themselves in blood as a visual mockery of the sacrificial Lamb of God.

The terms “lamb” and “sheep” appear in the Book of Mormon text over a hundred times, used most often in religious metaphors, such as with the phrase “Lamb of God.” There are 26 occurrences of the word “sheep” in the Book of Mormon. Of those, only Ether 9:18 refer to an actual animal being physically present in a Book of Mormon scene. The other uses of the word “sheep” are used metaphorically when referring to ministry or to Jesus Christ. See for example 1 Nephi 22:25; Mosiah 14:6–7; Alma 5:37–38; Helaman 15:13; 3 Nephi 15:17. The word “lamb” occurs 76 times in the Book of Mormon, and is most often used metaphorically as a title for Jesus Christ. See for example Nephi’s vision in 1 Nephi 11–14, which uses the titles “the Lamb” and “Lamb of God” 39 times; also 2 Nephi 31:4–6; 2 Nephi 33:14; Alma 7:14; Mormon 9:2–6. The idea of garments being washed white through the “blood of the Lamb” is found in Alma 13:11; Alma 34:36; Ether 13:10–11.

Since the Nephites practiced the Law of Moses, they would presumably have preferred to have an animal equivalent to a lamb in order to perform sacrificial ordinances at the temple. Lambs were preferred, but not required, for burnt offerings (Leviticus 1), peace offerings (Leviticus 3), and sin offerings (Leviticus 4). However, for a trespass offering (Leviticus 5:14–19) and for the Passover (Exodus 12), sheep were indeed required. The Day of Atonement required the sacrifice of both a bullock and a goat to serve as the “scapegoat” (Leviticus 16). Thus, when 3 Nephi 4:7 describes the skin as a “lamb-skin,” it may be a reference to the New World equivalent of a sacrificial lamb (Mosiah 2:3 explicitly states that the Nephites “took of the firstlings of their flocks, that they might offer sacrifice and burnt offerings according to the Law of Moses.” While the Book of Mormon never indicates which animals they used for which sacrifices, they were clearly using domesticated animals to serve as their sacrificial offering.). In fighting the armies of the Nephites, Gadianton robbers’ slaughtering and wearing the skins of an animal of holy sacrifice would certainly have been a jarring image for the Nephites.

The shock-factor of the lamb-skin is heightened when put in the context of Mesoamerican intimidation tactics. The donning of animal pelts was intended to create a fearful spectacle, so it may have been unexpected for the Gadianton robbers to appear in the skins of a non-aggressive herbivore—like a lamb. Brant Gardner explained, “Mesoamericans were well known to wear animal skins, though the animal would typically be a ferocious jaguar, not a peaceful ‘lamb’” (Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 5:263). Not only the animal’s identity would have been terrifying, but also the blood because of Israelite laws of blood contamination. See Leviticus 6:27; 12:1–5; 17:10–12; 1 Kings 2:5. If the objective of the Gadianton Robbers was to stun and terrify the armies of the Nephites, the sacrilege of a slaughtered sacred symbol would surely accomplish just that.

By dying their skin in blood, and girding themselves with a lamb-skin, the Gadianton robbers may have been making a mockery of the Lamb of God, whose blood was sacrificed for the sins of the world. In a temple setting, priests ritually executed lambs with solemnity and care. However, in this woeful battle, the Gadianton Robbers blasphemously slaughtered the animal and smeared themselves in blood.

In their quest for dominance and power, the Gadianton robbers trampled on all that is sacred and holy in order to intimidate and terrify the opposing Nephites. Further, Matthew Brown and Ethan Sproat have both argued that the lamb-skin in this episode may have strong connections to ancient temple clothing (Sproat argued that the term “skins” in the Book of Mormon may be a reference to Adam and Eve’s “coats of skins,” and that the “skins” of the Lamanites is a reference to some item of clothing that asserted their right to authority. Sproat further connects the blood-stained lamb-skin in 3 Nephi 4 with an actual temple ritual described in 1 Kings 2. See Ethan Sproat, “Skins as Garments in the Book of Mormon: A Textual Exegesis,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 24, 2015: 149–158. Matthew Brown suggested that the lamb-skin they wore may represent a ceremonial apron or ephod, familiar to Israelite temple worship, as well as Mesoamerican royal aprons. See Brown, “Girded About with a Lambskin,” 124–151). Perhaps the Gadianton robbers would wear ritualistic clothing to war, because in many ancient societies, the clothing represented power, the very thing the Gadianton robbers sought to usurp (Brown, “Girded About with a Lambskin,” 146–148. Hugh Nibley discusses how in various ancient cultures, the donning of skins or garments transfers to the wearer the powers and virtues of the animal or garment. If the Gadianton robbers subscribed to such belief, they may have been seeking to coopt the power of the Lamb of God. See Hugh Nibley, Temple and Cosmos, The Collected Works of Hugh Nibley: Volume 12, Salt Lake City / Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1992, 112–132).

Despite the terror that the army of Giddianhi tried to inflict, the impactful point is that the Nephites' reaction to the ghastly appearance of the army was not to fear, but to cry unto the Lord for deliverance: “the Nephites, when they saw the appearance of the army of Giddianhi, had all fallen to the earth, and did lift their cries to the Lord their God, that he would spare them and deliver them out of the hands of their enemies” (3 Nephi 4:8). This story creates a masterful irony, since the Gadianton robbers sought to subjugate others with the blood of lambs, but in turn were defeated by those who sought deliverance from the Lamb of God. Alma and Ether declared of followers of Christ: “their garments were washed white through the blood of the Lamb” (Alma 13:11; cf. 34:36; Ether 13:10–11). While the Gadianton robbers should have been seeking forgiveness and cleansing from their sins, the garments of the Gadianton robbers were stained, rather than made white, in the blood of the lamb.

By crying unto the Lord their God, the Nephites were victorious in defeating the army of Giddianhi and repelling the forces of the Adversary. One of Satan’s most powerful tactics is fear; however, despite how horrific and grim life may sometimes appear, readers can garner hope and strength by crying to the Lord their God. Because the Lamb of God shed his blood for the children of men, all can find deliverance from sin and from life’s trials.

8 And it came to pass that the armies of the Nephites, when they saw the appearance of the army of Giddianhi, had all fallen to the earth, and did lift their cries to the Lord their God, that he would spare them and deliver them out of the hands of their enemies.

verse 8 “they . . . and did lift their cries to the Lord their God, that he would spare them and deliver them out of the hands of their enemies” Regarding the pre-battle prayers of the Nephites, Gary L. Sturgess has written:

We do not know what “cry[ing] mightily to the Lord” (Mosiah 9:17) meant, but it occurs so often in this context that we must understand it to be some kind of pre-battle ritual. Alma’s son Helaman wrote to [Captain] Moroni a decade or more after his father’s departure: “We trust God will deliver us, notwithstanding the weakness of our armies, yea, and deliver us out of the hands of our enemies” (Alma 58:37). There would also appear to have been a ritual thanksgiving after a victorious battle in which Jehovah was praised for delivering the people. Alma 45:1 records fasting and prayer, as well as a form of worship that involved great rejoicing, “because the Lord had again delivered them out of the hands of their enemies.” We find this same pattern of deliverance and rejoicing alluded to in Omni 1:6–7; Alma 49:28–30; 62:48–52; and 3 Nephi 4:28–33 (Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, volume 4, Number 2, 126).

9 And it came to pass that when the armies of Giddianhi saw this they began to shout with a loud voice, because of their joy, for they had supposed that the Nephites had fallen with fear because of the terror of their armies.

10 But in this thing they were disappointed, for the Nephites did not fear them; but they did fear their God and did supplicate him for protection; therefore, when the armies of Giddianhi did rush upon them they were prepared to meet them; yea, in the strength of the Lord they did receive them.

11 And the battle commenced in this the sixth month; and great and terrible was the battle thereof, yea, great and terrible was the slaughter thereof, insomuch that there never was known so great a slaughter among all the people of Lehi since he left Jerusalem.

12 And notwithstanding the threatenings and the oaths which Giddianhi had made, behold, the Nephites did beat them, insomuch that they did fall back from before them.

13 And it came to pass that Gidgiddoni commanded that his armies should pursue them as far as the borders of the wilderness, and that they should not spare any that should fall into their hands by the way; and thus they did pursue them and did slay them, to the borders of the wilderness, even until they had fulfilled the commandment of Gidgiddoni.

verse 13 “his armies should pursue them as far as the borders of the wilderness” We might presume that this “wilderness” is an uninhabited mountainous area which is part of the west wilderness that lay between the greater land of Zarahemla and the west sea.

14 And it came to pass that Giddianhi, who had stood and fought with boldness, was pursued as he fled; and being weary because of his much fighting he was overtaken and slain. And thus was the end of Giddianhi the robber.

15 And it came to pass that the armies of the Nephites did return again to their place of security. And it came to pass that this nineteenth year did pass away, and the robbers did not come again to battle; neither did they come again in the twentieth year.

16 And in the twenty and first year they did not come up to battle, but they came up on all sides to lay siege round about the people of Nephi; for they did suppose that if they should cut off the people of Nephi from their lands, and should hem them in on every side, and if they should cut them off from all their outward privileges, that they could cause them to yield themselves up according to their wishes.

17 Now they had appointed unto themselves another leader, whose name was Zemnarihah; therefore it was Zemnarihah that did cause that this siege should take place.

18 But behold, this was an advantage to the Nephites; for it was impossible for the robbers to lay siege sufficiently long to have any effect upon the Nephites, because of their much provision which they had laid up in store,

19 And because of the scantiness of provisions among the robbers; for behold, they had nothing save it were meat for their subsistence, which meat they did obtain in the wilderness;

20 And it came to pass that the wild game became scarce in the wilderness insomuch that the robbers were about to perish with hunger.

21 And the Nephites were continually marching out by day and by night, and falling upon their armies, and cutting them off by thousands and by tens of thousands.

22 And thus it became the desire of the people of Zemnarihah to withdraw from their design, because of the great destruction which came upon them by night and by day.

23 And it came to pass that Zemnarihah did give command unto his people that they should withdraw themselves from the siege, and march into the furthestmost parts of the land northward.

verse 23 Throughout the Book of Mormon, the Nephite military leaders consistently manifest a reluctance to allow their enemies to flank them and escape to the north. Perhaps they feared the strategic disadvantage of being surrounded, particularly since there may have been peoples in the lands to the north of the narrow neck of land willing to form an alliance with the Nephites' enemies.

24 And now, Gidgiddoni being aware of their design, and knowing of their weakness because of the want of food, and the great slaughter which had been made among them, therefore he did send out his armies in the night-time, and did cut off the way of their retreat, and did place his armies in the way of their retreat.

25 And this did they do in the night-time, and got on their march beyond the robbers, so that on the morrow, when the robbers began their march, they were met by the armies of the Nephites both in their front and in their rear.

26 And the robbers who were on the south were also cut off in their places of retreat. And all these things were done by command of Gidgiddoni.

27 And there were many thousands who did yield themselves up prisoners unto the Nephites, and the remainder of them were slain.

28 And their leader, Zemnariyah, was taken and hanged upon a tree, yea, even upon the top thereof until he was dead. And when they had hanged him until he was dead they did fell the tree to the earth, and did cry with a loud voice, saying:

29 May the Lord preserve his people in righteousness and in holiness of heart, that they may cause to be felled to the earth all who shall seek to slay them because of power and secret combinations, even as this man hath been felled to the earth.

verses 28-29 After the Nephites chopped down the tree on which Zemnariyah was hanged, they all cried out “with one voice” for God to protect them. Then they sang out “all as one” in praise of God (see verses 30-33). It certainly appears that some kind of ritual or legal procedure was involved here, and several evidences point to an ancient and previously unknown background for this form of execution:

1. Notice that the tree used in carrying out the execution was felled. Was this ever done in antiquity? Apparently, it was. For one thing, Jewish practice required that the tree upon which the culprit was hanged should be buried with the body, so the tree had to be chopped down. Since the rabbis understood that this burial would take place immediately, the Talmud recommended hanging the culprit on a pre-cut tree or post so that, in the words of Maimonides, “no felling is needed” (Maimonides, Sanhedrin XV, 9; see also Babylonian Talmud, Sanhedrin VI, 6).

2. Consider why the tree was chopped down and buried. As Maimonides explains: “In order that it should not serve as a sad reminder, people saying: ‘This is the tree on which so-and-so was hanged’” (Maimonides, Sanhedrin XV, 9). In this the tree became associated with the person being executed; it came to symbolize the culprit and the desire to forget him or her. By way of comparison, the Nephites identified the tree with Zemnariyah and all those like him, that his infamy might not be forgotten, when they cried out: “May [the Lord] cause to be felled to the earth all who shall seek to slay them . . . even as this man hath been felled to the earth.”

3. Stoning was the more usual method of execution under the law of Moses. One of the Dead Sea Scrolls, the Temple Scroll (also called 11Q19), calls for execution of a spy—one who defects to another nation and curses his own people, or one who “betrays his people to a foreign nation or causes evil against his people”—by hanging (column LXIV, lines 6-13, in Garcia Martinez, Dead Sea Scrolls Translated, 178). The Israelites who joined themselves to their enemies, the Midianites, in the worship of the false god Baal-Peor and were hanged by Moses fit this description of a traitor (see Numbers 25:1-9). The Gadianton band led by Zemnarihah consisted of dissenters who had turned against the Nephites (see Helaman 11:24-26, 3 Nephi 1:27-28). In Gadianton’s day they had fled the land to avoid being apprehended for their treasonous acts in killing the chief judge Pahoran and attempting to slay his successor, Helaman (Helaman 2:11). Because of this flight, they fit the description found in the Temple Scroll of the man who “escapes amongst the nations.” Giddianhi, Zemnarihah’s predecessor as leader of the band, admitted that his people had dissented from the Nephites (3 Nephi 3:9-11). It is also of interest that Giddianhi swore “with an oath” to destroy the Nephites (3 Nephi 3:8), clearly plotting evil against the people as also mentioned in the Temple Scroll. His successor’s execution by hanging is entirely in line with early Jewish law.

4. There is an ancient idea of fashioning a punishment that fits the crime. For example, if a thief broke into a house, he was to be put to death and “hung in front of the place where he broke in.” Under both biblical and ancient Near Eastern Law, ancient punishments called “talionic punishments” were often related symbolically to the offense. Thus, the punishment for a false accuser was to make him suffer whatever would have happened to the person he had falsely accused (see Deuteronomy 19:19). In Zemnarihah’s case this widely recognized principle of ancient jurisprudence was followed when he was hanged in front of the very nation he had tried to destroy and when he was felled to the earth just as he had tried to bring that nation down.

5. Finally, the people all chanted loudly, proclaiming the wickedness of Zemnarihah, which may be reminiscent of the ancient practice of heralding (publicizing or announcing) the execution of a particularly notorious criminal (see Deuteronomy 19:20). An even clearer example of heralding in the Book of Mormon is found in Alma 30:57, where the results in Korihor’s case were heralded abroad. In both these cases, the apparent requirement of publishing the wickedness of the culprit was satisfied, so that all who remained would “hear and fear” and the evil would be removed from among God’s people (John W. Welch, “The Execution of Zemnarihah,” Reexploring the Book of Mormon, 250-52).

Terrence L. Szink has noted a similarity between the peculiar ritual described in these two verses to Egyptian “execration texts.” He wrote: “In such texts, the Egyptians of the Middle Kingdom ritually cursed their enemies by writing their names on bowls or figures of clay and then smashing them. As they broke the bowls or figures they believed they were destroying the power of those whose names were inscribed thereon” (Studies in Scripture, Volume Eight, Alma 30 to Moroni, 132).

30 And they did rejoice and cry again with one voice, saying: May the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, protect this people in righteousness, so long as they shall call on the name of their God for protection.

31 And it came to pass that they did break forth, all as one, in singing, and praising their God for the great thing which he had done for them, in preserving them from falling into the hands of their enemies.

32 Yea, they did cry: Hosanna to the Most High God. And they did cry: Blessed be the name of the Lord God Almighty, the Most High God.

verse 32 “Hosanna” may be interpreted: Save us now; we pray thee (or we beseech thee)!

33 And their hearts were swollen with joy, unto the gushing out of many tears, because of the great goodness of God in delivering them out of the hands of their enemies; and they knew it was because of their repentance and their humility that they had been delivered from an everlasting destruction.

verse 33 “their hearts were swollen with joy, unto the gushing out of many tears” This phrase is a favorite of Elder Neil A. Maxwell who has taught us that even the most profound earthly joy which we may experience during this mortal existence does not compare to that we will feel at the moment of our reunion with family and friends in the life hereafter (Notwithstanding My Weakness, 58; Not My Will, But Thine, 143).

These Nephites tearfully “stood all amazed” at the mercy of God. At this point they truly realized the truth of the common and recurring theme emphasized and re-emphasized by the prophet Mormon throughout the Book of Mormon text. Mormon believed literally in the “promise / curse” of the Book of Mormon: The Lord was committed to defend his covenant people and protect them from being placed in bondage to any other people when they were righteous, but not under other circumstances (see the commentary for 2 Nephi 1:20 and the introductory commentary for Alma 43; see also the following verse).

No matter how formidable and how threatening the enemy and by how much they outnumbered the Nephites, the Nephites’ most significant problem was not the enemy’s military might. It was rather their own unrighteousness.

3 Nephi Chapter 5

1 And now behold, there was not a living soul among all the people of the Nephites who did doubt in the least the words of all the holy prophets who had spoken; for they knew that it must needs be that they must be fulfilled.

2 And they knew that it must be expedient that Christ had come, because of the many signs which had been given, according to the words of the prophets; and because of the things which had come to pass already they knew that it must needs be that all things should come to pass according to that which had been spoken.

3 Therefore they did forsake all their sins, and their abominations, and their whoredoms, and did serve God with all diligence day and night.

verse 3 As I read through these verses again in November 2012, I am struck with the marked differences between the Nephite society being described herein and the present-day culture of the United States of America. Today, our priorities, in general, have excluded God and his commandments and purposes. I sense that America today is far to the right in the “prosperity-pride-destruction cycle,” and it is most disquieting to contemplate the possible consequences that await.

“Abominations” are perverse doctrines and practices, especially those associated with idol worship. These are particularly abominable or detestable in the eyes of the Lord.

“Whoredoms” are sexual sins.

verses 1-3 The Nephite nation will remain together for three more years after the defeat of the Gadianton robbers. Apparently, they were still living off the provisions which they had stored (see 3 Nephi 4:4). These three years constituted a sort of mini-golden era for the Nephites.

4 And now it came to pass that when they had taken all the robbers prisoners, insomuch that none did escape who were not slain, they did cast their prisoners into prison, and did cause the word of God to be preached unto them; and as many as would repent of their sins and enter into a covenant that they would murder no more were set at liberty.

5 But as many as there were who did not enter into a covenant, and who did still continue to have those secret murders in their hearts, yea, as many as were found breathing out threatenings against their brethren were condemned and punished according to the law.

verse 5 The fact that there were some who would not abandon their previous wicked secret oaths when faced with certain condemnation and punishment provides evidence of the unusual devotion to the Gadianton society of some of its members.

6 And thus they did put an end to all those wicked, and secret, and abominable combinations, in the which there was so much wickedness, and so many murders committed.

7 And thus had the twenty and second year passed away, and the twenty and third year also, and the twenty and fourth, and the twenty and fifth; and thus had twenty and five years passed away.

verses 8-26 These verses comprise a most interesting editorial comment by the abridger of the large plates of Nephi, the prophet Mormon. Before reading it, you may wish to refresh your memory of the plates of the Book of Mormon by reviewing the supplemental article, Those Confusing Book of Mormon Plates. In these verses, Mormon clarifies his identity, his sources, his purpose, and his inspiration for editing the account onto the plates of Mormon. He also testifies as to the accuracy of his record. This type of commentary has been referred to previously in our study of the Book of Mormon as a “colophon.” For a discussion of the significance of colophons in ancient literature, see the commentary for 1 Nephi 1:1-3.

Why is this comment placed here in 3 Nephi 5? Wouldn't it have been more logical to insert this editorial comment following his abridgment of his own writings on the large plates of Nephi? This would have resulted in this multi-verse editorial comment's being placed following Mormon chapters 1-7. Perhaps he placed his own editorial account and testimony here because he was not certain he would live to write his own account of his day.

8 And there had many things transpired which, in the eyes of some, would be great and marvelous; nevertheless, they cannot all be written in this book; yea, this book cannot contain even a hundredth part of what was done among so many people in the space of twenty and five years;

verse 8 “this book” Mormon refers here to his abridgement onto the plates of Mormon. He then makes specific reference to the preceding twenty-five-year period beginning at the time of the Savior's birth. Mormon maintains that he was unable to record less than one percent of the events that took place during this period (see also Words of Mormon 1:5; 3 Nephi 26:6; Ether 15:33). The phrase “a hundredth part” is likely hyperbolic and perhaps should not be taken literally. Mormon intends to say that his record contains only a very small part of the events of this period.

9 But behold there are records which do contain all the proceedings of this people; and a shorter but true account was given by Nephi.

verse 9 Here Mormon seems to be commenting on only the twenty-five years following the Savior's birth.

“records which do contain all the proceedings of this people” This phrase has reference to the collection of plates called the large plates of Nephi and all entries onto these plates regarding the events of this twenty-five year period of time.

“a shorter but true account . . . given by Nephi” Does this phrase refer to the small plates of Nephi? It apparently does not, since the small plates of Nephi do not apply to the twenty-five years since the Savior’s birth. Rather, it refers to the writings of Nephi, the son of Nephi, the son of Helaman, which were recorded on the large plates of Nephi and which contained the account of the happenings of this twenty-five-year period. It was from this account that Mormon obtained the materials from which he wrote his abridged account of this quarter century (see the following verse).

10 Therefore I have made my record of these things according to the record of Nephi, which was engraven on the plates which were called the plates of Nephi.

verse 10 The “record of Nephi” refers to writings of Nephi, the son of Nephi on the “plates of Nephi”—the large plates of Nephi. Mormon will abridge this record and his abridgment will be called by us Third Nephi or 3 Nephi.

At this point the prophet Mormon pauses in his narrative and bears testimony of his own record, the plates of Mormon. In doing so, he follows a formal pattern. Terrence L. Szink has found that Nephi, the son of Lehi, followed this same pattern as he bore testimony of his own record, the small plates of Nephi.

Each of these two writer-engravers: (1) declared that he had made the plates with his own hands (1 Nephi 1:3; 3 Nephi 5:11); (2) provided a concise autobiographical comment (1 Nephi 1:1; 3 Nephi 5:12-13); (3) briefly stated the source of his information (1 Nephi 1:3; 3 Nephi 5:16-17); (4) testified of his record using almost identical language (1 Nephi 1:3; 3 Nephi 5:18); and (5) made mention of the language in which their plates were written (1 Nephi 1:2; 3 Nephi 5:18). Brother Szink comments: “So many similarities cannot be attributed to mere chance. I believe that these two prophets employed what was a specific Nephite formula for giving testimony. It is difficult to say whether the formula was a literary device or had formed part of the Nephite legal system” (Studies in Scripture, Volume Eight, Alma 30 to Moroni, 134-35).

11 And behold, I do make the record on plates which I have made with mine own hands.

verses 10-11 “I do make the record” Mormon engraved his record or abridgment onto a separate set of plates “which [he] made with [his] own hand”—the plates of Mormon.

12 And behold, I am called Mormon, being called after the land of Mormon, the land in which Alma did establish the church among the people, yea, the first church which was established among them after their transgression.

verse 12 “I am called Mormon, being called after the land of Mormon” It is interesting and surprising that this is the first time in the writings on the plates of Mormon that Mormon introduces himself. One might have expected him to do so earlier in the book, even at the beginning of the record as did Nephi at the beginning of the small plates of Nephi. Perhaps such an introduction was contained at the beginning of the book of Lehi which was the first part of the plates of Mormon and which was contained on the 116 pages of manuscript lost by Martin Harris. Brant A. Gardner argued, “Mormon must have explained at the beginning of his record (the lost 116 pages or book of Lehi) who he [was] and what he [was] doing. He assumed that his relationship with the reader is so clear that he sometimes [did] not even identify himself in his continued editorial explanations (Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 3:71).

Mormon does identify himself by name in the Words of Mormon, but that book was found at the end of the small plates of Nephi and was translated after the translation of the plates of Mormon was complete. But why would he introduce himself again? And why here, particularly?

One possible explanation is that Mormon’s narrative was reaching a crescendo of importance. He would soon record Jesus Christ’s visitation and ministry among his people, and to prepare the reader for this important revelation, he sought to further disclose and establish himself as a reliable witness.

A careful analysis of Mormon’s statements suggests that both his discussion of records (3 Nephi 5:8–11, 14–19) and his self-introduction in 3 Nephi 5 (12-13, 21) can be seen as part of the same narrative goal—to legitimize both the record and the record keepers of the Book of Mormon. For instance, Mormon felt it important to mention that his source record for the book of 3 Nephi was written by Nephi, the son of Nephi (See the introductory heading for 3 Nephi 1), and also that despite its brevity it was a “true account” (3 Nephi 5:9). His later comment that “we know our record to be true, for behold, it was a just man who did keep the record” (3 Nephi 8:1) further characterized Nephi as a reliable record keeper.

Mormon likewise certified his own record as being “just and true” (3 Nephi 5:18). He even felt it necessary to declare, “I do make the record on plates which I have made with mine own hands” (verse 11) and that his record of his own day was “of the things which I have seen with mine own eyes” (verse 17). This language was clearly intended to establish Mormon as a credible abridger and as a primary witness, perhaps analogous to the Eight Witnesses to the Book of Mormon who saw and hefted the plates for themselves (See Testimony of the Eight Witnesses, found in the introductory pages of the Book of Mormon; Richard Lloyd Anderson, Investigating the Book of Mormon Witnesses, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 1981).

Yet not just any witness will do. A testator must be trustworthy and reliable. Thus Mormon declared, “I am called Mormon, being called after the land of Mormon” (3 Nephi 5:12). Matthew L. Bowen has proposed, “Alma and his people consciously re-motivated the name ‘Mormon’ in terms of the covenant they made” and that the name may be etymologically associated with charity (Matthew L. Bowen, “‘Most Desirable Above All Things’: Onomastic Play on Mary and Mormon in the Book of Mormon,” Interpreter: A Journal of Mormon Scripture 13, 2015: 60. See also “Mormon,” Book of Mormon Onomasticon, ed. Paul Y. Hoskisson, online at onoma.lib.byu.edu. Although some scholars have found it to be a less likely candidate, Jerry Grover has argued for an Egyptian etymology derived from mr. See Jerry Grover, Translation of the “Caractor” Document, Vineyard, UT: Grover Publications, 2015, 145).

If Bowen is correct, then Mormon likely emphasized his name and its history among the Nephites because it held connotations of pure and enduring love and because it linked him to the authority and covenant found in the “first church” established among his people “after their transgression” (3 Nephi 5:12).

Mormon further described himself as a “disciple of Jesus Christ” who had “been called of him to declare his word among his people” (3 Nephi 5:13). He made it clear that he was recording these things “according to the will of God,” and that the production of his record was in response to prayers of “holy ones” who had preceded him (verse 14; cf. Enos 1:12–18). As a final stamp of approval on his authority, he declared himself to be a “pure descendant of Lehi” (Interestingly, Mormon’s closing statement actually mirrors the closing formalities of several epistles found in the Book of Mormon. Mormon wrote “And now I make an end of my saying . . . I am Mormon, and a pure descendant of Lehi” (3 Nephi 5:19–20). For comparative examples, see Alma 54:14, 24;58:41; 60:36. See also Robert F. Smith, “Epistolary Form in the Book of Mormon,” The FARMS Review 20, no. 2, 2010: 125–135; Sidney B. Sperry, “Types of Literature in the Book of Mormon: Epistles, Psalms, Lamentations,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 4, no. 1 (1995): 73–74). This juncture in the narrative of the Book of Mormon was ideal for Mormon’s interjection. The people had just completed a major upswing and reversal (commonly referred to as a pride cycle), which then resolved itself into a faithful period of righteousness (see 3 Nephi 5:1–3) (See John W. Welch and J. Gregory Welch, Charting the Book of Mormon: Visual Aids for Personal Study and Teaching, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1999, chart 144). Mormon’s self-revealing digression can be seen as a strategically situated message to prepare readers to accept the recorded events of Christ’s appearance to his people. In this light, Mormon wasn’t so much concerned about what people would think of him but with how they would treat the culminating sacred story that he was about to reveal.

In modern times, it is difficult for many people to believe what they haven’t seen with their own eyes or felt with their own hands. And when confronted with the miraculous events reported in the Bible or Book of Mormon, they sometimes struggle to accept their testimonies and witnesses. Some people even go so far as to “declare that the Book of Mormon and other canonical works are not ancient records of scripture” (M. Russell Ballard, “Beware of False Prophets and False Teachers,” Ensign, November 1999, online at lds.org).

All readers would do well to carefully read Mormon’s personal testimony as a prelude to his account of Christ’s ministry in the land of Bountiful. Mormon wanted his readers to know that he was a real person, that he really wrote on records that he made with his own hands, and that he recorded things he saw with his own eyes. He was a true disciple and witness of Jesus Christ, and the sources from which he compiled his own record were likewise written by trustworthy witnesses.

Most importantly, his record of Christ’s ministry among his people is both spiritually essential and historically valid. Thousands of witnesses saw the face and felt the wounds and heard the voice of the resurrected Christ, and according to Mormon, “they know that their record is true for they all of them did see and hear, every man for himself” (3 Nephi 17:25). The standing invitation of the Book of Mormon, issued by Mormon’s son and co-worker, Moroni, is that all those who “receive these things” and then “ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ” concerning its message will gain their own testimony of its truth, goodness, and divinity by the power of the Holy Ghost (see Moroni 10:3–5).

The land of Mormon was the land south of the land of Nephi to which the elder Alma fled with those believers who would follow him following the execution of Abinadi. Alma would baptize his followers there in the waters of Mormon.

“the first church which was established among them after their transgression” Mormon refers to the restoration of the church among the Nephite peoples by the senior Alma in 145 BC which occurred after the apostasy of king Noah and his people in the land of Nephi (see the commentary for Mosiah 18:17). As stated, the land of Mormon was undoubtedly the land that contained the waters of Mormon, where Alma performed the first baptisms of “the restoration.”

13 Behold, I am a disciple of Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I have been called of him to declare his word among his people, that they might have everlasting life.

verse 13 “I am a disciple of Jesus Christ” Mormon has been called as a special witness of the Savior—as an apostle (D&C 107:23). When Christ appears personally to the Nephites following his resurrection, he will call twelve Nephite disciples or apostles. We can presume that a succession of this priesthood office persisted down to the time of Mormon (see 4 Nephi 1:14; see also Moroni 2:1-2).

14 And it hath become expedient that I, according to the will of God, that the prayers of those who have gone hence, who were the holy ones, should be fulfilled according to their faith, should make a record of these things which have been done—

verse 14 “the prayers of those who have gone hence, who were the holy ones” Who are these “holy ones”? They are those righteous prophets and disciples of the Book of Mormon who prayed that the Book of Mormon plates would be preserved so that they might come forth unto those of the latter days. They include the likes of the prophet Enos who did “cry unto God that he would preserve the records; and he [the Lord] covenanted with me that he would bring them [the record of the Book of Mormon peoples] forth unto the [latter-day] Lamanites in his [the Lord’s] own due time” (Enos 1:16).

15 Yea, a small record of that which hath taken place from the time that Lehi left Jerusalem, even down until the present time.

verse 15 “even down until the present time” It is interesting to speculate as to which point in time this editorial comment by Mormon was actually written. He is obviously in the process of abridging the materials written by Nephi, the son of Nephi—the book he will call Third Nephi. But what else had he written? For example, had he recorded the record of his own day onto the large plates of Nephi. I’m not certain it is possible to answer that question—read on!

16 Therefore I do make my record from the accounts which have been given by those who were before me, until the commencement of my day; verses 15-16 Here Mormon refers again to his abridgment of the large plates of Nephi written onto the plates of Mormon. He refers to his abridgement in the prior verse as “a small record” (see also Mormon 5:9). His abridgement was small relative to the volume of plates in the set we call the large plates of Nephi.

“until the commencement of my day” Here the prophet Mormon refers to all of the Book of Mormon prophets who recorded onto the large plates of Nephi from Lehi to his own day—to the end of 4 Nephi.

17 And then I do make a record of the things which I have seen with mine own eyes.

verse 17 In this verse Mormon apparently refers to his own writings, the writings of his own day, which he will enter or has entered onto the large plates of Nephi (see Mormon 1:4; 2:18). After he does so, he will then abridge his own record and enter that abridgment onto the plates of Mormon. Those writings—that abridgement—is now found in Mormon 1-7.

18 And I know the record which I make to be a just and a true record; nevertheless there are many things which, according to our language, we are not able to write.

verse 18 “I know the record which I make to be a just and a true record” We might try to differentiate here between the meanings of “just” and “true.” “Just” means that it contains a reliable and correct account of valid eternal principles. “True” means that it is authentic, that it is what it purports to be.

“there are many things which, according to our language, we are not able to write” The prophet Moroni will later teach: “We have written this record according to our knowledge, in the characters which are called among us the reformed Egyptian, being handed down and altered by us, according to our manner of speech. And if our plates had been sufficiently large we should have written in Hebrew . . . and if we could have written in Hebrew, behold, ye would have had no imperfection in our record” (Mormon 9:32-34).

19 And now I make an end of my saying, which is of myself, and proceed to give my account of the things which have been before me.

verse 19 “I make an end of my saying, which is of myself” Mormon will begin to conclude his editorial comment.

“and proceed to give my account of the things which have been before me” Perhaps Mormon means to say here that he will conclude his editorial comment and resume his abridgement of those events that occurred in the Book of Mormon prior to his own day.

20 I am Mormon, and a pure descendant of Lehi. I have reason to bless my God and my Savior Jesus Christ, that he brought our fathers out of the land of Jerusalem, (and no one knew it save it were himself and those whom he brought out of that land) and that he hath given me and my people so much knowledge unto the salvation of our souls.

verse 20 “and no one knew it save it were himself and those whom he brought out of that land” Nephi, the son of Lehi, taught that the Lord had maintained a protective hand over the family of Lehi as they departed Jerusalem so “that the Jews might not know concerning our flight into the wilderness, lest they should pursue us and destroy us” (1 Nephi 4:36).

verses 21-26 Now, in the verses that follow, Mormon concludes his tiny personal editorial and self introduction with a prophecy regarding the future of the house of Israel.

21 Surely he hath blessed the house of Jacob, and hath been merciful unto the seed of Joseph.

verse 21 Here, Mormon refers to the seed of Lehi and Ishmael who have greatly blessed since their departure from Jerusalem, particularly—as the following verse makes clear—those descendants of Joseph who have kept his commandments.

22 And insomuch as the children of Lehi have kept his commandments he hath blessed them and prospered them according to his word.

23 Yea, and surely shall he again bring a remnant of the seed of Joseph to the knowledge of the Lord their God.

verse 23 This verse refers to something that lies in the future as compared to the time of Mormon’s life. Perhaps this refers to the latter-day introduction of the gospel to the descendants or “remnants” of the Book of Mormon peoples. Or, as suggested by the following verse, perhaps he prophesies of the eventual restoration of the gospel to other remnants of the scattered tribe of Joseph and other tribes of Israel.

24 And as surely as the Lord liveth, will he gather in from the four quarters of the earth all the remnant of the seed of Jacob, who are scattered abroad upon all the face of the earth.

verse 24 This refers to the latter-day gathering of all the house of Israel in preparation for the Lord’s second coming.

25 And as he hath covenanted with all the house of Jacob, even so shall the covenant wherewith he hath covenanted with the house of Jacob be fulfilled in his own due time, unto the restoring all the house of Jacob unto the knowledge of the covenant that he hath covenanted with them.

verse 25 Here we learn that Abraham’s posterity is promised a full knowledge of God’s covenants with the house of Jacob—they will come to fully understand the nature of their covenant relationship with God. And just how is a knowledge of these covenants going to be communicated to Jacob’s descendants in the last days? It will be revealed in the pages of the Book of Mormon! The resurrected Lord will provide these details about his covenant promises with the house of Israel in two important discourses delivered by the resurrected Christ and recorded in the Book of Mormon: “The Law and the Covenant Discourse”—3 Nephi chapters 15 and 16, and “The Covenant People Discourse”—3 Nephi 20:10 to 23:5.

26 And then shall they know their Redeemer, who is Jesus Christ, the Son of God; and then shall they be gathered in from the four quarters of the earth unto their own lands, from whence they have been dispersed; yea, as the Lord liveth so shall it be. Amen.

verse 26 “then shall they know their Redeemer, who is Jesus Christ, the Son of God; and then shall they be gathered in from the four quarters of the earth unto their own lands, from whence they have been dispersed” We have discussed previously the gathering of Israel (see the introductory commentary for 1 Nephi 20). There we concluded that there is both a spiritual gathering and a temporal gathering. The spiritual gathering occurs when a people accept Christ and join his church. The temporal gathering consists in moving to that location where the saints have gathered (2 Nephi 9:2). The sequence of gathering generally is first to Christ and his church, and then to specific locations.

3 Nephi Chapter 6

1 And now it came to pass that the people of the Nephites did all return to their own lands in the twenty and sixth year, every man, with his family, his flocks and his herds, his horses and his cattle, and all things whatsoever did belong unto them.

2 And it came to pass that they had not eaten up all their provisions; therefore they did take with them all that they had not devoured, of all their grain of every kind, and their gold, and their silver, and all their precious things, and they did return to their own lands and their possessions, both on the north and on the south, both on the land northward and on the land southward.

verse 2 “they did return to their own lands . . . both on the north and on the south, both on the land northward and on the land southward” Again, it seems likely these Nephites’ homes were all located in the greater land of Zarahemla, and that these directional designations were simply describing the relationship of their home lands to the limited area in which they had gathered for self-protection.

3 And they granted unto those robbers who had entered into a covenant to keep the peace of the land, who were desirous to remain Lamanites, lands, according to their numbers, that they might have, with their labors, wherewith to subsist upon; and thus they did establish peace in all the land.

verse 3 “who were desirous to remain Lamanites” These converted Lamanite souls had previously joined with the Gadianton band. They now desired to hold to their covenants and remain Lamanites rather than rejoin the numerous dissenting Nephites who had comprised the large part of the Gadiantons.

The Gadiantons had again been effectively eradicated just as they had been in the days of Nephi the son of Helaman (Helaman 11:10).

4 And they began again to prosper and to wax great; and the twenty and sixth and seventh years passed away, and there was great order in the land; and they had formed their laws according to equity and justice.

verse 4 “equity and justice” Can one really distinguish between these two virtues? Intuitively we may define justice as “according to the law as it is written.” What then is equity? Is it something in addition to justice? Elder Bruce R. McConkie has defined equity as “the principle which tempers the harshness of justice. Equity dictates that the law shall be administered according to its spirit and not merely its letter (D&C 102:16; 134:3; Helaman 3:20; 3 Nephi 6:4). Equity (mercy) is an attribute of Deity (Psalm 98:9; 99:4; Alma 9:26)” (“Equity” in Mormon Doctrine, 231).

5 And now there was nothing in all the land to hinder the people from prospering continually, except they should fall into transgression.

verse 5 According to the now well-known promise / curse of the Book of Mormon, if the people are faithful to their covenants then they are literally guaranteed by the Lord that nothing on earth can, without their own will and action, mar their liberty, security, prosperity, and happiness.

The Nephites were enjoying a happy ending to a frightening threat and were certain to experience a splendid economic boom. And how long did this happy period last? For about two years. Then “there became a great inequality in all the land, insomuch that the church began to be broken up” (3 Nephi 6:14).

6 And now it was Gidgiddoni, and the judge, Lachoneus, and those who had been appointed leaders, who had established this great peace in the land.

7 And it came to pass that there were many cities built anew, and there were many old cities repaired.

8 And there were many highways cast up, and many roads made, which led from city to city, and from land to land, and from place to place.

9 And thus passed away the twenty and eighth year, and the people had continual peace.

10 But it came to pass in the twenty and ninth year there began to be some disputings among the people; and some were lifted up unto pride and boastings because of their exceedingly great riches, yea, even unto great persecutions;

verse 10 “exceedingly great riches, yea, even unto great persecutions” We are reminded of Jacob’s warning to the rich: “Wo unto the rich, who are rich as to the things of the world. For because they are rich they despise the poor, and they persecute the meek, and their hearts are upon their treasures; wherefore, their treasure is their god. And behold, their treasure shall perish with them also” (2 Nephi 9:30).

By this time, you the reader, are very familiar by what we have repeatedly referred to as the “pride cycle”: The Lord blesses the Nephites. The Nephites become proud, materialistic, and they commit sin. Prophets call the people to repentance. The people are punished, and then the people are humbled and repent (See for example, Helaman 3:25–26, 32; 11:20–21; 3 Nephi 6:1–9; Helaman 3:33–34, 36; 4:11–12; 3 Nephi 6:13–18; 2 Nephi 25:9; Helaman 7:13–28; 10:14–17; 3 Nephi 6:20, 23; Helaman 4:1–2, 11, 13; 11:1–6; 3 Nephi 9:1–12; Helaman 4:14–15, 20–26; 11:7–11, 15; 3 Nephi 5:1–6). At this point the Lord blesses them again, they become successful, then proud, and the “pride cycle” repeats itself.

At this point in the Book of Mormon, we reach a most critical period. Recall that in AD 15, the righteous Nephites and Lamanites gathered into one location to defend themselves against the Gadianton band led by Giddianhi and then Zemnariyah. For seven years they held out against the Gadianton band, and eventually the Gadianton band was defeated. Zemnarihah was hanged from a tree, and then the tree was felled (3 Nephi 3-4). The mark of the curse, the dark skin, was removed from the Lamanite believers so that no physical distinction remained between Nephites and Lamanites. A few years of peace and relative righteousness will now ensue.

But we will soon learn that the Nephites will again deteriorate into unrighteousness and anarchy. By AD 30, the Nephite government will be destroyed, and the people will divide into tribes. This time the Nephites will have gone too far. The pride cycle will have run amuck. And the Lord will orchestrate a great destruction of the people in 3 Nephi 8.

Just what is about to happen? What explains the unusually rampant spiritual deterioration that is about to occur? What is the mechanism this time for the Nephite government to be destroyed? A detail in verse 14 may reveal part of the answer. See the commentary for verse 14.

11 For there were many merchants in the land, and also many lawyers, and many officers.

verse 11 When a society becomes involved in active foreign trade, a bureaucracy grows up to negotiate alliances and administer laws governing the trade practices (see the commentary for Helaman 6:7-8). It is likely these “merchants,” “lawyers,” and “officers” were involved in the trade industry and had become wealthy in the process.

12 And the people began to be distinguished by ranks, according to their riches and their chances for learning; yea, some were ignorant because of their poverty, and others did receive great learning because of their riches.

verse 12 To understand the probable central reasons for the appearance of this class society, see the commentary for Helaman 6:7-8 which discusses the phenomenon of foreign trade among the Nephites.

It is clear that in a class society, poverty can result in a lesser opportunity for education. It is also clear that the Lord regards this as an evil fruit of a class society (D&C 49:20).

13 Some were lifted up in pride, and others were exceedingly humble; some did return railing for railing, while others would receive railing and persecution and all manner of afflictions, and would not turn and revile again, but were humble and penitent before God.

verse 13 “some did return railing for railing” To rail against someone is to speak negatively or bitterly or reproachfully (finding fault) against them.

14 And thus there became a great inequality in all the land, insomuch that the church began to be broken up; yea, insomuch that in the thirtieth year the church was broken up in all the land save it were among a few of the Lamanites who were converted unto the true faith; and they would not depart from it, for they were firm, and steadfast, and immovable, willing with all diligence to keep the commandments of the Lord.

verse 14 “there became a great inequality in all the land, insomuch that the church began to be broken up” It appears that pride led to abuse of the poor, and that this abuse of the poor led to the destabilization of the church and of society. As Mormon noted above, “And some were lifted up unto pride and boastings because of their exceedingly great riches, yea, even unto great persecutions” (3 Nephi 6:10).

Obviously, there were not only classes that existed in society without the church, but the factions rose up in the church as well. The opposite of this fragmentation of the church, and indeed the solution to such fragmentation is the phenomenon of unity within the church. The Savior taught that unity among his followers served as a witness to the world that he is the Christ (John 17:20-26). Paul exhorted all to become “fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God” (Ephesians 2:19) and to “come in the unity of the faith” (Ephesians 4:13). Zion refers to the community of believers who, through their unity in Christ, have become “of one heart and one mind” (Moses 7:18). Such unity among the saints is achieved through individual obedience to the laws of God and through common dedication to the Savior. In order to be unified, the church members must share common aspirations, beliefs, and purposes. In the Book of Mormon, for example, the Savior explained that to become “one,” members must end disputations and contentions (3 Nephi 11:22-28, 36). The Book of Mormon also teaches that the saints must mitigate any condition that undermines unity among members, including significant economic and social distinctions (3 Nephi 6:10-16; 4 Nephi 1:24-35) (F. Neil Brady, “Unity” in Encyclopedia of Mormonism, volume 4).

Brother Hugh Nibley observed: “Economic inequality is a deadly danger to the church in every age. . . . The usual explanation . . . for the increasing iniquity of society . . . is nothing but the desire ‘for power, and authority, and riches, and the vain things of the world’ (verse 15)” (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 6, 393).

The pride cycle had so badly fragmented the cohesiveness of society that when the Chief Judge is murdered in 3 Nephi 7, Nephite society will not be able to withstand the blow and it will break into tribes. Chief Judges had been murdered before in Nephite history, but the pride cycle had finally polarized society so much that it could not withstand the strain. This assassination and other injustices seem to have happened at the worst possible moment, such that it tore the fragmented country apart.

Care for the poor has always been a core tenet of Christianity from the beginning: “Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction” (James 1:27). Yet it is easy to miss the full ramifications of what it means to care for the poor. In Nephite society, care for the poor may have helped preserve the country. The Book of Moses records one case where this seems to have happened. In Moses 7:17–18, a group of people, the city of Enoch, were blessed by the Lord, “and did flourish. And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them.” Far from letting their blessings cause them to become prideful, this group of people used their prosperity to eliminate poverty from their society. They let their prosperity strengthen their society rather than destroying it. On many occasions, the Nephites did this as well (Mosiah 4:16–26; Alma 34:28–29; 4 Nephi 1:3), and we members of the Church can do the same today.

Elder Patrick Kearon taught: “The Lord has instructed us that the stakes of Zion are to be ‘a defense’ and ‘a refuge from the storm.’ We have found refuge. Let us come out from our safe places and share with (others), from our abundance, hope for a brighter future, faith in God and in our fellowman, and love that sees beyond cultural and ideological differences to the glorious truth that we are all children of our Heavenly Father” (Patrick Kearon, “Refuge from the Storm,” Ensign, May 2016, 111–114).

This story reminds modern readers of the Book of Mormon to avoid the pride that fragmented Nephite society and actively care for the poor and needy.

15 Now the cause of this iniquity of the people was this—Satan had great power, unto the stirring up of the people to do all manner of iniquity, and to the puffing them up with pride, tempting them to seek for power, and authority, and riches, and the vain things of the world.

verse 15 Commenting on the remarkable rapidity with which the Book of Mormon people turn from humble and righteous to proud and wicked, Hugh Nibley wrote:

Money gets quick results, and the effects of newly acquired riches are almost instantaneous. At once the happy recipient of a big promotion is expected to change his lifestyle, move to a better part of town, join different clubs, send his children to different schools, even change his church affiliation for a more fashionable one, or drop an intended bride for one more acceptable to the president’s wife and her exalted circle. . . No, my friends, the Book of Mormon does not exaggerate either the relentless efficiency or the speed with which wealth corrupts all those who “set their hearts upon riches and the things of the world” (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 8, 364-65).

16 And thus Satan did lead away the hearts of the people to do all manner of iniquity; therefore they had enjoyed peace but a few years.

verse 16 One might well wonder as to the role of Satan in “lead[ing] away the hearts of the people to do all manner of iniquity.” After all, is not there an element of “natural man” or “natural self” within each of us that might incline us toward iniquitous behavior without any prompting at all? Satan is “street wise” and smart. He obviously delights in a man's succumbing to his natural self. That natural self seems to be the root cause of sin. It is quite separate from the influences of Satan. But Satan provides abundant opportunities or temptations for a man to be led away by his natural tendencies. Satan also provides comfort and consolation after the fact of sin. "Please don't feel bad. Don't blame yourself. You were only doing what any normal man would have done under those circumstances."

One might well argue that the pulls of the natural self are more ubiquitous and more readily accessible to man than the Spirit's promptings. The former require no effort or striving. They do not have to be earned. We do not have to qualify ourselves to be worthy of them. They are provided to all mortals "free-of-charge." On the other hand, one must strive earnestly to qualify to receive the promptings of the Spirit of God.

17 And thus, in the commencement of the thirtieth year—the people having been delivered up for the space of a long time to be carried about by the temptations of the devil whithersoever he desired to carry them, and to do whatsoever iniquity he desired they should—and thus in the commencement of this, the thirtieth year, they were in a state of awful wickedness.

verse 17 "the people having been delivered up for the space of a long time to be carried about by the temptations of the devil whithersoever he desired to carry them" The people had completely lost control over their own destinies. Their unrighteousness had "delivered [them] up" to the will of Satan.

18 Now they did not sin ignorantly, for they knew the will of God concerning them, for it had been taught unto them; therefore they did wilfully rebel against God.

verse 18 The Nephites brought condemnation upon their own heads because they knowingly and wilfully rejected the teachings of the brass plates and the counsels of the prophets of the Lord.

19 And now it was in the days of Lachoneus, the son of Lachoneus, for Lachoneus did fill the seat of his father and did govern the people that year.

20 And there began to be men inspired from heaven and sent forth, standing among the people in all the land, preaching and testifying boldly of the sins and iniquities of the people, and testifying unto them concerning the redemption which the Lord would make for his people, or in other words, the resurrection of Christ; and they did testify boldly of his death and sufferings.

verse 20 The Lord patiently and mercifully offers to the Nephites an opportunity to repent. We have previously observed that the Lord never levels serious destruction against people without an adequate warning. We will see in the ensuing verses that the Nephites did not take advantage of this opportunity to repent. Note that the Lord had inspired men to preach to the people and call them to repentance. Obviously, Nephi, the son of Nephi, was not the only prophet of the day.

“they did testify boldly of his death and sufferings” These prophets were preaching to people with a Jewish heritage. Whom did the Jewish world await as their messiah? They waited upon one who would be a conquering hero—certainly not a suffering servant who would willingly lay down his life. Thus, it was not only appropriate, but important for these prophets to teach and prophesy of a Savior who would suffer and willingly lay down his life.

21 Now there were many of the people who were exceedingly angry because of those who testified of these things; and those who were angry were chiefly the chief judges, and they who had been high priests and lawyers; yea, all those who were lawyers were angry with those who testified of these things.

verse 21 Again we learn that the most vociferous and vocal opponents of the prophets and their message were the “king men” whose socioeconomic positions were threatened (see the introductory comments for Alma 46 and the commentary for Helaman 6:8).

22 Now there was no lawyer nor judge nor high priest that could have power to condemn any one to death save their condemnation was signed by the governor of the land.

23 Now there were many of those who testified of the things pertaining to Christ who testified boldly, who were taken and put to death secretly by the judges, that the knowledge of their death came not unto the governor of the land until after their death.

verse 23 “there were many . . . who were taken and put to death secretly” Apparently one of these was Timothy, the brother of the prophet Nephi. Timothy was raised from the dead by his brother (see 3 Nephi 7:19; 19:4). This same Timothy, along with his brother Nephi will become disciple (apostles) of the Lord.

24 Now behold, this was contrary to the laws of the land, that any man should be put to death except they had power from the governor of the land—

25 Therefore a complaint came up unto the land of Zarahemla, to the governor of the land, against these judges who had condemned the prophets of the Lord unto death, not according to the law.

26 Now it came to pass that they were taken and brought up before the judge, to be judged of the crime which they had done, according to the law which had been given by the people.

verse 26 “they were taken and brought up before the judge” These lesser judges were brought before the chief judge of the land, Lachoneus the son of Lachoneus (see verse 6).

27 Now it came to pass that those judges had many friends and kindreds; and the remainder, yea, even almost all the lawyers and the high priests, did gather themselves together, and unite with the kindreds of those judges who were to be tried according to the law.

28 And they did enter into a covenant one with another, yea, even into that covenant which was given by them of old, which covenant was given and administered by the devil, to combine against all righteousness.

verse 28 These judges, lawyers, and high priests made the same covenant Cain had made with Satan: “Satan said unto Cain: Swear unto me by thy throat, and if thou tell it thou shalt die; and swear thy brethren by their heads, and by the living God, that they tell it not; for if they tell it, they shall surely die; and this that thy father may not know it; and this day I will deliver thy brother Abel into thine hands. And Satan sware unto Cain that he would do according to his commands. And all these things were done in secret. And Cain said: Truly I am Mahan, the master of this great secret, that I may murder and get gain. Wherefore Cain was called Master Mahan, and he gloried in his wickedness” (Moses 5:29-31).

Brother Hugh Nibley has referred to the “murder to get gain” concept as “converting life into property” (Approaching Zion, 166). Brother Nibley comments upon this wicked covenant group, the king-men:

These lawyers and judges had one annoying check on their power—the “federal government.” All orders of capital punishment had to be signed by the governor of the whole land [verse 22]. To evade the galling restrictions of centralized government, these men of affairs accordingly developed skillful techniques of putting people out of the way before the governor could hear about it [verse 23]. When news of this leaked out and they were brought to trial, the friends and families of the judges rallied to the cause of regional rights, while all the bureaucracy of lawyers and high-priests closed ranks, came together—“and did . . . unite with the kindreds of those judges” [verse 27].

This is a clear and vivid picture of class government and how it worked. All these people, who were the rulers and masters of the country, holding high office and keeping the power in their family and their class, then covenanted “to destroy the governor, and to establish a king over the land” [verse 30] (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 6, 393-94).

29 Therefore they did combine against the people of the Lord, and enter into a covenant to destroy them, and to deliver those who were guilty of murder from the grasp of justice, which was about to be administered according to the law.

30 And they did set at defiance the law and the rights of their country; and they did covenant one with another to destroy the governor, and to establish a king over the land, that the land should no more be at liberty but should be subject unto kings.

verse 30 This wicked group of judges and their influential friends begin to plan a coup d'état—a forcible takeover of the government. As brother Nibley pointed out, this episode is a good example of what might be referred to as “class government.” All these people who are plotting against the government are the rulers and masters of the country, holding high office and keeping the power in their family and their own upper socioeconomic class.

This group's desire to have a king is probably largely economically driven. For insight into why this is so, see the commentary for Helaman 6:8.

3 Nephi Chapter 7

1 Now behold, I will show unto you that they did not establish a king over the land; but in this same year, yea, the thirtieth year, they did destroy upon the judgment-seat, yea, did murder the chief judge of the land.

verse 1 These judges and lawyers, actually a group of king-men, have become a secret combination bound to each other by evil covenant (see 3 Nephi 6:28). By destroying the governor or chief judge they succeeded at least partly with their plan—that is, to rid themselves of the limitations imposed by the democratic form of government. They wanted to silence the “voice of the people” and install a leader who would not be hampered by legislative checks and restraints of any kind. They may have been, however, somewhat chagrined to discover that they had also succeeded in destroying the entire central government of the Nephites causing the people to divide themselves into independent tribal units. Thus, there was no longer a cohesive body of people over whom their hand-picked king might rule.

2 And the people were divided one against another; and they did separate one from another into tribes, every man according to his family and his kindred and friends; and thus they did destroy the government of the land.

verse 2 The Nephites were obviously not an entirely homogeneous group. Among the Book of Mormon peoples, at least seven tribal groups maintained their identity over the thousand years of Nephite History. Please review this concept in the commentary for Jacob 1:13. It is apparent that following the collapse of their government, the Nephite people moved directly into this tribal structure. This suggests that the infrastructure was already in place for these tribes. This “tribal” organization will prevail even following the final collapse of Nephite society in about AD 400. When the Americas were “discovered” by the Europeans in the sixteenth century AD, a tribal organization was found to still exist among the descendants of these people.

3 And every tribe did appoint a chief or a leader over them; and thus they became tribes and leaders of tribes.

4 Now behold, there was no man among them save he had much family and many kindreds and friends; therefore their tribes became exceedingly great.

verse 4 The wording of this verse suggests that because the tribal units afforded each man a ready and abundant supply of relatives and friends, the tribes became very large. This is a cause / effect relationship that the writer probably did not intend to imply. We might alternatively word this verse for clarity: Because the tribes were very large, each and every man within the tribes had many relatives and friends.

5 Now all this was done, and there were no wars as yet among them; and all this iniquity had come upon the people because they did yield themselves unto the power of Satan.

verse 5 Initially the tribes existed without overt war among them. It will soon become evident, however, that there did exist considerable tension and rancor among the tribes.

6 And the regulations of the government were destroyed, because of the secret combination of the friends and kindreds of those who murdered the prophets.

7 And they did cause a great contention in the land, insomuch that the more righteous part of the people had nearly all become wicked; yea, there were but few righteous men among them.

8 And thus six years had not passed away since the more part of the people had turned from their righteousness, like the dog to his vomit, or like the sow to her wallowing in the mire.

verse 8 “six years had not passed away since the more part of the people had turned from their righteousness” This phrase may be restated: In less than six years the Nephites had gone from being righteous to wicked. Six years from when? The date referred to here is probably about AD 24, when the Nephites had banded together under the leadership of the chief judge Lachoneus and the chief military captain Gidgiddoni, had repented of their sins, and had routed the Gadianton robbers. In AD 24 the Nephites were, almost to a man, righteous and repentant (see 3 Nephi 5:1-3).

During the time the Hebrew world was living the Law of Moses, any reference made by an Israelite to a pig was likely be in a negative context. See also another negative reference to a pig in 3 Nephi 14:6. In contrast, study the reference to pigs in Ether 9:18. Is this reference positive or negative? It is positive—pigs are a valid source of food for man in Jaredite times. Why the difference? Because the Jaredites lived before the Mosaic Law was established.

If one sincerely repents and is cleansed from sin and then later returns to his evil ways, he is here likened to a dog eating its own vomit, or to a sow that is cleansed but then returns to wallow in its mire or excrement.

9 Now this secret combination, which had brought so great iniquity upon the people, did gather themselves together, and did place at their head a man whom they did call Jacob;

verse 9 Two possible meanings are suggested for the name Jacob—(1) “supplant” or “replace” and (2) “deceive” (O. Odelain and R. Seguireau, Dictionary of Proper Names and Places in the Bible, 182). It would seem that the latter meaning is applicable here.

10 And they did call him their king; therefore he became a king over this wicked band; and he was one of the chiefest who had given his voice against the prophets who testified of Jesus.

verse 10 “Chiefest” implies that Jacob was a “top-ranking leader.” He had been the primary advocate for martyring the prophets. He became king of the secret combination. His supporters may have intended that he be regarded as king over the entire land, but the new fragmented social order prevented that.

11 And it came to pass that they were not so strong in number as the tribes of the people, who were united together save it were their leaders did establish their laws, every one according to his tribe; nevertheless they were enemies; notwithstanding they were not a righteous people, yet they were united in the hatred of those who had entered into a covenant to destroy the government.

verse 11 This verse seems to contain three separate ideas:

1. The “tribe” or group of those bound together by evil in the secret combination was smaller than the other family tribes.

2. The family tribes each existed independently from one another with their own separate laws established by the leader of each tribe. Nonetheless there was some semblance of unity among the tribes.

3. Even though the family tribes and the secret combination were all made up of people who were unrighteous from the standpoint of gospel principles, the family tribes regarded the secret combination as their enemy because the wicked covenant group (the Gadiantons) had been responsible for destroying the people’s government.

12 Therefore, Jacob seeing that their enemies were more numerous than they, he being the king of the band, therefore he commanded his people that they should take their flight into the northernmost part of the land, and there build up unto themselves a kingdom, until they were joined by dissenters, (for he flattered them that there would be many dissenters) and they become sufficiently strong to contend with the tribes of the people; and they did so.

verse 12 Jacob and his followers decided to leave the country, build up their strength, and then return to Zarahemla hoping to take control of the country. We will learn that they never were able to achieve their goal—even though Jacob was charismatic and persuasive, and he was able to “flatter” or persuade his people to do his will.

“northernmost part of the land” For a suggestion as to the specific city to which Jacob and his people fled, see the commentary for Alma 63:4. This city apparently came to be called Jacobugath (see 3 Nephi 9:9) and may have been north of the narrow neck of land, and even north of the land Desolation.

13 And so speedy was their march that it could not be impeded until they had gone forth out of the reach of the people. And thus ended the thirtieth year; and thus were the affairs of the people of Nephi.

14 And it came to pass in the thirty and first year that they were divided into tribes, every man according to his family, kindred and friends; nevertheless they had come to an agreement that they would not go to war one with another; but they were not united as to their laws, and their manner of government, for they were established according to the minds of those who were their chiefs and their leaders. But they did establish very strict laws that one tribe should not trespass against another, insomuch that in some degree they had peace in the land; nevertheless, their hearts were turned from the Lord their God, and they did stone the prophets and did cast them out from among them.

15 And it came to pass that Nephi—having been visited by angels and also the voice of the Lord, therefore having seen angels, and being eye-witness, and having had power given unto him that he might know concerning the ministry of Christ, and also being eye-witness to their quick return from righteousness unto their wickedness and abominations; verse 15 This period in Nephite history was one of terror, anarchy, and bloodshed. But also, on the scene, was one the great prophets of the Book of Mormon, the prophet Nephi, the son of Nephi and the grandson of Helaman (see 3 Nephi 1). Obviously Nephi's degree of righteousness qualified him for high spiritual privilege.

16 Therefore, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts and the blindness of their minds—went forth among them in that same year, and began to testify, boldly, repentance and remission of sins through faith on the Lord Jesus Christ.

17 And he did minister many things unto them; and all of them cannot be written, and a part of them would not suffice, therefore they are not written in this book. And Nephi did minister with power and with great authority.

18 And it came to pass that they were angry with him, even because he had greater power than they, for it were not possible that they could disbelieve his words, for so great was his faith on the Lord Jesus Christ that angels did minister unto him daily.

verse 18 Obviously the personal spiritual power of Nephi was enormous and was the product of his profound faith in the Savior. Others in scripture who have taught with like power have included the mortal Christ (Matthew 7:29), Nephi the son of Lehi (1 Nephi 17:52), the sons of Mosiah (Alma 17:2-3), and Enoch (Moses 7:13).

19 And in the name of Jesus did he cast out devils and unclean spirits; and even his brother did he raise from the dead, after he had been stoned and suffered death by the people.

verse 19 “even his brother did he raise from the dead” This is Nephi’s brother Timothy (3 Nephi 19:4) who will later become one of Jesus’s twelve disciples or apostles in the New World.

It will always be true that the truth angers the wicked. When truth is preached with great spiritual power to the wicked so that they cannot help but believe, the result is that the wicked seek to shut the mouth of the prophet by destroying him. Since we know that Timothy will later become one of the twelve, we might surmise that Timothy, like his brother Nephi, also had the power to preach so that the people could not disbelieve his words. This resulted in his being stoned to death by his wicked hearers. Timothy’s death would have provided a type of false relief to those who slew him who felt they were thus spared from Timothy’s unsettling and disturbing preachings which made them so keenly aware of their guilt and impending destruction. Their false sense of comfort would have lasted only until Nephi exercised his priesthood to raise Timothy from the dead. This miraculous healing must have sent the wicked into a blind rage because they were then left without satisfaction.

For notes on the Greek derivation of the name Timothy, see the supplemental article, Names in the Book of Mormon.

20 And the people saw it, and did witness of it, and were angry with him because of his power; and he did also do many more miracles, in the sight of the people, in the name of Jesus.

21 And it came to pass that the thirty and first year did pass away, and there were but few who were converted unto the Lord; but as many as were converted did truly signify unto the people that they had been visited by the power and Spirit of God, which was in Jesus Christ, in whom they believed.

verse 21 “they had been visited by the power of Spirit of God, which was in Jesus Christ” They had received, by personal revelation, through the Spirit of God, a testimony of Christ. One cannot help but wonder whether in a time of near universal wickedness, those few who resist the evil tide and remain converted to the Lord’s gospel might be especially blessed by the Spirit’s visitations.

22 And as many as had devils cast out from them, and were healed of their sicknesses and their infirmities, did truly manifest unto the people that they had been wrought upon by the Spirit of God, and had been healed; and they did show forth signs also and did do some miracles among the people.

23 Thus passed away the thirty and second year also. And Nephi did cry unto the people in the commencement of the thirty and third year; and he did preach unto them repentance and remission of sins.

verse 23 Yet a final time the Lord extends to the people an opportunity to repent.

24 Now I would have you to remember also, that there were none who were brought unto repentance who were not baptized with water.

verse 24 Baptism is obviously a most vital ordinance! As taught in the following verse, baptism witnesses to both God and our fellow man contrition and a belief in and an acceptance of Christ and his gospel. The Lord Jesus Christ himself will clearly teach of the necessity of baptism during his visit to the Nephites in Bountiful (3 Nephi 27:20).

25 Therefore, there were ordained of Nephi, men unto this ministry, that all such as should come unto them should be baptized with water, and this as a witness and a testimony before God, and unto the people, that they had repented and received a remission of their sins.

verses 24-25 Obviously Nephi had some limited success in his preaching.

26 And there were many in the commencement of this year that were baptized unto repentance; and thus the more part of the year did pass away.

verse 26 Some have suggested that the role of Nephi, the son of Nephi, in the New World was similar that of John the Baptist in the Old World. In these years before the coming of Christ here in the New World Nephi did perform a role much like that of John the Baptist. The language used to describe his manner of preaching and baptizing is reminiscent of that describing John the Baptist in the New Testament.

The miracles that he performed, especially those recorded here in 3 Nephi 7, are similar to those that Jesus Himself would work during His ministry. Certainly, this Nephi, the son of Nephi the High Priest in Zarahemla, can be seen as a forerunner to the coming of Christ in the New World, much as John the Baptist, the son of the priest Zacharias in the temple of Jerusalem, was a forerunner in the Old World. Nephi was emphatic about baptism. Shortly after the sign of the birth of Christ, Nephi “went forth among the people, and also many others, baptizing unto repentance, in the which there was a great remission of sins” and confession of faults (3 Nephi 1:23, 25).

In the prior verse 23, the record again emphasizes that Nephi “did preach unto them repentance and remission of sins.” This phrasing is very similar to what is said of John in Mark 1:4 (cf. Luke 3:3): “John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.” Nephi (and those he ordained) baptized all who had been brought unto repentance and they receive a remission of their sins (3 Nephi 7:24–25). Likewise, John baptized all those who came unto him “confessing their sins” (Mark 1:5).

Shortly before the commencement of the ministry of Jesus in the Old World, Nephi was “visited by angels” and heard “the voice of the Lord” (3 Nephi 7:15). According to the Gospel of Luke, angels were involved in the events surrounding John’s birth and he, too, was privileged to hear the voice of God (Luke 1:11-20; Matthew 3:13–17; Mark 1:9–11; Luke 3:21–23). D&C 84:28 presents the idea that John was ordained to the priesthood “by the angel of God at the time he was eight days old.”

The Gospel of Mark’s story of John’s baptizing Jesus leads into the narrative of Jesus’s beginning to preach and perform miracles. The text states that he did these things “with authority” (Mark 1:22, 27). He preached the gospel (Mark 1:15), cast out unclean spirits (verses 23–26), and cured the sick (verses 30–34). In 3 Nephi 7, Nephi performed many of the same prophetic acts preparing the way for the Messiah, including casting out “devils and unclean spirits” and raising his brother from the dead (verse 19). The record relates that “Nephi did minister with power and with great authority” (verse 17).

Readers may wonder why there are so many parallels between the New World ministry of Nephi, the son of Nephi, and the ministries of John the Baptist and Jesus Christ in the New Testament. Although most people are likely aware that Jesus called twelve Nephite disciples just as he had in the Old World, readers may not have considered that Christ could have chosen a forerunner, like John the Baptist, to prepare the way for his coming in the New World as well.

John had been foreordained and sent by God as “my messenger before thy [Christ’s] face, which shall prepare thy way before thee” (Mark 1:2; cf. Malachi 3:1; 3 Nephi 24:1). He had been foreseen as “the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight” (Mark 1:3; cf. Isaiah 40:3, cited by Lehi in 1 Nephi 10:8, thus also known to the Nephites.). John was to serve as a type of Elias, a forerunner to prepare the way for the coming of Christ and the preaching of his gospel (See Matthew 17:12–13; Luke 1:17, 76–77; JST John 1:21–24; Joseph Smith taught that a forerunner that prepares the way for the building up of God’s kingdom is called “an Elias.” Joseph Fielding Smith, comp. and ed., Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 1977, 335–336; George A. Horton Jr., “Elias,” in Encyclopedia of Mormonism, 4 vols., ed. Daniel H. Ludlow, New York, NY: Macmillan, 1992, 2:449). In much the same way, Nephi served as “an Elias,” or forerunner, to prepare the Book of Mormon peoples for the visitation of Christ to their lands.

Furthermore, the text of 3 Nephi 7:15 and 18 states that Nephi had been visited by angels and “had power given unto him that he might know concerning the ministry of Christ,” making him an “eye-witness” of things that Jesus would do and say during his Old World ministry. Because of Nephi’s “faith on the Lord Jesus Christ” (verse 18), he had the power (verse 17) to do similar miracles to those which he had seen Jesus do. In this way he was serving, like John the Baptist, to truly “make ready a people prepared for the Lord” (Luke 1:17).

Similarly, there are those in this dispensation who have worked to serve a similar purpose, to prepare the way for the second coming of Christ. Joseph Smith, for example, was called by the Lord to restore his Church and proclaim his commandments to his people (Doctrine and Covenants 1:17–18), and thereby “prepare the way whereby they may come unto [Christ] and call on the Father in [Christ’s] name” (3 Nephi 21:27).

As Alma declared of the righteous people of Gideon, those individuals preparing for Christ’s second coming can also walk “in the paths of righteousness . . . the path which leads to the kingdom of God” and earnestly “[make] his paths straight” (Alma 7:19).

Scripture Mastery

3 Nephi 8 Signs of Christ's crucifixion—great destruction throughout the land

The Lord often endures the wickedness of the world with patience and longsuffering. There are times, however, when his patience reaches its limit, and he does not continue to endure. Chauncey Riddle has referred to these times as “days of wickedness and vengeance” (“Days of Wickedness and Vengeance: Analysis of 3 Nephi 6 and 7” in The Book of Mormon Helaman through 3 Nephi 8, According To Thy Word, 191-205). They occur when the gospel has been preached to the people, and yet the people willfully reject it and continue in wickedness. The people not only reject the teachings of the prophets, but they may banish or even kill the prophets and persecute and destroy the saints as well. The blood of the prophets and the saints cry out, and the Lord hears. When a society deteriorates spiritually to this extent, a setting is created wherein righteousness cannot exist. How, for example, could a child in Ammonihah or Sodom learn to obey God? If the Lord were to allow such societies to continue, he would condemn generations to the powers of Satan. In an ironic way, destruction of such a society may be seen as evidence of God's love. Since those who fail to repent will be consigned to the spirit prison after this life where they will begin to suffer for their own sins, the act of cutting short their sinning is an act of mercy. Death may be the beginning of spiritual wisdom for the wicked. The Lord therefore initiates some form of physical punishment that destroys the people from off the face of the earth. Brother Riddle has pointed out that the scriptures tell of two major times of “wickedness and vengeance”: the meridian of time—in both the Old and New Worlds (Moses 7:45-47)—and the latter days (Moses 7:59-61).

In our study of the Book of Mormon, we have reached one of these times. The Nephites, with the Lord's help, have just defeated the Gadianton robbers. They should have continued in humility and gratitude for the Lord's great blessings to them. Instead they knowingly rejected the doctrine of Christ and fell into pride and wickedness. In chapter 8, we will read of the Lord's vengeance upon the Book of Mormon people in the New World. In the Old World, the Lord will wait until about AD 70 and then allow the Romans to take vengeance upon the people of Jerusalem.

There is a clear and obvious analogy between the period of 3 Nephi 6-7 and our day. In both periods, the righteous believers are awaiting the Lord's advent. The wicked have been taught the gospel, and yet have rejected it. The period of destruction at the time of Christ's crucifixion is felt to be a type or symbol of the ultimate destruction of the ungodly at the time of the Savior's second coming. In like manner the twohundred year period of peace and prosperity following the Savior's appearance on the western hemisphere is a type of the great millennial day.

1 And now it came to pass that according to our record, and we know our record to be true, for behold, it was a just man who did keep the record—for he truly did many miracles in the name of Jesus; and there was not any man who could do a miracle in the name of Jesus save he were cleansed every whit from his iniquity—verse 1 Mormon adds another editorial comment. As we have noted previously the “just man” who kept or wrote the record Mormon abridged as he created the book of 3 Nephi was Nephi, the son of Nephi who will become the chief disciple of Jesus.

“there was not any man who could do a miracle in the name of Jesus save he were cleansed every whit from his iniquity” Here is an important principle. The performing of miracles in the name of Jesus is evidence that one is “cleansed every whit from his iniquity” and thus worthy of the companionship of the Holy Ghost and worthy to wield the powers of God. “The rights of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven, and . . . the powers of heaven cannot be controlled nor handled only upon the principles of righteousness” (D&C 121:36).

2 And now it came to pass, if there was no mistake made by this man in the reckoning of our time, the thirty and third year had passed away;

verse 2 “the thirty and third year had passed away” The reference date referred to here is the time of the sign of the birth of Christ's birth (3 Nephi 1:15; 2:8). For a review of the three methods of reckoning time in the Book of Mormon, see the commentary for 3 Nephi 1:1.

3 And the people began to look with great earnestness for the sign which had been given by the prophet Samuel, the Lamanite, yea, for the time that there should be darkness for the space of three days over the face of the land.

verse 3 Now the people begin to look for another sign, the sign of Christ's death which was prophesied by Samuel. For a review of this sign see Helaman 14:20-28.

4 And there began to be great doubtings and disputations among the people, notwithstanding so many signs had been given.

verse 4 “notwithstanding so many signs had been given” These signs include the miraculous signs that attended the birth of Christ and the many miracles wrought by the prophet Nephi and others.

verses 5-23 The account of destruction in these verses documents the fulfillment of the prophecies of Nephi (1 Nephi 12:4; 2 Nephi 26:6), Zenos (1 Nephi 19:11-12), and Samuel the Lamanite (Helaman 14:20-28).

These verses describe a three-hour period of catastrophic destruction in the land. The text refers to this destructive phenomenon as a “storm,” and it was undoubtedly some type of dramatically destructive convulsion of nature. But what exactly was it? Just what type of “storm” could wreak such havoc? Russell H. Ball has suggested that it might have been a major volcanic eruption perhaps precipitated by major seismic or earthquake activity (“An Hypothesis Concerning the Three Days of Darkness Among the Nephites,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies, volume 2, Spring and Fall 1993, 107-23). Brother Ball has outlined textual evidence to support his hypothesis. He lists, for example, all of the mechanisms of the phenomena mentioned in these verses that resulted in massive land destruction. Each of these is plausibly the result of earthquake and volcanic eruption:

1. “a great and terrible tempest” (a tempest is a violent windstorm—verse 6) and “whirlwinds” (verse 12). When a huge ash column is ejected from a volcano, it can rise to thousands of feet. When such a column collapses back on the volcano it generates an ash surge carried by high winds that can travel at speeds up to one hundred miles per hour. Such a surge may collapse houses, break through windows, and bury the people inside buildings in an instant.

2. “terrible thunder that shook the whole earth” (verse 6). “exceedingly sharp lightnings, such as never had been known in all the land” (verse 7). Even though there was thunder and an unusual display of lightning, no rain is mentioned. Apparently fine volcanic ash is also very effective in generating lightning. Photographs of erupting volcanoes such as Mount Vesuvius in 1944 (R.V. Fodor, Earth Afire! Volcanoes and Their Activity. New York: William Morrow, 1981, 15) and Sakura-Jima in 1987 (Mark Kemp, “Power Surge,” Discover [April 1988] 9:40-42), show hundreds of lightning bolts in the ash clouds above those volcanoes. The friction between fine volcanic ash particles in the atmosphere is very effective in generating severe lightning without any attending rain, leaving the ground and wood very dry. It is notable that after hours of thunderstorm activity of unprecedented fury the Nephites’ wood was still referred to as being “exceedingly dry” (verse 21) (Alvin K. Benson, “Geological Upheaval and Darkness in 3 Nephi 8-10” The Book of Mormon: 3 Nephi 9-30, This Is My Gospel, 63-64).

3. “earth’s being carried up upon the city of Moronihah” (verse 10). The roughening of smooth places (verse 13), the subsidence or sinking of some areas, and the building of a “great mountain” in the place where the city of Moronihah had been (3 Nephi 8:10) are events clearly associated with very severe seismic and volcanic activity.

4. floods (3 Nephi 9:7). Even though no rain is mentioned, this “storm” caused the waters to “come up upon” the cities. Landslides, which may have dammed rivers, or which may have caused large waves to spread across lakes, could have caused water to “come up upon” some cities.

5. “earthquakes” which caused some cities to sink, some to burn (3 Nephi 9:9-10), and the buildings of some to collapse (verses 13-14)

6. “cities sunk in the sea” (3 Nephi 9:4, 6-7). An earthquake may result in subsidence or sinking of coastal regions. Those cities which sunk into the depths of the sea were probably located along the west coast.

The wicked met their demise by being sunk and buried in the earth, drowned in the depths of the sea, burned by fire, fallen upon and crushed to death, carried away in the whirlwind, overpowered by the vapor of smoke and of darkness, and swallowed up by the opening of the earth to receive them.

It seems likely, then, that the primary geological phenomenon in this great “storm” was a gigantic earthquake which triggered erupting volcanoes. Apparently, it is common for areas that have frequent, severe earthquakes to have a high incidence of volcanic activity (A. F. Espinosa, “The Guatemalan Earthquake of February 4, 1976, a Preliminary Report.” United States Geological Survey Professional Paper 1002. Washington: GPO, 1976, 87-90). The combination of earthquake activity and active volcanoes is especially common along the west coast of Central America (Bruce W. Warren and Thomas S. Ferguson, The Messiah in Ancient America, Provo, Utah: Book of Mormon Research Foundation, 1988, 40-45).

Elder Bruce R. McConkie has written of the Lord’s use of earthquakes:

Since the earth has been in its present fallen or telestial state, it has been subject to earthquakes. These are part of the Lord’s plan; they come by his power and fulfill his purposes. By them he delivers his servants from perils, destroys the wicked, and leaves a sign that his hand has been in transcendent events (Helaman 12:7-17).

Earthquakes attended the delivery from prison of Paul and Silas in the old world, of Lehi and Nephi in the new (Acts 16:25-26; Helaman 5:27). Both the crucifixion and the resurrection of our Lord were attested by earthquakes (Matthew 27:54; 28:2). Among the Nephites the quakings and destructions at the time of the crucifixion were so extensive that the whole face of the land was changed and the wicked and rebellious were destroyed (3 Nephi 8; 9:1-14; 10:9-10).

Earthquakes are given as one of the signs of the times; they foreshadow the second coming (Matthew 24:7; Mark 13:8; Luke 21:11; D&C 45:33; 87:6). By them the testimony of the Lord’s power is borne to the people of the earth (D&C 43:25; 88:89), and when the glorious second coming itself arrives there will be “a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great” (Revelation 16:18-20; 6:12-17; 8:5; 11:12-15, 19; Zechariah 14:4-5; D&C 133:22-25) (“Earthquakes” in Mormon Doctrine, 211).

5 And it came to pass in the thirty and fourth year, in the first month, on the fourth day of the month, there arose a great storm, such an one as never had been known in all the land.

verse 5 It is possible that the moment this “storm” began, the Master, on the other side of the world, had just voluntarily given up his life with the words: “Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit” (Luke 23:46). Others have suggested that this storm, which will last three hours, occurred during the Savior’s final three hours on the cross. He actually hung upon the cross for about six hours, from approximately 9 am to 3 pm. Perhaps this final three hours was the time of his greatest suffering. We are taught that during this period the agonies of Gethsemane returned (Bruce R. McConkie, Mortal Messiah, 4:224-25).

Just when was the Savior crucified? How does the Nephite calendar correspond to our calendar today? Randall P. Spackman has provided us with a compelling discussion of the date of Christ’s crucifixion (“Introduction to Book of Mormon Chronology: The Principal Prophecies, Calendars, and Dates,” a FARMS reprint, 57-74). He concludes that the Savior was crucified, according to our present-day calendar, on March 16, AD 29. The interested reader is invited to review Brother Spackman’s article.

6 And there was also a great and terrible tempest; and there was terrible thunder, insomuch that it did shake the whole earth as if it was about to divide asunder.

verse 6 “there was also a great and terrible tempest” A tempest is a violent wind storm.

“terrible thunder” Hugh Nibley reports that sometimes an earthquake can be heard before it is felt. He notes that in the Assam earthquake of 1950, one thing stressed in all reports was that an awful rumble heralded the quake, a deafening roar, louder than anything any of the witnesses had ever heard before. He also notes that in the Assam earthquake “strong winds raised the dust until visibility was reduced to a few feet” (The Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 233). Some survivors of the Mount St. Helen’s volcano referred to the noise and shaking as like being next to ground zero in an atomic bomb blast (Thomas G. Aylesworth and Virginia L. Aylesworth, The Mount St. Helens Disaster, New York: Franklin Watts, 1983, 15-17).

The great earthquake that completely destroyed the old capital of Guatemala in 1541 was preceded by “the fury of the wind, the incessant, appalling lightning and dreadful thunder that were indescribable in their violence” (Ibid.). The “terrible thunder” might also have resulted from the lightning.

“it did shake the whole earth” It seems likely that the phrase “whole earth” should be understood as “whole land,” that is, all of the area populated by the Nephites and Lamanites. Thus, the destruction was a localized rather than a global phenomenon (see another example of a similar use of the term “whole earth” in Alma 36:7).

7 And there were exceedingly sharp lightnings, such as never had been known in all the land.

verse 7 Hugh Nibley reported: “One of the still unexplained phenomena of earthquakes is that all types of lights are reported seen. . . . There are flashes, balls of fire, and streamers—every type of lightning (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 233).

While sitting at my computer on April 9, 2009, I have just read a news report titled “Volcano’s Lightning Captured in Photo.” The article reported: “In one of the rarest images ever captured in a photograph, scientists have been able to track lightning occurring inside clouds spewing from a volcanic eruption. Using a system called Lightning Mapping Array, researchers were able to see this tumultuous lightning storm occurring above Alaska’s Mount Redoubt when it blew its top on March 22 and 23 [2009].”

8 And the city of Zarahemla did take fire.

verse 8 Hugh Nibley, again:

Now, most of the destruction in the Book of Mormon was caused by fire, not by the earthquake, like the San Francisco earthquake. This is always so in earthquakes, because people have open fires, lamps, and things, and they start everything burning. It would appear from the Nephite account that the main cause of destruction was fire in the cities which agrees with all major statistics through the centuries; for earthquakes are largely a city problem, mainly because the first heavy shock invariably sets fires all over town (Teachings of the Book of Mormon, Semester 3, 320).

9 And the city of Moroni did sink into the depths of the sea, and the inhabitants thereof were drowned.

verse 9 “And the city of Moroni did sink into the depths of the sea” Hugh Nibley wrote:

Such a submergence happened on a spectacular scale in the Chilean earthquake of 1960: “We would have taken these flooded stretches, permanently flooded, for coastal lagoons,” a geologist reports, “if here and there we had not seen roads that ran straight toward them and into them. . . roads that vanished, or sometimes showed under the stagnant water, branching into what had been the streets of a town.” In the New Madrid, Missouri, earthquake of 1811, two vast tracts of land were covered with fresh water both by the damming of streams and the bursting out of numerous earthquake blows or fountains, flooding the newly submerged areas (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 233-34).

Alvin K. Benson has pointed out: “One of the more active [earthquake] zones of the world is located along the western coasts of Central and South America. The mountainous areas there extend oceanward to a long, linear ocean trench. The trench exceeds 20,000 feet in depth and is bordered along the shore by mountains over 22,000 feet high. This large elevation difference of over 40,000 feet is a likely site for large-scale fault development, allowing blocks of earth to slip oceanward. Such movement could occur during a large earthquake, which could explain the loss of the city of Moroni into the depths of the sea” (“Geological Upheaval and Darkness in 3 Nephi 8-10” The Book of Mormon: 3 Nephi 9-30, This Is My Gospel, 67).

Author’s note: Contrary to Brother Benson’s conclusion in the preceding paragraph, the likely location of the city of Moroni was near the coast of the east sea (see the hypothetical map of Book of Mormon lands).

10 And the earth was carried up upon the city of Moronihah, that in the place of the city there became a great mountain.

verse 10 This is the first mention of the city of Moronihah in the Book of Mormon, hence we have no idea as to its relative location.

Just how does a city become a “great mountain”? Hugh Nibley again has written: “In September 1538 during a tremendous storm and tidal wave a volcanic mountain suddenly appeared and covered a town near Puzzuoli on the Bay of Naples; ever since, the mountain has been known as Monte Nueve, or New Mountain” (Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, volume 7, 235).

11 And there was a great and terrible destruction in the land southward.

12 But behold, there was a more great and terrible destruction in the land northward; for behold, the whole face of the land was changed, because of the tempest and the whirlwinds, and the thunderings and the lightnings, and the exceedingly great quaking of the whole earth;

verses 11-12 Again, it is likely that the land southward and the land northward are both parts of the former land of Zarahemla which is entirely south of the narrow neck of land. The land northward included the land Bountiful and its environs, and the land southward included the city of Zarahemla and those lands surrounding it.

13 And the highways were broken up, and the level roads were spoiled, and many smooth places became rough.

14 And many great and notable cities were sunk, and many were burned, and many were shaken till the buildings thereof had fallen to the earth, and the inhabitants thereof were slain, and the places were left desolate.

15 And there were some cities which remained; but the damage thereof was exceedingly great, and there were many in them who were slain.

16 And there were some who were carried away in the whirlwind; and whither they went no man knoweth, save they know that they were carried away.

17 And thus the face of the whole earth became deformed, because of the tempests, and the thunderings, and the lightnings, and the quaking of the earth.

verse 17 “thus the face of the whole earth became deformed” The astute student of the Book of Mormon may conclude from this verse that the lands of the Book of Mormon were so altered by this great catastrophe that it would not be possible to locate and identify those lands on our present-day map of the Western Hemisphere. Is this true? Are those students who are interested in the geography of the Book of Mormon involved in a hopeless quest? John L. Sorenson wrote:

What if the physical conditions changed so much from ancient to modern times that the former locations no longer can be found? We learn from the Book of Mormon that “the face of the whole earth” was changed through terrible earthquakes and other destruction at the time of the Savior’s crucifixion. Could it be that today there is no way to reconstruct the geography of pre-crucifixion times?

The answer to [this question] . . . is . . . in the book. Mormon and Moroni both lived and wrote after the catastrophic changes. They had no trouble identifying locations they personally knew in their lifetimes with places referred to by Alma or Helaman before the catastrophe. Nothing about the pre-crucifixion geography seems to have puzzled them. The volume itself says that the changes at the Savior’s death were mainly to the surface. Bountiful was still in place, its temple still there, when the resurrected Savior appeared (3 Nephi 11:1). Zarahemla was rebuilt on the burned ruin of the former city (4 Nephi 1:8). The narrow pass was still in its key position during the final battles as it had been more than four centuries before. The River Sidon ran the same course, and Ramah/Cumorah, the landmark hill, presided unchanged over the annihilation of its second people. Thus, the record itself gives no justification for supposing that the form or nature of the land changed in any essentials, despite the impressive destruction that signaled the Savior’s death. Nor is there reliable evidence from the earth sciences to lead us to suppose major changes took place. Nothing we know prevents our placing most of the ancient places on today’s map (An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, 45-46).

18 And behold, the rocks were rent in twain; they were broken up upon the face of the whole earth, insomuch that they were found in broken fragments, and in seams and in cracks, upon all the face of the land.

19 And it came to pass that when the thunderings, and the lightnings, and the storm, and the tempest, and the quakings of the earth did cease—for behold, they did last for about the space of three hours; and it was said by some that the time was greater; nevertheless, all these great and terrible things were done in about the space of three hours—and then behold, there was darkness upon the face of the land.

verse 19 “they did last for about the space of three hours” This three-hour period of terrible destruction ushered in the three days of darkness.

We know that the Nephites experienced three hours of terrible storm followed by three days of darkness. To what extent the rest of the world experienced these phenomena is not known. Luke suggests that perhaps the period of storm in the New World corresponded to a three-hour period of darkness in the Old World and perhaps even throughout the whole earth. “And it was about the sixth hour, and there was a darkness over all the earth until the ninth hour. And the sun was darkened, and the veil of the temple was rent in the midst” (Luke 23:44-45). While some manifestations may have been noticeable world-wide, it seems likely that the cataclysmic storm and the resulting three days of darkness was a local phenomenon involving the Nephite and Lamanite lands.

What might have been the mechanism for the darkness? If volcanic eruptions last several hours, as described here, the enormous amount of ash discharged might have blanketed a large region and might have produced intense local darkness. It has been suggested that in this darkness the earth was symbolically manifesting its gloom over the death of its Creator.

20 And it came to pass that there was thick darkness upon all the face of the land, insomuch that the inhabitants thereof who had not fallen could feel the vapor of darkness;

21 And there could be no light, because of the darkness, neither candles, neither torches; neither could there be fire kindled with their fine and exceedingly dry wood, so that there could not be any light at all;

verses 20-21 In the 1960s, Hugh Nibley compared these Book of Mormon accounts to descriptions of earthquakes and volcanic eruptions (Hugh Nibley, Since Cumorah, 2nd edition, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1988, 231–238. Since Cumorah originally ran as a series in the Improvement Era from 1964–1967.). Since that time, several other scholars, including many professional geologists, have examined these accounts and widely agreed that the three-day darkness and other destructive forces described in the Book of Mormon accounts involved a volcanic eruption (John L. Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1985, 129, 318–323; James L. Baer, “The Third Nephi Disaster: A Geological View,” Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought 19, no. 1, spring 1986: 129–132; Alvin K. Benson, “Geological Upheaval and Darkness in 3 Nephi 8–10,” in The Book of Mormon: Third Nephi 9–30, “This is My Gospel,” ed. Monte S. Nyman and Charles D. One of the main features of this event that provoked interest is the three-day period of darkness (Kowallis, “In the Thirty and Fourth Year,” 173: “One of the common themes that can be found in almost all accounts of explosive volcanic eruptions is the darkness created by the fall of ash. This darkness may last for a few hours or a few days, and the historical descriptions mimic the terminology used in the Book of Mormon.” Benson, “Geological Upheaval,” 64: “Volcanic ash, smoke, and gases, along with dust and debris rising into the air from a large earthquake, could have produced the ‘vapor of darkness’ spoken of in 3 Nephi 8:20 and 10:13.” Ball, “An Hypothesis concerning the Three Days of Darkness,” 113: the “period of darkness was caused by an immense local cloud of volcanic ash.”). Geologists who have studied the 3 Nephi 8 account generally agree that nothing except volcanic ash and dust clouds could account for the three days of darkness, as it is described (An earthquake in 1811 felt throughout the eastern US reportedly caused an “awful darkness of the atmosphere,” however it only lasted briefly. Grover, Geology of the Book of Mormon, 156 explained that earthquakes are not known to cause lengthy periods of darkness. “The mists or vapors of darkness are described as being widespread. The only realistic explanation for this phenomenon is a volcanic ash / tephra cloud disseminated as a result of a volcanic eruption. Occasionally during the initial moments of earthquakes, dust can be generated from shaken buildings or by brief release of sometimes pungent soil gases, but these have never been observed in modern earthquakes to last more than a few hours, and the same is indicated for pre-modern earthquakes by historic anecdote. Earthquake dust has not been observed to inhibit ignition. Volcanic ash distribution has been historically documented to inhibit combustion and last for days at a time.” Also see Rappleye, “The Great and Terrible Judgements,” 153). Not only the darkness, but the excessive lightning, thundering, tempest, and many other features can all be explained by volcanic activity (Kowallis, “In the Thirty and Fourth Year,” 136–190; Lund, Joseph Smith and the Geography of Book of Mormon, 173–178; Gardner, Second Witness, 5:300–312).

In the most recent and thorough analysis by a professional geologist, Jerry Grover, Jr. concluded, “In order to account for the destruction described in 3rd Nephi, it is clear that a volcano and a regional earthquake are indicated” (Jerry D. Grover, Jr., Geology of the Book of Mormon, Vineyard, UT: Grover Publications, 2014, 119). Earthquakes are known to trigger volcanic eruptions, especially when a volcano is located on or near a fault-line (Grover, Geology of the Book of Mormon, 137).

After analyzing all the destructive elements mentioned in the Book of Mormon accounts, Grover determined that the best-fit scenario is a strike-slip fault zone, near a coast, with an active volcano nearby (Grover, Geology of the Book of Mormon, 139–141). There is at least one fault system in the Americas which meets these criteria: the Veracruz fault system in Mexico (Grover, Geology of the Book of Mormon, 139–148). Grover noted, “The Veracruz fault segment . . . is a strike-slip fault . . . located on and adjacent to the coastal plains . . . [and] has a major volcano sitting directly on the fault system, the volcano San Martín” (Grover, Geology of the Book of Mormon, 148).

In some Book of Mormon geography models, Veracruz, Mexico is part of the land northward, which experienced greater damage during the cataclysmic events (3 Nephi 8:12) (Sorenson, Ancient American Setting, 46; V. Garth Norman, Book of Mormon–Mesoamerica Geography: History Study Map, American Fork, UT: ARCON, 2008, 3; Joseph L. Allen and Blake J. Allen, Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon, revised edition, American Fork, UT: Covenant Communications, 2011, 428–465; Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex, 508–509; 712–714). Interestingly, while it is impossible to prove the exact timing of a volcanic eruption, current evidence indicates that the San Martín volcano likely experienced an eruption event in the first century AD (Grover, Geology of the Book of Mormon, 39; “When Day Turned to Night,” 66–67). Further evidence suggests that during or around the first century AD, Mesoamerica experienced widespread volcanic activity (Sorenson, Mormon’s Codex, 641–649; Grover, Geology of the Book of Mormon, 32–49. Grover’s work documents as many as six volcanos active around the first century AD, ranging from central Mexico to southern Guatemala.).

Additional evidence comes from ice core samples from Greenland and Antarctica. While the estimated dates are still not exact, using ice cores “tends to be fairly good” with margins of error of only a few years (Benjamin R. Jordan, “Volcanic Destruction in the Book of Mormon: Possible Evidence from Ice Cores,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 12, no. 1, 2003:84). After examining documented dates for volcanic events in four different ice core samples, geologist Benjamin R. Jordan concluded, “There is evidence for large eruptions [somewhere in the world], within the margin of error, for the period of AD 30 to 40” (Jordan, “Volcanic Destruction in the Book of Mormon,” 87).

Ice cores, therefore, offer evidence that there was a major volcanic event close to the timing of Christ’s death (The exact year of Christ’s death is also uncertain and highly debated, though most scholars would place it around AD 30. See Thomas A. Wayment, “Appendix—The Birth and Death Dates of Jesus Christ,” in The Life and Teachings of Jesus Christ: From Bethlehem Through the Sermon on the Mount, ed. Richard Neitzel Holzapfel and Thomas A. Wayment, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 2005, 383–394; Jeffrey R. Chadwick, “Dating the Death of Jesus Christ,” BYU Studies Quarterly 54, no. 4, 2015: 135–191). Yet ice cores have the drawback of not being able to pinpoint the location of the volcanic events they document from all around the world (Jordan, “Volcanic Destruction in the Book of Mormon,” 87: “However, so far it is not possible to determine the exact geographic location of those eruptions.”). A correlation to Mesoamerica, however, is possible, given the evidence already mentioned for extensive volcanic activity around this time (Jordan, “Volcanic Destruction in the Book of Mormon,” 87, similarly argued, “the discovery of a volcanic eruption at Tacaná volcano [in Mesoamerica, ca. AD 25–72] during the period in question, combined with the ice-core record, seems to strengthen the argument for an eruption as part of the cause of destruction described in 3 Nephi.”).

In graphic detail, the Book of Mormon documents a divinely caused natural disaster occurring at the time of Christ’s death that many geologists agree appears to have involved a volcanic eruption, most likely occurring simultaneously with an earthquake along a strike-slip fault line. Thus far, current geologic evidence supports the following conclusions:

1. At least one region in the Americas (Veracruz, Mexico) possessed the necessary geologic characteristics.
2. At least one volcano in that region (San Martín) appears to have erupted in the first century AD.
3. There was further volcanic activity in Mesoamerica in and around the first century AD.

Ice core samples indicate that a major volcanic event took place somewhere in the world around AD 30–40—around or close to the time of Christ’s death. While none of this can be linked directly to the events described in 3 Nephi, it goes to show that, as with the sign at Christ’s birth, there is nothing scientifically implausible in the account given in 3 Nephi 8–10. In fact, the fulfillment of this prophesied volcanic disaster is strikingly realistic, especially its three days of smoky vapor and thick darkness.

Also, as was the sign of great light at the time of Christ’s birth, the profound darkness at his death and during His time in the tomb is strongly symbolic. Just as the “excessive light surrounding Christ’s birth acts as a kind of morning,” the “darkness surrounding Christ’s death acts as a kind of evening” (Kimberly M. Berkey, “Temporality and Fulfillment in 3 Nephi 1,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 24, 2015: 74). Alvin Benson aptly stated, “It appears that the earth was symbolically manifesting its gloom over the death of its creator” (Benson, “Geological Upheaval,” 63).

But even the darkest of nights come to end. The darkness dissipated as the Savior conquered death, and within the year righteous Nephites and Lamanites witnessed the risen, glorified Lord in all his majesty (3 Nephi 11).

President Ezra Taft Benson taught, “The record of the Nephite history just prior to the Savior’s visit reveals many parallels to our own day as we anticipate the Savior’s second coming” (Ezra Taft Benson, A Witness and a Warning: A Modern-day Prophet Testifies of the Book of Mormon, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 1988, 37, cf. 20). This statement warns readers of further societal decay and impending darkness and destruction. But it also enables them to glimpse the grandeur and glory that is to follow for the humble and penitent who come unto Christ.

22 And there was not any light seen, neither fire, nor glimmer, neither the sun, nor the moon, nor the stars, for so great were the mists of darkness which were upon the face of the land.

23 And it came to pass that it did last for the space of three days that there was no light seen; and there was great mourning and howling and weeping among all the people continually; yea, great were the groanings of the people, because of the darkness and the great destruction which had come upon them.

verse 23 “These three days of darkness obviously accord with the three days that the body of the crucified Christ lay in the borrowed tomb of Joseph of Arimathaea. How appropriate that the lands of the Book of Mormon be draped in darkness to commemorate and mourn the death and suffering of their king! The coming of light each morning ought be a reminder to all, of the manner in which our Redeemer brought to an end that long night of darkness we associate with death, and ought also be a reminder of the promise granted us, through him, of a newness of life” (Millet and McConkie, Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, volume 4, 38-39).

Verse 22 states that the sun, moon, and stars were not visible during this three-day period. It is likely this phenomenon was more the result of things occurring on the earth than in the heavens. No comparable event is found in the New Testament record, suggesting that the three days of darkness was largely another remarkable and unique sign to the Book of Mormon people.

24 And in one place they were heard to cry, saying: O that we had repented before this great and terrible day, and then would our brethren have been spared, and they would not have been burned in that great city Zarahemla.

25 And in another place they were heard to cry and mourn, saying: O that we had repented before this great and terrible day, and had not killed and stoned the prophets, and cast them out; then would our mothers and our fair daughters, and our children have been spared, and not have been buried up in that great city Moronihah. And thus were the howlings of the people great and terrible.

3 Nephi Chapter 9

Scripture Mastery

3 Nephi 9-10 The Lord's voice is heard out of the darkness following the period of destruction at the time of the Savior's crucifixion.

1 And it came to pass that there was a voice heard among all the inhabitants of the earth, upon all the face of this land, crying:

verse 1 "there was a voice heard among all the inhabitants of the earth, upon all the face of this land" This is the voice of the Savior himself. The expression "among all the inhabitants of the earth" is hyperbolic, as the verse actually refers to "all the inhabitants . . . upon all the face of this land."

The Lord will testify in verses 1 through 22 of this chapter that the destructions that have befallen the Nephites were divinely orchestrated because of the wickedness of the people. He will also teach of his relationship with the Father and of his role as Creator of the heavens and earth. He will declare that he is the Redeemer of the world and that in him the Mosaic law is fulfilled. He will also extend an invitation to "the ends of the earth" to come unto him and be saved on conditions of faith and repentance.

2 Wo, wo, wo unto this people; wo unto the inhabitants of the whole earth except they shall repent; for the devil laugheth, and his angels rejoice, because of the slain of the fair sons and daughters of my people; and it is because of their iniquity and abominations that they are fallen!

verse 2 "Wo, wo, wo unto this people; wo unto the inhabitants of the whole earth except they shall repent" Here the Lord is speaking to the people in the midst of the destructive storm. He gives them yet another chance to repent. On this occasion his voice is a terrifying one and not a gentle and comforting one. It is probably safe to say that the world has never known a more dramatic teaching moment. After he speaks here, there will follow silence from heaven for many hours, then the Lord will speak a second time (3 Nephi 10:4-7).

"for the devil laugheth" Bruce R. McConkie has described the various meanings of "laughter" in the scriptures. In this particular instance, he suggests that it signifies scorn and derision, as when the righteous are mocked for their good deeds and intentions (Alma 26:23; 2 Kings 19:21; Nehemiah 2:19; Job 12:4; Matthew 9:24; Mark 5:40; Luke 8:53). This kind of laughter is inspired of and practiced by the devil. When calamities befall the inhabitants of the earth, "the devil laugheth, and his angels rejoice" (3 Nephi 9:2). At the second coming of Christ, "they that have laughed" in this scornful and derisive manner shall see their folly. And calamity shall cover the mocker, and the scorner shall be consumed (D&C 45:49-50) (“Laughter” in Mormon Doctrine, 432).

“because of the slain of the fair sons and daughters of my people” Those slain were the seed of those with whom he had covenanted. He had brought the Book of Mormon people to this new land. He had entered into a covenant with them to protect them so long as they were obedient. Those people with whom the Lord enters into covenants are his people.

“it is because of their iniquity and abominations that they are fallen” This expression refers to those inhabitants of the Book of Mormon lands who failed to repent and were thus destroyed during the great “storm” following the Savior’s crucifixion. There is no question that this great geological upheaval was intended not only to destroy the wicked but also to serve as a sign to the “more righteous” (verse 13) among the Nephites that the atonement, death, and resurrection of the Savior had taken place. Elder Bruce R. McConkie pointed out, “It is perfectly clear that these destructions came as a just judgment upon the wicked, and that they are in similitude of the outpourings of wrath that shall come upon the whole world at the second coming” (The Promised Messiah. Deseret Book, 1981, 541).

verses 3-10 There follows in these verses a recitation of the great cities of the land which had just been destroyed. These were destroyed because there were no righteous among them and because they had soiled themselves with the blood of the Lord’s prophets and saints.

3 Behold, that great city Zarahemla have I burned with fire, and the inhabitants thereof.

4 And behold, that great city Moroni have I caused to be sunk in the depths of the sea, and the inhabitants thereof to be drowned.

5 And behold, that great city Moronihah have I covered with earth, and the inhabitants thereof, to hide their iniquities and their abominations from before my face, that the blood of the prophets and the saints shall not come any more unto me against them.

verse 5 “that the blood of the prophets and the saints shall not come any more unto me against them” When a murderer sheds blood, and the murder has not yet been avenged—the murderer has not yet been punished—the blood of the murder victim “cries from the ground.” Under the law of Moses “Whoso sheddeth man’s blood, by man shall his blood be shed” (Genesis 9:6). The unpunished murderer “defileth the land: and the land cannot be cleansed of the blood that is shed therein, but by the blood of him that shed it” (Numbers 35:30-34). If a murderer could not be found, city elders were to offer sacrifice and testify that they had neither shed the blood nor seen who did it. Then they were to plead, “Be merciful, O Lord . . . and lay not innocent blood unto thy people of Israel's charge. And the blood shall be forgiven them" (Deuteronomy 21:1-9).

Here the voice of Christ avers that the punishment has indeed been rendered to the guilty (see also verses 7-9, 11).

6 And behold, the city of Gilgal have I caused to be sunk, and the inhabitants thereof to be buried up in the depths of the earth;

verse 6 "Gilgal" For commentary on the name Gilgal, see the supplemental article, Names in the Book of Mormon. See also Mormon 6:14.

7 Yea, and the city of Onihah and the inhabitants thereof, and the city of Mocom and the inhabitants thereof, and the city of Jerusalem and the inhabitants thereof; and waters have I caused to come up in the stead thereof, to hide their wickedness and abominations from before my face, that the blood of the prophets and the saints shall not come up any more unto me against them.

verse 7 "waters have I caused to come up in the stead thereof" Compare this description of the destruction of these three cities—Onihah, Mocom, and Jerusalem—to that of the destruction of the city of Moroni: That "great city Moroni have I caused to be sunk in the depths of the sea" (3 Nephi 8:9, 9:4). There is textual evidence to suggest that Jerusalem was near the waters of Mormon (Alma 21:1-2), and perhaps that body of water was involved in the destruction of Jerusalem, and perhaps the destruction of Onihah and Mocom as well. The Waters of Mormon must have been a very large body of water to be able to rise and cover a whole city, and possibly three cities. From the text, this body of water was located in a highland setting, in or near the land of Nephi, and it therefore must be a large lake.

8 And behold, the city of Gadiandi, and the city of Gadiomnah, and the city of Jacob, and the city of Gimgimno, all these have I caused to be sunk, and made hills and valleys in the places thereof; and the inhabitants thereof have I buried up in the depths of the earth, to hide their wickedness and abominations from before my face, that the blood of the prophets and the saints should not come up any more unto me against them.

9 And behold, that great city Jacobugath, which was inhabited by the people of king Jacob, have I caused to be burned with fire because of their sins and their wickedness, which was above all the wickedness of the whole earth, because of their secret murders and combinations; for it was they that did destroy the peace of my people and the government of the land; therefore I did cause them to be burned, to destroy them from before my face, that the blood of the prophets and the saints should not come up unto me any more against them.

verse 9 “Jacobugath” For a discussion of this city and for a suggestion as to its modern-day identity, see the commentary for Alma 63:4.

Reynolds and Sjodahl have suggested that gath means a wine press, and the city of Jacobugath may have received its name from the fact that wine was made there, causing the wickedness for which it was finally destroyed (Commentary on the Book of Mormon, volume 2, 321).

10 And behold, the city of Laman, and the city of Josh, and the city of Gad, and the city of Kishkumen, have I caused to be burned with fire, and the inhabitants thereof, because of their wickedness in casting out the prophets, and stoning those whom I did send to declare unto them concerning their wickedness and their abominations.

verse 10 “city of Josh” For a discussion of this peculiar name, see the commentary for Mormon 6:14. See also the supplemental article, Names in the Book of Mormon.

“because of their wickedness in casting out the prophets, and stoning those whom I did send to declare unto them concerning their wickedness and their abominations” The Lord’s decriing of this particular sin suggests that he is willing to extend mercy to those who follow the admonitions of the prophets and repent of most any sin. However, when they cast out the prophets whom the Lord has sent to declare repentance, then they incur the wrath of God.

11 And because they did cast them all out, that there were none righteous among them, I did send down fire and destroy them, that their wickedness and abominations might be hid from before my face, that the blood of the prophets and the saints whom I sent among them might not cry unto me from the ground against them.

12 And many great destructions have I caused to come upon this land, and upon this people, because of their wickedness and their abominations.

13 O all ye that are spared because ye were more righteous than they, will ye not now return unto me, and repent of your sins, and be converted, that I may heal you?

verse 13 “O all ye that are spared because ye were more righteous than they” Those who were spared included those who did not stone the prophets or shed the blood of the saints (see 3 Nephi 10:12).

“repent of your sins” Here is the Lord’s call to repentance issued to the “more righteous” Nephites. Just how are we to regard this phenomenon of repentance? It is clear that the opportunity to repent is a free gift, indeed a gift of love from God to his people. It is a gift given to us by a God whose love for us is beyond our understanding. While the opportunity to repent of one’s sins is free gift, the desire to repent and the motivation and effort necessary to complete the process are hardly “free.” A sinner never comes to possess the desire to repent lest he works for and acquires a gift of the Spirit which may be called “godly sorrow.” See a discussion of this important concept in the commentary for Mosiah 26:29 (see also 2 Corinthians 7:9-11).

“that I may heal you” Bruce R. McConkie has expanded our understanding of the phenomenon of healing:

Even more important than the healing of mentally and physically afflicted persons is the spiritual healing of those who have been dead to the things of righteousness. Those so healed are restored to a state of purity, integrity, and righteousness. Their healing comes about through conversion to the truth and adherence to the principles of righteousness. Thus, there is the scriptural promise that Christ “shall rise from the dead, with healing in his wings; and all those who shall believe on his name shall be saved in the kingdom of God” (2 Nephi 25:13; 26:9; Malachi 4:2). That is, spiritual sickness and spiritual death vanish for those who turn to him through whose atoning sacrifice all men have power to become whole spiritually or in other words to be healed from every spiritual malady that would keep them out of the celestial world. Thus, the Lord’s call to all men is, “Return unto me, and repent of your sins, and be converted, that I may heal you” (3 Nephi 9:13; Hosea 14:4) (Mormon Doctrine, “Healings,” 345).

In this verse the Lord is addressing those who were spared destruction because they were sufficiently righteous, yet they were obviously in need of repentance. We may tend to dissociate ourselves from this group of ancient Nephites and Lamanites. Elder Spencer W. Kimball in his address in general conference in October 1961 has reminded us that many of us may fit nicely into this same category:

It seems that rather than fast and pray, we prefer to gorge ourselves at the banquet tables and drink cocktails. Instead of disciplining ourselves, we yield to urges and carnal desires. Numerous billions we spend on liquor and tobacco. A Sabbath show or a game or a race replaces solemn worship. Numerous mothers prefer the added luxuries of two incomes to the satisfactions of seeing children grow up in the fear of God. Men golf and boat and hunt and fish rather than to solemnize the Sabbath. Old man rationalization is with us. Because we are not vicious enough to be confined in penitentiaries, we rationalize that we are pretty good people; that we are not doing so badly. The masses of the people are much like those who escaped destruction in the ancient days of this continent. The Lord said to them: “O all ye that are spared because ye were more righteous than they [the slain ones], will ye not now return unto me, and repent of your sins, and be converted, that I may heal you?” (3 Nephi 9:13).

14 Yea, verily I say unto you, if ye will come unto me ye shall have eternal life. Behold, mine arm of mercy is extended towards you, and whosoever will come, him will I receive; and blessed are those who come unto me.

verse 14 “Behold, mine arm of mercy is extended towards you” This verse along with the preceding verse bring to mind the well-known painting by Michelangelo on the ceiling of the Sistine chapel of the creation of Adam.

verses 15-18 What glorious and profound simplicity is contained in these verses, yet the world does not understand these truths.

15 Behold, I am Jesus Christ the Son of God. I created the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them are. I was with the Father from the beginning. I am in the Father, and the Father in me; and in me hath the Father glorified his name.

verse 15 “I am Jesus Christ the Son of God” It is important to note here that the Savior refers to himself as “Jesus Christ the Son of God.” Monte S. Nyman has pointed out that in 3 Nephi there are eleven such designations or titles Christ gives himself (“The Designations Jesus Gives Himself in 3 Nephi,” The Book of Mormon: 3 Nephi 9-30, This Is My Gospel, 41-58). While the entire Book of Mormon contains many more than these eleven, these few are of particular importance because they are authentic declarations from the Savior’s own tongue. Consequently, they reflect the ultimate authoritative appraisal of his various roles in ministering unto us mortals. In addition to “Jesus Christ the Son of God,” these titles include also “the Creator” (3 Nephi 9:15), “I was with the Father from the beginning” (3 Nephi 9:15), “I am in the Father and the Father in me” (3 Nephi 9:15), “in me hath the Father glorified his name” (3 Nephi 9:15), “Redeemer” (3 Nephi 16:4), “I am the light and life of the world” (3 Nephi 9:18; 11:11), “I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end” (3 Nephi 9:18), “I am the God of Israel” (3 Nephi 11:14), “I am the God of the whole earth” (3 Nephi 11:14), and “I am [he] whom the prophets testified shall come into the world” (3 Nephi 11:10). Yet a twelfth title is implied: “I am the good shepherd” (3 Nephi 15:17).

Jesus is the Greek form of the Hebrew name Joshua or Jeshua and means God is help or Savior. The title Christ is of Greek origin and means the anointed one. The Hebrew equivalent of this title is Messiah. The Savior thus declares that he is the Messiah. The title Son of God implies that his mortal body was partly of divine origin, that he obtained his divine characteristics directly from his Father in Heaven. These include the ability to atone for our sins, to break the power of death, and become the Savior of all mankind.

“I created the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them are” While Jesus does not refer to himself in this verse directly as the Creator, that designation is certainly implied. President Joseph Fielding Smith taught: “Under the direction of his Father, Jesus Christ created this earth. No doubt others helped him, but it was Jesus Christ, our Redeemer, who, under the direction of his Father, came down and organized matter and made this planet, so that it might be inhabited by the children of God” (Doctrines of Salvation, 1:74). In what sense did Jesus create “the heavens . . . and all things that in them are”? While we are not given to know exactly the extent of his creations, we know that his creations were extensive—“worlds without number” (Moses 1:31-35).

“I was with the Father from the beginning” The “beginning” is the premortal life (Genesis 1:1; John 1:1). There the Father selected the most brilliant and capable of all the intelligences who was then “begotten” into a spirit body after the image of the Father. This individual was, of course, Jesus Christ who was thereafter known as the Firstborn. Jesus was then tutored and tested, and he developed from “grace to grace” and eventually received a “fulness of truth” (D&C 93:11-14). The fulness of truth is defined in scripture as “a knowledge of things past, present, and future” (D&C 93:24).

There, in the premortal world, the Son became a God and was placed in charge of the creation or organization of all the rest of the Father’s kingdom (Moses 1:32-33). He even somehow assisted with the creation of the spirit bodies of all men (D&C 93:10). This clarifies the Genesis account of “let us make man in our image” (1:26, italics mine). The plural pronouns us and our in Genesis must refer to Christ being with his Father from the beginning and being involved in the plan to people the earth.

Other roles Jesus fulfilled in the beginning with the Father were: (1) He carried out the foreordinations of men to bear the eternal priesthood of God, which priesthood was named after him, “the Holy Priesthood, after the Order of the Son of God” (D&C 107:3). The premortal spirits were also the beneficiaries of many other foreordinations. (2) He directed the preaching of the gospel to others in the premortal state: “In the beginning was the gospel preached through the Son. And the gospel was the word, and the word was with the Son, and the Son was with God, and the Son was of God. The same was in the beginning with God” (JST John 1:1-3).

“I am in the Father and the Father in me” This seems to be an expression of the perfect unity that exists between the Father and the Son. It also carries the idea of the divine investiture of authority that the Father has bestowed upon the Son. The scriptures seem to support the idea that Jesus is “in the Father” in the sense that he submits his will completely to that of the Father. The “Father is in me [Jesus Christ]” in that the Son is imbued with the divine nature and the authority of the Father.

“in me hath the Father glorified his name” The Lord Jehovah was certainly speaking for himself as well as his Father when he said to Moses: “For behold, this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man” (Moses 1:39). Thus, the Savior has glorified the name of the Father and his own name by atoning for the sins of mankind (see 3 Nephi 11:11) and enabling men to glorify themselves (see 3 Nephi 19:29). See also Isaiah 53:12; Luke 22:29; and D&C 132:31.

16 I came unto my own, and my own received me not. And the scriptures concerning my coming are fulfilled.

verse 16 “I came unto my own” To whom does the Savior refer here? Who are “my [or his] own”? Jesus was born a Jew. And thus, he had come unto the Jews. They are “my own.”

“And the scriptures concerning my coming are fulfilled” The Book of Mormon passages that foretell his coming are numerous. Those in the Old Testament are few and far between, but we know that at the time of Christ’s ministry in the Old World, the scriptures available to those people (the Old Testament) testified clearly of Christ (see Luke 24:25-27; John 5:39).

17 And as many as have received me, to them have I given to become the sons of God; and even so will I to as many as shall believe on my name, for behold, by me redemption cometh, and in me is the law of Moses fulfilled.

verse 17 “the sons of God” All mortal men and women are, of course, sons and daughters of God the Father in that he sired their spirit bodies. It is not this relationship, however, that is being referred to here. These “sons of God” are those spirit children of God who are heirs of the celestial kingdom.

“by me redemption cometh” In this simple phrase, the Lord states a most profound truth. There is no other name in the universe by which man may receive a kingdom of glory save it be that of Jesus Christ himself.

18 I am the light and the life of the world. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end.

verse 18 “I am the light and the life of the world” What does this expression really mean?

The Savior is the “light” in that he is the beacon or signal toward which man must navigate as he works out his eternal destiny. On another occasion, he said to the Nephites: “Behold I am the light; I have set an example for you” (3 Nephi 18:16). He then admonished them: “Therefore, hold up your light that it may shine unto the world. Behold I am the light which ye shall hold up—that which ye have seen me do” (verse 24). Thus, Jesus was the light of men through his teachings and his example—through his gospel.

There is more, however, to Jesus’s being the light because of his example. For a more complete insight into why Jesus is the “light and life of the world” see The Concept of Light in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 15.

Jesus will later say to the Nephites: “Look unto me, and endure to the end, and ye shall live; for unto him that endureth to the end will I give eternal life: (3 Nephi 15:9). He is the “life” in the sense that he is the giver, indeed the source of eternal life.

“I am Alpha and Omega” This phrase, of course, consists of the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet and means “the beginning and the end.” Christ began the work of bringing “to pass the immortality and eternal life” of humankind here on earth.

He was ordained by the Father to be the Creator, the organizer of the intelligences and the elements which comprise our earth and other worlds. He will conclude this mortal phase at his second coming when all the keys of all dispensations will be returned to him and he will begin his millennial reign. He is the hope of our victory in the beginning of the plan and the evidence of our triumph at the end of it.

In a little broader sense, this title reflects the eternal and all encompassing nature of the Lord's existence, work, and glory. All life, all light, all progress, and all salvation come in and through him.

Some Book of Mormon critics have wondered what Greek letters were doing in a Hebrew Book of Mormon. "Alpha and Omega" is a perfectly good English expression and undoubtedly expressed well the meaning of the phrasing found on the plates, which contained no Greek. Joseph Smith might also have appropriately used "A and Z" without implying even for a moment that English letters occurred on the plates of Mormon.

19 And ye shall offer up unto me no more the shedding of blood; yea, your sacrifices and your burnt offerings shall be done away, for I will accept none of your sacrifices and your burnt offerings.

verse 19 Here the Savior declares that the law of Moses is fulfilled. The symbolic animal sacrifices that served as a type or symbol of the Savior and his atoning sacrifice are now done away. There is now a new meaning to the concept or eternal covenant of sacrifice. Rather than outward sacrifice, we are commanded to have the proper inner attitude as stated in the following verse—one of a "broken heart and contrite spirit."

We do understand, however, that animal sacrifices will be re-instituted for a season as part of the "restitution of all things" (see D&C 13:1; 84:31; 124:39).

20 And ye shall offer for a sacrifice unto me a broken heart and a contrite spirit. And whoso cometh unto me with a broken heart and a contrite spirit, him will I baptize with fire and with the Holy Ghost, even as the Lamanites, because of their faith in me at the time of their conversion, were baptized with fire and with the Holy Ghost, and they knew it not.

verse 20 "ye shall offer for a sacrifice unto me a broken heart and a contrite spirit" Here we have the new law of sacrifice. Instead of animal sacrifices, we are to sacrifice, actually come to possess, "a broken heart and a contrite spirit." But what is this broken heart and contrite spirit? This is also a gift of the Spirit that must be earned, over time, through obedience to the gospel law. As we obey, and as we contemplate the Savior's atoning sacrifice, our hearts will break as we come to understand his selfless sacrifice. It naturally follows, then, that we will surrender our will to his will—our spirits will become contrite. We will become truly willing to sacrifice things of the world and become responsive to the Spirit's promptings to continually repent of the myriad ways in which we fall short of the Savior's character and example. In place of outward and visible sacrifices, this new law involves inward changes of attitudes and feelings of our heart.

Another aspect of the concept of the "broken heart and contrite spirit" is of interest. Although this teaching never appears explicitly in the New Testament, the requirement to sacrifice "a broken heart and a contrite spirit" is repeatedly stated in the Book of Mormon, not only by Jesus and Moroni after Christ's coming (See this verse and 3 Nephi 12:19; Ether 4:15; Moroni 6:2.), but also by the early Nephite patriarchs long before Christ's birth (See 2 Nephi 2:7; Jacob 2:10). A broad range of Book of Mormon authors seem to have had an understanding of this important principle. Moreover, the teaching can be found in the Old Testament, especially in the Psalms, and thus may have been included on the plates of brass that Lehi's family obtained in Jerusalem. Most notably, Psalm 51:17 states that "the sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart." Psalm 34:18 declares that "the Lord is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart; and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit." Isaiah 61:1, quoted by Jesus in Luke 4:18, declares the Lord's mission to "bind up the brokenhearted."

The appearance of these principles in the Book of Mormon demonstrates that those who composed its writings understood that having "a broken heart and a contrite spirit" was an essential part of the law of sacrifice long before Christ gave commands in this regard in 3 Nephi 9.

But since the concept of a "broken heart and contrite spirit" has been well taught earlier in the Book of Mormon, why did the Lord teach it again now to the righteous Nephites while he was speaking to them from the heavens?

BYU Professor Dana Pike asked a similar question: "With an understanding that the gospel of Christ was on the earth from the beginning, and that the offering of a broken heart constituted a premeridian dimension of the law of sacrifice, how does one accurately read 3 Nephi 9:19–20?" (Dana M. Pike, "3 Nephi 9:19–20: The Offering of a Broken Heart," in Third Nephi: An Incomparable Scripture, ed. Gaye Strathearn and Andrew C. Skinner, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2012, 35–56). What many readers may not have noticed in 3 Nephi 9 is that Jesus did not announce this principle as some new requirement, or something that the people had never heard before. He declared that he would no longer accept animal sacrifices and burnt offerings, but then continued on speaking of the appropriate manner of sacrifice as if it was something with which the people were already familiar. Pike interpreted it this way: "The Lord seems to really be saying: Beginning today you will no longer offer animal or any other sacrifice at an altar, because the saving act they symbolized has been accomplished by me. Therefore, I will no longer accept them as legitimate expressions of your faith and symbols of salvation (verse 19). You will continue to live the law of sacrifice and will demonstrate this as you voluntarily offer to me your broken heart. Only with such an offering (as was also true before my redeeming mission) can you be sanctified.” Pike concluded, “Thus, the first sentence in 3 Nephi 9:20 is understood to mean ‘and ye shall [continue to] offer for a sacrifice unto me a broken heart and a contrite spirit,’ not ‘and ye shall [begin to] offer for a [new] sacrifice unto me a broken heart and a contrite spirit.’”

Pike explained that the expectation of a broken heart and contrite spirit wasn't new but rather renewed as the Savior prepared the people for his ministry among them. “Thus, with the elimination of the strong, visual, external evidence of commitment to God provided by an animal offering, the Lord gave extra and renewed emphasis in 3 Nephi 9:20 to the offering of a broken heart as another gospel dispensation was beginning” (Pike, “3 Nephi 9:19–20,” 49).

Similarly, former BYU Professor M. Catherine Thomas explained that “under the law of Moses, the broken heart was to accompany the animal sacrifice (cf. Psalms 51:17–19); the Lord did away with the animal sacrifice after the law of Moses was fulfilled (3 Nephi 9:17–20), but the broken heart and contrite spirit remained as a requirement from the Lord's people” (M. Catherine Thomas, “Broken Heart and Contrite Spirit,” in Book of Mormon Reference Companion, ed. Dennis L. Largey, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 2003, 172).

The essential nature of making the sacrifice of a broken heart and contrite spirit was re-emphasized in this last dispensation. D&C 20:37 declares, “by way of commandment,” that those desiring to be baptized must “come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits.” Humbling oneself, having a broken heart and contrite spirit, is a necessary part of repentance and this will be rewarded, as promised here in 3 Nephi 9:20, by the purging powers of the Holy Ghost.

Professor Pike explained the significance of having a “broken” heart and a “contrite” spirit. The Hebrew verb (from the root šbr) translated as “broken” in Psalm 51:17 means “to break, smash, shatter.” The word (Hebrew root dkh) translated as “contrite” means “to crush.” Drawing on these meanings, Pike concluded: “Therefore, a broken or contrite heart or spirit is one that is crushed, smashed, broken to pieces. . . . The symbolism of our smashing or breaking or crushing our hard, willful heart into pieces and offering the result to God is significant, because a smashed heart no longer exists in a recognizable or retrievable form. . . . It is at this point that the Lord can replace our now broken, offered heart with a new one” (see Ezekiel 36:26) (Pike, “3 Nephi 9:19—20,” 51, 55).

“him will I baptize with fire and with the Holy Ghost” For an explanation of the concept of the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost, see the commentary for 3 Nephi 19:13-14. Also see Baptism, the Ordinance that Brings Spiritual Growth, in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 18.

“the Lamanites . . . were baptized with fire and with the Holy Ghost, and they knew it not” The process of becoming sanctified through the operation of the ordinance of “the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost” is an incremental, gradual, and step by step one. A righteous man is not proud or even cognizant of his own spiritual progress as he is blessed by this sacred ordinance. His incremental sanctification occurs so insidiously and incrementally that it is to him virtually imperceptible. His attentions are turned outward rather than inward.

21 Behold, I have come unto the world to bring redemption unto the world, to save the world from sin.

verse 21 The Savior’s earthly experience can be conveniently divided into three categories, namely his message, his ministry, and his mission. Only the events associated with his mission, however, imposed the absolute requirement that he appear in person on earth. Thus, his mission, the atoning sacrifice, became the compelling reason for his condescension.

Certainly, it was a great blessing to have the Savior personally preach his gospel message, but that was not the essential reason for which he came. Others have been his spokesmen, both before and after his mortal advent. His ministry included the working of miracles, but Enoch, Moses, Elijah, and others had performed similar wonders before his birth. Peter, Paul, and others would perform like miracles after his ascension.

While others could preach the Savior’s message and even perform a ministry of miracles and priesthood ordinances, only he could accomplish that divinely appointed mission, namely the redemption of the world. This is the prime reason he came to the earth (see also 3 Nephi 27:13-16; D&C 49:5; 76:40-42). Perhaps it ought to be added that President Joseph F. Smith spoke of another reason Christ came to earth: “Christ came not only to atone for the sins of the world, but to set an example before all men and to establish the standard of God’s perfection, of God’s law, and of obedience to the Father” (Gospel Doctrine, 270). This is consistent with the observation of Peter: “For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps” (1 Peter 2:21).

22 Therefore, whoso repenteth and cometh unto me as a little child, him will I receive, for of such is the kingdom of God. Behold, for such I have laid down my life, and have taken it up again; therefore repent, and come unto me ye ends of the earth, and be saved.

verse 22 “whoso repenteth and cometh unto me as a little child” During his Nephtite ministry, the Savior makes frequent use of the metaphor of children. As one contemplates the nature of children and their relationship with spiritual things, one is left with the impression that it is vital that each of us contemplates that relationship and strives to become more childlike (see 3 Nephi 10:3-6; 11:37- 38; 17:21-24).

3 Nephi Chapter 10

1 And now behold, it came to pass that all the people of the land did hear these sayings, and did witness of it. And after these sayings there was silence in the land for the space of many hours;

2 For so great was the astonishment of the people that they did cease lamenting and howling for the loss of their kindred which had been slain; therefore there was silence in all the land for the space of many hours.

verses 3-7 After “many hours” of silence, the Lord begins to speak again.

3 And it came to pass that there came a voice again unto the people, and all the people did hear, and did witness of it, saying:

4 O ye people of these great cities which have fallen, who are descendants of Jacob, yea, who are of the house of Israel, how oft have I gathered you as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and have nourished you.

verse 4 The metaphor in this verse of the hen’s gathering her chicks under her wings is repeated four times in this verse and in the two following verses. It is even used in three different tenses: “how oft have I gathered you and nourished you” (verse 4, speaking to those of the fallen cities), followed by “how oft would I have gathered you” (verse 5, speaking of those in Jerusalem), and concluded by “how oft will I gather you” (verse 6, speaking to the spared members of the House of Israel, emphasis added for all verses). Clearly, this repeated metaphor was of transcendent—even eternal—significance (For other scriptural references to the hen metaphor, see Matthew 23:37–38; Luke 13:34–35; D&C 10:65; 29:2; 43:24).

Jane Allis-Pike explained, “For a metaphor to be meaningful, the reader must have a familiarity with the objects used for comparison” (Jane Allis-Pike, “How Oft Would I Have Gathered You as a Hen Gathereth Her Chickens’: The Power of the Hen Metaphor in 3 Nephi 10: 4–7,” in Third Nephi: An Incomparable Scripture, ed. Andrew C. Skinner and Gaye Strathearn, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2012, 59). For people living in ancient America, chicken might have referred to an actual chicken (Brant A. Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 5:322: the “common assumption is that chickens were a post-conquest introduction into the Americas.” However, there is currently not a consensus concerning the timing and details of the chicken’s introduction to the Americas, see p. 322), or it could have been a term for a fowl with similar features in the New World (Allis-Pike, “How Oft Would I Have Gathered You,” 60: “many ground-feeding birds—quail, chickens, pheasants, turkeys—gather their offspring under their wings, and since the Book of Mormon is a translated work, the words hen and chicken may simply be the English signifiers of a bird that did exist among the Lehitese. Regardless of the actual bird the New World survivors knew, we can assume they would have been familiar with a bird that gathered its offspring under its wings.”). Turkeys, for example, were prevalent in ancient America (See Erin Kennedy Thornton, Kitty F. Emery, David W. Steadman, Camilla Speller, Ray Matheny, and Dongya Yang, “Earliest Mexican Turkeys, Meleagris gallopavo, in the Maya Region: Implications for Pre-Hispanic Animal Trade and the Timing of Turkey Domestication,” PLoS ONE 7, no. 8, 2012: e42630), took special care to protect their young (See “Wild Turkey Parenting,” eMammal, September 6, 2013, online at emammal.wordpress.com; Karen Davis, “A Mother Turkey and Her Young: ‘Their Kind and Careful Parent,’” Poultry Press 17, no. 3, 2007: 2: “During the first few weeks of life, young turkeys sleep on the ground under their mother’s wings. After a month or so, they leave the ground and fly at night to a large low branch, where they ‘place themselves under the deeply curved wings of their kind and careful parent, dividing themselves for that purpose into two nearly equal parties.’”), and played a significant role in religious thought (See Ana Luisa Izquierdo y de la Cueva and María Elena Vega Villalobos, “The Ocellated Turkey in Maya Thought,” PARI Journal 16, no. 4, 2016: 15–23).

Whatever species of fowl was represented here by the words hen and chickens, we are generally familiar with the natural behavior of hens and their young. Allis-Pike explained that Jesus Christ can be represented by a mother bird in His role as “creator of this earth,” His “desire to protect his young” (those who become His children through covenant), His willingness to “[use] his body to shield his beloved ‘children’ from endless death and hell,” and His “proactive care in the nurture of his ‘children’” (Allis-Pike, “How Oft Would I Have Gathered You,” 65). She concluded, “Like the hen that hurries her chicks together, Christ focuses on “gather[ing]” his “children.” This gathering comes in the form of teaching them to follow him, to accept the gospel, to learn the plan of salvation, and receive the saving priesthood ordinances (Allis-Pike, “How Oft Would I Have Gathered You,” 66).

The chicks that need to be gathered, on the other hand, meaningfully represent the House of Israel. “The Book of Mormon peoples are one branch of the house of Israel. They have a long-standing history and covenant relationship with the Savior and his gospel. They know the Savior as the chicks know their mother” (Allis-Pike, “How Oft Would I Have Gathered You,” 67).

The underlying purpose of this metaphor was “to remind and teach the people of the true nature and conditions of their covenant relationship with [Jesus Christ]” (Ibid. 58). Not only does it convey the historical assurance of “Christ’s desire to protect his people,” but it also “underscores the fact that they must want his protection” (Ibid.). This can be seen in Christ’s twice repeated statement “how oft would I have gathered you,” followed by the emphatic declaration: “yet ye would not” (3 Nephi 10:5).

Christ's hen metaphor is explained further in Alma's open invitation that "whosoever will come may come and partake of the waters of life freely; and whosoever will not come the same is not compelled to come" (Alma 42:27) (Alma's teaching is directly linked with the hen metaphor in Doctrine and Covenants 10:65–66: "For, behold, I will gather them as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, if they will not harden their hearts; Yea, if they will come, they may, and partake of the waters of life freely."). Like a mother hen, Jesus Christ is ever concerned for the physical and spiritual needs of His children. And because His infinite atonement stretches wide as eternity, He will always remain capable of providing shelter and protection to all who willingly come unto Him. He promises and affirms, "how oft will I gather you" (3 Nephi 10:6).

It should also be recognized that even though this metaphor pertains to God's dealings with the House of Israel, His efforts here and now at gathering and including His children within His covenant are boundless. All who are willing to be "baptized in the name of the Lord, as a witness before him that ye have entered into a covenant with him" will be immediately enfolded and included in His loving arms (Mosiah 18:10). Brent L. Top invited, "May we exercise greater faith in the arms of the Lord—His arms of power, His arms of love, and His arms of mercy. May we allow Him to cradle and carry and comfort us in those arms. In turn, our arms—our determination and our devotion—will be strengthened. . . May we all be "clasped in the arms of Jesus" (Brent L. Top, "The Loving Arms of Christ," Ensign, April 2012, 57, online at lds.org).

5 And again, how oft would I have gathered you as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, yea, O ye people of the house of Israel, who have fallen; yea, O ye people of the house of Israel, ye that dwell at Jerusalem, as ye that have fallen; yea, how oft would I have gathered you as a hen gathereth her chickens, and ye would not.

6 O ye house of Israel whom I have spared, how oft will I gather you as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, if ye will repent and return unto me with full purpose of heart.

verses 4-6 The repeated use of the image in these verses of the hen's calling after her chickens to come to the shelter and safety of her wings portrays the love of the Savior for his children and his desire to keep them safe and shelter them from the storms of life. He expressed similar sentiments for the Jews in the Old World (Matthew 23:37-39; Luke 13:34-35) and even in our own dispensation he has expressed the same thoughts (D&C 43:23-25). It is pertinent to note that the hen can raise her wings to offer protection, but her chicks must choose to come to her. Another image which helps us understand the Savior's intense desire to gather his people around him is that of the human mother who is happiest when her children are gathered safely around her where she can see them and touch them and nurture them and reassure herself that they are safe.

Note in these verses the three tenses of the verb to gather: “how oft have I gathered you,” “how oft would I have gathered you,” and “how oft will I gather you.” One may regard these usages as representing the timelessness of the Savior’s love for us. His call to repent is extended past, present, and future. His arms are always extended in love and mercy.

7 But if not, O house of Israel, the places of your dwellings shall become desolate until the time of the fulfilling of the covenant to your fathers.

verse 7 The Lord had made a covenant with the Book of Mormon people to protect them so long as they were obedient. Now this remnant of the seed of Israel (largely of the tribe of Joseph) were in danger of breaking their covenants and thus being destroyed from off the land. If they do not repent, then they are no longer his children according to the covenant. Then they would have no claim to an inheritance either temporally or spiritually.

8 And now it came to pass that after the people had heard these words, behold, they began to weep and howl again because of the loss of their kindred and friends.

9 And it came to pass that thus did the three days pass away. And it was in the morning, and the darkness dispersed from off the face of the land, and the earth did cease to tremble, and the rocks did cease to rend, and the dreadful groanings did cease, and all the tumultuous noises did pass away.

verse 9 “the darkness dispersed from off the face of the land” The verb “dispersed” implies a breaking up or scattering and may refer to the dispersion of a cloud of volcanic ash and gases.

“the rocks did cease to rend, and the dreadful groanings did cease” This implies that the seismic activity continued throughout the three-day period of the Savior’s entombment, perhaps as a series of aftershocks.

10 And the earth did cleave together again, that it stood; and the mourning, and the weeping, and the wailing of the people who were spared alive did cease; and their mourning was turned into joy, and their lamentations into the praise and thanksgiving unto the Lord Jesus Christ, their Redeemer.

verse 10 “the earth did cleave together again, that it stood” To cleave, of course, means to cling or adhere closely. This colorful language means that the earth stopped shaking, groaning, crumbling, and collapsing.

11 And thus far were the scriptures fulfilled which had been spoken by the prophets.

verse 11 This great cataclysmic destruction had been foretold by Nephi (1 Nephi 12:4; 2 Nephi 26:6), Zenos (1 Nephi 19:11-12), and Samuel the Lamanite (Helaman 14:20-28).

12 And it was the more righteous part of the people who were saved, and it was they who received the prophets and stoned them not; and it was they who had not shed the blood of the saints, who were spared—

13 And they were spared and were not sunk and buried up in the earth; and they were not drowned in the depths of the sea; and they were not burned by fire, neither were they fallen upon and crushed to death; and they were not carried away in the whirlwind; neither were they overpowered by the vapor of smoke and of darkness.

verse 13 Though this verse is referring to the survivors of the great “storm,” it implies that some of those killed were “overpowered by the vapor of smoke and of darkness.” Dr. Hugh Nibley has written:

Most of the victims of the great catastrophes of Pompeii, St. Pierre (Martinique, 1902), and Mount Pelee (1906) died of suffocation when earthquake dust, volcanic ash, steam, and hot gases (mostly sulfurated hydrogen gas) took the place of air. In some areas, the Book of Mormon reports, people were “overpowered by the vapor of smoke and darkness”—and so lost their lives. There it is, this vapor of smoke and darkness that comes down. It shuts everything out. Even without volcanic accompaniments, however, major earthquakes kick up a terrible dust, according to Sieberg. They’re accompanied by phenomenal vapors and astonishingly thick air (Teachings of the Book of Mormon, Semester 3, 321).

When ash from a volcanic eruption “begins to fall back toward the earth, it is accompanied by many gases, including hydrochloric acid, hydrofluoric acid, carbonic acid, carbon dioxide, and ammonia. If the ash fall is heavy, people will naturally suffocate, not only from the ash content itself but from these gases, which are lethal in large quantities” (Bruce W. Warren and Thomas S. Ferguson, The Messiah in Ancient America, Provo, Utah: Book of Mormon Research Foundation, 1988, 42). In a few instances in modern times people, animals, and vegetation have been killed by volcanic gases which collected in low spots (Carla W. Montgomery, Environmental Geology, 3rd edition, Dubuque, Iowa: William C. Brown, 1992, 105-106; G. A. Macdonald, Volcanoes, Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey: Prentice-Hall, 1972, 25-52, 257).

14 And now, whoso readeth, let him understand; he that hath the scriptures, let him search them, and see and behold if all these deaths and destructions by fire, and by smoke, and by tempests, and by whirlwinds, and by the opening of the earth to receive them, and all these things are not unto the fulfilling of the prophecies of many of the holy prophets.

verse 14 The reader is counseled to search the scripture to reassure himself that these events have indeed been foretold there (see the commentary for verse 11).

15 Behold, I say unto you, Yea, many have testified of these things at the coming of Christ, and were slain because they testified of these things.

16 Yea, the prophet Zenos did testify of these things, and also Zenock spake concerning these things, because they testified particularly concerning us, who are the remnant of their seed.

verses 15-16 “These things” refers to the signs associated with the death of the Savior. Verse 16 suggests that perhaps Zenos and Zenock, ancient prophets who wrote upon the plates of brass, were both of the tribe of Joseph, and that the Nephites descended from them. For further information regarding these prophets see the commentary for 1 Nephi 19:10, 1 Nephi 5:16, and the introductory commentary for Jacob 5.

17 Behold, our father Jacob also testified concerning a remnant of the seed of Joseph. And behold, are not we a remnant of the seed of Joseph? And these things which testify of us, are they not written upon the plates of brass which our father Lehi brought out of Jerusalem?

verses 17 Do we have in our Bible a prophecy by father Jacob concerning a remnant of the seed of Joseph? We do not! See the interesting commentary for Alma 46:24.

18 And it came to pass that in the ending of the thirty and fourth year, behold, I will show unto you that the people of Nephi who were spared, and also those who had been called Lamanites, who had been spared, did have great favors shown unto them, and great blessings poured out upon their heads, insomuch that soon after the ascension of Christ into heaven he did truly manifest himself unto them—verse 18 The reader should pause for a moment and ponder the blessed privilege that these Nephites and Lamanites will have in actually seeing the resurrected Savior and receiving in person his teachings. Your author has been guilty of envying them.

Bear in mind that these Nephites and Lamanites were the righteous among the people and had been prepared for this experience. The wicked were slain in the great destruction (3 Nephi 9:12-13; 10:12-13). Some of these righteous survivors had seen the signs of the Savior’s birth some thirty-three years previously, and all of them had recently seen the signs of his death. They had survived the three hours of terrible storm along with its terrible tempests, the shaking of the earth, the lightning, the crumbling of buildings, the shearing of huge rocks, and the landslides and collapse of mountains. They had also endured three days of a thick vapor of darkness and had heard the fearful moanings, groanings, and shriekings hundreds of thousands of human beings, many of whom were being crushed and maimed in the tumult. They had heard the voice of the Lord speaking to them in the darkness, declaring that all this had happened because of the people's wickedness. They were ready to see, hear, and worship their Lord.

It is instructive to contrast the Savior's brief but glorious ministry in the New World with his mortal ministry among the Jews in the Old World. There in the Holy Land walked the very Son of God, the Creator of the earth, the God of Israel. But most of the Jews were not prepared, and they did not appreciate the glorious privilege of having him live among them (John 4, 8; Luke 11:30-32; Matthew 13:16-17). Those in the New World, in contrast, were prepared and consequently received teachings, blessings, and spiritual experiences that far exceeded those given the Jews (see 3 Nephi 19:31-36).

This verse states that Christ appeared to the Nephites "in the ending of the thirty and fourth year." Since his crucifixion took place "in the thirty and fourth year, in the first month, on the fourth day of the month" (3 Nephi 8:5), did the Savior wait almost a year to appear to the Nephites in Bountiful? Joseph Fielding Smith has suggested that Christ appeared shortly after his crucifixion and not a few months later (Answers to Gospel Questions, 4:26). He cites as evidence the phrase contained in this same verse: "Soon after the ascension of Christ into heaven he did truly manifest himself unto them." Also, he points out that just before the Lord's appearance at the temple in Bountiful, the people were "marveling and wondering one with another, and were showing one to another the great and marvelous change which had taken place" during the great storm that had just occurred (3 Nephi 11:1). The text does obviously contain some ambiguity on this point. Yet, as we compare the dates in this verse and in 3 Nephi 8:5, we seem to be taught that his appearance to the people was, indeed, almost a year after his crucifixion. More discussion of this point follows—see the commentary for 3 Nephi 11:1.

19 Showing his body unto them, and ministering unto them; and an account of his ministry shall be given hereafter. Therefore for this time I make an end of my sayings.

verse 19 We know that the principle authors of the book of 3 Nephi were Nephi, the son of Nephi, and the prophet Mormon. Which of the two is writing here? Your author does not know for sure. Perhaps, in this verse, the prophet Mormon suspends his editorial comments and begins to abridge the unedited writings of Nephi.

3 Nephi Chapter 11

Jesus Christ did show himself unto the people of Nephi, as the multitude were gathered together in the land Bountiful, and did minister unto them; and on this wise did he show himself unto them. Comprising chapters 11 to 26 inclusive.

Scripture Mastery

3 Nephi 11-28 Christ's ministry among the Nephites at Bountiful

3 Nephi 11:11 I have drunk out of that bitter cup which the Father hath given me, and I have suffered the will of the Father in all things from the beginning.

3 Nephi 11:14-15 The multitude went forth, and thrust their hands into his side, and did feel the prints of the nails in his hands and in his feet.

3 Nephi 11:29 He that hath the spirit of contention is not of me.

3 Nephi 11:32-34 And this is my doctrine, and it is the doctrine which the Father hath given unto me.

3 Nephi 11:38 Ye must become as a little child, or ye can in nowise inherit the kingdom of God.

The resurrected Savior will deliver to the gathered Nephites three major sermons:

1. The first is similar to the Sermon on the Mount (3 Nephi 12-14).
2. The Savior's second sermon is found in 3 Nephi 15-16, and might be referred to as "The Law and the Covenants discourse." In this sermon, Jesus will declare that he is the one who gave the law to Moses and that he also is the one who covenanted with his people of the house of Israel. He will declare the law of Moses fulfilled.
3. Continuing the next day, the Savior will deliver his third sermon, which may be called "The Covenant People Discourse." Christ will devote much of this sermon to enumerating to Israel those blessings that will be restored to them in the last days. He will promise that as Israel proves faithful, the remnants of Israel will be gathered from the world to their various lands of inheritance. He adds that additional lands of inheritance will be promised the house of Israel in the Americas.

Robert J. Matthews has outlined nineteen subjects Jesus addressed as he taught the gathered multitude. These include:

1. He died and was resurrected.
2. He is the God of Israel and of the whole earth.
3. He will deliver a sermon at Bountiful similar to the Sermon on the Mount.
4. He emphatically declared that he was sent by the Father who told him what to teach and what not to teach.
5. He taught baptism by water and reception of the Holy Ghost.

6. He had fulfilled the law of Moses.
7. He said all the prophecies that have not been fulfilled will be fulfilled.
8. He reaffirmed the covenant made with Abraham and talked of the gathering of Israel in the last days, including the Jews, ten tribes, and the Nephites / Lamanites.
9. He said that the Jews will gather to Jerusalem.
10. The Western Hemisphere is for the descendants of Joseph.
11. A New Jerusalem will be built on the Western Hemisphere.
12. He instituted the sacrament and taught that we must endure to the end.
13. He quoted two chapters of Malachi.
14. He quoted numerous passages from Isaiah and commanded the people to search Isaiah's words.
15. He explained what the name of the Church should be.
16. He commanded that an omission in the record be filled in.
17. He declared that he is the prophet spoken of by Moses.
18. He gave a detailed "in one," (that is, he put it all together—the big picture) declaring that he is the law, the light, and the life of the world.
19. In addition, he performed many miracles, including raising a man from the dead ("Jesus the Savior in 3 Nephi," The Book of Mormon: 3 Nephi 9-30, This Is My Gospel, 31-32).

1 And now it came to pass that there were a great multitude gathered together, of the people of Nephi, round about the temple which was in the land Bountiful; and they were marveling and wondering one with another, and were showing one to another the great and marvelous change which had taken place.

verse 1 "there were a great multitude gathered together, of the people of Nephi, round about the temple" One cannot help but wonder why this group of Nephites, "with men, women, and children" (3 Nephi 17:25), had gathered near the temple on this day. The gathering is reminiscent of the gathering at the time of King Benjamin, every man with his family, in a traditional Feast of Tabernacles fashion (see the introductory commentary for Mosiah 2). One might suppose these Nephites had gathered for a specific purpose at the beginning of that day. Perhaps they had come to the temple on a scheduled religious festival or holy day. These Nephites would have been strict to observe their traditional religious laws, for they were among "the more righteous part of the people" (3 Nephi 10:12), the wicked part having been destroyed.

Traditionally, all Israelites (and hence obedient Nephites) were instructed to gather at the temple three appointed times each year. These included the feasts of Passover (in the Spring), Pentecost (fifty days after Passover), and Tabernacles (in the Fall): "Three times in the year all thy males shall appear before the Lord God" (Exodus 23:17). Also, "at the end of every seven years . . . in the feast of tabernacles . . . all Israel [must] come to appear before the Lord thy God" at the temple, "men, and women, and children” (Deuteronomy 31:10- 12). As has been pointed out previously in this commentary, there is considerable circumstantial evidence that the Nephites, who were strict in their observance of the law of Moses “in all things” (2 Nephi 5:10; Jarom 1:5; Alma 30:3; 3 Nephi 1:24) observed these essential Israelite festivals.

If the Nephites were assembled on one of these traditional holy days sometime after the signs of Jesus’s death had been given, they probably would have been wondering what they should do next. We know that they observed the law of Moses until Jesus proclaimed its fulfillment, but Jesus’s voice had proclaimed the end of the Mosaic law at the time of his death (see 3 Nephi 9:17). No new instructions had yet been given to the Nephites about the law that was supposed to take its place. It seems inevitable that, sooner or later, as they gathered at their temple on the traditional holy days, they would have wondered if it was still appropriate for them to continue using their old ritual order. It seems unlikely that they would have gone twelve months without addressing the implications of Christ’s death for the continuation of their public rites and temple practices.

We actually do not know how the Nephite ritual calendar related to the Israelite calendar in Jerusalem, for there had been no contact between the two for over six hundred years. It is impossible to determine which of the traditional festivals would have been observed in Bountiful in the months following Jesus’s crucifixion. However, if one can assume that the two ritual calendars had not grown too far apart, the feast of Pentecost would have been celebrated in Bountiful a couple of months after the Passover crucifixion and shortly after Jesus’s ascension. Thus, the Nephite feast of Pentecost would make good sense in that Christ appeared in Bountiful “soon after” his ascension (3 Nephi 10:18). This date is close enough after the events of the destruction that the people could still “marvel” and “wonder” about the whole situation as they conversed about Christ and the signs of his death.

Might it be that these ancient gatherings of believers illustrated in the Book of Mormon were a trigger for Joseph Smith and a source of inspiration that resulted in Joseph’s establishing the semiannual general conferences of the Church today (See 2 Nephi 6-10; Mosiah 2-5; Mosiah 25:1, 9; 3 Nephi 11-28)? Actually, only two months after the Church was restored on April 6, 1830, the first general conference was held on June 9, 1830, at the Peter Whitmer home in Fayette, New York. In the following years, general conferences were held periodically until the Nauvoo era, when they began to be held consistently twice a year, in April and October. Since that time, the semi-annual General Conferences of the Church have grown into international events where millions tune in to hear the words of living prophets and apostles.

It would seem that the conflict between the phrases “soon after the ascension” and the phrase “in the ending of the thirty and fourth year” (both phrases found in 3 Nephi 10:18) remains unresolved. Perhaps also this gathering of the Nephites and their families might have coincided with the later feast of Tabernacles.

2 And they were also conversing about this Jesus Christ, of whom the sign had been given concerning his death.

3 And it came to pass that while they were thus conversing one with another, they heard a voice as if it came out of heaven; and they cast their eyes round about, for they understood not the voice which they heard; and it was not a harsh voice, neither was it a loud voice; nevertheless, and notwithstanding it being a small voice it did pierce them that did hear to the center, insomuch that there was no part of their frame that it did not cause to quake; yea, it did pierce them to the very soul, and did cause their hearts to burn.

verse 3 “it did pierce them that did hear to the center” Even though they did not understand the words, the Spirit prompted them to know that they were receiving, or they were about to receive, a divine communication.

4 And it came to pass that again they heard the voice, and they understood it not.

5 And again the third time they did hear the voice, and did open their ears to hear it; and their eyes were towards the sound thereof; and they did look steadfastly towards heaven, from whence the sound came.

verse 5 “they . . . did open their ears . . . and their eyes” Scriptural texts that have reference to opening the eyes and ears of the people often are found in a setting wherein that people are being offered the opportunity to learn particularly sacred things (see Mosiah 2:9). Not all people are intended to hear and know the mysteries of God, only those who have ears to hear and eyes to see. For this reason, Jesus spoke parables to the masses in Palestine—that his sacred meanings might be hidden from those unprepared to receive them. Jesus said to his disciples that it was given for them “to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven Blessed are your eyes, for they see: and your ears, for they hear” (Matthew 13:11, 16).

6 And behold, the third time they did understand the voice which they heard; and it said unto them:

7 Behold my Beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, in whom I have glorified my name—hear ye him.

verse 7 “in whom I have glorified my name” These words of the Father are a unique addition to the way in which he had previously introduced the Son (see Matthew 3:17; 17:5) and likely referred at least in part to the Savior’s recent atoning sacrifice.

The three ideas the Father conveys in this introduction are: (1) I love my Son (my “Beloved Son”); (2) My Son pleases me (“in whom I am well pleased”); and (3) My Son has glorified me (“in whom I have glorified my name”). Compare the Father’s introduction of the Son with the Son’s introduction of himself in verses 10-11.

8 And it came to pass, as they understood they cast their eyes up again towards heaven; and behold, they saw a Man descending out of heaven; and he was clothed in a white robe; and he came down and stood in the midst of them; and the eyes of the whole multitude were turned upon him, and they durst not open their mouths, even one to another, and wist not what it meant, for they thought it was an angel that had appeared unto them.

verse 8 “they saw a Man descending out of heaven; and he was clothed in a white robe” The Savior’s robes will later be described as being exceedingly white: “there could be nothing upon earth so white as the whiteness thereof” (3 Nephi 19:25).

The verb “wist” means knew. It is obvious that initially the people were not sure just who was appearing to them.

9 And it came to pass that he stretched forth his hand and spake unto the people, saying:

10 Behold, I am Jesus Christ, whom the prophets testified shall come into the world.

verse 10 Elder Jeffrey R. Holland said of this moment, “That appearance and that declaration constituted the focal point, the supreme moment, in the entire history of the Book of Mormon.” This statement is profoundly true at many levels.

In one important sense, the prophetic anticipation of the Book of Mormon culminates in the appearances of the resurrected Jesus marvelously reported in 3 Nephi 11–27. As Elder Holland further explained, “It was the manifestation and the decree that had informed and inspired every Nephite prophet for the previous six hundred years, to say nothing of their Israelite and Jaredite forefathers for thousands of years before that” (Jeffrey R. Holland, Christ and the New Covenant, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 1997, 250).

A look at the early chapters of the Book of Mormon demonstrates how important this moment was. Nephi had recorded, quoting Isaiah, that the Lord wanted Isaiah to “make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes—lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and be converted and be healed” (2 Nephi 16:10; Isaiah 6:10, emphasis added for all verses). Isaiah asked, “Lord, how long?” and God told him, “Until the cities be wasted without inhabitant, and the houses without man, and the land be utterly desolate” (2 Nephi 16:11; Isaiah 6:11).

After the great destruction at the time of the crucifixion, Christ spoke to the people. He told them about all the cities that had been completely leveled by the series of natural disasters that befell several unrighteous Nephite cities (3 Nephi 9:2–12). He then asked the survivors, “will ye not now return unto me, and repent of your sins, and be converted, that I may heal you?” (verse 13, emphasis added). Thus, after the cities of the Nephites had become “wasted without inhabitant,” as Isaiah had said, Christ pled with the people to “be converted” and allow Him to “heal” them (See Brant Gardner, Second Witness: Analytical and Contextual Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 6 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Greg Kofford Books, 2007, 5:316).

Mormon seems to have implied that the people finally accepted this healing. In 3 Nephi 11:5–6 (emphasis added), a voice from God came to the people and they “did hear the voice, and did open their ears to hear it; and their eyes were towards the sound thereof . . . And behold, the third time they did understand the voice which they heard.” After years of closing their eyes, ears, and hearts to God, as Isaiah said, the ears and eyes of the Nephites were opened (S. Brent Farley, “The Appearance of Christ to the People of Nephi, 3 Nephi 11–14,” in The Book of Mormon, Part 2: Alma 30 to Moroni, Studies in Scripture, Volume 8, ed. Kent P. Jackson, Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book, 1987, 149). They finally understood the gospel in their hearts, allowing themselves to be converted so Christ could heal them.

Mormon masterfully crafted the Book of Mormon to point readers to this “supreme moment” when Christ came heal His people. Throughout the narrative, He told of many of the children of Lehi who closed themselves off from God. Yet he also interwove through the whole text the idea that, someday, Christ would come to heal humanity (For more on repeated themes and images as they run through the Book of Mormon, see Ronald D. Anderson, “Leitwörter in Helaman and 3 Nephi,” in The Book of Mormon: Helaman through 3 Nephi 8, According to Thy Word, eds. Monte S. Nyman and Charles D. Tate, Jr., Provo, UT: Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, 1992, 241–249).

As everything in the Book of Mormon had led to this point (Joseph Fielding McConkie and Robert L. Millet, Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 4 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Bookcraft, 1987–1992, 4:52–53), Mormon then carefully and deliberately alluded to the words of Isaiah to forcefully illustrate that the pinnacle of the book, that majestic moment, had arrived. With the words in this verse, “I am Jesus Christ, whom the prophets testified shall come into the world.” Christ had finally come to heal His people, just as the prophets throughout the Book of Mormon had said He would.

It is hard to say enough in praise of 3 Nephi. It has been called a “fifth gospel” (B. H. Roberts, “The Fifth Gospel,” in Defense of the Faith and the Saints, 2 vols., Salt Lake City: Deseret News, 1907–12, cited in Gaye Strathearn, “Nephi, third book of,” in Book of Mormon Reference Companion, ed. Dennis L. Largey, Salt Lake City: Deseret Book, 2003, 597–601; N. Eldon Tanner, “Christ in America,” Ensign, May 1975, 34; Richard Neitzel Holzapfel, “One by One: The Fifth Gospel’s Model of Service,” in A Book of Mormon Treasury: Gospel Insights from General Authorities and Religious Educators, Salt Lake City: Deseret Book, 2003, 379), “a resplendent portrait” (Ed J. Pinegar and Richard J. Allen, Commentaries and Insights on the Book of Mormon: Alma 30–Moroni, American Fork, UT: Covenant Communications, 2003, 433), “a crowning jewel” (See Strathearn, “Nephi, third book of,” 597), “the pinnacle” (Ibid.), “the climax, the apex” (Joseph Fielding McConkie, Robert L. Millet, and Brent L. Top, Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 4 vols., Salt Lake City, UT: Bookcraft, 1987–199), 4:1), and even the “first gospel” (Monte Nyman, Book of Mormon Commentary, 6 vols., Orem, UT: Granite, 2003, 5:2–3), as well as “the focal point, the supreme moment, in the entire history of the Book of Mormon” (Holland, Christ and the New Covenant, 250. For an exquisite media portrayal of the transcendent words and experiences embodied in 3 Nephi, see Mark Mabry, Another Testament of Christ: Reflections of Christ, Salt Lake City: Deseret Book, 2009, and its companion DVD with the same title, which was filmed in Honduras and produced by Cameron Trejo.). To that one may also add: it is the inner sanctum of the Book of Mormon, a sacred and infinite template uniting time and all eternity (John W. Welch, “3 Nephi as the Holy of Holies of the Book of Mormon,” in Andrew C. Skinner and Gaye Strathearn eds., Third Nephi: An Incomparable Scripture, Provo: Maxwell Institute and Deseret Book, 2012, 31–32).

As President Ezra Taft Benson has said, “It is clear that 3 Nephi contains some of the most moving and powerful passages in all scripture. It testifies of Christ, his prophets, and the doctrines of salvation;” and he went on to encourage people, especially families, to read 3 Nephi and to “discuss its sacred contents.” (Ezra Taft Benson, “The Savior’s Visit to America,” Ensign, May 1987, 6).

This book of scripture is a book of literary and theological contrasts, between brilliant light and horrible darkness, death and life, the old and the new, and between prideful ambition and humble submission. Above all, this book, named after Christ’s chief disciple in the Nephite world, is a treasure trove of testimonies and teachings of the reality of the physical resurrection of Jesus Christ and of His victory over death and hell. His glorious triumph, which is the epitome of the plan of mercy and redemption in the Book of Mormon, is at the same time the supreme gift of joy and salvation to people everywhere.

While it may be easy at times to get bogged down in the details of scripture and to forget what these sacred texts are really about, 3 Nephi reminds readers that Christ and His coming are the “focal point” and the “supreme moment” of the entire Book of Mormon, and indeed of all human existence. Christ is humanity’s only hope of ever truly seeing, hearing, and understanding correctly. He is mankind’s only hope for healing. In the midst of the mayhem and destruction at the time of the crucifixion, Christ invited His beloved people to be converted and to allow Him to eternally heal them. 3 Nephi is a potent reminder of the power of Christ to bring sight, understanding, and healing to all the world.

11 And behold, I am the light and the life of the world; and I have drunk out of that bitter cup which the Father hath given me, and have glorified the Father in taking upon me the sins of the world, in the which I have suffered the will of the Father in all things from the beginning.

verse 11 Elder Jeffrey R. Holland said of this verse: “Fifty six words. The essence of his earthly mission. Obedience and loyalty to the will of the Father however bitter the cup or painful the price” (Christ and the New Covenant, 251).

“I am the light and life of the world” To review a discussion of the complete significance of this profound statement, please The Concept of Light in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 15.

“I have drunk out of that bitter cup which the Father hath given me” See Mosiah 15:7 which contains the phrase “the will of the Son being swallowed up in the will of the Father.” Thus, we learn that Christ’s submitting “even unto death” meant that he submitted to the will of the Father. Paul wrote, in referring to Christ’s Atonement, “. . . he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross” (Philippians 2:8). It is obvious that the Father orchestrated Jesus’s atoning sacrifice and death.

“[I] have glorified the Father in taking upon me the sins of the world” The Lord Jehovah was certainly speaking for himself as well as his Father when he said to Moses: “For behold, this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man” (Moses 1:39). Thus, the Savior has glorified the name of the Father and his own name by atoning for the sins of mankind (see 3 Nephi 11:11) and enabling men to glorify themselves (see 3 Nephi 19:29) (see also Isaiah 53:12; Luke 22:29; and D&C 132:31). In ways that perhaps are not completely clear, when you persist in obedience and inherit a celestial resurrection, you glorify the Father and the Son.

verses 10-11 The Son’s introduction of himself includes the following five important ideas: (1) The prophets have testified of me. (2) I am the light and life of the world. (3) I have drunk the bitter cup. (4) I have glorified the Father. (5) I have suffered the will of the Father in all things.

12 And it came to pass that when Jesus had spoken these words the whole multitude fell to the earth; for they remembered that it had been prophesied among them that Christ should show himself unto them after his ascension into heaven.

13 And it came to pass that the Lord spake unto them saying:

14 Arise and come forth unto me, that ye may thrust your hands into my side, and also that ye may feel the prints of the nails in my hands and in my feet, that ye may know that I am the God of Israel, and the God of the whole earth, and have been slain for the sins of the world.

verse 14 Note that the people are instructed first to “thrust your hands into my side.” To do this each person would place their hand inside his robe and place it on his chest near his heart. This was obviously a deeply intimate experience. Oh, that each of us may one day have that same intimate experience!

“I am the God of Israel” At this particular time, Israel is divided into three major branches: the Jews, the Nephites, and the lost tribes. In his resurrected body he has already ministered to the Jews (the forty days he spent with his Old World apostles), he is now ministering to the Nephites, and he will yet minister to the lost tribes of Israel so that each may know that he is their God (see 3 Nephi 17:4).

15 And it came to pass that the multitude went forth, and thrust their hands into his side, and did feel the prints of the nails in his hands and in his feet; and this they did do, going forth one by one until they had all gone forth, and did see with their eyes and did feel with their hands, and did know of a surety and did bear record, that it was he, of whom it was written by the prophets, that should come.

verse 15 Even though the power of the resurrection could have—and one day will—completely restore and make new the wounds of the crucifixion, Christ chose to retain these wounds for a purpose. In the last days at his second coming he will show those marks and prove that he was “wounded in the house of [his] friends.” The wounds in his hands, feet, and side are signs that in mortality painful things happen even to the pure and the perfect. They are signs that trials and tribulations are not evidence that God does not love us. It is the wounded Christ who comes to our rescue. That evidence of pain in mortality is undoubtedly intended to give courage to others who are also wounded by life, sometimes even “in the house of [their] friends.”

Since two thousand five hundred souls were present at this assembly (3 Nephi 17:25), no more than a brief contact would have been possible, and even that would have required some hours.

Here Jesus graphically and publicly demonstrates the reality of his resurrection and hence the reality of the resurrection of all men. Some three thousand years previously the prophet Enoch was told that a record (the Book of Mormon) would come out of the ground in the last days “to bear testimony of [the] Only Begotten; his resurrection from the dead; yea and also the resurrection of all men” (Moses 7:62).

16 And when they had all gone forth and had witnessed for themselves, they did cry out with one accord, saying:

17 Hosanna! Blessed be the name of the Most High God! And they did fall down at the feet of Jesus, and did worship him.

verse 17 Hosanna means “save now, we pray thee (or we beseech thee).” This expression is usually associated with the hope and expectation of the coming of Christ. This is the so-called hosanna shout. Its origins are traceable at least as far back as the Hallel, an ancient Jewish festival hymn. Latter-day Saints use the Hosanna Shout at temple dedications. Here the Nephites are using an expression of profound worship, respect, love and gratitude.

“they did fall down at the feet of Jesus, and did worship him” When Jesus Christ declared His true identity to the people of Nephi who were gathered around the temple, “the whole multitude fell to the earth; for they remembered that it had been prophesied among them that Christ should show himself unto them” (3 Nephi 11:12). Similarly, in this verse, after they had all gone forth and touched the wounds in His hands, feet, and side, they “did fall down at the feet of Jesus, and did worship him.” And when Jesus commanded Nephi to come forth, He “bowed himself before the Lord and did kiss his feet” (verse 19, emphasis added for all verses).

The act of falling at the feet of a ruler and even kissing the ground or his feet was a well-known form of worship in the ancient world called proskynesis (See Hugh Nibley, An Approach to the Book of Mormon, The Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, Volume 6, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and FARMS, 1988, 304 n. 22; Matthew L. Bowen, “They Came and Held Him by the Feet and Worshipped Him’: Proskynesis before Jesus in Its Biblical and Ancient Near Eastern Context,” Studies in the Bible and Antiquity 5, 2013: 63–68; Matthew L. Bowen, “They Came Forth and Fell Down and Partook of the Fruit of the Tree’: Proskynesis in 3 Nephi 11:12–19 and 17:9–10 and Its Significance,” in Third Nephi: An Incomparable Scripture, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, 2012, 107–108: “Proskynesis, very literally ‘a kissing in the presence of,’ is a term the Greek historian Herodotus (Histories 1.134) originally applied to the ancient Persian custom of ‘prostrating oneself before persons and kissing their feet or the hem of their garment [or] the ground.’ The word in its broadest sense denotes the ‘hierarchical prostration of inferior to superior,’ but in a narrower, cultic sense it signifies ‘formal submission in the presence of a being from the divine realm.’ Hence, proskynesis is widely used by scholars as an umbrella term for similar rites known from Egypt to the Far East, whereby deities, kings, and other persons deified or thought to belong to the divine realm were so acknowledged and revered.”). In an ancient Near Eastern letter, for example, a vassal showed respect to a Lord through phrases such as “[I am] your slave” and “the dust at your feet” and “I prostrate; at the feet of my king, my lord I fall” (Bowen, “They Came and Held Him,” 66). An ancient Egyptian liturgical text similarly declared, “As I kiss the ground, even so do I embrace Geb” (Bowen, “They Came and Held Him,” 68). According to Matthew L. Bowen, this text “prescribes proskynesis, including a ritual embrace of a god (Geb, the earth), as part of a ritualized theophany in a temple setting” (Bowen, “They Came and Held Him,” 66. For a treatment of throne-theophanies, see Blake T. Ostler, “The Throne-Theophany and Prophetic Commission in 1 Nephi: A Form-Critical Analysis,” BYU Studies 26, no. 4, 1986: 67–95).

Proskynesis was also known to the ancient Israelites (See Bowen, “They Came and Held Him,” 69–73. For an analysis of ritual prayer, including prostration, in Islam and its relationship with Judaic prayer, see Khaleel Mohammed, “The Foundation of Muslim Prayer,” Medieval Encounters 5, no. 19 1999: 17–28). For instance, in Joseph’s dreams, his brothers’ sheaves and also the sun, moon, and stars paid homage to him. This prompted his father to ask, “Shall I and thy mother and thy brethren indeed come to bow down ourselves to thee to the earth?” (Genesis 37:10) (See Brent D. Shaw, Bringing in the Sheaves: Economy and Metaphor in the Roman World, Toronto, ON: University of Toronto Press, 2013, 398 n. 44. For a treatment of Joseph, the son of Jacob, as a type of Christ, see Andrew C. Skinner, “Finding Jesus Christ in the Old Testament,” Ensign, June 2002, online at lds.org). Psalm 95:6 reads “O come, let us worship and bow down: let us kneel before the Lord our maker.

New Testament texts—such as Matthew, Mark, Luke, and Revelation—abundantly demonstrate that the early apostles and followers of Jesus viewed proskynesis as an appropriate mode of worshipping Jesus Christ both before and after His resurrection (Bowen, “They Came and Held Him,” 73–88; Stuart Bevan, “Proskynesis in the Synoptics: A Textual Analysis of προσκυνέω and Jesus,” Studia Antiqua 14, no. 1, 2015: 30–43).

Furthermore, demonstrations of falling to the earth in ritual prostration are evident in several Book of Mormon settings (in addition to 3 Nephi 11) (In addition to the examples of the tree of life and King Benjamin’s speech, numerous instances of proskynesis can be found in the Book of Mormon. See Matthew L. Bowen, “And Behold, They Had Fallen to the Earth”: An Examination of Proskynesis in the Book of Mormon,” Studia Antiqua 4, no. 1, 2005: 91–110). In Lehi’s dream of the tree of life, those who pressed forward and held to the rod of iron eventually “came forth and fell down and partook of the fruit of the tree” (1 Nephi 8:30, emphasis added). Bowen remarked, “The people of this third group are the true worshipers, and the tree of which they partake is functionally the true God, Jesus Christ” (Bowen, “And Behold, They Had Fallen,” 96).

When King Benjamin reported the words “delivered unto him by the angel,” he looked upon the multitude and saw that the people “had fallen to the earth And they had viewed themselves in their own carnal state, even less than the dust of the earth” (Mosiah 4:1–2). Hugh Nibley commented, “This was the kind of proskynesis at which Benjamin aimed! The proskynesis was the falling to the earth (literally, “kissing the ground”) in the presence of the king by which all the human race on the day of the coronation demonstrated its submission to divine authority; it was an un failing part of the Old World New Year’s rites as of any royal audience (Nibley, An Approach to the Book of Mormon, 304).

Exploring the meaning of proskynesis in both its Old World and Book of Mormon contexts can help readers better understand what this ritual demonstration meant to those who worshipped Jesus Christ at the temple in the land of Bountiful. For example, the phrase “[I am] . . . the dust at your feet” from the ancient Egyptian letter parallels the response of the people who, after hearing King Benjamin's speech, fell to the earth and considered themselves as "even less than the dust of the earth" (Mosiah 4:2) (To review the Egyptian letter, see note 2). Bowen rhetorically asked, "What is the lesson here? Since, as King Benjamin says, we "cannot say that [we] are even as much as the dust of the earth" (Mosiah 2:25), we are to "get down there and realize what [we] are," as Nibley puts it. King Benjamin revives the lessons from the biblical account of the fall and its name play on Adam: the man (ha-^adām, "humanity") was taken from ha-^adāmāh ("earth," "ground," "soil," Genesis 2:7; 3:19) (Bowen, "They Came Forth and Fell Down," 118).

Thus, by falling to the ground, those who worshiped Christ at Bountiful ritually signified that their bodies were created from the dust of the earth, that they were mortal and fallen, and that they were willingly humbling themselves in the presence of their Creator.

From a story in the New Testament, readers learn of a woman who washed the feet of Jesus with her tears, and "kissed his feet, and anointed them with the ointment" (Luke 7:38). Bowen explained, "Her physical proskynesis in kissing the feet of Jesus was a profound demonstration of the love of God and literally fulfilled the injunction of Psalm 2 to 'kiss the Son' or even (in an emended reading) to 'kiss his [Yahweh's] feet'" (Bowen, "They Came and Held Him," 82).

Likewise, when Nephi (who may well have been familiar with such language found in many of the Psalms) "bowed himself before the Lord and did kiss his feet" at the temple in Bountiful (3 Nephi 11:19), it can be seen as a prescribed act of devotion for Him whose feet had "trodden the winepress alone" (Isaiah 63:3, cf. Doctrine and Covenants 76:107; 88:106; 133:50), and whose feet bore the "prints of nails" of crucifixion (3 Nephi 11:14, cf. Doctrine and Covenants 6:37), and whose beautiful feet "bringeth good tidings of good" (Isaiah 52:7, cf. Mosiah 15:15–18; Romans 10:15; 3 Nephi 20:40).

In what can be seen as an act of proskynesis to His Father, Jesus Christ Himself submissively "fell on his face, and prayed" while suffering the agonies of the atonement in Gethsemane (Matthew 26:39). He also washed the feet of His apostles in an act of humility and service (see John 13:4–16). Those who fall at the feet of Him who "descended below all things" (Doctrine and Covenants 88:6) and "kiss his feet . . . [and] bathe his feet with their tears" (3 Nephi 17:10), show their willingness to follow His example of service, humility, and obedience.

Worshipful prostration is an enduring symbol of love and devotion for deity. Nephi taught that the "right way is to believe in Christ . . . wherefore ye must bow down before him, and worship him with all your might" (2 Nephi 25:29). In 3 Nephi 19, Jesus again went a little ways away from the large assembly that had gathered on His second day at the Temple of Bountiful, "and bowed himself to the earth," expressing profound gratitude to the Father (3 Nephi 19:19). Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon learned that before the throne of God “all things bow in humble reverence, and give him glory forever and ever” (Doctrine and Covenants 76:93).

Therefore, from the examples of those who worshipped Jesus Christ at the temple in Bountiful, readers can learn how to appropriately show reverence for the Lord when they eventually meet Him in person and behold His resurrected body. Of the eternal importance of bowing before our Lord and Master, Elder Neil L. Anderson has unambiguously testified, “I witness that Jesus Christ is the Savior of the world. He suffered and died for our sins and rose the third day. He is resurrected. In a future day, every knee will bow and every tongue confess that He is the Christ” (Neil L. Anderson, “What Thinks Christ of Me?” Ensign, May 2012, 114, online at lds.org).

Elder Neal A. Maxwell has beautifully taught that, while Christ rejoices in our genuine goodness and achievements, “any assessment of where we stand in relation to Him tells us that we do not stand at all! We kneel!” and soon “all flesh shall see Him together. All knees shall bow in His presence, and all tongues confess His name. Knees which never before have assumed that posture for that purpose will do so then—and promptly” (Neal A. Maxwell, “O, Divine Redeemer,” Ensign, November 1981, online at lds.org).

18 And it came to pass that he spake unto Nephi (for Nephi was among the multitude) and he commanded him that he should come forth.

verse 18 The prophet Nephi was “among the multitude” and had obviously not sought any special recognition or attention from the Savior.

19 And Nephi arose and went forth, and bowed himself before the Lord and did kiss his feet.

verse 19 What a sacred and choice privilege for Nephi! His entire ministry had been one of testifying of Jesus, and now he was able to worship him personally and demonstrate his adoration for him. We are reminded of the statement in general conference of Elder Bruce R. McConkie just days prior to his death:

I am one of his witnesses, and in a coming day I shall feel the nail marks in his hands and in his feet and shall wet his feet with my tears. But I shall not know any better than I know now that he is God’s Almighty Son, that he is our Savior and Redeemer, and that salvation comes in and through his atoning blood and in no other way (CR, April 1985, 12).

20 And the Lord commanded him that he should arise. And he arose and stood before him.

21 And the Lord said unto him: I give unto you power that ye shall baptize this people when I am again ascended into heaven.

verse 21 Here the Lord sets Nephi apart as mortal head of the Nephite church. Specifically, he gives to Nephi the power to baptize. This is the authority that Latter-day Saints usually associate with the Aaronic Priesthood. The reader may recall that following the preaching of Samuel, the Lamanite prophet, many did believe and went unto Nephi and were baptized (Helaman 16:3-4). If Nephi already had authority to baptize, why is it necessary for the Savior to give him that power yet again? Joseph Fielding Smith addressed a related question:

There is nothing strange in the fact that when the Lord came to the Nephites, Nephi was baptized and so was everybody else although they had been baptized before.

The Church among the Nephites before the coming of Christ was not in its fulness and was under the law of Moses. The Savior restored the fulness and gave to them all the ordinances and blessings of the gospel. Therefore, it actually became a new organization, and through baptism they came into it.

We have a similar condition in this dispensation. The prophet Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were baptized by command of the angel John the Baptist. Several others were baptized before the organization of the Church. However, on the day the Church was organized, all who had been previously baptized were baptized again, not for the remission of sins, but for entrance into the Church. In each case the reason was the same (Answers to Gospel Questions, volume 3, 205-06).

There is a principle demonstrated here. Just as baptism was needed following the establishment of the Savior's church on earth, even of those who had previously been baptized, so was a re-ordaining of the brethren to the priesthood. In addition to ordaining Nephi, the Lord will call eleven others and similarly ordain them (see the following verse). At the end of the day Jesus will also give these twelve the "power to give the Holy Ghost" (3 Nephi 18:37)—actually the gift of the Holy Ghost—and undoubtedly the authority was the higher priesthood, the Melchizedek Priesthood.

It is interesting to note that beginning with this verse and continuing for the next twenty-three verses, the word baptism or some form of that word is found some nineteen times attesting to the importance with which the Savior regarded that ordinance. If the reader wishes to review the full significance of the baptismal ordinance, see Baptism, the Ordinance that Brings Spiritual Growth in volume 1, chapter 18 of Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine.

22 And again the Lord called others, and said unto them likewise; and he gave unto them power to baptize. And he said unto them: On this wise shall ye baptize; and there shall be no disputations among you.

23 Verily I say unto you, that whoso repenteth of his sins through your words, and desireth to be baptized in my name, on this wise shall ye baptize them—

Behold, ye shall go down and stand in the water, and in my name shall ye baptize them.

24 And now behold, these are the words which ye shall say, calling them by name, saying:

25 Having authority given me of Jesus Christ, I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

26 And then shall ye immerse them in the water, and come forth again out of the water.

verse 26 The practice of baptism by total immersion did not begin with Christ's mortal ministry, rather long before his ministry (see Moses 6:64; Mosiah 18:14-16). Yet, part of the rich symbolism connected with this method of baptism is related to the death, burial, and resurrection of the Savior. Those who performed baptisms prior to Christ's mortal ministry knew and understood that symbolism.

The third and final period of an organized church of Jesus Christ in the Book of Mormon record will be established during Christ's visit (see a discussion of these three periods in the commentary for 2 Nephi 6:2).

27 And after this manner shall ye baptize in my name; for behold, verily I say unto you, that the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost are one; and I am in the Father, and the Father in me, and the Father and I are one.

verse 27 "the Father and I are one" Jesus had previously spoken of this type of "oneness" when he prayed to his Father that the apostles "may be one, as we are" (see John 17:11, 21-22).

28 And according as I have commanded you thus shall ye baptize. And there shall be no disputations among you, as there have hitherto been; neither shall there be disputations among you concerning the points of my doctrine, as there have hitherto been.

verse 28 We are not told the nature of the disputations that "have hitherto been" among the Nephites.

29 For verily, verily I say unto you, he that hath the spirit of contention is not of me, but is of the devil, who is the father of contention, and he stirreth up the hearts of men to contend with anger, one with another.

30 Behold, this is not my doctrine, to stir up the hearts of men with anger, one against another; but this is my doctrine, that such things should be done away.

verses 28-30 Brother Byron R. Merrill has provided us a helpful article, "There Was No Contention" (The Book of Mormon: Fourth Nephi Through Moroni, From Zion to Destruction, edited by Monte S. Nyman and Charles D. Tate, Jr., 167-83). His article will be utilized in the following discussion. The words contention or contend in scripture actually have two quite separate meanings.

1. In a more positive sense, they mean “to strive,” “to dispute earnestly,” or “to defend and preserve.” This meaning seems applicable in some modern revelation: “Contend thou, therefore, morning by morning; and day after day let thy warning voice go forth” (D&C 112:5). Similarly, see the command to “contend against no church, save it be the church of the devil” (D&C 18:20). Likewise, this meaning may be inferred when Jude admonishes us to “earnestly contend for the faith” (1:3) or when Paul says he was bold “to speak unto you the gospel of God with much contention” (1 Thessalonians 2:2).

2. In the Book of Mormon, contention always carries a negative meaning—that of fighting or asserting or defending a position with the added element of anger. Contention is therefore related to disputation. Heated passions play a part. It is this meaning that applies in these verses and in other verses in the Book of Mormon (2 Nephi 26:32; Helaman 1:2, 18; 3:19; Mosiah 19:3; Alma 50:26; 19:28; 22:22; 3 Nephi 7:7 and several others). The word contention is often associated with wars. The absence of contention in the Book of Mormon is mentioned as a quality of a Zion or heavenly people.

To properly understand the concept of contention, it is necessary to understand the negative underpinning of contention which is anger. Anger is “a feeling of sudden and strong displeasure and antagonism directed against the cause of an assumed wrong or injury” (Funk and Wagnells). Anger is a conscious and split-second judgment that an injustice or insult has been committed and it involves a choice as to how one’s reaction will be expressed—the reaction is expressed with hostility rather than forbearance or charity. Anger is a conscious and deliberate act. The Lord will provide the celestial law to the Nephites regarding the phenomenon of anger: “Whosoever is angry with his brother shall be in danger of his judgment” (3 Nephi 12:22). In this statement by the Savior, he is unequivocal in his condemnation. He does not discuss any particular types of anger such as “quick to anger,” or “cannot control anger,” or “continues in anger.” Even the idea that one may be “angry without a cause,” that appears in the King James Version, is missing in the Nephite version. The Savior simply warns against anger of any type.

This is difficult doctrine since in some situations of obvious injustice or thoughtlessness, it would seem that anger is warranted. Reference has already been made to the idea that anger is a result of judgments quickly made and a hostile reaction chosen. We have been commanded to “judge not unrighteously” (JST, Matthew 7:2). Also the Lord said, “I, the Lord, will forgive whom I will forgive, but of you it is required to forgive all men” (D&C 64:10). But the realities of life often prompt us and urge us to judge people by their words or actions. We are actually not in a position to judge others’ motivations or render a verdict on the status of their hearts. Only the Lord can do that.

The Lord taught the prophet Samuel, “For the Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart” (1 Samuel 16:7).

The Lord’s anger or wrath is often referred to in scripture, and it occurs in the context of his exercising a righteous judgment when his people have broken covenants with him. His anger is a feeling of strong displeasure and is obviously warranted and appropriate. We mortals, on the other hand, are simply not in a position to make judgments. Therefore, human anger is not acceptable.

On rare exceptions, there may be moments when the Lord’s Spirit moves us to know his will and to act in his behalf. The Lord has indicated we should “reprove betimes with sharpness,” but only in those rare instances “when moved upon by the Holy Ghost” (D&C 121:43). “Betimes” implies in a timely manner—sufficiently early to do some good. “Sharpness” is probably most aptly interpreted to mean in a focused, clear, specific way not condemning the individual as a whole. McConkie, Millet, and Top, in their book Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, Volume IV, comment on the word “sharpness” and add a different slant to its meaning: “Testifying with ‘sharpness,’ as Moroni is here using the word, does not mean he was being contentious or mean-spirited. It means direct and to the point. It means not couched in soft, comfortable language but focused on what needs to be said more than on how to say it” (359).

When we feel anger, we declare ourselves judge, jury, and often, in the flash of the moment, executioner. Perhaps we could paraphrase the Lord’s directive to us regarding this matter in these terms: “I, the Lord, will feel anger [i.e., render judgment] toward whom I will; but of you it is required not to feel anger toward anyone.”

The book of Proverbs tells us that “only by pride cometh contention” (13:10). Certainly, in a prideful, worldly, “natural man” setting, competition abounds. In that setting often when someone wins, someone else loses. This type of setting certainly tends to encourage the expression of anger. In an eternal setting, no one need lose. The irony in this latter setting is that a man “wins” only by helping others to “win.” Elder Boyd Packer wrote:

In this life, we are constantly confronted with a spirit of competition. Teams contest one against another in an adversary relationship in order that one will be chosen a winner. We come to believe that wherever there is a winner there must also be a loser. To believe that is to be misled. In the eyes of the Lord, everyone may be a winner. Now it is true that we must earn it; but if there is competition in his work, it is not with another soul—it’s with our own former selves (That All May be Edified, 84).

31 Behold, verily, verily, I say unto you, I will declare unto you my doctrine.

32 And this is my doctrine, and it is the doctrine which the Father hath given unto me; and I bear record of the Father, and the Father beareth record of me, and the Holy Ghost beareth record of the Father and me; and I bear record that the Father commandeth all men, everywhere, to repent and believe in me.

verse 32 “this is my doctrine” The reader may wish to review the introductory commentary for 2 Nephi 31 regarding the doctrine of Christ. Here the Savior himself will summarize the essence of his gospel or his doctrine.

“which the Father hath given unto me” The Savior reminds us that although we refer to the gospel or doctrine of Jesus Christ, this gospel or plan of salvation did not originate with Jesus, but is indeed his Father’s.

33 And whoso believeth in me, and is baptized, the same shall be saved; and they are they who shall inherit the kingdom of God.

verse 33 The prophet Joseph Smith stated simply, “This eternal truth settles the question of all men’s religion. A man may be saved . . . in the terrestrial kingdom, or in the telestial kingdom, but he can never see the celestial kingdom of God without being born of water and the Spirit” (TPJS, 12).

34 And whoso believeth not in me, and is not baptized, shall be damned.

verse 34 For a brief discussion of what it means to be damned see the commentary for 2 Nephi 9:24.

35 Verily, verily, I say unto you, that this is my doctrine, and I bear record of it from the Father; and whoso believeth in me believeth in the Father also; and unto him will the Father bear record of me, for he will visit him with fire and with the Holy Ghost.

verse 35 “he will visit him with fire and with the Holy Ghost” For an explanation of the concept of the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost, see the commentary for 3 Nephi 19:13-14. Also, see Baptism, the Ordinance that Brings Spiritual Growth in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 18.

36 And thus will the Father bear record of me, and the Holy Ghost will bear record unto him of the Father and me; for the Father, and I, and the Holy Ghost are one.

verse 36 “for the Father, and I, and the Holy Ghost are one” We have been accused by the Evangelical (conservative) Protestants of having “Trinity Doctrine” in the Book of Mormon. They maintain that God is somehow simultaneously three and one, and they have no doubt because they feel the Bible and the Book of Mormon both tell them so. We clearly understand that the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost are three separate and distinct individuals. The threeness of God is quite literally an article of faith for the Latter-day Saints: “We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost” (Article of Faith One).

We have neither reason nor interest in arguing against either the threeness of God or the unity of God as witnessed in the Bible or the Book of Mormon. We accept all of these scriptures. The testimony of the Three Witnesses to the Book of Mormon concludes with the line “And the honor be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost, which is one God. Amen.” The Book of Mormon itself reads at 2 Nephi 31:21: “And now, behold, this is the doctrine of Christ, and the only and true doctrine of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, which is one God, without end. Amen.” Notice that these texts emphasize the unity of the Godhead by using a singular verb for the plural subject: the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost is one God. Also, in the Book of Mormon, the prophet Abinadi declares, “God himself shall come down among the children of men, and shall redeem his people. And because he dwelleth in flesh he shall be called the Son of God, and having subjected the flesh to the will of the Father, being the Father and the Son—the Father, because he was conceived by the power of God; and the Son, because of the flesh; thus becoming the Father and Son—and they are one God, yea, the very Eternal Father of heaven and of earth” (Mosiah 15:1-4). Additional LDS scripture testifying to the threeness and oneness of God can be found in Alma 11:26-29, 44, Mormon 7:7, and in D&C 20:21-28.

That the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are one God is a paramount doctrine of the Book of Mormon. We have always believed in the simultaneous oneness and threeness of God.

We also believe that the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit are separate and distinct persons. We can accept the formula of “one God in three persons.” However, we believe that the oneness of these does not imply an ontological oneness (literally one person)—one being. This idea is a creedal addition rather than a biblical affirmation. That is, it originated in the post-biblical creeds (Nicea AD 325, Constantinople AD 381, and Chalcedon AD 451). Rather, their oneness is but a oneness of mind, purpose, power, and intent, and perhaps there are aspects of their oneness we don’t even comprehend. The Godhead consists of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, “and these three are one” (1 John 5:7). The three persons are one God. What is not said in the Bible, but is said at Nicea and is rejected by Mormons, is that these three persons are ontologically one being.

Latter-day Saints believe the biblical concept of “oneness” or of “being one” is revealed at John 17:21-23, Romans 12:5, 1 Corinthians 12:12-13, Galatians 3:28, etc., where the individual disciples can also be “one” in the Father and the Son, or “one” in Christ, or even “one” with each other in Christ—though still remaining separate beings with separate and individual bodies. Mormons accept John 14:11 as much as Evangelicals do: “Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me: or else believe me for the very works’ sake.” But 14:11 should probably be read together with 17:21-22, which illustrates the nature of their oneness: “That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one.” This cannot imply ontological oneness or “co-inherence,” (an Evangelical Protestant term) since the disciples, who are indisputably separate and individual beings, can also be one in the Father and the Son in the same way that the Father and Son are one in each other. And this is not a philosophical extrapolation from the text using nonbiblical terms formulated centuries later. It’s what the text actually says!

Latter-day Saints are trinitarians in the sense that they truly believe in God the Father, in God the Son, and in God the Holy Spirit, and also in that they believe these three are one God. But they are not trinitarians in the later creedal sense as defined at Nicea and Chalcedon because those creeds imposed nonbiblical concepts on the biblical data, and they used nonbiblical terms—trinity, homoousios (one essence or one substance), consubstantial (of one substance), ungenerated (not produced by procreation), indivisible, and so forth—in doing it.

37 And again I say unto you, ye must repent, and become as a little child, and be baptized in my name, or ye can in nowise receive these things.

38 And again I say unto you, ye must repent, and be baptized in my name, and become as a little child, or ye can in nowise inherit the kingdom of God.

verses 37-38 The phrase “as a little child” implies the antithesis of the natural man. The natural man, of course, cannot comprehend things of the Spirit (1 Corinthians 2:14).

39 Verily, verily, I say unto you, that this is my doctrine, and whoso buildeth upon this buildeth upon my rock, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against them.

verse 39 “this is my doctrine, and whoso buildeth upon this buildeth upon my rock, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against them” The word “doctrine” comes from the Latin word doctrina, which means “teaching” (See “doctrine,” and “doctrina,” at Wiktionary: The Free Online Dictionary, online at Wiktionary.org. On the Sermon on the Mount as containing much of the authoritative doctrine or didache of Jesus, see Matthew 7:28-29, and John W. Welch, Illuminating the Sermon on the Mount and the Sermon at the Temple, Provo: FARMS, 1999, 11-12). The equivalent term in the Greek New Testament is didache, which comes from a root meaning, “established teaching, especially a ‘summarized’ body of respected teaching” (See Strong’s Concordance, g1322, didaché, online at biblehub.com). When Christ came to Book of Mormon peoples in the New World, He focused on His “doctrine” and said, “whoso buildeth upon this buildeth upon my rock, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against them” (3 Nephi 11:39).

The person who “buildeth upon my rock” has his life anchored to Christ.

40 And whoso shall declare more or less than this, and establish it for my doctrine, the same cometh of evil, and is not built upon my rock; but he buildeth upon a sandy foundation, and the gates of hell stand open to receive such when the floods come and the winds beat upon them.

verses 39-40 “And whoso shall declare more or less than this” We in the Church never need equivocate about the fact that our Church is the only true church upon the earth (Ephesians 4:5-6). Elder Bruce R. McConkie wrote:

That there is and can only be one gospel—one Church, one plan of salvation, one true religion—is as self-evident as any truth known to man. There can no more be two true gospels or two true churches than there can be two true and differing scientific facts. Truth is truth. And truth and salvation and the gospel all are ordained of God. They are what they are; and they are not what they are not. Men either have the truths of salvation or they do not; they either possess the gospel, which is the plan of salvation, or they do not. . .

Anyone in heaven or on earth, in time or eternity, in Paul’s day or ours, anyone who preaches any gospel other than the true one [is accursed]. Why? Because there is no salvation in a false religion. There is no saving power in a man-made system of salvation. . . And any man—whether mortal or immortal, whether man or angel—who preaches any system other than the very one ordained by Deity, leads men astray and keeps them from gaining celestial salvation (Doctrinal New Testament Commentary 2:457-59).

Christ himself is the rock upon which we must build. As we come to believe in him and his teachings then we build upon the rock of Christ so that the gates of hell shall not prevail against us. This concept was taught previously by Helaman to his two sons, Nephi and Lehi: “And now, my sons, remember, remember that it is upon the rock of our Redeemer, who is Christ, the Son of God, that ye must build your foundation; that when the devil shall send forth his might winds, yea, his shafts in the whirlwind, yea, when all his hail and his mighty storm shall beat upon you, it shall have no power over you to drag you down to the gulf of misery and endless wo, because of the rock upon which ye are built, which is a sure foundation, a foundation whereon if men build they cannot fall” (Helaman 5:12).

One might wonder if Helaman had obtained this concept from the writings on the plates of brass and whether this concept was once also found in the Old Testament. Could it be that Jesus was quoting from other revelations he had given to Old Testament or Nephite prophets when he gave this great sermon on the Mount of Beatitudes and in Bountiful? It seems possible he was.

Neal E. Lambert has pointed out an interesting pattern in the words of the Savior during this first day of his Nephite ministry (“The Symbolic Unity of Christ’s Ministry in 3 Nephi,” in The Book of Mormon: 3 Nephi 9-30, This Is My Gospel, 196-97). Brother Lambert divides the first day into three segments: first, his appearing and establishing his doctrine; second, his preaching, in which he articulates the application of that doctrine; and third, his demonstrating the blessings of his gospel. Each of these three segments concludes with the same rhetorical figure—that of building upon the rock. This verse, then, marks the end of the first segment. The conclusions of the other two segments are recognizable by the metaphor of the “rock” and the “sandy foundation” (see 3 Nephi 14:24-27 and 3 Nephi 18:12-13).

41 Therefore, go forth unto this people, and declare the words which I have spoken, unto the ends of the earth.

verse 41 A charge to the missionaries!

3 Nephi Chapter 12

Scripture Mastery

3 Nephi 12-14 (compare Matthew 5-7) Jesus's sermon at the temple in Bountiful

3 Nephi 12:48 (Matthew 5:48) I would that ye should be perfect even as I, or your Father who is in heaven is perfect.

The Savior's Sermon on the Mount in Matthew 5-7 has been considered by many to be the most influential and important text in all of Christianity. Chapters 12 through 14 of 3 Nephi contain an account of essentially the same sermon, this time delivered to the righteous Nephites at the temple in Bountiful. We may thus refer to this sermon in the Book of Mormon as Jesus's Sermon at the Temple or the Sermon in Bountiful. We will later learn that less than one percent of all those things taught by Jesus could be recorded in the Book of Mormon (3 Nephi 26:6). The importance of his Sermon at the Temple is thus obvious since considerable space is here devoted by the abridger Mormon to this sermon. As a covenant-making people, we Latter-day Saints take upon ourselves the obligation to emulate the Savior in our personal lives and thus commit ourselves to become more like him. Here in this sermon we encounter much material that helps to define our divine model.

Some have argued that the similarities between the Sermon on the Mount in the New Testament and the "Sermon at the Temple" in Bountiful in the Book of Mormon are evidence that Joseph Smith simply plagiarized from the Bible (For responses to such an argument, see John W. Welch, "Approaching New Approaches," Review of Books on the Book of Mormon 6, no. 1, 1994: 152–168; A. Don Sorenson, "The Problem of the Sermon on the Mount and 3 Nephi," FARMS Review 16, no. 2, 2004: 117–148).

John W. Welch has observed:

Ever since the publication of the Book of Mormon, one of the standard criticisms raised by those seeking to discredit the book has been the assertion that it plagiarizes the King James Version of the Bible, and the chief instance of alleged plagiarism is the Sermon on the Mount in 3 Nephi 12-14. Mark Twain quipped that the book of Mormon contains passages "smouched from the New Testament and no credit given." Reverend M.T. Lamb, who characterized the Book of Mormon as "verbose, blundering, stupid," viewed 3 Nephi 12-14 as a mere duplication of the Sermon on the Mount "word for word" and saw "no excuse for this lack of originality and constant repetition of the Bible," for "we have all such passages already in the [Bible], and God never does unnecessary things." "Careful examination proves it to be an unprincipled plagiarist" (John W. Welch, Illuminating the Sermon at the Temple & Sermon on the Mount, [Copublished by FARMS: Provo, Utah and Deseret Book: Salt Lake City, Utah], 125-26).

There are several elements present in the 3 Nephi text that distinguish it from the version in Matthew. These differences are significant and set it apart as a distinct and powerful testament of its own. For instance, in this setting Jesus declared that the law had been fulfilled, instead of pointing towards a future fulfillment (3 Nephi 12:18; cf. Matthew 5:18). He also taught that as a glorified being, he was perfect like the Father (3 Nephi 12:48; cf. Matthew 5:48), and thus omitted “thy kingdom come” in the Lord’s Prayer (See the commentary for 3 Nephi 13:10). He also specifically spoke of the Nephite “senine” instead of the Jewish “farthing” (n Alma 11:7, the senine appears as the smallest gold measure in Alma 11:5-13. For a more extensive elaboration and additional examples, see John W. Welch, Illuminating the Sermon at the Temple and Sermon on the Mount, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1999, 125–150).

It would seem that Jesus delivered this same or a similar sermon on other occasions in the Old World. In addition to 3 Nephi 12-14 and Matthew 5-7 (and JST Matthew 5-7) a similar, but shorter, discourse is reported by Luke—Luke 6:17-49—and is commonly called the Sermon on the Plain. The teachings of the Sermon on the Mount were an important set of teachings, which are likely older than the Gospel of Matthew itself (See, for example, Hans Dieter Betz, Essays on the Sermon on the Mount, trans. L. L. Welborn, Philadelphia, PA: Fortress Press, 1985, 55–70; Hans Dieter Betz, The Sermon on the Mount, Hermeneia—A Critical and Historical Commentary on the Bible, Minneapolis, MN: Fortress Press, 1995, 70–80; Alfred M. Perry, “The Framework of the Sermon on the Mount,” Journal of Biblical Literature 54, 1935: 103–115; Georg Strecker, The Sermon on the Mount: An Exegetical Commentary, trans. O. C. Dean Jr., Nashville: Abingdon, 1988, 55–56, 63, 67–68, 72). It is therefore not surprising that they are presented in various writings and settings.

The exact relationship between the biblical text of the Sermon on the Mount and the Sermon on the Plain texts is debated (See discussion in Neil J. McEleney, “The Beatitudes of the Sermon on the Mount/Plain,” Catholic Biblical Quarterly 43, no. 1, 1981: 7–8; Robert A. Guelich, “The Antitheses of Matthew V. 21–48: Traditional and/or Redactional?” New Testament Studies 22, 1976: 446–449), but they arguably represent two occasions in which Jesus propounded similar teachings but a smaller set to the crowd out on a field.

The two versions in the New Testament (the Sermon on the Mount and the Sermon on the Plain) have notable differences. For example, in the Luke account, Jesus states the Beatitudes differently, pronouncing his words directly to the poor, the hungry, and so forth (“Blessed be ye poor . . . Blessed are ye that hunger now,” Luke 6:20–21) instead of indirectly as in the Matthean version (“Blessed are the poor in spirit . . . Blessed are they which do hunger,” Matthew 5:3, 6). Also, in the Sermon on the Plain all of the material in Matthew 6 is omitted. John W. Welch noted, “Missing from this speech in Luke are all of the elements that one would expect to be reserved for the closer circle of disciples” (Welch, Illuminating the Sermon, 222). The different settings may very well be what lies behind the differences. One was given on a “plain”—an open space where anyone might pass by. The other was given upon a “mountain”—perhaps symbolic of the “mountain of the Lord” (Isaiah 2:2) and synonymous with the temple (John W. Welch, The Sermon on the Mount in Light of the Temple, Burlington, VT: Ashgate, 2009, 15–39).

In our commentary for 3 Nephi 12-14, we will discuss several additional important differences between these verses and the Matthew 5-7 version. If Joseph Smith had wished to simply copy the Sermon on the Mount into the Book of Mormon record, he could have done so. We will discover, however, rational and sensible differences which render it unwarranted to speak of the Sermon at the Temple as a mere plagiarism of the Sermon on the Mount. The differences are themselves a testimony as to the authenticity of the Book of Mormon as an independent and distinct record. Some of these differences may be explained by the setting of the Sermon at the Temple. Here the resurrected Jesus appears to the righteous survivors of a fierce storm and major earthquake in the Western Hemisphere which had destroyed the wicked from among them. They had gathered at the temple in the land Bountiful. These were a people more prepared to receive Christ’s specific instructions than those who listened to his Sermon on the Mount. The Book of Mormon account thus contains the calling of the twelve and the performing of ordinances for those people prepared for baptism. The level of preparedness of these Book of Mormon people will be attested to by the two hundred years of peace and righteousness that will follow Christ’s visit.

Many who have studied Jesus’s Sermon on the Mount in the Bible (Matthew 5-7) have noticed that it seems fragmented. Does the Sermon on the Mount have a single theme or logic, or is it indeed a haphazard collection of unrelated sayings? There have been several theories among secular scholars as to how one might tie the Savior’s sermon into a single unified whole.

Some assume that the sermon is intentionally a potpourri of widely diverse topics from which anyone may pick and chose at his will. They may pull out this piece and that without any regard for the original context. A common teaching in the Christian world is that this sermon was not delivered by the Savior on a single occasion, rather it is “made up of aphorisms, maxims, and illustrations which were remembered and treasured out of many discourses” (Interpreters Bible, volume 1, 279). Further, it has been suggested by secular scholars that the Sermon on the Mount is the literary work of the gospel writer Matthew. It has been noted that Matthew cited many teachings that appear in very different settings in the other synoptic gospels. Perhaps, some scholars suggest, Matthew simply redacted, or edited and arranged, all these teachings and created a hypothetical single sermon delivered by Jesus. We know that this is not the case, since Jesus in 3 Nephi 12-14 delivers basically the same sermon as contained in Matthew 5-7. Also, Jesus will later observe that he had given a similar sermon in Palestine before he ascended to his Father (3 Nephi 15:1).

Why, then, does the sermon appear to be fragmented? There are some theories among LDS scholars as to how the sermon may be tied together. Those that seem to have significant merit include:

1. It is suggested that the fragmented nature of the sermon is due to the fact that different parts of the sermon were intended for different audiences. The first part (3 Nephi 12:1 through 13:24) was addressed to the multitude assembled in the land Bountiful. The second part (3 Nephi 13:25-34) was directed to the twelve disciples or apostles whom he had chosen. The final part (3 Nephi 14) was again delivered to the multitude.

2. Some have suggested that the main purpose of the sermon was Jesus's announcement of the fulfillment of the law of Moses and the coming of a new and higher law. It is certainly true that with the Savior's visit to them, the Book of Mormon people are about to make the transition between the old testament and the new testament—between the “old” covenant and the “new” covenant. The old covenant, simply stated, was that if Israel would obey the law of Moses including the ten commandments, they would receive the blessings promised to Abraham and his seed. Jesus had explained during his ministry in the old world that he had not come to destroy the old covenant but rather to “fulfill” or complete it (Matthew 5:17). Under the terms of the new covenant, more would be expected of those who live it. It would be more rigorous and demanding. But the spiritual rewards or blessings for obedient adherence to the new covenant would be correspondingly greater, even exaltation in the celestial kingdom of God. And where do we find the specific terms of this exciting new covenant? Perhaps there is nowhere in scripture that they are more clearly spelled out than in Christ's discourse recorded in 3 Nephi 12-14.

3. Brother John W. Welch has suggested that the sermon is really a “temple text” or the text of an ordinance or series of ordinances during which those righteous Nephites there assembled actually had a sacred temple experience wherein they entered into covenants with the Lord and received an endowment of heavenly power and blessings analogous to that which we may receive in the temples today. He sees the sermon as more than an ethical or didactic discourse. It is, he believes, a sacred ordinance designed to bind its hearers in sacred covenants. He points out that other such texts are found in the scriptures such as Jacob's speech at the temple in the city of Nephi (Jacob 2-3) and King Benjamin's speech at the temple of Zarahemla (Mosiah 1-6) (John W. Welch, Illuminating the Sermon at the Temple & Sermon on the Mount, copublished by FARMS: Provo, Utah and Deseret Book: Salt Lake City, Utah). Brother Welch acknowledges the differences between our present-day temple experience and that had by the Nephites in 3 Nephi. He writes:

I do not think that the Nephite temple experience was exactly the same as today's—which itself changes somewhat from time to time. For example, the sequence in which the laws of obedience, sacrifice, chastity, consecration, and so forth are presented is not exactly the same in both, although it is quite close. And the Sermon at the Temple mainly reports the ordinances, laws, commandments, ritual elements, and covenants; little background drama or creation narrative is given. Moreover, the Sermon may have functioned in several respects more to prepare people for specific features of the temple or other ordinances than to conduct them through the experience itself.

It seems clear that in both the Sermon on the Mount and the Sermon at the Temple, Jesus introduced to his disciples the new order of the gospel, which they eventually accepted by way of oaths and covenants, with promises and penalties.

4. Robert A. Cloward sees the sermon as a missionary training sermon (“The Savior’s Missionary Training Sermon in 3 Nephi” in The Book of Mormon: 3 Nephi 9-30, This Is My Gospel, 119-36). Brother Cloward postulates that the Sermon on the Mount in the Old World and much of the Sermon at Bountiful in the New world were both intended primarily for his apostles and not for the multitudes (see Matthew 5:1-2; 3 Nephi 13:25), and the sermons were intended primarily to teach his special witnesses what they needed to know before they went out to preach the gospel to the world. The Joseph Smith Translation version of Matthew 7:1 provides some insight: “Now these are the words which Jesus taught his disciples that they should say unto the people.” After the Savior ascended for the last time from his personal ministry among the Nephites, the Nephite disciples launched an intensive missionary effort (3 Nephi 26:17-21) that culminated in the conversion of all the people in the land and the establishment of a church which enjoyed nearly two hundred years of peace (4 Nephi 1:1-3). Brother Cloward sees the beatitudes as the Savior’s teachings to his disciples as to what characteristics they would encounter in their investigators.

How can we explain the use of the King James language of the biblical sermon in 3 Nephi, and what does this teach us about the translation process used by the Prophet Joseph? Do we not believe that our King James biblical version is a seventeenth century translation of a corrupted Greek text of the Savior’s sermon? Then why do the two versions share so many similarities? There is no evidence that Joseph utilized the King James Bible in the process of translating the Book of Mormon (see The Process of Translating the Book of Mormon, in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 2, Appendix A). The words Joseph dictated into the Book of Mormon text were provided him by the Lord through the truly miraculous and remarkable process of translation. Just why the Lord chose to use much of the wording of the King James scholars is unclear at this time. We may simply speculate that the Lord wished to use language familiar to Joseph and his contemporaries.

The Beatitudes. 3 Nephi 12:1-12 contain the section of the Sermon at the Temple (compare Matthew 5:3-12) we refer to as the Beatitudes. The word “beatitude” means a perfect state of happiness or blessedness. The word “blessed,” which is translated from the Greek makarios, is rich word which signified a sublime state of well-being. It has been alternatively translated, “Oh, the happiness of” or “Oh, how happy are they.” Perhaps this state of blessedness refers to a state of sanctification wherein an individual is ready and qualified to enter the celestial heaven. Or, perhaps we don’t have to wait until the judgment to receive the tangible rewards of obedience to the gospel. It is possible that we may achieve a “blessed” state here in this mortal existence. This will likely come as we are blessed to feel the presence of the Lord through the influence of the Holy Ghost. We will be endowed with spiritual confidence, as our faith grows and turns to spiritual hope—see “The Fruits of Faith” in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 11, Other Notes on Faith.

The Beatitudes are certain specific instructions in which Jesus teaches how a man may attain a state of perfection and eternal happiness or blessedness. Christ’s audience is given a glimpse of the heights to which they may rise. If they are obedient to the laws which he is about to teach them (3 Nephi 12:19-20), their inheritance will be the kingdom of heaven and the earth. They will have peace, comfort, and mercy. They will see God and be filled with the Holy Ghost. And, they will be called the children of God. They may in fact become gods.

The repeated use of the second person you or ye (recall that “you” is singular and “ye” is plural) in verses 1-2 suggests that the blessings and promises in this chapter were bestowed upon each Nephite gathered there, much as a ritual or ordinance blessing would be bestowed.

It is hoped that the student will discover that Jesus’s sermon was not simply spliced naively into the text of the Book of Mormon. Rather, its presence here is not only appropriate but also essential.

1 And it came to pass that when Jesus had spoken these words unto Nephi, and to those who had been called, (now the number of them who had been called, and received power and authority to baptize, was twelve) and behold, he stretched forth his hand unto the multitude, and cried unto them, saying: Blessed are ye if ye shall give heed unto the words of these twelve whom I have chosen from among you to minister unto you, and to be your servants; and unto them I have given power that they may baptize you with water; and after that ye are baptized with water, behold, I will baptize you with fire and with the Holy Ghost; therefore blessed are ye if ye shall believe in me and be baptized, after that ye have seen me and know that I am.

verse 1 The Sermon at Bountiful contains two new beatitudes not found in the Matthew account. The first is contained in this verse. It says essentially, “Blessed are those who give heed to the teachings of their ordained leaders and who are baptized and have faith in Christ.” The second new beatitude is found in the following verse. It is of note that both of these new beatitudes are included in Joseph Smith’s inspired revision of Matthew 5—JST Matthew 5.

“I will baptize you with fire and with the Holy Ghost” As has just been mentioned in the commentary for 3 Nephi 11:35 above, the concept of baptism of fire is explained in the commentary for 3 Nephi 19:13-14 and in Baptism, the Ordinance that Brings Spiritual Growth in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 1, chapter 18. Note the related expression in the following verse, “. . . for they shall be visited with fire and with the Holy Ghost, and shall receive a remission of their sins.”

One important difference between the Sermon on the Mount in the gospel of Matthew and the Sermon at the temple is that Matthew’s account gives no clue as to how Christ’s followers were organized ecclesiastically or about any institutional procedures or relationships. This has led many secular scholars to regard it as a code of private conduct that is quite independent of any religious society or organization. The Sermon at the temple, on the other hand, has much to say. In this verse for example, Christ refers to his twelve disciples and the need to come unto him by baptism and receive the Holy Ghost. It is clear that the Beatitudes are given primarily for the saints, for members of the Church of Jesus Christ who have come out of the world, put behind them the world, received the gospel ordinances, accepted and received the Lord’s anointed servants, and committed themselves to Christ and his kingdom.

Although the twelve that Jesus called and ordained will be referred to as “disciples” throughout 3 Nephi, it is clear that they were apostles, special witnesses with apostolic authority.

verses 2-12 Before considering that part of the Savior’s sermon we call the beatitudes, let us briefly consider the proper interrelationship between man’s self, God, and other men. We will avoid here a consideration of this interrelationship from the perspective of the evil or wicked natural man (the “telestial man”) who would be inclined to ignore God and take advantage of others. Rather we will include a consideration of this interrelationship only from the perspective of the honorable or “terrestrial” natural man and the “celestial” man who is characteristically lacking in natural man characteristics.

The terrestrial man’s view of this relationship is basically one of equity and fairness. He realizes that he is not entitled to more than his fair share, but he will certainly have that share which is rightly his. He realizes that he must look out for himself and do it vigorously because no one else is apt to stick up for him. He must insist on fairness and justice for himself in all situations. Other men are likely to take more than is fair, and hence constant watchfulness is appropriate and necessary. In all of this he takes his cue from God who is also fair and just. In his insisting on justice in the affairs of this world, he feels vindicated and justified, as he knows that God is also just and fair. He feels that God applauds his efforts in enforcing justice in all situations.

The celestial man lives, in some measure, not for the sake of this mortal life, but in consideration of his eternal future. He is constantly aware of God’s great love for him and his utter dependence on God for his eternal welfare. He is so profoundly aware of and grateful for God's goodness, mercy, and blessings that his only thought is to do everything he can to make others aware of these great blessings. He yearns to "share the wealth." He is keenly aware of his own selfishness and other frailties and shortcomings which awareness adds to his gratitude to God since he knows that God accepts him as he is. He also sees these same shortcomings in others but is inclined to be sympathetic and tolerant of these failings in others. Out of gratitude to the Lord, his wont is to overlook the ubiquitous selfishness of others. He yearns for these others to succeed eternally in spite of their human failings. If he could, he would hide the sins of others from the Lord; he would become their advocate before the Lord. He tends to look beyond the weaknesses of others.

In the Sermon at the temple, and particularly in the beatitudes, the Lord spells out the celestial standard of these key interrelationships—those between self and God and self and others. Generally, in the beatitudes the Lord emphasizes different specific aspects of the ideal or celestial interrelationships among self, God, and others.

2 And again, more blessed are they who shall believe in your words because that ye shall testify that ye have seen me, and that ye know that I am. Yea, blessed are they who shall believe in your words, and come down into the depths of humility and be baptized, for they shall be visited with fire and with the Holy Ghost, and shall receive a remission of their sins.

verse 2 "more blessed are they who shall believe in your words, and come down into the depths of humility and be baptized" Here is the second "new" beatitude not contained in the Matthew account.

"shall receive a remission of their sins" Here is a reminder that a man's sins are not remitted or "washed away" by baptism. Rather they are remitted or burned out of his soul by the Spirit of God in response to that man's striving to repent. "For the gate by which ye should enter is repentance and baptism by water; and then cometh a remission of your sins by fire and by the Holy Ghost" (2 Nephi 31:17).

3 Yea, blessed are the poor in spirit who come unto me, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

verse 3 The "poor in spirit" are those who sense their estrangement and emptiness and realize their utter dependence upon the Lord. The poverty referred to here is that of the man who is fully conscious of the inadequacy of all human resources. A modern translation, the Godspeed Bible, renders this phrase, "Happy are those that feel their spiritual need."

Those who are truly "poor in spirit" are willing to submit completely to the teachings of the Savior. They are as little children, eager to surrender their will to his. Elder Neal A. Maxwell taught:

As the Lord communicates with the meek and submissive, fewer decibels are required, and more nuances are received. Even the most meek, like Moses, learn overwhelming things they “never had supposed” (Moses 1:10). But it is only the meek mind which can be so shown and so stretched—not those, as Isaiah wrote, who “are wise in their own eyes” (Isaiah 5:21) (Wherefore Ye Must Press Forward, 47).

“who come unto me” This is a phrase of clarification not contained in the Matthew account. It appears five times in the Sermon at the Temple (see also 3 Nephi 12:19, 20, 23). Those “who come unto [him]” are the individuals who inherit the kingdom of heaven—those who will be exalted. Coming unto him requires repentance and baptism, and therefore coming unto him is essentially a covenantal concept. Only those who “come unto [Christ] with full purpose of heart” (verse 24) through his prescribed ordinances will be received or allowed to enter into his presence.

4 And again, blessed are all they that mourn, for they shall be comforted.

verse 4 The Lord is not suggesting here that mourning for mourning’s sake is a virtue. Rather, there are certain kinds of mourning that he commands us to experience.

One is mourning for our fallen nature, natural self, and our resultant tendency to commit sin (see Nephi’s “Psalm” in 2 Nephi 4:16-35).

One sign of a true saint is that he or she is “willing to mourn with those that mourn; yea, and comfort those that stand in need of comfort” (Mosiah 18:9). To mourn in this setting means to have compassion, empathy, or to “suffer with” those who are suffering.

Also, those who mourn as they suffer well the vicissitudes of mortality are said to “suffer his cross and bear the shame of the world” (Jacob 1:8). These shall eventually find rest with him who mourned as no other individual on earth has ever mourned.

This verse promises that the sorrow of the mourning will be “comforted,” that is, their sorrow will be turned to joy.

5 And blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth.

verse 5 “blessed are the meek” To be meek is to be mild of temper, soft, gentle, not easily provoked or irritated; yielding; given to forbearance when injured; not peevish or apt to complain. The “meek” are the poor in spirit, the humble. The “meek” are not the timid, the spiritless, the fearful. Is it possible to be meek, and yet be a vociferous advocate of others? Indeed, it is. In fact, the most forceful dynamic personality who ever lived described himself as being “meek and lowly in heart” (Matthew 11:29). Meekness has been defined as power under control. Meekness and humility are the opposite of pride. True humility is a gift of the Spirit which, like all gifts of the Spirit, must be earned. The individual blessed with the gift of humility sees himself and his relationship to God in a proper eternal perspective. While he may acknowledge his own efforts—his accomplishments and knowledge—he feels keenly his frailties and weaknesses. He is loath to elevate himself above others.

“they shall inherit the earth” This phrase means they shall inherit the celestial kingdom of God which will, of course, be established upon this earth after it is celestialized.

6 And blessed are all they who do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled with the Holy Ghost.

verse 6 “Blessed are they who do hunger and thirst after righteousness”

While there is a veil drawn over the mind of man when he leaves his former premortal state and is born on earth, this veil is not complete. It is not a wall that prevents all forms of penetration. There remains within us a dim memory and subtle yearning for eternal things. A sliver of the light of Christ penetrates the veil for all men.

Though withdrawn from our memories, the spiritual progress which we made in the life before this one is not lost and wasted as we leave that pre-existent phase. Those talents and abilities and the testimony of righteousness which were earned there by diligence and obedience remain within us in a latent state. These proclivities may be referred to as our “gifts” or “talents.” We have only to discover them and work to redevelop them to awaken them to our memory.

Man is intended to perceive his fallen mortal state with a sense of deprivation, unfulfillment, and incompleteness. These disquieting feelings are intended to engender a deep feeling of distress and a need to be rescued or redeemed. He should hunger and thirst for the influence of the Spirit as a starving man craves food and drink. Man’s distress in his fallen condition should create the desire to escape the fall and reach out for the Savior. This verse uses the terms “hunger” and “thirst” to describe man’s longings for his premortal identity and his yearnings to be rescued from his lonely mortal condition.

Still another shade of meaning here is the idea that each man must be proactive in his spiritual growth. It is so easy to become passive in the process. A man should be anxiously seeking areas in his own life where he should repent. The Spirit of God is most willing to help in this process by revealing to the willing mind and heart those areas in which a man lacks the attributes of Christ. “For behold, again I say unto you that if ye will enter in by the way, and receive the Holy Ghost, it will show unto you all things what ye should do” (2 Nephi 32:5).

“filled with the Holy Ghost” This verse significantly amplifies the meaning of Matthew 5:6 which simply states “Blessed are they . . . for they shall be filled.”

7 And blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy.

verse 7 Here is an example of the law of restoration which we have previously discussed. For a more complete discussion of the law of restoration see the introductory commentary Alma 41. What is the law of restoration? Briefly, when latter-day saints hear the term restoration, they typically think of the latter-day return of the church and gospel to the earth. Book of Mormon prophets, however, use this term in a different sense. They teach that each individual will receive both a temporal restoration and a spiritual restoration which they deserve and have earned. Simply stated, this law holds that in the resurrection all men will be raised to that level of glory commensurate with the lives they lived in mortality. Each man will be judged by his works and the intent of his heart—called in scripture his “desires.” Scripturally, the desires of a man’s heart are not his preferences. Rather, they are his true and heartfelt characteristics and motivations. If a man’s works and the desires of his heart in this life are good, then in the judgment the man will be restored to that which is good. If his works and desires are evil, then in that last day, evil will be restored to him. And, it is not merely a “black and white” or “all or nothing” proposition. Among all of the Father’s children, there exists every shade of grey between good and evil. That which a man sends out shall be returned to him in kind. This law is also referred to as the “law of the harvest” (see also 3 Nephi 13:14-15).

This verse provides a specific example of the law of restoration. We shall be judged according to the judgments we render. To the degree that we are merciful with others, God will be merciful with us.

8 And blessed are all the pure in heart, for they shall see God.

verse 8 “blessed are all the pure in heart” There are few absolutes in our spiritual progress, hence what does it mean to be pure in heart? It must mean to be actively striving to overcome the natural self, striving to obeying the commandments, and largely succeeding. Then one regularly receives the blessing of justification (forgiveness of sin) from the Holy Ghost, and one’s heart is “clean.”

“for they shall see God” We are promised in scripture that the obedient will all see God. D&C 93:1, for example, teaches, “It shall come to pass that every soul who forsaketh his sins and cometh unto me, and calleth on my name, and obeyeth my voice, and keepeth my commandments, shall see my face and know that I am.” Two questions always arise when these verses of scripture are discussed: (1) Will we see him literally? and (2) When will we see him? Certainly, this promise applies literally for the diligently obedient following this life. They will not only see God as soon as they die (Alma 40:11-14), but they will remain to live with him forever.

But does this promise only apply to our postmortal life? The scriptures tantalize us with the possibility of an audience with him during this mortal life. This audience might be literal (see the discussion of having one’s calling and election made sure in the commentary for Helaman 10:4-7 and also in Calling and Election Made Sure in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine volume 2, chapter 16), or it may be figurative. In the Doctrine and Covenants the Lord explains one way that God can be seen in this life: “And inasmuch as my people build a house unto me in the name of the Lord, and do not suffer any unclean thing to come into it, that it be not defiled, my glory shall rest upon it; Yea, and my presence shall be there, for I will come into it, and all the pure in heart that shall come into it shall see God” (D&C 97:15-16). To see God in this sense, according to Elder Royden G. Derrick, means to come to know God, discover him, visualize him, recognize him, and understand him (Temples in the Last Days, 80).

9 And blessed are all the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God.

verse 9 “blessed are all the peacemakers” A peacemaker is someone who strives actively and sincerely to dispel any contention in his human interrelationships. People find myriad reasons, in this world, for contention in their relationships and it takes many forms including resentment, jealousy, anger, grudges, feelings of being wronged, competitiveness, and many others. A peacemaker doesn’t allow these negative feelings to continue, and he diligently strives to remove any such from his relationships with others. The essence of accomplishing this peace is sincerely feeling and expressing your love for the other person. Generally speaking, it is much easier to feel and express love for another person when you are assured that the other person reciprocates or will come to reciprocate that love, though we are required also to love our enemies. A person can only maintain a celestial relationship with another person when he loves the other—when he or she has genuine charity for that other person.

“they shall be called the children of God” They shall become a permanent part of the Lord’s eternal family in the celestial heaven.

10 And blessed are all they who are persecuted for my name’s sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

verse 10 “who are persecuted for my name’s sake” Being persecuted while bearing the name of Jesus Christ and while trying to be Christlike is nothing new. Paul wrote, “All that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution” (2 Timothy 3:12). And we will be blessed for it. How great is our reward? “All that my Father hath shall be given unto [you]” (D&C 84:38). And how do we endure the painful persecution? “He also gave them strength, that they should suffer no manner of afflictions, save it were swallowed up in the joy of Christ” (Alma 31:38).

11 And blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake;

12 For ye shall have great joy and be exceedingly glad, for great shall be your reward in heaven; for so persecuted they the prophets who were before you.

verses 10-12 It is not sufficient to be good. One must also be strong. It is one thing to live up to a high standard in the face of ease, but quite another thing to do so in the face of adversity. Don't fear those who can kill only the body—but only those who can kill the soul.

13 Verily, verily, I say unto you, I give unto you to be the salt of the earth; but if the salt shall lose its savor wherewith shall the earth be salted? The salt shall be thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out and to be trodden under foot of men.

verse 13 “I give unto you to be the salt of the earth” In an age before refrigerators, salt was the great preservative. In this well-known metaphor, Jesus compares his disciples to salt. A righteous disciple in the Lord's kingdom will serve to maintain, in fact, to “preserve” the Lord's teachings and way of life, not only in the kingdom, but also, by example, in the world at large.

“if the salt shall lose its savor” Salt does not lose its savor with age. Rather, its savor is lost through admixture and impurities. The Lord's metaphor in this verse may be a warning to avoid any contamination of God-given teachings with the philosophies of men or the corrupting influences of those who are inclined to evil. The Lord encourages his disciples to maintain a pure and undefiled gospel and to season the world with their tasteful living. Contaminated salt has lost its “savor” or tastefulness and can only be discarded.

“but if the salt shall lose its savor . . . the salt shall be thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out and to be trodden under foot of men” If one views this verse in context, it seems likely that it is an invitation to enter into a covenant with the Lord, but this covenant carries with it a solemn warning that those who violate the covenant will be cast out and trampled under foot. Have each of us today entered into a covenant to be the “salt of the earth”; to succor and “preserve” others? We have indeed. It was at the time of our baptism. John W. Welch has pointed out a connection between this verse and D&C 101:39 which explains that those who enter into the everlasting covenant “are accounted as the salt of the earth” (Illuminating the Sermon at the Temple & Sermon on the Mount, Copublished by FARMS: Provo, Utah and Deseret Book: Salt Lake City, Utah, 61-62). Matthew's account says simply, “Ye are the salt of the earth” (Matthew 5:13) with no explanation as to exactly who is the salt of the earth and how one becomes the salt of the earth. Hence, we learn that only those who enter into the covenant of baptism are counted among the “salt of the earth.”

14 Verily, verily, I say unto you, I give unto you to be the light of this people. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid.

verse 14 Again, we read in the Matthew account, “Ye are the light of the world” (Matthew 5:14). But to whom exactly was that verse in Matthew referring? Here, in the Sermon at the Temple, we learn in context that the Savior is referring to the important exemplary role of the believing covenant people who will later be referred to as “the people of my church” (3 Nephi 18:5).

15 Behold, do men light a candle and put it under a bushel? Nay, but on a candlestick, and it giveth light to all that are in the house;

16 Therefore let your light so shine before this people, that they may see your good works and glorify your Father who is in heaven.

verses 14-16 In what way does a servant of the Lord serve as a “light” to the people. The saints are commanded to serve as examples, to maintain a “godly walk and conversation” (D&C 20:69). Others ought to be able to identify the saints by their behavior and conversation. There may also be a richer and more profound sense that one man might serve as a light to others—see the commentary for 3 Nephi 13:16-18.

17 Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets. I am not come to destroy but to fulfil; verse 17 The “law” and the “prophets” are two of the three major parts of the holy scriptures that the people then possessed. The Jews called them the Torah (the Law) and the Nevi'im (the Prophets). The third part was the Ketuvim, the Writings, or poetical works, such as Psalms, Proverbs, and Ecclesiastes. The Torah is the Pentateuch (Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy).

Jesus was not destroying or canceling out all those sacred writings any more than a university professor is destroying basic arithmetic by teaching calculus. He came not to abolish but to complete. As the Latter-day Saints would say to other Christians—or to Jews, Muslims, or anyone else—we do not come to erase any truth you already have but to fulfill, to complete, to add to what you have with the fulness of the everlasting gospel. We would say, as the Lord said, “I do not bring it to destroy that which [you] have received, but to build it up” (D&C 10:52). And Joseph Smith added, “We don’t ask any people to throw away any good they have got; we only ask them to come and get more” (TPJS, 275).

The words of this verse would have been provocative to the Old-World Jews of Jesus’s day. For the Jews, the law had ceased to be a means to an end and had become the end itself. They viewed the law as the source of salvation. Jesus’s message here was that he, not the law, is the source of salvation. With the old law fulfilled in Christ’s coming, a new covenant with Israel became necessary. The Sermon on the Mount is a statement of that new covenant.

18 For verily I say unto you, one jot nor one tittle hath not passed away from the law, but in me it hath all been fulfilled.

verse 18 It is interesting to compare this verse with the corresponding verse in the New Testament, Matthew 5:18. At the time of the Sermon on the Mount in Palestine, the fulfillment of the law still lay in the future, but by the time of the Sermon at the Temple, the law of Moses had already been fulfilled by Jesus's atonement, death, and resurrection as Jesus had proclaimed out of the darkness at the time of his death (see 3 Nephi 9:17). Hence, when Jesus spoke in Palestine he said, "one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled," but in Bountiful in this verse he affirms that one jot or tittle "hath not passed away from the law, but in me it hath all been fulfilled" (see also 3 Nephi 12:46-47, italics added).

The Lord did not do away with any of the commandments associated with the law—murder or adultery, for example. Instead he invited his disciples to ascend to a loftier more challenging law that they might achieve a higher spiritual level of gospel living. In this way the law was said to be fulfilled in him.

19 And behold, I have given you the law and the commandments of my Father, that ye shall believe in me, and that ye shall repent of your sins, and come unto me with a broken heart and a contrite spirit. Behold, ye have the commandments before you, and the law is fulfilled.

verse 19 "I have given you the law and the commandments of my Father"

Here the Savior makes it clear that the teachings of his Sermon at the Temple are being given expressly by way of commandment. Scholars have long debated the basic nature of the injunctions of the Sermon on the Mount. Are they the foundation of a new public order, a set of ideals, a set of commands, a law of the future kingdom but not of the present church—rules applicable only for a brief period before a shortly awaited coming of the kingdom, or general conditions of discipleship?

In this verse and in 3 Nephi 15:10 and in 3 Nephi 18:10, we learn that they are commandments and are necessary if an individual is to "come unto Jesus." Just as the commandments given on Sinai formed the basis of the Old Testament, the commandments of the Sermon at the Temple and the Sermon on the Mount form the basis of this new covenant or new testament. Our regarding of the Book of Mormon as "Another Testament of Jesus Christ" is all the more meaningful, since the word testament in Greek literature usually means "covenant." John W. Welch wrote:

As "Another Testament" or "covenant," the Book of Mormon indeed reestablishes a modern-day understanding of God's commandments, which his people agree to obey by covenant (see D&C 21:1). Accordingly, the Doctrine and Covenants admonishes the Saints to "remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon" (D&C 84:57) (Illuminating the Sermon at the Temple & Sermon on the Mount, [Copublished by FARMS: Provo, Utah and Deseret Book: Salt Lake City, Utah], 31).

"come unto me with a broken heart and a contrite spirit" The offering of a broken heart and a contrite spirit, indeed submitting our will completely to his, is simply the new law of sacrifice. This new law of sacrifice supersedes the practice of animal sacrifice under the law of Moses.

Do we really live the law of sacrifice today? We do indeed. We are commanded to lay on the altar of sacrifice a broken heart and contrite spirit. But, practically speaking, what does this mean? What do we really sacrifice? We must sometimes even sacrifice those things that are good, fair, and just for those things that are celestial.

It is interesting to note that in the corresponding verse in the Sermon on the Mount, a severe penalty is mentioned for breaking even one of the least of the commandments: “he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven.” Another severe penalty missing from the Nephite sermon that is found in the Matthew account is contained in Matthew 5:29-30: “And if thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell. And if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell.” The absence of these penalties in the Sermon at the Temple provides support to the idea that these penalties were not originally a part of the Sermon on the Mount but were interpolated from Mark 9:43-48, as some Bible commentators have suspected.

Penalties are not entirely absent from the teachings of Jesus in the Sermon at the Temple. The strict injunction to “give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you” is present in both the Nephite and Matthew accounts. Holy and sacred things are not to be shared or broadcast indiscriminately. Doing so was punished in the ancient world by severe penalties, often mentioned in connection with oath swearing and covenant making.

20 Therefore come unto me and be ye saved; for verily I say unto you, that except ye shall keep my commandments, which I have commanded you at this time, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.

verse 20 “except ye shall keep my commandments, which I have commanded you at this time” The law of Moses was now fulfilled, and Jesus was providing his disciples a new law. The focus of the new law was the perfection and strengthening of the heart. As stated above, it is clear that he gave the injunctions and instructions in the Sermon at the Temple as “commandments.” No such designations appear in the Sermon on the Mount. Hence, biblical scholars have long debated whether Jesus’s teachings in the Sermon on the Mount were intended as celestial ideals, ethical or religious principles, or as social commentary. It is also clear that the Nephite people received these commandments by entering into a covenant with God that they would always remember and keep those commandments that Jesus gave to them that day (see 3 Nephi 18:7-10 and the commentary for those verses).

Another interesting difference between the Sermon on the Mount in the gospel of Matthew and the Sermon at the Temple is the absence of unflattering references to specific groups such as scribes, Pharisees, and publicans. The verse in Matthew which corresponds to this verse in 3 Nephi is Matthew 5:20 which says, “For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.” Anti-Pharisaism has been observed to be a tendency of Matthew, and hence its addition to the Sermon on the Mount may be the result of Matthew’s influence on the biblical sermon. We might expect these influences to be missing from the Sermon at the Temple, and indeed they are. Also missing from the Nephite sermon are unflattering references to the publicans such as are found in Matthew 5:46-47.

verses 21-45 In these verses the Lord contrasts the requirements of the law of Moses with those of the new covenant. He is teaching the spirit of the new law and in these verses, he provides illustrative examples. In the old law there are outward acts which are forbidden or commanded. In the new law, we are commanded to change the inward state of the heart and mind. For example, in the old law murder was forbidden. But in the new law, the Lord commands that we overcome anger, contempt, condemnation, retaliation, and vengeance, even toward our enemies. We must do good to those who seem to least deserve it. Those beholden to the old law were forbidden to commit adultery, but Jesus updated that commandment to preclude even lustful thoughts. Previously Israel had been commanded to bind themselves with oaths that they might not bear false witness. The Savior’s new law demands the unadorned truth in all circumstances.

Inward attitudes and feelings are more difficult to change than outward actions. Our actions are on public display and others may pressure us to change them if they are not appropriate. We are able, on the other hand, to hide our attitudes. We can retreat into them. If the quality of our thoughts is unwholesome, we can wallow in our own mire without anyone’s knowing. The private retreat of our own thoughts can contain all our struggles, our insecurities, our fears, our weaknesses, our anxieties, and in spite of it all, we may possess these thoughts and yet maintain an outward dignity without others’ being aware.

21 Ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, and it is also written before you, that thou shalt not kill, and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment of God;

verse 21 “and it is also written before you” This phrase is an interesting addition to the corresponding verse in the Sermon on the Mount, Matthew 5:21. John W. Welch has pointed out:

The Nephites relied heavily on the written law. Their ancestors treasured the plates of brass, also relying heavily upon those written records for specifications regarding the law of Moses and how they should keep it. Being cut off from most sources of oral or customary Israelite law, the Nephites saw the law primarily as a written body (see 1 Nephi 4:15-16) and viewed any change in the written law with deep suspicion (see Mosiah 29:22-23). The Jews in Jerusalem in Jesus's day, on the other hand, had an extensive body of oral law to accompany the written Torah, and the oral law was very important in the pre-Talmudic period of Jewish legal history (Illuminating the Sermon at the Temple & Sermon on the Mount, [Copublished by FARMS: Provo, Utah and Deseret Book: Salt Lake City, Utah], 131-32).

Accordingly, the Sermon on the Mount is apt to say simply, "Ye have heard that it was said . . ." (Matthew 5:27, 33, 38, 43). Whereas the Sermon at the Temple is more likely to say, as does this particular verse, "It is written" (3 Nephi 12:27, 33, 38, 43).

"whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment of God" This phrase is more specific than the corresponding phrase in Matthew 5:21: "whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment."

22 But I say unto you, that whosoever is angry with his brother shall be in danger of his judgment. And whosoever shall say to his brother, Raca, shall be in danger of the council; and whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire.

verses 21-22 In Matthew 5:22 we read, "whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause" (italics mine). The phrase "without a cause" is deleted from both the JST Matthew version and the Book of Mormon account. Unrighteous anger is evil whether or not it is preceded by provocation. The wording in this verse is more like the demanding sayings of Jesus regarding committing adultery in one's heart (Matthew 5:28) and loving one's enemies (Matthew 5:44), neither of which offers the disciple a convenient loophole of self-justification or rationalization.

It is interesting that the phrase "without a cause" is also absent in most of the best and earliest Greek manuscripts of the New Testament. Joseph Smith could hardly have guessed that this phrase did not originally belong in this passage, because textual criticism of the Bible was scarcely in its infancy in America in 1829. And yet, significantly, the parallel text here in the Sermon at the Temple agrees with those early manuscripts, precisely lacking the phrase "without a cause." The most important New Testament manuscripts in which the phrase is absent were not discovered until after Joseph Smith's death.

It is felt by some Bible scholars that the Greek word eikei (without a cause) may be a late addition to Matthew 5:22. If so then the Book of Mormon accurately reflects the original meaning of the Savior and the original sense of Matthew 5:22.

The term "raca" is an Aramaic term of contempt and derision. Other translations render the term "empty head," "simpleton," or "good for nothing." It is a value judgment, and as such the man who uses it is guilty of judging others and is thus attempting to assume the prerogatives of God.

“whosoever is angry with his brother shall be in danger of his judgment” If this experience of hearing the Savior’s sermon was, for the Nephites, something akin to a temple endowment experience and entering into sacred covenants, then we may want to place this verse in the setting of a priesthood brotherhood. The implication is that the offended person is a “brother” who has power to render judgment. Anyone who calls his brother “Raca” is in danger of being brought before “the council,” that is, the elders in charge of administering the kingdom. It is a prohibition against speaking evil against any other priesthood brother, let alone against God. It prohibits all manner of evil or unholy speaking against any brother, and thus all the more so against the Lord’s anointed leaders. Such disciplinary procedures are especially pertinent within a community of covenant people.

23 Therefore, if ye shall come unto me, or shall desire to come unto me, and rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee—verse 23 One might expect that Jesus is teaching here: “Before you come unto me, if you should discover that you have unkind feelings toward someone, first go to that person and resolve them.” But that is not what the Master says here. He says instead: “Before you come unto me, if you should discover that another has unkind feelings toward you, then first go to that person and resolve them.” We might be prone to respond, “But that’s his problem! No, the Lord answers, it is our problem as well. I am my brother’s keeper, and if one has aught against me (and I know about it) then I have a Christian responsibility to do what I can to humbly set things straight, to apologize if I am somehow at fault, and in general to rectify the situation. Should the offended one refuse my hand of fellowship, I have done what is expected of me.

24 Go thy way unto thy brother, and first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come unto me with full purpose of heart, and I will receive you.

verses 23-24 This is difficult doctrine. We cannot come unto the Lord “with full purpose of heart” while there exists conflict and discord between us and any other individual. This may be referred to as the principle of reconciliation. No disciple can come unto Christ or enter his presence until first being reconciled to his brothers and sisters.

In the Sermon on the Mount, the wording is somewhat different: “Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee; Leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift (Matthew 5:23-24).

The Sermon on the Mount speaks of leaving one’s sacrifice on the altar because it is addressing an audience prior to the fulfillment of the old law of sacrifice. At this time in the New World, however, the law of Moses has been fulfilled, and the Savior has already explained the new law of sacrifice (verse 19).

25 Agree with thine adversary quickly while thou art in the way with him, lest at any time he shall get thee, and thou shalt be cast into prison.

verse 25 The phrase “in the way” is a translation of a Greek phrase which refers to the commencement of a lawsuit.

26 Verily, verily, I say unto thee, thou shalt by no means come out thence until thou hast paid the uttermost senine. And while ye are in prison can ye pay even one senine? Verily, verily, I say unto you, Nay.

verses 25-26 Elder Bruce R. McConkie has interpreted these verses as “Counsel to avoid lawsuits and entangling legal difficulties, lest fine and imprisonment result, is directed particularly to the apostles and missionaries as they go forth to carry the gospel message to a wicked world. It is more important that they suffer legal wrongs than that their ministries be hindered or halted by legal processes” (Doctrinal New Testament Commentary, volume 1, 223).

“until thou hast paid the uttermost senine” Instead of “farthing” as appears in the Sermon on the Mount in Matthew 5:26, Jesus here mentions “senine” which is a Nephite unit of exchange. It was the smallest Nephite measure of gold (see Alma 11:8-10). The senine was important because it was the amount paid to each Nephite judge for a day’s service at law (see Alma 11:3). Apparently, the losing party in a lawsuit was liable to pay the judges one senine each, a burden that would give potential litigants all the more reason to “agree with thine adversary quickly while thou art in the way with him.”

27 Behold, it is written by them of old time, that thou shalt not commit adultery;
28 But I say unto you, that whosoever looketh on a woman, to lust after her, hath committed adultery already in his heart.

verses 27-28 What is lust? One young male college student asked a question with tongue-in-cheek, “What is the difference between lust and ‘aesthetic appreciation?’” Perhaps lust may best be defined as having impure intentions before even gazing upon the woman, and then gazing upon her for the purpose of exciting an evil desire. A man guilty of lust has little intrinsic or built-in controls. He is restrained from committing fornication or adultery only by a lack of opportunity or fear of the immediate practical consequences.

The new law or covenant requires purity of heart. The sanctity of God-ordained marriage is so important that even the “lustful look” is destructive. This verse is a commandment that the righteous must strictly exercise the virtue of self-control. It also implies a warning that if a person violates the law of chastity, the penalty will involve serious consequences (Alma 39:5).

29 Behold, I give unto you a commandment, that ye suffer none of these things to enter into your heart;

verse 29 “suffer none of these things to enter into your heart” “These things” include anger (verse 22) and lust. It is interesting to note that the Sermon on the Mount allows justifiable anger (Matthew 5:22), but the Sermon at the Temple prohibits any anger in the heart at all, even justifiable anger.

30 For it is better that ye should deny yourselves of these things, wherein ye will take up your cross, than that ye should be cast into hell.

verse 30 “wherein ye will take up your cross” It is man’s “natural” tendency to be drawn toward worldly pleasures and travel down worldly paths. To do the unnatural things is to “cross” oneself. We “cross” ourselves when we turn away from worldly lusts and seek instead for righteousness. In scripture to “cross” oneself is the same as to “take up one’s cross.” To his disciples in Jerusalem, Christ said: “If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me” (Matthew 16:24).

31 It hath been written, that whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement.

32 Verily, verily, I say unto you, that whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery; and whoso shall marry her who is divorced committeth adultery.

verses 31-32 Jesus’s teachings here are clear. Anyone who divorces his wife must give her a certificate to that effect. But anyone who divorces his wife, except in the case of adultery, makes her an adulteress, and whosoever marries such a divorced woman commits adultery.

During Christ’s mortal ministry in the Old World, Jewish law allowed divorce but there was some controversy over what comprised valid reasons for divorce. Rabbi Shammai taught that divorce was permitted only on grounds of adultery, but Rabbi Hillel, famous for his liberal views, taught that there were several valid causes for divorce, “even if she burns his soup” (Elaine Pagels, Adam, Eve, and the Serpent, 13-14.) Moses, in his day, had allowed the Israelites to divorce for reasons other than adultery. Given this background, see the interesting dialogue on this subject between Jesus and some Pharisees in Matthew 19:3-9. Jesus’s stand on this matter is unequivocal.

Isn’t this a rather strict stand? Does the policy of the Church today square with this unbending policy? For civil divorce? For temple divorce? The answer is no, the Church today certainly recognizes civil divorce and may even grant a temple divorce for causes other than infidelity. How can this be? Have we not read and understood the New Testament and these verses in 3 Nephi 12? Are we as a Church above the law Jesus taught concerning divorce? The answer is “no,” we are not above the law. We are below it! Jesus is here teaching the Celestial law. We as a Church are not yet ready to live up to that law and are still living, in a sense, a “lesser” form of the law.

33 And again it is written, thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths; verse 33 “thou shalt not forswear thyself” To forswear one’s self, is to swear falsely; to perjure one’s self.

34 But verily, verily, I say unto you, swear not at all; neither by heaven, for it is God’s throne;

35 Nor by the earth, for it is his footstool;

verse 35 Matthew 5:35 has this verse as “Nor by the earth; for it is his footstool: neither by Jerusalem; for it is the city of the great King.” Here obviously, there is no mention of Jerusalem. No Nephite would be inclined to swear “by Jerusalem.”

36 Neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair black or white;

37 But let your communication be Yea, yea; Nay, nay; for whatsoever cometh of more than these is evil.

verses 33-37 The practice of oath taking was given to the ancient Jews as a tenet of the law of Moses. “If a man vow a vow unto the Lord, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond; he shall not break his word, he shall do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth” (Numbers 30:2). Now, the law of oath-taking is done away. Christ commands the saints to be simply and totally honest in all their dealings. We should not have to swear by external things. We should speak with our mouths only what we truly mean in our hearts. When we say “yea” then let the truth of the matter be yea; when we say “nay” let nay be the true word.

Jesus was not opposed to covenantal promises, only to oaths sworn in the wrong way.

38 And behold, it is written, an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth;

verse 38 The law of Moses, the old law, dictated an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth, but the new law is different.

39 But I say unto you, that ye shall not resist evil, but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also;

verse 39 “ye shall not resist evil” You should not be so insistent on perfect justice. You should be more merciful and forgiving.

40 And if any man will sue thee at the law and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also;

41 And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain.

42 Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn thou not away.

verses 38-42 In Jesus's day and even now, the most insulting of all physical blows is that of striking the right cheek with the back of the hand. This was a particularly difficult principle to live in the Old World since the members of this new community of Jesus's were everywhere subject to insult and persecution because of their relationship to Jesus.

Regarding the phrase "whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile," Josephus, in his writings, referred to the compulsory carrying of military supplies by civilians in those days. Apparently Roman law authorized troops passing a district to commandeer the people and compel them to carry their luggage. To comply with this law often resulted in great inconvenience.

A broader principle here is that the saints should pay their taxes, abide by the laws of the land, and submit to those public burdens attendant upon citizenship.

The spirit of forbearance, love, and forgiveness is evident in these verses.

43 And behold it is written also, that thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy;

verse 43 It is not known where this is written. It is not found in our present-day Old Testament, and it would be surprising if it were written on the brass plates. It is thought that perhaps Jesus was responding to the Essenes, an ultra-orthodox group of Jews who were taught to love the "sons of light" (the believers) and hate the "sons of darkness" (the outsiders). Whether or not such apostate beliefs were held among the Nephites is not known.

44 But behold I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them who despitefully use you and persecute you; verses 43-44 All men are neighbors to the man who has assumed the responsibilities of discipleship. How is it possible for one to become so large and magnanimous that he might actually come to love his enemies? At the risk of sounding almost blasphemous, let me ask of you the reader a hypothetical question. Suppose for a moment that you were the son of God, the savior of mankind. You are on the earth with the sacred message of the eternal gospel that must be promulgated to mankind. You are their only hope. You are keenly aware of all the frailties of God's children, but you also know well the eternal plan of salvation. Only you know of that plan and how vital it is that men accept it. In this hypothetical circumstance, with the unique perspective which it would afford you, what would be your attitude and feeling toward men? They are absolutely dependent upon you and your message. Even if they reject you, you can place that rejection in perspective. They “know not what they do.” We can therefore understand how the Savior might love mankind in spite of their reviling against him. But is it not true that each of us who possesses the gospel and a testimony of it is, in our own right, a savior of mankind. The Lord “has no hands but our hands.” We must serve mankind and carry the saving message of the gospel to them. As we live the gospel and gain a testimony of our own eternal identity, we will acquire the “blessed,” celestial state of “spiritual confidence.” This state, provided to us by the influence of the Holy Ghost, seems to be the key for our acquiring the charity, the pure love of Christ, which we must acquire.

It is so vital that we acquire the gift of charity that Jesus, when asked which was the greatest commandment, taught that there were two to which he accorded the status of being the greatest commandments. We are commanded to love God and to love our fellow beings (Matthew 22:36-40). Paul taught that though a saint possesses all virtues yet lacks charity, he is “nothing” (1 Corinthians 13:1-3). How might we define a good Latter-day Saint? Perhaps he is one who attends his meetings, pays his tithing, keeps the Word of Wisdom, and attends the temple. Is a loving nature included in our definition? Should it be? Do we as a Church give proper emphasis to this principle? Do we, in the Church help each other to learn to love?

But doesn't this verse set an almost impossibly high standard? How is it actually possible to love one's enemies? Perhaps the answer is that we must force ourselves to act in a friendly and loving way toward our enemies even if our feelings would dictate otherwise. Then, as written by Brent L. Top (Though Your Sins Be As Scarlet, 105-07), in time, if our efforts are genuine, our feelings will come along.

45 That ye may be the children of your Father who is in heaven; for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good.

verse 45 “for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good” God, who is a loving parent, loves all his children, even those who choose to disobey him.

Matthew 5:45 renders this phrase, “for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust.” It is not known why the Sermon at the Temple here does not mention rain. Perhaps there was less anxiety in Nephite lands over regular rainfall or perhaps less inclination among the Nephites to believe in the heavenly origins of rain.

46 Therefore those things which were of old time, which were under the law, in me are all fulfilled.

47 Old things are done away, and all things have become new.

verses 46-47 As pointed out in verse 18 of this chapter and as emphasized in the commentary for that verse, at the time of the Sermon at the Temple, the law of Moses had been fulfilled.

48 Therefore I would that ye should be perfect even as I, or your Father who is in heaven is perfect.

verse 48 Are you ever beset with a sense of hopelessness and frustration as you study the lofty standard set forth in the scripture?: “Be perfect,” “Love your enemies” (verse 44), “For I the Lord cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance” (D&C 1:31; see also Alma 45:16).

It seems obvious that no one of us mortals will emerge from this earthly sphere in a state of perfection—even as God is. What then is expected of us? What is perfection? Is his command for us to be perfect simply an example of divine hyperbole? Before we dismiss this command as unattainable, let us take careful a look at it.

The Greek word translated into English as “perfect” in Matthew 5:48 is teleios. This word is used in Greek religious literature to describe several things, including the person who has become fully initiated in the rituals of the religion. In Hellenistic Judaism, the word teleioo means “to put someone in the position in which he can come, or stand, before God” (Kittel, Theological Dictionary, 8:82; citing Hebrews 7:19 and 10:1).

A few men in the scriptures had been described as being “perfect.” These include Seth (D&C 107:43), Noah (Moses 8:27), Job (Job 1:1), and Nephiah (Alma 50:37). They may have been referred to as being perfect, yet the scriptures record instance of mistakes which they made. How are they then “perfect”? The Greek and Hebrew words behind the English “perfect” may also be translated as “whole,” “complete,” “the end product of a process.” The Savior has the ability to make people whole or complete by forgiving them of their sins. The guiltless state that follows repentance and striving to live the commandments may well be the state of “perfection” spoken of in this particular verse. In this context, the Savior taught, “Whoso repenteth and is baptized in my name shall be filled [with the Spirit of God]; and if he endureth to the end, behold, him will I hold guiltless before my Father” (3 Nephi 27:16). He doesn’t say “perfect” but rather “guiltless.” Aren’t they one and the same?

It would seem presumptuous to suggest an “expected minimum” of righteous thought and behavior here on earth that would be expected of us in order to obtain perfection, but perhaps we can risk a bit of presumptuousness. Certainly, in order to achieve this lofty state, a man must come to realize his dependence upon God and regularly pray for the presence of the Holy Ghost. He must certainly study the teachings of Jesus, “feast upon the words of Christ” (2 Nephi 32:3), and sincerely strive in specific areas to improve himself. He must practice some actual self-denial in disciplining the purity of his intentions and becoming submissive to the commandments as he understands them. If our efforts and our progress are judged satisfactory, then we will be forgiven and found “guiltless” or “perfect” before God. The type of perfection thus achieved has been referred to as “finite” perfection (Bruce R. McConkie, Mormon Doctrine, 567-78). There is another type of perfection, according to Elder McConkie, the “infinite” perfection achieved after this mortal sphere when we actually become as God is.

When the Lord commands us to be perfect, as he does in this verse, he may well be expressing the ultimate hope that we may at some future date achieve this “infinite” perfection or inherit “all that the Father hath” and become like him.

It is instructive to compare this verse with the corresponding verse in the Sermon on the Mount (Matthew 5:48): “Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.” Jesus has now been resurrected with a glorified celestial body. He is therefore able to say accurately in this verse, “I would that ye should be perfect even as I, or your Father who is in heaven is perfect.”

3 Nephi Chapter 13

Scripture Mastery

3 Nephi 13:33 (Matthew 6:33) Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.

1 Verily, verily, I say that I would that ye should do alms unto the poor; but take heed that ye do not your alms before men to be seen of them; otherwise ye have no reward of your Father who is in heaven.

2 Therefore, when ye shall do your alms do not sound a trumpet before you, as will hypocrites do in the synagogues and in the streets, that they may have glory of men. Verily I say unto you, they have their reward.

3 But when thou doest alms let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth; verse 3 Here is a command to avoid ulterior motivation. Please see the commentary for verses 16-18 of this chapter.

4 That thine alms may be in secret; and thy Father who seeth in secret, himself shall reward thee openly.

verses 1-4 Giving to the poor has always been an obligation placed upon the Lord's covenant people, and apparently there is a certain magic when one does so in secret. The new covenant requires more than just doing the right thing. It requires doing the right things for the right reasons. Righteous deeds need not necessarily be performed anonymously, but they should always be done without pretense—and perhaps even more—for a secret, sacred reason. Giving without seeking or accepting any praise or recognition is certainly the highest form of giving.

When I was a younger man, just out of high school, I recall reading the book Magnificent Obsession by Lloyd C. Douglas. Its central theme was that anonymous and selfless serving of others leads inevitably to personal spiritual growth. I was deeply moved by the book, and I became fascinated with the idea and yearned to discuss it with the author. I wondered where he had come up with this concept and whether or not he truly believed in the validity of the concept. Obviously the idea of giving in secret is an eternal gospel principle.

5 And when thou prayest thou shalt not do as the hypocrites, for they love to pray, standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily I say unto you, they have their reward.

verse 5 In a gospel sense, hypocrisy is the pretense of religious conviction in the absence of true conviction. It is the claim to religious commitment without the practice of religious principles. A hypocrite feigns belief, while the heart is really serving personal pride and vain ambition. The Greek word translated as “hypocrite” in the New Testament is the word for an actor in a play, one who portrays someone different from the person he or she really is. Hypocrisy is a manifestation of the carnal or “natural man” and not of the truly converted “saint.”

In this verse and the following verse, the use of the singular pronoun “thou” may indicate that the Lord here is teaching the people how to pray individually in private. Latter-day prophets and apostles have made it clear that prayer is more than directing “mere words” or thoughts to deity. Prayer is rather “the pulsation of a yearning, loving heart in tune with the Infinite.” It is “a message of the soul sent directly to a loving Father.” It is “spirit vibration.” Prayer is having “a consciousness that there is something within us which is divine, which is part of the Infinite, which is the offspring of God, and until we can feel that harmony with that Infinite, we have not sensed the power of prayer” (David O. McKay, Treasures of Life. Salt Lake City: Deseret Book, 1962, 308, 302).

Prayer is attuning ourselves with the spirit or light that “proceedeth forth from the presence of God to fill the immensity of space” (D&C 88:11-12). To “live without prayer is to live a mere animal existence. It is to leave the best part of our natures in a starving condition; for without prayer the spirit is starved, and men dwindle in their feelings and die in their faith” (George Q. Cannon, Gospel Truth. 2 volumes. Ed. Jerreld L. Newquist. Salt Lake City: Deseret Book, 1974, 2:170).

6 But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father who is in secret; and thy Father, who seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly.

7 But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen, for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking.

verse 7 Now the Lord shifts his focus to the plural pronoun “ye” suggesting that the Lord is now going to offer instruction in group prayer.

“use not vain repetitions” Vain means futile or without real significance.

The problem is in the vainness, not in repetition. In how many different ways can we bless our food? How many original prayers—original in the sense of novel or unusual language—can we offer? God is not offended by repetition, so long as the words are spoken from the heart and are sincere. The heavens withdraw themselves, however, in the face of vanity. Something is vain when it is empty, meaningless, or hollow. Whenever our prayers are meaningless and thus become trite or ritualistic religious jargon, having no feeling or emanating from a duplicitous heart, they accomplish little (McConkie, Millet, and Top, Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, Volume 4—Third Nephi through Moroni, 81).

verses 1-7 “Alms” may be better understood as good deeds. The emphasis here is on sincerity and upon having the proper motives. Your good deeds, your prayers, and your fasting should be all done with sincerity and with pure intent, not for the recognition of others. While engaged in fasting it is proper to go about one's normal and usual activities without advertising the fact of your fasting.

8 Be not ye therefore like unto them, for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask him.

verse 8 An important part of real prayer is to listen to the promptings of the Spirit who will teach us those things for which we should pray. Our natural selfish tendency is to pray for our wants and not our true needs. Paul wrote that the Spirit “helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. And he that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God” (Romans 8:26-27). A modern revelation also instructs us that “he that asketh in the Spirit asketh according to the will of God; wherefore it is done even as he asketh” (D&C 46:30). This process of real listening during prayer, of attuning our minds and hearts to the light of Christ, allows us to begin to gain the mind of Christ (see 1 Corinthians 2:16), and is the process by which we come to obtain answers to our prayers.

verses 9-13 In these verses, we find the Lord's prayer. In offering this prayer, Jesus perhaps simply intended to provide a model or pattern for group prayers. It is unlikely he was providing a recommendation for a fixed prayer that he intended be recited verbatim. An alternate view holds that it is a sacred ritual prayer which was part of a covenant-making ceremony in which the Nephites here assembled were being instructed.

The New Testament Gospels include two slightly different versions of the Lord's Prayer, one in the Sermon on the Mount (Matthew 6:9–13) and another in Luke 11:2–4. The Didache, an early Christian text generally dated to the first century AD (“Didache,” in The Oxford Dictionary of the Christian Church, 3rd edition revised, ed. F. L. Cross and E. A. Livingstone, New York, NY: Oxford University Press, 2005, 482), also has a version of the prayer (Didache 8). When compared with the versions found among the early Christians, the Lord's Prayer at Bountiful is unique. The Book of Mormon version is missing two key phrases, and includes an extended ending of praise not included in the version in Luke. These will be discussed in the commentary below. Also, the reader should note that the wording of 3 Nephi 13:9–13 in our present day scripture (the 2013 edition) varies slightly from the original manuscript formulated by Royal Skousen (The Book of Mormon: The Earliest Text, New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 2009, 601).

9 After this manner therefore pray ye: Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name.

verse 9 The original text of the Book of Mormon contains Hebrew-like constructions that have been removed from the text of the Book of Mormon because of their non-English character. For example, in this verse the “who” is appropriate because the referent is human. The original Book of Mormon text and the King James Bible both render this phrase “our Father which art in heaven” which is more typical Hebrew construction (see Matthew 6:9, italics mine).

10 Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.

verse 10 Note that the phrase “Thy kingdom come” (Matthew 6:10) is missing from this Nephite version of the Lord’s prayer. At the time of the Sermon at the Temple, unlike the Sermon on the Mount, God’s kingdom had already come, both in heaven through Christ’s victory over death, and on earth through his activities that day with the Nephites. In other words, with the arrival of Christ that day at Bountiful, God’s kingdom was already inaugurated among the Nephites. This conclusion has been well pointed out by our LDS scholarly community. For example, Heather Hardy has carefully shown, “with the arrival of the resurrected Jesus at the temple in Bountiful, God’s kingdom is inaugurated upon the earth” (Heather Hardy, “‘Saving Christianity’: The Nephite Fulfillment of Jesus’s Eschatological Prophecies,” Journal of Book of Mormon Studies 23, 2014: 22–55, quote on p. 46). And John W. Welch explained, “there was no need in Bountiful for Jesus to instruct the people to pray, ‘Thy kingdom come’ . . . for God’s kingdom had already come both in heaven through Christ’s victory over death and on earth that day in their midst” (John W. Welch, Illuminating the Sermon at the Temple and the Sermon on the Mount, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1999, 128-29).

Note also that the phrase “Give us this day our daily bread,” found in the Matthew version, is missing. In the Galilee, this counsel was directed specifically to the Twelve, those who would travel without purse or scrip. Their daily prayer needed to be for food and drink in order to sustain life. In Bountiful the phrase is omitted, as this portion of the sermon is directed to the entire multitude, a people whose daily work would sustain them (see 3 Nephi 12:1).

Another interpretation of why the phrase “Give us this day our daily bread” is missing from our 3 Nephi version of the Lord’s Prayer has been suggested by our thoughtful LDS scholars. While the request (“Give us this day our daily bread”) seems straightforward enough, the exact meaning of this phrase is actually uncertain, because the Greek term translated as “daily” (epiousion) “is notoriously difficult” to translate (John W. Welch, The Sermon on the Mount in the Light of the Temple, Burlington, VT: Ashgate, 2009, 129. See also John W. Welch, Illuminating the Sermon at the Temple and the Sermon on the Mount, Provo, UT: FARMS, 1999, 145–146). The term “daily bread” may mean something like the presence of the bread of life. Brother Welch has argued that in context with “thy kingdom come,” it “is unlikely to be a request ‘for ordinary food’” (Welch, The Sermon on the Mount in the Light of the Temple, 129, citing Margaret Barker, Temple Themes in Christian Worship, London, UK: T&T Clark, 2007, 208). Several possibilities exist, but one interpretation is that “daily bread” is “a reference to the expected messianic banquet”—again, a reference to the presence of the bread of life (the Savior). If this original plea was in reference to the bread of the messianic banquet, as some scholars have proposed, then this omission could also be due to the fact that for the Nephites, Jesus Christ, the bread of life, had specifically come. The exclusion of this clause would “reflect the post-resurrectional setting of the Sermon at the Temple” (Welch, Illuminating the Sermon, 146. Welch discusses other possible reasons for the omission on pp. 145–146). Indeed, the risen Lord Himself miraculously supplied bread for the partaking of the sacrament (3 Nephi 20:3–7), perhaps typologically imitating the feast of heavenly bread that will be had in the end times.

11 And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.

verse 11 The spirit of this verse is also found in verses 14 and 15. See the commentary for those verses.

12 And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil.

verse 12 In other words, “Suffer us not to be led into temptation” (JST, Matthew 6:14).

13 For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

verse 13 The Lord’s Prayer at Bountiful includes the ending, “For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.” This ending is called by scholars a “doxology” or hymn of praise. It is missing from the version in Luke, and from the earliest Greek manuscripts of Matthew. Thus, many scholars conclude that it was not part of the original Book of Matthew version either (See Thomas A. Wayment, “How New Testament Variants Contribute to the Meaning of the Sermon on the Mount,” in The Sermon on the Mount in Latter-day Scripture, ed. Gaye Strathearn, Thomas A. Wayment, and Daniel L. Belnap, Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Deseret Book and Religious Studies Center, Brigham Young University, 2010, 306–307). If this is true, then among canonical versions of the Lord’s prayer, the version in 3 Nephi may be unique for including this detail, though it is also in the non-canonical Didache.

There is some early evidence hinting that, whether originally included in the Book of Matthew text or not, Jesus likely included a hymn of praise when he gave the Lord’s Prayer at least on some occasions in Judea. Regardless of its inclusion or exclusion in the Matthew version, however, John W. Welch has proposed that the sacred setting in Bountiful—at the temple—may explain its inclusion when the Lord gave the prayer there. According to Welch, “the longer doxology would be appropriate in a sacred setting with an inner circle of followers” (John W. Welch, “Approaching New Approaches,” Review of Books on the Book of Mormon 6, no. 1, 1994: 163).

Specifically, evidence from rabbinical sources indicate that a “doxological acknowledgment of the kingdom and glory of God was in regular usage in the temple at the time of Jesus” (Welch, Illuminating the Sermon, 81). When the high priest spoke the name of the Lord, “the people answered . . . not with a simple ‘amen,’ but also with praises of God—mentioning such divine attributes as his glory, power, kingdom, and everlasting dominion—before the concluding amen” (Welch, Illuminating the Sermon, 81).

Similarly, one scholar suggested, “Perhaps the original function of the ‘doxology’ in the Lord’s Prayer was that of a response by the worshiping congregation” (Hans Dieter Betz, The Sermon on the Mount, Hermeneia—A Critical and Historical Commentary on the Bible (Minneapolis, MN: Fortress Press, 1995), 414). Such would have certainly been appropriate for the resurrected Lord’s Prayer given at the temple.

By studying the differences in the Nephite edition of the Lord’s Prayer—and, in fact, the whole Sermon at the Temple—readers can come to appreciate the Lord’s sensitivity to the particular circumstances in which His teachings on prayer and other topics were given (Millet, “The Praying Savior,” 134, explained that Jesus instructed the Nephites “to pattern their prayers on the Lord’s prayer, with those alterations that would reflect the fact that he is now a resurrected, glorified being, the kingdom of God was now in their midst, and they would soon be initiated into the heavenly order of consecration and stewardship.”). Rather than a simple cut and paste job from the Gospel of Matthew, the Lord carefully and subtly adapted His teachings in ways that are meaningfully sophisticated, situationally appropriate, and spiritually inspiring (Welch, Illuminating the Sermon, 127–150).

14 For, if ye forgive men their trespasses your heavenly Father will also forgive you;

15 But if ye forgive not men their trespasses neither will your Father forgive your trespasses.

verses 14-15 The Lord’s prayer having ended, the Lord continues counseling the Nephites.

A modern-day revelation summarizes well these two verses: “My disciples, in days of old, sought occasion against one another and forgave not one another in their hearts; and for this evil they were afflicted and sorely chastened. Wherefore, I say unto you, that ye ought to forgive one another; for he that forgiveth not his brother his trespasses standeth condemned before the Lord; for there remaineth in him the greater sin. I, the Lord, will forgive whom I will forgive, but of you it is required to forgive all men. And ye ought to say in your hearts—let God judge between me and thee, and reward thee according to thy deeds” (D&C 64:8-11).

Perhaps this is the ultimate challenge as we seek to emulate Christ. We have commented previously that, though Christ was called upon to atone for the sins of all mankind, each of our lives is, in a way, a mini-atonement as we suffer the vicissitudes and challenges of life. Each of us must suffer as a necessary process in the attaining of a God-like character. Perhaps there is no suffering quite so keen as “bearing” the sins and misdeeds of others—indeed, forgiving others.

Accomplishing the true process of forgiveness is often a somewhat anti-intuitive exercise. Please see a discussion of forgiveness in Ye Shall Know of the Doctrine, volume 3, chapter 6, Forgiveness.

16 Moreover, when ye fast be not as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance, for they disfigure their faces that they may appear unto men to fast. Verily I say unto you, they have their reward.

17 But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thy head, and wash thy face; verse 17 True fasting requires a secret (see the following verse) inward righteousness. Fasting is something to be participated in privately, not something to be observed by others.

18 That thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father, who is in secret; and thy Father, who seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly.

verses 16-18 When a disciple seeks the Lord in true fasting and prayer the Lord promises that he will see and reward the supplicant openly in heaven. This principle is mentioned also in verses 4 and 6 of this chapter.

Perhaps we may generalize from this counsel of the Lord. All Christ-like virtues to which we may attain should be worn privately and inwardly, as an inward purity, and not outwardly as easily observable virtues. Even we ourselves should be unaware of them. This is the spirit of not letting our left hand know what our right hand is doing. If our left hand knows what our right hand is doing, if we become aware of our own hidden virtues, then we may create our own reward and fail to qualify for that which God intends to give us in his own good time. We should only be aware of the fact that we are striving to emulate the Savior’s example. Ironically, it is in this way that our own “light” may truly shine before others.

This is not to say that we should stop striving in the practical matters of work and service in the kingdom if we suspect that our motives are not completely pure. We must continue to consciously and deliberately “experiment upon the words” of Christ (Alma 32:27-29) even if we suspect that we are doing the right thing for the wrong reason. We should continue to home teach, for example, even if our central motivation is fear that our priesthood leader will call and find that we have not “completed our home teaching for the month.” We are never justified in doing the wrong thing or not doing anything at all because we suspect we are not properly motivated. We cannot wait until we are sanctified before we start doing the work of the kingdom. Otherwise, we’ll never become sanctified! The proper motivation will come, as do other gifts of the Spirit, as we strive to serve him.

19 Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and thieves break through and steal;

verse 19 Earthly treasures are material possessions, honors, social affiliations, and political positions. All of these disappear when mortal life ends. The reader should enjoy the following parable of Jesus:

And one of the company said unto him, Master, speak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with me. And he said unto him, Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you? And he said unto them, Take heed, and beware of covetousness: for a man’s life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth. And he spake a parable unto them, saying, The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully: And he thought within himself, saying, What shall I do, because I have no room where to bestow my fruits? And he said, This will I do: I will pull down my barns, and build greater; and there will I bestow all my fruits and my goods. And I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, [and] be merry. But God said unto him, [Thou] fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee: then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided? So [is] he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God (Luke 12:13-21).

20 But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal.

verse 20 The only things we “take with us” are (1) the gifts of the Spirit—our spiritual growth or progress, (2) our meaningful relationships, and (3) our wholesome memories.

21 For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.

22 The light of the body is the eye; if, therefore, thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light.

verses 19-22 One may view these verses as an elaboration of the law of consecration, the command to consecrate all that one has and is to the Lord. A “single eye” refers to singlemindedness and dedication, especially in the sense of being ready for sacrifice and unbegrudging generosity toward the kingdom of God.

On another level, if our every thought, our desires, our aspirations, our hopes, and our dreams are all centered in righteousness—if our reason for being is to build up the kingdom of God—then we have an eye single to the glory of God. “And if your eye be single to my glory, your whole bodies shall be filled with light, and there shall be no darkness in you; and that body which is filled with light comprehendeth all things. Therefore, sanctify yourselves that your minds become single to God, and the days will come that you shall see him; for he will unveil his face unto you, and it shall be in his own time, and in his own way, and according to his own will" (D&C 88:67-68).

23 But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If, therefore, the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!

verses 22-23 In the Old Testament, there is abundant evidence that the "spiritual eye" or the "good eye" is a synonym for generosity (see Deuteronomy 15:9; Proverbs 22:9; 23:22; 28:22). Therefore, a possible interpretation of these two verses is that when a man is generous his eye is "healthy" or "single." When he is not generous, his "eye is evil." This interpretation is plausible and fits the context since the previous three verses warn against giving too much emphasis to laying up earthly treasures.

Again, on another level, sin and wickedness closes off receptivity to the light of Christ and leads to an inevitably fatal spiral (spiritually speaking) downward into more and more darkness.

24 No man can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will hold to the one and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and Mammon.

verse 24 "Mammon" is an Aramaic word for riches or money.

Elder Bruce R. McConkie wrote:

There neither are nor can be any neutrals in this war. Every member of the Church is on one side or the other. . . In this war all who do not stand forth courageously and valiantly are by that fact alone aiding the cause of the enemy. "They who are not for me are against me, saith our God." (2 Nephi 10:16.) We are either for the Church or we are against it. We take its part or we take the consequences. We cannot survive spiritually with one foot in the Church and the other in the world. We must make the choice. It is either the Church or the world. There is no middle ground (CR, October 1974, 44).

Robert L. Millet taught:

Holding back or giving less than is required always produces divided loyalties. We need not have our membership records in the great and abominable church in order to be disloyal to the kingdom of God; the issue is not where our records are but rather where our hearts are. . . Our hearts cannot be wedded to another endeavor. Our might or strength cannot be spent in secondary causes. Our minds cannot be committed to another enterprise. In the words of the early brethren of this dispensation, it must be the kingdom of God or nothing! (An Eye Single to the Glory of God, 7, 9).

25 And now it came to pass that when Jesus had spoken these words he looked upon the twelve whom he had chosen, and said unto them: Remember the words which I have spoken. For behold, ye are they whom I have chosen to minister unto this people. Therefore I say unto you, take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?

verse 25 This verse marks an important transition. From 3 Nephi 12:1, we know that all the sermon to this point had been addressed to the multitude at large. Now, with this verse Jesus shifts his focus to the Twelve and counsels them regarding their coming ministry.

“take no thought for your life” This phrase may be better understood as “Don’t be overly concerned about . . .” It is important to note that this instruction to take no thought about food or drink or clothing is often quoted out of context to apply to everyone. It is actually counsel directed only to those involved in full-time ministry. Jesus promised his Twelve that their needs would be met if they would build his kingdom as their first priority. For the rest of us, whose ministry is only part-time, we must indeed take thought for our physical upkeep and not expect that God or others will take care of all our needs.

26 Behold the fowls of the air, for they sow not, neither do they reap nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they?

27 Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature?

verse 27 There is no need to worry, since worrying is usually unproductive. Which one of you, for example, by worrying can add one cubit to his height?” Although the standard length of a cubit seems to have varied somewhat through time and among cultures, it was roughly equivalent to the distance from the elbow to the tip of the fingers, or about 18 inches.

28 And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin;

29 And yet I say unto you, that even Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these.

30 Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which today is, and tomorrow is cast into the oven, even so will he clothe you, if ye are not of little faith.

31 Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed?

verse 31 The word “wherewithal” refers to the means, supplies, materials, or even money necessary to accomplish a purpose.

32 For your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things.

33 But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.

verse 33 The “kingdom of God” refers to the Church of Jesus Christ on the earth. Jesus is here instructing his missionaries to concern themselves with the building up of the kingdom of God on the earth.

34 Take therefore no thought for the morrow, for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient is the day unto the evil thereof.

verse 34 There’s enough to worry about today without giving excessive care to tomorrow.

“Sufficient is the day unto the evil thereof.” There’s enough evil to contend with today without worrying about what’s coming tomorrow.

verses 25-34 These verses were intended for the Lord’s apostles. They are called upon to forsake their temporal pursuits and carry the message of salvation to the world. There is not now and never has been a call to the saints generally to “sell that ye have” and take no thought for the temporal needs of the present or future. Rather, as part of their mortal probation, the true followers of the Savior are expected to provide for themselves and their families (D&C 75).

3 Nephi Chapter 14

The Savior now turns his attention back to the multitude, indicating that his messages which follow are for all members of the Church.

1 And now it came to pass that when Jesus had spoken these words he turned again to the multitude, and did open his mouth unto them again, saying: Verily, verily, I say unto you, Judge not, that ye be not judged.

2 For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again.

verse 2 “with what measure ye mete” Mete is a verb which means to measure; to ascertain quantity, dimensions, or capacity by any rule or standard.

3 And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother’s eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?

4 Or how wilt thou say to thy brother: Let me pull the mote out of thine eye—and behold, a beam is in thine own eye?

verse 4 Even though there is a “beam” (a large timber used for construction of buildings) in my eye which prevents me from seeing much of anything, I think I notice that you have a “mote” (a sliver or speck of wood) in your eye. The prophet Joseph Smith said, “No man is capable of judging a matter, in council, unless his own heart is pure; and we frequently are so filled with prejudice, or have a beam in our own eye, that we are not capable of passing right decisions” (TPJS, 69).

5 Thou hypocrite, first cast the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast the mote out of thy brother’s eye.

verses 1-5 Even though verse 1 commands that you judge not at all, verse 2 implies that it is probably necessary, at times, to judge our fellow men in certain circumstances, so long as we do it righteously. Indeed JST-Matthew 7:2 says, “Judge not unrighteously, that ye be not judged; but judge righteous judgment.” Of course, it is necessary to take a stand and acknowledge obvious evil actions of others. Church members are required to make many judgments every day. Discernment is a gift of the Spirit and the Lord intends us to use it. Righteous judgment and discerning are attributes of godliness the saints are commanded to seek. Mormon taught, “For behold, my brethren, it is given unto you to judge, that ye may know good from evil . . . And now, my brethren, seeing that ye know the light by which ye may judge, which light is the light of Christ, see that ye do not judge wrongfully; for with that same judgment which ye judge ye shall also be judged” (Moroni 7:14-18).

When the Lord warns against judging, he is warning against condemning someone for his sins as well as against attributing motives to a person when the observer cannot really know what is in that person's heart. When Jesus encountered the woman taken in adultery, he did not deny the ugliness of her immoral actions. But he did not condemn her. He counseled her to go her way, repent, and sin no more, no doubt assuring her (implicitly, if not verbally) that forgiveness and peace of soul would follow (see John 8:3-11).

Part of condemning another consists of highlighting or accentuating another's sins—parading or displaying them before the public. We must keep in mind that we ourselves are also guilty of sin—often more egregious sins than we might condemn in others.

Later on, the Savior will say to the Nephite Twelve “All things are written by the Father; therefore out of the books which shall be written shall the world be judged. And know ye that ye shall be judges of this people, according to the judgment which I shall give unto you, which shall be just. Therefore, what manner of men ought ye to be [as judges]? Verily I say unto you, even as I am” (3 Nephi 27:26-27).

It would seem that the Lord's counsel in verses 1-5 teach that in any conflict or disagreement that you have with another person, usually both you and the other person share in the blame. Hence, when you set out to forgive the other person and say, “I forgive you,” you ignore your own guilt in the dispute. Your saying, “I forgive you” is actually accusatory. Hence, when we seek to forgive another, we must approach the other individual with the seemingly ironic statement, “Will you forgive me for any wrong I have done you.”

6 Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you.

verse 6 “that which is holy” Joseph Smith's inspired translation of Matthew 7:6 adds considerably to the meaning of the New Testament verse which corresponds to this Book of Mormon verse: “Go ye into the world, saying unto all, Repent, for the kingdom of heaven has come nigh unto you. And the mysteries of the kingdom ye shall keep within yourselves; for it is not meet to give that which is holy unto the dogs; neither cast ye your pearls unto swine, lest they trample them under their feet. For the world cannot receive that which ye, yourselves, are not able to bear; wherefore ye shall not give your pearls unto them, lest they turn again and rend you” (JST-Matthew 7:6).

As Jesus sends his disciples out to teach the gospel to the world, he commands them to refrain from presenting more of the truths of the gospel than their hearers are prepared to receive.

Elder Bruce R. McConkie wrote:

Missionaries ordinarily confine their teachings to such things as the nature and kind of being that God is, the atonement of our Lord, the apostasy from and restoration of the gospel, and the plan of salvation. After people are converted and have the gift of the Holy Ghost to enlighten their minds it is time enough for them to learn the deeper things pertaining to exaltation in the eternal worlds. The sacred teachings revealed in temple ordinances, for instance, are mysteries reserved for selected and faithful members of the kingdom who have attained sufficient stability and background to understand them (Doctrinal New Testament Commentary, 1:248-49).

There has been some speculation that Jesus's Sermon on the Mount and his Sermon at the temple might have been more than simply a great sermon. The suggestion has been made that it might have contained significant "holy things" given to a righteous body of saints in a temple setting. Perhaps both of these great sermons were something akin to the endowment ritual. This might help explain Jesus's warning about making known "holy things" to those not yet ready (see John W. Welch in Echoes and Evidences of the Book of Mormon, 337-38). See also the commentary for Alma 12:9.

"trample them under their feet" Set them (the holy things, the pearls) at naught, consider them of little or no worth.

"turn again and rend you" And even attack you, the bearer of the pearls. Enemies of the Church are inclined to hear about sacred spiritual truths, distort their meanings, and then use their distorted version to attack the Church. Examples have included the doctrines of polygamy, eternal progression and becoming more like God, and that of our claim of one true Church.

7 Ask, and it shall be given unto you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you.

8 For every one that asketh, receiveth; and he that seeketh, findeth; and to him that knocketh, it shall be opened.

9 Or what man is there of you, who, if his son ask bread, will give him a stone?

10 Or if he ask a fish, will he give him a serpent?

11 If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father who is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?

verse 11 "If ye then, being evil" Here is a reference to the natural self of each man.

verses 7-11 Our practical experience in this mortal life suggests that this promise may not be subject to an entirely literal and unqualified interpretation. When we receive gifts from the Lord, be they knowledge, material possessions, or other blessings, there are conditions that must be met before the blessings are bestowed. For example, if one anticipates asking for knowledge, one should know the conditions by which and circumstances under which knowledge is granted (see the commentary for Alma 12:9-11). Personal preparation is necessary. Joseph Smith explained: "God hath not revealed anything to Joseph, but what he will make known unto the Twelve, and even the least saint may know all things as fast as he is able to bear them” (TPJS, 149). Also, we must learn to ask for the appropriate things. “And whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, which is right, believing that ye shall receive, behold it shall be given unto you (3 Nephi 18:20). See also James 4:3 and 2 Nephi 4:35.

The “good things” the Father will give us in response to our righteous petitions may be those things of eternal worth which will be granted in the eternities, rather than during this mortal experience.

12 Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets.

verse 12 Here is the golden rule. This verse may be regarded as a rephrasing and an explanation of the command “Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself” (Matthew 22:39).

13 Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, which leadeth to destruction, and many there be who go in thereat;

14 Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.

verses 13-14 A gate is a point of access into a place or state, and this term is often used figuratively by the Savior and his prophets to represent the portal of entry into the Kingdom of Heaven. These verses make clear that there is only one gate and one narrow (“strait”) way that leads to eternal life. In modern revelation, we find an important commentary on these verses: “Verily, verily, I say unto you, except ye abide my law ye cannot attain to this glory [godhood]. For strait is the gate, and narrow the way that leadeth unto the exaltation and continuation of the lives [eternal posterity], and few there be that find it, because ye receive me not in the world neither do ye know me. But if ye receive me in the world, then shall ye know me, and shall receive your exaltation; that where I am ye shall be also. This is eternal lives—to know the only wise and true God, and Jesus Christ, whom he hath sent. I am he. Receive ye, therefore, my law. Broad is the gate, and wide the way that leadeth to the deaths [cessation of the family unit in eternity]; and many there are that go in thereat, because they receive me not, neither do they abide in my law” (D&C 132:21-25).

“strait is the gate, and narrow is the way” For a discussion of why the word strait (rather than straight) is appropriate in these two verses, see the supplemental article Strait and Straight in the Book of Mormon.

15 Beware of false prophets, who come to you in sheep’s clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves.

verse 1 Included in this category of “false prophets” are those in the Church who profess special skills or talents, those who offer insights above and beyond what the apostles and prophets feel should be made known. As though by divine appointment, they seek to re-chart the kingdom of God. They feel some special sense of mission to set the Church straight and spend their days striving to “steady the ark.” They tend to run before their file leaders and are impatient with the direction of the restored gospel. They may even propose adjustments in the plan of God. Unless they repent, they, and all who attend to their messages will be cut off from the people of the covenant.

16 Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?

17 Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit.

18 A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.

19 Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

20 Wherefore, by their fruits ye shall know them.

verses 15-20 We may judge a prophet by what comes of the work he sets in motion.

21 Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven.

22 Many will say to me in that day: Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name have cast out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works?

23 And then will I profess unto them: I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity.

verses 21-23 Here Christ declares that some people attempting to enter the kingdom of heaven would be told to “depart” (3 Nephi 14:23). They would not be allowed to enter, despite having come to the Lord after proclaiming to have done many things in His name. This passage is, for many readers, difficult to comprehend, as the people who will be told to depart had ostensibly been doing good works in the name of the Lord, as would be characteristic of faithful believers. However, Jesus acted as if their use of His name had been used or taken in vain and suggested that they will not be able to enter because they “work iniquity” instead of doing His Father’s will. It is likely that Jesus was directing His comments specifically towards those who were associated with the temple but who had apostatized from correct practice because they had broken their covenants and / or were acting in God’s name illegitimately.

This passage makes sense if one understands how Jesus was using covenant / temple language that his audience would have recognized and understood. Other passages in the scriptures likewise command the wicked to depart. Not coincidentally, these scriptures are laced with covenantal and temple imagery. The last part of 3 Nephi 14:23 / Matthew 7:23 echoes the words of Psalm 6:8: “Depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity.” Hosea 8:1–2 uses language similar to that of 3 Nephi 14 / Matthew 7 and prophesies against those who “shall cry unto me, ‘My God, we know thee,’” referring to those who take part in “the house of the Lord,” but who have “transgressed my covenant, and trespassed against my law.”

Jesus stated, in John 14:6, that he is the “way” and that “no man cometh unto the Father, but by me” (John 14:6). This was spoken in the context of “my Father’s house” (John 14:2), or in other words, the House of the Lord.

There are several scriptural passages that declare the importance of knowing or being known by the Lord. While the word “know” may not seem particularly significant, it may often be related to covenantal language. In John 10:14, Jesus said that He is “the good shepherd” and that “[I] know my sheep, and am known of mine.” BYU Professor John W. Welch has argued that the verb “know” may have a covenantal meaning here, as it does elsewhere in the scriptures. The Hebrew word for “to know” (yada), for example, appears in Amos 3:2 as Amos is speaking to Israel: “You only have I known of all the families of the earth: therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities.”

Similarly, when God spoke of Abraham’s faithfulness in keeping the way of the Lord, He described His covenant relationship with Abraham by declaring “I know him” (Genesis 18:19). Welch explained that “the Sermon on the Mount, therefore, seeks to restore the old covenant between God and Israel, by which God knew (or recognized) Israel and the Israelites knew God (see Hosea 13:4; Jeremiah 24:7)” (John W. Welch, The Sermon on the Mount in the Light of the Temple, London: Ashgate, 2009, 178–179).

Some interesting parallel ideas that involve using the name of the Lord and entering the temple (and by association, the “kingdom of heaven”) can be found in Psalm 24. Psalm 24 is a “temple entry” psalm which presents a group of people who are seeking the face of the Lord (verse 6) by passing through the gates (verse 7) of the temple to ascend “the hill of the Lord” (verse 3). When attempting to pass through the temple gates, they essentially used the name of “the Lord” as a password (verse 8), as David J. Larsen has very ably propounded (For more on the “temple entry” sequence of Psalm 24, see David J. Larsen, “Ascending into the Hill of the Lord: What the Psalms Can Tell Us about the Rituals of the First Temple,” in Ancient Temple Worship: Proceedings of the Expound Symposium, 14 May 2011, eds. Matthew B. Brown, et al., Salt Lake City and Provo, UT: Eborn Books and The Interpreter Foundation, 2014, 171–188).

Psalm 24:3–4 records the question of the temple-goers, “Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord?” The requirements are given: “He that hath clean hands and a pure heart [cf. 3 Nephi 12:8; Matthew 5:8], who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully.” Some scholars have suggested that the last clauses make reference to taking the Lord’s name in vain, meaning performing actions in the Lord’s name illegitimately. Also, the reference to swearing likely signifies taking an oath in the Lord’s name. The verse indicates that doing so “deceitfully” will bar the petitioner from ascending to the temple and seeing the face of God. We take an oath “deceitfully” when we enter into a covenant with the Lord and then fail to keep that covenant.
